III. (:19-21) MIRACULOUS PROVISION WITH PLENTY TO SPARE

A. (:19) Performing the Miracle

1. Directing the People to Recline at the Banquet Table
“And ordering the multitudes to recline on the grass,”

Grant Osborne: The infinitive “to sit down” (ἀνακλιθῆναι) is used for “reclining” at banquets and is probably deliberate here. This simple repast will be turned into a sumptuous feast.

2. Depending on the Gracious Gift of the Father
“He took the five loaves and the two fish, and looking up toward heaven, He blessed the food,”

3. Distributing the Food
“and breaking the loaves He gave them to the disciples, and the disciples gave to the multitudes,”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Jesus did not make a large batch of food to feed the crowd. He just kept distributing pieces of bread and fish until no one wanted any more. The miracle was open and undeniable. The Twelve and the multitude witnessed this miracle as it was happening over the extended time it took to break enough bread and fish to feed and serve these thousands of people. In other words, it was not an instantaneous miracle but one that kept happening, like the oil in 2 Kings 4:5-6. It must have made a deep impression on the Twelve.

B. (:20) Providing More than Enough

1. Ample Portions for All
“and they all ate, and were satisfied.”

D. A. Carson: Matthew omits many details—the greenness of the grass, the groups of fifty and one hundred—but points out that all ate and were satisfied (v.20), perhaps an anticipation of the messianic banquet, and at least evidence that there was lots to eat! The twelve baskets (kophinos, GK 3186, a stiff wicker basket) of leftovers and the size of the crowd (which might have been fifteen or twenty thousand total, if there were five thousand “men,” v.21) also support the latter point.

J. Ligon Duncan: This miracle points beyond the specific provision of that bread. It points beyond the gift of the bread to the giver of the bread. Jesus’ point in doing this miracle is to draw the disciples’ eyes from the physical provision of bread to Christ’s spiritual provision for what we need for eternal life. As that bread was necessary or that food was necessary to go on living, so the spiritual provision which He makes for us is necessary if we are going to have eternal fellowship with Him.

2. Abundant Left Overs

“And they picked up what was left over of the broken pieces, twelve full baskets.”

Leon Morris: It would seem that each of the apostles had a basket and filled it (the baskets were full). So there was an abundant meal, but also there was no waste.

Donald Hagner: The symbolism of the twelve baskets suggests the special significance of this miracle for Israel. Messianic fulfillment means (and especially for Matthew!) that Jesus will provide for Israel before considering the Gentiles. And the feeding of the five thousand is an indication to the Jews that the Messiah is in their midst, offering to them—as in the miracle of manna in the wilderness—the reality of salvation, the fulfillment of the promises.

C. (:21) Projecting the Scope of the Miracle – Parsing the Numbers

“And there were about five thousand men who ate, aside from women and children.”

Walter Wilson: Nothing is said of the crowd’s reaction to these events: for them the miracle occurs “offstage.” Instead, the story concludes with an authorial comment about the remarkably large number of participants, the five thousand men (cf. Acts 4:4) corresponding to the five loaves of bread.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Are there times we should seek solitude from ministry activities?
- 2) Are we flexible and compassionate when our schedule is interrupted with pressing needs?
- 3) Do we make ourselves available to serve the needs of others – not in our own power, but trusting in the resources of our Lord?
- 4) Do we present Jesus as the Bread of Life who is sufficient to meet the deepest spiritual and eternal needs?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

S. Lewis Johnson: This miracle emphasizes the qualifications of the Lord Jesus for the Davidic throne. Jewish tradition had said that when the Messiah should come, “he would feed the people of God,” and you will remember that in several of the parables the Lord Jesus tells, he speaks about a Messianic banquet in which the Messiah shall feed the people. You will find this referred to in the Old Testament and the New Testament also. So, the idea that emerges first from the feeding of the 15,000 in the minds of those who observed is this man is the promised king, and there was a recognition, then, of the qualifications for the Davidic throne in the Son of God. Now, they from wrong motives recognized it, but nevertheless it was there.

John MacArthur: The Lord was teaching here. All of this was a massive lesson. And there are three groups in this crowd. There are the twelve; and this was for the training of the twelve. And there is the elect remnant, and this was for the confirmation of the faith of the elect. And there is the rejecting, shallow thrill-seeker; and this was the unmasking of the thrill-seeker. All of these were in view.

Warren Wiersbe: Jesus and His disciples desperately needed rest (Mark 6:31), yet the needs of the multitudes touched His heart. The word translated “moved with compassion” literally means “to have one’s inner being (viscera) stirred.” It is stronger than sympathy. The word is used twelve times in the Gospels, and eight of these references are to Jesus Christ.

Jesus was “moved with compassion” when He saw the needy multitudes (Matt. 9:36). They were like sheep that had been lacerated from brutal fleecing – torn, exhausted, and wandering. Twice he was moved with compassion when He beheld the hungry multitudes without food (Matt. 14:14; 15:32). The two blind men (Matt. 20:34) and the leper (Mark 1:41) also stirred His compassion, as did the sorrow of the widow at Nain (Luke 7:13).

Jesus used this word in three of His parables. The king had compassion on his bankrupt servant and forgave him his debt, and we ought to forgive one another (Matt. 18:21-35). The Samaritan had compassion on the Jewish victim and cared for him in love (Luke 10:25-37). The father had compassion on his wayward son and ran and greeted him when he came home (Luke 15:20). If our heavenly Father has such compassion toward us, should we not have compassion toward others?

Note the steps we must take in solving life’s problems.

- 1) Start with what you have.
- 2) Give what you have to Jesus.
- 3) Obey what He commands.
- 4) Conserve the results.

The apostle John recorded a sermon on “the Bread of Life” that Jesus gave the next day in the synagogue in Capernaum (John 6:22ff.). The people were willing to receive the physical bread, but they would not receive the living Bread – the Son of God come down from heaven. The miracle of the feeding of the five thousand was actually a sermon in action. Jesus is the Bread of Life, and only He can satisfy the spiritual hunger in man’s heart. The tragedy is, men waste their time and money on “that which is not bread” (Isa. 55:1-7). People today are making the same mistake.

Jesus still has compassion on the hungry multitudes, and He still says to His church: “Give them something to eat.” How easy it is for us to send people away, to make excuses, to plead a lack of resources. Jesus asks that we give Him all that we have and let him use it as He sees fit. A hungry world is feeding on empty substitutes while we deprive them of the Bread of Life. When we give Christ what we have, we never lose. We always end up with more blessing than when we started.

Grant Osborne: This was truly a messianic miracle pointing forward to the messianic banquet, an eschatological meal often emphasized by Jesus (Matt 8:11; Luke 14:15; 22:30) and also a common theme in Judaism, building on Isa 25:6, “On this mountain the LORD Almighty will prepare a feast of rich food for all peoples, a banquet of aged wine—the best of meats and the finest of wines” and developed further during the intertestamental period (1 En. 62:14; 2 Bar. 29:8; 2 Esd 2:38). Thus it can be said that Jesus here is depicted both as the prophet Elisha and the new Moses. Finally, from the meaning of table fellowship in the ancient world, there is a theology of community here; Jesus is establishing a new community, with himself as the head of the family (v. 19).

Significance:

1) Jesus Christ is Sovereign

The entire NT attests to the deity of Christ and his oneness with the Father (esp. emphasized in John and Revelation). As a member of the Godhead Jesus created this world (John 1:3–4; 1 Cor 8:6; Col 1:16; Heb 1:2), and he both sustains and controls it. Therefore he asks the disciples here to realize this reality and to depend wholly on him. He is Alpha and Omega (Rev 1:17; 2:8; 22:13), meaning he is Lord over history; and God’s people must entrust themselves to his omnipotent and omnipresent (Matt 1:23; 18:20; 28:20) presence in their lives. The disciples needed to experience not only the power and provision of Jesus in their lives, but also how they can participate in that power and see it flow through them.

2) Mercy and Compassion

Through his mercy and compassion, Jesus will provide for our needs. Most take messianic provision to be the single major theme of the story. It took a long time for the disciples to learn this—indeed, until after Pentecost. This is perhaps one of the reasons why Jesus repeated it again (15:29–39). This is the distinguishing mark of true follower; our minds must focus on the things of God rather than merely human concerns (Mark 8:33b); we must seek and think heavenly rather than earthly pursuits (Col 3:1–2); and we must search after heavenly rather than earthly treasures (Matt 6:19–21). One of the most difficult aspects of the Christian walk is to learn contentment whatever the circumstances so that it does not matter whether we are in need or have plenty, for we know the Lord is in charge (cf. Paul’s testimony in Phil 4:11–12).

3) Prophet and Messiah

Jesus is the great prophet and Messiah who will bring history to a close. Here three major symbols intertwine: Jesus the new Moses who will give us the hidden manna (Rev 2:17), the Elisha prophet who multiplies the bread, and the Messiah who will enable us to participate in the messianic banquet. Jesus has controlled the past, will control the future, and already controls the present. This is the meaning of the title of God in Rev 1:4—“who is, and who was, and who is to come” (cf. Rev 4:8; 11:17; 16:5)—slightly out of order with “who is” (i.e., the present) first. The readers of Revelation know God is in control (the entire OT tells that) and will control history. Their discouragement comes because he does not seem to be in control of the present. The message is that God is sovereign over the present even though it doesn’t seem like it.

4) Involvement in Christ's Powerful Work

This is a discipleship story as well as a miracle story. More than in any miracle, the disciples are central in every aspect. Jesus wants them first to realize he will take care of them and to understand that they can mediate his power to the world. This is seen in the miracles of Acts. Luke has chosen miracles that reproduce those of Jesus to show that “in the name of Jesus” the church reenacts the life and ministry of Jesus (e.g., Acts 9:32–34 = Luke 5:18–26; Acts 9:36–42 = Luke 8:49–56). God’s power is available to the church.

5) Jesus is Establishing a New Community

The meaning of table fellowship is unity and community. Meals symbolized “friendship, intimacy, and unity,” involving reconciliation and making a person part of one’s extended family, i.e., “social, religious, and economic equals.” So in providing this meal for the crowds, Jesus is inviting them to become part of his new family of kingdom people and promising those who respond that he will provide for their needs.

Daniel Doriani: Two Kinds of Kings Govern the People

The Gospels generally spell out their lesson, but here we encounter one of the texts that leave certain points unstated. Matthew 14 places two stories side by side without telling us how they are connected, but if we assume there is art to his order, we can detect an intriguing contrast. Matthew places stories of King Herod (14:1–12) and King Jesus (14:13–21) side by side, and the contrast lets us know Jesus a little better. Consider:

- Herod throws a drunken party for his friends in the royal palace. Jesus offers a pleasant meal for the crowds in the countryside.
- Herod’s party entertains the rich and famous people of Galilean society. Jesus’ party feeds the common people, the hungry followers of Jesus.
- The first party was an orgy for leaders. It began with a sensual dance and ended with the death of John. It sought the pleasures and honors of this world. The second party began with teaching and healing. It ended with a meal that was a foretaste of the marriage supper of Jesus and his people.
- King Herod cared for nothing but his glory on his birthday. King Jesus served his people when they forgot their food.

In the spring, near the Passover (John 6:4), Jesus told the hungry people of Israel to recline on the green grass and prepare for a feast. Passover celebrated Israel’s redemption from Egypt. After the Passover, Moses gave the people manna in the wilderness. Now Jesus gives his people bread in the wilderness.

Let us pause to collect the main lessons.

- First, the feeding of the five thousand teaches us to expect the Lord Jesus to provide what his people need. He is compassionate. If we are needy, he supplies. Even if our need rises from our own errors, he is generous.
- Second, even as Jesus delegated a part of his work to the disciples, so he delegates a portion of his work to us. Even if our resources are small and few, Jesus can multiply them, to this day.

- Third, when Jesus does provide, we should be thankful, not just for the gift, but for the giver. For the gospel turns our attention not to the bread, but to Jesus who provided it long ago. And he provides today, for life, both physical and eternal.

Jabez Burns: The Spiritual Lessons Which the Miracle Affords.

A. In the people we see a striking representation of the moral condition of the human family. In a desert world—starving for want of food—no human means of supply.

B. In the provision we see a true exhibition of the blessings of the gospel. Its source, Jesus; its apparent insufficiency, yet its abundance, yea, inexhaustibleness. Its freeness and cheapness; without money and without price. Its satisfying nature; all ate and were filled.

C. In its distribution we see the nature of the office of the Christian ministry. It is—to receive from Christ’s hands the bread of life, and to give it to a dying world. It is Christ’s provision only they are to distribute.

D. In the abundance remaining we see the boundlessness of gospel supplies. Myriads have eaten, and yet the bread is undiminished. We learn,

E. That personal participation of gospel blessings is necessary to our happiness and satisfaction. We must not only be of the multitude, and hear, and see, and sit down with them; but we must, also, eat, receive Christ into our hearts by faith; and thus only can we enjoy the blessings of God’s great, and full, and abundant salvation. The invitation is: “Come ye, buy and eat; ... and milk, without money, and without price.”

TEXT: Matthew 14:22-36

TITLE: WALKING ON WATER – GROWING INSIGHT INTO THE IDENTITY OF JESUS

BIG IDEA:

FAITH FOCUSES ON THE DIVINE IDENTITY OF JESUS WHO HAS POWER OVER CREATION AND RESCUES THOSE WHO CALL OUT TO HIM

INTRODUCTION:

Stanley Saunders: Matthew riddles this account with double entendre, much of which is lost in English translation and most of which focuses on the divine power of the human Jesus. Matthew develops two main claims in this story of divine power and presence: Jesus is again crossing the boundaries between the human and the divine, between earth and heaven; and the same powers Jesus demonstrates are also available to other humans, first of all to Jesus' disciples.

Walter Wilson: Like the picture of Jesus feeding the multitude, the picture of Jesus walking on water illustrates both his authority over the forces of nature and the expectation that his followers will somehow participate in this authority. . . . While the previous story alluded to the feeding of Israel in the wilderness, this story alludes to Israel's salvation at the Red Sea (Exod 14–15), thereby extending the narrative's exodus typology.

William Barclay: In the hour of the disciples' need, Jesus came to them. When the wind was contrary and life was a struggle, Jesus was there to help. No sooner had a need arisen than Jesus was there to help and to save.

In life, the wind is often contrary. There are times when we are up against it and life is a desperate struggle with ourselves, with our circumstances, with our temptations, with our sorrows and with our decisions. At such a time, no one need struggle alone, for Jesus comes to us across the storms of life, with hand stretched out to save, and with his calm, clear voice bidding us take heart and have no fear.

Donald Hagner: As in both Mark and John, this miracle occurs immediately after the feeding of the five thousand. The effect of these successive narratives is powerful. The question of the identity of this Jesus, which has been before the readers previously (cf. 7:28–29; 11:3; 13:54–56; 14:2), especially in 8:27, and which was left implicit in the preceding narrative, again cries out for an answer that is now unequivocally given in v. 33.

Ray Fowler: This week's passage always reminds me of the joke about the two deacons who took their pastor out fishing on a lake in their boat. They were anchored some distance from shore, and after they had been fishing awhile, the first deacon says, "Oh, I left my sandwich in the car." He steps out of the boat, walks across the water to the shore, gets his sandwich, walks back across the water and gets back into the boat. The pastor is amazed at this, but the other deacon doesn't say anything about it, so neither does he.

Then the second deacon says, "Oh, I forgot my thermos." He steps out of the boat, walks across the water, gets his thermos, walks back across the water and into the boat. The two deacons just keep on fishing, while the pastor is thinking, "Well, if they can do it, I guess so can I!"

So, he casually tells the deacons, “I need to get something, too.” He steps over the side of the boat, promptly sinks like a rock and starts swimming for shore. The first deacon turns to the second deacon and says, “Do you think maybe next time we should tell him where the rocks are?”

Of course, Jesus didn’t need any rocks when he walked on the water, and this is an amazing miracle of God’s power, love and care for his followers.

- 1) You are never out of God’s sight (:22-24).
- 2) You are never out of God’s reach (:25-26).
- 3) You are never out of God’s care (:27-36).

God is all-knowing, which means you are never out of his sight. God is all-present which means you are never out of his reach. God is all-loving and all-powerful, which means you are never out of his care.

You are never out of God’s sight, and so that means God has not forgotten you. You are never out of God’s reach, and so that means God has not abandoned you. You are never out of God’s care, because God loves you so much, he sent his Son to die for you. He is the all-knowing, all-present, all-powerful, all-loving God who knows your troubles and will rescue you in his perfect timing.

<https://www.rayfowler.org/sermons/matthew/when-the-going-gets-tough/>

I. (:22-23) JESUS MODELS DEPENDENCE AND DEVOTION IN PRIVATE PRAYER

A. (:22) Purpose of Solitude

“And immediately He made the disciples get into the boat, and go ahead of Him to the other side, while He sent the multitudes away.”

Robert Gundry: “Compelled” implies that he exercised his authority on them against their will. Disciples want to stay with their master. “Immediately” stresses Jesus’ exercise of authority.

Warren Wiersbe: John recorded the reason why Jesus was in such a hurry to dismiss the crowd and send the disciples back in the boat: The crowd wanted to make Jesus king (John 6:14-15). The Lord knew that their motives were not spiritual and that their purposes were out of God’s will. If the disciples had stayed, they would certainly have fallen in with the plans of the crowd, for as yet, the disciples did not fully understand Christ’s plans. They were guilty of arguing over “who was the greatest,” and a popular uprising would have suited them perfectly.

D. A. Carson: Why Jesus “made” (the verb is very strong and might be translated “compelled”) the disciples go on ahead of him may be deduced from these bits of information:

- (1) he wanted to be alone to pray (v.23);
- (2) he wanted to escape the crowd with his disciples to get some rest (Mk 6:31-32); and
- (3) he may have dismissed the disciples forcefully to help tame a messianic uproar (Jn 6:15).

B. (:23) Priority of Prayer

“And after He had sent the multitudes away, He went up to the mountain by Himself to pray; and when it was evening, He was there alone.”

Charles Swindoll: Jesus was finally getting a long-awaited quiet time alone. With the disciples heading across the northeastern quarter of the lake and the crowds dispersing, Jesus was able to slip away and climb one of the nearby hills in that secluded location. He was going to do what He had originally intended to do before the masses of people had swarmed Him – commune with His heavenly Father (see 14:13).

David Doriani: People sometimes ask why Jesus needed to pray. Jesus prayed because he was a real man, because his humanity was an essential component of his work as the mediator between God and mankind. A mediator approaches two estranged parties in order to reconcile them.

II. (:24-27) DISCIPLES MODEL FEAR AND PANIC IN TIMES OF TESTING

A. (:24) Difficult Circumstances Test Our Faith

“But the boat was already many stadia away from the land, battered by the waves; for the wind was contrary.”

Charles Swindoll: The boat was literally “many stadia” from land. A stadion was about 600 feet, which means the boat was precariously distant from the safety of the shore. What’s worse, “the wind was contrary,” and the boat was “battered by the waves” (14:24). Matthew describes the action of the waves with the word basanizo, a verb that means “to subject to severe distress, torment, harass.” Thought the disciples had likely intended to hug the shoreline as they headed north, the wind and waves were pushing them farther and farther out to open water, away from their destination and toward certain calamity! It was after three o’clock in the morning, but not yet dawn – “the fourth watch of the night” (14:25). In short, the disciples were in trouble, and as far as they knew, they were all alone.

Grant Osborne: A severe storm hit, and the boat was under severe distress (βασανίζω is a strong verb meaning to “torture” or “cause great distress,” often used of illness or even demonic oppression). Some scholars go so far as to see cosmic powers at work. There was a strong headwind (ἐναντίος, “against it”), and huge waves threatened the lives of the disciples.

Walter Wilkins: The lake’s low elevation leads it to be subject to a powerful east wind (“Sharkiyeh”) that blows in over the mountains.

R. T. France: The disciples’ predicament this time is the inability to make headway rather than an imminent danger of sinking.

B. (:25) Divine Presence Appears Miraculously

“And in the fourth watch of the night He came to them, walking on the sea.”

Stu Weber: According to Jewish time reckoning, the day begins at sunset (about 6:00 P.M.). The Jews divided the twelve-hour night into three watches, but the Gospel writers used the Roman custom of four three-hour watches—6 to 9 P.M., 9 P.M. to midnight, midnight to 3 A.M., and 3 to 6 A.M.

C. (:26-27) Dread (Fear and Panic) Met with Reassurance

1. (:26) Fear and Panic

“And when the disciples saw Him walking on the sea, they were frightened, saying, ‘It is a ghost!’ And they cried out for fear.”

Stu Weber: Fatigue, combined with superstition and lack of faith-filled insight, set them up for a response of pure terror when they saw Jesus.

Donald Hagner: Given the popular belief that the sea was the home of evil spirits (cf. Rev 13:1), they undoubtedly thought the “ghost” meant to do them ill. In Luke 24:37, the risen Jesus appears to the disciples, who are filled with fear and conclude they are seeing “a spirit” (πνεῦμα; but D: φάντασμα; as in our text; for a similar word, see Wis 18:17). OT symbolism concerning the mastery of God over the sea and specifically his walking upon it (e.g., Ps 77:16, 19; Job 9:8; 38:16; cf. wisdom in Sir 24:5), while significant in retrospect, could hardly have occurred to the disciples at the time, although for the evangelist and his readers it must have been suggestive.

Richard Gardner: The epiphany in the text before us clearly anticipates the revelation of Jesus’ glory in the resurrection.

2. (:27) Reassurance

“But immediately Jesus spoke to them, saying, ‘Take courage, it is I; do not be afraid.’”

R. T. France: The disciples’ irrational fear is met by the familiar voice of Jesus; considering the startling manner of his appearance, his words sound almost banal, but their very ordinariness contributes to the reassurance.

Robert Gundry: The disciples’ disconcertedness and fear stem from non-recognition of Jesus, not from failure to understand that as deity he could walk on the sea. So between his commands to take courage and stop being afraid, he identifies himself with “I am,” where we’d say, “It’s me” (compare John 9:9, for example). For Matthew’s Jewish Christian audience, though, “I am” also equates with the divine title, “I AM,” by which God identified himself to Moses in Exodus 3:14. The equation contributes to walking on the sea as a demonstration of deity. The immediacy with which Jesus speaks this encouraging self-identification underscores his deity, which makes him greater than Moses.

David Doriani: Once we safeguard the uniqueness of Jesus’ miracle, we can affirm that we are like the disciples in important ways.

- First, Jesus was with the disciples during the storm and Jesus is with us today. He said, “I am with you always, even to the end of the age” (Matt. 28:20).
- Second, when Jesus comes, it spells the end of fear. The command “Don’t be afraid” appears seven times in Matthew (1:20; 10:26–31 [3 times]; 14:27; 17:7; 28:5, 10).

III. (:28-33) PETER MODELS INCONSISTENT FAITH BUT GROWING RECOGNITION OF THE TRUE IDENTITY OF JESUS

A. (:28-29a) Imitating Christ = Challenging Goal

1. (:28) Entreaty of Investigation

“And Peter answered Him and said, ‘Lord, if it is You, command me to come to You on the water.’”

Walter Wilson: Finally, it is noteworthy that in both stories, a speaking role is assigned to Peter (14:28, 30; 17:4). This last point illustrates one of the principal features of the section in which our story is situated (13:53 - 17:27), namely, the emergence of Peter as the disciples' spokesperson and representative. In this instance, his actions contribute to the gospel's imitatio Christi theme, which surfaced previously in the mission discourse (e.g., 10:25). Peter asks for permission to emulate Jesus's miracle, that is, to participate in his power over the sea and what the sea represents, especially death. Jesus's response implicitly acknowledges the legitimacy of such a request, thereby also revealing something important regarding the nature of his messianic authority. Similarly, in the mission discourse, Jesus commands the disciples to perform the same miracles they have just seen him perform, conferring upon them the authority to—among other things—raise the dead (10:8). Power over death is thematized by another story of this section in which Peter has a speaking role, namely, his confession of Christ at Caesarea Philippi: “you are Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of Hades will not overpower it” (16:18). Comparison with 10:8 and 16:18, then, suggests that Jesus's response to Peter in 14:29 functions as a type of commission, specifically a commission to participate in his power over death. If this line of reasoning is correct, the inclusion of such a commission represents another way in which 14:25–33 generically resembles an account of a post-resurrection appearance. Put differently, the texts in 10:8, 14:29, and 16:18 belong to a series of commissioning episodes culminating in the great commission issued by the resurrected Jesus (28:18–20), with each episode manifesting a different dimension of the power of the Messiah and his followers over death.

2. (:29a) Enabling Invitation

“And He said, ‘Come!’”

Donald Hagner: Peter is here paradoxically a model both of faith and of lack of faith. The story is also a demonstration of the saving power of the Lord. If we take the narrative as historical, it is difficult to know what lay behind Peter's request. It may be that Peter wanted to participate with Jesus in this miracle as he had in the preceding one. Perhaps it was no more than impulsiveness or the desire to do something excitingly dangerous—to have a once-in-a-lifetime experience—which appealed to him. The impossible would be possible through the power of Jesus. Thus Peter's request is based upon faith in Jesus and not upon an uncertainty about whether the apparition really was Jesus (this reality is assumed in the protasis of the condition). He did get out of the boat and did walk toward Jesus.

B. (:29b) Intentional Faith Takes Aggressive Action

1. Got Out of the Boat

“And Peter got out of the boat,”

2. Walked on the Water

“and walked on the water”

3. Came Toward Jesus

“and came toward Jesus.”

C. (:30-31) Intervention of Jesus Delivers from Failure to Maintain the Focus of Faith

1. (:30) Failure to Maintain the Focus of Faith

a. Taking Eyes Off Jesus and Focusing on Difficult Circumstances

“But seeing the wind,”

Walter Wilkins: Jesus does not criticize him for that request; he only mildly chides him for his ineffective faith once he gets out there. It took much courage to follow Jesus on the water, and Peter does fine until he looks at his circumstances (“seeing the wind,” 14:30) and takes his eyes off of Jesus; then he finds himself afraid and in trouble. We will face many circumstances for which we are completely unprepared, and the circumstances we face from day to day will change. But the one constancy we have in this life is Jesus. As we go through life focused on an intimate walk with Jesus through each and every circumstance, we learn how to apply his consistency to our circumstances.

- b. Replacing Faith with Fear
“he became afraid,”
- c. Experiencing Negative Consequences “and beginning to sink,”
- d. Calling Out for Salvation
“he cried out, saying, ‘Lord, save me!’”

2. (:31) Intervention of Jesus Delivers

- a. Hand of Deliverance
“And immediately Jesus stretched out His hand and took hold of him,”
- b. Word of Correction
“and said to him, ‘O you of little faith, why did you doubt?’”

Charles Swindoll: The Greek word for “doubt” here is a rare one – distazo. In the whole New Testament it’s found only here and in Matthew 28:17: “When they saw him they worshiped Him; but some were doubtful.” In both places, the term is used in reference to people who do, in fact, believe in who Jesus is and what he’s capable of but who at the same time harbor lingering doubts. This wasn’t the kind of doubt that an unbeliever has, which is more like stubborn unbelief. It’s the doubt that comes from living in a world filled with situations, circumstances, trials, and tribulations that cause strong believers to wonder about the goodness and mercy of God.

Jeffrey Crabtree: The question pointed to the reason for Peter’s failure. He did not stop believing completely. He stopped believing in the complete adequacy of Jesus (Osborne 576). Why did he doubt? He had walked on water, but had he become afraid of the waves? He should know that the one who enabled him to walk on water could keep him safe from the winds or waves.

Leon Morris: Jesus bestows on Peter the epithet “Man of little faith” (for this term see on 6:30; this is the only place where it is used of one individual; elsewhere it refers to disciples as a whole). “Why did you doubt?” Jesus asked him. The leading apostle might have been expected to trust more wholeheartedly, more especially since he had already taken some steps in his alien environment. He was learning that problems arise when doubt replaces trust.

D. (:32-33) Identity of Jesus Confirmed by His Power over Creation

1. (:32) Submission of Creation

“And when they got into the boat, the wind stopped.”

Donald Hagner: A sometimes unnoticed aspect of the story is the miraculous cessation of the powerful wind. This makes the story quite similar to that of the stilling of the storm in 8:23–27.

2. (:33) Worship of the Disciples

“And those who were in the boat worshiped Him, saying, ‘You are certainly God’s Son!’”

Robert Gundry: Worshipping Jesus—that is, bowing low before him—adds bodily confession to verbal confession so as to highlight even further the disciples’ true understanding.

Stu Weber: Jesus probably intended the feeding of the five thousand to be primarily a lesson in faith for his disciples. Here, on the heels of the first lesson of the day comes the second lesson. The disciples had demonstrated no confidence in Jesus’ ability to feed the crowd, but at least Peter began to show the first flicker of true faith. With much yet to learn, the disciples came closer than ever to an understanding of who Jesus was (14:33).

D. A. Carson: The climax of the story is not the stilling of the storm (v.32) but the confession and worship of the disciples: “Truly you are the Son of God” (v.33). This is the first time Jesus has been addressed by the disciples with this full title (cf. 16:16; 26:63; 27:40, 43, 54). But it already lurks behind 3:17 (“my Son”), and the devil has used it of Jesus (4:3, 6). It is most likely abbreviated to “the Son” in Jesus’ self-references in 11:25–27. In the earlier passage (cf. 3:17), we have seen how the title would most likely have been understood by the disciples at the time and how it would have been fleshed out in light of the resurrection.

Jeffrey Crabtree: The word translated “worship” (Greek proskuneō) means “to prostrate oneself before someone as an act of reverence, fear or supplication” (Louw and Nida I:218) or to “express by attitude and possibly position one’s allegiance to or regard for deity” (Louw and Nida I:540). The Magi (2:11), a leper coming to be healed (8:2), and Jairus (9:18) had prostrated themselves before Him. Now with the fullest understanding so far, the Twelve—at least in attitude and possibly even in position—bowed before Him in the boat, and worshiped Him as one worships God. This is the first time Matthew records that the Twelve worshiped Jesus. . .

The day had been busy and long. Jesus showed the Twelve more and more of His glory (Jn. 1:14; 1 Jn. 1:1, 2). Many were healed, over five thousand were miraculously fed, Jesus walked on water across a large portion of the lake, Jesus enabled Peter also to walk on water to meet Him, and Jesus calmed the sea. The Twelve had served the miracle food to the five thousand, gathered up the uneaten food, and had rowed against a headwind across a significant portion of the lake. Evidently, no one had slept. Jesus had prayed on the mountainside and the Twelve had wrestled against the waves, perhaps most of the night. So much for a getaway for rest (Mk. 6:30–31); yet this was a day etched forever in their memories. This day they recognized that Jesus was no mere human. He was God’s Son. Perhaps this was why Jesus chose to disclose such power at this time.

Grant Osborne: Matthew presents the gradual process by which the disciples come to understanding and overcome their failures as a result of Jesus’ presence with them (see on 13:11–12, 16–17, 23, 51–52; 16:12). Of course, this hardly means full understanding, for Jesus will castigate their ignorance in 15:16; 16:9. The disciples have no concept of deity until John 20:28 and later. They use the title in a vaguely messianic sense, but understanding is dawning, and Matthew expects the reader to see all the title portends.

(:34-36) TRANSITION – SUMMARY OF POWERFUL ONGOING HEALING MINISTRY

Walter Wilson: The picture is completed with a narrative hinge in 14:34–36, which briefly shows the audience what transpires when the boat reaches its destination. Here the power of the gospel is communicated both in the manner in which word of Jesus’s presence goes out to the people and in the manner in which large numbers of people respond by coming to Jesus for healing.

D. A. Carson: This little pericope stresses again the sweeping extent of Jesus’ public ministry (cf. 4:23–25; 8:16; 9:35–36) and shows that Jesus’ ministry extended to all the people, though his close disciples had special access to him and his more intimate instruction. Also, because the stricter groups, such as the Pharisees and the Essenes, counted it an abomination to rub shoulders in a crowd—one never knew what ceremonial uncleanness one might contract—Jesus’ unconcern about such things neatly sets the stage for the confrontation over clean and unclean (15:1–20). As in 8:1–4; 9:20–22, he himself cannot become unclean; instead, he makes clean.

Donald Hagner: Jesus again engages in a healing ministry as part of his proclamation of the dawning of the kingdom of God. The healings and their inclusiveness (“all”) point to and foreshadow the blessings of the eschatological order in its final realization in the future. Jesus is central to the experience of, and even the possibility of, these healings. His power is so overwhelming that simply to touch his garment is to experience immediate healing. The same presence and power of Jesus are available to the church in ways that transcend temporary, ad hoc healings of this kind. The salvation experienced by the church goes beyond what was experienced at Gennesaret; the healings at Gennesaret are at best only anticipations of the eschatological wholeness of the church to be experienced by every believer.

Richard Gardner: As noted earlier, the summary here forms an inclusion with the summary at the beginning of the unit in verses 13-14. And the content is typical of summary statements found at a number of places in the narrative (cf. 4:23-25; 8:16-17): All the sick throughout the region are brought to Jesus, and all who are brought are healed. The unit ends then, as it began, by attesting the divine compassion of Jesus for those in need of wholeness.

A. (:34) Safe Arrival at Destination of Gennesaret

“And when they had crossed over, they came to land at Gennesaret.”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Jesus and the Twelve went to Gennesaret, a heavily populated, fertile plain located on the northwest side of the Sea of Galilee. The plain of Gennesaret is about three miles (5 km.) long and one mile (1.6 km.) wide. It extends northward along the coast from Magdala almost to Capernaum (ISBE II:443).

Walter Wilkins: The region of Gennesaret did not figure prominently in Jesus’ ministry as recorded in the Gospels, but the response to Jesus on this occasion was remarkable. Josephus’s description captures not only the beauty of the region, but also indicates the exquisiteness of the lands surrounding the Sea of Galilee.

Skirting the Lake of Gennesar [Galilee], and also bearing that name, lies a region whose natural properties and beauty are very remarkable. There is not a plant which its fertile soil refuses to produce, and its cultivators in fact grow every species; the air is so well-tempered that it suits the most opposite varieties. The walnut, a tree which delights in the most wintry climate, grows luxuriantly, beside palm-trees, which thrive on heat, and figs and olives, which require a milder climate. One might say that nature had taken pride in this assembling, by tour de force, the most discordant species in a single spot, and that, by a happy rivalry, each of the seasons wished to claim this region for her own.

B. (:35-36) Sick Healed by Contact with Jesus

1. (:35) Jesus Functions as a Magnet for Needy People

“And when the men of that place recognized Him, they sent into all that surrounding district and brought to Him all who were sick;”

David Doriani: There is no hint that they wanted more than healing, no hint that they came to become disciples. They came to take from Jesus, to use him for their ends, much like the crowd that saw Jesus multiply bread and followed him, merely hoping for more food (14:13–21; John 6:25–34). Jesus knew they were using him, but he felt compassion and healed them regardless. It was his way to give to the undeserving. Just as he provided for the unbelieving crowds then, so he cares for us even before we believe. Jesus cares for our health, gifts, and friendships because any of these may one day move us toward faith in him.

2. (:36a) Jesus Makes Himself Available and Approachable

“and they began to entreat Him that they might just touch the fringe of His cloak;”

Charles Swindoll: So powerful were His miracles that if people touched even the fringe of his cloak, they were cured of their diseases (14:36). That people entreated Jesus to let them touch His cloak for healing may suggest that they had heard the testimony of healing from the woman who had been cured of the twelve years of bleeding (see 9:20-22). If so, this gives us a good example of how word of Jesus’ astonishing miracles had made an impact on the crowds.

3. (:36b) Jesus Heals with Impartiality, Power and Finality

“and as many as touched it were cured.”

Stu Weber: The Lord will graciously reward any expression of true faith.

Jeffrey Crabtree: As Jesus traveled to various communities, people would place their sick where they knew He would pass. Though Jesus healed the sick, this was not His primary ministry (11:4-5; 12:28; Hagner 33B:427). His primary ministry was providing access into the kingdom. Healings indicated that the kingdom Jesus was preaching had arrived (Mt. 11:2-6; Lk. 4:18-21; Is. 61:1-2). Matthew’s point in these verses is not so much the faith of the people as it was the power of Jesus (Hendriksen 604). He who had fed the five thousand and walked on water now healed every disease brought to Him. Bruner (2:79-81) points out that Matthew used “five excited absolutes” in his description: “all that country, . . . all that were diseased, . . . only touch, . . . as many as touched, . . . [and] perfectly whole.”

William Barclay: This is just one of Matthew’s almost colourless little connecting passages. It is a sentence or two of the gospel story that the eye might easily pass over as quite unimportant; and yet it is very revealing of Jesus.

(1) There is beauty in it. No sooner did Jesus appear anywhere than people were crowding and clamouring for his help; and he never refused it. He healed them all. There is no word here that he preached or taught at any length; there is simply the record that he healed. The most tremendous thing about Jesus was that he taught men and women what God was like by showing them what God was like. He did not tell them that God cared; he showed them that God cared. There is little use in preaching the love of God in words without showing the love of God in action.

(2) But there is also pathos here. No one can read this passage without seeing in it the grim fact that there were hundreds and thousands of people who desired Jesus only for what they could get out of him. Once they had received the healing which they sought, they were not really prepared to go any further. It has always been the case that people have wanted the privilege of Christianity without its responsibilities. It has always been the case that so many of us remember God only when we need him. Ingratitude towards God and towards Jesus Christ is the ugliest of all sins; and there is no sin of which we are more often and more consistently guilty.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why did Jesus need to pray?
- 2) How can we remind ourselves that God is with us during those fearful times when we imagine that we are all alone?
- 3) Why didn't the disciples of Jesus recognize Him when he came towards them walking on the water?
- 4) What kinds of storms has Jesus already rescued you from?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Stanley Saunders: The story raises questions about the nature of discipleship, about our perceptions of the world, even the physical world, and about our participation in God's divine power. Can we also traverse the boundaries between divine power and the human world? To what end? What factors cause us to be "little-faiths"? How does the world capture our attention, so that we too become caught between two minds, two ways of perceiving the world, ourselves, and God? Remember, this Gospel begins and ends with the claim that Jesus is "God with us." What difference does this claim make for us? Where do we perceive God's liberating power today, the power even to burst the limits of the physical world?

David Turner: The rescued disciples' confession that Jesus is God's Son should be seen in the light of biblical texts that represent the stormy sea as a place of evil chaos from which only God can deliver (Exod. 14:10–15:21; Ps. 107:23–32; Jon. 1:4–2:10; cf. Wis. 14:2–4; 1QH 6.22–25; Heil 1981: 35). Thus, in walking on the water and delivering the disciples from the storm, Jesus exercises divine attributes and accomplishes feats that are the prerogative of God alone. It is also significant that Jesus can share his capacity to walk on water with Peter. “If a man walks on the sea, he does so only by divine authority” (Heil 1981: 61; cf. Job 9:8; 38:16). But authority to walk on water is relatively inconsequential when it is compared with authority to extend God’s kingdom (Matt. 10:1, 7; 11:27; 28:18–20). Peter’s faith (and that of the disciples collectively) may be weak, but Jesus’s presence will continue to empower and rescue as inevitable future trials are encountered.

Charles Swindoll: I can think of three connections with our own challenges in life – challenges that bring us to our knees in dependence on Christ.

- 1) First, we sometimes feel all alone when we experience dark nights, but we’re not. We have Jesus, who takes up permanent residence in our lives. His Spirit indwells us to empower us, to remind us of His presence, and to enable us to endure whatever may come.
- 2) Second, the storms of life seem to last forever, but they’ll cease. They’re not too long to endure. No storm strikes us that’s not known, permitted, or directed by the Lord our God.
- 3) Third, we sometimes experience dreadful moments when we think we’ll drown, but we don’t. Though we may initially take noble steps of faith and experience a boost of confidence, we often lose sight of our Lord, falter, and fall. But even when we begin to sink, we sink into His arms. . . Instead of responding in panic and doubt, reach out to Him. Take His hand. Let Him strengthen and encourage you.

Walter Wilson: The epiphany story itself exhibits a symmetrical structure, with the notice about the strong wind in 14:24 corresponding to the calming of the wind in 14:32, and Jesus’s walking on water in 14:25–26 corresponding to Peter’s walking on water in 14:29b. At the center of the composition are Jesus’s words to the terrified disciples (14:27), Peter’s request (14:28), and Jesus’s command (14:29a). This structure contrasts with Mark’s version of the story, in which the center position is occupied by Jesus’s act of walking on water. As is so often the case, for Matthew special significance is attached to the element of dialogue.

Grant Osborne: This pericope is so intimately tied with the preceding feeding of the five thousand that most of the themes there are continued and deepened, especially the sovereignty of Christ and discipleship understanding.

1. Jesus as Son of God

Jesus as God’s Son has the authority of Yahweh over the wind and the waves. Twelftree says, “Of all Matthew’s miracle stories, it is this one that portrays the highest Christology,” with Jesus the new Moses who does not just act for God, but rather God acts in him to conquer the storm and rescue his people. Still, Jesus is not just the agent of God but himself contains the authority and power of God.

2. The Role of Faith

Faith is especially needed and demonstrated in times of trial and trouble. Jesus taught his disciples to rely on his merciful provision in the feeding scene, but here he leads them into a time of testing that will prove their mettle. As Jesus himself was led by the Spirit into the time of testing by Satan (4:1–11), so he leads the disciples into the time of their testing. Unlike Jesus

(and like Israel in the wilderness), however, they ultimately fail the test, though with partial success shown in their “little faith.” While the boat does not signify the church, the storm does signify the difficulties of life (as was the case in the stilling miracle of 8:23–27).

3. Victory through Depending Totally on Christ

In the feeding miracle Jesus wanted to involve the disciples in his authoritative act, and this continues here. When Peter asked to walk on the water, that was the response Jesus wished. As long as Peter focused on Jesus, he was able to take step after step on the water. However, when he turned to consider the earthly situation, he failed and began to sink into the depths. The entire NT builds on this, as victory over sin and temptation is completely related to the degree to which we are centered wholly on Christ. Peter is the model disciple even in his failure. He is an all-too-human figure, struggling with his growing awareness of Christ, as do we all.

4. Calming Our Fears and Giving Us Understanding

When overwhelmed by external struggles and at wit’s end, Jesus is the one who soothes our anxious hearts, who can truly remove our worries and turns our fears to joy and our defeats to victory (Phil 4:6–7; Jas 1:2–4; 1 Pet 1:6–7). Moreover, out of the struggle comes a deeper understanding of the reality of Christ. Out of the disciples’ initial defeat they were guided by Jesus into a new awareness of him as “the Son of God,” and they are beginning to grow in their understanding of that reality.

Donald Hagner: Jesus has power over the sea: he walks upon the deep as God alone does, and the sea respects his wishes. If the Israelites regarded the sea as the domain of evil powers, then the terrifying experience of a storm at sea in the dead of night becomes even more symbolic of the human experience of evil (cf. Ps 69:15–16). The fear of the disciples is like the fear of all who are threatened by insecurity in the face of the unknown. But when Jesus appears to those in extreme need, it is as one who has sovereign power, not only over the forces of nature but over evil itself. Thus his words, “Be of good courage. It is I! Do not be afraid,” are not empty or meaningless. Fear is unwarranted where Jesus is present. If in circumstances of personal need one responds in faith and, like Peter, steps out into the unknown but begins to submerge again through doubt under the all-too-real presence of evil, then at the cry, “Lord, save me,” Jesus is immediately there to deliver the believer (cf. Ps 18:16–17). Then will come the gentle rebuke: “You of little faith, why did you doubt?” In the experience of the Christian, Jesus is “God with us” (1:23), the ever-present source of deliverance (cf. 28:20). (For a similar meditation upon God’s deliverance employing the symbol of the water and storm, see Pss 69:1–3, 13–15; 107:23–32.) In some such way as this, the miracle of this pericope was meant to be understood by and find practical application in Matthew’s church. The Jesus who multiplied the loaves and fish and who appeared to the disciples walking on the water and who saved Peter from sinking, this same Jesus is the Lord of the church who has brought salvation and who stands similarly prepared to save his people, even when they may doubt, from the evils that beset them. This Jesus who rules over nature and even the realm of evil is rightly worshiped as “truly the Son of God.”

J. Ligon Duncan: Now there are so many applications of this passage alone, that we could spend the whole morning talking of it. But let me just direct your attention to two things. The first thing I want you to note is, the Lord Jesus let those disciples go a long time in the storm before He came to them. I think very often in the midst of our trials, we keep looking for the light at the end of the tunnel. And in some of our trials that light never shows up. We feel like we keep going further and further and further in the tunnel. And we can’t see the Lord’s presence, and we can't see the Lord's hand, and we can't make sense of it, and we feel as if the Lord has abandoned us. The Lord Jesus let those disciples go a long time before He came to them. And He did it, not out of spite, but He did it to build them up in faith in Him. To see their own weakness, to see their own need, and then to see the sheer power at His disposal to answer that need. The Lord Jesus may put us in a trial for that precise reason. And will not we say with the hymnist, "What e're my God ordains is right"? Surely the disciples learned that lesson on this night.

There is another thing I want you to see. Peter's response to Jesus provides a beautiful picture of what saving faith is. Notice that as long as Peter's focus is on the Lord Jesus, he is upheld. The minute Peter's attention is shifted to the circumstances around him, the waves and the wind, he begins to sink. Does that not teach us something about how faith works? It is not the strength of faith that saves us, it is the object of faith that saves us – the Lord Jesus Christ. It's not the strength of our faith in Christ that saves us. It's Christ that saves us. And when our focus is taken off of Him, our faith falters. As Peter becomes more aware of his circumstances and less aware of Christ, he begins to sink into doubt. And the Lord Jesus has to pull His doubting servant up with the words, "O you of little faith. Why did you doubt?" You see, if our faith is grounded in our circumstances, it will always be like Peter's faith at that moment. Going up and down depending on how the circumstances are. But if our faith is on the proper object, the Lord Jesus Christ, it will be constant. Why? Because He is constant. He never changes.

TEXT: Matthew 15:1-20

TITLE: DEFILEMENT IS A HEART ISSUE

BIG IDEA:

DON'T SUBSTITUTE RELIGIOUS TRADITION EMPHASIZING CEREMONIAL CLEANLINESS FOR DIVINE COMMANDMENTS EMPHASIZING INTERNAL PURITY

INTRODUCTION:

Donald Hagner: Matthew follows Mark in alternating passages revealing the power and identity of Jesus with confrontations with those who refuse Jesus and his message.

Grant Osborne: Two ideas are intertwined in this section—external tradition and internal purity. The first is central to vv. 1–9, the second central to vv. 10–20. Yet both combine in the theme that the life of the follower of Jesus must be controlled not so much by external codes of conduct forced from without but by the inner person of the heart that proceeds from within.

Richard Gardner: As we move into chapter 15, we find Jesus embroiled in another conflict or controversy (cf. the conflict stories in chapter 12). The immediate issue in the conflict is whether the disciples defile themselves when they fail to observe the rabbinic tradition of washing hands before eating. (According to Luke 11:38, Jesus himself failed to observe the practice.) In responding to those who pose the question, Jesus raises a more fundamental question about the rabbinic tradition itself: Does this tradition help us understand and obey the will of God expressed in the Torah? Or does it distort and sometimes circumvent the Torah and thereby mislead God's people?

William Barclay: In this passage, there meets us the whole conception of clean and unclean. We must be quite clear that this idea of cleanness and uncleanness has nothing to do with physical cleanness, or, except distantly, with hygiene. It is entirely a ceremonial matter. For the people to be clean was for them to be in a state where they might worship and approach God; for them to be unclean was for them to be in a state where such a worship and such an approach were impossible. . .

Religion had got itself mixed up with all kinds of external rules and regulations; and, since it is much easier both to observe rules and regulations and to check up on those who do not, these rules and regulations had become religion to the orthodox Jews.

Warren Wiersbe: Tradition is something external, while God's truth is internal, in the heart. People obey tradition to please men and gain status (Gal. 1:14), but we obey the Word to please God. Tradition brings empty words to the lips, but truth penetrates the heart and changes the life. Actually, tradition robs a person of the power of the Word of God.

Walter Wilson: Once again we have a portrayal that displays Jesus in conflict with the Pharisees and scribes, though now his adversaries are seen to come from Jerusalem, the implication being that news about the Galilean prophet has reached the center of Judaism. The debate in this instance pits the authority of the Pharisees as interpreters of their "tradition" against the authority of Jesus as interpreter of “the word of God,” with the ritual of handwashing serving as a case study. To their complaint about the disciples’ failure to observe this practice, Jesus counters with a complaint of his own, the crux of which is that his opponents are more concerned with upholding traditions meant to help people observe the law than with observing the law itself, thereby exposing themselves as hypocrites and blind guides. As an illustration, he brings into view their tradition regarding the Korban vow, which he argues contradicts the divine commandment to honor father and mother, a sure indication of its “human” origin. After issuing a cryptic pronouncement about ritual purity to the crowds (graphically describing different things going into and out of someone’s mouth), Jesus is shown fielding a question and then a request from the disciples, who want to understand the meaning of this strange statement. Again drawing on the Decalogue for illustrations, Jesus explains that what people eat and drink leaves their moral core untouched, whereas what they say has the power to defile, since it proceeds from the heart.

Stanley Saunders: The deteriorating relationship between Jesus and the religious elites now takes a more ominous turn. Scribes and Pharisees last joined forces to ask Jesus for a sign (12:38; cf. 16:1–4). The group that now challenges Jesus is from Jerusalem. Jesus has been ministering around Gennesaret, on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee (14:34–36), so the scribes and Pharisees of Jerusalem must come some distance for this encounter. Perhaps the Jerusalem leaders think that the locals are not up to dealing with Jesus, so they send their own people to put Jesus in his place. Jerusalem now looms on the horizon (cf. 16:21). In controversies such as this, Jesus’ adversaries are hoping to assert their own status and diminish Jesus’ authority with the crowds. The point of the attack is to discredit Jesus by demonstrating that he and his followers do not attain the high standards of purity required by tradition and practiced, presumably, by the Pharisees and scribes.

I. (:1-9) RELIGIOUS TRADITION ESSENTIALLY INVALIDATES DIVINE COMMANDMENTS

A. (:1-2) Charge of the Religious Traditionalists

“Then some Pharisees and scribes came to Jesus from Jerusalem, saying,

Grant Osborne: The historic present “came” (προσέρχονται) makes the coming more vivid (Wallace, 526). This is probably a semi-official delegation from Jerusalem sent to test Jesus’ knowledge and faithfulness to Torah (both written and oral). This is the only time in Matthew the Pharisees are named first (probably following Mark 7:1). The mention of Jerusalem stresses the hostility of the leaders and moves the action toward the climactic scene at the passion. It was unusual for such a lofty group to visit this backwater area of Galilee. France says this provides “a foretaste of the confrontation to come.”

1. (:2a) General Charge = Violating the Tradition of the Elders

“Why do Your disciples transgress the tradition of the elders?”

Michael Wilkins: The term “tradition” comes from a noun that refers to something that has been “handed over” or “passed on” (paradosis). The “tradition of the elders” (15:1) became a technical expression among the Pharisees for the interpretation of Scripture made by past esteemed rabbis that was “passed on” to later generations. . .

Traditions developed by humans can be dangerous when they supplant God's revelation. But tradition is not wrong per se. Paul uses the same term (paradosis) to refer to the gospel truths and doctrines that he passed to the churches (1 Cor. 11:2; 2 Thess. 2:15; 3:6), and a related verb (paradidōmi) to refer to the fundamental creedal truths of the cross and resurrection that he had received and passed on to the church (1 Cor. 15:1). The essential difference between these forms of tradition and those developed within Judaism rests on the fact of Jesus' incarnation. Jesus is the revelation of God embodied, and Paul declares therefore that the traditions he received and passed on to the church have derived from God himself through the revelation of Jesus the Messiah. That is a crucial dissimilarity for us to reflect upon.

Grant Osborne: In Jesus' time these rules for the conduct of daily lives were transmitted orally but later were written in the Mishnah, with an entire tractate, Yadayim, filled with minute details on the washing of hands. They originally had a good purpose, to enable a people living in a culture far removed from the seminomadic culture that existed at the time of the giving of the law to understand and keep the law. They called it "building a fence around the law," i.e., keeping the common people from inadvertently breaking the law. But the number of details quickly turned it into a burdensome set of pedantic rules.

R. T. France: It was subsequent scribal rulings that attempted to extend this principle to the eating of ordinary food, and to people other than priests (on the principle that Israel as a whole was a "priestly nation"), and it is uncertain how far this process had advanced by the time of Jesus. It is likely that ordinary people would have found no problem with the practice of Jesus' disciples, and that this group of Jerusalem teachers are expecting of them a more rigorous standard than was yet recognized in Galilee. As a religious teacher, they perhaps imply, surely Jesus could not afford to allow his disciples more laxity than the Pharisees expected of their followers.

Jeffrey Crabtree: The apparent assumption behind the question was that unclean hands would defile (make unclean) the food, which would then defile the person (Nolland 612, 615), thus breaking fellowship with the Lord.

2. (:2b) Specific Charge = Cleanliness Violation

"For they do not wash their hands when they eat bread."

Richard Gardner: The particular tradition of washing hands before eating may have been based on a biblical text commanding priests to bathe before eating sacred food (Lev. 22:1-9). That text is part of a longer catalogue of ritual laws urging the people of God to distinguish "between the holy and the common, and between the unclean and the clean" (Lev. 10:10), to avoid defilement from touching or partaking what is unclean (cf. Lev. 11), and to wash away defilement when it occurs (cf. Lev. 14:1-9; 15:1-33; Exod. 30:17-21).

B. (:3-6) Countercharge of Jesus

1. (:3) Elevating Man's Traditions over God's Commandments

"And He answered and said to them, 'And why do you yourselves transgress the commandment of God for the sake of your tradition?'"

Richard Gardner: The text provides a framework for defining the relationship between Scripture and tradition—and judges those who permit tradition to have priority over Scripture. Needless to say, it has not been difficult for interpreters to point to situations where this has been the case. In the Reformation era, Jesus' critique of Jewish tradition was often applied to the practices and institutions of Roman Catholicism (cf. Luther: 497-498; Calvin, 1960:4.10.10 and 4.10.23; Calvin, 1972, 2:159-161; Menno Simons: 178, 362). The reign of tradition, however, is really a generic problem, not the failing of one particular branch of Christendom. Every church must ask itself: Does Scripture control our traditions, or do our traditions control Scripture?

Daniel Doriani: Jesus turns the tables on the Pharisees at once. Although he cares about their topic—true holiness—he does not answer them on their terms. Instead, he proposes a counterquestion. The Pharisees ask, “Why do your disciples break the tradition of the elders?” Jesus replies, “And why do you break God’s law for the sake of your tradition?” (15:3).

By refusing to answer, Jesus captures the agenda. This is an important strategy. We must ask the right questions and set aside the wrong ones. When there is confusion, we should try to discover what the essential issue is. When there is a discussion, we need to try to frame the debate correctly. . . . Jesus asks the right question. The Pharisees asked about violations of the elders’ tradition; Jesus asks about violations of God’s law.

Charles Swindoll: Jesus didn’t take the bait. He had been breaking those unscriptural, contrived traditions since he began his ministry. If He wasn’t touching unclean lepers, he was taking corpses by the hand and lifting them back to life. And when he wasn’t fraternizing with scum-of-the-earth tax collectors, He had the audacity to heal people on the Sabbath! Knowing He was entirely in the right and they were in the wrong, Jesus answered their hypocrisy and should have convicted them of their own need for a Savior.

Jesus’ tone in this passage nears exasperation. He was fully aware of their man-made rules and regulations and couldn’t have cared less about them. He’d been dealing with this Pharisaic nonsense for months now, and this was just the latest installment of an ongoing conflict with spiritually blind guides who were leading people astray. Enough was enough! Jesus confronted them head-on.

Stu Weber: While the hypocrites claimed to enhance God's Law through their tradition, Jesus claimed that God's Law and their tradition were mutually exclusive. When their man-made regulations took precedence, those regulations took a person astray from the straight path of God's Law (cf. the wide and narrow gates and roads of 7:13-14).

2. (:4-6a) Explanation of the Countercharge

a. (:4) Clear Commands of God Regarding Honoring Parents

*“For God said, ‘Honor your father and mother,’ and,
‘He who speaks evil of father or mother, let him be put to death.’”*

Grant Osborne: Jesus then adds the commandment against reviling or “speaking evil” of a parent, part of a paragraph detailing capital death penalty cases (Exod 21:12–21) and was interpreted not only of cursing a parent but also of insubordination against parents. Jesus wants to show how serious the responsibilities to parents were.

Leon Morris: (:4) -- Jesus proceeds to draw attention to one of the ways they broke the commandment and precedes it with, “For God said.” Since the divine origin of the commandment is important, he does not allow it to drop out of sight. What God has said is not to be put on a level with what even godly scribes laid down and handed on from one to another.

The commandment he selects for attention is that which commands the Israelites to honor their parents. The Jews commonly respected their parents, but Jesus points out that this attitude was due not to a scribal requirement, but to a divine command. God, no less, has prescribed that proper respect be paid one's parents (Exod. 20:12; Deut. 5:16). With this he links a further prescription that anyone who speaks evil of parents shall be put to death (Exod. 21:17; Lev. 20:9). Scripture leaves no doubt that parents are to be honored, and that extends even to the way people speak of their parents.

(:5) -- But is adversative and you is emphatic; Jesus is setting the Pharisees in contrast to God, whose words he has just quoted. "God said ... but you say" means that the words of God stand in opposition to the words of the Pharisees. Whoever is general, "anyone at all." This "anyone" is pictured as addressing either father or mother and announcing that he has made a gift to God of anything that the parent might be expected to get from him. Gift comes first in this expression, which gives it emphasis, and while it may be used of gifts in general, in the New Testament it is used mostly for gifts made to God. In his version of the incident Mark at this point has korban, a transliteration of a Hebrew word meaning "offering" and always used in the Old Testament of offerings to God. What the child is telling the parent in this saying is that he has decided to give as an offering to God what the parent might have expected would be given to him or her in old age. Anything of mine is comprehensive. The son is vowing away all that he might have used to support his parents.

Jeffrey Crabtree: To honor (Greek timaō) means to "show high status to someone by honoring" (Louw and Nida I:735). It can also mean to "provide aid or financial assistance, with the implication that this is an appropriate means of showing respect" (1 Tim. 5:3; Louw and Nida I:571). These two meanings are closely connected, as Paul demonstrated in his instructions about parental support (1 Tim. 5:3-8). Adult children and grandchildren are responsible to honor their parents and grandparents by caring for their material needs. This was Jesus' point as well.

To curse or revile (v. 4) means "to insult in a particularly strong and unjustifiable manner" (Greek kakologeō; Louw and Nida I:434; Grimm's 320). The Hebrew word (Ex. 21:17) means to treat with contempt or dishonor (BDB 886). This Hebrew word and form were used in Genesis 12:3 ("that curseth thee") in God's covenant blessing to Abram. See also Leviticus 24:14, 23, Proverbs 20:20, and Jeremiah 15:10 for other examples.

b. (:5-6a) Convoluting Circumvention of God's Commands

"But you say, 'Whoever shall say to his father or mother, 'Anything of mine you might have been helped by has been given to God,' 6 he is not to honor his father or his mother.'"

Richard Gardner: For Jesus, the societal obligation to care for parents that God commands in the Decalogue has priority over the seemingly sacred act of vowing to give one's resources to a religious institution.

R. T. France: Jesus now accuses his opponents of undermining this basic principle of OT law by a formal legal device of their own invention. The scribal practice with regard to "Qorban" is described so briefly as to be quite cryptic to those not familiar with it, but Matthew's readers were presumably well aware of this convenient manipulation of the rules for dedication of property. These rules are the subject of extensive rabbinic discussion, collected in the Mishnah tractate Nedarim, "Vows," where the term qorbān and its equivalent qōnām occur frequently as a formula for dedicating food, money or property to God, which in practice meant to the temple treasury. Anything so dedicated was thus placed out of reach of other people who might otherwise have a claim on it, and the formula seems to have been deliberately used for this purpose. What is not so clear is how such a dedication could be made without the donor also losing the right to his own property (was it a pledge to be honored only at the donor's death?), but the rabbinic discussion makes it clear that in some way this could be achieved.

Stu Weber: Jesus was referring to a Jewish practice in which a person gave a gift that was devoted to God so it could be kept for oneself and not used for the good of others. Part of an adult child's obligation in honoring his parents was to care for them financially when they were in need, particularly as they grew older and were no longer able to make an adequate living. Widowed mothers or grandmothers were especially desperate for help. There was little opportunity for them to earn money, and they were unlikely to find a new husband to support them (1 Tim. 5:8). The Pharisees' loophole ("sorry, it is all 'devoted' to God") kept the younger generation from having to take care of their parents in their old age, and thus contradicted the Word of God.

3. (:6b) Elevating Man's Traditions over God's Commandments

"And thus you invalidated the word of God for the sake of your tradition."

R. T. France: The explicit contrasting of "your own tradition" with "the word of God" suggests a robust view of the authority of Scripture in relation to all human teaching, however venerable and however piously motivated.

Daniel Doriani: Tradition looks at the letter of the law and often seeks to manipulate it or exploit loopholes. It ignores the law's spirit and the people whom the law protects and directs. Traditions look at the hands; God's law examines the heart. . .

Without love for God, the quest for holiness becomes legalistic. It substitutes human tradition for God's law and substitutes human effort for God's grace. The traditions of the Pharisees started with God's laws, then added mind-boggling details about rest, food, washing, and even spitting. The tradition regulated the wrong things, lesser things, and in the wrong way, leaving the heart untouched (23:16–24).

C. (:7-9) Condemnation by Isaiah as Hypocrites and False Teachers

"You hypocrites, rightly did Isaiah prophesy of you, saying,"

Grant Osborne: The Pharisees are people who claim to be one thing but whose actions prove them to be something else (used also of the Pharisees in 22:18; 23:13, 14, 15). Isaiah 29:13 is from an OT passage frequently used in the NT (Matt 11:5; Rom 9:20; 1 Cor 1:19; Col 2:22). What does Jesus mean when he says Isaiah actually "prophesied" about them, especially since he was speaking of the people of his own time? Jesus uses typology here; that is, the Pharisees and scribes fit the pattern perfectly and are a typological fulfillment of that passage.

Stu Weber: A hypocrite is a person who puts on an outward display that is not representative of what is truly inside.

1. (:8) Hypocritical External Form of Worship

"This people honors Me with their lips, But their heart is far away from Me."

Jeffrey Crabtree: Isaiah taught that God rejects hearts that are far from Him, i.e., hearts that do not love Him and are not loyal to Him. Love and loyalty are heart matters. A heart not right with God cannot produce a life right with God.

Some Christian groups today also rely heavily on tradition at the expense of Scriptural authority. The Roman Catholic Church, for example, teaches three sources of authority:

- (1) Scripture,
- (2) the infallibility of the pope when speaking ex-cathedra, i.e., “as the head of the Church on earth concerning faith and morals” (Cairns 427), and
- (3) church tradition.

Roman Catholic doctrine has long taught that Scripture alone is not enough for salvation and holy living and that church tradition “as it was expressed in the decrees of popes and councils, [is] the only permissible, legitimate and infallible interpreter of the Bible” (Dowley 366). In 1545, the Council of Trent affirmed that the Bible and tradition are equally authoritative. This remains the official position of the Roman Catholic Church. . .

Tradition, whether individual, local church, denominational, or that of the entire visible church, can serve well only as long as it agrees with and remains subservient to Scripture.

2. (:9) Humanistic Subverting of Divine Truth

“But in vain do they worship Me, Teaching as doctrines the precepts of men.”

II. (:10-20) DEFILEMENT COMES FROM WITHIN NOT FROM WITHOUT

A. (:10-11) Addressing the Multitude -- Source of Defilement = Internal Not External

“And after He called the multitude to Him, He said to them, ‘Hear, and understand.’”

Stu Weber: Listen and understand is essentially the same as, “He who has ears, let him hear” (11:15; 13:9,43). Only those who would “hear” with a heart of faith and “understand” would accept Jesus' answer to the question of the Pharisees and scribes.

1. (:11a) Negatively Stated

“Not what enters into the mouth defiles the man,”

2. (:11b) Positively Stated

“but what proceeds out of the mouth, this defiles the man.”

Grant Osborne: The key contrast is between “into” (εἰς) and “out of” (ἐκ). It is not external things like food coming “into” the mouth that produce impurity but those thoughts and words from the heart that proceed “out of” the mouth that make a person impure. The rabbis should not disagree with this second point, but the whole import hits too close to home. Jesus already said this in 12:34 of the Pharisees, “For it is from the abundance of the heart that the mouth speaks.” One’s words reflect the heart, and that is the true source of defilement. Words and actions, not external piety, are the true measure of a person.

B. (:12-14) First Interaction with Disciples – False Teachers Will Ultimately be Judged

1. (:12) Powerful False Teachers Oppose God’s Truth

“Then the disciples came and said to Him,

‘Do You know that the Pharisees were offended when they heard this statement?’

Michael Wilkins: Jesus’ disciples report that Jesus has “offended” or “scandalized” (skandalizō) the Pharisees. They rightly understand that Jesus has elevated himself as critic of their entire religious tradition, which would undercut their influence with the people.

Jeffrey Crabtree: It was no wonder the Pharisees were offended. Jesus appeared to have set aside a significant portion of the law, had publically disagreed with the Pharisees and scribes, had struck down the tradition of the elders—and that openly, and had thus publicly challenged the authority of these men, their elders, and their traditions.

Charles Swindoll: We can sense that the disciples were getting a little nervous about Jesus’ confrontational tone with His opponents. Away from the public eye, they came to their Master and notified Him that he had offended the Pharisees. . .

2. (:13-14) Powerful False Teachers Can be Ignored Because They Are Irrelevant and Headed for Judgment

a. (:13) Plants Not Planted by God -- No Root and No Life

“But He answered and said,

‘Every plant which My heavenly Father did not plant shall be rooted up.’”

Leon Morris: In this way Jesus makes clear his contempt for the teachers who so confidently claimed to know the ways of God, but who had not been “planted” by the God to whom they so brazenly appealed. So far from being reliable expositors of the kingdom of God, the Pharisees were not even in the kingdom.

Stu Weber: Jesus’ calm confidence came out of the assurance that the Pharisees would be judged justly—both by God (15:13) and by the natural consequences of their own blindness (15:14). The plant terminology (15:13) brings to mind the parable of the weeds (13:24-30, 36-43). The hardened hearts of the Pharisees were not products of God’s work. Although they claimed to represent God, they were actually some of the “weeds” planted by the Evil One. They were among those who, in rebellion against God, did evil themselves and caused others to do evil as well (13:41). So they would experience God’s judgment. We will always have false religion in this world.

David Turner: Perhaps the disciples are concerned that the opposition of the Pharisees will be exacerbated by Jesus’ scathing words. Or if Josephus can be trusted (J.W. 1.110–12; Ant. 13.399–404), perhaps they are nervous about Jesus’ directly confronting the most popular interpreters of the law.

b. (:14) Blind Guides -- No Sight and No Future

“Let them alone; they are blind guides of the blind.

And if a blind man guides a blind man, both will fall into a pit.”

Grant Osborne: There is no use debating with those who are intractable. You expect them to oppose whatever you say, so leave them alone.

R. T. France: The Pharisees’ adverse reaction to Jesus’ words neither surprises nor dismays him; so direct a challenge to an essential principle of rabbinic thought could hardly expect any other reaction. But they are irrelevant, plants not planted by God and blind guides. We shall hear much more of Pharisees and scribes before the gospel is over, and Jesus will be engaged in hot debate with them again in Jerusalem (22:15–23:39). But already from the new perspective of the kingdom of heaven they are side-lined: “Leave them alone.” . . .

If these leaders of Israel have themselves missed the way in their understanding of what it means to be the people of God (as vv. 7–9 have powerfully alleged), their influence on other Jews can only lead them into the same “ditch” of distorted religious values. It is to draw people away from that damaging influence that Jesus has launched his appeal over their heads to the crowd (v. 10), as he will do again in 23:1–12.

Warren Wiersbe: Why be afraid of rootless plants that are dying, or blind guides who cannot see where they are going?

Donald Hagner: The absurdity of the situation of the Pharisees and their disciples is set forth in the proverbial image of a blind person leading another blind person, both of them falling into a pit (cf. Luke 6:39). It would be hard to find a more vivid image of lostness, hopelessness, and futility.

C. (:15-20) Second Interaction with Disciples – Defilement is a Heart Issue

1. (:15-16) Dull Disciples

*“And Peter answered and said to Him, ‘Explain the parable to us.’
And He said, ‘Are you still lacking in understanding also?’”*

Grant Osborne: Jesus is incredulous that the disciples, after all that has transpired and all the teaching they have received at his feet, can still be so “dull” (ἄσύνετος), uncomprehending, senseless, and foolish. Jesus told the crowds to “listen and understand” (v. 10), and now his very disciples have failed to do so. They should have understood immediately what Jesus said.

2. (:17-19) Moral Lesson Based on a Biology Analogy

a. (:17) Biology Analogy

“Do you not understand that everything that goes into the mouth passes into the stomach, and is eliminated?”

R. T. France: This earthy description of the alimentary system (a tighter version of Mark’s rather sprawling formulation, Mark 7:18–19) makes the point that physical food, while it goes into and through the body, is merely an aspect of animal existence and does not affect the heart, understood here as generally in biblical literature as the seat of thought and will (rather than of emotion, as in our idiom today). And since Jesus is going on to locate true purity and impurity in the heart and its products, the nature and origin of that food cannot therefore affect the matter. It is not a matter of what you eat but who you are; for the same principle cf. Rom 14:14, 17; 1 Cor 8:8; Heb 9:10.

b. (:18-19) Moral Lesson

“But the things that proceed out of the mouth come from the heart, and those defile the man. For out of the heart come evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, slanders.”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Matthew listed seven examples of activities that defile a person before God.

Mark's list (7:21) has thirteen. Matthew included one not in Mark's list, false witness, which shows that neither list is meant to be exhaustive, only representative. Both lists teach that people who live in sin are not right with God.

Grant Osborne: This is the true characteristic of the "hypocrite" (v. 7), a person who works hard at looking good and centers on all the external things but ignores the true source of the defilement, the inner reality of the heart.

Leon Morris: The list is no more than a sample of the evils that proceed from the heart. All sin defiles, and we should understand Jesus to mean that his followers must avoid evil of any sort. To follow the example of the Pharisees and concentrate on avoiding ceremonial defilement is to waste time and energy. Much more important is the avoiding of evil deeds, which really do defile the doers.

3. (:20) Thesis Summarized – Defilement is a Heart Issue

*"These are the things which defile the man;
but to eat with unwashed hands does not defile the man."*

Richard Gardner: In short, Jesus defines defilement in moral terms rather than ceremonial. It is not failure to observe a particular ritual of cleansing that defiles or profanes, but failure to act with wholeness in our relationships with God and fellow humans. Jesus underscores this point in his concluding pronouncement in verse 20, which recalls the issue raised at the outset of the story (v. 2) and proclaims the disciples innocent of any substantive offense.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What was the intention of the Pharisees in trying to enforce their detailed regulations?
- 2) Where have you seen the Christian church today elevate tradition over the Word of God?
- 3) Does our speech and conduct reflect a regenerated and transformed heart?
- 4) Why were the disciples so slow to understand the teaching of Jesus on this subject?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Donald Hagner: Above all others the Pharisees were respected and admired for their serious pursuit of righteousness (cf. 23:2–3). Perhaps this is exactly why Jesus criticized them so harshly. The source of their perspective was not God; they were themselves but blind guides of blind disciples. As had been pointed out in the preceding passage, they sadly allowed human teachings to cancel out the very commandments of God. They so valued the items of minor significance and a ritualistic formalism that they neglected emphasizing what truly makes a person unclean (cf. 23:23). The passage thus stands as a warning to all those who concern themselves with the intensive pursuit of righteousness and who in so doing elevate human tradition and formalism to a level equal with or even higher than scripture itself. The true problem of sin is not to be found in a failure to perform correctly some external minutiae of human making; sin is an interior matter that concerns the evil thought, words, and deeds that come from the heart. Moral righteousness is thus far more important than ritual purity. The fundamental problem of humanity is more basic than the Pharisees dreamed. The Pharisees simply failed to address sin as a radical human problem. The overcoming of sin, however, was essential to the purpose and work of Jesus (cf. 1:21; 26:28).

Grant Osborne: Consider the sins of your heart before you consider the actions of your life. The problem with the Pharisees was the false order of their priorities, and that is our difficulty as well. Until the heart is changed, actions will never suffice. When evil thoughts predominate, we never dare think our actions are viable. That is what happens with internet pornography. When we are immersed in such pernicious thoughts, how can we pretend to be serving God elsewhere? We are negating the so-called “good” we pretend to do. We must get our house in order before we start thinking our actions are good.

William Barclay: Here is the clash and the collision; here is the contest between two kinds of religion and two kinds of worship. To the scribes and Pharisees, religion was the observance of certain outward rules and regulations and rituals, such as the correct way to wash the hands before eating; it was the strict observance of a legalistic outlook on all life. To Jesus, religion was a thing which had its seat in the heart; it was a thing which issued in compassion and kindness, which are above and beyond the law.

To the scribes and Pharisees, worship was ritual and ceremonial law; to Jesus, worship was the clean heart and the loving life. Here is the clash. And that clash still exists. What is worship? Even today, there are many who would say that worship is not worship unless it is carried out by a priest ordained in a certain succession, in a building consecrated in a certain way, and from a liturgy laid down by a certain church. And all these things are externals.

Jeffrey Crabtree: This exchange between the Jewish leadership and Jesus contributed to the growing divide between them. In 9:3, some of the scribes accused Jesus of blaspheming because He claimed to be able to forgive sin. In 9:11, the Pharisees questioned the propriety of Jesus’ willingness to eat with sinners. In 12:1-8, some Pharisees challenged Jesus for allowing His disciples to break the Sabbath law. In 12:24, they accused Jesus of being empowered by Satan rather than God’s Spirit and He warned them that such statements are blasphemous and unforgivable. Later some scribes and Pharisees approached Jesus asking for a super sign (12:38). He rebuked them and promised them a great sign to come. Now representatives from the same two groups challenge Jesus again, this time on His failure to teach His disciples to obey the tradition of the elders. Jesus called them hypocrites and told everyone within earshot that these men were wrong. They were unhappy. The dislike would soon be hatred.

Daniel Doriani: Local churches have their traditions too—their prayers, their styles of speech that grant a sense of belonging to the group. The gospel never changes, but each generation must restate and reapply the gospel to meet the challenges of the day. At a minimum, thoughtless adherence to aging traditions can impede that goal. At a minimum, we can become complacent, viewing our long-standing, comfortable way of stating the gospel as the best way. At worst, we can start to imply that our way is the only proper way of stating and organizing the faith and that other ways are not simply flawed; they are immoral.

Anyone can lapse into legalism. At first glance, legalism seems like a courageous attempt to fulfill all of God's claims. The legalist strives to list all the duties he owes God and then to follow them. Oddly, in the end, legalism usually limits our service. If we look to laws, lists, and traditions to specify everything we must do, we will be tempted to say, "When I have done everything that the law and tradition require, when I have checked off everything on my list, then I have completed all my duty. God can ask no more." Thus the legalist serves the rules; he forgets to serve people, forgets to serve the Lord.

Legalism also removes the need to live by God's strength and grace. If we list everything we must do to avoid sin, we imply that we have the capacity to do it all, if we try hard enough. If so, then we hardly need grace, do we? The Christian life becomes manageable, entirely within human control. That is the message of "religion."

J. Ligon Duncan: Now this exchange with the Pharisees and the scribes gives Jesus the opportunity to talk about the relationship between ceremonial law and true religion, true holiness, the keeping of the moral law. And by the way, this exchange here also reminds us of another truth that our mother's taught us when we were young: The road to destruction is paved with good intentions. There is no doubt that the Pharisees, when they began their work of old tradition, did it with the best of motives. You remember Israel had been sent into exile because she had not been careful in the keeping of the law, because she had not followed in the ways of the Lord. And when Israel came out of exile, she was very interested that she not do that again. And so there were many people who were teaching in the religious circles of those days who said, let's make doubly sure that we don't get in that situation again. We'll not only keep the law of God, but we'll keep this hedge around the law of God. So more and more and more tradition came between the people and the word of God. Intentions are not enough. We must submit ourselves to the authority of the word. We must learn to teach in the spirit of the word, and we must neglect no part of the word. Remember, never in the New Testament will you find Jesus accusing the Pharisees or the scribes or the Sadducees, or any other party in Israel of caring too much about the word of God. It is always that by their own manmade traditions, they have taken away from the authority from the word of God. . .

He says, by your traditions you have made the word of God null and void. In other words, your traditions, rather than upholding the word of God, has actually undercut the authority of the word of God, by adding to God's word, you have taken away from God's word. It is subtraction by addition. They have subtracted from the word of God by adding to it their own manmade rules. .

Jesus is saying, "Moral defilement is more important than ritual defilement." The implication of Jesus' statement is, by the way, is that He is abolishing the ceremonial code for His followers under the covenant. Mark makes that clear in Mark chapter 7, verse 19. Mark adds this comment after the passage in which Jesus says that it is not what comes from in from the outside that defiles you. It is what comes out from the inside. Mark adds this phrase. By saying this, "He made all foods clean." In other words, He's saying that no longer was the ceremonial requirement valid for all the followers of the Lord with regard to clean and unclean food. This is a very significant moment in redemptive history when Jesus Christ is announcing that the ceremonial law is no longer binding on His people. . .

I want you to see what Jesus is aiming for. Jesus, in verse 11, is aiming for the heart. He is telling us that it is not what is superficial that makes this holy. It is what is inside and deep and profound. It is that from which holiness emanates. It from the inner man, the mind, the will, the whole man. That is where holiness proceeds from. It is a holiness that is from the inside out, and it characterizes all of our lives. That's the kind of holiness that Jesus is looking for in his disciples. Listen to these words from J.C. Ryle: "What is the first thing we need in order to be a Christian? A new heart. What is the sacrifice God asks us to bring to Him? A broken and a contrite heart. What is the true circumcision? The circumcision of the heart. What is genuine obedience. To obey from the heart. What is saving faith? To believe with the heart. Where ought Christ to dwell? To dwell in our hearts by faith. What is the chief request that wisdom makes to everyone? My Son, give me your heart." The Lord Jesus doesn't want merely superficial holiness in His people. He wants a transforming holiness from the outside out. And this is what he's saying to the Pharisees. That's not what you are about. You were about a superficial, a ceremonial, a ritual holiness. It is a man-made holiness about which was about, but I want my disciples transformed from the inside out. And so He warns the crowd that it's not the things that enter into them that make them unclean. It's what's on the inside that makes them unclean. . .

He is telling His disciples here that false doctrine kills. It is like the blind leading the blind. False doctrine leads us in the false ways of living. Jesus is alerting us to the spiritual danger of false teaching here by reminding us of its two consequences. False teaching leads to judgment by God, and unfortunately, false teaching leads many astray into false ways of living. Bad doctrine will lead to bad practice. And so the Lord Jesus Christ is very concerned that His disciples not be affected by the false teaching of the Pharisees.

TEXT: Matthew 15:21-31

TITLE: COMPASSION EXTENDED TO GENTILES: MEGA FAITH REWARDED AND HEALINGS ON THE HILL

BIG IDEA:

MERCY EXTENDED TO THE GENTILES DESPITE JESUS FOCUSING ON THE PRIORITY OF HIS MISSION TO THE JEWS

INTRODUCTION:

Stanley Saunders: From the woman's perspective, this is a story about walls, obstacles, persistence, ingenuity, and faith. The Gospels consistently associate strong demonstrations of faith with boundary crossings. In this story the woman scales the walls of race and gender, but she also must overcome Jesus' own tenacious adherence to his mission. Three times Jesus seeks to turn her away, but she never quits. And while Matthew preserves the sense that Jesus remains undeterred from his calling, the story also suggests that she converts him. Faith not only brings healing, it transforms relationships. The woman's faith stands in sharp contrast to the dogged defense of the status quo, with all its walls and hierarchies, of the Pharisees and scribes (cf. 15:1–20).

David Turner: The woman's final plea is amazing in both humility and insight, asking Jesus to permit her a scrap from the children's bread. His response commends her great faith and grants her request (15:27–28). The drama of repeated requests and responses heightens the reader's anticipation as Jesus places obstacle after obstacle in front of the woman. The inclusion of Ruth and Tamar in Jesus's genealogy (1:3, 5) prepares the attentive reader for this episode.

Warren Wiersbe: Jesus was trying to remain hidden (Mark 7:24), but somehow this Canaanite woman heard where He was and came to Him with her need. Keep in mind that our Lord responded to this woman as He did, not to destroy her faith, but to develop it. Her own replies showed that she was growing in faith and unwilling to let Him go without getting an answer.

Leon Morris: From a story of unremitting hostility Matthew turns to one of outstanding and unexpected trust. This is one of very few stories of healings of people outside the Israelite nation, and it presents Christians with a problem in that Jesus seems to take up a harsh attitude toward the suppliant woman. Mark has this story too, though with differences. But in both it is clear that the woman had exceptional faith and that her persistence received its due reward.

Richard Gardner: Having challenged traditional ways of viewing clean and unclean (15:1-20), Jesus proceeds to take a journey to an unclean land. He heads for the district of Tyre and Sidon (15:21), the Gentile area of southern Phoenicia (modern-day Lebanon). After an episode with an inhabitant of this region, Jesus returns to the area around the northern edge of the Sea of Galilee (15:29). Here too, however, there are hints that the events described are taking place on the boundary of the Jewish world. Unlike the typical audiences up to now, the crowds here respond to Jesus' ministry with fervent praise. And the very name Galilee, as understood by Matthew, denotes a place of hope for other nations as well as Israel (cf. 4:15-16; 28:16-20).

What we have then in 15:21-39 are several episodes which look ahead to the salvation of the Gentiles, even though Jesus' mission is itself confined to Israel. Each of the episodes attests Jesus' miraculous power, so that formally the unit is a collection of miracle stories. In the first episode (vv. 21-28), a conversation on how far Jesus' mercy may extend leads at last to the healing of a woman's possessed child. The second story consists of a Matthean summary (vv. 29-31), describing the healing of numbers of people with a variety of diseases and disabilities. And in the third and final account (vv. 32-39), we find a gift miracle which reads like a reprise on the story in 14:15-21.

(:21) GEOGRAPHICAL TRANSITION – SURPRISING GENTILE DESTINATION

“And Jesus went away from there, and withdrew into the district of Tyre and Sidon.”

Stanley Saunders: Here, as in most instances, flight is followed by healings (cf. 4:23–25; 9:24–25; 12:15; 14:13–14). Tyre and Sidon are known in the prophetic writings (Ezek. 27–28; Isa. 23) for their economic disparities and arrogance. Yet Jesus has already said that these two cities will find more favor on the judgment day than the cities of Galilee, where he has ministered (11:22).

David Turner: This is Jesus's fourth strategic withdrawal from conflict (cf. 2:12–14, 22; 4:12; 12:15; 14:13). He leaves Galilee for the region of Tyre and Sidon (cf. 11:22; Isa. 23:1–4; Jer. 25:22), a journey less than fifty miles to the north (cf. Mark 7:24–30). Jesus's previous statements about true purity (Matt. 15:10–20) are immediately put into practice in ministry to unclean Gentiles.

R. T. France: This was not a mission to the pagan cities (like Jonah's to Nineveh), but a retreat to a place where Jesus and his disciples could be away from Jewish opposition and Jewish crowds. There is no indication that he sought contact with the local people; it is the woman in v. 22 and the crowd in v. 30 who initiate the contact, and Jesus here shows no enthusiasm for the encounter.

Broadus: The jealousy of Herod (Mt 14:1 f.), the hostility of the Pharisees (Mt 12:14; 15:1, 12; also Mt 4:12; John 4:1–3), and the fanatical notions of the masses (John 6:15), still required that Jesus should withdraw from Galilee, as heretofore in Mt 14:13.

David Thompson: Two of the most despicable cities in the entire Bible were the cities of Tyre and Sidon. They were godless, arrogant, satanic places that are judged by God. It is a tragedy when Jesus finds greater refuge in godless environments rather than in His own hometown or environments that are supposed to be godly.

Tyre was 35 miles from Galilee and Sidon was about 60. The region was a Gentile area located along the northwestern coast of the Mediterranean Sea. Christ had referred to these two cities earlier in His ministry when He said that if He had done His miracles in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented (Matt. 11:21). But the truth is Jesus didn't do His miracles in this area. He came to offer Himself as King to Israel, not to evangelize the judged cities of Tyre and Sidon, or try to win Canaanite people who should have been destroyed (Deut. 20:16-17).

I. (:22-23a) MEGA FAITH REACHES OUT TO THE SAVIOR

A. (:22) Surprising Mega Faith Reflected in Plea for Mercy

1. Surprising Mega Faith Coming from a Gentile woman

“And behold, a Canaanite woman came out from that region,”

D. A. Carson: The introductory idou (lit., “behold,” untranslated in NIV) probably points to the extraordinary nature of the story. Mark (7:26) calls the woman “a Greek [i.e., a non-Jewess], born in Syrian Phoenicia.” Matthew’s use of the old term “Canaanite” shows that he cannot forget her ancestry: now a descendant of Israel’s ancient enemies comes to the Jewish Messiah for blessing. Exelthousa (lit., “coming out”) does not mean that she came out of that pagan region to meet Jesus but either that her ancestry was there or that she had left her home (Bonnard, Lohmeyer). Her calling Jesus “Son of David” shows some recognition of Jesus as the Messiah who would heal the people.

2. Surprising Mega Faith Focusing on the Identity of Jesus as Messiah to the Jews

“and began to cry out, saying, ‘Have mercy on me, O Lord, Son of David;’”

3. Surprising Mega Faith Showing Confidence in the Power of Jesus over Demonic Forces

“my daughter is cruelly demon-possessed.”

Charles Swindoll: Everything about the situation had the makings of an awkward, puzzling, and even scandalous clash of cultures.

- First, in that context it was socially improper for a woman to be addressing a man in this way.
- Second, though the woman was a Gentile, she acknowledged Jesus as “Lord” and “Son of David” – a startling confession of faith in Jesus’ messianic identity, especially in light of the fact that the Jewish religious leaders had rejected it.
- And third, to this point Jesus’ preaching and ministry had been focused almost exclusively on Jews, on calling the house of Israel to repentance.

B. (:23a) Surprising Silence of Jesus to Her Initial Plea

“But He did not answer her a word.”

Craig Blomberg: Surprisingly, Jesus breaks his pattern of immediately responding to requests for healing. His silence therefore seems deliberate and dramatic. The closest parallel to date has been the seemingly unintentional delay before Jesus raised Jairus’s daughter (9:18-26), a delay that ultimately magnified both the miracle and God’s glory.

J. Ligon Duncan: At first, He says nothing. And it is very important for you to understand that this is not insensitivity. Not only does your doctrine of Christ tell you that that could not be what this is, but Matthew himself is going to let you know in no uncertain terms in this text that Jesus’ initial silence and His initial hard words to this woman are deliberate. They are part of a plan. Jesus is saying what He is saying for a reason. And the reason is going to be a blessing for this woman. And so Jesus is not simply being rude. He is not being insensitive. Jesus is doing this for a reason and it for her benefit. In fact, the exchange between Christ and this woman is not only for her benefit but it is actually for the benefit of the disciples. And some of the words that Jesus will speak, are designed to prick the hard hearts of His own disciples so that they might see their lack of compassion. . .

Now, I want you to understand that Jesus, by speaking to her in verse 24, is explicitly refusing the request of the disciples. You see, you'd think in verse 23 that by not responding to her that Jesus is showing some form of cruelty. But in verse 24, by speaking to her when His disciples have asked Him to send her away, Jesus is showing that He has something cooking. Jesus has something going on in the response He wants to give to this woman. And He's explicitly rejecting what His disciples have requested. They want her out. They want her away. They want her gone. But the Lord Jesus engages her in conversation, and even though His words are hard they are not only difficult to comprehend, but they may seem to be insensitive in verse 24, recognize that those words represent the fact that Jesus has absolutely no intention of doing what His disciples want Him to do, and that is to ignore this woman in her hour of need.

II. (:23b-24) MISSION OF JESUS RESTATED – PRIORITY MUST FOCUS ON THE JEWS

A. (:23b) Disciples Are Dismissive

“And His disciples came to Him and kept asking Him, saying, ‘Send her away, for she is shouting out after us.’”

D. A. Carson: Jesus' silence does not quiet the woman; so his disciples beg him to stop her persistent cries (v.23). If they mean “send her away without helping her,” either they suppose she is annoying him or they themselves are being annoyed. But their words could also be taken to mean “send her away with her request granted” (so Meyer, Benoit). Indeed only this interpretation makes sense, because v.24 gives a reason for Jesus' not helping her rather than for not sending her away.

David Turner: It is possible that Matt. 15:23–24 should be understood a bit differently, with the disciples asking Jesus to heal the woman in 15:23 and with Jesus answering them, not her, in 15:24 (Légasse 1972b: 28). But it is unlikely that ἀπόλυσον (apolyson) means “set free” (by healing her daughter) rather than “dismiss” (cf. BDAG 117–18).

B. (:24) Deeds of Mercy Must Be Directed

*“But He answered and said,
‘I was sent only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.’”*

D. A. Carson: It appears, then, that Jesus wanted his disciples and the Canaanite woman to recognize “that his activities were circumscribed not only by the inevitable limitations of his manhood, but by the specific part that he had been called to play during his brief earthly life” (Tasker, 150). True, Jesus was “Son of David,” as the woman said, but that did not give her the right to enjoy the benefits covenanted to the Jews. The kingdom must first be offered to them. The thought is like John 4:22: “Salvation is from the Jews.” The Samaritan woman, like this Canaanite woman, had to recognize this—even if a time was coming when true worship would transcend such categories (Jn 4:23–26).

Jeffrey Crabtree: Interpreters debate whom Jesus was speaking to in verse 24 since He did not specifically address His comments to either the woman or His disciples. Gundry (312-313; also Walvoord 118) says Jesus was talking to His disciples and the woman overheard him. He says that Jesus' restricted calling and His disciples' antagonism were obstacles that highlighted this Gentile's faith. Bruner (2:99) suggests He may have been talking to Himself.

Whether speaking directly to her or not, He was clearly talking about her and intended that she hear. She seized the opportunity to beg and came closer.

S. Lewis Johnson: There are a lot of people, unfortunately, that seem to be disturbed by the doctrine of election, and allow this great doctrine in which we should rejoice—the Lord Jesus said remember, rejoice that your names are written in heaven. This is something to be happy about. She doesn't allow the doctrine of election in which on the surface it appears that she's not included to disturb her. This doctrine of the divine choice of a people from before the foundation of the world acts with a very depressing effect on some people—the non-elect—and acts with a very depressing effect on the elect, often, until they have been wrought upon by the Holy Spirit, then they begin to rejoice in the thing that used depress them. Strange people these Christians.

“We've known poor seekers mournfully to say,” Mr. Spurgeon used to say, “perhaps there's no mercy for me. I may be among those for whom no purpose of mercy has been formed.” It always puzzles me when we read in the word of God that the gospel is for sinners – that's a pretty broad term, sinners. As a matter of fact, it includes everyone in this room, and in the room over there too, and those sitting out in the hall as well. Maybe especially you out in the hall [laughter]. Sinners, that's comprehensive enough to include every son of Adam and Adam too. Why this should be disturbing to some I don't know. But nevertheless, this woman is not disturbed by doctrines of distinguishing grace.

III. (:25-28) MEGA FAITH REFLECTS A GENUINE HEART

A. (:25-26) Genuine Heart of Worshipful Expectation Despite Multiple Obstacles

1. (:25) Her Plea for Help from Posture of Worship

“But she came and began to bow down before Him, saying, “Lord, help me!””

Stanley Saunders: The doctor is not taking new clients at this time. She fits neither his mission objective, restoring Israel, nor the demographic profile of his constituency. She ignores this rationale, falls before him, and pleads: “Lord, help me.” He explains again the exclusive nature of his mission.

Stu Weber: The woman came close to Jesus and knelt before him. The verb knelt is the common word that means “to worship” (e.g., 15:9). In this vivid account, there is probably an emphasis on the literal meaning of the word, “to bow down,” but there is also a deliberate contrast between this woman's genuine, heart-felt response to Jesus and Israel's false, superficial “worship” in 15:9. This woman knew she needed a Savior, but Israel thought they were doing fine on their own.

This is true worship in its most basic form—to cast ourselves on God in helplessness, acknowledging the Lord's power, love, and wisdom as our only source of help.

2. (:26) The Lord's Response from Priority of Mission

*“And He answered and said,
‘It is not good to take the children's bread and throw it to the dogs.’”*

David Turner: The point here is the redemptive-historical priority of Israel (Calvin 1972:2.169–70; Carson 1984: 355–56). Jews come first in Jesus’s ministry, yet he can also be compassionate to Gentiles once the “children” have been fed. Ancient negative stereotypes resulted in frequent epithets like this being hurled by Gentiles at Jews and by Jews at Gentiles, but Jesus’s speech is motivated by pastoral concerns. His blunt language reflects his culture, yet his commendation of the woman’s faith and his upcoming gentile mission transcend that culture.

Charles Swindoll: Everything He said was true, but His statement was intended to provoke the woman to demonstrate her persistence, not to crush her spirit.

Warren Wiersbe: The Greek word means “a little pet dog” and not the filthy curs that ran the streets and ate the garbage.

R. T. France: We can only speculate on why Jesus felt it appropriate in this case to raise the stakes so high in reminding the woman of the primarily Israelite focus of the Messiah’s mission before eventually acceding to her feisty response. Cold print does not allow us to detect a quizzical eyebrow or a tongue in the cheek, and it may be that Jesus’ demeanor already hinted that his discouraging reply was not to be his last word on the subject. Need we assume that when eventually the woman won the argument Jesus was either dismayed or displeased? May this not rather have been the outcome he intended from the start? A good teacher may sometimes aim to draw out a pupil’s best insight by a deliberate challenge which does not necessarily represent the teacher’s own view -- even if the phrase “devil’s advocate” may not be quite appropriate to this context!

B. (:27-28) Genuine Heart of Humble Self-Awareness in Her Persistent Plea

1. (:27) Her Plea from Posture of Humble Submission – Crumbs for a Canaanite

“But she said, ‘Yes, Lord; but even the dogs feed on the crumbs which fall from their masters’ table.’”

D. A. Carson: As does Paul in Romans 9–11, the woman preserves Israel’s historical privilege over against all radical idealization or spiritualization of Christ’s work, yet perceives that grace is freely given to the Gentiles.

Jeffrey Crabtree: The woman’s self-identification with dogs shows that she understood what Jesus meant and accepted her place as one outside the covenant community. She had no right to ask this favor. She understood that Jesus was speaking of “order of priority” (Newman and Stine 512-513). He was the Jews’ Messiah first. She believed, though, that her needs could be met immediately.

R. T. France: The “debate” reaches its climax in an unexpectedly feisty response from this Gentile woman. Far from being the meek acquiescence which most versions imply, it is a robust refusal to accept the apparent implication of Jesus’ words. She turns Jesus’ own parable against him. If Gentiles are to be “dogs,” then at least let the dogs have their due. The dogs do have a right to be fed, even if all they get is the left-overs. Jesus, as the Messiah of Israel (“Son of David,” v. 22), must indeed first go to his own people, but that does not mean that his mission must stop there. Her reply, whether she knows it or not, thus encapsulates the important biblical theology of the election of Israel not for their own benefit alone but to be a means of blessing to all nations, a light to the Gentiles (Gen 12:3; Isa 49:6). “Yes, it is right, Lord!”

J. Ligon Duncan: This woman reminds us that no one deserves the grace of God. No one has a claim on God. No one can say, “You must give me this, God!” She teaches that we all stand as beggars before God, deserving only wrath and condemnation. And yet she willingly holds out her hands, and she says, ‘You are my only hope, give me the crumbs.’ What she’s teaching us there is that we’re all dogs. We all stand precisely in the same position.

You see, this is not about where Gentiles stand in juxtaposition to those of Israel in Jesus’ day. Ultimately, this is about where every human being stands before God. We do not stand before God in a position where we may demand of Him His grace. We stand before Him deserving condemnation and begging grace. For the woman, Christ gave her an opportunity for her faith to be strengthened. For the disciples, He is laying the groundwork for their eventual mission to the Gentiles. You remember in the previous passage, He’s already declared all foods clean. Now He is implying that that Old Covenant divide between Jew and Gentile is going to be brought down into rubble in His kingdom. And that the Gentiles, the Canaanites, will worship the God of Israel by the grace of the Messiah of Israel. We learn here that faith never looks at the salvation of God, at the grace of God, at the blessing of God as an entitlement. We are entitled to nothing but hell. Grace is grace.

2. (:28) The Lord’s Response from Recognition of Her Mega Faith

“Then Jesus answered and said to her, ‘O woman, your faith is great; be it done for you as you wish.’ And her daughter was healed at once.”

Craig Blomberg: Jesus apparently wants to demonstrate and stretch this woman's faith. The “children” must then refer to Israel and the “bread” to the blessings of God on the Jews, particularly through Jesus' healing ministry. The woman disputes none of Jesus' terms but argues that, even granting his viewpoint, he should still help her (v. 27). The Gentiles should receive at least residual blessings from God's favor on the Jews. In fact, the Old Testament from Gen 12:1-3 onwards promised far more than residue. The woman reveals a tenacious faith even as a Gentile (v. 28). Jesus explicitly commends this faith, closely paralleling the narrative of 8:5-13 (as does also his instantaneous healing from a distance). Matthew's distinctives underline her faith by the addition both of her words in v. 22 and of Jesus' praise here. “Your request is granted” more literally reads let it be done for you as you wish.

Leon Morris: It is interesting that Jesus does not commend the woman’s persistence or her humility; it is her faith that is basic. She believed in Jesus, and in the end she obtained her petition. Jesus says that it will be “as you wish”; the woman’s deep desire was granted. Matthew tells us that the girl was healed immediately. He never gives an indication of the nature of the illness; for him two things were important: the faith of the Canaanite woman and the immediacy of the cure of her daughter.

Stu Weber: There was no longer any reason to test the woman's faith, so Jesus assured her that her deepest desire had been granted. Just as with the centurion's servant (8:13), Jesus performed a long-distance healing. Matthew records that the woman's daughter was healed that very hour.

Warren Wiersbe: It is worth noting that both of the persons in the gospel of Matthew who had “great faith” were Gentiles: this Canaanite woman and the Roman centurion (Matt. 8:5-13). In both cases, Jesus healed the one in need from a distance. Spiritually speaking, the Gentiles were “afar off” until Calvary, when Jesus Christ died for both Jews and Gentiles and made reconciliation possible (Eph. 2:11ff.).

(:29-31) GEOGRAPHICAL TRANSITION – HEALINGS ON THE HILL – SUMMARY OF HEALING MINISTRY OF JESUS

A. (:29) Jesus Still Seeking Seclusion

“And departing from there, Jesus went along by the Sea of Galilee, and having gone up to the mountain, He was sitting there.”

Stanley Saunders: Matthew again uses a summary of Jesus’ healing ministry as a narrative transition (cf. 4:23–25; 9:35–38). Jesus, who has been temporarily sidetracked from his mission to the lost sheep of the house of Israel (15:24), now passes from the region of Tyre and Sidon (15:21) back along the Sea of Galilee to an unnamed mountain (15:29), where he sits down, as if to teach (cf. 5:1–2). It is not students who come to him, however, but “great crowds” bringing Israel’s lame, maimed, blind, and mute for healing. Each of these conditions represents not only physical disorders that afflict individuals, but Israel’s own maladies. These are the symptoms of oppression, exploitation, and rebellion against God. Whereas the Pharisees and scribes have challenged Jesus’ authority and its source (12:1–14, 22–37; 15:1–9), the crowds rightly “see” the power of “the God of Israel” at work (15:31).

Jeffrey Crabtree: The travel from Galilee to Tyre, on to Sidon, and then back down into the Decapolis, would have taken a few weeks, perhaps as much as six months (Barclay 2:147). The feeding of the five thousand was in the spring (Jn. 6:4) and by the fall Jesus was back in Galilee with His family (Jn. 7:2-3)—and six months from the cross! The Decapolis ministry and miracles, then, took place in mid to late summer of the final year of Jesus’ ministry and was in an area populated mainly by Gentiles.

Homer Kent: Mark shows that Jesus proceeded northward in Phoenicia through Sidon, then eastward across the Jordan, and finally southward through Decapolis till he reached the Sea of Galilee. This route suggests that he deliberately avoided the domain of Herod Antipas.

B. (:30-31) Jesus Still Responding to Desperate Needs

1. (:30) Multitude of Healings

“And great multitudes came to Him, bringing with them those who were lame, crippled, blind, dumb, and many others, and they laid them down at His feet; and He healed them,”

R. T. France: The summary of Jesus’ healings in this Gentile area is as comprehensive as among the Jews in 14:34–36, but this time it is expressed in terms of specific complaints rather than in purely general terms, though with a generalizing “many others” at the end of the list. The complaints mentioned recall Isa 35:5–6, the blessings promised as part of God’s redemption of his people, a passage which was also echoed in Jesus’ depiction of the “deeds of the Messiah” in 11:5; but now those messianic blessings are being experienced also outside the covenant people.

William Hendriksen: The very simplicity of the account makes it all the more touching. As far as the record goes no questions were asked as to whether a person happened to be Gentile – this was Gentile territory – or Jew. There is nothing at all to indicate whether the handicapped individual had already accepted Jesus as his personal Lord and Savior (which seems improbable) or whether perhaps he or his sponsor “believed” in him only as a worker of miracles. All that mattered was that this man or woman or child needed help, and that Jesus was able and was eager to provide this help, this healing. . .

2. (:31) Marveling Response

a. Response of Wonder

“so that the multitude marveled as they saw the dumb speaking, the crippled restored, and the lame walking, and the blind seeing;”

b. Response of Worship

“and they glorified the God of Israel.”

R. V. G. Tasker: that Jesus was now in predominantly non-Jewish territory is implicit in the statement that the praise offered by those who experienced Jesus’ healing power was ascribed to “the God of Israel.”

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why this Gentile focus at this particular juncture of the mission of Jesus?
- 2) Where have you had the opportunity to demonstrate mega faith?
- 3) How is the attitude of Jesus contrasted with that of the disciples?
- 4) What spiritual maladies did the healing of these physical infirmities represent?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Stu Weber: Jesus was demonstrating his frustration with unbelieving Israel (11:16-24; 13:10-17; 15:7-9). Jesus decided that the “washing” controversy of 15:1-20 was to be the “last straw.” He was not abandoning Israel entirely, for there would continue to be a faithful remnant, but he demonstrated to Israel that their faith was inadequate. Their faithlessness was accentuated when compared to ignorant Gentiles, who did not have the privileged revelation of God's mind and heart through the Scriptures. Jesus stopped treating Israel with “favored nation status.” But because of God's promise to Abraham, Israel would always play a special role in his plan.

Donald Hagner: Jesus’ healing ministry continues, although as but part of the larger purpose of his ministry. The miracles point to the reality of Jesus’ proclamation of the kingdom and of his identity as messianic king (note the resemblance to 11:5 in response to John the Baptist’s question). It is the God of Israel who is at work in the miracles of Jesus. Matthew’s emphasis on fulfillment elsewhere is exactly in keeping with this assessment. That this was particularly meaningful to Matthew’s Jewish-Christian church in its defense against the counterarguments of the synagogue is obvious. If it is the God of Israel who is at work in the ministry of Jesus, then God’s faithfulness to his people is confirmed in the same way that the limitation of Jesus’ mission to Israel confirms it. Matthew's Jewish-Christian church never ceased giving thanks to the God of Israel, who was the God of Jesus and of the church.

J. Ligon Duncan: Notice also that we learn in this passage that Christ's people are often less gracious and compassionate than He is. There may be many of you here today who have been put off by Christians before. Christians have been unkind to you and you have been disappointed. Maybe some of you have been so disappointed as to be cynical about Christianity and even cynical about Christ. I want to remind you that even the Apostles stumbled in this area, and it did not make what Jesus was saying untrue, and it did not make Jesus untrue. Jesus' followers will fall short of His calling. And it'll happen more often than not. But to those of us who are followers of Christ, is this not a warning that we must not fall in the Spirit of spiritual selfishness into which the Apostles had fallen? We must manifest the same compassion that the Lord Jesus Christ manifested even to those who are different than we are. We believers need to beware this kind of a Spirit, and practice the same kind of grace and compassion as our Lord.

William Hendriksen: 7 Characteristics of this Canaanite woman:

- her reverential attitude towards Jesus – calls Him “Lord” and “Son of David”
- her agony – crying out constantly
- her intense love for her little daughter
- her humility
- her quick-wittedness
- her unswerving God-given faith in Jesus
- her perseverance

David Thompson: IN ANY DISPENSATION, ANY SINFUL PERSON WHO WILL PLACE HIS OR HER FAITH IN JESUS CHRIST SHALL BE SAVED, EVEN IF THE PROGRAM OF GOD IS NOT DIRECTED TOWARD THAT PERSON.

Just as a Gentile is saved here, so any Jew can be saved today. This is a tremendous passage of grace and a very important passage in Matthew, for several reasons:

- 1) It shows that Jesus Christ came for Israel. 15:24
- 2) It shows that Jesus Christ did not come for Gentiles. 15:26
- 3) It prefigures the fact that Christ's program would branch out to Gentiles. 15:28
- 4) It shows the kind of attitude Gentiles should have toward Israel. 15:27

Ed Dobson: Developing Mega-Faith

Can you sense this woman's faith? Jesus did. “Woman,” He said, “you have great faith!” The Greek word is μεγας (meg'-as), source of the English prefix mega. This woman had mega-faith! From this story, notice the characteristics of mega-faith:

1. Mega-faith does not deny the problem. It is not the power of positive thinking or a way of looking at life through rose-colored glasses. Mega-faith is realistic, acknowledging the challenges, difficulties, struggles, and sufferings.
2. Mega-faith goes directly to the source of blessing. As soon as she heard of Christ, she came and fell at His feet. We sometimes depend too much on our own abilities and resources. But great faith knows that beyond our own resources is the source of all power and blessing—God Himself! (See Heb. 4:14–16+)
3. Mega-faith throws itself at the feet of Jesus. This was an act of submission, carrying the idea of abandonment to the purpose, plan, and power of God. She didn't come with her own plan and ask Jesus to bless it. She said, “Lord, I give this to You.” It's frightening to

- give up control, but when we yield control to Christ, what freedom comes!
4. Mega-faith is persistent. At first, Jesus doesn't answer this woman; and when He finally did answer her, His tone was discouraging. But she kept begging. We should always pray and not faint. Prayer and faith persist, even when God seems to respond not a word.
 5. Mega-faith repeats the word of God. This woman took what Jesus said, repeated it back to Him, then added a request to it. Great faith is anchored in Scripture.
 6. Mega-faith responds with submission. "Yes, Lord," the woman said. Those are two very important words in our prayer vocabulary. They acknowledge Him who is in charge, like Jesus in the Garden, ". . . not my will, but Your will be done." Great faith surrenders the outcome to God, Who knows what is best for us.
 7. Mega-faith is always rewarded. Going home, this woman found her child whole and the demon gone. Great faith is always rewarded with divine intervention which comes either through a miracle or through a specific message from God that enables us on the journey.

David Guzik: Why her faith was great:

1. Her faith was great, even compared to her other virtues. She was humble, she was patient, she was persevering, she cared for her child. Yet Jesus didn't compliment any of these good things, but only her faith.
2. Her faith was great because it was unlikely. No one might have expected a Gentile to trust Jesus so much.
3. Her faith was great because she worshipped Jesus even before she had an answer from Him.
4. Her faith was great because it had been tested so severely. It's hard to think of a greater test than a demon-possessed child; but her faith was also tried by the seeming indifference or coldness of Jesus.
5. Her faith was great because it was clever. She turned Jesus' word inside-out and made what might have been taken as an insult as a door open for faith
6. Her faith was great because it concerned a need right in front of her, and a real need at that. Many people have faith for everything except those things that are right in front of them.
7. Her faith was great because it would not give up. She did not stop until she got what she needed from Jesus.
8. You could say that her faith conquered Jesus. He not only healed her daughter but He did so immediately, something that she had not even asked for.

John MacArthur: The Quality of Great Faith

Now, what is it about the faith of this woman that constitutes it as great faith? We know the Bible speaks of little faith, it speaks of weak faith, speaks also of strong faith, abiding faith, continuing faith, bold faith, rich faith, obedient faith, steadfast faith, dead faith, precious faith, common faith, unfeigned faith, working faith, and all faith. But what is the nature of great faith? Mega-faith? . . .

And so it was the political and the religious pressure that drove Him really to seek a time of seclusion with His own. He had tried that earlier, in going across the Sea of Galilee to the northeastern shore, going up into a mountain, but you remember that the multitude gathered below, and that was brought to a halt. He sought it again by going across the sea to the other side, only to find the multitude there. He went into Gennesaret, which was an area of farmland without city, only to find another multitude there.

Then seeking again the rest and the seclusion and the quiet and the time with His own, anticipating the cross only a year away, and knowing there was much to be readied in their hearts, He sought seclusion. And so from the frenzy of Galilee, He went into the north. He went beyond, if you will, the political and religious jurisdiction of the leaders of Israel. . .

Now, for Jesus, this was a deliberate withdrawal. It was not out of fear, it was out of a desire for time alone with His twelve men, time for preparing them for the cross, for the mission at hand, time to take the pressure off the frenzied situation in Galilee. Palestine obviously afforded Him no privacy. No matter where He went, there was a mob there, and He needed this time. . .

And so there is a sense in which - although He is not fully opening the ministry to the gentiles, He is not canceling out the priority of Israel, He is extending Himself to open hearts. And even though He did not go there purposely to minister as such but to seek seclusion, He knew when He got there that He'd meet this woman because He knew everything. And before He left, according to Mark's gospel, chapter 7, verse 31, He did minister on a wide range to the people in that area. So He did go to some open hearts.

And I see a sense of pathos in this. He could only take the resistance, He could only take the shallowness, He could only take the hostility and the animosity of Israel so long, and He was driven to go to a place where hearts were more open. And there is symbolism in this. He is abandoning traditional religion for true faith. He is abandoning religious pride for humility. He is abandoning the one who seeks nothing for the one who seeks with an open heart. And He is always available to that person. . .

Great faith is a relative term. To her, it was great faith because she had so little on which to build it. In other words, she was a pagan outside the covenant, outside the law, outside the promises, outside the Word of God, outside the Scriptures, and she had been in area where the Lord Jesus had not been doing His mighty deeds. So based on the amount of content and information she had, her faith is great.

On the other hand, when the Lord says to the disciples, "Oh, you of little faith," it is only little in a relative sense. Relative to all they knew and to all they had been exposed to, they should have had a greater faith. But in her case, this is great faith. And I believe that that is the key to the whole passage, and if you don't understand that the faith of the woman is the issue, you can't understand what goes on.

Now follow. We see, then, there the first element of great faith, and I want to give you about five, five qualities that mark great faith. Now, the first one is this: great faith - or mega-faith, if you choose - is properly directed. She put her faith in the right person. . .

Secondly, it is not only properly directed, it is repentant. And I've already said that repentance has two elements. It is turning from sin to God, turning from idols to God, and wrapped in it is a sense of penitence. . .

There's a third element. Her faith was not only properly directed and repentant, but it was reverent. . .

Let me give you a fourth thought, and this is the heart of the text. Watch how it unfolds. It is persistent - it is persistent. Great faith is persistent. Now, I want you to notice that beginning in verse 23, Jesus puts up a series of barriers for this woman. You know, some people come to Christ and they have to struggle through their own doubt. Some people come to Christ in the Gospel of Matthew and they have to struggle through the inability of the disciples, say, but this woman, in order to get through to Christ, has to struggle through the barriers that He puts up. . .

You say, "Well, did He care?" Sure, He cared. "Did He have compassion?" Of course He had compassion. "Well, what is He doing? Why doesn't He say something?" You see, He had had enough of shallowness, He had enough of superficiality, He had enough of people who came and got what they wanted and left. He had all He needed of that in Galilee. There was enough shallow soil, enough weedy ground, and I believe that He wanted to strengthen and test and pull this woman's faith to its full flower. And so He puts up barriers through which she must persist to show the reality of true faith. . .

I mean she is really persistent, isn't she? "You're going to make Jewishness an issue, I'll go through that." "You want to make this little analogy an issue, I'll turn the analogy to fit the situation." That couldn't stop her, either. And it's true, through the time that Jesus was feeding the children of Israel, there were the crumbs dropping to the gentiles, weren't there? And we see it all through the gospel account. And finally, of course, the dawn will come when the church is born and gentiles are embraced in a marvelous way. . .

Look at verse 25 and see the next characteristic of her faith; it was humble. Properly targeted, repentant, reverent, persistent, and humble. "Then came she" - I love this - "and worshiped Him."

TEXT: Matthew 15:32-39

TITLE: FEEDING OF THE 4,000 – EXTENSION OF MESSIANIC PROVISION TO THE GENTILES

BIG IDEA:

COMPASSION AND PROVISION SHOWN TO THE GENTILES BY THE MESSIAH CONTRASTED WITH THE DISMISSIVE ATTITUDE OF THE DISCIPLES

INTRODUCTION:

Leon Morris: Matthew clearly regards the two incidents as distinct: the numbers of people are different in the two incidents, as are the quantities of food and the amounts left over; the words for “basket” are different; the people in this incident had been with Jesus for three days (v. 32) whereas in the earlier incident they had just gone around the lake to head him off (14:13-14); and the times appear to be different, the earlier feeding being when the grass was green (Mark 6:39), that is, in spring, while here there is no mention of grass and the ground appears to be hard (v. 35); in other words, it is late summer. The feeding of the five thousand is found in all four Gospels, but this miracle is related only in Matthew and Mark.

Warren Wiersbe: Chart showing the differences in the two incidents:

Feeding 5,000	Feeding 4,000
Primarily Jews	Primarily Gentiles
Galilee, near Bethsaida	The Decapolis
5 loaves, 2 fish	7 loaves, “a few fish”
12 baskets over	7 baskets over
Crowd with Him 1 day	Crowd with Him 3 days
Spring of year (green grass)	Summer season
Tried to make Him King	No popular response

Donald Hagner: At first glance this miracle involving the feeding of the four thousand seems to be merely a less impressive repetition of the miracle of the feeding of the five thousand. Both stories are clearly stories of messianic provision foreshadowing the blessings of the eschaton, and this one, especially in retrospect, intimates the extension of messianic blessing even to the Gentiles. The fulfillment brought by Jesus is finally to involve the feeding of the hungry of the nations. The universalism implicit here is important to the evangelist's understanding of the meaning and significance of Jesus' messianic mission. Theologically, this feeding, like that of the five thousand, is closely related to the feeding symbolized in the eucharist, which also points in its own way to the experience of eschatological blessing. The feeding of the four thousand points to the blessing of the Gentiles, who, together with Israel, will also be the recipients of eschatological blessing through the provision of Jesus.

J. Ligon Duncan: And there is a different reason, a different purpose in these miracles in Jesus instruction of His disciples. Listen to R.V.G. Tasker: "In the first story, Jesus seems to be concerned that the disciples should understand how utterly dependent upon Him they must always be. If they are to do what they would have them to do, they must be in dependence upon Him." You will remember that the disciples come to Jesus in the feeding of the 5,000. They say the people are hungry, and what do we do? And Jesus shows by His mighty miracles that the disciples must depend upon Him, because He turns around and He says, "You go feed them." And the disciples say, "We can't." And the point is: "Right, you can't, I can." If you're going to feed the people, if you're going to shepherd the people, you're going to have to be dependent on Me.

But listen to what Tasker says is the reason for this miracle: "In the second story He seems to be indirectly reproving them for their lack of sympathy for the needs of the Gentile world." Have you ever noticed the difference between these miracles? Jesus is right off the shore of Galilee, ministering in a Jewish region, and the disciples come to him and say, "Lord, these wonderful people are hungry." Now Jesus is ministering in a Gentile region. Do the disciples come to him? No. Jesus comes to the disciples. These people have been with Jesus for three days. For three days these people have been with Jesus and they've run out of their food supplies and do the disciples come to Jesus and say, 'Lord these good people are hungry'? No! The disciples don't even notice. Jesus comes to His disciples and He says, 'I have compassion on these people.' What's implied? You don't. 'I want to feed them. So you feed them.' The scenario is entirely different. Jesus is again showing the disciples His compassion for the Gentiles and this was key to their later missionary work. Jesus is laying a very important foundation for the missionary task. And Jesus' compassion being highlighted is not a unique experience in the gospels. No less than 9 times in the gospels Jesus is accounted as being a person of compassion. . .

All of us are tempted to overlook those who are isolated and hurting and needy and who are different from us. And Jesus is calling on us here to show His kind of compassion to those who are marginal, to those who are different, to those who we might even be inclined to shun. Jesus is calling us to them.

William Barclay: The wonder of this story is that in these healings and in this feeding of the hungry, we see the mercy and the compassion of Jesus going out to the Gentiles. Here is a kind of symbol and foretaste that the bread of God was not to be confined to the Jews; that the Gentiles were also to have their share of him who is the living bread.

I. (:32-34) WHO WILL TAKE THE INITIATIVE TO MEET THE NEEDS OF HUNGRY GENTILES?

“And Jesus called His disciples to Him, and said,”

A. (:32) Contrast between Jesus and His Disciples

1. Compassion of Jesus for the Gentiles

“I feel compassion for the multitude, because they have remained with Me now three days and have nothing to eat;”

Stu Weber: The crowd was the same Gentile people who had been with Jesus on the mountainside near the Decapolis throughout three days of teaching and healing ministry (15:29-31).

Bruce Hurt: Our English word compassion is from Latin and means to suffer with and as one source has said is “a feeling of deep sympathy and sorrow, accompanied by a strong desire to alleviate the pain and remove its cause.”

Broadus: Jesus was quite the preacher to keep them listening for 3 days! They had no doubt brought some food with them, which was now exhausted. They showed great zeal to see and hear and be healed, remaining so long in the thinly inhabited region, sleeping on the ground two nights in the open air, living on the food brought with them, and slow to leave when it was gone.

Grant Osborne: The crowd is so filled with amazement that they do not want to leave and so stay with Jesus until it is getting dangerously late, and Jesus is aware of their predicament.

2. Dismissive Attitude of the Disciples

“and I do not wish to send them away hungry, lest they faint on the way.”

Leon Morris: The people had evidently not come prepared for as long a stay as it had turned out to be. The meaning is not that the crowds had been fasting for three days, but that during that time they had exhausted their food supply. Now Jesus says that he does not want to send them off without something to eat. It would be a long way home for some of the people, and without food it would be a distressful journey. Jesus cares for them. They had come to him for help, and he is not willing to send them off in such a way that they would end up fainting (Hendriksen, “lest they collapse”) on the way.

Daniel Doriani: This time Jesus preempts them. He says, to paraphrase: “I know you will soon suggest that I dismiss this needy crowd, but I am not willing to do so while they are hungry. They may collapse on the way” (15:32). The disciples always seem to want to dismiss people who have needs and make demands, but Jesus does not. The pattern is consistent enough that it amounts to a policy statement for the disciples and the church: We do not “dismiss” people around here. If they are needy, if they are annoying, we take their needs seriously. If we can help them, we do.

B. (:33) Disciples Focus on Lack of Resources and Inability to Meet Needs

“And the disciples said to Him, ‘Where would we get so many loaves in a desolate place to satisfy such a great multitude?’”

R. T. France: The disciples, who in 14:15–17 merely stated the problem of the inadequate resources available, here make a more emphatic protest (v. 33) about the impossibility of the idea of feeding such a large crowd. This is the more remarkable because the narrative sequence of the gospel suggests that whereas in 14:13–21 they were taken by surprise, in the light of that experience they ought by now to be ready for such a miracle again. . .

In 16:7–10 Jesus will comment on the disciples' inability to learn the significance of both feeding miracles, as they again worry about not having enough food, and this second expression of incredulity suitably prepares the way for that rebuke. But the reader is left wondering how the disciples could have been so slow to learn.

Craig Blomberg: At first the disciples' question seems to reflect the height of obtuseness. The solution to their problem is obviously for Jesus to do what he did before and work a miracle. But the emphatic “we” (a uniquely Matthean touch), corresponding to the emphatic “you” of 14:16, may explain matters. Previously, Jesus had told his disciples to solve the problem themselves. They couldn't, so he did. But he has consistently passed on his miracle-working authority to the Twelve, including as recently as 14:28-31 (despite the abrupt ending of Peter's walking on the water). Most likely the disciples think that Jesus' remarks in v. 32 imply that they should miraculously provide food for the crowd, and they are not convinced they can do it. This makes their question much more understandable, though, in any event, Matthew does not present the disciples in a particularly positive light.

Daniel Doriani: We should note the capacity all disciples have to forget God's goodness. We have experienced God's kindness in times past, but we fail to draw the right conclusions from that kindness today. As if they had never before seen Jesus provide, the disciples forget to ask Jesus for relief. We do the same, forgetting to contemplate his power and blessings. So we deprive ourselves of the full benefits of living by the Lord's love and power.

C. (:34) Jesus Focuses on Availability of Resources and Ability to Meet Needs

1. Investigative Question

“And Jesus said to them, ‘How many loaves do you have?’”

2. Impotent Response

“And they said, ‘Seven, and a few small fish.’”

II. (:35-38) THE MESSIAH PROVIDES MORE THAN ENOUGH TO MEET ALL NEEDS

A. (:35-36) Simplicity of the Miraculous Meal

1. (:35) Preparation

“And He directed the multitude to sit down on the ground;”

2. (:36) Provision

“and He took the seven loaves and the fish; and giving thanks, He broke them and started giving them to the disciples, and the disciples in turn, to the multitudes.”

B. (:37a) Satisfaction with the Provision

“And they all ate, and were satisfied,”

C. (:37b-38) Superabundance of the Provision

1. (:37b) Leftovers

“and they picked up what was left over of the broken pieces, seven large baskets full.”

Donald Hagner: The type of basket referred to here was a more flexible basket than the baskets (probably wicker) referred to in the narrative of the feeding of the five thousand (cf. 14:20). That there were seven loaves and seven baskets full of remaining fragments in this feeding of the multitude cannot be accidental. The number seven points to fullness and perfection, or, somewhat less plausibly, to the “seventy” gentile nations. Much less likely is Lohmeyer’s suggestion that the number refers to the seven deacons of Acts 6:1–6, who after all were Hellenistic Jews and not Gentiles. If it is taken in conjunction with the twelve baskets full of remainders in the feeding of the five thousand, which almost certainly points to the twelve tribes of Israel (or the twelve disciples), i.e., the Jews, then the sevens—even though those who actually had been fed were Jews—may well symbolize the meeting of the needs of the Gentiles, i.e., the fullness of messianic provision for the entire world.

Michael Wilkins: If the number of twelve baskets left over in the feeding of the five thousand is symbolic of Israel, as most suppose, then the number seven here—normally symbolic of perfection or completion—may symbolize the completion or fullness of God meeting the needs of all peoples, now including Gentiles.

William Barclay: In the feeding of the 5,000, the baskets which were used to take up the fragments are called kophinoi; in the feeding of the 4,000, they are called sphurides. The kophinos was a narrow-necked, flask-shaped basket which Jews often carried with them, for Jews often carried their own food, in case they should be compelled to eat food which had been touched by Gentile hands and was therefore unclean. The sphuris was much more like a hamper; it could be big enough to carry a person, and it was a kind of basket that a Gentile would use.

2. (:38) Large Numbers Fed

“And those who ate were four thousand men, besides women and children.”

Stu Weber: The four thousand men is representative of at least twice that number of people, when including women and children.

Richard Gardner: 4000 is a multiple of four, which is linked with the idea of universality (cf. the four comers of the earth in Isa. 11:12 and Rev. 20:8, and the four winds from the four quarters of heaven in Jer. 49:36).

Warren Wiersbe: Jesus did not preach a sermon to this crowd on “the Bread of Life” as He did to the Jews in Capernaum, following the feeding of the five thousand (John 6:22ff.). The facts about the Old Testament manna and the “bread of God” would have been foreign to these Gentiles. Jesus always adapted His teaching to the needs and the understanding of the people to whom He ministered.

(:39) EPILOGUE – GEOGRAPHICAL TRANSITION

*“And sending away the multitudes,
He got into the boat, and came to the region of Magadan.”*

Michael Wilkins: Magdala is generally identified with Migdal Nunya (“Tower of Fish”) of Talmudic times (b. Pesah. 46b), located about three miles north of Tiberias on the Gennesaret plain, which is usually connected with the town about which Josephus writes, the Greek name of which was Taricheae, roughly translated “the place where fish were salted.” During Jesus’ day and up to Talmudic times, Magdala-Taricheae was the center of Galilee’s fish-processing industry, making it one of the most important fishing centers on the Sea of Galilee and the administrative seat of the surrounding region. Archaeologists uncovered in Magdala a decorative mosaic depicting a boat with a mast for sailing and oars for rowing in the ruins of a first century A.D. home, and discovered about a mile north of the town the remains of the famous first-century A.D. “Kinneret boat”. These discoveries have been invaluable for recreating life in first-century A.D. Galilee.

David Turner: After the miracle, Jesus crosses over the sea in a boat and arrives at Magadan. This is an obscure town, like Mark’s Dalmanutha (Mark 8:10). Both are mentioned only in the Gospels. Perhaps Magadan should be identified with Magdala on the west side of the Sea of Galilee. At any rate, Jesus is clearly now in Jewish territory and back in touch with the Pharisees’ opposition (Matt. 16:1).

Charles Swindoll: However, as Jesus’ “fans” increased and His friends regrouped in Magdala, His foes were also on the move – plotting, scheming, and setting traps to catch Him in some kind of punishable crime. As the sun set over the Sea of Galilee, casting long shadows over the small village of Magdala, the hostility and resistance to Jesus’ ministry was about to rise to a greater pitch of fury. Nevertheless, in the face of this growing resistance, Jesus would continue to teach and preach, to model compassion, and to prove to those with eyes to see and ears to hear that He really is the King, Israel’s long-awaited Messiah.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why the repetition of such a similar miracle as the feeding of the 5,000? Is there a different emphasis or just the value of repetition of similar themes?
- 2) What did the disciples expect would happen were Jesus just to dismiss the crowd without providing food for them?
- 3) Why does Jesus use the disciples in the distribution of the food to the multitudes?
- 4) How quick are we to forget God’s past demonstrations of His faithfulness and goodness?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Donald Hagner: The structure of this pericope, especially after the opening verse, is very similar to that of the narrative of the feeding of the five thousand. Here again there is no concluding reference to the crowd’s reaction, nor is a christological point drawn. The story stands by itself.

The pericope may be outlined as follows:

- (1) Jesus' compassion upon the hungry people (v. 32);
- (2) the problem (v. 33);
- (3) the scanty resources (v. 34); and
- (4) the solution, consisting of
 - (a) the miracle (vv 35–37a),
 - (b) the abundance (v. 37b), and
 - (c) the number fed (v. 38).

No striking syntactic parallelism is evident in the pericope, which consists of straightforward narrative. . .

R. T. France: It seems to me that two factors are required to account for the presence of this pericope. First, the belief of both Mark and Matthew that as a matter of fact two such miracles did take place; and secondly, a deliberate intention to draw a parallel between Jesus' Jewish ministry and his ministry to Gentiles, such as we have already noted in the summary of healings in 15:29–31 to parallel that in 14:34–36. The latter point is given added force by the observation that between the two feeding miracles, both in Mark and in Matthew, we find the debate about purity, with its radical implications for Jew-Gentile relationships, and the encounter with the Gentile woman which focuses on the right of the Gentiles to "the children's bread." The literal provision of bread to a Gentile crowd, as previously to a Jewish crowd, vividly illustrates that principle and the extension of Jesus' messianic ministry which it entails. But the numbers are scaled down; the children's bread remains the prior commitment. Without this element of comparison and contrast between the Jewish and Gentile feeding miracles it is not easy to explain what seems otherwise to be a needless (and strangely less impressive) repetition of the previous story.

Richard Gardner: Not surprisingly, Menno Simons selects this woman as one of ten examples in a list of biblical persons who illustrate true faith (cf. 383-391), and other writers view her faith with equal admiration. In some texts the facet of faith lifted up is her humility (she accepts the label dog and only asks for crumbs of mercy). In other cases the emphasis falls on the quality of persistence, on faith that refuses to give up. Luther's comments on this point are especially perceptive: The woman demonstrates unshakable confidence in God's grace and goodness, even when it seems that God is turning aside and saying no. This, as Luther remarks, is the essence of true faith (cf. 507-511).

Grant Osborne: The very same themes as in the feeding of the five thousand (14:13–21) are here. The sovereign authority of Christ is even more strongly presented here, as he takes charge rather than asking the disciples a series of questions. Also, the merciful provision of God and Christ for the needs of the people is evident. Discipleship failure on the part of the "little-faith ones" is somewhat present and will become more evident in 16:5–11. Finally, Jesus as the great messianic prophet who is establishing a new community is evident in the banquet scene.

The important implicit addition is the extension of these blessings to the Gentiles, not explicit in the text but implicit in the setting and possibly in some details (like the term for "baskets"). A further addition could be the eschatological Zion typology that looks forward to the coming of the final kingdom. Also, by deliberately telling the story in such a way that the parallelism with the other feeding miracle is obvious, the themes are extended further and given even greater stress.

John MacArthur: From Jesus' ministry to the Gentile crowd in the Decapolis a number of important lessons can be learned.

First, we see again Jesus' unrivaled divine power. Because only God can create, only God could have multiplied those seven loaves of bread and a few fish even one-fold, not to mention many thousand-fold. He is the God of Abraham, who believed in Him "who gives life to the dead and calls into being that which does not exist" (Rom. 4:17). Just as He had created healthy tissues to replace diseased ones, whole limbs to replace deformed and missing ones, and seeing eyes to replace blinded ones, He also created a superabundance of food to replace a little.

When the apostles were establishing the early church, many miracles were performed through them. But their miracles were performed in the name and by the power of Jesus Christ, for whom they served merely as instruments. Jesus, however, performed miracles in His own name and power, because He was the source of the power. He did not heal, deliver, raise the dead, and multiply food as God's agent but as God.

Second, the fact that He not only cured diseases and restored hearing and sight but restored those who were kullos (maimed and sometimes completely without arms, legs, eyes, or other parts of the body), He set Himself totally apart from self-proclaimed divine healers of past years and modern times. You look in vain among those healers for verified accounts of anyone who was given an arm, leg, or eye to replace one that was missing. Their "cures" are at best psychosomatic and are extremely minor compared to those the Lord performed during the three years of His earthly ministry. God is still capable of sovereignly healing the most hopeless disease and of creating new limbs where there are none. But the only age of healing in the church was the time of authenticating the Messiah Himself and of His Word through the apostles. Once those ends were accomplished, the gift of miracles ceased. (For a more complete discussion of this subject, see the author's book The Charismatics, published by Zondervan.)

Third, we learn that the goal of ministry is worship. Although most, if not all, of the multitudes in Decapolis were pagan Gentiles, when they saw the magnitude and perfection of Jesus' healing power, they not only were astonished beyond measure but also "glorified the God of Israel" (v. 31). Witnessing such a divine display demanded much more than awe; it demanded reverential worship, which those Gentiles offered as best they knew how. Their worship was Jesus' supreme goal. He had unqualified compassion to heal their broken bodies and to fill their empty stomachs. But He was infinitely more concerned that, through their trust in Him as Lord and Savior, He could also save their souls from eternal damnation and make them citizens of His heavenly kingdom. Christ's followers are likewise called to minister not only to people's physical and temporal needs but to lead them to glorify God, "that the grace which is spreading to more and more people may cause the giving of thanks to abound to the glory of God" (2 Cor. 4:15). The goal of evangelism and of Christian living is to "worship the Father in spirit and truth; for such people the Father seeks to be His worshipers" (John 4:23). Only when devotion to the Lord is sincere and unqualified, service to others truly selfless, and daily living consistently Christlike, will God be glorified. That is an especially important lesson for our day, in which self-love and self-satisfaction have become accepted and touted even in much of the church. We are tempted to offer the gospel simply for what it can do for a person, with no suggestion of the need to turn from self to God and from our own priorities to His. We like to make the way of salvation seem wide, although the Lord says it is narrow (Matt. 7:14). We want to make the Christian life appear easy, although Jesus declared that “he who does not take his cross and follow after Me is not worthy of Me” and that only “he who has lost his life for My sake shall find it” (10:38–39).

Fourth, this story teaches the necessity of relying on divine resources. Like the disciples, we are most usable to the Lord when we acknowledge our own lack of resources and turn to Him. Whatever we may have in ourselves is never enough to meet the needs of others or to accomplish anything for God. Jesus did not command the apostles to be His “witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and even to the remotest part of the earth” until He had first promised, “You shall receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you” (Acts 1:8). “Every good thing bestowed and every perfect gift is from above, coming down from the Father of lights,” James says (James 1:17). . .

Fifth, we learn from this story that God’s resources are never diminished, much less exhausted, because He has an infinite capacity to create. He did not need the seven loaves and few fish in order to feed the multitude. He could just as easily have made the food from nothing, just as He created the world from nothing. He used the loaves and fish in order to involve the disciples and to help teach them to give what they had into His care. “Give, and it will be given to you; good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over, they will pour into your lap. For by your standard of measure it will be measured to you in return” (Luke 6:38). God’s people would never lack resources to do what He calls them to do if they trusted that promise.

Sixth, we learn about the servant’s usefulness. Although the Lord is able to do His work without us, He chooses to do it through us. He did not need the disciples’ help to distribute the food any more than he needed the seven loaves and the fish to make the food. He could have done in an instant what took them several hours to do. But in His infinite wisdom and mercy God chooses to use human instruments to do His divine work of carrying the gospel to the world and of ministering to its needs. In submissively serving others in our Lord’s name and power, we learn to serve Him—in preparation for serving Him for all eternity in dimensions we cannot now conceive.

Seventh, we learn that God gives liberally, in “good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over” (Luke 6:38), as we have already seen. Everyone on the mountainside ate until he was completely satisfied. There was even more than enough, so that seven large baskets of food were left over.

Eighth is the lesson of spiritual investment. When the disciples gave all they had to Jesus and then helped Him give it away to others, they had seven full baskets remaining for themselves. “He who sows sparingly shall also reap sparingly; and he who sows bountifully shall also reap bountifully” (2 Cor. 9:6).

The ninth and overarching lesson is the limitless compassion of Jesus Christ. He has compassion for all our needs—eternal, lifetime, and daily. He has compassion on Jews and on Gentiles, on the severely afflicted and the merely hungry. Following the example of our Lord, we are to “do good to all men, and especially to those who are of the household of the faith” (Gal. 6:10). Our compassion is not measured by our feelings but by our giving.

TEXT: Matthew 16:1-12

TITLE: THE SIGNS OF THE TIME AND THE LEAVEN OF FALSE TEACHING

BIG IDEA:

BE AWARE OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIME AND BE WARY OF FALSE TEACHING

INTRODUCTION:

Walter Wilson: Once again, a scene depicting conflict gives way to a scene depicting instruction (cf. 15:1–20). This time, Jesus’s opponents are the Pharisees and Sadducees, who “test” him (cf. 4:1, 3) by asking him to certify his messianic identity by performing some spectacular feat. As in 12:38–42, he responds by condemning the “generation” that makes such a request, maintaining that the only sign they can expect to receive will be the “sign” of Jonah, a reference to Jesus’s death and resurrection. Having rebuffed the leaders’ hostile overture, Jesus leaves them and meets the disciples as they come ashore, greeting them with a warning about the leaders that takes the form of a riddle. The disciples’ confusion regarding what Jesus means by “leaven” prompts him to chide them for their “little faith” and remind them about the miracles of the loaves. In the end, Jesus’s teaching leads the disciples to understanding (16:12; cf. 13:51), even if (as we will soon see) their understanding is still far from complete (cf. 16:22).

Stu Weber: This passage is similar to 12:38-45. In both passages:

- Jesus' previous contact with the religious leaders had included a scathing condemnation of the hypocrites for serious sins (blaspheming the Holy Spirit in 12:22-37; replacing God's commands with human tradition in 15:1-20).the religious leaders challenged Jesus' authority by demanding to see a miraculous sign, proving his authority to be from God.
- Jesus called the hypocrites “a wicked and adulterous generation” (12:39, 45; 16:4) because of their desire for a sign from him.
- Jesus denied their request for a sign.
- Jesus told them they would only receive the “sign of Jonah.”

Stanley Saunders: The Pharisees assert that Jesus’ healings and exorcisms are signs of the power of Beelzebul (9:34; 12:24) rather than of God. In any case, Jesus does not tell his disciples to avoid the Pharisees and Sadducees themselves, as if the threat could be contained by quarantine, but to avoid the leaven that now controls his adversaries and renders their teachings both infectious and destructive of sight, hearing, and understanding. How then might the disciples recognize such leaven for what it really is? Jesus has already told them: study the fruit that falls from the tree (12:33–35).

The story names two dangers for the disciples:

- first, they may not realize what time it is and how the world is being transformed, and
- second, they may be susceptible to misidentifications of the nature of God’s power and to teaching divorced from faithful practice.

Matthew ends the narrative, however, with the assurance that the disciples finally do “understand” (16:12), thus setting the stage for Peter’s confession.

Scott Harris: There are several things to take note of in this passage.

- First, poisoned religion is not concerned with the truth.
- Second, poisoned religion is man-centered, and
- third, poisoned religion understands the temporal, but not the eternal.

The Pharisees and Sadducees had taken Judaism and poisoned it and they found many followers who wanted what they had to offer. Just as our physical body craves carbon monoxide over what is best for it, so in religion man craves not God, but himself. He wants to be the center of his universe, the captain of his fate, and so he finds a way to poison the revelation of God with a man-centered philosophy and then call the evil result "good." He trades the truth of God's Word and distorts it according to his own desire.

This type of poisoned religion is still all around us, but it is not just in the false religions and cults. We also find it in the evangelical-fundamental churches. It is present in the watered down gospel of easy believism that presents God as a beneficent grandfather who will overlook any and everything you do rather than as the Holy and just Creator who loves you too much to let you remain in any sinful practice. It reveals its self when people try to earn their way to heaven through rituals and good works. True Christians do good works as a response to God's love, not as a means to earn it. The poison of man-centered theologies is sweeping into the church as Biblical Counseling centered in God's grace and mercy to sinful men is replaced with secular psychology that is candy coated with Christian phrases. Poisoned religion is all around us, and it is recognized by its turning away from the truth of God's word and becoming centered in the thoughts of man rather than the revelation of God.

Applications:

- First, be a truth seeker.
- Second, recognize that poisoned teaching is by design enticing. It sounds good to our selfish natures. It makes us feel good about ourselves because it is man-centered. This is going to take self-examination into our motives. Why do you do what you do? Why do you refrain from doing what you don't do? Are the decisions you make in life for your own benefit or for God's glory? How do you spend your time? How do you spend your money? What occupies your thoughts? What do you pray for? Our purpose for existence is not the pursuit of happiness, but of holiness. Which are you pursuing?
- Third, which do you understand more about: the temporal things of this earthly life or the things of God?

I. (:1-4) IMPERATIVE OF DISCERNING THE SIGNS OF THE TIME – ESPECIALLY REGARDING THE MESSIANIC AGE (HIS MISSION AND AGENDA)

Grant Osborne: We return to the theme of Jewish opposition (13:58 - 14:12; 15:1–20), and this scene echoes the demand for a sign in 12:38–42. The same irony permeates this one, for again this is a major miracle section, and the leaders are unwilling to accept the God-given "signs" and demand that Jesus act on their own terms. Moreover, Jesus has just returned to Galilee after leaving because of opposition (15:21) and is immediately greeted with more rejection. This will prompt two further withdrawals (symbolizing God's rejection of the people), first to the other side of the lake (vv. 4b–5) and then north to Caesarea Philippi (v. 13).

As in 12:38–40, rejection governs this passage, first the Jewish leaders' rejection of Jesus in their demand for a sign and then Jesus' rejection of them in the sign of Jonah. Verses 2b–3 adds the idea of "the signs of the times," meaning that any alert child of God should see that the kingdom age has indeed dawned. Since the leaders have refused to observe and read these signs, they are rejected by Jesus and by God.

Matthew McCraw: Remember, the Decapolis is on the southeastern (or bottom right) side of the Sea of Galilee. Magadan is on the northwest (or top left) side of the Sea of Galilee. All that to say, generally speaking, when Jesus is on the west side of the sea, He is in Jewish territory; when He is on the east side of the sea, He's in Gentile territory. So, here Jesus is, back in Jewish territory, and who is waiting for Him? The Pharisees and Sadducees.

A. (:1) Malicious Demand for Some Spectacular Sign from Heaven

"And the Pharisees and Sadducees came up, and testing Him asked Him to show them a sign from heaven."

Robert Gundry: Thus Jesus has the same opponents that John the baptizer had (3:7), so that the parallel between these two is extended. By testing Jesus, the Pharisees and Sadducees play a devilish role; for "testing" equates with "tempting." They go back to the same Greek word that Matthew used for the Devil's tempting Jesus (4:1, 3). And the Greek verb underlying "asked" connotes insistence. That is, the Pharisees and Sadducees insist on Jesus' showing them "a sign from heaven," which means some heavenly display not subject to interpretation as satanically aided.

Daniel Doriani: The Pharisees and Sadducees were rival groups of leaders, so this is an unusual grouping. Here they operate together, for two reasons.

- First, they are the two main groups of the Sanhedrin, the ruling Jewish council (Acts 23:6).
- Second, they are united by a common opposition to Jesus. Apparently they think that the enemy of their enemy is their friend (cf. Luke 23:12).

William Barclay: Hostility, like necessity, makes strange bedfellows. It is an extraordinary phenomenon to find a combination of the Pharisees and Sadducees. They stood for both beliefs and policies which were diametrically opposed. The Pharisees lived life according to the minutest details of the oral and the scribal law; the Sadducees rejected the oral and the scribal law completely, and accepted only the written words of the Bible as their law of life. The Pharisees believed in angels and in the resurrection of the body and the Sadducees did not, an opposition which Paul made use of when he was on trial before the Sanhedrin (Acts 23:6–10). And – in this case most important of all – the Pharisees were not a political party and were prepared to live under any government which would allow them to observe their own religious principles; the Sadducees were the small, wealthy aristocracy, who were the collaborationist party and were quite prepared to serve and co-operate with the Roman government, in order to retain their wealth and their privileges. Further, the Pharisees looked for and longed for the Messiah; the Sadducees did not. It would have been well-nigh impossible to find two more different sects and parties; and yet they came together in their desire to eliminate Jesus. They became united in their hostility.

Grant Osborne: This is not a test to discern the truth as to whether he is from God or is a false prophet, for these groups have already judged him and sought his life (12:14). They do not want a sign (the anarthrous σημεῖον connotes the qualitative aspect, something of “divine significance”) and have rejected the validity of all his miracles. They are only looking for reasons to turn the crowds against him. So theirs is a test like Israel’s “testing” God in the wilderness (Exod 17:2; Deut 6:16; Ps 78:18; 95:9) that brought divine wrath down on themselves. As in 12:38 they demand a heaven-sent spectacle like the exodus “signs” that forced the Hebrews to believe (Exod 4:8, 30–31), though in reality the Jewish leaders want Jesus to be unable to deliver such a sign.

Bethany Bible Church: They demanded “a sign from heaven”. Perhaps they wanted Him to cause the winds to blow down from the clouds and part the sea—as it did in Moses' day. Perhaps they wanted Him to cause the sun to stand still in the firmament—as it did in Joshua's day. Perhaps they wanted Him to cause fire to come down from sky and consume an offering—as it did in Elijah's day.

In any event, they weren't satisfied with how Jesus had already proven Himself. They were not satisfied with what God had already done to testify of Him. They wanted more. They despised the healings and the feedings. They wanted something big and dramatic—not just something “on earth”. They wanted to dictate the terms—and demanded a sign from heaven of their choosing.

And finally, notice the motive behind this demand for a sign. It wasn't because they truly wanted a sign. The text tells us; they came “testing Him”. The word used (peirazo) is the same one that was used of the actions of the devil, when we read in Matthew 4:1 that “Jesus was led up by the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted by the devil.”

They didn't ask Jesus for a sign from heaven in order to test and see if He truly was the beloved Son in whom God was well pleased. Their minds had already been made up about Him when they asserted, “He casts out demons by the ruler of the demons” (9:34). Rather, these were seeking to trap Him in order to discredit Him in front of the crowds, and to justify their hard-heartedness toward Him.

B. (:2-3) Maligning Discernment Limited to Earthly Phenomena

1. (:2-3a) Able to Predict Weather

a. (:2) Both Fair Weather

“But He answered and said to them, ‘When it is evening, you say, It will be fair weather, for the sky is red.’”

Craig Blomberg: As clouds move from west to east, the dawn sunlight will tint them in the west, portending rain as the day progresses. In the evening the same phenomenon suggests that the clouds have almost disappeared, bringing good weather instead. We preserve this proverb today with the rhyme: “Red sky in morning, sailors take warning; red sky at night, sailors delight.”

b. (:3a) And Stormy Weather

“And in the morning, There will be a storm today, for the sky is red and threatening.”

2. (:3b) Unable to Perceive the Signs of the Times

“Do you know how to discern the appearance of the sky, but cannot discern the signs of the times?”

Robert Gundry: Jesus starts with evening because Jews counted a day as starting at sunset, and he excoriates the Pharisees and Sadducees for being adept at meteorology but clueless at eschatology. They're so ignorant of the end times that they don't recognize the coming of God's reign in the words and deeds of Jesus.

Grant Osborne: In Jesus' words and deeds, those signs have been given, and the leaders are "totally lacking in spiritual discernment" so that they will be held accountable by God for their failure. The use of "the sky" (τοῦ οὐρανοῦ) is probably a deliberate pun on their demand for a "sign from heaven" in v. 1 (so Hagner).

Jeffrey Crabtree: The signs were Jesus' miracles (12:28). Jesus was not operating in a vacuum. There were many evidences if these men had just been open to them.

D. A. Carson: Here these "signs of the times" point neither to the future nor (contra Hoekema, Bible and the Future, 133) to what God has done in the past. Instead, they testify to Jesus and the kingdom now dawning (cf. 11:4–6; 12:28).

Charles Swindoll: By "signs of the times," Jesus was probably referring to the many miraculous signs that had already repeatedly and clearly pointed to the fact that He was the long-awaited Messiah. Recall that when John the Baptizer had questioned whether Jesus was the "Expected One," Jesus had replied, "Go and report to John what you hear and see: the blind receive sight and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them" (11:3-5). Based on these clear signs of the coming of the messianic kingdom, anybody with a believing heart and a discerning mind should have been able to conclude that the Messiah was present. But even in light of these clear signs of the Messiah, the Pharisees and Sadducees had closed the eyes of their hearts and blocked their ears to discernment. Instead, they wallowed in hard-hearted unbelief.

C. (:4a) Motives Denounced of Those Seeking Supernatural Signs

1. Exposing Their Character

"An evil and adulterous generation seeks after a sign;"

Bruce Hurt: Evil (wicked, bad) (poneros from poneo = work or toil, cf poneria) means evil, malignant character, pernicious and denotes a determined, aggressive, and fervent evil that actively opposes what is good. Poneros is not just bad in character (like kakos), but bad in effect (injurious), evil in active opposition to good. Poneros used to describe Satan (ho poneros = "Evil one"), the god of this age, who is corrupting man and dragging him to destruction. This denotes someone who is not content in being corrupt themselves. They seek to corrupt others and draw them into the same destruction!

John MacArthur: "adulterous generation" - The scribes and Pharisees (Mt 12:24, 38+) represented the nation of Israel, which had wandered far from God's Word and fellowship and which had become enmeshed in the superficial, self-righteous, and legalistic religion those leaders epitomized. The unbelieving Jews were not only physically and mentally but spiritually adulterous because they had breached the vows of their unique covenant relationship with God, a relationship the Old Testament frequently speaks of in terms of marriage (see Ps. 73:27; Isa. 50:1; Jer. 3:6–10; 13:27; Hos. 9:1). Their idolatry, immorality, unbiblical traditions, and hardness of heart marked them as an evil people. During the Babylonian captivity Jews had forsaken formal idolatry, in the sense of worshiping physical objects carved from wood, stone, or metal. But in its place they erected idols of man-made tradition in which they trusted and put their hope. They had abandoned the Canaanite gods for ones of their own making and in doing so were just as much in rebellion against the true God as when they offered sacrifices to Baal or Molech. A Jew who faithfully served God under the covenant given to Moses would accept His Son when He came, because anyone rightly related to the Father could not fail to recognize the Son—just as did the godly Simeon and Anna (Luke 2:25–38), John the Baptist (Matt. 3:14), and the twelve disciples, except Judas (Carl Bloch's famous painting of Judas retiring from the Last Supper) (Mt 4:20–22; Mark 3:13; Luke 5:27–28; John 1:41, 49). Because they knew the Father, they knew the Son and did not need a sign to verify His identity.

Donald Hagner: It is surprising that in a wide variety of different fields of knowledge human beings can be so knowledgeable and perceptive, yet in the realm of the knowledge of God exist in such darkness. The explanation of the latter sad state is not to be found in a lack of intellectual ability—no more for the Pharisees and Sadducees than for today. The evidence is there, examinable and understandable for those who are open to it and who welcome it. The issue in the knowledge of God is not intellect but receptivity. The “signs of the times,” i.e., as narrated in the gospel of the ministry of Jesus, are there to be received and affirmed by faith. That is the key point. Again the further request for a sign under these circumstances only reveals an adamant refusal to receive the truth. To those in this unfortunate frame of mind the truth is that no sign will suffice.

Leon Morris: A generation here signifies the people alive at that time. He castigates it as evil, for it has turned away from goodness and right. It is also adulterous, for it is false to its vows; it professed to be the people of God but walked in the ways of the evil one. It looks for a sign; it directs its energies to sign-seeking. But, Jesus says, this is all in vain; the generation in question will not get the sign it seeks.

2. Exchanging their Demand for the Ultimate Sign

“and a sign will not be given it, except the sign of Jonah.”

Daniel Doriani: Jonah, you recall, did not perform signs; he was the sign. Thrown overboard into a raging sea, swallowed by a great fish, spat out on dry ground, then preaching to great effect to the Assyrians of Nineveh, the very life of Jonah was the sign. The mere presence of a Jewish prophet in a hostile city was a sign. So too with Jesus. The leaders do not need signs by Jesus; they need to see Jesus. His presence, his life, is God’s greatest sign, then and now.

William Barclay: So what Jesus is saying is that God’s sign is Jesus himself and his message. It is as if he said to them: ‘In me you are confronted with God and with the truth of God. What more could you possibly need? But you are so blind that you cannot see it.’ There is truth and there is warning here. Jesus Christ is God’s last word. Beyond him the revelation of God cannot go. Here is God plain for all to see. Here is God’s message plain for all to hear. Here is God’s sign to the world. It is the warning truth that if Jesus cannot appeal to men and women, nothing can. If Jesus cannot convince them, no one can. If men and women cannot see God in Jesus, they cannot see God in anything or anyone. When we are confronted with Jesus Christ, we are confronted with God’s final word and God’s ultimate appeal. If that is so, what can be left for those who throw away that last chance, who refuse to listen to that last word, who reject that last appeal?

Matthew McCraw: Church: don't be like the Pharisees and Sadducees. Be aware of the signs. Be aware of what God is showing us in the Bible, what He has shown in history, what He is showing through the natural world, and what He is showing as He works supernaturally in our individual lives. Be aware of the signs. See Jesus at work. Know that He is, indeed, Messiah. Know that He is God.

(:4b) Epilogue – Abandonment by Jesus

“And He left them, and went away.”

Stu Weber: Jesus did not haggle any longer than necessary with those who were opposed to the truth. He did not ignore them or avoid them, but neither did he get into a long and fruitless debate. When it was clear they were more interested in debating than in learning, Jesus went another direction.

Walter Wilson: The story of Jesus being tested by the devil concludes with the devil leaving the scene (4:11). The story of Jesus being tested by the Pharisees and Sadducees concludes with Jesus leaving the scene (16:4c). As with the conclusion to other controversy stories, Jesus symbolically separates from the religious leaders of Israel, the fact that this is his final debate with leaders from Galilee lending the gesture added significance. His public ministry in Galilee is all but over (cf. 17:14–21).

Just as Jesus separates physically from the religious leaders of Israel (16:4c), his followers must do the same spiritually. Before they can do so, however, they must be led to the truth by their teacher, whose solicitude is demonstrated both by the manner in which he meets their basic physical needs (16:9–10) and by his efforts to protect them from dangerous rival teachers (16:6, 11–12).

Josiah Boyd: At this point in Matthew's gospel we've read of Jesus withdrawing from his opposition. [4:12a; 12:14–15a; 14:13a; 15:21] Jesus had been confronted many times with resistance from Israel and his response has been to pull-back for a respite, to re-group, and to re-aim his efforts.

But our text today doesn't say Jesus withdrew. Instead, Matthew reports that he left. If you look that word up in a Greek dictionary you'll read this: “to depart from a place, with implication of finality,” i.e., to forsake or abandon. [Eph 5:31]

Do you get the picture? As opposition increases, Jesus pulls back, pulls back, pulls back, until finally, he just leaves.

We've all experienced resistance to the point of resignation. You work hard with repeated attempts but, at some point you realize you're knocking your head against a wall and it's leaving time.

I picture Jesus in verse 4, his head hung low in grief and helplessness, turning from these so-called leaders and walking away, dusting his hands as he goes. There's a sense of tragic finality in the air, a sorry conclusiveness in Jesus's leaving.

And as he leaves Jesus issues a warning. Testing, leaving, warning.

<https://oakridgebiblechapel.org/an-evil-testing-and-an-urgent-warning/>

II. (:5-12) IMPERATIVE OF DISCERNING FALSE TEACHING – ESPECIALLY WRONG VIEWS ABOUT JESUS

Grant Osborne: This passage combines opposition and discipleship. The first part (vv. 5–6) is a warning about the spreading evil of the Pharisees and Sadducees, the second part concerns the “little-faith” obtuseness of the disciples that is turned around by the presence of Jesus into understanding. As the final interpreter of Torah, Jesus once more instructs the disciples, so this continues the emphases we have already seen dominating this section of Matthew.

David Turner: In this passage Jesus patiently yet firmly deals again with the “little faith” of the disciples. He improves their spiritual perception by prodding their memory. If they recall the previous miracle meals, they will realize that food is not the problem and that they must deal with the increasing opposition to Jesus. If they watch out for the teaching of the Jewish leaders, Jesus will care for their food problems. This rebuke of the forgetful disciples should sharpen the mental and spiritual focus of God’s people today. Preoccupation with temporal and material concerns continues to render disciples dull and forgetful of the values of the kingdom and of false teaching that endangers it.

A. (:5-6) Danger of False Teaching of the Pharisees and Sadducees Presented

1. (:5) Worrying about Physical Sustenance

“And the disciples came to the other side and had forgotten to take bread.”

Stanley Saunders: The troubling element in this episode is that the disciples are indeed still worrying about bread, when it should be clear to them by now that in the messianic time and in the presence of the Messiah himself, God will supply what they need. It’s the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees they should be worrying about.

2. (:6) Warning Issued

“And Jesus said to them,

‘Watch out and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees.’”

Kenneth Wuest: Watch out! and Beware - The first verb is horaō “to see, to become acquainted with by experience.” This word gives prominence to the discerning mind. The disciples were to use their heads. They were to put the teachings of the Pharisees and the Herodians to the acid test of experience, not in the actual doing of the things taught, but with the mind’s eye following out the ultimate conclusion of the act of practicing what they taught. The verb is present imperative, commanding the beginning of an action and its habitual continuance. The second verb is blepō “to perceive by the use of the eyes.” It is used in a metaphorical sense, “to see with the mind’s eye, to discern mentally, understand, to turn the thoughts or direct the mind to a thing, to consider, to take heed.” It is also present imperative, “Be constantly keeping a watchful eye open to consider and take heed of.”

Grant Osborne: The disciples must always be wary and vigilant (present tense imperatives) in the face of such pernicious doctrine.

William Barclay: Leaven has a second meaning which is metaphorical and not literal and physical. It was the Jewish metaphorical expression for an evil influence. To the Jewish mind, leaven was always symbolic of evil. It is fermented dough; the Jews identified fermentation with putrefaction; leaven stood for all that was rotten and bad. Leaven has the power to permeate any mass of dough into which it is inserted. Therefore leaven stood for an evil influence liable to spread through life and to corrupt it.

D. A. Carson: The “teaching of the Pharisees and Sadducees” to which Jesus refers (vv.5–12), therefore, is an attitude of unbelief toward divine revelation that could not perceive Jesus to be the Messiah (vv.1–4) but that tried to control and tame the Messiah they claimed to await. The disciples are to avoid that. This is why the next pericope (vv.13–20) is so important: Peter makes the confession that Jesus is the Messiah, not on the basis of manipulative signs, but by revelation from the Father.

B. (:7-11) Dullness of the Disciples

1. (:7) Distracted Focus on Physical Nourishment

“And they began to discuss among themselves, saying, ‘It is because we took no bread.’”

Charles Swindoll: Jesus was perturbed that the dull disciples could only think of the emptiness of stomachs while He was concerned about the emptiness of souls. Their conversation should have been about the Pharisees and Sadducees, the growing opposition to the preaching of Jesus, the stubbornness of the critics’ hearts, and the danger that they posed to the easily swayed masses. The disciples’ preoccupation with earthly things had desensitized them regarding spiritual things.

2. (:8-11) Directed Focus to Spiritual Nourishment

a. (:8) Problem of Little Faith

“But Jesus, aware of this, said, ‘You men of little faith, why do you discuss among yourselves that you have no bread?’”

Donald Hagner: Jesus rebukes them for being so caught up with this problem, addressing them with the word ὀλιγόπιστοι, “people of little faith.” In every instance of the use of this word in Matthew, it is addressed to disciples in a context where the question concerns their ultimate welfare and the reality of God’s provision for them (cf. 6:30; 8:26; 14:31). The implication here seems to be that the disciples can trust God’s provision for their physical need and that they ought not to be so distracted by the lack of bread that they miss altogether the point of an important spiritual warning Jesus gives them.

Grant Osborne: Jesus is clearly upset at the disciples’ lack of comprehension and their total concern with the mundane (who wouldn’t be!), and he cries out against their vapid dialogue. So here the lack of faith is connected to their failure to trust God’s provision for their physical needs. As Brown says, there are two areas where their misunderstanding and “little faith” overlapped: Jesus’ enigmatic saying, but even more the truth that Jesus had the ability to provide for their needs. So the reminder in vv. 9–10 of his previous displays of power to provide was to help them “understand the extent of Jesus’ authority.” . . .

The disciples were “little-faith ones” not because they had no faith but because their faith was obscured by self-interest and the priority of personal needs and wants, in this case, food. That characterizes all of us most of the time. We do not “have in mind the concerns of God, but merely human concerns” (Mark 8:33b). We have not learned to “set your minds on things above, not on earthly things” (Col 3:1–2). Our treasures are on earth rather than in heaven (Matt 6:19–21). Faith is not just the act of trusting God to do things for us. It is an attitude, a lifestyle of absolute God-dependence and reliance on Christ.

b. (:9-10) Previous Lessons Forgotten

1) (:9) Lesson from the Feeding of the 5,000

“Do you not yet understand or remember the five loaves of the five thousand, and how many baskets you took up?”

2) (:10) Lesson from the Feeding of the 4,000

“Or the seven loaves of the four thousand, and how many large baskets you took up?”

R. T. France: Not only have they failed to “remember” the two feeding miracles, but they have not yet “realized” what those miracles revealed about Jesus. At the lowest level they showed that he could miraculously supply food, so that the disciples had no need to worry. But they also added to the growing evidence for who Jesus was, for the source of his authority and the nature of his mission, and it will be their understanding of that more fundamental issue which will be probed in the next episode. We hear again here Jesus’ frustration at their slowness in understanding, as it was expressed in 15:16–17. It is time they had put two and two together.

Craig Blomberg: Incidental support appears here as well for viewing those two miracles as distinct. Interestingly, the difference between the words for baskets is preserved in vv. 9-10, confirming our hunch that these terms were significant pointers to the one miracle as for Jews and the other for Gentiles.

c. (:11) Perspective Clarified

1) Not Focusing on Physical Bread

“How is it that you do not understand that I did not speak to you concerning bread?”

2) Focusing on the Danger of False Teaching

“But beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees.”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Jesus’ warning about the Pharisees’ and Sadducees’ leaven had nothing to do with food (v. 11). Rather, it had everything to do with their doctrine, or—more specifically—their opinion of Him. Like leaven, false doctrine can permeate and corrupt what is at first pure and wholesome (Wilkins 556). The doctrine of these two groups was actively corrupting all who allowed it to enter their hearts. The Twelve must not allow the Pharisees’ and Sadducees’ critical attitude toward Jesus and their call for a spectacular sign (v. 1) to corrupt and destroy their own faith.

C. (:12) Danger of False Teaching of the Pharisees and Sadducees Perceived

“Then they understood that He did not say to beware of the leaven of bread, but of the teaching of the Pharisees and Sadducees.”

Donald Hagner: But if instead we look for a particular “teaching” held in common by the Pharisees and Sadducees, keeping in mind the immediately preceding passage (vv 1–4) and the unified front of the two groups against Jesus (cf. 22:34; Acts 5:17), it could be found in a preconception of the nature of the Messiah and messianic fulfillment—a fulfillment that of necessity would include a national-political dimension [ED: and the immediate inception of that physical kingdom on earth] (cf. their inability to read the “signs of the times” [v 3]). The “teaching” would thus be that of the united front of Jewish leadership, which was also widely held by the masses (and even the disciples, hence the appropriateness of the warning here). It disqualified Jesus from any claim to being the agent of messianic fulfillment. This “teaching” was indeed like leaven in that it affected all else and would indeed ultimately bring Jesus to his death.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How can you tell when skeptics are asking questions from a motivation of trying to discredit Christianity?
- 2) What are some of the signs of the times today that point to the coming of the end of this age?
- 3) How could the false teaching of the religious leaders of Jesus’ day harm His disciples?
- 4) Why were the disciples so slow to perceive and apply the lessons from the two major feeding miracles where they had actually participated in the distribution of the food?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Stu Weber: As we saw in our discussion of Matthew 14-15, Matthew's unit of thought extends all the way from 13:53 through 16:12. The chapter division would have been better placed between 16:12 and 16:13.

I mention this to emphasize that one of the two or three most significant turning points in Matthew (many would say the most important) is in the middle of chapter 16.

- Through the first part of Matthew 16, the disciples had limited understanding of Jesus' identity and mission. From the latter part of Matthew 16 forward, their understanding grew rapidly.
- Through the first part of Matthew 16, Jesus had generally avoided mentioning his death and resurrection, focusing instead on laying the foundation of his disciples' understanding. From the latter part of Matthew 16 forward, Jesus spoke clearly and often of his coming suffering, death, and resurrection.
- Through the first part of Matthew 16, Jesus had spoken in general fashion about the kingdom he was advancing. From the latter part of Matthew 16 on, he gave more specific instruction regarding the church he would build.
- Through Matthew 16:20, Jesus had been content to stay in the “backwater” around Galilee, far from the hotbed of religious hypocrisy in Jerusalem. Beginning with 16:21, he took the road toward Jerusalem and the cross (see also 19:1; 20:17, 29; 21:1, 10).

We will treat all of Matthew 16 together in this commentary chapter to avoid confusion, but we must realize that the first twelve verses of the chapter are actually the conclusion of one large unit of Matthew's thought, whereas the rest of the chapter begins the next unit of thought.

Barnes: Erroneous doctrines are like leaven in the following respects:

1. They are at first slight and unimportant in appearance, just as leaven is small in quantity as compared with the mass that is to be leavened.
2. They are insinuated into the soul unawares and silently, and are difficult of detection.
3. They act gradually.
4. They act most certainly.
5. They will pervade all the soul, and bring all the faculties under their control.

J. Ligon Duncan: Now there are many applications of the truths set before us in these passages. But I would like to think with you about 2 or 3 things. First of all, note again that it is not the evidence that is keeping the Pharisees and the Sadducees from believing in Jesus as Messiah.

The evidence is crystal clear. The spiritual signs are as bright as day. The problem is their hearts. It is not the evidence that keeps people from Christ. It is our darkened hearts that keep us from wanting to bow the knee to His lordship. . .

These men were not fools in the sense of being ignorant or unlearned men. They were fools in another sense. In the sense that their hearts were hard towards the lord, and that they were walking in a way in a way of unwisdom. But these men had great human wisdom, the Pharisees and the Sadducees. They had tremendous capacity for learning. They had wisdom about the natural order, but none of that necessarily transfers into the realm of the spiritual. A man may be brilliant in the things of this life, and absolutely blind with regard to spiritual things. A man may have great knowledge about a particular field, and yet He may be utterly hopeless in His knowledge of eternal things. And that is a very, very important thing for us to learn. . .

Jesus warns us to be careful about the spiritual leaders that we choose to follow. . . the idea of leaven indicates the subtle nature of the false teaching of the Sadducees and Pharisees. It was mixed with truth. It was disguised with outward piety. It was attractive when you heard it. And Jesus is saying, “be careful about that teaching.”

Note that Jesus insists that the disciples, even His disciples, must be discriminating about who they follow, who they admire, who they emulate. And if Jesus warns His disciples, the men upon whom He is going to found His worldwide mission, if He warns His disciples to be careful about who they listen to, and who they admire, and who they follow, how much more ought we to be on guard about who we listen to, who we learn from, and the doctrine that we take in.

Thomas Brooks addresses this problem in His book, Precious Remedies Against Satan's Devices. He actually has a section at the end of that book called “seven marks of a false prophet.” And in that passage, he gives character qualities of those who are actually leading people astray from the truth. First of all, he notes that they are menpleasers. That is, they are very concerned to tell you what you want to hear, not necessarily what you need to hear. They want to say things that are pleasant to you. They never want to offend you, even if it's for your own good.

Secondly, he says that those who are false prophets will reproach faithful ministers and ministries. They will call into question the faithfulness of good ministers of the gospel. And they will bring reproach against their character and their name.

Thirdly, he goes on to say, that false prophets will preach from their own imaginations. They will always be coming up with some new idea that nobody else has ever discovered in the history of the world, although there is a whole generation of heretics for the last thousand years who has taught the same thing. They have got some new idea that will revolutionize everything in life, something that you've never heard of, and nobody's ever heard of in the evangelical church, either.

Fourthly, he goes on to say that they will major on the minors. Instead of focusing on the weighty matters of law and gospel, they will go to some peripheral issue, and they'll tie you up with verbiage and teaching about it until your head spins.

Fifthly, he goes on to say that, they will cover their heresy with pleasing rhetoric. That is, what they say will go down smoothly. It will go down like a spoonful of sugar. But it is poison that is being hidden by their words.

He goes on to say, sixthly, that they care more about winning followers than they do seeing their followers grow in grace and righteousness. They are more concerned to pad their own egos by getting many followers, than they are seeking after the spiritual good and interests of those who are following.

And finally, he says, they are those who use their followers for financial gain. He has an interesting phrase. He says, "they care more about their followers' goods than their good." In other words, they are not so much concerned about their follower's best interests as they are about their followers giving them money.

John MacArthur: Signs that Jesus will return abound in our day. No period of history has experienced more wars or been so preoccupied with the prospect of war as our own. With unprecedented surpluses of food in some parts of the world, other parts still experience devastating famines. Cults and false religions of every sort are proliferating even in countries that have been nominally Christian for hundreds of years. The spirit of lawlessness and self-will is rampant....All of those signs that mark the end times are characteristic of our day. There can be no doubt that we live near the end of the age, and the concern of believers should be for what the Bible says rather than for what men say and for what God is doing rather than for what men are doing.

TEXT: Matthew 16:13-20

TITLE: CONFESSION OF PETER REGARDING THE IDENTITY OF JESUS

BIG IDEA:

THE FOUNDATION OF THE UNSTOPPABLE CHURCH IS THE APOSTLES (AS REPRESENTED BY PETER) WHO EMBRACED THE TRUE IDENTITY OF JESUS AND WERE DELEGATED AUTHORITY TO ENFORCE HIS TEACHING

INTRODUCTION:

Charles Swindoll: All of us have taken classes that have climaxed in a final exam. Quite often, that exam makes up the single most important grade in the course. Well-prepared exams help both the student and the teacher determine whether the teacher accomplished what he or she set out to teach and whether the student grasped the important points. It's not uncommon for the final exam to have only a few questions, but these questions are probing and strategic, addressing the core matters of the course.

Day after day for many months, Jesus had been training His disciples. Moment by moment they heard His teaching, observed His actions, witnessed His miracles, and got to know Him up close and personal. He invited them into His world, allowing them to observe his methods of ministry and, hopefully, to learn His ways. Finally, the day came for their final exam, which consisted of one crucial questions. In fact, it's life's ultimate question for all people. How we answer this question will have everything to do with our eternal destiny.

Stanley Saunders: The disciples have had the secrets of the kingdom revealed to them (13:10–17) and they have repeatedly witnessed God's power at work in Jesus, but they continue to demonstrate that their understanding is incomplete and their faith immature (cf., e.g., 15:33; 16:8–12). Jesus' question about who "people" say he is forms a bookend with John the Baptizer's question in 11:2 about whether Jesus is "the one coming." Peter's answer marks a definitive turning point in Matthew's Gospel, alongside Jesus' announcement of his impending death and resurrection in Jerusalem (16:21–28).

Stu Weber: This passage serves as a transitional section in Matthew's Gospel. Peter's confession summarized Jesus' ministry up to this point. And Jesus' announcement of the church began Jesus' preparation of the disciples for their leadership roles in his absence. Jesus' intention to build his church marks a major transition in God's pursuit of his great plan of the ages. The old wineskin of Israel had been set on the shelf temporarily, while the new wineskin of the church was introduced.

Grant Osborne: The single central idea is Christology, the messiahship of Jesus; Matthew contains by far the longest confession, as Peter links Jesus as "Messiah" with Jesus as "the Son of the living God." The second idea is discipleship, as Peter struggles with what that means. The third is blessing, as Jesus confers on Peter (and the church with which he is corporately identified) the authority of the kingdom power in Jesus.

Donald Hagner: The climax of the first main part of the Gospel is found in this resounding confession of Jesus as "the Christ, the Son of the living God." It is this to which all (beginning especially with 4:17) has led. It is this that must be established with all possible fixity before the narrative takes that startling turn that will dominate the second half of the Gospel and that seems almost to contradict the point just established. With this supremely important confession of Jesus as Messiah, confirmed by Jesus' declaration of the divinely certified truth of the confession (v. 17), it is not surprising that several other important ideas emerge, i.e., the church, the authority of Peter (and the other apostles), and inclusion or exclusion from the kingdom. For all of these—as indeed Christianity itself—are dependent on the identity of Jesus. It is because Jesus is who he is that Peter and the disciples can fulfill their calling and the church can be “built.”

(:13a) GEOGRAPHIC TRANSITION

“Now when Jesus came into the district of Caesarea Philippi,”

Richard Gardner: The northernmost boundary of ancient Israel. Known earlier as Paneas or Panion, the city of Caesarea Philippi was located at the foot of Mt. Hermon and had been rebuilt and renamed by Philip the Tetrarch (cf. Luke 3:1). The new name both honored the emperor, Caesar Augustus, and distinguished this Caesarea from the coastal city with the same name (cf. Acts 10:1).

Stanley Saunders: Matthew sets this story, significantly, in the region of Caesarea Philippi, where Herod the Great built a temple in honor of Caesar Augustus. Herod's son Philip later enlarged the city and renamed it Caesarea. Josephus reports that after the fall of Jerusalem in 70 CE, Jewish prisoners were thrown to the beasts in Caesarea Philippi (Josephus, Jewish War, 7:2:1 § 23–24). The setting of this story thus provides a pointed reminder of the conflict between God and the powers of this world.

I. (:13b-16) FINAL EXAM – CONFESSING THE TRUE IDENTITY OF JESUS

A. (:13) Primary Issue = Identity of Jesus

“He began asking His disciples, saying, ‘Who do people say that the Son of Man is?’”

Donald Hagner: Jesus takes the initiative by directly asking the question that has been in the minds of the disciples (and the readers of the Gospel) from the beginning of his ministry. What were people saying about him? How did they classify him, having seen him heal and heard him teach?

John MacArthur: “He asked His disciples, saying, ‘Who do men say that I, the Son of man, am?’” He uses the term Son of man to refer to Himself – it, by the way, is used 80 plus times in the New Testament, and so it is the Lord's most common designation of Himself, and although it is definitely a prophetic title of Messiah taken from Daniel 7:13 and 14, He uses it more as a sign of His humiliation, as a sign of His identification with humanity. . .

He wants the general opinions of men as they fall short of reality as a backdrop for the truth, which the disciples will give. And what He's really seeking is the confession that they ought to make with their lips from their heart after nearly two and a half years of being with Him. He's after a verdict. He's after a confidence statement, a supreme confession of who He is. It's time for that now, the lessons are over, the course has reached its climax, now is the test.

B. (:14) Popular Views of the Identity of Jesus

“And they said,”

Richard Gardner: When Jesus poses the first question, the disciples respond with a list of popular views. In each case, people are identifying Jesus with an earlier figure in Israel’s history who has supposedly returned to life or whose role is fulfilled anew in him. He could be John the Baptist (the view Herod espouses in 14:2), or Elijah (whose return was promised in Mai. 4:5-6), or Jeremiah (who is depicted in 2 Macc. 15:13-16 as alive and active in heaven), or another such figure (cf. Deut. 18:15-22). Common to each of these popular views is the idea that Jesus is a prophet. While this is true in one sense, it is an insufficient view from the standpoint of the Gospels. It confines Jesus to the roles and possibilities of the old era.

J. Ligon Duncan: What’s the problem with each of these designations that are being given to Jesus by the crowd? Well, there are basically two problems with them. First of all, notice that each of these relate Jesus to some famous and respected figure in Israel’s past, but every single one of them fails to recognize the uniqueness of Jesus Christ. Yes, He may be like John or like Elijah or like Jeremiah or like one of the prophets, but He is far greater. In fact, He is unique. There is no one like Him. He is in a class by Himself. So every single one of these designations by the crowd—it’s not that they’re unflattering, it’s not that they’re mean spirited. I’m sure that these people meant to say these as compliments. But they fail to see the uniqueness of Christ.

And secondly, notice that every single one of these designations mixes truth with error. I mean it’s a truth that He was like Jeremiah or like Elijah or like John the Baptist, but the only truth is to say a half-truth, because it doesn’t tell the whole story. And as Patrick tells us, “A half-truth masquerading as a whole truth is a whole lie.” We don’t understand Christ if we only think that He was a great teacher, a great prophet, a man of sorrows acquainted with grief. He was much more than that. And so every single one of these designations falls short.

1. John the Baptist

“Some say John the Baptist;”

2. Elijah

“and others, Elijah;”

John MacArthur: By the way, if you were to go to a Jewish Passover today, you would see at the Jewish Passover table, an empty chair, and if you were to ask the host why there is an empty chair during the Passover in which no one sits, he would tell you it is the chair for Elijah, and they are waiting for Elijah to show up because when he takes his seat, the Messiah is not far behind. And that’s based on Malachi 4.

3. Jeremiah or One of the Prophets

“but still others, Jeremiah, or one of the prophets.”

R. T. France: One surprising element, which is peculiar to Matthew, is the singling out of Jeremiah as a model for understanding Jesus. Jeremiah was, of course a prominent OT prophet, but why choose him rather than, say, Isaiah, with whom Jesus has himself implicitly compared his own ministry in the quotation in 13:13–15? The answer may be found in the peculiar nature of Jeremiah’s message, which has made his name proverbial as a prophet of doom, and in the sustained opposition he encountered among his own people. In particular, Jeremiah incurred fierce hostility by predicting the downfall of Judah and the destruction of the temple, and a similar message will become an increasing feature of Jesus' ministry as Matthew relates it. The three parables directed against the current Jewish leadership in 21:28 – 22:14 will be followed by the denunciation of the scribes and Pharisees in ch. 23 with its warning of a climactic judgment to come, and the explicit prediction of the total destruction of the temple (23:34 – 24:2; note the echo of Jer 22:5 in 23:38). It will be as a threat to the temple that Jesus will be tried (26:61) and derided on the cross (27:40). While this remains in the future as far as the narrative sequence is concerned, we have already heard Jesus' cryptic comment that "something greater than the temple is here," (12:6) and his threat of judgment on Galilean towns in 11:20–24. It is not very surprising that some people, whether in admiration or in disparagement, might have seen him already as a second Jeremiah; as the story continues the identification will become even more apt.

C. (:15-16) Preeminent Confession of the Identity of Jesus as the Messiah

"He said to them, 'But who do you say that I am?'

And Simon Peter answered and said, 'Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.'"

Richard Gardner: So it is that Jesus continues to probe with his second question: What do you my followers see as you behold me at work? The answer Peter gives as the disciples' spokesperson has already been anticipated in 14:33. Here, however, as a direct response to Jesus' inquiry, the words take on added significance. More than a prophet, Jesus is the Messiah, one with authority to fulfill Israel's prophetic hope. Like the anointed kings who preceded him, therefore, he may be called God's Son (cf. 2 Sam. 7:14; Pss. 2:7; 89:26-27), but with a status far exceeding theirs. His sonship is not merely one of adoption, the result of an act of coronation, but a sonship that comes from a unique and intimate relationship with God (cf. 11:27). He is the Son of the living God par excellence, because the living and life-giving God has been present in his life from the very beginning (cf. 1:18-25).

Charles Swindoll: Though Peter was in way over his head theologically, he didn't hesitate to state the truth. I'm not sure Peter was fully aware of what it meant that Jesus was the Messiah. Surely he understood its implications for Jesus' kingship in relation to being the descendant of David, but whether Peter knew that Jesus was also the anointed Prophet and the anointed, eternal High Priest, we can't be sure. And when Peter called Jesus the "Son of the Living God," did he have a full knowledge of Jesus' divine Sonship as the second person of the Trinity, co-eternal with the Father? Certainly Peter understood that Jesus was greater than any human he had ever met, that he had been sent by God, and that He was the Son of God in the sense that He was the descendant of David destined to be enthroned as the Messiah. But it may very well be that Peter spoke more than he knew when he confessed Jesus as the Christ, the Son of God.

Donald Hagner: This answer differs categorically from those offered by the people. That is, here Jesus is not identified as one of the figures involved in the coming of the end times, but as the coming one, the determinative person who brings with him the messianic age and the transformation of the present order.

John MacArthur: This isn't just Peter, this is Peter gathering up the consensus of the - of the disciples, speaking in their behalf. I like the fact that it calls him Simon Peter. It gives a very official character to the confession. This is a very official, formal confession. Simon Peter, his full name, says: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." It's a formal confession, and it demands a formal designation, not an offhanded one. This is the consensus.

II. (:17-19) FUTURE VISION FOR THE UNSTOPPABLE BUILDING OF JESUS' CHURCH

“And Jesus answered and said to him,”

A. (:17) Beatitude – Spiritual Truth Depends on Revelation from the Father

“Blessed are you, Simon Barjona, because flesh and blood did not reveal this to you, but My Father who is in heaven.”

Stu Weber: He immediately pronounced Peter blessed, meaning that Peter had been the recipient of God's favor or blessing in the form of truth revealed to Peter's mind. It was not man who revealed this to Peter. The truth of Jesus' identity is one of the “secrets” of 13:11, easily understandable once it is revealed. But it is undiscoverable by natural, human means until God chooses to make it known. Only my Father in heaven was the source of such understanding about the Son. Here “my Father” took on extra significance in light of Peter's confession of Jesus as “the Son of the living God.”

Grant Osborne: In light of the insight God has granted to Simon, Jesus pronounces a beatitude (see on 5:3), i.e., God's blessing, on him. As already noted in 5:3–12, μακάριος is not human happiness but divine favor, though the joy and fortunate status of the individual is a by-product. It combines religious ecstasy and human joy.

B. (:18) Bedrock (Foundation) of the Unstoppable Church

1. Beginning of the Church

“And I also say to you that you are Peter,”

Stanley Saunders: In the Old Testament, both Abram and Jacob received new names, and both were associated with the birth of a new people (Gen. 17; 32:22–32). Peter now gets his name (cf. 4:18; 10:2). It is a play on the words for a round stone (petros) and a rock (petra). Peter himself, not just his confession, is the round stone that will serve as the foundation stone for the building that is Jesus' assembly.

2. Foundation of the Church

“and upon this rock I will build My church;”

Evangelical Protestants have an innate reaction against seeing Jesus identifying Peter as the foundation of the church [even if you view Peter as representative of the body of apostles]. They want to guard against the errors of Catholicism and the arguments supporting the popery. But that is an overreaction to the natural exegesis of this passage.

Leon Morris: The big question is the meaning of this rock. Does it mean the man Peter? Or the faith Peter has just professed? Or is it the teaching of Jesus (as in 7:24)? Or Jesus himself? Each of the views has been argued passionately by some exegetes, often maintaining at the same time that other views can be espoused only by people who refuse to accept the plain meaning of the Greek. Clearly this is a place where we must tread carefully and keep in mind the possibility of interpreting the passage in ways other than the one that appeals to us.

Stu Weber: Upon this statement the Roman Catholic church has based its doctrine of Peter being appointed the first in a long line of popes. Jesus' statements of Peter's authority in the next verse provide the basis for the Roman Catholic church's erroneous teachings regarding the authority of the papal office.

And, equally in error, many Protestants have reacted against the Roman Catholic interpretation by going to the other extreme, allowing the “rock” (petra) to mean anything but Peter himself.

Matthew's record of Jesus' wordplay on Peter's name is significant. Petros is a masculine singular noun. Petra is feminine. And while clearly related, they represent a distinction. The masculine singular form refers to Peter as one singular rock. The feminine form may be understood to represent bedrock or a rock quarry. It is reasonable to understand Jesus' statement to mean that Peter was one rock among a rock quarry (the disciples). It was upon this quarry of disciples (cf. “living stones,” 1 Pet. 2:5) and their understanding of Peter's confession that Jesus would build his church. . .

It is critical to understand that the words church and kingdom are two different words referring to two different realities. They are not synonymous or interchangeable. And the one (church) does not replace the other (kingdom). “Church” refers to a people; “kingdom” refers to a reign. Furthermore, the church does not subsume the kingdom, although it is part of it. Nor does the church replace the nation of Israel in the unfolding of the kingdom. Any attempt to make it so must require major allegorizing of the covenants (rather than interpreting them consistently and literally), which results in significant doctrinal error.

The church does not render God's covenant with David (2 Sam. 7) and David's kingdom obsolete. The Son of David will rule from David's throne (Israel) over the earth, and the church (the king's bride) will share in it, but the church cannot replace it. “God's gifts and his call are irrevocable” (Rom. 11:25-29). A study of the usages of the words basileia (kingdom) and ekklesia (church) will demonstrate a great difference between the two.

William Barclay: Jesus did not mean that the Church depended on Peter, as it depended on Himself, and on God the Rock, alone. He did mean that the Church began with Peter; in that sense Peter is the foundation of the Church.

R. T. France: Here, as we have noted, Peter is acting as spokesman for the whole group. Yet it is Peter, not the Twelve, who is declared to be the foundation rock. So how does this corporate apostolic foundation relate to a specific foundational role for Peter alone? Matthew has made it clear in 10:2 that Peter comes “first” among the Twelve. Throughout the gospel he is mentioned far more often than any other disciple, and regularly takes the lead. In the early chapters of Acts it is Peter who leads the disciple group in Jerusalem, and it is he who takes the initiative in the key developments which will constitute the church as a new, international body of the people of God through faith in Jesus: note especially his role in the bringing in of Samaritans (Acts 8:14–25) and Gentiles (Acts 10:1 – 11:18; 15:7–11). By the time James takes over as president of the Jerusalem church, the foundation has been laid. In principle all the apostles constituted the foundation, with Jesus as the cornerstone, but as a matter of historical fact it was on Peter's leadership that the earliest phase of the church's development would depend, and that personal role, fulfilling his name “Rock,” is appropriately celebrated by Jesus' words here.

Donald Hagner: The rock imagery implies both stability and endurance (cf. 7:24–25), even before the gates of Hades (see below). . . “Rock” of course refers here not to Peter’s character, as will become clear later in the narrative, but to his office and function (see too France) as leader of the apostles.

John MacArthur: this is a message of great hope that the beleaguered, persecuted, martyred, rejected, maligned, poor, ignoble people of God are still going to go on, and when they look like losers, you just aren’t looking close enough. There’s victory at the end.

- the certainty of Jesus building His church
- the intimacy of Jesus building His church
- the identity of the church Jesus will build – my assembled, redeemed people – speaks to the continuity of the people of God

3. Destiny of the Church

“and the gates of Hades shall not overpower it.”

Richard Gardner: The promise Jesus gives in verse 18 is to build a durable community which he calls my church (cf. 18:17; 1 Cor. 1:2; Acts 9:31). The Greek word for church is ekklēsia, the same word used for the assembly of Israel in the LXX (cf. Deut. 31:30; Judg. 20:2; 1 Kings 8:14). What Jesus promises, then, is to reconstruct the people of God, to fashion a messianic community of faith with its own foundation and destiny. And Peter is somehow related to this building project. As the NRSV and NIV footnotes indicate, verse 18 begins with a provocative play on words: You are Peter (Petros), Jesus says, and on this rock (petra) I will build my church. Petros is a masculine noun meaning stone or rock, and so usable as a male name; petra is a feminine noun conveying the idea of a rock foundation (as in 7:24).

The key question here is whether the rock foundation of the church is Peter himself, or something to be distinguished from Peter. If the latter, Jesus could be speaking of Peter’s faith, or of the revelation Peter received. It is more likely, however, that the rock on which Jesus promises to build the church is in fact Peter himself, Peter the first disciple (cf. 4:18; 10:2), who represents the whole group of disciples from which the church will be formed. At least four considerations support this view:

- (1) When a person in the biblical story receives a new name, the name points to a new identity or role for that person (cf. Gen. 17:5-6, 15-16; 32:27-28). It is thus natural to relate the name Peter receives to a role he will have in the founding of the church.
- (2) The Aramaic saying which likely lies behind the Greek text here would have used one and the same word for both Peter and rock (the word kepha), thus identifying the two. (It is from the Aramaic word that the name Cephas is derived, the name Paul uses for Peter in his letters; cf. 1 Cor. 1:12; Gal. 1:18.)
- (3) The view that the church is built on the foundation of the apostles is found elsewhere in the NT (Eph. 2:20). Further, there is evidence that Peter was revered as one of the pillars of the church among believers in Judea (cf. Gal. 2:9).
- (4) The OT speaks of Abraham as the rock from which Israel was hewn (Isa. 51:1-2), and it is fitting that the first disciple to respond to Jesus should be identified in the same manner. Like Abraham, Peter signifies the origin of a special people, a people through whom God will bless all the nations. . .

As a metaphor, therefore, the gates of Hades represent the threat of destruction, in the face of which one seeks a secure place (cf. Isa. 28:14-22; 1QH 6:23-27; IQS 8:7). According to Jesus, the community he builds is such a place, capable of withstanding destruction. However fierce the floodwaters that beat against the church, its foundation is secure, and it will not be overwhelmed.

Leon Morris: Jesus is giving his followers the assurance that nothing in this world or the next can overthrow the church.

C. (:19) Bestowing of Authority

1. Investiture of Authority – Keys to the Kingdom

“I will give you the keys of the kingdom of heaven;”

Richard Gardner: To understand the text correctly, we need to recall Peter’s function throughout 16:13-20. He serves as the representative of the disciples as a group. When Peter, therefore, receives the keys and the power to bind and loose, he does so on behalf of the church. To put it another way, the saying in verse 19 does not grant Peter special authority in the church, but grants the church special authority within history.

Charles Swindoll: referring primarily to Peter’s authority on earth to open up membership in the physical, visible, earthly community that would become known as the church, in keeping with God’s heavenly initiative. Let me explain. The “doors” of the church would be unlocked when Peter invited believing, repentant Jews into the fold on Pentecost – Acts 2:38-41.

Next, Peter would unlock the “doors” of the church for the Samaritans, a group of people descended from the mixture of Israelites and Gentiles following the Exile. Philip had preached the gospel in Samaria, and many had believed and were baptized. The book of Acts records Peter’s involvement from that point – Acts 8:14-17.

Finally, Peter would unlock the “doors” of the church to the Gentiles when he ordered the Roman centurion Cornelius and other Gentile believers in Jesus to be baptized – Acts 10:46-48.

2. Implementation of Authority – Binding and Loosing

a. In Terms of Binding

“and whatever you shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven,”

Grant Osborne: Probably the best interpretation is to bring together this image of evangelism with that of discipleship, i.e., the authority of Peter and the church to declare the kingdom truths as they interpret and proclaim Jesus’ teaching, guiding the new community regarding what is forbidden and what is permitted in both doctrine and conduct (thus including discipline in the church, cf. 18:18).

Van Parunak: Now we turn to the unusual tense of the Greek verbs. They are not simple futures, but future perfects, “shall have been.” The simple future would suggest that Peter (and in ch. 18, the other disciples) have the power to make something permitted or forbidden. But the future perfect shows that they are binding things that have already been bound in heaven, and loosing things that heaven has already loosed. Their authority is not to create new rules, but (like stewards) to grant access to the contents of the heavenly storehouse.

b. In Terms of Loosing

“and whatever you shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.”

Richard Gardner: The metaphor of binding and loosing sometimes refers to casting out demons, but here reflects a usage that comes out of the synagogue. In this context, binding and loosing could refer either to

- (1) the forbidding and permitting of certain actions, or
- (2) the imposing and lifting of a sentence of excommunication.

In short, the authority to bind and loose is the authority of a community to establish and enforce norms for its life. According to Matthew, Jesus gives the church this kind of authority, authority ratified in heaven itself. As a result, the church can interpret Scripture and make community decisions without looking to the synagogue.

Leon Morris: Jesus meant that the new community would exercise divinely given authority both in regulating its internal affairs and in deciding who would be admitted to and who excluded from its membership.

(:20) EPILOGUE – INJUNCTION TO SILENCE REGARDING THE IDENTITY OF JESUS AS THE MESSIAH

“Then He warned the disciples that they should tell no one that He was the Christ.”

Richard Gardner: Only after the cross will the true nature of Jesus’ messiahship be understood. Until that time, the political connotations of the title Messiah could arouse false expectations and hinder Jesus from fulfilling his mission.

Stu Weber: He wanted people to come to a knowledge of his identity based on the right motive— personal repentance rather than political zeal. Furthermore, while Jesus was headed for Jerusalem and the cross, he may have been guarding against the possibility of uninformed enthusiasm on the part of the multitudes interfering with his intentions.

Leon Morris: Matthew rounds off the episode, as do Mark and Luke, with Jesus giving the disciples firm instruction to tell nobody that he was the Messiah. Matthew’s favorite Then (see on 2:7) moves on to the next point. Jesus gave the Twelve firm instruction that they were not to disclose the conversation. There is some emphasis on he in the expression that he was the Messiah: he and no other was the Messiah. This was a fact, and he had admitted it among the disciples. But the term could all too easily be misinterpreted and understood, for example, in political terms. If the disciples had gone out proclaiming that Jesus was the Messiah, both they and their hearers would have thought of a glorious, conquering Messiah. They would have looked for armies and bloodshed and victories. To know that Jesus was the Messiah was one thing; to understand what messiahship really meant was quite another. To have proclaimed Jesus’ messiahship would have been to invite misunderstanding. Better by far for Jesus to get on with the completion of his mission and to keep the knowledge that he was the Messiah within the inner circle. The disciples are to follow the same path as the Master: he knew he was the Messiah, but he did not proclaim it publicly; they are to take up the same position.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What are some of the popular views today regarding the identity of Jesus and His global significance?
- 2) What is the significance to you of Jesus being the Messiah, the Son of the living God?
- 3) How would you refute the Catholic doctrine of the papacy as being derived from this passage?
- 4) How does the church exercise today the functions of the keys of the kingdom of heaven and of loosing and binding?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Charles Swindoll: When did the Church begin?

Theologians have answered the question “When did the church begin?” in a number of ways. Some have suggested that the church consists of all the people of God from Adam to the end of time. Others see the church as beginning with the call of Abraham, because he was the first recipient of the unique covenant promises that became the root of all future covenants.

However, based on Matthew 16:18 and a few other New Testament passages, it seems best to see the church as beginning at Pentecost with the promised baptism of the Holy Spirit. Jesus said in Matthew 16:18, “I will build My church.” The verb meaning “to build,” oikodomeo, is in the future tense, pointing to an activity that Christ had not yet begun at the time He was speaking to Peter. In Ephesians 2:20, Paul says that the church is “built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Christ Jesus Himself being the corner stone.” The verb is the same – a form of oikodomeo. But here Paul uses the aurist tense, indicating something that occurred in the past. This suggests that sometime between Jesus’ ministry and Paul’s ministry the church was established.

This leaves us with really only one option for the timing of the founding of the church. Jesus said in Acts 1:5 that the disciples would be “baptized with the Holy Spirit” shortly after His ascension. This baptism of the Holy Spirit is the means by which believers are incorporated into the body of Christ (1 Cor. 12:12-13). And because this baptism of the Spirit didn’t occur until Pentecost (Acts 2:1-4), we can mark Pentecost as the point when Christ began to fulfill His promise to Peter that “I will build My church” (Matt. 16:18).

From Pentecost onward, the forces of wickedness have been trying to destroy the church and its proclamation of the truth. Whether by attacks from outside in the form of persecution or attacks from within in the form of destructive false teaching by heretics, Satan has tried with all his might to tear down Christ’s building project or to destroy its foundation. However, after two millennia, Christ’s promise still stands: “The gates of Hades will not overpower it” (16:18).

Van Parunak: We have seen all three titles of our Lord—Son of Man, Christ, and Son of God—here within the span of three verses. All three recur throughout the gospel (Son of Man 32x, Christ 17x, Son of God 9x), but there is only one other chapter in Matthew where the three come together, and that is when our Lord is on trial before the Jews, after his arrest (chart). Mat 26:63

And the high priest answered and said unto him, I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God. 64 Jesus saith unto him, Thou hast said: nevertheless I say unto you, Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

John MacArthur: Now, the Lord is going to build His church on a rock. The question we have is what is that rock, right? Now, the normal language appears to say, "You are Peter," and Peter translated means stone, rock, "and upon this rock, I'll build my church." And so the very normal and first impression as you look at it is "You're Peter. I'm going to build my church on you, Peter." And at that point, some of us who are Protestants get a little bit anxious because we say, "Now, that's what the Catholics say."

And that's what they say, to be sure. They say that this verse means the church is built on Peter. and therefore it establishes Peter as the first pope, the first head of the church. For example, Catholic theology says the pope is crowned with a triple crown, king of heaven, king of earth, and king of hell. He wields two swords, the spiritual and the temporal. The Lord conferred on Saint Peter the first place of honor and jurisdiction in the government of His whole church, and that same spiritual authority has always resided in the popes and bishops of Rome as being the successors of Saint Peter.

Consequently, says the Catholic theology, to be true followers of Christ, all Christians, both among the clergy and laity, must be in communion with the pope of Rome where Peter still rules in the person of his successor.

Now, that's Catholic theology, that Peter here is given the papacy and that he established papal succession, and that every pope that's come out of the Roman system and sat in Rome - and it gets confusing sometimes because there were as many as three at one time competing with each other - but supposedly has passed on Petrine authority, so that now when there is a pope there, he is a pope, as it were, who is from the loins of Peter and bears his same authority; therefore, he speaks authoritatively the truth of God, and when he speaks ex cathedra, it is as binding as the Bible. Now, that's the papal system, and they get that out of this passage.

Now, frankly, I really don't want to spend a lot of time arguing against that because it only comes out of the white spaces, not from the words here. Because it doesn't say anything about that, not anything at all, and you almost don't even want to dignify such stuff by commenting on it out of this passage, lest you should be at all thought - else you should think at all that there's any hint of it here. There isn't.

Peter can't be the head of the church, Christ is. And Peter - no Peter, no earthly individual on his own can hold up the whole church by his authority. So Protestants very often approach this text, and the one thing they want to do is make sure that we get rid of the thought that the church is built on Peter, right? So what they'll say, and this is a very common interpretation, "Thou art Peter," petros, it's a masculine form of the word, "and upon this rock," petra different word, different form of the same root, "I will build my church."

And so the traditional interpretation then has been, “You are petros,” which means stone, “but upon this petra” - and Liddell and Scott, for example, who give us Greek meanings, say it means a rock bed or a rocky mountain or a rocky peak. In other words, “You’re a stone, but upon a rocky peak or a rocky mountain, I’m going to build my church,” so that the statement is a contrast. “You’re a little rock. I’m going to build my church on a big rock.”

And then they go back to the antecedent in verse 16, the confession of Peter, and they say that is the rock bed, “Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.” And so the Lord is saying, “You’re a little rock. Upon that rock bed confession of the reality of my deity, I’m going to build my church.”

Now, that’s fair to do that with the text because there is a difference in those two words. And I really don’t have a problem with that viewpoint. If you want to hold that viewpoint, that’s fine. In fact, I think at one time or other in my life, I’ve probably held that viewpoint, too. But as I’ve been studying it lately, I’ve kind of been thinking along another direction. And I’ll show you what sort of shook me up. In Ephesians 2:20, as I began to think this through, we have a very interesting statement.

It says here that the household of God - or the temple of God or the church of Christ, whatever you want to call it - verse 20 of Ephesians 2 - is built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief cornerstone. Now, follow my thinking.

In Ephesians 2:20, it says the church is built upon the foundation of whom? The apostles. It says there, then, the very thing we’re trying to make it not say in Matthew 16. You understand that? You say, “Well, now wait a minute, in Matthew 16 it just says Peter.” Yes, but what have we been saying all along in this passage as we looked at it? When Peter spoke, he spoke on behalf of the whole group, did he not? And Peter spoke the consensus of the group, and when Christ replied to Peter, in a very real sense, He replied to the group. And so I really don’t feel that uncomfortable if you just say, “You’re Peter, and upon this rock, I’ll build my church.”

You say, “Well, then how do you account for the petra/petros difference?” Well, petros has to be used in the case of Peter because it’s a masculine form and he’s a man. And so linguistically, we won’t have a problem saying, “You’re a rock, and upon that rock, I’ll build my church.” Now, if we accept that, all we’re saying, then, there is the very same thing it says in Ephesians 2:20, very same thing, that the church is built on the foundation of the apostles, Peter being representative of them. And Peter was sort of a major representative, wouldn’t you agree?

I mean, for example, when you go into the book of Acts, you’ll find his name mentioned 50 times in the first twelve chapters of Acts - 50 times. And you will find that the sermon he preached on the day of Pentecost was not just Peter but it was Peter speaking on behalf of all those who believed, wasn’t it? For they all held to that same message and as a result three thousand were converted. It was again through the testimony of Peter in John, chiefly of Peter, that two thousand more were added later to the church in chapter 4.

It was through the testimony and ministry of Peter that the lame man was healed. It was through Peter’s leadership that the election of Matthias took place to replace Judas. It was the heroic message of Peter before the Sanhedrin. And so, you see, Peter was a key person and was acting as a representative of the ministry of all of them. So I don’t really have a problem with the Lord saying - so I could take either view, the Lord saying to Peter, “You’re the rock and on that rock I’ll build my church.” And then saying the same thing essentially as we saw in Ephesians 2:20.

And now comes the key question, but in what sense is the church built on the apostles, Peter being the leader of them? The Roman Catholics say it is built on his rank, or his elevation to authority, or his elevation to office, or his elevation to worthiness, or his elevation to some high-level position. But the Bible doesn’t say that. If it was built on the apostles, it was not built on their persons - not built on their persons, but built on their what? Teaching, right?

That’s why when the early church came together, they did not worship the apostles, Acts 2:42, they studied the apostles’ what? Doctrine and teaching. So that what He is really saying is, “You’re Peter and I can build my church on you as one of the foundation stones because you have affirmed ‘Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God,’ and you didn’t get it,” verse 17 says, “from flesh and blood, you got it from my Father who is in heaven. And since you are the vehicle through whom the Father is revealing His truth, I can build my church on that.”

So, the church is built. And it’s built on those apostles initially who affirmed the divine revelation coming from God and thus laid the foundation that is spoken of in Ephesians 2:20. So when we look at Ephesians 2:20 and we see the foundation of the church being the apostles and prophets, it isn’t their rank and it isn’t their office and it isn’t their title, it is the fact that they laid that foundation because they proclaimed the Word of God, so much so that they themselves were in many ways inseparable from their very message.

I think Martin Luther said it well. He said, “All who agree with the confession of Peter are Peters themselves, setting a sure foundation.” And I believe that the Lord is still building His church and putting up those living stones that Peter talks about, He’s still building His church on those people who affirm the revelation of God about Christ to be true.

To look at it another way, a group of people who do not believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God have no place where Christ can build His church. And so it’s a moot point. If you want to take the view you are a little stone and I’ll build it on the rock of your confession, or if you want to say you’re one with your confession, and you, Peter, can become a foundation because of your confession, because you’re living by the revelation of God, because you’re affirming the truth that the Father reveals to you, you are laying that foundation.

Either way, you come up with the same thing. And so the foundation of the church is the revelation of God as given to us through the apostles. And today we lay down that foundation by establishing God’s Word, we keep it there.

In 1 Corinthians 3, Paul approaches it from a little different angle when he says, “For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ Jesus.” That’s not - that appears initially to be a direct contradiction to Ephesians 2:20. Here you have the apostles’ and prophets’ foundation, here you have Christ the foundation. There’s no contradiction at all. The only reason the apostles and prophets were allowed to be the foundation stones was because they affirmed the reality of Christ as the true foundation.

So I believe the Lord is collecting all of those disciples into that confession and He says you’ve said it, Peter, and it’s upon that affirmation of divine revelation about who I am as the Son of the living God that I can build my church. What is this saying in a sense? It’s saying that the Lord builds His church on His truth, but always has chosen to reveal His truth through His people so that they become inseparable from that truth. His people are one with Christ. The apostles were so intimately attached to Jesus Christ that in one place Christ is the foundation and in another place, they're the foundation.

They were so intimately attached with and so true to His Word that in one place His Word is a sure foundation, in another place, the apostles are the foundation. But whether it's Christ or the apostles or the Word, it's all saying the same thing because all were inseparably linked. Do you understand? And the Lord is still building His church on people who confess His Word, who confess the Lordship of Jesus Christ, the deity of Jesus Christ, the Word of God. He's still building the church on the foundation of Jesus Christ and the doctrine of the apostles.

TEXT: Matthew 16:21-28

TITLE: THE PASSION OF THE MESSIAH AND THE PRICE OF DISCIPLESHIP

BIG IDEA:

THERE IS NO AVOIDING THE CROSS – EITHER FOR JESUS OR FOR HIS DISCIPLES

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: With “from that time on” (v. 21) we begin the second half of this narrative section (13:54 – 17:27), indeed, the second half of Matthew’s gospel. Immediately after Peter’s confession of Jesus as Messiah, Jesus starts to prepare the disciples for the true meaning of that confession. The announcement of the passion had to await the realization on the part of the disciples that he is the Messiah, for the passion defines his messianic office. So now the movement of the narrative is downward, and the discipleship sayings that follow (vv. 24–28) flow out of the announcement, defining the true followers as those who “take up their cross” in imitation of the Messiah.

R. T. France: The Galilean period of Jesus’ ministry has reached its climax at the most northerly point of his travels. This substantial central section of the narrative, which essentially parallels that in Mark 8:31 – 10:52, now bridges the gap between north and south, bringing Jesus and his disciples out of their home territory in the north and, for the first time in the Synoptic plan, into Judea in the south, where they are in “foreign” territory and where they will confront the hostile power of the religious authorities of Israel.

This geographical transition coincides with a significant change in the pattern of Jesus’ activity and teaching, signaled by the formula “From that time Jesus began ...” (16:21; see on 4:17). The declaration that he is the Messiah (16:16) leads him immediately to clarify what his messianic mission must involve, and the plain declaration in 16:21 that he must suffer, die and be raised again will be repeated in 17:22–23 and with added emphasis in 20:18–19. The shadow of the cross thus falls across this whole southward journey, as Jesus tries to get his disciples to understand the paradoxical and unwelcome nature of his mission.

William Hendriksen: Previously, in veiled utterances, Jesus had predicted his death (9:15), and even his death and resurrection (12:39, 40; 16:4). Now there was going to be a change. We see the Anointed One, as our chief Prophet, in plain unfigurative language foretelling his own demise; as our merciful High Priest, preparing to lay down his life, that he might “take away the sin of the world” (John 1:29); and throughout it all, as our eternal King, being in complete control of every situation, so that the plan of God Triune, made before the foundation of the world, was being carried out in every detail, yet in such a manner that the human agents who took part in carrying out this plan – elders, chief priests, scribes, the common people, the soldiers, the presiding judge, the betrayer, etc. – were fully responsible for their actions (Luke 22:22; Acts 2:23).

Leon Morris: For the Jews in general, and presumably for the Twelve up to this point, being Messiah meant unadulterated glory. The Messiah might encounter opposition and even hardship, but this kind of thing was no more than an unpleasantness that must be passed through on the way to majesty and splendor. For Jesus suffering was the essence of messiahship, and from this point on he brings it out again and again (cf. 17:9, 12, 22-23; 20:18-19, 28; 21:38-39; 26:2). Learning this was a lesson the disciples found very hard indeed.

David Thompson: JESUS CHRIST TEACHES HIS DISCIPLES ABOUT THE SUFFERINGS HE MUST ENDURE AS SAVIOR AND ABOUT THE LIFESTYLE THE DISCIPLES MUST ENDURE AS HIS SERVANTS.

I. (:21-23) THE PASSION AND RESURRECTION OF JESUS CLEARLY REVEALED

A. (:21) God's Plan of Redemption – Revealed by Jesus

“From that time Jesus Christ began to show His disciples”

Grant Osborne: “From that time on he began” (ἀπὸ τότε ἤρξατο) also began 4:17 at the start of Jesus' Galilean ministry, so this introductory formula frames the two parts of Matthew's narrative, the movement upward to the Caesarea Philippi confession, and the movement downward to the cross. The use of “to show” (δεικνύειν, present tense here for the ongoing nature of the demonstration) is also strong (Mark 8:31 has “teach”), connoting a visualization of the message and meaning he wants to make things crystal clear to the disciples.

D. A. Carson: This is not the first time he alludes to his death (cf. 9:15; 10:38; 12:40; cf. also Jn 2:19; 3:14), but it is the first time he discusses it openly with his disciples. The time for symbols and veiled language was largely over, now that they had recognized him as Messiah. That is probably the significance of the change from Mark's didaskō (“I teach”) to Matthew's deiknyō (“I point out,” “I show”—not, as in the NIV, “I explain”). Jesus had taught the passion earlier but in symbolic language. Now he shows these things to his disciples clearly. Matthew's verb (deiknyō) is equivalent to Mark's clause: “He spoke plainly about this” (Mk 8:32).

Donald Hagner: It is thus the compulsion of God's will that lies behind the following four infinitives, which are together syntactically governed by δεῖ.

Daniel Doriani: His death and resurrection are essential to God's design from all eternity. At the empty tomb, an angel reminded the disciples of Jesus' words, that he “must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, be crucified, and on the third day be raised again” (Luke 24:7). This “must” reflects the eternal plan of the triune God, Father, Son, and Spirit. The Father planned, the Son achieved, and the Spirit empowered Jesus.

1. Destination for Passion and Resurrection = Jerusalem “that He must go to Jerusalem,”

John MacArthur: it is a must that is bigger than the moment in which we see it. It is a must that is older than the circumstances in which we hear it. It is a must that comes thundering out of eternity. It is not the must of human devotion to an ideal, it is the must of a divine imperative. It is an ageless must. It comes with the force of eternity. This is the plan of God, set in motion before the foundation of the world.

Four things made it necessary.

1. First, human sin. He had to die because men are sinners and they must have their sin paid for.

2. Secondly, because of the divine requirement, without the shedding of blood, there could be no remission, and so men needed a death and God required a death.
3. And then you can add to that the divine decree, God by His determinate counsel and foreknowledge brought it to pass.
4. And then you could even add the prophetic promise, the prophets had said the Messiah would die. It's Matthew who records His death so beautifully, as the other gospel writers, but it's the psalmist who describes centuries before.

2. Degradation of Suffering at the Hands of Jewish Religious Leaders

“and suffer many things from the elders and chief priests and scribes,”

John MacArthur: The holy city is not holy. And the leaders of it are not holy, either.

Grant Osborne: a general summary of all the indignities and torment at the hands of the authorities. These are spelled out in more detail in the third prediction (20:19) and encompass all of the events from the arrest to the crucifixion. The three groups mentioned here are governed by a single article and so together constitute the Jewish leadership.

3. Destiny of Crucifixion and Resurrection

a. Crucifixion

“and be killed,”

Stu Weber: At the heart of the plan, Jesus must be killed—as the sacrificial lamb, the Son of Abraham, for the sake of Israel and all nations (Gen. 12:3; Matt. 1:2, 17). By this means he would redeem a sinful people. But he would be raised as the triumphant lion of Judah (Gen. 49:9), the sovereign Son of David (Gen. 49:10; Matt. 1:6, 17). Thus, he would restore his entire kingdom to its proper place, under his authority.

b. Resurrection

“and be raised up on the third day.”

Grant Osborne: The “third day” theme is connected to the “three days and three nights” of 12:40 and will be found again at 17:23; 20:19; 27:63. It became a major creedal affirmation in the early church, and 1 Cor 15:4 (cf. John 2:19) records that Jesus was “raised on the third day according to the Scriptures”; this is often linked with Hos 6:2 (“on the third day he will restore us,” cf. also 2 Kgs 20:5; Jonah 1:17) but is probably even broader, to the whole OT tradition of a third-day deliverance. Jesus was placed in the grave Friday afternoon and raised Sunday morning and by Jewish reckoning was in the grave “three days and three nights” inclusively.

B. (:22-23) Peter’s Resistance – Peter and Jesus Rebuke Each Other

1. (:22) Peter Rebukes the Lord – Crucifixion and Messiahship Are Not Compatible

“And Peter took Him aside and began to rebuke Him, saying,

‘God forbid it, Lord! This shall never happen to You.’”

D. A. Carson: How much of Jesus’ sayings about his death did the disciples understand before the events? The gospel evidence points in two complementary directions. On the one hand, the disciples understand perfectly well; otherwise, for instance, Peter could not possibly have rebuked Jesus (v.22). On the other hand, they cannot believe that Messiah will really be killed because their conceptions of the Messiah do not allow for a Suffering Servant. Therefore, Peter dares to rebuke Jesus, and the disciples begin to think that Jesus' predictions of his sufferings must be in some way nonliteral (Mk 9:10; Lk 9:45). . .

Peter's strong will and warm heart linked to his ignorance produce a shocking bit of arrogance. He confesses that Jesus is the Messiah and then speaks in a way that implies he knows more of God's will than the Messiah himself.

R. T. France: that Jesus "was raised" by the power of God is not to be set over against his "rising" victorious. But the passive formulation perhaps encourages us to see in this event God's vindication of his faithful Messiah. Jesus' resurrection is predicted not only in the three passion predictions but also in 17:9; 26:32, in both of which it is not so much announced as taken for granted. His expectation of personal resurrection is not explicitly derived from the OT, but may have owed something to the influence of passages like Isa 52:13–15; 53:10–12; Ps 16:10–11; 118:17–18, 22, which link rejection, suffering and death with subsequent vindication. But despite these predictions the disciples still seem to have been unprepared for the event, perhaps because the idea of the personal return to life of the Messiah (or indeed of any other person except by temporary resuscitation as in 9:25; 10:8; 11:5) was so foreign to their world-view that they instinctively heard the words as a metaphor for future vindication rather than as a literal prediction. It was the suffering and death that stayed in their minds rather than the resurrection.

Leon Morris: Peter has just given expression to the conviction that Jesus is the Messiah and has been praised by Jesus for this. He has seen something of Jesus' greatness, and because he has seen that greatness it is inconceivable to him that Jesus would undergo the humiliation of which he has just spoken. For Peter it is unthinkable that the one he has just pronounced "the Messiah, the Son of the living God" should be rejected and killed. How could the Jewish nation reject the Jewish Messiah? So he says forthrightly, "this will never happen to you"; his double negative is very emphatic (and with the future indicative rather than the aorist subjunctive even more so).

2. (:23) The Lord Rebukes Peter – The Cross Cannot Be Avoided

"But He turned and said to Peter, 'Get behind Me, Satan! You are a stumbling block to Me; for you are not setting your mind on God's interests, but man's.'"

Grant Osborne: Peter's mind-set is not framed by God's perspective but by the purely human expectations of Israel's messianic hopes.

The two sources of spiritual failure (Satan and self) are both emphasized here. Jesus' statement here has long been recognized as the heart of true discipleship in the sense of focusing on heavenly rather than earthly concerns and is closely linked in thrust with 6:19–21, which teaches us to seek treasure in heaven rather than treasure on earth.

D. A. Carson: A few moments earlier, Jesus had called Peter a rock. Now he calls him a different kind of "rock," a skandalon ("a stumbling block"). This is one of several striking parallels between vv.13–20 and vv.21–23. As Satan offered Jesus kingship without suffering (4:8–9), so Peter does the same, adopting current expectations of victorious messianic conquest (Pss. Sol. 17; cf. Schürer, History of the Jewish People, 2:517–25, and bibliography, 488–92). Jesus recognizes the same diabolical source behind the same temptation. For him to acquiesce would be to rebel against the will of his Father. The notion of a suffering Messiah, misunderstood by Peter so that he became a stumbling block to Jesus, itself becomes, after the resurrection, a stumbling block to other Jews (1Co 1:23).

R. T. France: Jesus' counter-rebuke of Peter is remarkably severe. Even the body-language adds to the effect: whereas Peter had confidentially "taken Jesus aside," Jesus now "turns on him" to issue a public reprimand. The opening words directly recall the dismissal of Satan in 4:10, here strengthened by the addition of the words "behind me," to emphasize Jesus' dissociation of himself from Peter's ideology. But whereas in 4:10 the "Enemy" (which is what "Satan" means) was the chief demon himself, here it is Jesus' loyal follower. For Peter to be addressed by this obnoxious name must have been deeply wounding, especially after the accolade in vv. 17–19. There is no parallel to such an address to a human being. But this is not merely extravagant abuse; the choice of this epithet suggests rather that behind the "human thoughts" of Peter Jesus discerns an attempt to divert him from his chosen course similar to that which Satan himself had made in 4:1–11. The same Peter who had just spoken what God had revealed to him (v. 17) is now speaking for Satan. Just as the third temptation in 4:8–9 had been to achieve worldly power by accommodating himself to Satan rather than attacking him, so now Peter's vision of Messiahship represents the easier way to power and authority, the gains without the pains. As long as he holds such a view, the "rock" on which the church is to be built proves instead to be a stumbling-block. The image goes neatly with the demand "get behind me:" as long as Peter stands in front of Jesus he is in his way, stopping him getting on with his mission. He gets in the way of God's purpose for Jesus by his unthinking acceptance of "human thoughts." Peter has expressed only what comes naturally to the human mind when presented with the idea of power and authority which the title "Messiah" suggests. But human thoughts are not God's thoughts (Isa 55:8–9), and if they are not questioned they can stand in the way of God's purpose and derail it. In much of the rest of this section of the gospel Jesus will be seen persistently trying to undermine the "human thoughts" of the disciples so as to get them to see things from the perspective of the kingdom of heaven (note especially 19:23–30; 20:20–28).

S. Lewis Johnson: Now it seems to me that we have an application of this in all of the many activities which in the local church impinge upon the priority of the word of God. It is possible for individuals who love the Lord to make diabolically hellish suggestions concerning the ministry of the local church. It's sad but true. And often they are made out of the best human intentions. Peter's human intentions were good. He didn't like the concept of Jesus being slain by the rulers in Jerusalem. That was something that was very bad for him. And so he acted out of that human love for Jesus Christ, but it was not divine. It was not understanding. It was not enlightened activity. It was actually diabolical. And there are many things that happen in the local church in which substitutions are made for the primacy of the word of God.

John MacArthur: So we see the plan of God, presumption of Peter, protest of Christ, lastly, the principle for us. What does this say to us? Now listen very carefully. This is the point of all of this. The end of verse 23, here's the principle, and He generalizes now out of the specific incident and He puts Peter's action in a category that all of us are in from time to time. . . "For you are thinking along not the lines of God but the lines of men." You are reasoning from the standpoint of humanness, not deity. You're thinking the things of men, you're not thinking the things of God. . .

What is the lesson for us? Two lessons, just two and I want you to remember.

- Lesson number one, the Savior, the Messiah, the Son of God may not fit men's definitions, but He is no less the fulfillment of God's plan.

- There's a second lesson, and that considers itself with not Christ but us. And it is that we must learn that for us there is pain in the refining process.

II. (:24-26) THE PRICE OF DISCIPLESHIP INCLUDES THE CROSS

John MacArthur: WINNING BY LOSING: THE PARADOX OF DISCIPLESHIP

There are some things that our Lord specially taught, some specially loved truths, which He went back to again and again and again. We see them over and over in the Scripture. And we will never understand salvation and we will never understand discipleship unless we understand this principle, so oft repeated. The principle is winning by losing. . .

God says the gain comes through the pain and the glory comes through the suffering. It has to. There's no other way because you cannot put God, whether incarnate in the Son or alive in the hearts of His people, in the midst of an anti-God society without there being some suffering, without a reproach, without hostility. That's why 2 Timothy 3:12 says, "All that will live godly in this present age shall suffer persecution." And He says to Peter, "You don't understand God's thinking. You put holiness in the midst of an unholy society, and there has to be a reaction."

A. (:24) Challenge to Embrace Self-Denial and Suffering

"Then Jesus said to His disciples, 'If anyone wishes to come after Me,'"

Leon Morris: Coming after me could mean simply walking behind Jesus as he moved along the road, but in a context like this there is no doubt that it means "be a disciple," "be a committed follower." Such a person must deny himself. The natural tendency of the race is to affirm oneself, to concentrate on what serves one's own interests, to make oneself as prosperous as one can. Jesus calls on all his true followers to renounce such self-interest (NEB, "leave self behind"). It is not easy to understand that we must concentrate on meeting the needs of others rather than promoting ourselves (which is why people make utterances like the one Peter had just made).

Jesus brings out the truth that he is looking for the utmost in self-denial by saying that the disciple must take up his cross. We minimize the force of this with sayings like "We all have our cross to bear." Jesus was not talking about minor discomforts. Those who heard him utter these words knew what taking up a cross meant; they knew that it was the prelude to that person's crucifixion. Jesus was speaking about a death to a whole way of life; he was talking about the utmost in self-sacrifice, a very death to selfishness and all forms of self-seeking. We should not miss the force of his cross: there is a cross for every servant of God. And when we come to follow, we should not miss the present imperative: "let him keep on following me." Jesus is talking about a discipleship that is a whole way of life.

3 Essential Aspects of Discipleship:

1. Self-Denial

"let him deny himself,"

William Barclay: To deny oneself means in every moment of life to say no to self and yes to God. To deny oneself means finally, once and for all to dethrone self and to enthrone God. To deny oneself means to obliterate self as the dominant principle of life, and to make God the ruling principle – more, the ruling passion – of life. The life of constant self-denial is the life of constant assent to God.

D. A. Carson: Death to self is not so much a prerequisite of discipleship to Jesus as a continuing characteristic of it.

Craig Blomberg: Self-denial does not imply self-abuse or lack of self-esteem. As Jesus' disciples believers should have a better self-image than any other people, but it should be based on God's grace and not their merit. Self-denial does, however, mean putting God and his kingdom priorities first. This should have a visible impact on the nature of one's financial commitments and service to church and world and should lead to the rejection of self-centered arrogance and pride. According to Allison and Davies, “Discipleship is a doing of what is right, no matter how irksome the privations, no matter how great the dangers.” The Beatitudes (5:3-12) provide as good a commentary as any on the concept expressed more concisely here.

John MacArthur: And when you lovingly and patiently bear any disgrace, any irregularity, any annoyance, when you can stand face to face with folly and extravagance and spiritual insensitivity and endure it as Jesus did, that is dying to self. When you are content with any food, any money, any clothing, any climate, any society, any solitude, any interruption by the will of God, that is dying to self. And when you never care to refer to yourself in conversation or record your own good works, or itch after commendation from others, and when you truly love to be unknown, that is dying to self.

2. Cross Bearing

“and take up his cross,”

John MacArthur: It is the willingness to endure persecution, rejection, reproach, shame, suffering, even martyrdom, for His sake. That's all.

Grant Osborne: “Take up their cross” (ἀράτω τὸν σταυρὸν αὐτοῦ, see also on 10:38) is an incredibly powerful metaphor in a world where rebels and malcontents could regularly be seen dying on crosses. The disciples had to know, with all the opposition to Jesus by the officials, that this was a real possibility for them. In the Roman world it was common for the condemned criminal to carry his own cross to the place of execution, so this is an apt analogy. It is likely that there is a twofold thrust: cross-bearing as a symbol of the total denial of self, and a willingness to die for Christ if necessary. Again Jesus is the supreme model who has done both.

Application: Make certain your true followers understand the God-given path for your ministry. Jesus' entire ploy at Caesarea Philippi was to confront the disciples with his messianic reality and to correct any misunderstanding they had. The true test was about to occur as they moved along the road of destiny and faced many obstacles, moving ever closer to Jerusalem and the cross. Jesus wanted them on the same wavelength as much as possible as they faced the certain dread of that destiny. Such communication of purpose is essential for a united movement. . .

The Path of Self-Denial and Suffering:

Jesus could not be more clear on this. To follow the human rather than the divine way is antithetical to discipleship. God demands that we seek the things that are above, not the things on earth (Col 3:1-2). This means a radical surrender and a radical abrogation of the world's ways and priorities. To “gain/find” the one, we must “lose/forfeit” the other. This involves living for the eternal future reality, not the temporary present desires. This distinctly involves wealth, possessions, and status (“gain the whole world”), a major concern of all three Synoptics but especially Luke (Luke 1:51–53; 3:7–14; 4:18–19; 6:20–26; etc.). Every Christian must come to grips with worldly possessions vs. serving God.

3. Following Jesus

“and follow Me.”

John MacArthur: The third ingredient in the principle of discipleship is loyal obedience. “And follow me.” “And follow me.” The text literally says, “Let him be following me.” It’s a way of life. It’s a submissiveness to the Lordship of Christ that becomes a pattern of living. It can even relate to the word “to imitate.” If we say we belong to Jesus, 1 John 2:6, we ought to walk as He walked, putting our feet in His footprints, loyal to the divine will.

B. (:25) Cost of Discipleship Gains Everything

*“For whoever wishes to save his life shall lose it;
but whoever loses his life for My sake shall find it.”*

R. T. France: the willingness to risk one’s own life. It means putting loyalty to Jesus before self-preservation. . . Loss of life as such is no gain; it is life lost out of loyalty to Jesus which ensures that true life is gained.

William Barclay: In our day and generation, it is not likely to be a question of martyrdom, but it still remains a fact that if we meet life in the constant search for safety, security, ease and comfort, if every decision is taken from worldly-wise and prudential motives, we are losing all that makes life worthwhile. Life becomes a soft and flabby thing when it might have been an adventure. Life becomes a selfish thing when it might have been radiant with service. Life becomes an earthbound thing when it might have been reaching for the stars. Someone once wrote a bitter epitaph on a man: ‘He was born a man and died a grocer.’ Any trade or profession might be substituted for the word grocer. Those who play for safety cease to be truly human, for human beings are made in the image of God.

People who risk all for Christ – and maybe look as if they had lost all – find life. It is the simple lesson of history that it has always been the adventurous men and women, bidding farewell to security and safety, who wrote their names on history and greatly assisted human progress.

C. (:26) Calculation of Discipleship Prioritizes Eternal Destiny

*“For what will a man be profited, if he gains the whole world, and forfeits his soul?
Or what will a man give in exchange for his soul?”*

J. Ligon Duncan: Jesus’ argument with His disciples is that those who do not deny themselves temporally, deny themselves eternally. If you will not deny yourself now, you have by that very choice denied yourself for eternity. Selfishness causes the soul to contract. But love makes it expand, enriches it, fills it to overflowing with assurance in peace and joy. That’s why men like Jim Elliott could repeat that ancient quote, “He is no fool who gives up what he cannot keep to gain that which he cannot lose.” Do we truly value the soul in that way? Do we truly believe that the rewards that are worth having are the rewards to come? Or, are we satisfied with the trinkets of this age? That is the question that Jesus is pressing. Not just to His original disciples, but to you and me. How does it make a difference? Because if you really believe that the rewards that Christ promises are eternal, and if you really believe that those rewards are only experienced in relationship with him and will in some cases have to await the future manifestation of the kingdom, it changes the whole way you approach the things and the blessings of this life.

Charles Swindoll: 3 “nevers” we must never forget:

- 1) (:21) We must never think that just because something is unexpected, it’s unacceptable.
- 2) (22-23) We must never think that the Lord should alter His plan to fit our preferences.
- 3) (:24-26) We must never think that being a close follower of Jesus can happen without self-denial.

Jesus encouraged them that though the demand for discipleship was high, the rewards were inestimable. Yes, those who gripped their lives with white knuckles would lose them in the end. And if they didn’t surrender their souls to Christ, everything they held onto would be lost forever. But those who let go in self-denial and opened themselves up to whatever God had for them would be rewarded beyond imagination (16:25). This reward wouldn’t necessarily come in this life, however. A person could gain the “whole world” yet forfeit his or her soul. What person, when faced with an eternity of damnation, would not wish to have given up everything previously held dear on earth for the joys of heaven? That’s the argument Jesus was making as He urged the disciples to a life of total abandon when it came to following Him.

III. (:27-28) THE PAROUSIA OF THE SON OF MAN BRINGS GLORY, REWARD AND DOMINION

A. (:27) Promise of End Time Second Coming with Judgment, Glory and Reward

“For the Son of Man is going to come in the glory of His Father with His angels; and will then recompense every man according to his deeds.”

John MacArthur: And that leads us to the parousia, that’s the word for “coming.” We use it speak of the second coming, and that’s what verse 27 talks about. “For the Son of man shall come in the glory of His Father with His angels and then He shall render to every man according to his works.” And what He’s saying is, “Look, you better decide what decision you’re going to make because there is a day of accounting coming. There’s a day when the Judge is going to come.” And do you remember John 5 says that the Father has committed all judgment to the Son and He is coming to judge, and He will be coming in the full radiant glory of God the Father, manifesting and revealing that ultimate glory, along with angels who are the instruments of judgment. And then He will render to every man according to his works.

Leon Morris: Jesus makes it clear that there will be a final reckoning and that those who have exchanged their essential being, their “life,” for ephemeral profit or pleasure will receive the recompense that is due. In the end there will be a righting of all wrongs.

David Turner: Disciples today likewise often do not grasp that their present sufferings are not worthy to be compared to future glory (16:27; cf. Rom. 8:18; 2 Tim. 2:11–13). Those who seek to follow Jesus still need periodic reorientation to kingdom values (cf. Matt. 20:20–28). Glory and rewards await faithful disciples (19:27–29), but these come only after a life of self-denying service that follows in the steps of Jesus to the cross, as 16:24–28 shows.

B. (:28) Promise of Preview Experience of Kingdom Majesty, Victory and Dominion

“Truly I say to you, there are some of those who are standing here who shall not taste death until they see the Son of Man coming in His kingdom.”

John MacArthur: And may I suggest to you an interesting thought? This same promise, “Some of you are not standing,” and so forth – “Some of you standing will not see death,” appears in Matthew, Mark, and Luke. And in all three cases where it appears, it is immediately followed, every single time, by the same incident so that what the Lord is simply doing is interpreting what He just said by what happens. “Some of you standing here shall not die till you see the Son of Man in regal splendor.” You know what they were about to get? A personal, private preview of second coming glory. It’s exactly what they were going to get.

Do you want to get in on it? Verse 1, “After six days, Jesus takes Peter, James, and John his brother” – that’s it, just those three; that’s the “some” who didn’t die till they saw Him in regal splendor. The rest died, folks, before they saw Him in regal splendor, because they haven’t – He hasn’t come in regal splendor yet.

But these three weren’t going to die until they saw this. And it only came six days later; brought them into a high mountain privately. “And He was transfigured before them; and His face did shine like the sun, and His garment” – or raiment – “was as white as the light.” You know what happened? God flipped the switch and turned on deity on the inside. And the blazing light came from the inside out. And then to add to this, there appeared Moses and Elijah talking with Him. Now, this was an overwhelming scene.

Leon Morris: In his commentary on the equivalent passage in Luke Alfred Plummer lists seven principal ways of understanding the passage that have been put forward:

- (1) the transfiguration,
- (2) the resurrection and ascension,
- (3) Pentecost,
- (4) the spread of Christianity,
- (5) the internal development of the gospel,
- (6) the destruction of Jerusalem, and
- (7) the second advent.

[Alternative Views]

D. A. Carson: It seems best to take v.28 as having a more general reference—namely, not referring simply to the resurrection, to Pentecost, or the like, but to the manifestation of Christ’s kingly reign exhibited after the resurrection in a host of ways, not the least of them being the rapid multiplication of disciples and the mission to the Gentiles. Some of those standing there would live to see Jesus’ gospel proclaimed throughout the Roman Empire and a rich “harvest” (cf. 9:37–38) of converts reaped for Jesus Messiah. This best suits the flexibility of the “kingdom” concept in the Synoptic Gospels and the present context. Thus, v.28 does not refer to the same thing as 10:23. . .

it is likely that Matthew (and Mark and Luke, who use the same awkward phrase about “some of those standing here” and equally closely link that saying with the following account of the Transfiguration) saw in this vision at least a proleptic fulfillment of Jesus’ solemn words in v. 28, even though the truth of Jesus' kingship was to be more concretely embodied in later events following his resurrection.

William Barclay: There are two quite distinct sayings here.

(1) The first is a warning, the warning of inevitable judgment. Life is going somewhere – and life is going to judgment. In any sphere of life, there inevitably comes the day of reckoning. There is no escape from the fact that Christianity teaches that after life there comes the judgment; and when we take this passage in conjunction with the passage which goes before, we see at once what the standard of judgment is. People who selfishly hug life to themselves, people whose first concern is their own safety, their own security and their own comfort, are in heaven's eyes the failures, however rich and successful and prosperous they may seem to be. Those who spend themselves for others, and who live life as a gallant adventure, are the men and women who receive heaven's praise and God's reward.

(2) The second is a promise. As Matthew records this phrase, it reads as if Jesus spoke as if he expected his own visible return in the lifetime of some of those who were listening to him. If Jesus said that, he was mistaken. But we see the real meaning of what Jesus said when we turn to Mark's record of it. Mark has: "And he said to them: 'Truly I tell you, there are some standing here who will not taste death until they see that the kingdom of God has come with power'" (Mark 9:1).

It is of the mighty working of his kingdom that Jesus is speaking; and what he said came most divinely true. There were those standing there who saw the coming of Jesus in the coming of the Spirit at the day of Pentecost. There were those who were to see Gentiles and Jews swept into the kingdom; they were to see the tide of the Christian message sweep across Asia Minor and cover Europe until it reached Rome. Well within the lifetime of those who heard Jesus speak, the kingdom came with power.

Again, this is to be taken closely with what goes before. Jesus warned his disciples that he must go to Jerusalem, and that there he must suffer many things and die. That was the shame; but the shame was not the end. After the cross there came the resurrection. The cross was not to be the end; it was to be the beginning of the unleashing of that power which was to surge throughout the whole world. This is a promise to the disciples of Jesus Christ that no human action can hinder the expansion of the kingdom of God.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Does my view of Christian discipleship focus on suffering and self-denial because of identification with Jesus Christ or on living a happy and enjoyable life in the present?
- 2) Where do my interests and agenda align more with Satan than with my Lord Jesus?
- 3) In what specific ways have you denied yourself and taken up your cross and followed Jesus?
- 4) Am I investing my life in the eternal values and purposes of God?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Daniel Doriani: Why Jerusalem? The book of Revelation says this world opposes God’s people in three ways. The foes of God have three styles and each has its city. The cities are Sodom, Egypt, and Jerusalem. We see them together in Revelation 11:8, which declares that God’s witnesses will be killed: “Their bodies will lie in the street of the great city, which is figuratively called Sodom and Egypt, where also their Lord was crucified.” Each city has a symbolic meaning:

- Sodom represents sensuality, wantonness, and perverse self-indulgence.
- Egypt represents enslavement, oppression, and injustice, especially toward Israel.
- The “great city,” where the Lord was crucified, is Jerusalem. It represents external religion that masks moral and spiritual decay.

Today, some of the greatest dangers to believers still come from Jerusalem—from dead religion. We know we must shun the teaching of other religions, but believers must also beware of false teaching within the church, in all its branches. Both Protestant and Catholic churches can lead us astray.

D. A. Carson: This pericope contains an important chiasm:

- v.24: challenge to take up the cross and follow Christ in the immediate future
- v.25: incentive reward and punishment at the Parousia
- v.26: central weighing of values
- v.27: incentive reward and punishment at the Parousia
- v.28: promise of witnessing the kingdom power of Jesus in the immediate future

Warren Wiersbe: He presented to the disciples two approaches to life:

deny yourself	live for yourself
take up your cross	ignore the cross follow Christ	follow the world
lose your life for His sake	save your life for your own sake forsake the world	gain the world
keep your soul	lose your soul
share His reward and glory	lose His reward and glory

Stanley Saunders: The death of Jesus brings judgment on the worlds that humans construct in the shadow of death. The empires of this world offer the promise of salvation in many differing forms: security, pleasure, self-fulfillment, health, material possessions, constant distraction and isolation from the world around us. But this “salvation” is illusory. To “gain the world” this way requires, in fact, the loss of all life. In our denial that the living God is the source of all life, we fall prey to alienation, exploitation, violence, and the destruction of community and creation. We end up existing—not living—at odds with the world God created for us to live in. There is no solution to this but the conquest of death itself.

The cross of Jesus Christ bears ultimate witness to who God is—neither the god of the Jewish leaders demanding sacrifice nor the god of Caesar demanding order. The Romans see the cross as a public ritual that restores order. The religious leaders trust that the cross will remove a threat. But the cross turns out to be the perfect expression of God’s own power to save and redeem. It is necessary for Jesus to suffer and die at human hands in order to demonstrate the depth of God’s forgiveness, mercy, and love.

J. Ligon Duncan: We must understand the necessity of the cross if we are to understand Christianity.

Christianity makes no sense apart from the cross. And this is one of the prime points that Jesus is driving home. . . . And as soon as He sees that the disciples have grasped that He is both the long expected Messiah and the very Son of God, He knows that time has come to teach them a more unsettling aspect to the good news. Now, He must teach them that Messiah must die. . . . We cannot possibly overestimate the force and shock of that statement to the disciples. The disciples are utterly unprepared for the message that Messiah must die. We’re going to see in this very passage in their reaction the fact that this takes them utterly by surprise. The prophesy about the fulfillings, about the sufferings and the eventual murder of the Messiah of God that Jesus is giving to the disciples here, is utterly disturbing and surprising and troubling to the disciples in every detail.

And Jesus is here saying, “Jerusalem is going to kill Me. I’m going to suffer in Jerusalem. I’m not going to reign in the fashion that you expect Me to reign in Jerusalem. I’m going to be killed in Jerusalem.”

Notice, also, who He says is going to administer these sufferings. He says to the disciples that the chief priests and the scribes and the elders are going to be the ones who administer the suffering and who ultimately kill Him. Now, this is utterly shocking to the disciples. We, when we see chief priests, scribes, elders, Pharisees, Sadducees, we immediately see people with black hats, and we see the disciples as the people with the white hats on. Pharisees are bad. Disciples are good. The disciples couldn’t quite see it that way. These were the men who had instructed them in the faith from their youth, and they had a tremendous veneration for these chief priests and scribes and Pharisees, and we see it throughout the gospel. We’ve seen it here in Matthew. And now Jesus is saying to them, ‘And by the way, these men will kill Me.’ The leaders of Israel, these people taken together, the chief priests, the scribes, the elders, you know what they make up? They make up the highest religious tribunal in Israel. They are the very apex of the establishment of religious righteousness in the land and the Lord Jesus is saying, ‘Yes, they will kill Messiah. The cream of the spiritual crop of Israel, they will kill Messiah.’ William Hendriksen says this, “What Jesus is saying is this, that Israel’s very leaders who should have been foremost to honor and worship the Christ were going to afflict Him and put Him to death.” Jesus also mentions in passing the nature of His sufferings here. He says He “must suffer many things, and He must be killed.”

This one event of the cross of Christ is the final revelation of the consequence and character of sin, and the wonder and sacrifice of divine love. Martin Luther says, “There is not a word in the Bible that can be understood apart from the cross.” And Jesus is saying right here that His cross is at the center of the proclamation which His disciples must proclaim, because the cross is at the center of God’s strategy of redemption, His plan of redemption. And so He begins to teach the disciples about it here.

TEXT: Matthew 17:1-13

TITLE: THE TRANSFIGURATION – SUFFERING IS THE PATH TO GLORY

BIG IDEA:

THE TRANSFIGURATION UNCOVERED THE GLORY OF MESSIAH TO PROVIDE A PREVIEW OF THE COMING KINGDOM

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: This is an epiphany story in which the divinity of Jesus breaks through and “manifests” itself, with Matthew highlighting that glory in the details added. Matthew builds on Mark 9:2–8 with a few important differences, such as adding “his face shone like the sun” (v. 2b), “Lord” rather than “rabbi” (v. 4), a “bright” cloud (v. 5), adding vv. 6–7 on the disciples’ terror, and putting the messianic secret command into direct speech (v. 9). There is a slight antithetical structure as the story is framed by ascending and descending the mountain (vv. 1, 9) and by Jesus conversing with Moses and Elijah (v. 4) then alone with the disciples (v. 8), with the climax of the story being God’s voice from the Shekinah cloud (v. 5).

John MacArthur: And as I said, it comes at a marvelously important time, because it comes at a time when they needed balance. They had just heard about suffering. They had learned that Jesus was a suffering Savior, and now they needed to see a glimpse of Him as a glorious King. They had been reminded that His followers would share His sorrows, and they needed also to know that His followers could share His glory as well. They knew that as a suffering Savior, He called them to self-denial cross bearing, and loyal obedience at any price – even their life. They needed also to know that as a King, He offered them a King’s reward. . .

Now, there’s another thought that I would just add as a footnote here. In my understanding of the Old Testament, it was not uncommon for a prophet, when He made a prediction about a far-distant event and said something was going to happen in the distant future - the coming of the Messiah – to also make a prediction about something going to happen in the near future. . .

And so, I think, in a very real sense, Jesus is accrediting Himself as a true and trustworthy prophet by saying, “Yes, I will come in the future, and the last day, and the great second coming. And to prove it, I predict that some of you won’t die until you see Me in My regal majesty.” And when the near event came to pass, they knew He spoke as a trustworthy prophet and could trust Him as well for the future event.

Charles Swindoll: Too much casual familiarity with the things of God can cause us to lose our awe of Him.

Stu Weber: Jesus had just finished a sobering and motivational discussion with his disciples. They were aware of his upcoming suffering and death. They had been made to realize that suffering and pain was also part of their calling as his disciples. They were probably puzzled and disillusioned. Jesus indicated that at least some of them would not experience death before they saw him in his power and kingdom. What did Jesus mean? Matthew 17 is our answer.

Six days after making the statement that some of them would “see” the kingdom, Jesus took his inner group of three disciples—Peter, James, and John—up on a mountain. There they were amazed by what they witnessed. As overwhelmed as they were, what they saw was only a glimpse of the kingdom. The Old Testament saints represented by Moses and Elijah were there. The New Testament saints were represented by the three disciples. And, most significantly, the Son of Man was transfigured in a demonstration of his awesome glory.

One purpose of Jesus' transfiguration (17:1-8) was to give these three disciples an encouraging glimpse of eternal reality. This experience had an unforgettable impact on Peter (2 Pet. 1:16-18) as well as James and John.

S. Lewis Johnson: Commentators have troubled over the statement in chapter 16 verse 28: “Verily I say unto you there are some standing here who shall not taste of death till they seen the Son of man coming in his kingdom.” It’s amusing to read the varying interpretations that have been placed upon this. Some have said the kingdom came in his life. Some have said the kingdom comes in the death of the believer. Some have said the kingdom comes at his resurrection. Some have said the kingdom comes at Pentecost. All of these explanations cannot account for one little word in that 28th verse, which incidentally is included in each of the other two accounts: “There be some standing here.” Some.

You see, the Lord Jesus speaks of the special privilege of some as over against all. All the apostles saw the resurrection. All the apostles were at Pentecost. All the apostles experienced these other things. But there are some standing here, he said. Well now the very next text says that he took Peter, James, and John and went up into the mountain. That seems like such an obvious interpretation that we wonder that men have not hit upon it. The early church fathers believed this. They believed that the transfiguration was an anticipation of the kingdom of God upon the earth, that in the glorification of the Son we have that which anticipates the Messianic kingdom on the earth.

Richard Gardner: The revelation given achieves three things:

- (1) It confirms the uniqueness of Jesus as God’s Son.
- (2) It offers a glimpse of the glory of Jesus’ reign.
- (3) It reiterates the fact that Jesus first must suffer, just as Elijah had to suffer before him.

At each point, this disclosure recalls and builds upon issues raised in chapter 16 (cf. 16:15-16, 21, 27-28).

J. Ligon Duncan: we also learn in this passage that Jesus’ cross and Jesus’ glory cannot be separated. They go together. The way to glory is the way to the cross, and therefore no disciple can enjoy the presence of Christ’s glory apart from grasping it.

I. (:1-3) THE VISION – THE TRANSFIGURATION EVENT – WHAT DID THEY SEE?

R. T. France: Three aspects of the incident contribute to its christological force:

- (1) the visible alteration of Jesus demonstrates that he is more than a merely human teacher;
- (2) his association with Moses and Elijah demonstrates his messianic role;
- (3) the voice from heaven declares his identity as the Son of God.

It is clear that Jesus took them up the mountain in order for them to have this experience, which he intends them to remember for future reference (v. 9). If what happened there provided Jesus himself with reassurance for his coming mission, we are told nothing of this; it is the disciples' christological understanding which is being enhanced, and the discussion as they return down the mountain (vv. 10–13) similarly focuses entirely on their grasp of the eschatological timetable. This is, then, an experience of the disciples rather than (as in 3:16–17) an experience of Jesus. The reflection on it in 2 Peter 1:16–18 will stress the privilege (and therefore the reliability) of the disciples as “eyewitnesses of his majesty” who also heard for themselves the voice from heaven.

A. (:1) The Target Witnesses

“And six days later Jesus took with Him Peter and James and John his brother, and brought them up to a high mountain by themselves.”

Grant Osborne: Though it is possible that the “six days” is nothing more than a temporal note, it is better to see it as reflecting a Sinai motif, reflecting Exod 24:15–16, where the Shekinah cloud covered the mountain for six days and then Moses entered and heard the voice of God speaking. Jesus is the new, glorified Moses. Moreover, he takes his inner core of disciples, as Moses took Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu (Exod 24:1, 9). These three disciples were especially close to Jesus (cf. 26:37; Mark 5:37; 13:3 [with Andrew]).

S. Lewis Johnson: In the quietness of Caesarea Philippi and under the shadow of snow-crested Mount Hermon, Peter's confession, thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God, had signaled the end of the ministry of the Lord Jesus to the crowds. From now on, while it's true that he does speak to the crowds, his ministry has taken a new slant, and he begins to speak about his death that he should accomplish at Jerusalem, and he devotes most of his time to the preparation of the apostles for the days when he would no longer be here in the flesh. . .

What did he pray? Well, of course, we cannot say with dogmatism what he prayed because the Scriptures do not reveal that. But in the light of the fact that he has just announced his passion, I think it's a safe guess to suggest that he was praying in view of the passion, which has now become one of the major themes of his thought and of his teaching. And I think that what we have on the Mount of Transfiguration is the beginning of the prayer life emphasis of our Lord, which will finally reach its climax in Gethsemane when he shall pray, “O my Father, if it be possible let this cup pass from me.” So it is prayer in view of the passion.

John MacArthur: Now, we ask ourselves, at this point, “Why does Jesus do this? Why does He take Peter, James, and John?”

Let me suggest some reasons. First of all, to be witnesses. He needed to have witnesses to see His glory. Now, Deuteronomy 19:15 laid down and established a principle that any testimony was confirmed in the mouth of how many? Two or three witnesses. And so, the Lord, going to display His glory, wants it confirmed in the mouth of three witnesses - trustworthy witnesses.

And so, they are taken to be those three witnesses. Secondly, they're taking because they were the intimates of the Savior. They were the closest to Him. They were around Him the most. And very frequently, perhaps, accompanied Him into intimate times of prayer. . .

And thirdly, I think another reason He took them was because they were acknowledged, trustworthy leaders. They were men of great spiritual report and leadership. And when it came time to articulate what happened, they would be trusted. They would be the most believed. They could convince and influence the rest.

William Barclay: Hermon was fourteen miles from Caesarea Philippi. Hermon is 9,400 feet high, 11,000 feet above the level of the Jordan valley – so high that it can actually be seen from the Dead Sea, at the other end of Palestine, more than 100 miles away.

It cannot have been on the very summit of the mountain that this happened. The mountain is too high for that. . .

It was somewhere on the slopes of the beautiful and stately Mount Hermon that the transfiguration happened. It must have happened in the night. Luke tells us that the disciples were weighed down with sleep (Luke 9:32). It was the next day when Jesus and his disciples came back to the plain to find the father of the epileptic boy waiting for them (Luke 9:37). It was some time in the sunset, or the late evening, or the night, that this amazing vision took place.

B. (:2) The Transformation of Jesus

1. Uncovering of Divine Glory

“And He was transfigured before them;”

Grant Osborne: μεταμορφόω means literally to “transform, change in form” and connotes not just a change externally visible but one that proceeds from inside and changes the whole person. Moses reflected the glory of God in his “radiance” when he descended the mountain (Exod 34:29, 33–35), but here Jesus’ true preincarnate glory shines through his humanity. The disciples were the intended recipients of this glorious event (“in front of them” [ἔμπροσθεν αὐτῶν]).

Charles Swindoll: Although before the Incarnation God the Son existed in resplendence and magnificence “in the form of God,” He “emptied Himself” of that manifestation of heavenly glory. He took “the form of a bond-servant” and appeared “in the likeness of men” such that all those around Him found Him “in appearance as a man.” Though Jesus displayed His authority and power through teaching and miracles, He continued to cloak His visible glory from others throughout His earthly ministry . . . until that day on the mountain. That event proved to Peter, James, and John that during every moment of Jesus’ human life, He was simultaneously fully divine. That truth of the Incarnation would become the backbone of a body of doctrine related to the person and work of Christ.

D. A. Carson: That Jesus was transfigured “before them” implies that it was largely for their sakes. Whatever confirmation the experience may have given Jesus, for the disciples it was revelatory. As they would come to realize, they were being privileged to glimpse something of his preincarnate glory (Jn 1:14; 17:5; Php 2:6–7) and anticipate his coming exaltation (2Pe 1:16–18; Rev 1:16). Their confession of Jesus as Messiah and his insistence that he would be a suffering Messiah (16:13–21; 17:9) were confirmed. Therefore, they had reason to hope that they would yet see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom (16:28). The contrast between what Jesus had just predicted would be his fate (16:21) and this glorious sight would one day prompt Jesus' disciples to marvel at the self-humiliation that brought him to the cross and to glimpse a little of the height to which he had been raised by his vindicating resurrection and ascension.

2. Countenance of Divine Brilliance

“and His face shone like the sun,”

John MacArthur: And this, beloved, is the greatest testimony to Jesus Christ, I think, of any passage in the Bible. If you really want to know who Jesus is, here it is. The glory is radiating from the inside out. You can only understand it if you can understand the some kind of supernaturally infinite light bulb. The light coming within spreads out, and Jesus is aglow like a divine light bulb. And His brilliance is as the sun. The glow right through His garments sends its beams of light. . .

When Jesus came into the world, He is God, but He took that veil of humanity and clothed the glory. But here He gave a glimpse. This is God. Don't let anybody come and tell you Jesus isn't God. The glory came from within. And so, His deity, His majestic kingship, His regal majesty, His royalty as the Son of God the Anointed One of the Father, is seen by the transformation of the Son.

Leon Morris: The shining of the face indicates unusual radiance. It is perhaps curious that his clothing became white as the light, for we do not normally regard light as being white (though we can use the expression “white light”). The meaning appears to be that even Jesus' clothing became splendid in appearance. J. Behm understands this as the “transformation from an earthly form into a supraterrrestrial,” and he explains further, “Before the eyes of His most intimate disciples the human appearance of Jesus was for a moment changed into that of a heavenly being in the transfigured world.”

3. Clothing of Divine Brightness

“and His garments became as white as light.”

David Turner: Perhaps Jesus' s transfiguration is intended to anticipate the eschatological radiance of God's people (cf. Matt. 13:43; Rev. 3:4–5; 7:9; Dan. 12:3; 1 En. 38.4; 104.2; 2 Bar. 51.1–3, 10, 12; 2 Esd. [4 Ezra] 7:97).

John Schultz: The difficulty, as always, is that it is impossible to find the right expressions to describe what heavenly glory is like. Our planet is full of images that foreshadow heaven, but the reality is so much more glorious than the picture. As Ezekiel and John prove to us, everyone who has seen God's glory knows that it is indescribable. When the Apostle Paul was caught up to paradise, he writes that “he heard inexpressible things, things that man is not permitted to tell.”

C. (:3) The Testimony of Moses and Elijah

“And behold, Moses and Elijah appeared to them, talking with Him.”

Grant Osborne: Scholars debate whether Moses and Elijah represent the law and the prophets or whether they appear as the forerunners of the Messiah (Deut 18:18; Mal 4:5–6). Yet surely these are not antithetical but supplemental. They were the two great miracle-working prophets, and the two witnesses of Rev 11:3–6 are modeled after them, where the first two miracles of 11:5–6a (fire from heaven, the drought) replicate Elijah, and the second two of 11:6b (water into blood, plagues) replicate Moses. It is also possible that Moses and Elijah prefigure Jesus' rejection by the nation and vindication by God. Only Luke 9:30–31 gives a hint of the content behind their conversation ("spoke about his departure [exodos]"), but the eschatological flavor is dominant here as well.

John MacArthur: So, Moses gave the law - its great giver. Elijah - its great guardian. And what do they represent? The law and the prophets. And what is the law and the prophets? It's the Old Testament. And why are they there? They are there as the Old Testament saying, "This is the one of whom we spoke." It is the affirmation of the law and the prophets. A tremendous scene. It is Old Testament verification. It is all that Jesus said when He said, "I have come to fulfill the law and the prophets," coming and gathering around Him, standing in His glory and saying, "Yea, it is He." It is the affirmation. . .

So, what is going on here is a tremendous testimony from the Old Testament saying, "This is indeed the King, and He is indeed on schedule, and death is a part of the plan." In spite of what some people have tried to do with the life of Jesus Christ, He didn't die as a well-meaning patriot who got in over His head; He died as the one ordained to die from before the foundation of the world, and His death was as much a part of the plan as His second coming will be. And it's so important for the disciples to know that.

Daniel Doriani: These men represent three things.

- They represent the law and the prophets. Both the law and the prophets predict the coming of the Deliverer.
- Both labored to deliver God's people. Moses led Israel out of Egypt, and Elijah fought to deliver them from the terrible, alien grip of Baal, the god who promised them prosperity. So both foreshadowed the work of Jesus.
- Both had an unusual departure or exodus from this world. Moses died alone with God on a mountain, and God took Elijah to heaven on a chariot of fire.

II. (:4-9) THE VOICE – THE TESTIMONY OF THE FATHER – WHAT DID THEY HEAR?

A. (:4) Clumsy Suggestion of Peter

"And Peter answered and said to Jesus, 'Lord, it is good for us to be here; if You wish, I will make three tabernacles here, one for You, and one for Moses, and one for Elijah.'"

Grant Osborne: Peter begins on a clumsy note, as "good" (καλόν) means "pleasant, profitable, desirable" and fits more a nice stroll in the park than a theophany. . . "three tabernacles" -- this relates to the Feast of Tabernacles, when people built "booths" of branches and straw, then lived in these shelters throughout the seven-day festival. This festival celebrated the Exodus but also had eschatological connotations (Zech 14:16–20). So Peter wants to prolong the event and be part of what he interprets a sign of the last days.

John MacArthur: Now, it's interesting. What was wrong with what Peter said? Was it wrong? No, his heart wasn't wrong, I don't think. But there was something foolish about it, and I guess it was this; he didn't understand two things. One, he didn't understand that this was only a preview, and he had to go back to the valley and go through the suffering, and the hardships, and the cross bearing, and the self-denial, and all that stuff. And the Messiah still had to suffer and die.

And the second thing he didn't understand was you can't put Jesus, Moses, and Elijah in equal places. You see, Luke says that when Peter said this, Moses and Elijah were moving away. Moses and Elijah came in a very temporary fashion, and their purpose was to salute their divine successor, the one who fulfilled the law and the prophets. That was their purpose. And then to leave Him alone in the glory of unchallenged supremacy, and to fade away so that the sole remaining object of the adoration of the disciples and the adoration of the Father was none other than the Lord Jesus Christ in glory. . .

Down in Jerusalem, you see, right at this time, they were likely celebrating the Feast of Tabernacles. What does the Feast of Tabernacles commemorate? Well, it commemorates the wandering in the wilderness. God delivers His people; they wander in the wilderness, and, during that time, they lived in tabernacles. They lived in booths. And then God led them into the Promised Land. It is a memorial to God, preserving His redeemed people. He redeems them, and He preserves them to take them into the land of promise." And so, the Feast of Tabernacles was a very important feast. But Peter wasn't there, and James wasn't there, and John wasn't there, and Jesus wasn't there. And so, it's just very likely that Peter was thinking about the Feast of Tabernacles, and thinking about the Feast of Booths and realizing how important it was to have such a thing. He has that in his mind.

Now, he knew it was something you had to go to; all male Jews were required to go every year to the Feast of Tabernacles, and he wasn't there. And James wasn't there. And John wasn't there. And the Lord wasn't there. And maybe he sort of felt, well, we just really need to have our own Feast of Tabernacles. . .

And there's a final thought. Turn in your Bible to the next to the last book of the Old Testament, the book of Zechariah. Most interesting, Zechariah 14:16, it tells us about the kingdom, when Jesus returns. And, of course, in verse 9, it gives us our point of reference. Zechariah 14:9, "The Lord shall be King over all the earth. In that day there shall be one Lord, and His name one." So, there's the Lord in His kingdom reigning – millennial kingdom, glory kingdom, second coming majesty.

And in the middle of that, verse 16 says, "It comes to pass that everyone that is left of all the nations which came to Jerusalem shall go up from year to year" – and how many years are there in the millennial kingdom? A thousand. So, a thousand times they'll do this. And they go – "to worship the Lord, and to keep the Feast of" – what? – "Tabernacles" – or booths.

At the end of verse 18, it says, "The Lord will smite the nations that don't keep the Feast of the Tabernacles. And there will be punishment of Egypt and punishment of all nations" – verse 19 says – "that come not up to keep the Feast of Tabernacles."

Now listen. There's only one of the Jewish, traditional, week-long feasts that's supposed to be kept in the kingdom, and that's it. That's the only one. The Passover will be remembered. The Communion Table will be remembered, and the Feast of Tabernacles. Why? Because it, too, is a picture of redemption, of the leading out of bondage and into the promise. And so, it will be there, too.

And that just feeds more into Peter, because here Peter thinks he's in the kingdom anyway. Right? And he knows because he knows the Word of God. And believe me; he would know the passage of Zechariah. Here we are in the kingdom, the King in His glory, Moses and Elijah are here. It's the same time of year they were supposed to be having the Feast of the Tabernacles. This has got to be the millennium, because in the millennium, we're supposed to keep this. So, he's going to build the booths to have the feast. Since it's a Feast of Booths, let's get the booths up, and let's commemorate the marvelous deliverance and preservation of God. So, all of this certainly came together in Peter's mind and just sort of made him say, "This has got to be it."

B. (:5) Clarion Approval of the Father

"While he was still speaking, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them; and behold, a voice out of the cloud, saying,

'This is My beloved Son, with whom I am well-pleased; listen to Him!'"

"Clarion" = loud and clear

David Turner: The coming of the voice from the bright cloud is similar to revelations to Israel from clouds in Moses's day (Exod. 34:29–35; 40:34–38; cf. 2 Macc. 2:8; 2 Cor. 3:7–18). The cloud's brightness seems oxymoronic, but it suggests the Shechinah, or visible manifestation of God's glory (Exod. 24:16–17; cf. Ezek. 1:4; 10:4). It also anticipates the accompanying clouds at Jesus's return (Matt. 16:27; 24:30; 26:64).

Craig Blomberg: The heavenly voice repeats verbatim the words of Matt 3:17 from Jesus' baptism. Just as God publicly endorsed Jesus as the royal Messiah and Suffering Servant prior to the beginning of the main stage of his ministry, now at the beginning of the road to the cross he repeats his endorsement even more dramatically, though much less publicly. God's confirmation proves even more crucial because the notion of a suffering Messiah seemed so incongruous. The heavenly voice adds the words, "Listen to him!" Jesus must still be followed and obeyed, even as he heads off to die. The words echo the language of Deut 18:15b on heeding the prophet like Moses who would arise in later days.

Donald Hagner: The present-day church needs once again to discover the absolute authority of the teaching of Jesus. Jesus, as our passage shows, stands in continuity with the revelation of the OT, symbolized by Moses and Elijah, but because of who he is and what he brings (i.e., the kingdom of God, the climax of salvation history), his utterances have a final and incomparable authority. The transfiguration dramatically underlines that fact.

Michael Wilkins: The bright cloud is reminiscent of the way God often appeared in the Old Testament—to Moses on Mount Sinai (Ex. 34:29–35); God's Shekinah glory filling the tabernacle (40:34–35); the cloud guiding the Israelites during their wandering in the desert (13:21–22; 40:36–38); the cloud of the glory of the Lord filling Solomon's temple (1 Kings 8:10–13); and the Branch of the Lord bringing restoration to Jerusalem, as the cloud of the glory of the Lord shelters Zion (Isa. 4:1–6). Jewish literature recognized the cloud of God's glory as the time when the Lord would gather his people and reveal the location of the ark of the covenant (2 Macc. 2:4–8).

C. (:6-8) Cowering Fear of the Disciples

1. (:6) Falling Down on Their Faces

“And when the disciples heard this, they fell on their faces and were much afraid.”

John MacArthur: Why are people so afraid in the presence of God? What scares them so much? Well, you see, God is infinitely holy, and men are hopelessly sinful. And you just, all of a sudden, feel naked, don't you? You feel exposed. Adam and Eve sinned. What's the first thing they said – the Bible says about it? “And they saw that they were” – what? – “naked.” And they made aprons to cover themselves, and they ran off to try to hide, and God comes through the garden and says, “Adam, where are you?”

2. (:7) Comforting Touch of Jesus

“And Jesus came to them and touched them and said, ‘Arise, and do not be afraid.’”

3. (:8) Focusing Eyes on Jesus

“And lifting up their eyes, they saw no one, except Jesus Himself alone.”

D. (:9) Cryptic Prohibition Issued by Jesus

“And as they were coming down from the mountain, Jesus commanded them, saying, ‘Tell the vision to no one until the Son of Man has risen from the dead.’”

Grant Osborne: This is the last of the “messianic secret” passages in Matthew (see 8:4; 9:30; 12:16; 16:20), and it highlights the fact that the true significance of Jesus can only be understood in light of the cross and the resurrection. The transfiguration is at one and the same time a glimpse of his preincarnate glory and a harbinger of the passion events. The two are interdependent. It is like the two sides of his nature—the divine and the human. He is the God-man, and the two aspects cannot be separated from one another. Thus it is impossible for anyone to understand the transfiguration without the cross and the empty tomb.

R. T. France: Jesus had deliberately taken only three of his disciples up the mountain to experience this vision, and now he reinforces that selective intention by telling them not to divulge what they have seen, even to their fellow-disciples. Their natural tendency to talk (and boast?) about their experience must be curbed. But here, unlike in the command to be silent about his Messiahship, there is a time limit. After his death (which is presupposed) and resurrection they may talk about it. This suggests, as we have seen also with regard to 16:20, that the reason for the injunction is primarily to avoid popular misunderstanding, or indeed in this case also misunderstanding by the remaining disciples. As long as his mission of suffering, death and resurrection remains to be accomplished, he does not want people distracted by an account of his heavenly glory which, even if it did not in itself encourage nationalistic hopes of a political Messiah, would be likely to turn their thoughts away from the cross to the glory. After the event, no such distraction would be possible, and Jesus would no longer be there to be a potential political leader. In the light of their Easter experience, and only then, the disciples may be expected to have a clear enough grasp of what it all means to be able to talk responsibly about what they have just seen.

III. (:10-13) THE VISITATION – WHOM WERE THEY EXPECTING?

A. (:10) Confusion of the Disciples Regarding Eschatological Role of Elijah

“And His disciples asked Him, saying, ‘Why then do the scribes say that Elijah must come first?’”

Grant Osborne: In Mal 4:5 Elijah would inaugurate “that great and dreadful day of the LORD,” and in their query the disciples assume this is a divine “must” (δεῖ). The disciples have interpreted the transfiguration as the inauguration of that day and wonder how the Malachi prophecy fits into the equation. Jesus has already told them that the Baptist fulfills the Malachi expectation (11:14), but their question is not “who” but “how” it will come to pass.

Leon Morris: It is interesting that they refer to the teaching of the scribes when they might well have referred to the prophecy of Malachi 4:5 that was the origin of the teaching of the scribes. But since these men were the religious experts, their teaching about important religious matters would be respected by people like the disciples. Their word must indicates a compelling divine necessity; in the view of the learned scribes it was in the divine will that Elijah would precede the Messiah. In view of the prophecy this required no profound insight, but perhaps the disciples want to reinforce their own position by reference to accepted authorities. They do not say who Elijah is to precede, but the prophet speaks of “the great and dreadful day of the Lord” and this is easily understood of the coming of the Messiah. After Peter’s confession narrated in the preceding chapter and now the splendid vision on the mountain, none of them would have had any doubts but that Jesus was the Messiah. But where was Elijah? The scribal interpretation of the prophecy was clearly widely known, but these disciples had not seen a fulfilment. Had Elijah come unnoticed? Were the scribes wrong? They ask Jesus to clear up the point for them.

B. (:11-12) Clarification of Jesus Regarding the Fulfillment of Prophecy

1. (:11) Future Final Fulfillment Still Valid

“And He answered and said, ‘Elijah is coming and will restore all things;’”

David Turner: Jesus’s complex answer has three elements.

- First, he alludes to a yet future coming of Elijah, who will restore all things (17:11; cf. 11:14; 19:28; Acts 1:6; 3:21; Mal. 3:22–23 LXX [4:5–6 Eng.]). It is not completely clear whether Jesus is simply acknowledging the scribal teaching before he corrects it in Matt. 17:12[10] or whether he affirms a past coming of Elijah as John as well as a future glorious coming of Elijah (Gundry 1994:347).
- Second, Jesus reiterates (cf. 11:14) the difficult linkage between John the Baptist and Elijah (17:12a).
- Third, he connects the maltreatment of John with his own coming suffering in Jerusalem (17:12b). The gist of this is that the disciples should focus on John’s past Elijah-like ministry, not the recent appearance of Elijah at Jesus’s transfiguration. If they do this, they will understand that John’s death foreshadowed the death of Jesus.

2. (:12a) Present Partial Fulfillment in Contingency Mode

“but I say to you, that Elijah already came, and they did not recognize him, but did to him whatever they wished.”

John MacArthur: He is not Elijah, but he was one who came in the spirit and power of Elijah. But because they rejected him, he couldn’t be the fulfillment of Malachi’s prophesy; he couldn’t be the Elijah before the kingdom. So, there yet will be another who will come in the spirit and power of Elijah who will be that Elijah fulfilling that prophesy before the coming glorious kingdom. You got it? Some of you look painfully distressed.

The prophet said this, "Elijah will come." What he meant was one in the spirit and power of Elijah. An Elijah-like prophet. If they had received John the Baptist, if they had believed his message, if they had received the Messiah, if the Messiah had set up His kingdom, John the Baptist would have fulfilled that prophecy. He would have been that Elijah-like prophet to restore all things for the kingdom. But when they did to him whatever they desired – and what did they do to him? They cut off his head. They refused him. They didn't allow him to restore.

Then they did – look at verse 12 at the end – "Likewise shall also the Son of Man suffer at their hands." They wiped out the Elijah-like preparer of the Messiah. They killed the Messiah. And so, consequently, they rejected the restoration, and they rejected the kingdom. So, Elijah couldn't then be that – or rather John the Baptist couldn't then be that Elijah to fulfill that.

So, we believe that in the future, before Jesus comes again, another great prophet will come in the spirit and power of Elijah to set things right. And he will restore all things. And they won't do to him what they did to John the Baptist. And they won't miss who he is. And following him will come the King in His royal majesty and glory.

In Matthew 11 it says – John says – listen to this – "All the prophets and the law prophesied until John." Now listen to this. "And if you will receive him, this is Elijah." You see the point? Matthew 11:14. If they had taken John's message and received him and received the Christ, he would have been that Elijah fulfillment. But because they killed him and killed the Messiah, there has yet to come another one like Elijah. John would have been it – the one.

That's why Luke 1:17 says, "He came in the spirit and power of Elijah to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the children to the fathers" - and so forth – "to make ready a people for the Lord." He was to be the fulfillment if they had believed, but they didn't.

Now, what does this mean as far as the deity of Christ? Just this: the Old Testament said that before the Christ comes, there will one like Elijah. One like Elijah did come. Right? And just because the world rejected him doesn't mean he wasn't that fulfilling Elijah.

So, while the Jews would step in and say, "This can't be the Messiah because there's been no Elijah."

Jesus says, "Indeed there was an Elijah, and if you'd listened to him and believed him, he would have fulfilled that Elijah prophecy." That's the fifth and final evidence that Jesus is truly the regal, glorious, Christ of God, the Son, the King. Because there was an Elijah who came before Him. The only reason he couldn't fully fulfill it was because they killed him along with the Messiah. And when He comes again, He will be preceded by another in that same mode.

Michael Wilkins: John the Baptist was a partial fulfillment of Malachi's Elijah prophecy. He came "in the spirit and power of Elijah" (Luke 1:17), but he was not a reincarnated Elijah, as some of the religious leaders may have expected (John 1:19–27). John prepared the way for Jesus Messiah (Matt. 3:1–3), and if the people and religious leadership would have repented fully and accepted Jesus' message of the gospel of the kingdom, John would have been the complete fulfillment of Malachi's prophecy (11:14). But since the people rejected John and he was executed, and will reject Jesus, who will also be executed, another Elijah-type figure will yet have to come in the future (17:11), again preparing the way—but then for the final consummation of the wrathful Day of the Lord prophesied in Malachi.

3. (:12b) Correspondence between the Rejection and Execution of Jesus and of John the Baptist

“So also the Son of Man is going to suffer at their hands.”

C. (:13) Connection Made between Elijah and John the Baptist

“Then the disciples understood that He had spoken to them about John the Baptist.”

John Schultz: We may draw the general conclusion from these verses that the events of that moment were not the final act in world history. As the first coming of Jesus in this world is not the only one, so Elijah’s coming was a multiple event. We read in Revelation that God’s two witnesses, Moses and Elijah, will appear again at the end of time.

S. Lewis Johnson: So we conclude, then, that John is Elijah in the sense that he came in the spirit and power of Elijah, and was a figure to which Israel was responsible to respond. They did not respond. And so Elijah in personal identity shall come again preceding the second advent of the Lord Jesus.

But I want to say this, that contingency in John the Baptist’s coming is a contingency that lies only in the human sphere, not in the divine. God who knows the end from the beginning knew exactly what would happen when John the Baptist came. He knew that Israel would not respond. He knew that the people would not respond to the king himself. He knew that the Son must die. In fact, the Scriptures say he planned it all. It all took place according to his determinate counsel and foreknowledge. So the contingency lies only in the human sphere, not in the divine.

There can never be any offer of a kingdom, incidentally, apart from the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ. The Bible does not teach that there is a kingdom apart from a cross. It doesn’t teach that there is a cross and no kingdom. It proclaims a coming kingdom through the sufferings of the cross and the redemption accomplished thereby. Well now, the disciples, who do not understand yet all that our Lord is saying, understood that he spoke to them about John the Baptist when he spoke about the fact that Elijah is come already and therefore they understood at that point that in some sense Elijah had come then.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why did the disciples need this encouraging preview of the coming glorious messianic kingdom?
- 2) In what sense is the messianic age here already and in what sense is the messianic kingdom still future?
- 3) What impact did the testimony of the Father have on the disciples?
- 4) Was John the Baptist the fulfillment of the promised role of Elijah?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Grant Osborne: The transfiguration is part of a chain of salvation-historical events linked theologically, and it is impossible to restrict it to any one.

1. Exodus imagery predominates here; Jesus fulfills the exodus event, which was the basis for Israel's concept of deliverance/salvation, and instigates a new exodus.
2. Incarnation theology is seen in the preexistence motif in the story (i.e., in the supernatural glory manifest); more than a proleptic promise of glory to come, it is the divine essence that was always there suddenly radiating forth (note Matthew's special stress on the divine radiance).
3. Jesus' baptism is paralleled by the presence and message of the divine voice that inaugurated the first half of Jesus' ministry and now instigates the second half.
4. In Luke the prophets speak to Jesus regarding his passion (exodus, "departure"), and the placement of this with the Caesarea Philippi incident points to the true significance of the suffering Messiah theme.
5. The resurrection and ascension, of course, are part of the passion but should be mentioned separately, for they vindicate the passion; the glory of the transfiguration was the earnest of the exaltation in the resurrection/ascension.
6. The transfiguration also anticipated the glory of the parousia and final kingdom (cf. 16:28); Peter's reminiscence in 2 Pet 1:16–18 also looks to the final glory prefigured here.

David Turner: The amazing transfiguration of Jesus should not be totally unexpected by Matthew's readers. Jesus was born miraculously and his ministry began with the Father's endorsement. Jesus has performed compassionate works and has definitively and authoritatively taught the Torah. He has supernaturally calmed storms and fed thousands of people with a few loaves of bread. He has promised to return in glory, to judge all humankind, and to reign righteously on the earth. After his resurrection he will receive universal authority, and his presence will accompany his disciples as they disciple all nations until the end of the present age (Matt. 28:18–20). Thus, from the standpoint of Matthew as a whole, the transfiguration fits Jesus's status as the Son of God, his fulfillment of biblical patterns and predictions, and his promise of a future kingdom. The transfiguration is an integral part of Matthew's Son of God Christology and his apocalyptic eschatology. It authenticates Jesus's identity and anticipates his future rule over the world. In the transfiguration the disciples glimpse who Jesus is and what he will do. The worthies Moses and Elijah are only supporting actors in the drama of redemption. As the curtain falls, they have exited and Jesus alone stands at the center of the stage. The heavenly voice's "listen to him" prepares the disciples to hear Jesus "teaching them to observe all things I have commanded you."

William Barclay: The minds of the disciples must still have been hurt and bewildered by the insistence of Jesus that he must go to Jerusalem to suffer and to die. It must have looked to them as if there was nothing but black shame ahead. But from start to finish, the whole atmosphere of the Mountain of Trans-figuration is glory. Jesus' face shone like the sun, and his garments glistened and gleamed like the light.

The Jews knew well the promise of God to the victorious righteous: 'Their face is to shine like the sun' (4 Ezra [2 Esdras] 7:97). No Jew could ever have seen that luminous cloud without thinking of the shechinah, the glory of God resting upon his people. . .

Here surely was something which would lift up the hearts of the disciples and enable them to see the glory through the shame; the triumph through the humiliation; the crown beyond the cross. It is obvious that they still did not understand; but it must surely have given them some little glimmering that the cross was not all humiliation, that somehow it was tinged with glory, that somehow glory was the very atmosphere of the exodus to Jerusalem and to death.

Daniel Doriani: When Moses saw God, it changed him. Today, when we behold Jesus, it changes us. Paul says that when we behold "the glory of the Lord" we "are being transformed into the same image" (2 Cor. 3:18 ESV). As we hear God's truth, we see his mind, and we are transformed by the renewal of our mind (Rom. 12:2). Similarly, John says that when Christ returns "we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is" (1 John 3:2). Just as time spent in God's presence changed Moses, so time in the presence of Jesus changes us.

David Thompson: As we come to Matthew 17, we come to one of the most significant moments in the life of Jesus Christ and certainly in the lives of the disciples who witnessed this—Christ's transfiguration. In fact, the Apostle Peter never forgot this episode and actually specifically referred to this event some 35 years later (II Pet. 1:16-18). It is interesting and important to observe that the transfiguration of Jesus Christ is recorded in all of the Gospels but one. This event shows up in Matthew, Mark and Luke, but not John. The question is why? Why doesn't this event show up in John? Well the answer to this question is significant. John is focused on presenting Jesus Christ as Savior of the world that whoever believes on Him shall not perish but have everlasting life. Matthew, Mark, and Luke present Jesus Christ as the King who was prepared to establish a kingdom for Israel and this transfiguration is about Christ being seen as King, who can establish a kingdom on earth.

JESUS CHRIST WAS TRANSFORMED BEFORE THE EYES OF THREE DISCIPLES TO SHOW THAT HE IS THE KING WHO WILL, IN THE FUTURE, ESTABLISH HIS GLORIOUS KINGDOM ON EARTH.

TEXT: Matthew 17:14-21

TITLE: REBUKING THE DISCIPLES FOR THEIR “LITTLE FAITH”– EXORCISM OF THE EPILEPTIC CHILD

BIG IDEA:
DON'T QUIT ON TRUSTING GOD TO PERFORM THE IMPOSSIBLE

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: The disciples have a smattering of understanding (17:13) but a real deficiency of faith (17:20a) and need the presence of Jesus more than ever. In fact, the incredible contrast between Jesus' preincarnate glory (v. 2) and the disciples' unbelief (v. 17a) shows the sad state of affairs. . . this becomes a lesson on the danger of unbelief and the power of faith to accomplish great things.

D. A. Carson: The contrast between the glory of the transfiguration and Jesus' disciples' tawdry unbelief (see v.17) is part of the mounting tension that magnifies Jesus' uniqueness as he moves closer to his passion and resurrection.

Warren Wiersbe: We move from the mountain of glory to the valley of need. The sudden appearance of Jesus and the three disciples startled the multitudes (Mark 9:15). The distraught father had brought his demonized son to the nine disciples, begging them to deliver him, but they could not. The scribes had noticed their failure and were using it as a reason for argument. And while the disciples were defending themselves, and the scribes were accusing them, the demon was all but killing the helpless boy.

When we compare the gospel accounts of this dramatic scene, we discover that this only son was indeed in great trouble and danger. Matthew recorded that the boy was an epileptic (lunatic), very ill, and suicidal, falling into the fire and the water. Mark described him as a mute, who often fell to the ground foaming at the mouth and grinding his teeth. After this display, the boy would go into a kind of rigor mortis. Dr. Luke said that the boy was an only son and that he would scream as he went into these convulsions. While some of these symptoms can have natural causes, this boy was at the mercy of a demon. The disciples had been helpless to do anything. No wonder the father rushed to Jesus' feet.

Our Lord's first response was one of sorrow. As He beheld the embarrassed disciples, the arguing scribes, and the needy father and son, He groaned inwardly and said, "How long shall I be with you and put up with you?" (Luke 9:41 NASB). Their unbelief and spiritual perversity were a burden to Him. What must our Lord feel as he looks at powerless believers today?

John Walvoord: The lessons of this incident are obvious. It is not the greatness of the problem that is the difficulty; it is the lack of faith on the part of believers. How quickly Jesus responded to the simple and sincere cry of the father of the child, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief" (Mk 9:24).

Stanley Saunders: Matthew's portrayal of the disciples in this section of the Gospel is both sobering and hopeful: sobering because of their painful incapacity to discern and fully embrace the power of God, not only at work in Jesus but available to them as well, and hope-filled not because of any innate capacity on the part of the disciples themselves, but because Jesus keeps affirming just how much power is available, even to those with mustard-seed faith. Within this tension we can easily see ourselves.

Stu Weber: True dependence on God's power will give the kingdom citizen all he or she needs to do the kingdom work successfully. The failure of the nine disciples, who had remained below at the foot of the mountain, happened as the glory and authority of Jesus was being revealed on the mountain. In spite of the power available to them (17:2-5; also 10:1, 8) and in spite of the truth about Jesus that they had confessed (16:16), their understanding and faith were still limited.

Daniel Doriani: These then are the marks of the faith that moves mountains.

- First, it progresses, even if slowly.
- Second, it is genuine: it does not trust in past successes or in techniques, but in the Lord himself.
- Third, it engages the whole person, mind and emotions.
- Fourth, it takes action when it is time to act.
- Fifth, it rests in our great God, who can do what seems to be impossible for us when we trust in him.

I. (:14-16) INDICTMENT OF THE DISCIPLES FOR THEIR POWER FAILURE

A power failure is a serious problem. You are counting on that power to perform a certain task reliably and when that power fails, there can be drastic consequences. Here we have a failure on the part of the disciples to exercise faith in the healing power of Jesus to meet the desperate need of this man whose son is plagued by a destructive demon. The disciples could not get the job done.

A. (:14) Persistence of the Pleader

“And when they came to the multitude, a man came up to Him, falling on his knees before Him, and saying,”

William Barclay: We cannot but be moved by the faith of the boy's father. Even though the disciples had been given power to cast out devils (Matthew 10:1), here was a case in which they had very obviously and publicly failed. And yet in spite of the failure of the disciples, the father never doubted the power of Jesus. It is as if he said: “Only let me get at Jesus himself, and my problems will be solved and my need will be met.”

B. (:15) Severity of the Suffering

“Lord, have mercy on my son, for he is a lunatic, and is very ill; for he often falls into the fire, and often into the water.”

Robert Gundry: The two instances of “often” tell how badly the man's son suffers.

William Hendriksen: It was the pity or compassion of the Lord to which the tempest-tossed father appealed. He did not doubt the fact that Jesus was indeed filled with mercy and kindness. That is why he pleaded, “Lord, take pity on my son.” On the other hand, the man's faith in Christ's power needed strengthening (Mark 9:22-24).

Charles Swindoll: The symptoms were complex:

- He was mute but able to scream (Mark 9:17; Luke 9:39).
- He was being slammed to the ground and would become stiff (Mark 9:18; Luke 9:42).
- He would foam at the mouth and grind his teeth (Mark 9:18, 20; Luke 9:39).
- He would convulse and roll on the ground (Mark 9:20; Luke 9:39, 42).
- He was being thrown into fire and water (Matt. 17:15; Mark 9:22).
- He was being physically injured after each attack (Luke 9:39).

I can't imagine how much that boy's family suffered! Somehow, the father had learned that Jesus of Nazareth was in town and that He had a reputation for working miracles.

J. Ligon Duncan: In Mark, chapter 9, verse 25, we're told that this young man was also unable to speak, and he was unable to hear. So in addition to being grievously vexed with this malady of epilepsy, he was deaf and dumb, and then, of course, Matthew and Mark make it very clear that this child is demon-possessed. Three maladies vex this boy. The exact relation between his demon-possession and the other diseases is not specified. Was Satan given the power to bring about these physical symptoms, or did Satan take opportunity with these biblical symptoms to afflict this boy? We are not told in full, but Satan's hand is in it, the supernatural is in it. But, also, this child is afflicted physically.

C. (:16) Failure of the Faith Healers

"And I brought him to Your disciples, and they could not cure him."

II. (:17) INDICTMENT OF THE DISCIPLES FOR THEIR LACK OF FAITH

A. Frustration of Jesus with His Disciples

"And Jesus answered and said, 'O unbelieving and perverted generation,'"

Grant Osborne: It is debated whether the "depraved generation" is mainly the crowds (seen in the second person plurals and in "generation" [γενεά], referring to the continued rejection by the crowds) or the disciples, the nearest antecedent and the focus of this pericope. However, it is best to see this as a both-and situation, since both groups are in the immediate context. In their failure, the disciples have joined the rest of the Jewish people in their unbelief and perversity. . .

The two-part rebuke centers first on his continual presence with them ("I will be" [ἔσομαι]) and then on his endurance of them ("I will put up with" [ἀνέξομαι]). Implicit in both is his imminent departure from this earthly sphere. Jesus' followers do not have long to get their act together! In light of this persistent failure, Jesus takes the matter in his own hands and commands that the boy be brought to him.

Stu Weber: Jesus' harsh rebuke was directed toward the disciples. It was not surprising to hear him call them unbelieving, for he had already confronted their lack of faith many times. But for Jesus to address the disciples as part of an unbelieving and perverted generation was to lump them together with obstinate Israel and its hypocritical leaders (cf. 11:16; 12:39; 16:4).

R. T. France: The key, as has been so often stated in previous accounts of miracles, lies in faith (8:10, 13, 26; 9:2, 22, 28–29; 14:31; 15:28), but in this case the faith that is missing is not that of the one seeking help but that of the would-be miracle-workers themselves. The sovereign authority of Jesus the Messiah in healing and exorcism is unique; his disciples can draw on it only by faith, and that is what in this case they have failed to do. . .

The frustration Jesus expresses here stands out as unusual in this gospel just as does his exultation in God's revelation in 11:25–26; the two outbursts express the opposite poles of his paradoxical mission. It has added force at this point in the narrative just as Jesus and the three other disciples are returning from their "mountain-top experience," and it is possible that the echo of Moses' complaint reflects the recent meeting with Moses and Elijah, each of whom equally found the people of their day extremely trying (see e.g. Exod 17:4; 1 Kgs 19:10). Jesus has accepted that he will be rejected by the official leadership of Israel (16:21), but to find himself let down even by his own disciples evokes a rare moment of human emotion on the part of the Son of God. Cf. the "How long?" laments of the psalms (Ps 4:2; 13:1–2 etc.) and prophets (Jer 4:14, 21; 12:4 etc.).

Robert Gundry: Unbelief amounts to a perversion of discipleship. "O" lends gravity to Jesus' exasperated questions. "How long shall I be with you?" alludes to Jesus as "God with us" (1:23). In 28:20 he'll answer his own question of how long: "And behold, I am with you all the days till the consummation of the age." The command to bring the son to Jesus shows Jesus' determination to expose the baselessness of unbelief.

B. Lament of Jesus over the Dullness of His Disciples

"how long shall I be with you? How long shall I put up with you?"

C. Compassion of Jesus for the Suffering

"Bring him here to Me."

III. (:18) GOD SPECIALIZES IN DOING THE IMPOSSIBLE

A. Rebuking the Demon = Successful Spiritual Exorcism

"And Jesus rebuked him, and the demon came out of him,"

J. Ligon Duncan: And then, Jesus displays His power. He demands the demon to leave with a sharp rebuke, and that displays His love and His concern, His compassion in this time of need and malady and sickness and supernatural possession. But it also displays His power, and we see in this passage the connection between unbelief and perversity. It is hardened unbelief that has led the scribes to become so perverse as to take delight in seeing ministers not be able to minister to the people that they are attempting to minister unto. Only perversity can look at this situation and feel that way. And yet, these religious leaders felt that way. Why? Because of unbelief. Hardened unbelief is now keeping them from having normal human compassion.

B. Restoring the Boy to Full Health = Instant Physical Cure

"and the boy was cured at once."

Donald Hagner: This verse is remarkable for its directness and the conciseness of its three main clauses, each with a different subject: ὁ Ἰησοῦς, "Jesus," τὸ δαιμόνιον, "the demon," and ὁ παῖς, "the child."

IV. (:19-21) LESSON OF THE MUSTARD SEED = KEEP TRUSTING . . . KEEP PRAYING . . . EXPECT GOD TO DO THE IMPOSSIBLE

A. (:19) Defeated Disciples Look to Jesus for Answers

“Then the disciples came to Jesus privately and said, ‘Why could we not cast it out?’”

Daniel Doriani: The father viewed Jesus’ disciples as his representatives. In the absence of the master, trained deputies should be able to perform the master’s work. Indeed, in the past Jesus had empowered the disciples to heal disease and cast out demons and they had succeeded (Matt. 10:8; Luke 9:6; 10:17). The father asked the disciples to heal his boy. They tried and failed. The demon who stood behind the disease had resisted.

This failure is puzzling since Jesus had bestowed the power to exorcise demons, and the disciples had already exercised it. A little later, the disciples raised this very issue: “Why couldn’t we drive it out?” (Matt. 17:19). Jesus replied, “Because you have so little faith” (17:20). The disciples’ surprise at their failure suggests that they assumed they could solve this problem. Why? Because they began to trust in themselves, in their gifts, their skills, rather than trusting the Lord. They apparently thought they had the gifts, the training, and the experience to make this work.

R. T. France: Perhaps they had become over-confident in the authority Jesus had given them, so that they assumed they could carry out an exorcism as a matter of course; the added comment in Mark 9:29 that “this kind will not come out except through prayer [and fasting]” implies that they had not prayed for God’s power over the demon. Or perhaps the problem was the opposite, that in the absence of Jesus and the leading disciples up the mountain the remaining disciples did not have the faith to draw on God’s power for themselves, despite Jesus’ authorization, and so their attempt had lacked conviction. At any rate the “little faith” with which Jesus has several times charged his disciples (6:30; 8:26; 14:31; 16:8) has now proved to have serious consequences. For another failed attempt at exorcism see Acts 19:13–17.

William Hendriksen: They had not sufficiently taken to heart the comfort they should have derived from the assurances which their Lord had given them (7:7-10; 10:8), and had not persisted in prayer. When the demon did not immediately leave they should not have stopped praying. . . A mustard seed, though at first very small, yet, because of its uninterrupted and vital contact with its nourishing environment, grows and grows until it becomes a tree so tall that the birds of the air come and lodge in its branches. Accordingly, “faith as a mustard seed” is the kind of trust in God which does not immediately give up in despair when its efforts do not meet with immediate success. It maintains its uninterrupted and vital contact with God and therefore continues to pray fervently, knowing that God at his own time and in his own way will bestow the blessing. Such faith links its possessor with the inexhaustible and infinite resources of God’s power, wisdom and love. It operates in harmony with God’s revelation in his Word. Consequently, its prayers are not motivated by sinful desires, and it does not tempt God. It is therefore able to remove mountains.

B. (:20-21) Lesson of the Mustard Seed: When Faith Is Little, It Must Grow and Persevere to See God Accomplish the Impossible

1. (:20a) Their Faith Was Little

“And He said to them, ‘Because of the littleness of your faith;’”

Grant Osborne: The disciples have frequently been chided for their “little faith” (6:30; 8:26; 14:31; 16:8). In those passages we decided this does not refer to total disbelief but rather to a vacillating, struggling faith. Moreover, “faith” does not simply mean certitude that God will grant the request but rather a total dependence on the God who watches after his children. That is the case here. They likely believed their newfound power over illness and the demonic realm gave them status, and they may have been showing off rather than centering on the God who alone has true power. Such self-centeredness guarantees failure.

Charles Swindoll: Jesus was undoubtedly using hyperbole to drive home His point of the importance and power of faith. He used one of the smallest things in the world—a mustard seed—to condemn the relatively tiny faith of the disciples. If such small faith had the potential to move Mount Hermon—the biggest thing on the horizon—then the disciples’ faith must have been microscopic! Far from comforting, this scolding would have discouraged and shamed the disciples even more.

D. A. Carson: In Mark, Jesus tells them that this case requires prayer—not a form or an approved rite, but an entire life bathed in prayer and its concomitant faith. In Matthew, Jesus tells his disciples that what they need is not giant faith (tiny faith will do) but true faith—faith that, out of a deep, personal trust, expects God to work.

2. (:20b) Their Faith Needed to Grow and Persevere as a Mustard Seed

“for truly I say to you, if you have faith as a mustard seed, you shall say to this mountain, ‘Move from here to there,’ and it shall move; and nothing shall be impossible to you.”

Warren Wiersbe: “Faith as a grain of mustard seed” suggests not only size (God will honor even a little faith), but also life and growth. Faith like a mustard seed is living faith that is nurtured and caused to grow. Faith must be cultivated so that it grows and does even greater exploits for God (1 Thess. 3:10; 2 Thess. 1:3). Had the nine disciples been praying, disciplining themselves, and meditating on the Word, they would have been able to cast out the demon and rescue the boy.

Stu Weber: Many people misinterpret the promise, “nothing will be impossible for you,” and similar statements in the New Testament (e.g., John 14:13-14). This is not a blanket coverage of any desire we might express to God in prayer. Biblical faith taps into God's power and authority, but it can be exercised only in accordance with God's will (cf. 1 John 5:14). Biblical faith assumes not only a belief in God's power, but also a heart after God's own heart, which desires and asks for the things of God—not personal “wants.” This is an important caution in light of the erroneous “name it and claim it” theology we hear so often today.

Leon Morris: He is saying that there are infinite resources open to the believer, and he is calling on those who follow him to exercise the faith they have.

Craig Blomberg: Much is not accomplished for the kingdom because we simply do not believe God will adequately empower us or else because we undertake various activities in our own strength rather than God's.

Robert Gundry: The great depth of the bases of the mountains made the mountains a natural symbol of stability. In this conceptual framework you could hardly think of a more hyperbolic figure of power than that of moving a mountain. “If you have faith like a grain of mustard” indicates what could be. “It will move away; and nothing will be impossible for you” indicates what would be if the “could” turned into an actuality. “Amen I tell you” adds assurance. And the introductory “For” makes the whole statement an explanation of “Because of the littleness of your faith.”

We tend to gloss over the truth that our God can do the impossible:

*Got any rivers you think are uncrossable?
Got any mountains you can't tunnel through?
God specializes in things thought impossible
He can do just what no other can do.*

*He is able to deliver thee,
He is able to deliver thee;
Though by sin oppressed, go to Him for rest;
“Our God is able to deliver thee.”*

3. (:21) [Verse omitted from best manuscripts]
[“But this kind does not go out except by prayer and fasting.”]

D. A. Carson: [This verse is] omitted by a powerful combination of witnesses. It is obviously an assimilation to the synoptic parallel in Mark 9:29. There is no obvious reason why, if original, it should have been omitted.

R.V.G. Tasker: These last words, which constitute verse 21 in AV, should almost certainly be omitted from the text of Matthew (as in RV and RSV) on the authority of Codex Sinaiticus, Codex Vaticanus, and the ancient Syriac and Egyptian versions. They would seem to have been imported from Mark ix. 29 in the interest of harmonization.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) In what specific areas have you given up praying and trusting God to perform for you what seems to be impossible?
- 2) Why did the disciples fail to perform this healing?
- 3) What caused Jesus the greatest frustration with His disciples?
- 4) How can Jesus both criticize the disciples for having “little faith” and then commend to them the analogy of the mustard seed to show the potential power of such little faith?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Michael Wilkins: Faith is either existent or nonexistent, but it can also either function effectively or be defective. Jesus says that even the littlest faith (like a mustard seed, the smallest of seeds) can move a mountain. It is not the amount of faith that is in question, but rather the focus of faith. Faith is not a particular substance, so that the more we have of it the more we can accomplish. Rather, faith is confidence that God will do through us what he calls us to do—“taking God at his word.” Jesus’ point is that anyone with any amount of faith can do the most unthinkable things if that is what God has called him or her to do. Therefore, we should not place confidence in what we have, but rather have confidence that if God calls us to do something, we can do it in his strength, even the most absurdly impossible sounding things from the world’s point of view.

David Turner: The issue here is not the intensity or amount of faith but the extent of their ability to perceive the object of faith. The power of faith is in the person to whom it is directed. Jesus’s disciples were unable to heal the epileptic boy because they had taken their eyes off Jesus and looked at the obstacles, just as Peter did during the storm when he began to sink (14:30). Faith is not believing that God will do whatever disciples demand but whatever is best for them. God will not perform the disciples’ selfish bidding but will empower them to extend his kingdom through word and deed.

Richard Gardner: The story in which this dilemma is portrayed once again comes from Mark (cf. Mark 9:14-29). Matthew, in typical fashion, greatly abridges Mark’s account. Among the items omitted are the vivid description and illustration of the child’s condition, the reference to an argument between the scribes and the disciples, and a classic dialogue on faith between Jesus and the child’s father. In the process of condensation, the story acquires a new form and focus. No longer is it primarily a miracle story, concentrating on the plight of the boy and his father. Instead, the emphasis falls on the plight of the disciples and their need for greater faith. And the text that results can be described as a piece of instruction for disciples (cf. the conversation in vv. 19-20). . .

The scene in the text depicts the world which faith must inhabit and challenge, a world where crowds clamor, where skepticism reigns, and where deliverance is needed. How do we fare in that kind of world? According to one writer, the text warns us that “the church is always in danger of reverting to the unbelieving mentality of a secular-minded generation” (Sand: 360). The text also contains a word of promise, however: If we dare to trust God in the midst of unbelief, we will find the power needed to act in Jesus’ name.

S. Lewis Johnson: I tend to look at the disciples as illustrative of the power of the church. We often think when we think about a church, well now, we’ll judge a church by its ministry, by the men who minister the word of God – It’s a great church if it has a great preacher. It’s not necessarily a great church at all. As a matter of fact, we shouldn’t ever estimate the power of a church by its ministers. We shouldn’t estimate the power of a church by the ordinance that it observes. We shouldn’t estimate the power of a church by its members. The power of a church is ultimately dependent upon the Lord Jesus and Holy Spirit. We estimate the power of a church by the degree to which that church is under the control of the Holy Spirit and the Son of God who is the head of the church.

John MacArthur: The Power of Faith

You have throughout holy Scripture the testimony to the life of faith, to the power of faith.

Now, in our text – and we can look at our text more closely now – Jesus makes one of the great statements in all of the Bible relative to faith when He says that faith moves mountains, and that it makes nothing impossible. The point of the whole passage, in many ways, is a summary of the whole testimony of the people of God through all of history: that God moves powerfully when we believe. The power of faith. . .

Four key elements in this narrative text.

I. The pleading of the father.

The father is in deep agony. He is pleading for his son.

II. The powerlessness of the followers.

III. The perversion of the faithless in verse 17.

IV. The power of faith.

It's now teaching time, folks. And we're going to find out what all this is meant to teach. I mean if we just stop here and go home, we really wouldn't know.

You know, if they had one problem, what was it? Little faith. Have you heard that before? "O ye of" – what? – "little faith." Remember I told you that was the subtitle for the disciples? The O Ye of Little Faith Association. They always were indicted for that. Four times Jesus says to them, "O ye of little faith."

- 1) Matt. 6:30 – Anxiety regarding provision of clothing and necessities of life
- 2) Matt. 8:26 – Scared in the boat caught in the storm at sea
- 3) Matt. 14:31 – Peter walking on water and then falling
- 4) Matt. 16:8 – No bread to feed the multitudes

Little faith is the kind of faith that believes in God when you have something in your hand. Got it? "Oh, yes, I believe God. Oh, yes, the Lord provides; here it is, and I'm hanging onto it." That's little faith. But little faith can't believe God when it doesn't have in hand its resource. That's little faith.

Great faith says, "I believe God without anything in my hand. I believe God in the middle of the storm. I believe God though the wind is howling. I believe God though there's nothing on the cupboard. I believe God though I don't have any clothing. I believe God." That's great faith.

Little faith, most of us are really good at little faith. We believe God because we can see what He's done; it's right here.

Now, in all these four incidents of little faith, the Lord was present. Right? In each time He took care of it, provided for them, gave them what they needed, met their need, took them at the point of their little faith and did what they couldn't do. But this time, He was away. And they couldn't do it, and He wasn't there. And this is a new test for them, you see? Oh, this is a brand new test for them. Usually He was with them, and when they couldn't do it, or when they couldn't believe, He'd step right in and take over. But now He left them on their own, and He's giving them a sample – listen – of the way it is going to be pretty soon when He's gone. And the way it is for you and me.

He's starting to cut the cord, see? He's starting to turn them loose, to leave them on their own. And now watch. As He begins to let them go on their own, He starts to teach them a profound lesson. That everything you want, everything you need isn't necessarily going to come the first time you ask God. Did you get that? Did you get that? That's the lesson. . .

Now, the Lord was available to these nine disciples, but He was testing, "How long will you persist in prayer?" This is a marvelously comforting truth, beloved. Listen to it. Even these apostles, with their apostolic uniqueness and their gifts of miraculous healing, casting out of demons, were dependent on the prayer of faith to see the power work. And though we do not have apostolic gifts in terms of miracles and healing, we are too dependent on the power of faith.

You go to the Lord with a problem two or three times, nothing happens. You give up. Other people say, "You know, I've been praying for so-and-so to come to the Lord for two months." Two months? The test is how long are you going to stay there? And let God strengthen your faith.

You see – follow now in the text and look what happens, verse 20, "You couldn't do this because of your little faith." And then He says, "If you" – and He says it seriously – "Verily I say unto you, if you have faith as a grain of mustard seed, you could say to a mountain, 'Move,' and the mountain would move."

And, you know, you read that, and you say, "Now, wait a minute. You just said we had little faith, and now you tell us if we had faith as little as a grain of mustard seed, and that's the littlest seed that was known in that part of the world. What are you saying? You just said we had little faith, and that's why we couldn't do it. Now you tell us if we had a little faith we could do it."

No, most people misinterpret that mustard seed. The principle of the mustard seed is not that it's little, no. The principle of the mustard seed is that it is little, and it does what? It grows. Do you remember that principle? It's in Matthew 13. Sure, you remember it, verse 31, "Another parable He put forth unto them, saying, 'The kingdom of heaven is like a grain of mustard seed, which a man took and sowed in his field, which indeed is the least of all seeds. But when it is grown, it is the greatest among herbs and becomes a tree so the birds of air come and lodge in the branches of it.'" And what you've got in the mustard seed is something that starts very, very small and grows very large.

Now, what is our Lord saying? Watch, "If you had the faith that is illustrated in a mustard seed, you would start out small, but your faith would" – do what? – "it would grow and increase." And that's an indictment portfolio them. They started out with a little bit of faith, and they just bailed out.

Beloved, I believe there are many things that God desires for you to experience in your life that God desires to accomplish in your life that are available to you through the exercise of His divine power. But that power will never be tapped until you have the faith that starts small, and when it meets with resistance, and when you don't see it happen, the faith doesn't die small; it gets larger and larger and larger. And you continue persistently in prayer. (cf. Luke 11:5ff; Luke 18)

What the disciples should have done, when they didn't heal the man in the first, second, or third time was to keep on praying, and keep on trusting, and keep on believing God till their persistent prayer broke through and reached its point where God wanted them to learn, and then God would have responded. It isn't that they had to batter down heaven to get his attention; it is that God knew exactly what he was going to do, but He withheld it in order that they might continue to stretch their faith. It's a great lesson.

The principle is clear. The disciples couldn't heal, even though they had a promise. They couldn't heal even though they had available power, because they weren't persistent in prayer. And the lesson for us is, beloved, God is giving us promises. Oh, my. Promise for wisdom; promise to meet all our needs; promise for comfort, peace, joy, virtue, strength, safety, protection, deliverance, fruit. The promise of guidance, promise of forgiveness, promise of freedom, promises, promises. And He's given us power in the Spirit of God. And yet, very often we don't experience the fulfillment of the promise in God's power because we don't know the persistence of prayer that keeps on praying until God responds.

TEXT: Matthew 17:22-23

TITLE: JESUS'S SECOND PROPHECY OF HIS PASSION AND RESURRECTION

BIG IDEA:

REPEATING THE PROPHECY OF HIS CENTRAL MISSION STILL DOES NOT COMPUTE WITH JESUS' SAD DISCIPLES

INTRODUCTION:

Charles Swindoll: Jesus and His disciples were inseparable. This became all the more obvious as Jesus entered the final six months of His public ministry. As the Cross loomed larger on the horizon, He spent less time with the multitudes and more time with those who were dedicated to following Him —the men and women who were His faithful disciples —and especially with the Twelve who had received the special calling, and even more particularly, with the three who had been privy to certain astonishing miracles.

However, what He often wanted to talk to them about was not what they wanted to hear. As conflict with critics intensified and the disciples could sense increasing unrest among the crowds, they likely envisioned an ultimate showdown between the hypocritical teachers and crooked rulers on one side and the Son of God in the flesh and His wonder-working disciples on the other. Yet Jesus kept on talking about His arrest, suffering, and death. The last thing the disciples wanted to think about was His dying and leaving them to carry on without Him. In their minds, that scenario didn't make any sense.

Biblical Illustrator: In rapid succession the Saviour brings before His disciples the great facts in His history as the Mediator-facts which have the most direct bearing on man's redemption and spiritual recovery. His complete knowledge of His future, and the calm magnanimity with which He talked about these stupendous events, demonstrate Him to be superhuman.

Bethany Bible Church: Our Lord stressed the same basic details that we find in this morning's passage over and over to His disciples during the final portion of His earthly ministry—that He was going to be delivered into the hands of men, that they would kill Him, and that He would then be raised from the dead.

And I'm suggesting, dear brothers and sisters, that there is tremendous significance to the repetition. Jesus clearly shows us that this was a story that is worth repeating over and over.

1. IT'S A STORY THAT IS FOUNDATIONAL TO SAVING FAITH.
2. IT'S A STORY THAT REVEALS THE DEPTHS OF DIVINE LOVE.
3. IT'S A STORY THAT AFFIRMS HOPE IN THE FACE OF LOSS.
4. IT'S A STORY THAT MUST BE PERSONALIZED TO BE GRASPED.

The story of who Jesus is and what He has done—the very story He expressed in our passage this morning—is a story that must be personalized to us before it can be grasped by us and declared by us. It must first be known by us 'experientially'—through a personal relationship with the resurrected Jesus Christ by faith—before it can be the story that leads to our salvation.

<https://bethanybible.org/archive/2007/090207.htm>

Coffman: From Mark, it is known that Christ at that time had returned to Galilee and was in retirement there, using every possible means to instruct and prepare the apostles for the awful events looming so near in the future. The fact that they were "exceeding sorry" shows what enormous difficulty attended this revelation for them. It was, in fact, incomprehensible; and most of the things Christ taught them on that subject were to remain unrealized by them until after the events. Looming nearer and nearer were the dark scenes of Calvary, blotting out their view of the oft-repeated promises of his resurrection. The ability of finite men to understand so gargantuan a fact as God in Christ dying for the sins of the whole world was strained to the breaking point. Never was there a better example of the weakness of the flesh (all flesh) than in the shocked and perplexed attitude of the Twelve. They had been given all the facts, but full realization would come afterwards.

(:22A) PROLOGUE – OCCASION FOR THE SECOND PASSION PROPHECY

“And while they were gathering together in Galilee, Jesus said to them,”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Jesus was back in Galilee when He gave this second of four notices of His upcoming death (but see 17:12). The first announcement had been in Caesarea Philippi (16:21). Others would follow (20:18-19; 26:2). Mark 9:30-31 says that Jesus and His disciples were alone because Jesus was teaching them.

Robert Gundry: The disciples are assembling in Galilee for a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, where they’ll celebrate the Passover festival. The pilgrimage will start soon (see 19:1). To prepare the disciples for what will happen to him in Jerusalem, Jesus predicts again his passion and resurrection there. This second such prediction fulfills the implication in 16:21: “From then on Jesus began showing his disciples”

Charles Swindoll: Having spent over a week in the region of Caesarea Philippi in the shadows of Mount Hermon, Jesus and the disciples again made their way back to Galilee. In that familiar territory and with familiar faces in the crowds—both friends and foes—they no doubt began to feel the increasing tension of scowling critics and scoffing skeptics. In this atmosphere, Jesus spoke directly concerning His coming passion.

I. (:22b) BETRAYAL – APPLICATION: AM I LOYAL TO THE LORD JESUS?

“The Son of Man is going to be delivered into the hands of men;”

Robert Gundry: “Is going to be given over” connotes certainty. “To be given over” predicts for the first time Judas Iscariot’s giving Jesus over to the Jewish authorities (20:18; 26:15–16) and their giving him over to Pilate and the Gentiles (20:19; 27:2, 18 [compare 26:45]). “Into the hands of men” connotes an exercise of power over Jesus (compare Genesis 31:29: “It’s in the power of my hand”; see also 2 Samuel 24:14 for the connotation of violent treatment).

Charles Swindoll: The Greek word translated “delivered” is paradidōmi [3860], which means to “hand over, turn over, give up a person.” Had the disciples put some thought into the statement at the time, immediately the question would have come up —“By whom is the Son of Man going to be handed over?” Clearly, He would be handed over to those who would torture and kill Him, but who would betray Him in such a way? Perhaps they would have recognized that Jesus was revealing for the first time an “inside job,” in which one of their own would betray Him.

But they didn’t think that deeply. In fact, it doesn’t seem that they paid attention to anything but “they will kill Him” (17:23). Their response seemed to dwell strictly on the fact of Jesus’ death, because “they were deeply grieved.” Often when strong emotions overtake us, it’s hard to hear correctly or to think clearly. The disciples didn’t ask about the treachery involved in His arrest, or the miracle involved in His being “raised on the third day.”

Gill: [quoting Jewish canon law] "It is forbidden to betray an Israelite into the hands of the Gentiles, whether in his body or in his substance; and though he may be a wicked man, and a ringleader in sin, and though he may have oppressed and afflicted him; and everyone that betrays an Israelite into the hands of the Gentiles, whether in his body, or in his substance, has no part in the world to come."

Leon Morris: He began with the Son of man, his normal way of referring to himself in the fulfilment of his messianic vocation. The Son of man, then, will be delivered, where will be is not the simple future but the compound used in verse 12, which is often used to denote “an action that necessarily follows a divine decree is destined, must, will certainly.” The passive is often taken as “the divine passive,” signifying that it is really God who delivers him up, a truth that Paul brings out (Rom. 8:32). This delivering up will be into the hands of men, where the verb perhaps is used in the more or less technical sense of handing over to the courts. The arresting officers are not defined and the whole prediction is left very general. But it is plain enough that Jesus says that he will be given over into the power of those who are no more than men (and evil men at that!).

John Schultz: We wonder how Judas felt, hearing this. Jesus’ mention of betrayal constituted a warning to him. It is likely that, at this point, Judas did not know yet that he would betray Jesus.

Donald Hagner: A divine handing over of Jesus is reminiscent of the δεῖ, “it is necessary,” in 16:21. The verb reminds the reader that the disciples have been warned of a day when they will be “handed over” (cf. 10:17–22; 24:9–10).

Walter Wilson: The apposition of ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου and εἰς χεῖρας ἀνθρώπων creates a wordplay, one that enshrines a tragic paradox. Humanity is about to betray and kill its own “son,” essentially becoming its own enemy.

Matthew Henry: He tells them that he should be betrayed into the hands of men. Men to whom he was allied by nature, and from whom therefore he might expect pity and tenderness; these are his persecutors and murderers.

II. (:23a) EXECUTION –

APPLICATION: DO I APPRECIATE THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE SUBSTITUTIONARY DEATH OF JESUS CHRIST FOR MY SINS?

“and they will kill Him,”

Donald Hagner: The verb ἀποκτενοῦσιν, “will kill,” is also used in the first passion prediction (16:21; only in the third prediction is σταυροῦν, “crucify,” used).

Matthew Henry: If he is a Sacrifice of atonement, he must be killed; without blood no remission.

Louis A. Barbieri Jr.: One could never say that death took Jesus by surprise. He was in control of His life and no one took it from Him (John 10:11, 15, 17-18).

III. (:23b) RESURRECTION –

APPLICATION: AM I LIVING NOW IN THE POWER OF THE RESURRECTION OF JESUS CHRIST?

“and He will be raised on the third day.”

Richard Gardner: Ultimately, it is God who both delivers Jesus to death and raises Jesus from death (cf. Rom. 4:25).

Gill: it is observable, that when Christ speaks of his rising again, he makes mention of the exact time, the third day, on which he should rise, according to the types and prophecies of the Old Testament.

William Hendriksen: They understood neither the necessity and certainty of the passion nor the announcement of the resurrection on the third day, Cf. Mark 9:32a: “But they did not understand the saying.”

(:23c) EPILOGUE – REACTION OF THE DISCIPLES

“And they were deeply grieved.”

Matthew Henry: In this appeared their love for their Master’s person, but with all their ignorance and misunderstanding concerning his undertaking.

Jeffrey Crabtree: The disciples reacted with much sadness (cf. 26:22). They were very sad (Greek lupeō sphodra). (See this same expression in 26:22.) Though they had many questions they were afraid to ask for an explanation (Mk. 9:32; Lk. 9:45).

David Turner: Another new feature is the mention of the disciples’ deep grief, which anticipates their grief at the Last Supper and Jesus’s grief at Gethsemane (26:22, 37). They are finally accepting the stark reality of the impending events in Jerusalem, and they do not seek to dissuade Jesus as Peter did in 16:22. But this deep grief implies that they have not yet grasped the full significance of Jesus’s resurrection (Hill 1972: 271).

Charles Swindoll: Luke’s Gospel fills in a little more detail about the disciples’ state of mind: “They did not understand this statement, and it was concealed from them so that they would not perceive it; and they were afraid to ask Him about this statement” (Luke 9:45). Jesus didn’t dwell on the subject. He had said all He wanted to say at that moment. He was planting seeds for later, allowing the words to sink in.

R. T. France: The fact that their dismay follows immediately upon the prediction of Jesus' resurrection underlines the point we noted above (especially on 16:21), that the repeated inclusion of the resurrection as the conclusion of Jesus' destiny in Jerusalem seems to have gone completely over the disciples' heads; the prediction of his rejection, suffering and death so dominated their thinking that they could not see beyond the death to the vindication and glory.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What additional details or points of emphasis do you see in this second passion prophecy?
- 2) Why the need for so much repetition . . . and still the disciples can't comprehend fully?
- 3) How are the necessity of this path of suffering and death and the divine orchestration of these dramatic events taught in this passage?
- 4) Do you find it remarkable that Jesus could be focusing on preparing the understanding and the emotions of His disciples at such a time when His own agony was drawing near?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Charles Swindoll: As the end of His earthly ministry approached, Jesus predicted His own suffering, death, and resurrection more frequently. In the following list, note the increasing clarity of His statements:

- “He who does not take his cross and follow after Me is not worthy of Me.” (10:38)
- “From that time Jesus began to show His disciples that He must go to Jerusalem, and suffer many things from the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised up on the third day.” (16:21)
- “Then Jesus said to His disciples, ‘If anyone wishes to come after Me, he must deny himself, and take up his cross and follow Me.’” (16:24)
- “But I say to you that Elijah already came, and they did not recognize him, but did to him whatever they wished. So also the Son of Man is going to suffer at their hands.” (17:12)
- “And while they were gathering together in Galilee, Jesus said to them, ‘The Son of Man is going to be delivered into the hands of men; and they will kill Him, and He will be raised on the third day.’” (17:22-23)
- “Behold, we are going up to Jerusalem; and the Son of Man will be delivered to the chief priests and scribes, and they will condemn Him to death, and will hand Him over to the Gentiles to mock and scourge and crucify Him, and on the third day He will be raised up.” (20:18-19)

- “The Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and to give His life a ransom for many.” (20:28)
- “But when the vine-growers saw the son, they said among themselves, ‘This is the heir; come, let us kill him and seize his inheritance.’ They took him, and threw him out of the vineyard and killed him.” (21:38-39)
- “You know that after two days the Passover is coming, and the Son of Man is to be handed over for crucifixion.” (26:2)
- “Why do you bother the woman? For she has done a good deed to Me. . . . For when she poured this perfume on My body, she did it to prepare Me for burial.” (26:10, 12)

R. T. France: This is the first hint of Jesus’ betrayal by Judas (apart from the editorial comment in 10:4), though as yet no indication is given to the disciples of who will do it. Paradidōmi does not in itself mean “betray;” sometimes it has a totally positive sense (as in “entrust,” 11:27; 25:14, 20, 22), and where it is related to imprisonment and death it can be used without any sense of betrayal (4:12; 5:25; 10:17, 19; 18:34; 27:2, 26). But often the hostile motivation of the agent is understood (10:21; 24:9, 10; 27:18), and paradidōmi (rather than the more specific term prodidōmi) quickly became the standard term for Judas’ “betrayal”. In view of that general usage it seems likely that the “handing over” predicted here is not simply Jesus’ arrest and the process of his trials and condemnation to death, but more specifically the role of Judas. It is also possible to find here an echo of the OT phrase “give in to the hands of” denoting God’s determining the result of human conflict (Exod 23:31; Num 21:2, 34 etc), and such a divine passive would suit the NT insistence that what was done to Jesus was done by the will of God; but the prominent use of paradidōmi in the gospels in relation to Judas’ treachery suggests that that is the more immediate focus here. The “people” to whom Jesus will be handed over are not specified here, though the reader who knows the story will have no difficulty in identifying them. But the description of them as anthrōpoi, “human beings,” not only produces an effective word-play (the Son of anthrōpos in the hands of anthrōpoi) but also draws a telling and paradoxical contrast between the Son of Man (the figure of future glory and authority, 16:27–28) and those to whose will he is to be subjected.

J. Ligon Duncan: The Cross Reiterated

Here Jesus repeats and elaborates on His clear statement to the disciples about His impending doom, His trials, His sufferings, His death, His burial, and His resurrection. He had already spoken to them of this truth in Matthew 16. He will speak to them of it again in Matthew 20. . .

I. We ought to remember Christ's humiliation for us.

Why? Why does He keep repeating this particular message to the disciples? Other than the fact that they were hard-headed like we are, there are many good answers to that question. One of them is offered to us by Calvin who says, “The nearer the time of His death, the more often Christ warned His disciples, lest that particular sorrow should undermine their faith.” In other words, Jesus knew that the greatest testing, the greatest trial of faith that His disciples would go through during the time of His earthly ministry, would in fact come at the end of His earthly ministry in His suffering, His death, His burial, and His resurrection. In those hours and in those days, His disciples would almost despair of the hope that He had implanted in them.

And so, everything that He does from this point on in His ministry, in addition to being designed to equip them for their future ministry of the gospel, was designed to enable them to endure the trial that they were going through. Is it not precious that at a time when the Lord would have been perfectly justified to concentrate on preparing Himself for the most awesome task ever undertaken in the history of this universe, yet He turned His attention to ministering to His disciples so that they could endure a trial not half so great as the trial that He would endure, but a trial greater than they had ever been called upon to face? And so, the expectations of the disciples about this kingdom that they were going to enter into in triumph, in victory and reign with Christ on earth had led them to be unprepared for the kind of trial that they were going to face in the coming days. And Jesus knew that that kind of triumphalism needed to be corrected. They needed to be faced with the stark realities of what it meant to follow the humiliated and exalted Lord. And so He continues, over and over, to prepare them. . .

Judas will deliver Him into the hands of wicked men. The scribes, the chief priests, the Pharisees, and the Sadducees will deliver Him into the hands of wicked men. The civil leaders of Israel will deliver Him into the hands of wicked men. The Roman rulers will finally hand Him into the custody of armed soldiers who will then inflict the final punishment. Jesus delivered under the control and jurisdiction of wicked men. . .

You see, Matthew wants you to see not only the necessity of Jesus' suffering and the certainty of Jesus' suffering, but he wants you to see that that suffering was the very plan of God for your sake. It was not merely an accident or a tragedy. It was not merely an affront to justice put into place by the hands of wicked men. It was the Father's plan to redeem you from your sins. And so, when you come to the Lord's Table you remember that that humiliation was the plan, the loving plan of the Father for you. And that humiliation was willingly taken up by the Lord Jesus Christ, and that that humiliation was not endured because Jesus deserved it, but because you deserved it and He endured it in your place.

II. We ought to reflect on His death, its meaning and significance.

Do you realize the significance of that death? Every time we come to this table, we need to meditate on the power of that saving death. It was a perfect, divine substitutionary sacrifice. Nothing less than the blood atonement of Jesus Christ was necessary to satisfy the wrath and the justice of God. Do you remember those solemn words of Hebrews 9:22: “Without the shedding of blood there is no forgiveness.” The author of Hebrews has already told us that the blood of bulls and goats will not avail, only the blood of the Son of Man and Son of God will avail to stand us before God in righteousness. Do we see the Savior's love in this? Do we realize that Jesus perfectly knew what He had been born into the world to do, and yet He willingly chose it for you? Do you see the Savior's love in that? Do you realize that His knowledge all His life, all His life, that He was born to die for you, was like living a life experiencing the passion of the cross before it ever came? Can you imagine living your life knowing that your job was, at the age of 33, to die for all your people? And more than that, to lose the experience of the Father's presence on behalf of your people. And He chose that for you. How much must your Savior love you? John Owens said so many years ago, “There is no death of sin without the death of Christ. But because of Christ's death, death has died for god's people.” Do we realize the significance of His death when we come to the table?

III. We ought to strengthen our hope in His resurrection.

They misunderstand His message. Being plunged into grief at the prospect of their own forthcoming personal bereavement, the disciples derive no comfort from Jesus' words that He will be raised on the third day. Why? Again, there are many reasons for that. But William Hendriksen says this, "Since they did not know what was meant by being raised up, this part of the prediction was not able to turn their sorrow into joy."

Now that's a question for us too, isn't it? If we don't know what it means to be raised up, then there is nothing to turn our sorrow to joy. It is our business to know the resurrection. It is our business to believe and embrace the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ and it is our business to know that we are raised up in Him, says the Apostle Paul. That is our hope. It's at the bedrock, the very foundation of our hope for future glory. . .

Your resurrection is as good as done because you have been raised in newness of life in His resurrection and that resurrection is already been accomplished. It is a pledge of the resurrection that you and I will experience.

Van Parunak: Prophecies of the Lord's Passion

16:21-22	17:22-23	20:17-20	26:1-2
21 From that time forth began Jesus to shew unto his disciples,	22 And while they abode in Galilee , Jesus said unto them,	17 And Jesus going up to Jerusalem took the twelve disciples apart in the way, and said unto them,	1 And it came to pass, when Jesus had finished all these sayings, he said unto his disciples, how that he must go unto Jerusalem ,		18 Behold, we go up to Jerusalem ;	2 Ye know that after two days is the feast of the passover, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes ,	The Son of man shall be betrayed into the hands of men:	and the Son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests and unto the scribes , and they shall condemn him to death, 19 And shall deliver him to the Gentiles	and the Son of man is betrayed and be killed ,	23 And they shall kill him,	to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify him:	to be crucified .
and be raised again the third day.	and the third day he shall be raised again.	and the third day he shall rise again.
22 Then Peter took him, and began to rebuke him, ...	And they were exceeding sorry.	20 Then came to him the mother of Zebedee's children with her sons, ...	(Anointing in the house of Simon the Leper)

TEXT: Matthew 17:24-27

TITLE: ACCOMMODATION TO AVOID OFFENSE

BIG IDEA:

JESUS PAID THE TEMPLE SUPPORT TAX TO AVOID OFFENSE DESPITE BEING THE LEGITIMATE FOCUS OF TEMPLE WORSHIP

INTRODUCTION:

David Thompson: To understand this passage, we must understand the Jewish background. It took a lot of money to run the temple in Jerusalem and God made provisions for this in the O.T. Law. . .

At the temple there were daily morning and evening sacrifices which included a year-old lamb at every sacrifice. There were wine, flour and oil offerings. The incense which was burned and the oil to operate the lighting system took a lot of money. One writer observed just the robe of the High Priest would have cost a “king’s ransom” (Barclay, p. 168). God knew it would take a lot of money to run His temple so He made abundant provisions for it. In Ex. 30:13-14, it was required that every Jew over age twenty must pay an annual temple tax of one-half shekel. Barclay observed “In the days of Nehemiah, when the people were poor, it was one-third of a shekel” (Vol. 2, p. 168). One-half shekel was equal to two Greek drachmas. That is precisely what is referred to in this passage. This tax was equivalent to about two days’ pay. So every year, every male over twenty was required to bring two days’ pay to the temple to maintain its operations. This was in addition to the regular offerings. Now the method of collection was very systematic. On the first of the month, Adar, which is our March, it was announced that the tax was to be paid. On the 15th day of March, booths were set up in every town and village where the taxes were collected. If the tax was not paid by the 25th, it had to be paid directly to the temple. This scene takes place in March. What we have are temple authorities going to Peter to ask whether or not Jesus would pay this tax. There is an important lesson to see from this passage.

JESUS CHRIST PAYS A TEMPLE TAX SO THAT HE AND HIS DISCIPLES WOULD NOT BE OFFENSIVE.

Truth is this whole scene is offensive to Him. It occurs after His transfiguration. Had Israel come to terms with Jesus Christ, they would have been bringing Him everything rather than asking Him for a tax. The temple was His temple and His Father’s temple. He said that when He was 12 (Luke 2:49). He is the focal point of everything in the temple. They should have given Him all of their wealth, but instead they want Him to give them some money.

Stu Weber: Even though the king's death exempts his servants from obligations under the old covenant, we must be willing to give up our privileges for the ministry of the kingdom in the lives of others. . .

Jesus was not teaching a lesson about civil taxes. Rather, he was paralleling the temple tax with the civil tax. The kings of the earth are parallel to God, and the sons represent true believers and children of God (5:9, 45). The customs or poll tax paralleled the temple tax. Jesus left the implications for members of God's family unstated, but it is clearly implied: God's royal children are free from old covenant obligations that have been nullified by the new covenant.

Charles Swindoll: As the saying goes, two things in life are certain: death and taxes. Jesus had just prophesied that He would die, which confused and disturbed the disciples (17:23). Now the question of paying taxes came up. . . William Barclay notes, “There is little doubt that the question was asked with malicious intent and that the hope was that Jesus would refuse to pay; for, if he refused, the orthodox would have grounds for making an accusation against him.” Here we see the opponents of Jesus trying to snare Him any way they could. If outright, face-to-face confrontation simply ended in embarrassment, they would try to take Jesus down through less direct means.

The problem was that at the time the temple tax wasn't actually obligatory, either by Roman law or by a literal reading of the Law of Moses. It was merely customary and voluntary. At the time of Jesus, the temple tax was more a test of one's loyalty to the temple in Jerusalem and of patriotism toward Israel. As such, this wasn't a test of Jesus' fidelity to the Law of Moses but to the religious and political culture of the time. Would Jesus conform to cultural expectations? Or would He defy the man-made social rules and take a path of independence? . . .

By conforming to the cultural expectation and simply paying the minimum tax, Jesus was demonstrating to His followers that they needed to pick their battles wisely. On the one hand, there was nothing sinful about paying a temple tax. On the other hand, it wasn't actually obligatory. Because it was neutral, the righteous should prudently weigh the benefits of paying the tax vs. the negative impact of not paying it. Nothing could be gained for the proclamation of the kingdom of God by thumbing noses at the temple-tax collectors. And by simply paying the tax, they would avoid placing a pointless obstacle in the path of outsiders.

Grant Osborne: The application of this passage to the life of the church depends on whether one sees it restricted to the temple tax, thus having primarily a christological significance (so Carson, Luz), or sees both the temple tax and the civil tax included, thus seeing it as the precursor to “submission to the government” passages (France, Davies and Allison). In light of the presence of both in the text (the temple tax the basis of the story, the civil tax noted in Jesus' metaphorical question), I believe both aspects are intended here.

R. T. France: This apparently rather trivial exchange in fact has significant implications for the reader's understanding of the status and mission of Jesus. The half-shekel temple tax was an annual levy on adult Jewish males, and one which unlike Roman taxes might be expected to be paid as a patriotic duty, but the Sadducees disapproved of it as a relatively recent Pharisaic institution and the members of the Qumran community on principle paid it only once in a lifetime. This approach from the tax-collectors suggests a suspicion that Jesus also might not accept this as an obligation.

I. (:24-25a) THE ISSUE OF PAYING THE TEMPLE TAX

A. (:24) Complicated Issue of the Temple Tax Raised by Local Jewish Collectors

“And when they had come to Capernaum, those who collected the two-drachma tax came to Peter, and said, ‘Does your teacher not pay the two-drachma tax?’”

- Why was this question posed to Peter instead of directly to Jesus?
- What was so complicated about this issue of payment of the annual temple taxes?

Grant Osborne: During the period covered by this narrative section (13:54 – 17:27), Jesus and the disciples have crossed the lake to the area of the Decapolis and returned (ch. 14), then traveled northwest to Tyre and Sidon and east to Gentile territory along the Sea of Galilee (ch. 15). Since then they have remained in the area of the lake, first at Magadan near Tiberias (15:39) and then twenty miles north of Galilee to the region of Caesarea Philippi (16:13 – 17:23) and now back to Jesus' and Peter's hometown of Capernaum. . .

The half-shekel tax (= two drachmas) stemmed from the tax imposed in Neh 10:32–33 (where it was one-third of a shekel) and was to be paid by every Jewish male over twenty years old (m. Šeqal. 1:3–4). Yet the practice was apparently late in the Second Temple period, and there was considerable debate over it. Qumran understood Exod 30:11–16 as requiring one payment in a lifetime (4Q159:6–7), and the Sadducees believed it was to be paid voluntarily. This was the lone exception to the Roman rule that foreign temples could not collect taxes from their people. After the destruction of the temple in AD 70, the Romans required the temple tax to be given to the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus.

Thus, these were likely local Jewish collectors who visited the residents of Capernaum (like Peter and Jesus) and then sent the money to Jerusalem. The collection was taken in the month of Adar (February-March) and sent to Jerusalem in time for Passover. So much money was collected that the temple authorities had to find ways to use it, “eventually constructing a massive golden vine (cf. Josephus, War 5.210).”

R. T. France: If, as tradition holds, it was in Peter's house that they lived while in Capernaum, the tax-collectors naturally approach Peter as the householder and therefore as responsible for those living with him. Jesus, though not the householder, is recognized as “your teacher,” the leader of the disciple group, and it is his attitude to the tax which is in question.

B. (:25a) Simplistic Automatic Response of Peter

“He said, ‘Yes.’”

Walter Wilson: Peter responds, rather impulsively it seems, in the affirmative (17:25a), his failure to consult first with Jesus reflecting a failure to grasp the significance of the matter at hand. Later, after Peter has entered “the house” (cf. 13:36), Jesus forestalls the disciple's question with one of his own, a parabolic query that posits an analogy between the way in which human kings act toward their “sons” and the way in which God acts toward God's children (cf. 18:23; 22:2). Implied in the comparison is the assumption that even if it is administered by human agents, the temple tax is ultimately imposed by God's very self. Given the recent emphasis on Jesus's identity as God's Son (16:16; 17:5), it is also fair to assume that “sons” in the similitude refers to Jesus himself and his spiritual siblings, that is, to those who do the will of his heavenly Father (cf. 12:46 - 13:1, also set in “the house”), as opposed to non-followers, here characterized as “others” (ἀλλότριοι). Just as members of the royal family are obviously exempt from taxes of all kinds, the members of the family of God are “free” (ἐλεύθεροι), the unqualified declaration in 17:26b suggesting that they are not only exempt from the temple tax but also liberated in a more general sense as well.

II. (:25b-26) THE EXEMPTION DUE TO JESUS' SPECIAL STATUS

A. (:25b) The Analogy from Civil Taxes

“And when he came into the house, Jesus spoke to him first, saying, ‘What do you think, Simon? From whom do the kings of the earth collect customs or poll-tax, from their sons or from strangers?’”

Grant Osborne: Jesus' point is that kings never raise revenue from their own family but only from the rest of the people.

R. T. France: All rulers, it is taken for granted, need to raise revenue; the question is from whom do they raise it. The specific reference of “sons” and “strangers” will depend on which governing authority is in view: for the Roman poll tax the crucial division was between Romans and subject foreigners (a possible meaning of allogenes, “stranger”), but not all rulers rule over foreigners, and where they are taxing their own people the “sons” who are exempt are more likely to be their own family members as opposed to the wider populace. But whatever the exact reference, the principle assumed by Jesus' question and Peter's response is that rulers exempt those closest to them from taxation. Whatever our modern democratic ideals may suggest, that seems a valid observation of the natural human tendency as it would have been experienced in the first century.

Leon Morris: Many translations have something like “The citizens of the country or the foreigners?” and record Peter's answer as “The foreigners” (so GNB). But this is not really the alternative, and it does not correspond to reality. Conquerors, of course, have always shamelessly plundered conquered peoples, and some of them may perhaps have been able to make do with this source of revenue, but the kings of the earth in general certainly have always taxed their own people and have never been in the luxurious position of being able to finance their activities solely from taxes levied on foreigners. Such translations do not pay enough attention to the language Jesus uses. He speaks of their sons, which draws attention to the male members of the royal households (and would probably include all in those households): the contrast is not between citizens and foreigners, but between those of the royal household and those outside. Kings regularly tax their citizens, not their families.

B. (:26) The Application to Jesus' Situation

“And upon his saying, ‘From strangers,’ Jesus said to him, ‘Consequently the sons are exempt.’”

Walter Wilson: Specifically, the relationship that his followers have with God through Jesus relativizes all other ways of knowing and honoring God, even those associated with God's temple, the piety of the temple being essentially transcended by the piety of God's fatherhood. That such an experience could be depicted with the language of freedom is evidenced also by John 8:35–36, which employs the imagery of “the house” as well: “The slave does not remain in the house forever; the son does remain forever. So if the Son makes you free, you will be free indeed” (cf. Heb 3:5–6).

III. (:27) THE ACCOMMODATION AND DIVINE PROVISION

A. The Accommodation

“But, lest we give them offense,”

Walter Wilson: As the final verse of the pericope shows, however, freedom must be tempered by responsibility (17:27). As sons of God, Jesus and his followers must avoid “giving offense” to others (i.e., doing anything that might impede them from coming to faith), a theme to which the ensuing discourse will return (18:6–9). But rather than paying the tax themselves, Jesus informs Peter that their need will be met by a miracle of divine provision, the form of which corresponds to the view of God set forth in 17:25–26. God does not exact payment from the “sons” but on the contrary provides for them, as a father provides for his children (cf. 6:31–33). In this regard, it is important to note that Jesus foresees but does not enact the miracle. Rather it is something (we are led to presume) that God will do for Jesus and Peter, just as the heavenly Father gives what is good to all his children (7:9–11).

Grant Osborne: Jesus does not wish to give the impression that he is rejecting the temple or the Jewish people. This is a similar principle to Paul’s in 1 Cor 9:22b, “I have become all things to all people so that by all possible means I might save some” (cf. 1 Cor 8:13; 9:3–23). All decisions are made on the basis of what enhances the gospel, and Christ’s ambassadors are to surrender their “rights” for its sake.

R. T. France: The implication of the dialogue with Peter seems to be then that since Jesus has the status of a “son” in relation to God, he is “free” and so should be exempt from paying the tax (though the last step of the argument is left unstated). If he nonetheless does pay it, therefore, it is as a matter of accommodation, to avoid giving offense (which is what the verb “cause to stumble” probably means in this context), rather than of obligation. . . Is there a parallel here with his baptism, which, according to 3:14–15, was undertaken not because he personally required it, but to identify with repentant Israel and so to “fulfill all that is required of us”? The Jesus of Matthew’s gospel is not one to stand on his personal dignity, nor to dig his heels in on matters of secondary importance. His followers have not always been so perceptive in differentiating between matters of principle and adiaphora.

Leon Morris: If Jesus paid the tax he would be putting himself in the same position as others; he would be classing himself as an “outsider,” not as a “Son,” and that impression should be avoided. If he refused to pay the tax, he would give the impression that he rejected the temple and all that it stood for, whereas the Gospels make it clear that he did no such thing. Moreover, there were the people entrusted with the obligation to collect the taxes to consider. Had Jesus insisted on his rights, those men would not have been able to collect the tax from him. Jesus did not intend to be a snare to them, to lead them into sin in some way, though it is not clear precisely how a refusal to pay would cause the collectors to sin. . .

B. The Divine Provision

*“go to the sea, and throw in a hook, and take the first fish that comes up; and when you open its mouth, you will find a stater.
Take that and give it to them for you and Me.”*

Grant Osborne: Jesus’ command would be quite appealing to Simon, a professional fisherman. The reason for a “fishhook” rather than a net is the intention to catch just a single fish. The image of the fish “coming up” is part of the miracle; the fish, having swallowed a shiny coin on the bottom, arises from the depths and takes the hook. The coin is probably Tyrian silver, the exact amount for paying the temple tax for Jesus and Peter (“on behalf of me as well as you,” two shekels or drachmas each).

Michael Wilkins: The fish known popularly, but probably inaccurately, as “Saint Peter’s Fish” is the musht. The reason why it probably is not the type of fish Peter caught is that it feeds only on plankton and is not attracted by bait on a hook. More likely Peter caught the barbel, a voracious predator of the carp family that feeds on small fry like sardines, but also on mollusks and snails at the lake bottom. Peter may have baited the hook with a sardine, the most numerous fish in the Sea of Galilee, to which the barbel would have readily been attracted.

Jeffrey Crabtree: Not all fish stories are fabrications.

Grant Osborne: God will take care of his children, and so they must entrust themselves to his care. The purpose of the command of Jesus to Peter in v. 27 is both to show that God provides for the needs of his children and to tell Peter to be dependent on God to meet his needs. This is the meaning of the fourth petition of the Lord’s Prayer, “Give us today our daily needs” (6:11). It is not a consumer demand for God to give more and more but an expression of our reliance on God to meet our needs.

Leon Morris: “Found” money did not belong to anyone, so there was no barrier to Peter’s paying the tax with it. The little group’s meager store of money would then not have been used to pay taxes. It is also possible that the use of a “found” coin, while it satisfied the tax collectors, did not involve any admission that Jesus was liable to pay the tax; it was not “his” money. Jesus tells Peter to give the coin to the collectors for me and you.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Does this passage have direct application to the payment of our civil taxes?
- 2) Why should Jesus and His disciples be exempt from the temple tax?
- 3) Why did Jesus supply the needed payment by way of a miracle?
- 4) In what circumstances do we need to be extra careful not to offend others by our non-culturally accepted behavior?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Stanley Saunders: This unusual story raises questions for us about the nature of discipleship in a world dominated by the interests of kings, governors, and coercive powers. How do Christians best give witness to God’s power and provision in the midst of human expressions of dominion and sovereignty? God does not give us all fish with coins in their mouths, but God does supply those who trust with what they need. God also uses the community of disciples to restore those who are victims of the political and economic systems of the world, to gather God’s faithful, and to unmask the charades of human power. Preaching that attends to these realities will prepare disciples both for the “real world” and for God’s surprising provision.

While the story comes nowhere near to presenting a definitive teaching on the payment of taxes by Christians, it does suggest that when Christians do pay taxes—and they usually must—they should remember that human rulers and systems are only that. When leaders rule by deceit, when they deprive people of what is needed to live, when they depend on violence and domination, and especially when they wrap themselves in the rhetoric of religion and manifest destiny, it is the obligation of Christian preaching to unmask their deceits and to continue to point to God’s sovereignty and provision. And in all realms of life, even when paying taxes, Christians should bear witness to God’s power, grace, and care.

Christians approach their dealings with governmental powers with a clear sense that we are citizens of a different, heavenly realm (cf. Phil. 3:20). Whether or not the story affirms the essential freedom of Christ’s followers with regard to the payment of the temple tax, it is nonetheless true that Jesus’ disciples are members of God’s empire, not Caesar’s. That does not mean that Christians can ignore secular obligations, but rather that Christians are free to act in ways that surprise oppressors and opponents by turning the other cheek, for example, or by going the extra mile (cf. 5:39–41), or even by paying onerous taxes. How might the community of disciples best support such subversions of the status quo, and how might we bear witness to God’s transforming and reconciling power amidst the trappings of nation-states.

Warren Wiersbe: The unique characteristics of this miracle are worth noting.

- It is recorded only by Matthew.
- It is the only miracle he performed to meet His own needs.
- It is the only miracle using money.
- It is the only miracle using one fish.
- It was performed for Peter.
- It is the only miracle that does not have the results recorded.

Donald Hagner: The avoiding of unnecessary offense is the central point of the pericope (see esp. Garland, 204–5). This same principle of freedom, yet with voluntary sacrifice of that freedom in practice, is advocated later by Paul (cf. Rom 14:13–23; 1 Cor 8:13–9:1, 12). The instructions Jesus now gives to Peter involve not simply mysterious foreknowledge (as in 21:2 or Mark 14:13) but a miracle of divine provision. This miracle is, however, unique in the NT in that Jesus performs it for his and Peter’s own convenience (in this sense it is more like the ad hoc miracle stories of the NT apocrypha). But like the miracle of the withering of the fig tree (21:19), its primary function is to provide a “sign” to underline a theological truth: that God provides the fish with the coin in its mouth (which the fish had apparently seen shining in the water and taken for food). This serves to underline the truth of Jesus’ point that the children of the king do not themselves have to pay the tax. Peter is to fish in the Sea of Galilee using an ἄγκιστρον, “fishhook” (the only occurrence of the word in the NT), and in the mouth of the first fish he takes he will find a στατήρα, “stater,” a silver coin worth four drachmas, or the equivalent of a shekel, just enough to pay the temple tax for two (cf. a parallel story of a pearl in a fish in b. Šabb. 119a–b). Peter is then to take it to the tax collectors for himself and for Jesus (ἀντὶ ἐμοῦ καὶ σοῦ, “for me and for you”). Jesus thus would pay the temple tax once more before he accomplished in his death on the cross the unique sacrifice that would make the temple superfluous. The fulfillment of Jesus’ directions and their truthfulness are not recorded but left assumed. Thus the miraculous provision is itself de-emphasized in favor of the underlying lessons.

The issue of the pericope concerns not the paying of taxes to the state, i.e., the secular authorities (this issue comes up specifically in 22:15–22), but a specifically religious tax for the maintenance of the temple and its ritual, wherein atonement for sins was made possible. Given the present situation of the dawning of the kingdom of God in the ministry and person of Jesus, the paying of the temple tax was or would be, strictly speaking, no longer a necessity (cf. 12:6). That nearness is an inescapable aspect of this pericope, given the larger context of the Gospel. Those who participate in this new reality are the children of the king and thus need not pay the tax to support what will after all soon belong to the old order (cf. the prophecy of the destruction of the temple [24:1-2]). Yet for Jesus more important things are at hand, and there is no point to make an issue out of this, thereby offending the Jewish authorities. And so Jesus chooses not to exercise his and Peter's rightful freedom as the children of God not to pay the tax, thereby anticipating what would become a basic principle of Pauline practice and the practice of all knowledgeable and "stronger" Christians: the avoidance of unnecessary offense of the "weaker." At bottom here is love and concern for others rather than the use of one's rightful freedom. The two aspects of the pericope—loyalty to the temple together with freedom from the law of the temple tax—would have been particularly appropriate for those grappling with issues of continuity and discontinuity and, of course, would have had important ramifications for relationships with the Jewish community.

Craig Blomberg: What is clear is that Jesus is reinforcing two of the frequent themes of his teaching:

- (1) disciples should avoid unnecessarily offending others (15:12-13 has shown that they cannot avoid all offense);
- (2) ultimately Jesus has freed them from obeying the law, both oral and written, except inasmuch as it is fulfilled and reinterpreted in his person and teaching (cf. under 5:17-20). If God's people are freed from paying the tax for the temple's upkeep, they must be freed from the sacrifices for which the temple existed.

Charles Swindoll: Because none of us will ever face the quandary of whether to pay the temple tax, how does this passage apply to us today? Let me suggest that Jesus' way of dealing with the temple tax is a great illustration of the tensions involved in living as dual citizens. As God's children, we are citizens of heaven (Phil. 3:20). But we are also citizens of earth with rights and responsibilities (e.g., Acts 22:28). We are therefore expected both to honor and obey God and to honor and obey the government over us (Rom. 13:1-5). This includes paying taxes (Rom. 13:6-7)!

Make no mistake: The believer's first obligation is to obey God. Our citizenship in His kingdom is first and foremost. When the laws of the land are directly in conflict with His commands, His truth must prevail, and His will takes immediate precedence. In those cases, we are to obey God rather than men (Acts 4:18-20; 5:27-29). However, in most cases, the laws of the government are in no way contrary to the laws of God. God never dictated how fast we should drive on the highway, but the government does. God never said what percentage of our income we should pay to the government, but our laws do. God never said whether we needed to have our dogs on leashes when walking in public places, but many cities have such laws. In matters like these, we should obey the government.

Yet what about cultural expectations for which there are neither divine commands nor secular laws, but merely societal norms and traditions? In such cases, we must be willing to give up our own preferences for the sake of the gospel. If a countercultural approach to life will bring scorn to the kingdom of God and to His people, we must be willing to surrender our personal rights and conform to the expectations of our society —again, as long as it doesn't run contrary to God's Word. To help us think through some of these issues, let me ask a few questions.

Are you a good citizen of your country? Or do you take secret delight in breaking some of its laws, making excuses like God doesn't care how fast I drive? Remember your dual citizenship. In matters about which God has not spoken but your government has, you must submit to the authorities over you.

What is your understanding of freedom regarding neutral or gray issues? Do you think freedom in this case means doing whatever pleases you, regardless of how it may offend outsiders or place obstacles in their path to Christ? Do you push your liberty too far and then rationalize your way around a self-centered lifestyle? Think about what course of action will bring the least scorn on the people of God by casting the gospel in a negative light.

TEXT: Matthew 18:1-4

TITLE: TRUE GREATNESS IN THE KINGDOM – HOW DISCIPLES SHOULD VIEW THEMSELVES COMPARED TO ONE ANOTHER

BIG IDEA:

GOD MEASURES GREATNESS BY THE STANDARD OF HUMBLE DEPENDENCE RATHER THAN ACHIEVEMENTS OR WORLDLY RECOGNITION OR SOCIAL-ECONOMIC STATUS

INTRODUCTION:

One benefit of getting together with your extended family over special holidays like Thanksgiving is that you get a chance to interact with some age groups that maybe you don't tend to spend as much time around. You appreciate the time you have left with those who are getting along in years and you experience the joy of new life and enthusiasm as children are born and grow up in the family. We certainly enjoyed the couple of young children that spent time with us on Thanksgiving Day. Our story today will star an unnamed young child – a child whom Jesus puts forward to drive home an important lesson about Humble Dependence in the kingdom of God. At issue on the heart of the disciples is the Question of Greatness – Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven? How should we view ourselves and position ourselves compared with others in the body of Christ? Jesus responds with a simple Object lesson with accompanying Explanation. In verses 5-9 Jesus will go on to make application in terms of how we should treat fellow believers.

How does the world measure Greatness? Think about any realm where the discussion can revolve around Who is the Greatest:

- Sports – pick one – football, baseball, basketball, tennis, ice hockey, soccer . . .
Hall of Fame for each sport has different criteria for judgment – what is more important – individual stats or championships and rings won?? How do you measure success and compare one player's performance against another – especially in different generations?
- Business – Profits are the most common standard of measurement – it's all about the dollars that end up on the bottom line; there are various ways that you establish the value of a business – my son Rick talks to me about this as his venture capital company decides which companies to invest money in
- Entertainment – How many Award shows are there each year?? You name the category and there are multiple shows to recognize the top performers in terms of popularity and fame and skill
- Politics – Blatant grab for Power and the taking credit for accomplishments – whether you deserve the credit or not –all about putting yourself forward and puffing yourself up
- Field of Education – more subtle – but aura of sophistication and arrogance – whether in the arena of teaching or of research and publishing
- Technology / Inventions – Creativity, Innovation, productivity recognized

We like to know what criteria will be used in the evaluation process. How would you like a contest where you invested valuable resources to compete along with many other people. At the appropriate time the judging took place and first place was awarded to Mr. X – but the reasoning behind the judgment was never explained. You would find that pretty unfair and frustrating.

The baton of spiritual leadership is about to be passed into the hands of the disciples. They have just been instructed again regarding their Master's impending cruel death. You would think they would be focused on caring for His needs. Instead their heart of selfishness and pride is revealed in their ambitious striving for the #1 spot in the kingdom. “Tell us the rules,” they cry out. “If we have left all to follow You, we need to know where we stand in the pecking order.”

We will find that any consideration of the subject of the greatest in the kingdom must take us back to focus on the Greatness of Jesus Christ ... Remember when Christ upbraided the rich young ruler in Luke 18:19 – there is only one who should be called Good – that is God alone ... same thing when it comes to calling one Great ...

Craig Blomberg: Chapter 18 contains Jesus' fourth major teaching block. The first three are the Sermon on the Mount (chapters 5-7), the instructions to the Twelve (chapter 10) and the kingdom parables (chapter 13). This teaching block covers various matters about life in the kingdom community, namely present kingdom life and humility, sin, and forgiveness. The fifth major block of teaching material is the Olivet Discourse (chapters 24 and 25). Jesus delivered this fourth discourse in Capernaum after He and the Twelve returned from Caesarea Philippi.

Walter Wilson: With chapter 18, we reach the fourth major discourse of the gospel, which of the five is also the shortest and most loosely organized. Like the mission discourse, this speech is addressed only to the disciples, suggesting that its provisions, while of relevance to the community as a whole, are meant especially for its leaders. Whereas the mission discourse focused on external threats to communal survival, chapter 18 focuses on internal threats, especially the sorts of strains and tensions that can bedevil relationships between members of a nascent sectarian group with rigoristic tendencies.

Grant Osborne: Jesus begins by defining greatness in terms of humility; the model for true discipleship is the simple humility of a child. In the same way that a child exemplifies a lack of pride and concern for status, the faithful follower must adopt humility in all relationships. At the same time, the section begins with the issue of power and greatness and establishes a tone for the rest of the chapter; this humble use of power will enable the church to overcome sin and find forgiveness.

I. (:1) THE QUESTION – AMBITIOUS PRIDE FOCUSES ON INDEPENDENT SELF EXALTATION

A. Context for Teaching on Humble Dependence

“At that time the disciples came to Jesus, saying,”

At least a temporal connection between this teaching and the previous incident about taxation;

Charles Swindoll: What had precipitated that misguided debate? Perhaps Peter, James, and John had been behaving arrogantly toward the other nine because they had been chosen to accompany Jesus up Mount Hermon to witness the Transfiguration. When asked what happened on the mountain, they would have been tight-lipped according to Jesus' command (Matt. 17:9). This would have increased the tension between disciples already disposed to wrangle over their positions in relationship to Jesus. If that's what was going on, then the three seem to have strangely forgotten the fact that earlier Jesus had been standing in blazing glory while they were reduced to trembling wrecks on the ground. And the Twelve seem to have ignored the fact that Jesus had just told them that He would be betrayed and killed in Jerusalem. Instead of letting those realities sink in and transform their personal priorities, they argued with each other over pride of place.

R. T. France: And there is a further factor which has sharpened the question: in the previous pericope, as in several other situations already in the gospel, Peter has been in the limelight, living up to Matthew's singling him out as "first" (10:2). His declaration at 16:16 has evoked Jesus' warm commendation of his insight (16:17) and a consequent statement about his special role and authority in the founding of Jesus' ekklēsia (16:18–19), and Peter with his two closest colleagues has been singled out for a special journey with Jesus up the mountain (17:1), leaving the rest of the disciples behind to face a difficult situation. In 17:24–27 it has been assumed that Peter speaks for Jesus, and Jesus' "solution" to the tax problem has included Peter along with himself, to the apparent exclusion of the rest of the Twelve. "So who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?"

D. A. Carson: Jesus has just been declared God's unique Son (v.5); yet his glory is veiled as he moves toward betrayal and death, thus establishing a pattern of humility for his followers (18:1-5). . . (vv.5-9) Jesus' disciples must deal as radically with pride as they were earlier commanded to deal with lust (5:29-30).

The issue of Greatness should focus on the unique Majesty of the Royal Son of God – not on the dependent subjects of His kingdom – who need to be humbly performing service and still viewing themselves as unprofitable servants – look at how the context highlights the Greatness of Christ:

- "Who do people say that the Son of Man is?" (16:13) Passage has tremendous implications for Roman Catholicism – this is where the succession of Peter should naturally be taught; with Christ departing from the scene, will Peter now take over the visible leadership of God's people on earth? Apparently this position of primacy had not been established back in Matt. 16:17-19 or that would have been the end of the debate.

- "He was the Christ" (16:20)
- Transfiguration: "This is my beloved Son, with whom I am well-pleased; listen to Him." (17:5)
- Ability of Jesus to heal vs the inability of the disciples because of the littleness of their Faith; they were big in their opinion of themselves (Pride) – but not like a child in terms of unquestioning dependence and faith and humility
- Incident about paying the Temple Tax – Jesus is in the unique position of being the Son of the King – "the sons are exempt" – not talking about civil taxes to the Roman govt.; This was a Jewish religious tax for supporting the service in the house of God

Conclusion of John Piper: How do we humble ourselves?

Is not the most effective way of bridling my delight in being made much of, to focus on making much of God? Self-denial and crucifixion of the flesh are essential, but O how easy it is to be made much of even for my self-denial? How shall this insidious motive of pleasure in being made much of then be broken except through bending all my faculties to delight in the pleasure of making much of God! Christian Hedonism is the final solution. It is deeper than death to self. You have to go down deeper into the grave of the flesh to find the truly freeing stream of miracle water that ravishes you with the taste of God's glory. Only in that speechless, all-satisfying admiration is the end of self. Christians should be characterized as those who "make their boast in God" = message of 1 Corinthians 1:3; 3:21, 23

B. Question That Exposes Lack of Humble Dependence and Failure to Properly Respond to the Unique and Supreme Greatness of Christ

"Who then is greatest in the kingdom of heaven?"

You have all of the 12 gathered around Jesus in the dwelling place of Peter or the place where Jesus customarily stayed while in Capernaum; familiar home territory; know all of the players

You would think there would be some reluctance or shame on their part to even admit to such a question or debate on the subject of Who is #1 – Mark 9:33-34 indicates they were ashamed and Jesus had to pull this out of them ...

Grant Osborne: It is clear that they are not so much interested in the qualities that lead to greatness or the kingdom realities behind such greatness. Their question, "Who then is the 'greatest' [the comparative μείζων for the superlative]?" shows their primary interest is in status, power, and authority—in particular, their own future power position (as will be demonstrated in 20:20–21).

Bruce Ball: Signs of pride:

- Do I continually think about myself?
- Do I continually talk about myself?
- Do I use the pronoun "I" more than "YOU" or "WE"?
- Do I remember every service I may have rendered?
- Do I feel rejected if someone doesn't know how much I do?

<http://www.sermoncentral.com/sermon.asp?SermonID=87749&Page=2>

John MacArthur: They were seeking self-glory, prestige, prominence and Jesus had just been teaching them, chapter 16, verse 24, that if any man will come after Me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow Me, let him lose his life if he wants to find it. And He's been talking about self-denial and humility all along. And they still are self-seeking, grasping, desiring prominence. They are bent on self-glory. They are bent on sitting in the chief seats. . .

So, what Jesus is talking about is the Kingdom of heaven insofar as it means the rule and reign of God, the dominion of God, the sphere of God's influence and God's power and God's rule and God's blessing coming into the Kingdom of the Lord, coming into the sphere of God, coming in to eternal life, if you will, being saved, being redeemed, belonging to God, under His dominion. So, the concept of Kingdom of heaven simply means God's sphere of rule. . .

So, here we find--first of all--repentance, a sorrow for sin and a desire to change. And then out of that comes a sense of unworthiness knowing you don't have any resource for that, you can't change. You're personally bankrupt. You can't do anything to deserve it. And then you feel humble before such an awesome God and an awesome Kingdom. And then you learn that you've got to do more than just say you want that. It's not just saying you belong to the Lord. It's not external, it's something deep inside. And it's obedience to the will of God. And there you have submission to Lordship...submission to deity.

II. (:2-3) THE OBJECT LESSON AND EXPLANATION – HUMBLE DEPENDENCE IS GOD’S REQUIREMENT

What?? I thought all that was needed was Repentance and Faith??? Now you are adding other conditions???

You cannot truly acknowledge who God is in His Holiness and Majesty and Lordship and who you are in your fallen condition of Total Depravity and Helplessness and Moral Bankruptcy and Inability to save yourself – without HUMILITY

A. (:2) Presentation of the Object Lesson (Visual Aid)

“And He called a child to Himself and set him before them,”

William Barclay: There is a tradition that the child grew to be Ignatius of Antioch, who in later days became a great servant of the Church, a great writer, and finally a martyr for Christ. Ignatius was surnamed Theophoros, which means God-carried, and the tradition grew up that he had received that name because Jesus carried him on his knee. It may be so. Maybe it is more likely that it was Peter who asked the question, and that it was Peter’s little boy whom Jesus took and set in front of everyone, because we know that Peter was married (Matthew 8:14; 1 Corinthians 9:5).

Grant Osborne: The major points are the low status of children in the first century and their lack of interest in power and prestige.

John Walvoord: They had been asking the wrong question. They should have been asking, How can I best serve the King? Rather than, How can I best serve myself?

They should have been focused on the privilege of being in the kingdom rather than striving for the position of preeminence

Any striving for a position of preeminence in the church is so wrong – cf. Diotrephes in 3 John 9

Charles Swindoll: Jesus further explained that the key to having a place in the kingdom is humility. The child had no pride, no arrogance, no conceit, no expectations, no desire for promotion, no spirit of entitlement, and no phony piety. It was a what-you-see-is-what-you-get moment. Those who humble themselves like that little child —that is, those who understand their utter dependence on the mercy and grace of Jesus for their admission and position in relation to Him —will be regarded as greatest in the kingdom of heaven (18:4).

B. (:3) Explanation of the Object Lesson – Humble Dependence Required for Entrance Into the Kingdom

“and said, ‘Truly I say to you, unless you are converted and become like children, you shall not enter the kingdom of heaven.’”

1. What Does Conversion Involve? Fundamentally a change in our relationship to God
2. How is Conversion similar to “becoming like a child”?

3. What is the Ongoing application of Conversion (vs. the one time conversion at the point of Justification)?

John MacArthur: Jesus pictures faith as the simple, helpless, trusting dependence of those who have no resources of their own. Like children, they have no achievements and no accomplishments to offer or commend themselves with.

John Piper: The key to humility is not merely feeling the absence of merit (as we saw in the last chapter), but feeling the presence of free grace. Humility is not only like the servant who says, “I am an unworthy servant”; humility is also like a child at rest in his father’s arms.” . . . We must humble ourselves in both ways: like an unworthy servant and like a trusting child.

R. T. France: The instruction to “become like children” is thus not about adopting some supposed ethical characteristic of children in general (innocence, humility, receptiveness, trustfulness or the like) but about accepting for oneself a position in the social scale which is like that of children, that is as the lowest in the hierarchy of authority and decision-making, those subject to and dependent on adults.

C. (:4) Explanation of the Object Lesson Extended – Humble Dependence Required as God’s Standard for Measuring True Greatness

“Whoever then humbles himself as this child, he is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven.”

1. What is Involved in Humbling Ourselves like a child?

- a. Total Inability
- b. Complete Dependence

John Piper: For a strong, self-confident, self-sufficient, intelligent, resourceful, controlling person, Jesus’ demand was devastating. Jesus knew that children were not models for imitation in his day. The reason he chose them is because of their powerlessness and their low social standing. His demand is that we end our love affair with power and status and self sufficiency and rights and control. . .

Children may have all kinds of faults, but in a normal, healthy family they trust their daddy to take care of them. They do not lie awake wondering where the next meal is coming from. They do not fret in the stroller that the sky is turning gray. The child is, by its very position, lowly . . . and lives by instinctive confidence.

Stu Weber: This second statement served as a poetic restatement of the first (18:3), but it also clarified the specific childlike quality believers are to imitate—humility. All the complicated mental gymnastics adults use to avoid facing the truth take us farther from the kingdom. The person who comes to Jesus in simple humility, recognizing Jesus greatness and his own lowliness, is the greatest in God's kingdom. This person enters the kingdom by grace and serves in such a way as to inherit reward. A person like this warms the heart of the Almighty. He will be used by God to accomplish the greatest good for the kingdom.

2. Do we still want to be the “greatest in the kingdom of heaven”?

Focus our thoughts on the Greatness of Christ.

Respond as His servant – without taking thought for how we might benefit.

(not saying that rewards is not a proper motivation – how does this harmonize?)

- Whoever thinks he is the greatest is the furthest from it = Scribes and Pharisees
- Whoever strives to be the greatest is serving from the wrong motivation

Donald Hagner: From Jesus’ point of view, the disciples were so fundamentally on the wrong track in their admiration of, and quest of, what they considered to be greatness that it was questionable whether they really understood the kingdom he proclaimed and, in particular, that its basis lay in God’s free grace (cf. Mark 10:15). The status of the disciples before God was like that of dependent little children, and their corresponding attitude was to be a childlike humility, not pride of position or power (cf. 1 John 2:16–17). Clearly, a primary virtue of those who would be disciples, hence for those in the church, is a humility that marks them off radically from a world obsessed with the quest for greatness construed only as power and status. The disciple is called to be like his or her Master, whose demeanor even as the Christ was one of humility (cf. 12:18–21; 21:5).

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What qualities do you value highly when you compare yourself to others?
- 2) What prompted the disciples to consider this question of greatness in the kingdom?
- 3) What Christian leaders in your experience have served as a model of humility?
- 4) Where have you seen a spirit of rivalry and selfish ambition wreak havoc in the church?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Kevin Higgins: Jesus was going to deliver, but not in the way they expected. His was a spiritual kingdom that was not of this world and there would be deliverance from the yoke of bondage, but not from the Romans. Jesus had been trying to tell His closest friends these things as He advanced toward the cross, but they just weren’t getting the point. In their minds Jesus was the King who was about to set up His kingdom right here on earth, and even better – they were His right hand men who were going to be the princes in this kingdom! In fact, Jesus had just told them that He was giving to them the keys to the kingdom of heaven and that they would have His authority to conduct kingdom business! They were going to be running the show! They just knew that Jesus was grooming them to run His kingdom when He threw off the shackles of governmental and religious oppression. He had been slowly turning over to them the responsibility of teaching and preaching and they were even performing the same miracles as Jesus! Listen to them, “Man, look at us! Look at what I can do and what I get to do!”

The disciples must have been greatly enamored with their own greatness and importance as time went on --

1. It Is Human Nature to Consider Self First (1)

The disciples had proven repeatedly that they were not too concerned with the needs of others. Remember when Jesus was speaking with the woman at the well?

2. The Lord's People Are of Little Use without Biblical Change (2-3)

So why call this kid? Think about it. Here is this little boy who is a nobody. He has nothing, can do nothing, and for all practical purposes knows nothing. All he did was exactly what Jesus told him to do, and that was come to Him. He called the kid and he came. The disciples were going to have to be converted, that is, they were going to have to have a change of mind and a change of heart, recognize how completely bankrupt they were, how completely dependent they were upon Jesus for their power and ability and everything else if they were going to be of any use to Jesus.

3. True Greatness Is Marked by Humility (4-6)

David Silversides:

1. Christ doing good to unworthy disciples

Condemnation of hierarchical systems of church government; disciples had some awareness of the unworthiness of their argument; Christ saw all the pride and vanity of their heart; He sees the filth of sinful ambition; how can we cherish proud thoughts while at the same time having some sense of the shame of such pride? We put aside the shameful feelings and indulge the proud thoughts; beware of vagueness about our thoughts; Beware of thoughts where you shy away from having them pinned down and defined in such a way as you would see your sinfulness;

Don't be selective in preaching the truth of God's Word

2. The necessity of a childlike spirit

3. Prevailing Pride is a sign of being unregenerate

Conversion here does not have to refer to initial conversion

Disciples (except for Judas) were genuine believers; born of the Spirit; made progress in humility
Deepening sense of unworthiness

True Christianity addresses pride; all false religion leaves pride intact

Dependent on the sovereign grace of God even for the willingness to depend upon Christ

Salvation is both necessary and it is entirely of God

C. J. Mahaney: Humility – True Greatness

As sinfully and culturally defined, pursuing greatness looks like this: Individuals motivated by self-interest, self-indulgence, and a false sense of self-sufficiency pursue selfish ambition for the purpose of self-glorification.

Contrast that with the pursuit of true greatness as biblically defined: Serving others for the glory of God. This is the genuine expression of humility; this is true greatness as the Savior defined it.

Grant Osborne: Discipleship and Lowliness

Discipleship means reversing the world's standards of greatness and embracing the position of lowliness. This is a difficult principle for Christians in modern society, for far more than was true in the first century, it is possible for the lowly today to rise above their upbringing. Thus the desire for status and power may be more widespread today than ever before, and so it is hard to embrace this principle. Moreover, the “American way” is to make the best of yourself that you can, believing that “you can be anything you want to be.” Yet in this “upward mobility,” you are required by Christ to maintain humility and an attitude of service to others. Wilkins applies this to the problem of competition and its destructive effect on relationships because it involves “promotion of self at the expense of others.” Believers must depend on God and his mercy, not themselves.

William Barclay: Children have three great qualities which make them the symbol of those who are citizens of the kingdom.

(1) First and foremost, there is the quality which is the keynote of the whole passage, the child’s humility. Children do not wish to push themselves forward; rather, they wish to fade into the background. They do not wish for prominence; they would rather be left in obscurity. It is only as they grow up, and begin to be initiated into a competitive world, with its fierce struggle and scramble for prizes and for first places, that this instinctive humility is left behind.

(2) There is the child’s dependence. To children, a state of dependence is perfectly natural. They never think that they can face life by themselves. They are perfectly content to be utterly dependent on those who love them and care for them. If men and women would accept the fact of their dependence on God, a new strength and a new peace would enter their lives.

(3) There is the child’s trust. Children are instinctively dependent, and just as instinctively they trust their parents that their needs will be met. When we are children, we cannot buy our own food or our own clothes, or maintain our own home; yet we never doubt that we will be clothed and fed, and that there will be shelter and warmth and comfort waiting for us when we come home. When we are children, we set out on a journey with no means of paying the fare, and with no idea of how to get to our journey’s end, and yet it never enters our heads to doubt that our parents will bring us safely there.

The child’s humility is the pattern of the behaviour of Christians to their neighbours, and the child’s dependence and trust are the pattern of the Christian attitude towards God, the Father of all.

TEXT: Matthew 18:5-9

TITLE: GUARD AGAINST DANGEROUS STUMBLING BLOCKS

BIG IDEA:

DON'T BE A STUMBLING BLOCK TO FELLOW BELIEVERS OR TO YOURSELF

INTRODUCTION:

John MacArthur: in Matthew chapter 18 a most-interesting thing is going on. The disciples, children of God, who belong to Jesus Christ, are provoking one another to sin. By arguing and hassling and debating about who is the greatest in the kingdom, they are provoking each other to bitterness, to rivalry, to ambition, to pride, to envy, to jealousy, to self-seeking. In other words, they are mutually causing each other to sin. And our Lord takes on this matter by instructing them as to the importance of not causing one another to sin. . .

Jesus brings up this whole matter of our responsibility in regard to each other. Most people, and I suppose we could say this hoping that it were true, most people that call themselves Christians have some concern for their own holiness. Most people who really are Christians certainly are concerned about their own purity of life. But I wonder if we really ever stop to think about the purity of the lives of other people. Maybe we're sort of content if we can just take care of ourselves and we don't worry about how we affect anyone else. That's quite contrary to what God is saying and what Christ is teaching in this passage. We must not only do no evil in our own lives but we must never cause another Christian to sin. That is the specific message of this passage.

J. Ligon Duncan: All temptation is a challenge to God's lordship in our lives. And we can ask these two questions: Do I want God more than I want this forbidden pleasure? That's the sinful temptation. Or do I want God more than I want this gift that I know that comes from him? Do we want the gifts that God gives more than we want God Himself? If we are succumbing to either of those two temptations, either following after forbidden pleasures, or loving God's gifts more than we love the giver, we have already lost the battle of temptation. And Jesus is saying there are dread results from losing that battle. Jesus speaking of hell, of eternal fire, in this passage, is an argument, an inducement for us to mortify sin. He is saying, "If your heart follows the way of your desire in temptation, then you will be separated from Me eternally." Why? Because to sin once causes you to lose your salvation? No. But because your temptation and your incessant following of that temptation reveals your heart. It reveals that you love something else more than you love God. And that is why it is such a danger.

Charles Swindoll: It may seem that Jesus' teaching had gotten off track. Didn't He start by scolding His disciples for arguing over who was the greatest . . . then veer off into valuing children . . . and now wander into a discussion about the seriousness of sin? Actually, Jesus was setting up a contrast between the self-centered life and the other-centered life. Craig Blomberg notes, "A stark contrast thus remains between those who recognize their complete dependence on God, and who therefore welcome other believers in humility and service, and those, including professing believers, who lead themselves and others to sin." Two paths stood before the disciples—one of selfishness, pride, and a spiraling into sin that would destroy self and others; the other of selflessness, humility, and leading even the weakest believers into righteousness.

I. (:5-6) DON'T BE A STUMBLING BLOCK TO FELLOW BELIEVERS

What is the connection of vv.5-6 to what went before? Our view of the greatness of Christ must be demonstrated in how we treat the least significant of Christ's followers. Humility eliminates favoritism in how we treat other believers.

J. Ligon Duncan: one way you can see this kind of true humility manifest is in your attitude towards others. And He begins to stress to the disciples how important it is that they not become obstacles to the faith of others, even those who are considered least and weak in the eyes of the world. They are to be concerned for those who are unimportant, for those who are marginalized, for those who are not powerful, for those who are least. Their concern for just those kinds of people manifests the fact that they do not think of themselves as high and exalted. And so in their very treatment of those who are least, they show that their heart attitude is, 'No Lord, I am least. And so I must serve my neighbor first.' And Jesus says that is a sure sign that you have grasped kingdom humility.

A. (:5) Encouragement: Helping (Receiving) Fellow Believers – Meeting Their Needs

"And whoever receives one such child in My name receives Me;"

In fact we should seek out opportunities to care for those who are the most needy = Reverse Favoritism; James 2:1-17

Hiebert: There is a spiritual unity between the humble believer, Christ the sent one, and the Father who commissioned Him.

Donald Hagner: Receiving a disciple here, as there (where the same verb, δέχεται, "receive," is used), apparently means showing hospitality and consideration to disciples in pursuit of their calling, and hence especially in missionary work.

Grant Osborne: "Receive" (δέξεται) involves welcome, loving reception, and acceptance. Hagner takes it especially of hospitality shown to disciples in missionary work (cf. 10:42), but more likely it is intended of community life in general. A good example would be Rom 14:1–15:13, where Jewish and Gentile Christians in conflict are told to accept one another. This is to be done "in my name," i.e., as part of his community and under his authority (cf. 7:22; 10:22; 18:20; 19:29; 24:5, 9; 28:19). To do so is to receive Jesus himself and to experience his blessing. Since Jesus is one with each of his followers, the one showing mercy experiences Christ's presence in the one they are helping.

John MacArthur: It is impossible to separate the Lord from his people. The prophet said, "He that toucheth Israel toucheth the apple of my eye." Now the apple of his eye isn't out here some apple, the best-looking apple in the bunch. That was the Hebrew way of saying the pupil of the eye. God says when you touch Israel, you jam your finger in my eye, and that irritates me. You're taking a poke at God's eye, the most vulnerable part of the exposed anatomy, the most sensitive thing to be wounded or injured. You are poking God in the most sensitive area when you touch his people; that's a basic principle. Why? Because when you receive his people, verse 5, you're receiving him. The implication is he's bound up with his people as one. Now this is a favorite teaching of the Lord, the concept of the believer's unity to him is really in many ways the heart and soul of Christianity. We're not people who believe in a system; we're people who are united with God, aren't we? We are one with Jesus Christ. We don't just follow his teachings, we're one with him. And the Lord taught using this principle again and again. One of his favorite truths in Matthew 10:40 we saw that he said, "He receiveth you receiveth me, he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me." (cf. Mat. 25:34ff)

William Barclay: To teach unruly, disobedient, restless little children can be a wearing job. To satisfy the physical needs of children, to wash their clothes and tend their cuts and soothe their bruises and cook their meals may often seem a very unromantic task; the cooker and the sink and the first-aid kit have not much glamour; but there is no one in all this world who helps Jesus Christ more than the teacher of the little child and the harassed, hard-pressed parent in the home. All who take on these tasks will find a glory in the grey, and discover wonder in the ordinary, if in the child they sometimes glimpse none other than Jesus himself.

Thomas Constable: The child in view in these verses is not a literal child, but the disciple who has humbled himself or herself, and in so doing has become childlike (vv. 3-4). Jesus was speaking of receiving a humble disciple of His in verse 5. (Jesus taught the importance of receiving a little child in Mark 9:36-37 and Luke 9:48.) Whoever receives a disciple in Jesus' name welcomes the disciple because he or she is one of Jesus' disciples, not because that one is personally superior, influential, or prominent. The person who welcomes one of Jesus' humble disciples, simply for Jesus' sake, virtually welcomes Jesus Himself (cf. 10:42; 25:34-46). In this context, as well as in chapter 10, Jesus was speaking of welcoming in the sense of extending hospitality—with its accompanying encouragement and support. To receive (Gr. dekomai) means to receive into fellowship.

B. (:6) Warning: Hurting (Rejecting) Fellow Believers – Causing Them to Stumble

“but whoever causes one of these little ones who believe in Me to stumble, it is better for him that a heavy millstone be hung around his neck, and that he be drowned in the depth of the sea.”

“little ones” -- Piper: emphasizes that they are not great in the eyes of the world. They are not strong. They are not self-sufficient. Instead, what marks them is that they “believe in me.” That is, they trust not in themselves but in Jesus.

Jeffrey Crabtree: Offend (v. 6, Greek skandalizō) here means to “cause to stumble in faith or entice to sin” (Grimm's 576). Jesus, then, in this discussion was not speaking of personal offenses as in 17:27 but of occasions to sin (Hagner 33B:522). To offend or cause to sin in verse 6 is the verb form of the word translated offences in verse 7.

Both the word “depth” (Evans, Matthew 341; Ex. 15:5; Neh. 9:11; Ps. 63:9) and the size of the millstone intensify through hyperbole (Wilkins 614) the image of judgment. “Depth” (Greek, pelagos) speaks of the open sea (Acts 27:5), that deep part of the sea where ships travel (Grimm's 499). The millstone was the size and kind turned by a donkey, not the hand mills women normally used (ISBE III:356). Donkeys pulled this wheel-shaped stone around a center pole over a flat bottom stone to crush grain. The millstone was so heavy and the water so deep that a person could not possibly free himself. Jesus' point was God's judgment against those who lead others to sin should be feared more than inescapable death by drowning.

Robert Gundry: Such a stone, hung by rope around the neck, would not only ensure drowning but also kill all hope of the drowned body's rising to the surface and floating ashore for burial, especially since “the depth of the sea” refers to the open sea far from shore. People of the Bible looked with horror on any kind of death that precluded burial. The un-Jewishness of execution by drowning intensifies the horror. But if such a fate is advantageous as compared with causing a fellow disciple’s apostasy, how much more horrible must be the judgment of the disciple who causes the apostasy!

William Hendriksen: The millstone is the top-stone of the two between which the grain is crushed. The reference is not to the hand-mill but to the much heavier stone drawn by a donkey. In the middle of the top-stone, whether of a hand-mill or of a donkey-drawn mill, there is a hole through which grain can be fed so as to be crushed between the two stones. The presence of this hole explains the phrase “that a heavy millstone be hung around his neck.” . . .

However, it is not merely the lesson of trustful humility that the Master is here teaching his disciples. The sinful yearning to be greater than one’s fellowmen and to rule over them is not a merely passive attitude. It is a very active drive. Therefore also its opposite and antidote can be nothing less than the similarly active effort to love all, that is, not only to become like the children but also to love them and to protect them; indeed, to exercise this same loving attitude toward all, gladly forgiving all.

S. Lewis Johnson: The best example of the application of this truth of not offending one of these little ones is the Lord Jesus himself. And we have seen in the preceding incident, last Sunday, in the miracle of the tribute money, that the Lord Jesus claimed that he did not have to pay the temple tax, as a matter of fact the whole temple belonged to him. But he stated in the 27th verse of chapter 17, notwithstanding, lest we should offend them, and he went ahead and did that which was which it was unnecessary for him to do. So he beautifully illustrates the fact that one should not offend one of these little ones.

Ray Fowler: (19:13-15) People were bringing their little children to Jesus for him to place his hands on them and pray for them. The disciples tried to stop them. They obviously thought Jesus was too busy or the children were not important enough to interrupt his schedule. But Jesus said let the little children come and do not hinder them, for the kingdom of heaven belongs to such as these.

Dan Brooks: How do we cause others to sin?

- Eve offered Adam what God has clearly forbidden; outright transgression and inviting others to participate; Gen. 3
- Passively consent in what is wrong; Aaron – while Moses is on the mountain; Israel decides they cannot wait and indulge in idolatrous worship; forgiveness of God = ended up anointing Aaron as first high priest
- Careless exercise of liberty – things that are truly indifferent; matters of conscience; Rom. 14:20-21

John MacArthur: How do we cause others to sin?

- Direct temptation – Eve is classic illustration
- Indirect temptation by provoking people – Ephes. 6:4
- Setting a sinful example
 - When we lead people right into sin
 - When we abuse our liberty

II. (:7) DANGER OF STUMBLING BLOCKS

A. Stumbling Blocks Present a Real Danger – Caveat of Temptation

“Woe to the world because of its stumbling blocks!”

Thomas Constable: Jesus pronounced woe on the world because it is the source of opposition to Him and His disciples, and the source of much stumbling and many stumbling blocks. “Woe” announces judgment (cf. 11:21; 23:13-32). It is inevitable that the world will reject Jesus’ disciples, but God will hold those who do reject them responsible (cf. Isa. 10:5-12; Acts 4:27-28).

David Guzik: The first woe is a cry of pity for a world in danger of offenses. The second woe is a warning to the one who brings or introduces evil to others.

Grant Osborne: Jesus is saying that divine judgment will fall on the world because its system is the true source of the stumbling that will destroy the faith of too many “little ones.” This also means that the false teachers [cf. Jewish religious leaders] and others who cause such spiritual catastrophes are truly of the world.

Stu Weber: Woe means that God’s judgment is about to fall. It is as though God had his hand raised, ready to come down in wrath at any moment. Jesus pronounced impending judgment on the world for things that cause people to sin. The secular world is filled with temptations for believers. One day this world will be destroyed. The inevitability of temptations in the world does not excuse one’s sin.

B. Stumbling Blocks Are Inevitable in This Sinful World – Certainty of Temptation

“For it is inevitable that stumbling blocks come;”

Charles Swindoll: Jesus condemned the world for its plethora of temptations that coax the weak, the innocent, the unlearned, and the naïve down a path of sinfulness. The word “woe,” which Jesus expresses toward the world, suggests a strong exclamation of deep emotion —either sorrow or anger. Though these snares are inevitable in a fallen world, those who perpetrate the wickedness are called out and will suffer dire consequences.

R. T. France: “The world” (kosmos) here refers especially to the world of people, rather than the physical creation as a whole; for this sense of kosmos cf. 4:8; 5:14; 13:38; 26:13. People in general are bound to be confronted by stumbling-blocks; the world is a dangerous place. The “necessity” of such problems (anankē speaks of inevitability) springs not from a specific divine purpose but from the nature of things in a fallen world; cf. 13:37–43 for this acceptance that evil (including “stumbling-blocks,” 13:41) will remain in the world until the final consummation. Discipleship was never going to be an easy proposition, but that is no reason for anyone to make it harder by irresponsible behavior toward fellow-disciples. The idea that people are responsible for their actions even though these are “necessary” is one which runs through both OT and NT (most notably in the story of Judas Iscariot; note a similar “woe” specifically directed at him in 26:24). The fact that a person is operating within a determined structure does not excuse them for their personal choices and decisions.

Albert Barnes: That is, such is the depravity of man that there will be always some who are attempting to make others sin; some people of wickedness endeavoring to lead Christians astray, and rejoicing when they have succeeded in causing them to fall. Such, also, is the strength of our native corruption and the force of passion, that our besetting sins will lead us astray.

Gill's Exposition: Considering the implacable malice of Satan, his unwearied and indefatigable pains, the malignity of the men of the world, their aversion and enmity to the Gospel of Christ, and all good men; it cannot be thought, God suffering such things for the trial of such as are truly gracious, and for the discovery of hypocrites, and for the manifestation of his grace, power, and faithfulness in the preservation of his dear children, that it should be otherwise, but that such offences should be. . .

C. Source of Stumbling Blocks Liable to Severe Judgment – Culpability of Temptation “but woe to that man through whom the stumbling block comes!”

J. Ligon Duncan: In that little verse (:7) the Lord Jesus stresses two things. First of all, that temptation is going to be a certainty in this life. The Lord Jesus wants you to know that there is never going to be a day in this life when you're not going to face temptation. But along side of that, the Lord Jesus also wants us to understand though we are going to live in a world fraught with temptation, He does not want us to be contributors to that problem. On the one hand, there is the certainty of temptation. But on the other hand, in verse 7, there is the culpability for temptation. He says that temptation is certain, but let me tell you this, if you become a tempter, you will be held responsible for it. And in verse 7, as He pronounces a woe against the world because of stumbling blocks, He is teaching us as His disciples, as His followers, that we are not to become stumbling blocks. We must determine not to be stumbling blocks. Jesus, when He pronounces a woe against the world is using the world in the sense of that system which is allied and united against God; mankind alienated from the life of God; mankind opposed to the life of God. And He pronounces a woe against those who are part of that world system.

And His purpose in pronouncing this woe against world while He's talking to His disciples is precisely this: He is warning His disciples not to act as if they were part of the world in opposition to God. And you notice the juxtaposition here: Jesus' disciples and the world. Now let me tell you that understanding that juxtaposition is a key to understanding temptation, because as we heard from Thomas Watson in the beginning of the service, all temptation is a test of sincerity. All temptation, all temptation invites you to, believers anyway, to put one foot in the church and the other foot in the world. All temptation invites believers to try and be partially loyal to God and partially loyal to the desires and the system of the world. And the Lord Jesus immediately says to His disciples, “It's got to be one way or the other. You are either under the pronouncements of woe that I have pronounced upon the world, or you are part of My disciples.” And so He's making it very clear to the disciples that being part of the world will involve judgment.

Daniel Doriani: The Bible often teaches the importance of leading and nurturing young believers; this passage, conversely, tells us we dare not mislead them.

D. A. Carson: Implicitly, the offense is gravely magnified when, with particular perversity, some wicked people self-consciously try to entice Christ's “little ones” into sin—but the evil is broader than that. Because it signals a rejection of Jesus as well as damaging his people, drowning at sea before the evil was committed is much preferable to eschatological judgment, the eternal fire of hell (vv.8–9) that awaits the perpetrators. Drowning was a not uncommon punishment in Greek and Roman society.

III. (:8-9) DON'T BE A STUMBLING BLOCK TO YOURSELF – DEAL DRASTICALLY WITH YOUR OWN SIN

Charles Swindoll: In 18:8-9, Jesus leveled the same severe warning against those things in our lives that lead to personal sin and transgression. After all, those who cause others to stumble began by stumbling themselves, and those personal patterns of sin develop for us when we allow stumbling blocks in our own lives. This brings up an often-neglected dimension to sin: Succumbing to temptation is never personal and private. The consequences always affect others in ways we can't necessarily predict. If we let stumbling blocks into our own lives, eventually a chain reaction will ensue that causes others to stumble as well.

Richard Gardner: Here Matthew is drawing on Mark (cf. the three parallel sayings in Mark 9:43-47), using sayings cited earlier in the discussion of adultery in the Sermon on the Mount (5:29-30). In the context of chapter 18, the sayings can be interpreted in two different ways.

- According to some writers, cutting off and tearing out refer to excommunication: The church must remove those members whose behavior endangers the faith of others and the life of the community (cf. 1 Cor. 5:2, 13, and Dietrich Philips in Williams:-246).
- It is more likely, however, that the sayings call for self-examination on the part of each believer: If any part of our life causes us to stumble, and therefore makes us an obstacle to the faith of other Christians, we must do whatever it takes to correct the situation (cf. the comments on 5:29-30).

[Alternate View:]

Grant Osborne: εἰ is a condition of fact and assumes that such false teachers (the leaders in Jesus' day, heretical teachers in Matthew's time) are present. Yet this is strongly debated, for the majority of scholars take this in the same sense it had in 5:29–30, namely, sinful parts of the disciples' own "body" or self that lead them into sin. In 5:29–30 it was temptation to sexual lust, while here it is sin committed in the Christian assembly.

However, Thompson argues

- (1) that the causative force of the key word "stumble" (σκανδαλίζω) must be respected, so that it means "cause others to stumble," and
- (2) that the condition of fact in "if" (εἰ) implies a real situation in the community.

Moreover, the context is corporate, and vv. 6–7 have warned the church against this very activity, namely, individuals who cause "the little ones" to fall spiritually. Thus the terms "your hand/foot" are personified to depict false teachers and others who are detrimental to the life of the church. . .

So Jesus takes the personal metaphors of 5:29–30 and applies them corporately here to life in the church. The imagery of amputation parallels 18:17 and refers to the excommunication of offending members. As such this is a call to church discipline.

A. (:8) Sin Involving Your Hand or Foot

1. Dangerous Offense

“And if your hand or your foot causes you to stumble,”

2. Drastic Response

“cut it off and throw it from you;”

3. Dread of Eternal Hell Fire

“it is better for you to enter life crippled or lame, than having two hands or two feet, to be cast into the eternal fire.”

Matthew McCraw: Jesus is using hyperbole to make this point: we must take our sin very seriously and we must be totally committed to defeating it. Jesus says that it’s better to sacrifice in this life than to go into hellfire without sacrificing. Listen, church, hell is real. We don’t know exactly what it’s like, but it’s described as a place with great evil, tortuous fire, great agony, great suffering, and terrible judgment. We don’t want to find out what it’s really like. Sacrificing in order to avoid sin and follow Jesus is worth it every single time. Do whatever you can to avoid sin and pursue holiness. Don’t ask yourself how close you can get to sin, ask yourself how close you can get to Jesus.

B. (:9) Sin Involving Your Eye

1. Dangerous Offense

“And if your eye causes you to stumble,”

2. Drastic Response

“pluck it out, and throw it from you.”

3. Dread of Eternal Hell Fire

“It is better for you to enter life with one eye, than having two eyes, to be cast into the fiery hell.”

David Turner: Failure to deal radically with sinful proclivities indicates that one is in danger of punishment in hellfire (cf. 3:10–12; 5:22; 25:41). As grotesque as these images of amputation and gouging are, the prospect of eternal punishment is far worse. This language is hypothetical as well as hyperbolic (cf. 5:29–30). Ridding oneself of one’s hands, feet, and eyes would not reach the root of sin, the heart (15:18–20). The point is, rather, that one must deal radically with one’s sinful tendencies (cf. Prov. 4:23–27; Rom. 13:11–14). This is necessary before one attempts to correct another member of the community (Matt. 18:15; cf. 7:3–5; Gal. 6:1).

Warren Wiersbe: Humility begins with self-examination, and it continues with self-denial. Jesus was not suggesting that we maim our bodies, for harming our physical bodies can never change the spiritual condition of our hearts. Rather, he was instructing us to perform “spiritual surgery” on ourselves, removing anything that causes us to stumble or that causes others to stumble. The humble person lives for Jesus first and others next – he puts himself last. He is happy to deprive himself even of good things, if it will make others happy. Perhaps the best commentary on this is Philippians 2:1-18.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What's the connection between humility and showing mercy to meet the practical needs of those in Christ who are marginalized and especially vulnerable?
- 2) What are the different ways that someone can cause a believer in Christ to stumble?
- 3) Does this passage teach that you can lose your salvation? Why or Why not?
- 4) What radical steps have you taken to root out sin in your own life?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Stu Weber: To make a break here is somewhat artificial. Jesus' flow of thought was continuous through at least 18:14. We recognize the continuity of 18:5-9 with the preceding in the use of a little child (18:5) and these little ones (18:6). But there is also a shift in emphasis here, from the central character of God's child to the Father's protective warning against any who would corrupt his child. Jesus answered Peter's opening question (18:1) by saying, in essence, "The greatest in the kingdom of heaven is a weak, vulnerable child who needs protection."

Grant Osborne: [He takes the view that vv. 8-9 refer to corporate discipline of offending members of the assembly.]

The problem dealt with is Christians who become "stumbling blocks" to others in the community, i.e., who lead them into sin and even cause them to lose their faith. This warns the community that such will bring severe judgment from God, and so the community had better discipline such members before it is too late.

The church is also responsible to protect its members from spiritual predators who will destroy their walk with God. Paul warned the Ephesian elders of "savage wolves" who would "not spare the flock," comprising some "even from your own number" (Acts 20:29-30), a prophecy that came true about five years later (Eph 4:14; 1 Tim 4). The church must respond swiftly and firmly to such dangerous people, and Jesus demands excommunication for such unless they repent (18:17; cf. 1 Cor 5:3-5; 1 Tim 1:20).

William Hendriksen: To summarize, what Jesus is saying in verses 1-6 is this, that, instead of striving to become greatest in the kingdom of heaven (verse 1), in the process of attempting this hurting others instead of guarding them (verse 6), the disciples should rather learn to forget about themselves and to focus their loving attention upon Christ's little ones, upon the lambs of the flock and upon all those who in their humble trustfulness (or trustful humility) resemble these lambs. By welcoming them they will be welcoming their Lord (verse 5). This they will learn to do if they themselves also become like the little children, even like this little one whom Jesus has taken into his arms. That is the only way to greatness in the kingdom of heaven (verses 2-4). . .

It is however, impossible in this present realm of sin to put an end to every temptation, every enticement to sin: For temptations must come . . . It is of the very nature of sin that it spreads. It would be easier to stop water hyacinths from clogging the waterways of Florida than to prevent temptations from clogging the tracks of the human race, including even the church. But though it is impossible to eradicate temptation, by God's grace it is possible to prevent oneself from belonging to the company of the tempters. . .

By God's grace it is also possible to overcome temptations in one's own life. . . Drastic action is necessary to overcome temptation, action made possible by prayer (Matt. 6:13; 26:41).

Matthew Henry: Considering the cunning and malice of Satan, and the weakness and depravity of men's hearts, it is not possible but that there should be offences. God permits them for wise and holy ends, that those who are sincere, and those who are not, may be made known. Being told before, that there will be seducers, tempters, persecutors, and bad examples, let us stand on our guard. We must, as far as lawfully we may, part with what we cannot keep without being entangled by it in sin. The outward occasions of sin must be avoided. If we live after the flesh, we must die. If we, through the Spirit, mortify the deeds of the body, we shall live. Christ came into the world to save souls, and he will reckon severely with those who hinder the progress of others who are setting their faces heavenward.

TEXT: Matthew 18:10-14

TITLE: PARABLE OF THE LOST SHEEP

BIG IDEA:

3 REASONS WHY WE MUST NOT DESPISE ANY OF GOD'S VULNERABLE SHEEP SINCE THEY ALL ARE INDIVIDUALLY VALUED

INTRODUCTION:

David Turner: In addition to dealing decisively with sin in their own lives, disciples must also avoid contempt for fellow members of the community (cf. Rom. 14:3, 10, 15; 1 Cor. 11:22; 1 Tim. 4:12), described here, as in 18:6, as "little ones." These must not be despised, because angels represent them before God (cf. Heb. 1:14). Such angelic ministry to believers is real, albeit mysterious.

Richard Gardner: When weaker members stray, therefore, the community must not despise them for their weakness, but rather act with loving care to find and restore them.

Bethany Bible Church: Here then, we see that Jesus calls us to greatly respect and highly regard the "little ones" who believe on Him.

- He calls us to make very sure that we never look down on them or despise them.
- He calls us to diligently seek them when they wander away.
- And He calls us to give ourselves to the pursuit of the Father's good will for their lives.

Craig Blomberg: The main plot unfolds exactly as in Luke 15:3-7, but most of the details differ. These two passages probably represent similar teachings of Jesus from two separate settings in his ministry. In Luke Jesus uses the lost sheep to represent unsaved sinners. In Matthew he applies the parable to errant disciples, as the distinctive framework of the passage (vv. 10, 14) makes plain.

Matthew McCraw: God doesn't want to lose any of His children. God doesn't want to lose any of His followers. Because God has this heart towards His children, we should as well. Our hearts should reflect the heart of God, amen?

Part of our vision of developing disciples who love the church is that we will go after those members of our church who are lost and wandering. We must go after them with the love and compassion of God the Father, seeking to bring them back where they belong.

We should not look with judgment on those who are wandering, but with love and compassion. We all need the grace of God and it is God's grace that brings us back and puts us back on the right path. . .

One lost sheep is worth seeking out and one found sheep is worth celebrating!

Donald Hagner: So important are the disciples of Jesus, these "little ones," that they have "their" (αὐτῶν) angels, who presumably look after their welfare primarily through intercession, but perhaps also in other ways. This passage falls short of describing "guardian" angels (despite the “guardian angels” of NEB; corrected in REB to “angels”) assigned to each individual Christian, who attempt to keep her or him out of danger. A more general idea is in view, namely, that angels represent the “little ones” before the throne of God. The point here is not to speculate on the ad hoc role of angels in aiding disciples of Jesus but rather simply to emphasize the importance of the latter to God. If the very angels of God’s presence are concerned with the “little ones,” how much more then should also fellow Christians be for one another! They are to be received and esteemed; special care must furthermore be taken not to cause them to stumble.

I. (:10a) PROHIBITION – DON’T DESPISE ANY OF GOD’S VULNERABLE SHEEP

“See that you do not despise one of these little ones,”

Jeffrey Crabtree: “Despise” (Greek kataphroneō) means “to feel contempt for someone or something because it is thought to be bad or without value” (Louw and Nida I:763).

Grant Osborne: “Hold in contempt” (καταφρονήσητε) connotes both the attitude of despising a person and the contemptuous actions that result (so Gundry).

Who are the “little ones” here? Throughout Matthew the “little ones” are disciples. Yet there may also be double meaning: they are all believers as despised by the world (so it refers to all relationships in the community) and also those of lower status in the community (thus referring also to economic and ethnic prejudice in the community). It may also be the leaders of the church looking down on those under them (so Luz).

Charles Swindoll: Returning to the spiritual lesson related to those who appear to be least in the kingdom but who are actually greatest, Jesus urged the disciples not to devalue and discount such people. How easy to undervalue or discount little children, or, for that matter, other believers who are weak and fragile in their faith. By showing preferential treatment to those who are gifted or wealthy or famous or powerful, we turn our backs on those less noticeable members of the church who often exhibit the character of Christ better than others. Like children who live under a special watchful eye of heaven, those with simple, childlike faith are watched over by the angels themselves (18:10). The God-man Himself gave up His life for such seemingly insignificant ones, who would be utterly lost without Him (18:11). If heaven places such a value on lost and weak souls, shouldn’t we?

John MacArthur: Two main points:

- The Rule (:10)

The word “despise” in the Greek is very interesting: kataphroneō. Phroneō has to do with the mind and thinking, and kata is down. Don’t think down on people. Don’t put yourself up here and look at them as if they were below you, as if they were beneath you, looking at them with disdain, looking at them with indifference, as if they were valueless or useless or worthless, holding them in contempt, not worth your consideration.

- The Reason (:12-14)

II. (:10B) PRECIOUSNESS PROVEN BY THE MINISTRY OF ANGELS – REASON #1 = EVERY SHEEP MATTERS TO THE ANGELS IN HEAVEN

“for I say to you, that their angels in heaven continually behold the face of My Father who is in heaven.”

William Barclay: To say that these angels behold the face of God in heaven means that they always have the right of direct access to God. The picture is of a great royal court where only the most favoured courtiers and ministers and officials have direct access to the king. In the sight of God, the children are so important that their guardian angels always have the right of direct access to the inner presence of God.

Craig Blomberg: Heb 1:14 teaches that angels are concerned for believers and serve them. So Jesus' words here are appropriate even if we cannot be sure of all the specific ways in which angels minister to us.

Daniel Doriani: Jesus says no one should despise little ones, for “their angels in heaven always see the face of my Father in heaven” (18:10). The passage does not necessarily imply that each child has one angel. One angel could guard many people. “To use an athletic analogy, the angels may be playing ‘zone’ rather than ‘man on man’ defense.” Still, the Lord has assigned angels to protect his “little ones,” and those angels have free access to the Father’s presence.

[Verse 11 not found in the best manuscripts --

“For the Son of Man has come to save that which was lost.”]

III. (:12-13) PURSUIT OF THE LOST SHEEP – REASON #2 = EVERY SHEEP MATTERS TO THE GOOD SHEPHERD

(:12a) Call to Reflection

“What do you think?”

Stu Weber: What do you think? was a common way for a Jewish teacher to start his students' minds working over a mental problem, as he introduced a new concept or teaching (17:25; 21:28; 22:42).

A. (:12b) Priority of Seeking the Lost Sheep

“If any man has a hundred sheep, and one of them has gone astray, does he not leave the ninety-nine on the mountains and go and search for the one that is straying?”

William Barclay: In Judaea, it was tragically easy for sheep to go astray. The pasture land is on the hill country which runs like a backbone down the middle of the land. This ridge-like plateau is narrow, only a few miles across. There are no restraining walls. At its best, the pasture is sparse. And, therefore, the sheep are always liable to wander; and, if they stray from the grass of the plateau into the gullies and the ravines at each side, they have every chance of finishing up on some ledge from which they cannot get up or down, and of being marooned there until they die. . .

The love of God is an individual love. The ninety-nine were not enough; one sheep was out on the hillside, and the shepherd could not rest until he had brought it home. However large a family may be, parents cannot spare even one; there is not one who does not matter. God is like that; God cannot be happy until the last wanderer is gathered in.

David Turner: Although it is not stated, one tends to assume that the shepherd would not jeopardize the entire flock in order to seek the single lost sheep (contra Huffman 1978: 211). The phrasing of the parable may allude to Ezek. 34:10–12, 16.

Craig Blomberg: The ninety-nine refer to faithful followers of Jesus who no longer need to repent because they are not straying from him. The wandering sheep is the believer—“one of these little ones”—who wanders away from intimate fellowship and consistent obedience. The Greek “one of [them]” (v. 12) employs the same wording as in vv. 5-6, 10 and reappears in v. 14, so it is clear that Jesus still has Christians rather than literal young people in mind. Leaving the ninety-nine does not imply they are unprotected; other shepherds would keep watch over them. At the spiritual level, of course, God is able to search for the wanderer even while still protecting those who have not strayed.

Stu Weber: This emphasis also drew attention to the Father's grace. God wanted the universe to know that he is a God who pursues his own and rescues even those who rebel against him.

B. (:13) Joy of Finding the Lost Sheep

“And if it turns out that he finds it, truly I say to you, he rejoices over it more than over the ninety-nine which have not gone astray.”

Grant Osborne: The μᾶλλον indicates God rejoices over the returned sheep “more than” those believers who remain in the fold. This hardly means he has no joy in the faithful but rather highlights the importance of restoration. Parallel passages are found in Gal 6:1 (the “Spirit-led” restoration of those caught in sin) and especially Jas 5:19–20 (those who “bring them back” will “save them from death and cover over a multitude of sins”). The latter passage provides further reasons for the joy.

R. T. France: The greater joy over the one recovered sheep than over the ninety-nine “good” sheep emphasizes God’s pastoral care: it is caused by the recovery, rather than by any inherent superiority in the sheep itself. The natural tendency to regard such discriminatory joy as unfair is firmly repudiated in the figure of the elder brother in Luke 15:25–32.

IV. (:14) PERSEVERANCE AND PRESERVATION OF THE SAINTS – REASON #3 = EVERY SHEEP MATTERS TO THE HEAVENLY FATHER

“Thus it is not the will of your Father who is in heaven that one of these little ones perish.”

Grant Osborne: God’s sovereign will is for the security of the believer, as in 2 Pet 3:9, “not wanting anyone to perish, but everyone to come to repentance.” From this standpoint, it is inconceivable that the church and its leaders would fail to do the same, seeking always to protect the sheep both from predators and from the tendency to wander off. The mention of “perish” raises the stakes, for the end result is not just loss of reward but destruction.

Donald Hagner: ἀπόληται, “perish,” is a particularly strong word to describe the fate of one who stumbles or falls away (cf. 10:28). This ultimate ruin or destruction is itself a further sobering reason for care in one’s conduct with others. This then is the reason that disciples, members of the community, are to be received and welcomed by their brothers and sisters in the faith and why one is to be careful not to cause them to stumble: each of “these little ones” is precious in the sight of God, whose very angels seek their welfare and whose will it is that not one perish.

D. A. Carson: Jesus drives the lesson home: the heavenly Father is unwilling for any of “these little ones” to be lost. If that is his will, it is shocking that anyone else would seek to lead one of “these little ones” astray. (Thompson, Matthew’s Advice, 187–88, follows the line of thought admirably.) This love for the individual sheep is not at the expense of the entire flock but so that the flock as a whole may not lose a single one of its members

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What are some of the ways that we look down on some marginalized believers?
- 2) How can we place more emphasis on the role of angels in ministering to each of God’s children?
- 3) What is involved in proactively seeking to find and restore a single lost sheep?
- 4) How can we demonstrate the heart of God in how we value each member of God’s family?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

David Turner: In the Scriptures, God is the shepherd who pastures his people Israel through theocratic leaders such as kings and priests. The imagery has eschatological overtones in 2 Sam. 7:7–8; Isa. 40:11; Jer. 23:4–5; 31:10; Ezek. 34:11–16, 23. In Matthew, Israel’s leaders are not faithful shepherds, and Jesus compassionately rescues the lost sheep of Israel (Matt. 9:36; 10:6; 15:24, 32; 26:31). By implication, Jesus’s disciples must model their lives and ministries after the concern of the Father as exemplified in Jesus and expressed by the parable. Jesus calls on his followers to serve one another as he has sacrificially served them (20:27–28). Disciples must receive one another, not cause one another to go astray (18:5–9).

William Barclay: Here we have Jesus’ favourite picture of God and of God’s love. This parable teaches us many things about that love.

- (1) The love of God is an individual love.
- (2) The love of God is a patient love.
- (3) The love of God is a seeking love.
- (4) The love of God is a rejoicing love.
- (5) The love of God is a protecting love.

Grant Osborne: Emulating God’s Concern

God’s people must emulate God’s concern by caring for and watching out for each other. In 5:48 Jesus said, “Be perfect ... as your heavenly Father is perfect.” This means we are to be like God in every aspect of our lives; here that includes shepherding God’s flock. God’s deep-seated and active vigilance over even the weakest of his sheep must become the pattern for the church. The greatest joy a church will experience comes when a wandering member gets right with God. Moreover, every member should actively seek those who are failing spiritually and “restore” (Gal 6:1) them to Christ, the good Shepherd.

Daniel Doriani: This passage makes four essential statements about God’s care for his people. First, God cares for us individually. Once, a crowd of people pressed and jostled Jesus from every side, but he asked, “Who touched me?” The disciples replied, “You see the people crowding against you . . . and yet you can ask, ‘Who touched me?’” (Mark 5:31). But Jesus insisted so that the woman emerged and confessed that it was she, and Jesus healed her. Later, when Jesus passed through Jericho, the crowd lining the streets was so thick that one Zacchaeus, full-grown man that he was, had to climb a tree to get a glimpse of him. Then, when Jesus reached Zacchaeus’s spot, he called out to him and said, “I must stay at your house today” (Luke 19:5). So Jesus redeems us one by one.

Second, God seeks us when we stray. He finishes the work that he begins in us (Phil. 1:6). Moments before Jesus’ current teaching, the disciples were straying as they argued, wondering which of them would be greatest in the kingdom. Jesus silenced them and taught them just as he teaches us when we stray.

Third, Jesus rejoices over us when we return to him. The Lord rejoices whenever anyone passes from skepticism to faith or from doubt to faith. He rejoices when any sinner repents and returns to him. God has holy emotions, which include the holy joy he feels over us when we walk with him.

Fourth, the Lord exercises his care for his people through his people. We are responsible to seek the lost when God places them in our lives. If you cannot see them, ask the Lord to open your eyes and heart to see the lost and feel the compassion that leads to action. The Father cares for his children by the work of Jesus, by the movement of the Spirit, by his providential control of history, and by appointing angels to watch over us. But he also instructs believers, especially the mature, to seek our brothers, especially little ones in the faith, when they stray. Paul says, “If someone is caught in a sin, you who are spiritual should restore him gently” (Gal. 6:1). And James says, “My brothers, if one of you should wander from the truth and someone should bring him back, remember this: Whoever turns a sinner from the error of his way will save him from death and cover over a multitude of sins” (James 5:19–20).

Matthew Henry:

(1) The caution itself. “See that you do not look down on one of these little ones.” He will be displeased with the great ones of the church, if they despise the little ones of it. We may understand it literally of little children; of them Christ was speaking, v. 2, 4. Or, figuratively; true but weak believers are these little ones, who are like little children, the lambs of Christ’s flock. We must not despise them, not have low esteem for them. We must not make a jest of their infirmities, not conduct ourselves scornfully or disdainfully toward them, as if we did not care what became of them. We must not impose on the consciences of others. There is a respect owing to the conscience of every man who appears to be conscientious. We must take heed that we do not despise them; and be very cautious what we say and do, lest we should inadvertently cause Christ’s little ones to sin.

(2) The reasons to enforce the caution. We must not look on these little ones as contemptible. Let not those be looked on by us with disdain, whom God has honoured. To prove that the little ones which believe in Christ are worthy to be respected, consider,

The ministration of the good angels around them; “Their angels in heaven always see the face of my Father.” Two things he lets us know concerning them.

First, That they are the little ones’ angels. God’s angels are theirs. They can look by faith on the heavenly hosts, and call them theirs. It is bad being enemies to those who are so guarded; and it is good having God for our God, for then we have his angels for our angels.

Secondly, That they always see the face of the Father in heaven. This suggests,

1. The angels’ continual joy and honour. The happiness of heaven consists in the vision of God, beholding his beauty.
2. It suggests their continual readiness to minister to the saints. They see the face of God, expecting to receive orders from him what to do for the good of the saints. If we would see the face of God in glory hereafter, we must see the face of God now, in readiness to our duty.

John MacArthur: Now the text basically says to us that God cares for His children. That’s the basic bottom line truth in this text: God cares for His children. And you can see it pretty well in verse 14: “Even so it is not the will of your Father who is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish,” – or should be marred, or should be ruined, or should be led into disaster. The Father then cares for His children. God is a God who cares for His own.

Another underlying principle is this: that God cares for them equally, that He cares for them equally. He says, “One of these little ones,” in verse 14. He says, “One of these little ones,” in verse 10. And both times that numerical “one” is put in there just so nobody gets eliminated. It is so very important that every single, individual Christian be thought of as in the utmost sense important to the care of God the Father.

How do we despise others?

- By flaunting our liberty,
- By looking down on the lowly,
- By withholding from those in need,
- By ridiculing someone’s physical features,
- By looking with indifference on a Christian who has fallen.
- By rejecting those who confront our sinfulness.
- By taking advantage of a fellow believer for personal gain.

S. Lewis Johnson: And so the Son of God will not rest—having accomplished the atonement by which they are saved—he will not rest until every one of his sheep is brought into the fold. What a wonderful expression of the concentrated, omniscient, omnipresent, omnipotence of the sovereignty of our great God in the accomplishment of his purposes. And when he dies, he does not die in order to make men savable. He dies to save. He does not die in order that men may be able to save themselves, but he dies to save, and he accomplishes his purpose by virtue of the blood, and the Spirit, who in effectual grace to which I have referred brings them to Christ.

Now, what more of a missionary warrant could we possibly have as Christians than the example of our Lord Jesus who sought the one? Incidentally, he didn't mind seeking one. He didn't mind seeking one little one. He didn't mind seeking one little one that was going astray. So often, in Christian circles, we have failed to seek the little one who is going astray. We see them astray, and we pull up our skirts and say we must not have any fellowship with them. He sought them, and he sought the one, he sought the little one, he sought the little one in their straying condition.

Now finally, and our time is up. In verse 14, he says the third reason why we should not despise one of these little ones is that it is not the will of your Father who is heaven that one of these little ones should perish. To despise one of these little ones, then, is to be

- out of harmony with the Son,
- out of harmony with the angels, and
- out of harmony with our sovereign God and Father in heaven.

What a terrible thing it is then to despise one of the little ones.

Scott Harris: But when a lost sheep is found there is much rejoicing. When a believer who has gone astray has been restored, there is a special joy, not because they are more valuable, but because of the special concern evoked in the shepherd because of the danger they were in. It is the same way in a family when a child is seriously ill. That child receives more attention and care. When the child does get well, the special rejoicing is not over the children that remained healthy, but the sick one that has been restored. That is the special joy spoken of here when a wayward believer is returned to the fold.

Jesus cares for every one of His sheep and He will even search after those that go astray. If Jesus cares that much for even wandering sheep, how could we even think about despising any believer?

TEXT: Matthew 18:15-20

TITLE: CONFRONTING SIN IN THE BELIEVING COMMUNITY

BIG IDEA:

THE STEPS FOR CONFRONTING SIN IN THE BELIEVING COMMUNITY DEPEND ON THE DELEGATED AUTHORITY FROM THE RATIFYING DIVINE PRESENCE

INTRODUCTION:

Richard Gardner: Having acknowledged the possibility of stumbling or straying, Matthew goes on to treat the question: What do we do as a community of faith when a member sins? . . . In confronting sin, we are not called to act as crusaders or prosecutors, but as sisters and brothers seeking whole relationships with every member of the family. To develop the point, Matthew brings together three pieces of material on sin and forgiveness. Verses 15-20 describe a sequence of three steps for dealing with sin, supported by several sayings on authority in the church.

Charles Swindoll: Discipline, accountability, confrontation —these are not signs of the Lord’s hatred toward people, but proof of the Lord’s love for His children.

What’s true of our earthly parents and of our heavenly Father is also true of those in the body of Christ. And there are benefits to being accountable to one another. Through proper accountability in the community of believers, we truly exercise love for our brothers and sisters in Christ. Accountability includes loving and learning from one another, observing and affirming one another, encouraging and counseling one another, and also confronting and disciplining one another. It’s not that we confront because we like to intrude in people’s lives. We confront because we care.

Grant Osborne: The process of discipline centers on those who refuse to “turn [their] lives around” (v. 3) and repent. In this instance, it covers what to do when a member sins and refuses to repent and return to the community; the goal is still redemptive, for at every stage the way is marked for reconciliation. There are three stages (private confrontation, challenge from two “witnesses,” and judgment by the whole community); if at any stage the offending individual repents, full reconciliation will occur.

Stanley Saunders: The community that exercises divine power, that binds and looses on earth and in heaven, and that experiences the presence of Jesus himself is also the community of children and little ones who seek the lost, guard against stumbling blocks, and reach out to reclaim even the victimizer. Jesus will affirm in the next portion of this discourse that this is also a community of unrelenting forgiveness.

I. (:15-17) FOUR STEP PROCESS OF CONFRONTING SIN IN THE BELIEVING COMMUNITY

A. (:15) Step #1 = Confrontation in Private One-on-One

“And if your brother sins, go and reprove him in private; if he listens to you, you have won your brother.”

Donald Hagner: The reference to ὁ ἀδελφός σου, “your brother,” indicates that conduct within the community of disciples continues to remain in view.

D. A. Carson: The aim is not to score points over him but to win him over (same verb as in 1Co 9:19–22; 1Pe 3:1) because all discipline, even this private kind, must begin with redemptive purposes (Lk 17:3–4; 2Th 3:14–15; Jas 5:19–20; cf. Sir 19:13–17). Jesus assumes that the individual (second person singular) who personally confronts his brother will do so with true humility (vv.3–4; cf. Gal 6:1). If it is hard to accept a rebuke, even a private one, it is harder still to administer one in loving humility. Behind this verse stands Leviticus 19:17: “Do not hate your brother in your heart. Rebuke your neighbor frankly so you will not share in his guilt.”

Warren Wiersbe: Approach the person who sinned and speak with him alone. It is possible that he does not even realize what he has done. Or, even if he did it deliberately, your own attitude of submission and love will help him to repent and apologize. Above all else, go to him with the idea of winning your brother, not winning an argument. It is possible to win the argument and lose your brother.

We must have a spirit of meekness and gentleness when we seek to restore a brother or sister (Gal. 6:1). We must not go about condemning the offender, or spreading gossip. We must lovingly seek to help him in the same way we would want him to help us if the situation were reversed. The word restore in Galatians 6:1 is a Greek medical word that means “to set a broken bone.” Think of the patience and tenderness that requires!

R. T. France: Sin, of whatever form, is not to be tolerated within the disciple community, but is to be dealt with when it is noticed. But it is to be dealt with sensitively and with a minimum of publicity. The principle set out in these verses is of minimum exposure, other people being brought in only when the more private approach has failed. The ideal solution is “just between the two of you.”

Daniel Doriani: There is exception to this: when a public person commits a public offense, it may demand a public rebuke. For example, Peter played the hypocrite and refused to associate or eat with certain Christians in Antioch simply because they were Gentiles. Thus on that occasion Paul had to rebuke him publicly. The situation would be the same in the rare case where someone openly taught heresy in an evangelical church.

John MacArthur: We are all involved in going out to seek one another to restore one another to gain back the sinning brother who has drifted away from the community of God’s people. By the way, I suggested to you last time that there are some prerequisites. First is willingness. You have to be willing to go, and these commands imply that you have to act on your will. Jesus is saying, “You go and you tell him.” And that indicates that you need a responding will to that.

Secondly, there must be a zeal for God. David said in Psalm 69:9, “Zeal for thine house has eaten me up; the reproaches that are fallen on thee are fallen on me.” David had such a tremendous sense of God’s glory that when God was wounded, David felt the pain. And we need that same kind of response so that when God is dishonored, we feel the pain. Our heart is so knit with God’s heart.

And the third thing is personal holiness. You can’t go, as Jesus said in Matthew 7, to take a splinter out of somebody else’s eye if you’ve got a two by four in your own. So willingness, a zeal for God, and personal holiness. Paul sums it up wonderfully in Galatians 6 when he says, “If a brother is overtaken in fault, ye that are spiritual restore such a one.” And so you’re the person. I’m the person. We’re all to be involved in this. And I’ve thought about this so often in these recent days how marvelous it would be if all of the assembly of God’s people were totally committed to the recovery of every sinning brother and sister. We would become ministers of holiness.

J. Ligon Duncan: Jesus is saying, ‘Look, when a Christian, a fellow Christian in your congregation sins against you privately, don’t announce that to everybody in church, don’t put it on the prayer chain, don’t get your small group to start praying about it.’ Don’t shame that Christian, go privately to him. . .

Listen to what William Hendriksen says about this passage: “Jesus means that the offended brother should in the spirit of brotherly love, go and show the sinner his faults and this not certainly most of all for the purpose of receiving satisfaction for a personal grievance, but rather in the interest of the offender that he may repent and may seek and find forgiveness.” You see, the resolution of personal conflict is not the main point here. That is a side effect, that’s a side benefit of this procedure.

The prime concern that Jesus says He wants you to have in your heart, is that your brother or sister not be hindered in their spiritual growth, that your brother or sister not become hardened in sin, that your brother or sister not drift away from the way of light and truth. The main concern is with the spiritual welfare of the offender.

B. (:16) Step #2 = Corroborating Witnesses

“But if he does not listen to you, take one or two more with you, so that by the mouth of two or three witnesses every fact may be confirmed.”

D. A. Carson: It is not at first clear whether the function of the witnesses is to support the one who confronts his erring brother by bringing additional testimony about the sin committed (which would require at least three people to have observed the offense) or to provide witnesses to the confrontation if the case were to go before the whole church.

Warren Wiersbe: If the offender refuses to make things right, then we may feel free to share the burden with one or two dependable believers. We should share the facts as we see them and ask the brethren for their prayerful counsel. After all, it may be that we are wrong. If the brethren feel the cause is right, then together we can go to the offender and try once again to win him.

Richard Gardner: If not, one proceeds to the second step described in verse 16. The instruction to bring one or two witnesses into the conversation is drawn from Deuteronomy 19:15, which specifies the need for two or three witnesses to confirm a person’s guilt in a judicial setting. In Matthew, the purpose of the witnesses is not to secure a legal judgment, but to buttress the attempt at fraternal correction, to make an even stronger appeal to the member who has stumbled to acknowledge sin and be restored.

Charles Swindoll: If you’re in a situation in which you must take this second step, choose the other one or two people carefully. Prudence, impartiality, experience, integrity, maturity, and biblical and theological knowledge are key. So are compassion, patience, kindness, and genuine love for the sinning individual. Remember, the goal is not to corner the person or to gang up on him or her. The goal is to draw on the combined wisdom provided by a plurality of godly men or women. As Proverbs 11:14 says, “In abundance of counselors there is victory.”

C. (:17a) Step #3 = Corporate Pressure = Last Resort

“And if he refuses to listen to them, tell it to the church;”

R. T. France: The object of the gathering is not to pronounce judgment but to strengthen the pastoral appeal, in the hope that the offender may yet “listen.” The offender, faced by the disapproval of the whole local disciple community, ought surely to recognize that this was not just a personal grievance on the part of the initiator. Anyone who is not willing to accept such united testimony may then properly be regarded as no longer a fit member of the community. “You” (singular, referring to the individual who raised the issue, not, at least explicitly, to the community as a whole) should then treat them as “a Gentile and a tax-collector”.

Grant Osborne: The body as a whole is the final stage of appeal, the third time the offender is given the opportunity to admit wrong, repent, and be reconciled to the offended party, the local church, and God. Certainly the purpose of the local assembly is not just to declare the person guilty and render judgment, but to appeal to the offender as a corporate group and seek to bring about repentance.

John MacArthur: That’s the place, ekklesia, the called out ones. The assembly. Listen carefully. This is the third time this word is used in Matthew. That is the second use of it; in verse 17 is the third use. In the book, the first one being in chapter 16. It’s only used three times. It is non-technical in Matthew. It does not refer to the church born at Pentecost. It was a word simply meaning an assembly. Nothing more than that. It is used in that way elsewhere in the New Testament to speak of the church in the wilderness, referring to Israel as the assembled people of God in the wilderness. It was used in extra biblical Greek culture to speak of a town meeting. Any group of assembled people. And that’s exactly its use in this text. It anticipates the church of Pentecost. It anticipates the church of today. It anticipates the official church with a capital C, that born by the baptism of the Spirit of God in Acts 2. It anticipates that for sure. But here the root idea is simply the collection of the redeemed community, the assembly of the redeemed, and it doesn’t have to wait for Pentecost to be applied. It can be immediately implied in the assembly of the disciples who are gathered in the house at Capernaum on the day Jesus taught it. It simply means the collection of God’s assembled people.

D. (:17b) Step #4 = Excommunication

“and if he refuses to listen even to the church, let him be to you as a Gentile and a tax-gatherer.”

Donald Hagner: Thus the unrepentant offender is not simply put out of the community but categorized as among the worst sort of persons. (The Pauline admonitions of 1 Cor 5:9–13 and 2 Thess 3:14–15 are similar in effect; cf. Titus 3:10.)

David Turner: Repeated rejection of the overtures of a fellow disciple, of two or three additional witnesses, and then of the entire community is tantamount to rejection of Jesus and the Father.

Jeffrey Crabtree: Fourth, if the offender refuses to repent, “even” (v. 17, Greek ascensive kai; Osborne 686) to the church, both the offended party (v. 17, “thee”) and the church (v. 18, “ye”) are to withdraw fellowship and treat the offender as an unsaved person with no rights and privileges normally associated with congregational life. . . Blomberg (56) rightly sees a link between this withdrawal and the law's requirement to cut off offenders from Israel (Gen. 17:14; Ex. 12:15, 19; 30:33, 38; Lev. 17:10; Num. 19:13). Godly communities in both testaments were instructed to keep the community clean by disciplining antinomian and errant members.

II. (:18-20) DELEGATED AUTHORITY TO THE BELIEVING COMMUNITY FOR DEALING WITH SIN – PROCESS OF RATIFICATION

Richard Gardner: Having followed the text thus far, the reader might well ask: Does the church have authority to act in this way? Verses 18-20 supply an answer to that question. According to verse 18 (which begins with the solemn formula Truly, I tell you), the power to bind and loose granted to Peter in 16:19 is now bestowed by Jesus on the disciples as a group, and thus on every community of believers. In the context of the discussion about sin in the church, bind and loose convey the sense of convict and acquit, and may allude to the extreme case of excommunication. The church, then, has authority to pronounce judgment in God's name, and the church has authority to release persons from that judgment and restore them to fellowship.

R. T. France: The change from the second person singular address of vv. 15–17 to the second person plural in vv. 18 and 19 marks a broadening of the subject. The specific case dealt with in vv. 15–17 is left behind, and we are told now about the authority with which the disciple community as a whole has been entrusted. So here we find the theoretical background which justifies the practical appeal to the ekklēsia in v. 17. The corporate wisdom of the community as to what is and is not permitted (“tying” and “untying,” see on 16:19) represents not only their human judgment but the will of God in heaven; what they corporately declare to be “sin” God also disallows.

David Thompson: Now verses 18-20 are verses connected to this very context. The point of these verses is this: whenever a sinning brother has been confronted in this manner and the church has been told, whatever stand the church takes on earth will be honored in heaven. If the church determines that the brother is in sin and after refusing to repent, it stands against him, God will stand against him. If the church determines the brother has repented and is freed from the sin, God will view it the same way.

These are solemn and serious words against a non-repentant brother or sister. God carefully follows and monitors the disciplinary process of the church. God would give the church tremendous authority. The assumption of verse 19 is that the church is praying about the sin issue. The church is obeying the Word and praying to the Father. Notice that this is done in the name of Jesus Christ, which adds a new dimension to prayer. When two or three are gathered together to confront sin matters with a brother, Jesus Christ is in their midst. When God's people are praying about sin matters, God is powerfully at work. God expects His church to face things and deal with things, not run from things. Great disciples do not run away from problems. They face them and deal with them and go on for the glory of God.

A. (:18) Scope of Authority = To Bind or Loose

“Truly I say to you, whatever you shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatever you loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.”

Donald Hagner: Here the binding and loosing have to do directly with matters of church discipline, whereas in 16:19 they concern matters of conduct more generally. However, in both instances the ultimate issue concerns membership in the community. In the present instance, which addresses the case of one who has “sinned” (v. 15), the connection with John 20:23 (“If you forgive [ἀφῆτε] the sins of any, they are forgiven; if you retain [κρατῆτε] the sins of any, they are retained”) becomes more apparent. Loosing is the equivalent of forgiving, binding of retaining. The leadership thus has the ability to make decisions concerning unrepentant sinners in the community—decisions that carry authority such that they are said to be likewise fixed in heaven. At stake is nothing less than the ultimate welfare of the offending individual.

Jeffrey Crabtree: The church should not only be characterized by confrontation of sin and compassion toward repentant brothers but also consensus in its disciplinary action (Wilkins 620). This entire disciplinary procedure is to be bathed in unity and prayer (v. 19). The church that agrees to carefully contemplate God’s will in disciplinary matters will find that God will reveal His will to them and support their disciplinary actions against the wayward brothers or sisters.

J. Ligon Duncan: Now binding and loosing is a wonderful natural metaphor drawn from the law court. Binding referring to the idea of condemning. Loosing referring to the idea of acquitting. You get the picture. A prisoner who is bound, who is not yet freed, is still at least still under the suspicion of the court, if not under the open condemnation of the court, but a prisoner who is loosed is considered innocent and free in light of the court. And so the language of binding and loosing refers to the action of the officers of the church when they admit members into the fellowship and when they very sadly and regretfully have to dismiss members from the fellowship of the leaders.

B. (:19-20) Solidarity and Divine Presence

1. (:19) Disciplinary Solidarity Ratified by the Father

“Again I say to you, that if two of you agree on earth about anything that they may ask, it shall be done for them by My Father who is in heaven.”

Grant Osborne: So while “ask for” (αἰτέω) is often used of prayer in the NT, here it is specifically a prayer for wisdom and the Spirit’s guidance in decisions regarding discipline. Thus “any matter” (παντὸς πράγματος) is virtually synonymous with πᾶν ῥῆμα in v. 16, “every matter” that the church is facing in issues of discipline. The phrase here was commonly used in legal/judicial “matters” (so Hill, Carson).

Daniel Doriani: He does not promise that if two people agree about anything whatsoever he will grant it. He promises aid to disciples when we meet to heal broken relationships in the church.

Michael Wilkins: Jesus assumes the place of the divine presence among his disciples, guaranteeing that when his followers have consensus when asking in prayer for guidance in matters of discipline, his Father in heaven will guide them as they carry it out.

2. (:20) Divine Presence of Christ in the Disciplinary Process

“For where two or three have gathered together in My name, there I am in their midst.”

Charles Swindoll: The point is that as soon as the proper process of accountability, confrontation, and discipline begins, Jesus is present, and God the Father is working through the interactions that take place. Even in the private, one-on-one confrontation, two believers are present in Jesus' name, and the result will be that God will confirm and empower the actions that are taken in conformity with His Word.

Karl Jacobson: Jesus offers a simple guide to help us handle our sin and its consequences here. But far more importantly Jesus promises us that he is present, that his presence is real for us, when we are gathered in his name — both in agreement, and in sin. Within the context of the overarching narrative of Matthew, which is governed by the promised real presence of God, in the promise of child named Emmanuel, God With Us (1:23) and in this God's parting assurance to us that he is with us always (28:20), this is the Good News for us who are members with one another of Christ's church.

<https://www.workingpreacher.org/commentaries/revised-common-lectionary/ordinary-23/commentary-on-matthew-1815-20-2>

Grant Osborne: The “two or three” as in vv. 16, 19 are the witnesses confronting the guilty person. As they make their decision, certainly while in prayer, Jesus wants them to understand that he is with them, and the “heavenly Father” is guiding their verdict.

The omnipresence of Jesus in the church is a central concept in Matthew (cf. 1:23; 28:20), and as Luz says, is “the christological center of the entire chapter.” Jesus is virtually declaring his divinity, for such a claim is possible only for God himself. To gather “in my name” (εἰς τὸ ἔμὸν ὄνομα) means to be in union with Jesus, part of his community, and under his authority (cf. 7:22; 10:22; 18:5). So Jesus is especially present among them, not just metaphorically but through the Spirit of Christ in their midst. This does not mean Jesus is with us only corporately and not individually, for as in 1 Cor 5:4 we can know that “the power of the Lord Jesus is present” with us.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What types of sins should be covered by love vs. what types of sins require direct confrontation?
- 2) How does excommunication mesh with the purpose of discipline which is to love your brother and seek his restoration?
- 3) Why do so many local churches ignore and disobey these clear instructions from Jesus and refuse to administer any church discipline?
- 4) How are verses 18-20 used improperly by ignoring the context here of church discipline?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Charles Swindoll: Before we walk through Jesus' step-by-step process of accountability, confrontation, and church discipline, it would help to take a step back and consider five general principles that help bring clarity and balance to our understanding of this important topic.

1. First, confronting serious sin is loving.
2. Second, confronting serious sin requires us to have the fortitude to do what's right.
3. Third, confronting serious sin is not optional.
4. Fourth, confronting serious sin is not penal but remedial.
5. Finally, confronting serious sin is not for outsiders but for insiders. Church discipline is to be carried out by believers and for believers.

Craig Blomberg: In an age in which churches can be sued for disciplining their members unless procedures have been stated in writing and disseminated and explained to all the congregation, it is imperative to think carefully about how to implement Jesus' instructions. Many churches avoid the problem simply by disobeying Jesus and making no attempt to follow his principles.

Application also proves difficult because our society for the most part is not made up of those tightly knit communities whose welcome or rejection had a powerful impact on individuals in the ancient world. Today, church members who are disciplined often leave one congregation for another that accepts them with no questions asked. Only as we recreate intimate community within the local church and networks of accountability among different churches can we hope to apply these verses effectively. But without this application, sin in the church will continue to compromise the unity and testimony of God's people.

Daniel Doriani: Listening comes up three times in our passage. . .

First, we listen with our ears, to hear the words. We try to follow what others say and what they mean. If a speaker struggles to articulate a thought, we help, knowing that some things are hard to express.

Second, we listen with our eyes, watching the eyes and the body of those who speak. Are they tense? Is there something more they want to say? Does their mouth say one thing and their body another? Proverbs says, "Even in laughter the heart may ache" (Prov. 14:13). As a professor, I noticed that students occasionally made appointments for the most trivial matters. Half a point on a quiz could be resolved in thirty seconds after class, but they wanted a thirty-minute session. They came, we resolved the putative issue in two minutes, and then they sat, a bit tense, on the edge of the chair, not quite ready to go. I would ask, "Is there something else you want to talk about?" "Yes," they would reply. "There is one other thing. I finish in six months and I really don't know what to do after graduation. If you have another minute . . ."

Third, we listen with our heart. To listen with the heart is not to listen for emotions. In the Bible, the heart is the center of life, the core of our being. The Bible says the Lord knows the secrets of the heart, tests the heart, weighs the heart, probes the heart (Ps. 44:21; Prov. 21:2; Jer. 17:10; 20:12). It is the source from which we speak and move. For this we must look and listen.

Jason Lim: Go and Tell Him His Fault

The way the world deals with conflict is either to take revenge or to walk away. But God's people are called to a higher ethic- we are to confront our offenders about their sin. Not in bitterness or in a vengeful spirit, but in a spirit of gentleness and love. We are to love one another and to restore one another from ongoing sin. Jesus gave very specific steps as to how we should speak to a brother regarding a fault.

I. What is the Purpose of church discipline.

A story is told of a pastor who had a conflict with his worship leader and he was preaching a sermon on encouraging the people of God to get up and to serve. But the song leader after the service, after the message, came up and said, “We will sing our last song - I shall not be moved.” Alright, next week, the pastor came up to preach another sermon and the sermon now is about giving, about giving your finances for the advancement of the kingdom. After the service, the worship leader again came up and said, “We shall sing our last song - Jesus paid it all.”

This guy ... third sermon, he preached about gossip and how we not we should not gossip, and the song leader got up, after the sermon and said, “We shall sing our last song - I love to tell the story.” The next Sunday, the pastor got up again and said, and preached and then he said, “You know, I've been feeling of stress and strain, I feel like I should resign from the church.” And the song leader got up and said, “This will be our last song – O, why not tonight?”

You know, sometimes we hate someone so much you want to get rid of that person. That's why we think, “Oh, we need to go and tell him his fault because if he doesn't repent, good, the church will come and kick him out.” But that's not the purpose! We need to understand why. The reason as I've mentioned again is out of love that you want to gain your brother. This is why it is so counter-cultural. In the world, when you're offended, people generally like to give an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth. You've cost me to be upset, I will do something to make you upset. . .

So I want you to be clear that when we talk about church discipline, though the word, ‘discipline’ sounds fierce. You imagine your principal, scary... but actually the intention behind it must be love. It is for the good of the offender. You don't go to him to tekan [bully in Malay] him. You go to him to love him. That's the purpose! I think that's the most important point.

II. What is the Procedure to church discipline.

Now, some of you do mathematics, you are brilliant, you're a genius, you're working, you skip steps. But when it comes to church discipline you cannot skip steps. . .

Now, you must understand the wisdom of following it step-by-step. It's giving the offender maximal opportunity and grace to repent. That's the goal!

III. What are the Principles for church discipline?

1. Principle 1: Take The Initiative
2. Principle 2: Not Too Loud Please!
3. Principle 3: Clarify Your Goal
4. Principle 4: Check Your Facts
5. Principle 5: Step Up When Needed
6. Principle 6: Do All In Gentleness And Love

<https://gospellight.sg/sermons/go-and-tell-him-his-fault-matthew-1815-20/>

Scott Harris: God's Correction of His Children (Heb. 12:4-11)

In this scenario you see something in a brother that needs to be corrected. The potential is that this could be any sin, but since both Proverbs 10:12 and 1 Peter 4:8 tell us that love covers a multitude of sins, this is not referring to the minor irritations of life that can either be overlooked, the true definition of tolerance, or handled with a gentle admonishment such as caution or request for a more righteous action. There are many things we do that are in fact sinful because they arise out of pride and selfishness instead of seeking God's glory, and they may even be mildly irritating, but they are relatively minor. They can be tolerated.

If the sin is more serious so that it is causing a conflict in the relationship or is an obvious blight on the glory of Christ, then something must be said. However, even then what was considered to be a sin may in fact be a misunderstanding or an honest difference of opinion about what is right. Talking about it privately allows for correction of misunderstandings and tolerance for differences of opinion. Even if you do in fact see a better way, there can be tolerance and nothing needs to escalate unless it is a Biblically defined sin that is obvious or continuing. Or viewed from another angle, if what you see requires repentance, then you need to talk with them about it. If it does not, then you could mention it but you don't have to do so. . .

Combining the principles of these passages we find that while any sin has the potential of escalating through the steps of church discipline, not all issues require direct confrontation. There is a lot of room for tolerance generated by genuine love and for minor issues to be handled by gentle admonishment. However, in our society which views tolerance as a supreme virtue, which it most certainly is not, there is a great danger of overlooking things in the name of love when the real reason is either indifference, the opposite of love, or fear of involvement. These passages also makes clear that obvious sin must be confronted in the effort to win a brother back. You only go to step two if the individual is stubborn. . .

The idea of treating the person as a Gentile and tax-gatherer confuses most people. First, this does not mean to ostracize or to shun. There is no room in Christianity for treating other people with that sort of disdain. Jesus commanded us in Matthew 5:44 that we are to love our enemies and pray for even those that persecute us. To treat a person as a Gentile and tax-gatherer is to treat the person as a non-Christian and to refuse to have fellowship with them.

The Steps of Church Discipline (:15-17)

The Authority for Church Discipline (:18-20)

Jesus explains in Matthew 18:18-20 that God has given the church the authority to correct those who profess to be one of His children. We do not practice church discipline on those who are not Christians.

First, the church has authority to carry out discipline even to its conclusion in disfellowship because Jesus commands it here in Matthew 18:15-17.

Second, the church has the authority to forbid and permit. . .

The idea of bind or loose, as I pointed out earlier in Matthew 16:19, has nothing to do with Satan & demons. To bind or to loose has to do with “whatever” and not “whoever.” The phrase is a Rabbinic expression meaning forbidding and permitting. The Church has the authority to examine a person's life and compare it with the Scriptures and then determine whether that person is in sin or not and whether they are repentant or not.

<https://www.gracebible.org/gods-correction-of-his-children-matthew-1815-20>

TEXT: Matthew 18:21-35

TITLE: UNLIMITED FORGIVENESS TO FELLOW BELIEVERS

BIG IDEA:

HAVING BEEN FORGIVEN MUCH, BELIEVERS MUST NOT PUT LIMITS ON THE FORGIVENESS THEY EXTEND TO OTHERS

INTRODUCTION:

R. T. France: The opening exhortation to forgive without limit is undergirded by a parable which compares God's forgiveness and ours; it is because there is no limit to God's generosity to his undeserving people that they in their turn cannot claim the right to withhold forgiveness from their fellow-disciples. A community of the forgiven must be a forgiving community. . . The parable thus speaks of the totally unmerited grace of God which forgives his people more than they could ever imagine because they are unable to help themselves.

Donald Hagner: Conduct in the community of disciples called "the church" is to be patterned after the mercy and grace of God's free forgiveness of sins—which is an important basis for the very existence of the community. As God freely forgives those who have sinned against him, so are disciples to freely forgive those who sin against them. In both instances the repentance of the sinner is assumed. The failure to forgive one who is repentant casts doubt on the genuineness of a person's discipleship. The refusal to forgive others will be reflected upon the disciple in God's refusal to forgive him or her. Thus, in keeping with the thrust of the larger discourse, we see again the high importance of a person's conduct toward other members of the community. The community must treat its members as God treats them. Failure in this respect creates an intolerable inconsistency at the very point where the kingdom is to manifest itself: in the community of the redeemed, living in a fallen world.

Stu Weber: We are obligated, because of the Father's infinite mercy toward us, to treat with unconditional mercy our fellow believers who sin against us.

Jesus completed his discourse about the value and treatment of his children with one more caution applied to our relationships with fellow believers who sin against us. As we deal with straying believers (18:15-20), we may be tempted to become merciless toward them, especially when they sin against us. In abandoning mercy, we forget that the Father has shown us great mercy. In this regard, we are no better than our sinning fellow believers. Jesus illustrated through a parable the attitude we are to display toward those who are "indebted" to us in their sins against us. It is an attitude that he displayed lavishly toward us, and we are to imitate this attitude in our relationships with others.

Forgiving our sinning brothers and sisters is a part of our duty toward God's children, just as it is our duty to pursue them for restoration to righteousness. To fail to forgive fellow believers is to abuse God's children, and so incur the Father's wrath. Forgiveness is a foundational characteristic of the family of God.

Stanley Saunders: Jesus envisions a quantum leap to boundless, over the top, absurd, unimaginable levels of forgiveness. Jesus' call to forgive "seventy-seven" times counters the pronouncement of murderous revenge by Cain's descendant Lamech (Gen. 4:24). God's empire does not trade in such terror, nor find "justice" in revenge, but stands in contrast to the bloody violence and retribution that stain human experience to this day. Jesus' answer also suggests that disciples should not anticipate an end to the sin or violence of the world around them, nor even the end of sin in the community of disciples. But to retaliate, to act in kind, is not permitted. Jesus' call to enduring, relentless forgiveness makes the disciples a new "generation," the first since the generation of Cain to trust themselves wholly to the power of forgiveness—not only when it seems reasonable or possible, but when it is unthinkable. . .

Forgiveness is the defining discipline of the community of disciples. Unlimited forgiveness bears continued witness to the distinctive nature of God's reign and offers a true alternative, perhaps the only alternative, to the cycles of exploitation, violence, and revenge that plague the world. A church that dedicates itself to the practice of unlimited forgiveness is necessarily diverse, resilient, schooled in dealing with conflict, patient, and supportive. Limitless forgiveness cannot be sustained by individuals alone, nor even by a collection of individuals, but requires the sustained attention of a disciplined community that will not gloss over conflicts and differences or settle for words rather than transformed relationships.

I. (:21-22) POSING THE QUESTION OF THE EXTENT OF FORGIVENESS

A. (:21) Sincere Question – What Should Be the Extent of Forgiveness?

"Then Peter came and said to Him,

'Lord, how often shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him? Up to seven times?'"

William Barclay: Peter was not without warrant for this suggestion. It was Rabbinic teaching that a person must forgive another three times. Rabbi Jose ben Hanina said: 'He who begs forgiveness from his neighbour must not do so more than three times.' Rabbi Jose ben Jehuda said: 'If a man commits an offence once, they forgive him; if he commits an offence a second time, they forgive him; if he commits an offence a third time, they forgive him; the fourth time they do not forgive.' The biblical proof that this was correct was taken from Amos. In the opening chapters of Amos, there is a series of condemnations on the various nations for three transgressions and for four (1:3, 6, 9, 11, 13; 2:1, 4, 6). From this, it was deduced that God's forgiveness extends to three offences and that he visits the sinner with punishment at the fourth. It was not to be thought that people could be more gracious than God, so forgiveness was limited to three times.

Peter thought that he was going very far, for he takes the Rabbinic three times, multiplies it by two, for good measure adds one, and suggests, with eager self-satisfaction, that it will be enough if he forgives seven times. Peter expected to be warmly commended; but Jesus' answer was that the Christian must forgive seventy times seven. In other words, there is no reckonable limit to forgiveness.

Craig Blomberg: Peter seems to have learned the lesson of Jesus' teaching in vv. 10-14 and generously proposes to forgive fellow disciples seven times. Seven is a common biblical number for completeness and goes well beyond the rabbinic maxim of forgiving three times (e.g., b. Yoma 86b, 87a). "Against me" parallels "against you" in v. 15. Peter's words likely allude to the sevenfold avenging of Cain; Jesus' reply contrasts starkly with the seventy-sevenfold avenging of Lamech (Gen 4:24).

J. Ligon Duncan: Peter thinks that the Lord is going to be impressed with his generosity, and commend him for being such a gracious soul as to be willing to forgive someone up to seven times, but in this passage, in verses 21 and 22, Jesus teaches us that Christians' willingness to forgive ought to be unlimited. No limit on the Christian's willingness to forgive. And so when Peter asks Him "Up to seven times?", expecting that pat on the back in response, he gets instead the Lord saying, "No, Peter, 70 times 7," meaning "Don't even count. When someone comes to you and asks forgiveness, you be ready and willing to extend it, not just seven times, not just seven times a day, but you have a heart that is ready to forgive and which puts no limit on the willingness to forgive." Jesus, you see, is undercutting Peter's rabbinical counting approach to mercy. Jesus is saying, "Peter, your heart needs to be transformed by your realization of how much God has forgiven you. And if you'll think for a minute, Peter, how much God has forgiven You."

B. (:22) Shocking Answer -- Limitless

"Jesus said to him,

'I do not say to you, up to seven times, but up to seventy times seven.'"

Craig Blomberg: We dare not keep track of the number of times we grant forgiveness. Jesus takes Peter's number of completeness and multiplies it considerably. Few people ever have to forgive the same person this often, at least not over a short period of time. But Jesus' point is not to withhold forgiveness after the seventy-eighth (or 491st) offense. As with the principles in vv. 15-16, Jesus' advice may work well with unbelievers too, but his primary focus remains on believers. And genuine repentance, which includes changed behavior, must occur, or the principles of vv. 15-18 come into play instead. The subsequent parable (vv. 23-35) will illustrate both the incredible generosity believers should demonstrate in forgiving fellow believers who do beg for mercy and promise to change as well as the severe judgment awaiting those who refuse to forgive or respond properly to forgiveness.

David Thompson: Now these numbers are interesting. They are Biblical numbers. For example, in Genesis 4:24 this is the number that Lamech would be avenged if he were wronged. But more significantly than this is Daniel's prophecy in Daniel 9:24-27. This was the total number of years (70 times 7, or 490 years) from the time of Daniel until the time the Messiah would set up His kingdom for Israel. He would be cut off after 483 years, which from the time of Daniel was the exact amount of years until Christ entered Jerusalem, which would leave seven years prior to the kingdom, which will be the seven years of the Tribulation. These numbers are grace numbers in that it shows God will graciously give Israel her kingdom in spite of her persistent sin and rebellion. Jesus is telling Peter that disciples should be gracious and forgive sin time and time again, when there has been repentance.

II. (:23-34) PUTTING FORGIVENESS IN PERSPECTIVE – IMITATE THE EXAMPLE OF GOD'S COMPASSION AND MERCY

(:23) Introduction to the Parable

"For this reason the kingdom of heaven may be compared to a certain king who wished to settle accounts with his slaves."

Craig Blomberg: As in vv. 10-14, Jesus uses a parable to explain the rationale for his previous commands. In a nutshell his teaching is this: God eternally and unconditionally forgives those who repent of so immense a debt against him that it is unconscionable for believers to refuse to grant forgiveness to each other for sins that remain trivial in comparison.

Charles Swindoll: The story in Matthew 18:23-34 illustrates a vital principle of the kingdom of heaven. When Jesus mentions “the kingdom,” He’s often not talking about the place we call heaven—that spiritual realm where God dwells. Frequently, Jesus is seeking to bring out aspects of kingdom living, a lifestyle with distinct principles, priorities, and allegiances. In such cases, the “kingdom of heaven” or “kingdom of God” is discussed to encourage followers to imitate the model of Jesus, the King. As believers and members of the church—the mysterious spiritual form of the kingdom on earth—we emulate the character of the King and are transformed into His likeness. And in this realm of kingdom living, the grace and mercy expressed in limitless forgiveness are paramount.

A. (:24-27) Example of Great Mercy

1. (:24-25) Legitimate Debt Requires Full Repayment

a. (:24) Legitimate Debt

“And when he had begun to settle them, there was brought to him one who owed him ten thousand talents.”

D. A. Carson: We glimpse some idea of the size of the indebtedness when we recall that David donated three thousand talents of gold and seven thousand talents of silver for the construction of the temple, and the princes provided five thousand talents of gold and ten thousand talents of silver (1Ch 29:4, 7). Some recent estimates suggest a dollar value of twelve million, but with inflation and fluctuating precious metal prices, this could be over a billion dollars in today’s currency.

R. T. France: A talent was originally a weight (probably about 30 kg.) of metal; when used as a monetary term without specifying the metal involved it would probably have been understood to be of silver. While the exact amount varied, a talent of silver was conventionally reckoned at 6,000 denarii. If one denarius was an acceptable day’s wage for a laborer (see 20:1–15), a single talent would then represent what a laborer might hope to earn in half a lifetime. It was, at all events, a very large sum of money. Ten thousand talents (sixty million denarii; or some 300 tons of silver!) is therefore a sum far outside any individual’s grasp. Ten thousand (myria, hence our “myriad”) is the largest numeral for which a Greek term exists, and the talent is the largest known amount of money. When the two are combined the effect is like our “zillions.” What God has forgiven his people is beyond human calculation.

b. (:25) Lack of Resources to Repay Leads to Bondage

*“But since he did not have the means to repay, his lord commanded him to be sold, along with his wife and children and all that he had,
and repayment to be made.”*

2. (:26-27) Compassionate Grace Extends Merciful Forgiveness

a. (:26) Plea for Mercy with Unrealistic Promise

*“The slave therefore falling down, prostrated himself before him, saying,
'Have patience with me, and I will repay you everything.'”*

Grant Osborne: The strong imagery of “falling down” and “prostrating” himself before the king shows how desperate the man was. He begs for mercy and “patience” (with “be patient” [μακροθυμέω] often used of God’s “long-suffering” toward Israel in the LXX). The very same plea will be made by the fellow slave in v. 29. Obviously the man could never “pay back everything” with such a huge debt. So the king’s mercy is given even greater emphasis by this patently ridiculous pledge.

- b. (:27) Practicing Compassion in Canceling the Debt
“And the lord of that slave felt compassion and released him and forgave him the debt.”

Craig Blomberg: The man begs for mercy and makes a promise he almost certainly will not be able to keep. To the astonishment of Jesus’ original audience, the king pities the man and cancels his debt. Not only will he not sell him into slavery, but he will not require repayment of any kind. Sheer grace is at work here. “Took pity” is the same word for the compassion that characterizes Jesus’ emotions and behavior in 9:36; 14:14; 15:32; and 20:34.

Donald Hagner: The metaphor of forgiven debt for the forgiveness of sins is found in Luke 7:40–43 (where the greater the debt, the greater the love of the debtor for the creditor). In response to the plea of the servant for clemency in the form of the time to repay the enormous debt, the sovereign responds with nearly unimaginable grace in the full dismissal of all indebtedness. It is not difficult to hear the echo of the gospel of the forgiveness of sins in this verse.

B. (:28-34) Example of Great Hypocrisy

1. (:28) Forgiven Debtor of Much Should Not Be Abusive Collector of Little

“But that slave went out and found one of his fellow slaves who owed him a hundred denarii; and he seized him and began to choke him, saying, 'Pay back what you owe.'”

William Barclay: The biblical scholar A. R. S. Kennedy drew this vivid picture to contrast the debts. Suppose they were paid in small coins (he suggested sixpences; we might think in terms of 5-pence pieces or dimes). The 100-denarii debt could be carried in one pocket. The 10,000-talent debt would take an army of about 8,600 carriers to carry it, each carrying a sack of coins 60 lb in weight; and they would form, at a distance of a yard apart, a line five miles long! The contrast between the debts is staggering. The point is that nothing that others can do to us can in any way compare with what we have done to God; and if God has forgiven us the debt we owe to him, we must forgive our neighbours the debts they owe to us. Nothing that we have to forgive can even faintly or remotely compare with what we have been forgiven.

2. (:29-30) Insistence on Retribution Exposes a Heart of No Compassion and No Mercy

- a. (:29) Plea for Mercy
“So his fellow slave fell down and began to entreat him, saying, 'Have patience with me and I will repay you.'”

- b. (:30) Pursuit of Retribution
“He was unwilling however, but went and threw him in prison until he should pay back what was owed.”

Craig Blomberg: “He refused” is literally he was not willing, showing that the servant made a conscious choice to harden his heart. Needless to say, the other servants are outraged and report the matter to the king.

3. (:31-34) Failure to Forgive Consigns One to Painful Torment

a. (:31) Shocking Hypocrisy

“So when his fellow slaves saw what had happened, they were deeply grieved and came and reported to their lord all that had happened.”

Grant Osborne: The other slaves “saw” it all (temporal participle ἰδόντες) and had an intense reaction. “Distressed” (ἐλυπήθησαν) has overtones of both grief and indignation, and the depth of their reaction at the man’s harsh hypocrisy led them to report it all to the king, with διαφέω meaning to “tell in detail” or “explain fully” the events to the king.

b. (:32-33) Shameful Indictment

1) (:32) Your Experience of Great Mercy

“Then summoning him, his lord said to him, ‘You wicked slave, I forgave you all that debt because you entreated me.’”

Richard Gardner: The reaction of the king to the news of this transaction is one of righteous indignation. He calls the official wicked because of the heartless way he has treated a brother servant. He points to the inconsistency of accepting a gift of mercy and withholding mercy from another. And he consigns the official to torture in prison until he comes up with the money. It is the same action the official himself took in relation to his fellow servant (cf. v. 30). Only now, where the debt in question can never be repaid, the implication of the sentence is imprisonment forever.

2) (:33) Your Response of No Mercy

“Should you not also have had mercy on your fellow slave, even as I had mercy on you?”

c. (:34) Severe Punishment

“And his lord, moved with anger, handed him over to the torturers until he should repay all that was owed him.”

Ray Stedman: [Explaining the “torment” experienced by those who fail to forgive:]

This is a marvelously expressive phrase to describe what happens to us when we do not forgive another. It is an accurate description of gnawing resentment and bitterness, the awful gall of hate or envy. It is a terrible feeling. We cannot get away from it, we cannot escape it. We find ourselves powerless to avoid it. We feel strongly this separation from another, and, every time we think of them, we feel within the acid of resentment and hate eating away at our peace and calmness. This is the torturing that our Lord says will take place.

Donald Hagner: Torturers, though disallowed by the Jews, were common in Roman prisons; in the case of unpaid debt, friends and relations would have accordingly been more urgent in raising money. Given the enormity of the debt, the imprisonment would have been permanent. This together with the reference to the torturers may hint (cf. v. 35) at eschatological punishment. This verse is the close counterpart of v. 30, which describes in similar language the servant’s imprisonment of his fellow servant until his debt was paid. It demonstrates concretely the teaching that as one treats others so also will one be treated, a point made explicit in the application of the parable in the following verse.

III. (:35) APPLICATION OF THE PARABLE – FAILURE TO FORGIVE DISQUALIFIES YOU AS A GENUINE DISCIPLE

“So shall My heavenly Father also do to you, if each of you does not forgive his brother from your heart.”

Craig Blomberg: Jesus' conclusion reminds us of what v. 23 made clear—that the purpose of the story is to communicate a spiritual lesson about the kingdom of heaven. It also points out that, at least on this occasion, Jesus was not trying primarily to conceal truth from the crowds but to clarify it for his disciples. The reference to a “brother” ties Jesus' conclusion in with Peter's original question (v. 21). The following three themes emerge from the main characters and episodes of the parable: God's boundless grace, the absurdity of spurning that grace, and the frightful fate awaiting the unforgiving. The law of end-stress highlights the third of these, but all are important. Carson correctly captures the balance of mercy and judgment reflected here: “Jesus sees no incongruity in the actions of a heavenly Father who forgives so bountifully and punishes so ruthlessly, and neither should we. Indeed, it is precisely because he is a God of such compassion and mercy that he cannot possibly accept as his those devoid of compassion and mercy.”

David Turner: The connection of the story with 6:14 is clear. Disciples cannot presume that God will forgive them if they are unwilling to forgive their fellows. Those who have genuinely received forgiveness will be forgiving to others (6:14–15; cf. Luke 6:36; Eph. 4:31–5:2; James 2:13; 1 John 4:11). And this forgiveness must be genuine, from the heart, another important Matthean theme (cf. Matt. 5:8, 28; 6:21; 11:29; 12:34; 13:15, 19; 15:8, 18, 19; 22:37; 24:48).

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How does this passage help you appreciate the depth of the Lord’s forgiveness?
- 2) Is there someone in your life whom you struggle to forgive?
- 3) How does the obligation to forgive differ in the case where the person is repentant as opposed to when the person is unrepentant?
- 4) What are some of the negative consequences of an unforgiving heart?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

William Barclay: [This parable] teaches that lesson which runs through all the New Testament – we must forgive in order to be forgiven. Those who will not forgive others cannot hope that God will forgive them. “Blessed are the merciful,” said Jesus, “for they will receive mercy” (Matthew 5:7). No sooner had Jesus taught his disciples his own prayer than he went on to expand and explain one petition in it: “For if you forgive others their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you; but if you do not forgive others, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses” (Matthew 6:14–15). As James had it: “For judgment will be without mercy to anyone who has shown no mercy” (James 2:13). Divine and human forgiveness go hand in hand.

Warren Wiersbe: The main character in this parable went through three stages in his experience of forgiveness.

(1) He was a debtor (vv. 23-27).

(2) He was a creditor (vv. 28-30).

Perhaps he had the legal right to throw the man in prison, but he did not have the moral right. He had been forgiven himself – should he not forgive his fellow servant? He and his family had been spared the shame and suffering of prison. Should he not spare his friend?

(3) He became a prisoner (vv. 31-34).

The world’s worst prison is the prison of an unforgiving heart. If we refuse to forgive others, then we are only imprisoning ourselves and causing our own torment. Some of the most miserable people I have met in my ministry have been people who would not forgive others.

R. T. France: While a hundred denarii is a plausible amount for one man to owe another, ten thousand talents is far beyond what any individual, still less a slave, might owe even to a king. The suggestion that the first debtor is in fact a highly-placed official responsible for handling the tax revenues of a large province may perhaps bring the sum closer to the bounds of possibility, but the way the rest of the story is told hardly encourages that supposition; note that the debt is described in v. 27 as a “loan,” and that the debtor is a “slave”. But in any case there is no need to make the sum more possible. A parable is not necessarily a reflection of real life. It is an imaginary story designed to make a point in a striking way, and the more improbable the sums involved the greater the audience’s gasps of astonishment and the greater their amazement both at the unheard-of generosity of the master and at the obtuseness of the slave. Larger-than-life imagery makes for compelling listening, and is not well served by pedantic explanation.

Jeffrey Crabtree: The O.T. character Joseph is a classic example of the type of forgiveness Jesus requires of all of His followers (Gen. 50:17-21). See also Stephen’s prayer in Acts 7:60. However, none can compare to the Savior who prayed while dying on the cross, “Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do” (Lk. 23:34).

J. Ligon Duncan: And so we ask ourselves, “What then does it mean that we ought to be ready to forgive? What if the other person is not repentant?” Well, Jesus is ready for us there as well, because He’s speaking in this passage, about an attitude of forgiveness.

Calvin helps us, by the way, in this area in his commentary by suggesting that there are two kinds of forgiveness. There is the willingness to forgive, and there is that forgiveness of a repentant person that helps restore the relationship. Those are two different things. There may be times where God calls upon You to have a merciful heart toward someone who is not yet repentant. God may call on You to be ready to forgive that person in case they are repentant, and yet to deal with the fact that they have not gotten to the point where they have seen their sin. In that case, you can't restore the relationship on your own. You can't bring about reconciliation because the other party doesn't think there needs to be any reconciliation, doesn't think there's been any offense to you. But you can be ready to forgive.

J.C. Ryle puts it beautifully. He says, "It takes two to make a quarrel, but let us purpose ourselves as Christians that we will not be the one." We will not be the obstacles to reconciliation in the relationship. Our hearts are going to be open to reconciliation in the relationship if only our brother or sister will cooperate. But isn't it so often the other way around? We, ourselves, want forgiveness to extended immediately to us – in fact we almost think it's a right – but when we are deeply hurt, when we have been deeply wounded in those most serious of sins in relationships, we are very grudging in our willingness to hand out the same kind of mercy that we want for ourselves.

Jason Lim: C. S. Lewis once said, "To be a Christian means to forgive the inexcusable because God has forgiven the inexcusable in you." God's will is for us to forgive our enemies. He wants us to put away all wrath and malice and bitterness. And it is for our good too. Someone said that resentment is like drinking poison hoping the other person dies. Unforgiveness puts us into a prison of suffering. It is a heavy burden for the soul. Unforgiveness is like blood-sucking leeches of your spiritual life. But how can I forgive? It's so hard! The secret is in the gospel -- how God has forgiven the inexcusable in you. You see, the gospel is not a message that cries out, "Pay God for your sins!" The gospel is the glorious news, "Jesus paid it all!" And just as we have received this stunning love that we are fully forgiven of all our sins, we are now to bend this love and forgiveness outwards towards our enemies. Therefore, we must learn to linger at the cross, and soak in the soothing bath of God's love in order that the leeches of unforgiveness can fall off our souls. . .

Matthew 18, verse 21 to 35, really revolves around this subject of vengeance or forgiveness, something we all can identify with. A couple quarrels quite a lot - The husband and the wife. But one day when they were not quarrelling, the husband asked his wife, "Dear, how is it possible that after we quarrel each time, you are able to stay so calm and collected the next day? You don't seem to be angry with me anymore. You don't seem to be upset. How is it that you can remain so collected when I am so upset and I want to shout at you?" The wife says, "Easy! I just clean the toilet." "What?" "Yes, I just clean the toilet." "But how is cleaning the toilet able to keep you calm?" "Well, I clean the toilet using your toothbrush."

Getting even is a natural instinct, isn't it? You see that in little children. . .

Forgiveness is not forgetting. Forgiveness is a voluntary; intentional choice to release someone from a debt they have to pay to you. You see when someone offends you, when someone despises you, when someone slanders you, you feel like there is a debt they have to pay. It's an emotional debt and you hold that person to that debt until he pays. Forgiveness, however, is that voluntary intentional choice to say, "I release you from the debt. I'm not going to make you pay. I'm not going to make you suffer. I'm content to absorb that injury." . . .

I say to you friends, "Your homework today is to go back and to linger there at the cross. To stay there, to soak in the bath, to relish in the amazing love of God. Preach to yourself the Gospel. Remind yourself of what Jesus has done." Each time we gather for Lord's Supper, let there be a reminder of God's love. Each time we gather to worship, as we sing, as we hear God's Word, let us be refreshed in our soul about the love of Jesus. Oh, then you find that perhaps one day, the blood sucking leeches of unforgiveness will finally, finally fall off!

<https://gospellight.sg/sermons/how-shall-i-forgive-matthew-1821-35/>

Ray Stedman: Breaking the Resentment Barrier

The parable we have before us deals with the healing of hurts between people, that is, the way to resolve differences, to heal the breaches that frequently come between members of families and members of churches, to dissolve the resentments and settle the bitter feuds and the fights that sometimes break out.

Some time ago I read a psychologist who said that Christians, he felt, were very much like porcupines on a cold winter's night. The cold drives them to huddle together to keep warm, but as soon as they get close to another they start jabbing each other with their spines and that forces them to move apart; thus they are forever coming together and moving apart in a kind of slow dance.

There may be a great deal of truth to that. You will remember the little jingle that I frequently quote,

*To dwell above with saints we love,
Oh, that will be glory.
But to dwell below
with saints we know,
Well, that's another story.*

But now we want to speak about forgiving one another; the only way to break through the resentment barrier that separates us from each other. Forgiveness, of course, is the virtue we most enjoy, and least employ, in our Christian experience. We all love to be forgiven -- we expect it, and want it. But we find it a struggle to forgive; we resist it, and refuse oftentimes to do it. . .

The valuable of this parable lies in seeing that it is a picture of us. The Lord Jesus is here holding up a mirror in order that we might see ourselves. We are the servant who has been forgiven a vast and staggering amount of money, and God is the great king that has forgiven us.

We must see ourselves in this if we are going to be helped by this word of Jesus. We must see that the sum of our offenses against God through the years constitutes this kind of a debt, an absolutely impossible amount. Our rebellions, our selfish acts and thoughts, our willful choices, our lovelessness toward one another, and the hurt we have caused others, our pride, our anger, our lusts, our bitterness, our hates, and our lies; all these add up through the years to a staggering debt we owe God and which we cannot pay. But then there comes the good news, the wonderful good news of the gospel. There came a day when we stood in the presence of God and heard him pronounce those words, "Forgiven, in Christ's name." The debt was wiped away. In one moment it was gone. How well we remember, as we look back to it, the glory of that moment when we realized that before God we stood cleansed, blameless, free; the debt was paid and we were free.

There are two reasons revealed here why Christians must forgive each other: First, we must forgive because anything less is hypocritical. We cannot demand justice from others because we do not stand on that ground ourselves. As the king said to this servant, "You wicked servant!

Should not you have had mercy on your fellow servant, as I had mercy on you?" This is what Jesus is saying to us. We must forgive one another because we have already been forgiven. Is not that the ground the Apostle Paul takes in Colossians 3, and in Ephesians 4:31?

Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor and slander be put away from you, with all malice, and be kind to one another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, as God in Christ forgave you. (Ephesians 4:31-32 RSV)

That is the basis of Christian forgiveness. Jesus says that, when we refuse to do this, when we hold a grudge, or are difficult or bitter and refuse to settle an issue, then we are doing exactly what this unrighteous steward does here. In the very moment of our own forgiveness we are demanding justice, when we ourselves cannot and do not stand on that level.

The sign that we are acting on the basis of justice and not mercy is that, like this servant, we act harshly. That is the invariable mark we are demanding justice and not acting in forgiveness or mercy. We speak severely and sharply to the other. . .

The second reason we must forgive is because of the torment which an unforgiving spirit inflicts upon us. . .

If we insist on justice, we will be given justice ourselves. As James tell us, "Judgment is without mercy to one who has shown no mercy," (James 2:13). The result will be that we are "delivered to the torturers."

This is a marvelously expressive phrase to describe what happens to us when we do not forgive another. It is an accurate description of gnawing resentment and bitterness, the awful gall of hate or envy. It is a terrible feeling. We cannot get away from it, we cannot escape it. We find ourselves powerless to avoid it. We feel strongly this separation from another, and, every time we think of them, we feel within the acid of resentment and hate eating away at our peace and calmness. This is the torturing that our Lord says will take place. In the book of Hebrews we read, "Let no root of bitterness springing up trouble you," (Hebrews 12:15). Notice where the trouble occurs? It hits you, not the other fellow. . .

Therefore, if there is a grudge, if we have been harboring resentment, if there is a feeling of antipathy, if we do not want to speak to someone else, if we feel cut off from another, two things have happened: We have reacted as an ungrateful wretch to the grace that has been extended to us, just as this unforgiving steward did. Second, we have consigned ourselves to bitterness of heart, to the eating of the acid of resentment to our own hurt. This is why nothing will ever take place toward the healing of the world until there is the healing of the church, the healing of the heart, and the healing of hurts, one with another, by the grace God has shown to us. Let us move over onto this ground, and live on this level.

TEXT: Matthew 19:1-12

TITLE: PERMANENCY OF MARRIAGE

BIG IDEA:

GOD DESIGNED MARRIAGE TO BE A PERMANENT ONE-FLESH DIVINE UNION BETWEEN MAN AND WOMAN FOR LIFE

INTRODUCTION:

Orthodox Evangelical commentators have long been divided on their positions on this passage as it relates to the teaching of Jesus regarding the permanency of marriage and potential for divorce and remarriage. You have John MacArthur and D. A. Carson and the vast majority of Christendom today on the side of allowable exception clauses that would validate divorce and remarriage for believers in specific cases. While John Piper, James Boice, Voddie Baucham and others would hold to no allowance for divorce and remarriage under any circumstances as long as the departing spouse has not yet died. So I enter humbly into this discussion without claiming that I have the last word or the simple truth.

It is interesting that both sides have criticized the other side for taking a position based on utilitarian grounds, when in fact all the players named above certainly have accurate biblical exegesis and the pursuit of truth as their sincere goal. It has been claimed that those holding the permanency view are simply trying to stem the tide of rampant increases in the rates of divorce and remarriage in society. While the reverse charge is that pastoral pressure from the prevalence of complicated life situations has rendered the permissive interpretation less than inductively-based and objective in approach. I choose to stay clear of all such charges and admit the complexity of the issues since so many different passages are involved. I have to add that no expositor can claim complete objectivity, but at least I don't have some of the more common pressures of denominational positions or immediate pastoral pressures of a large church to impact my thinking.

There is no question that a pastoral heart is required for sensitivity towards those who have either experienced or been impacted by such situations. We must always embrace the compassion of God in extending love and forgiveness and grace as we seek to maintain the unity of the body and to encourage all believers to grow in Christ in their present situation. But still truth is truth and we must endeavor to discern the mind of Christ on this important issue and apply truth without compromising.

My personal view aligns with the Permanency of Marriage without any provision for divorce or remarriage. Obviously, the "exception clauses" such as we find in Matt. 19 will be the major sticking point for me. The following observations have informed my conclusions:

- The starting point should be God's design for marriage and His stated hatred of divorce rather than investigating how far one can push the envelope before crossing the line into obvious transgression. How can anything but death of one of the partners break the one-flesh union that God creates in marriage?
- The simple statements of Jesus show that He is comfortable with unambiguous support of the permanency of marriage. It is only in the Jewish context in Matthew, when pressed by the entrapment-minded Pharisees that He addresses any type of possible exception. There are a variety of approaches to interpreting His response.

- The Pharisees expected Jesus to support the more conservative of the two schools of thought of the day – that which would only allow divorce in the case of adultery or sexual sin. Yet Jesus so shocked His disciples by taking a more extreme position that they almost despaired of the option of marriage. Jesus encouraged them with additional teaching about God’s grace and provision for celibacy where appropriate. Thus Jesus remained consistent to His requirement that kingdom ethics required righteousness that exceeds that of the Pharisees.
- Some of the topics in the surrounding context in the Gospel of Matthew include the unlimited nature of forgiveness and the importance of faithfulness to vows – both of which would be compromised by the Permissive View.
- The Permanency view better maintains the essential symbolic picture of the relationship between Christ and His bride the church.
- The Permanency view better fits the hermeneutical principle of interpreting unclear passages in light of clear passages rather than vice versa.

I also find that the Permissive View allows for fallen humans to attempt to “game” the system and create a situation where they can take advantage of the “exception” loophole to escape an undesirable marriage.

- For example, take a mixed marriage situation where the believing spouse could antagonize the unbeliever to the point where the unbeliever would seek a divorce and supposedly release the believer from bondage to remarry.
- Or even in a marriage between believers, a spouse could manipulate the situation to make it more like that the partner commit adultery and make divorce and remarriage a viable option.

That seems like a dangerous can of worms to me.

Of course the relevant passages still need to be exegeted in a manner that would allow for this Permanency View.

Stu Weber: Lifelong marital faithfulness is God's intention, requiring our dependence on his supernatural strength.

William Barclay: Beyond all doubt, the ideal is that marriage should be an indissoluble union between two people, and that marriage should be entered into as a total union of two personalities, not designed to make one act possible, but designed to make all life a satisfying and mutually completing fellowship. That is the essential basis on which we must proceed.

R. T. France: The whole pericope therefore constitutes a double challenge to conventional attitudes to marriage:

- on the one hand God intends marriage to remain unbroken, and the current acceptance of divorce is a surrender to human failure;
- on the other hand, for some people obedience to God’s will may properly mean that they do not marry at all.

The resultant argument develops as follows:

- statement of basic scriptural principle (vv. 4–6);

- counter-scripture (v. 7);
- resolution of how scripture B relates to scripture A (v. 8);
- resultant pronouncement (v. 9).

Donald Hagner: Again in this pericope we encounter the absoluteness of the kingdom of God and its ethics. In his answer to the question about divorce, Jesus appeals to the creation narrative of Genesis. The kingdom of God brought by Jesus is ultimately to involve the restoration of the perfection of the pre-fall creation, and the ethics of the kingdom as taught by Jesus reflect this fact. As God intended no divorce for the Garden of Eden, so divorce is not to be allowed in the new era of the kingdom of God. The call of some to celibacy also reflects the priority of the kingdom in the present time frame.

Van Parunak: Each component of the Lord's teaching emphasizes that marriages are made in heaven, but divorce is a purely human product. Every party involved in divorce and remarriage is guilty of adultery. The Lord condemns the mate who initiates the divorce, and (if remarriage follows the separation) the one who is put away and the second partner. The fornication clause seems to make an exception. But it was only recorded for Jewish audiences, and they should know from their own Scriptures that fornication leads, not to divorce, but to death.

(:1-2) GEOGRAPHIC TRANSITION

A. (:1) Jesus Leaves Galilee for Judea

“And it came about that when Jesus had finished these words, He departed from Galilee, and came into the region of Judea beyond the Jordan;”

Grant Osborne: The first clause is Matthew’s formula for ending a discourse (cf. 7:28; 11:1; 13:53; 26:1) and introduces the first of the comments on the travel narrative in Matthew. Jesus has spent his entire ministry thus far in Galilee (in Matthew at least; cf. John 2:1–13; 4:1–5:47; 7:1–52; 10:22–42 with several trips to Judea for the feasts) and now begins his final journey.

R. T. France: This is now the fourth use of the concluding formula which marks each of the five main discourses. The formula serves again both to conclude the discourse and to move the narrative on into its next phase. Within the narrative structure of this part of the gospel the next phase must be the approach to Jerusalem, which was announced as the ultimate goal of their journey in 16:21 and toward which they have been travelling since leaving the area of Caesarea Philippi. They have passed through Galilee again on their way southward (17:22, 24), but now the group finally leave their home province and head for the unfamiliar territory of Judea and its threatening capital Jerusalem. They will not return to Galilee until 28:16, after all Jesus’ predictions have been fulfilled.

D. A. Carson: Their “test,” here, was probably delivered in the hope that Jesus would say something to damage his reputation with the people or even seem to contradict Moses. Perhaps, too, they hoped that Jesus would say something that would entangle him in the Herod-Herodias affair so that he might meet the Baptist’s fate.

B. (:2) Jesus Heal Many among the Crowds

“and great multitudes followed Him, and He healed them there.”

I. (:3-6) PERMANENCE = GOD'S DESIGNED INTENTION FOR MARRIAGE

A. (:3) Entrapment by the Pharisees Regarding the Issue of Divorce

“And some Pharisees came to Him, testing Him, and saying, ‘Is it lawful for a man to divorce his wife for any cause at all?’”

Stu Weber: John the Baptist's dealing with the issue of divorce had cost him his head. The verb test is from peirazo, meaning “to test, tempt.” It is the same verb Matthew used of Satan tempting Jesus in 4:1, 3; the Pharisees and Sadducees demanding the second sign in 16:1; the Pharisees, Sadducees, and Herodians together trying to trap Jesus concerning taxation (22:18) and the greatest commandment (22:35). Their “test” was an action of malicious intent.

Van Parunak: The Pharisees know that divorce is a sensitive subject in Perea. They also know that the Lord's position on divorce, as presented in the Sermon on the Mount, is similar to John's. When they find Christ in this region, they try to lure him into saying something about divorce that will enrage Herod's wife, so that she will destroy him as she did John. Matthew and Mark record portions of the resulting conversation.

Charles Swindoll: The debate among the Pharisees themselves centered on the meaning of the words “he has found some indecency in her” (Deut. 24:1). The interpretations of this expression tended to go in one of two directions in Jesus' day. The more conservative school of thought restricted this language to be referring to only sexual immorality, while the more liberal school of thought understood “indecency” to include anything that displeased a husband. . .

I suppose this question was posed by the more conservative teachers. But they weren't trying to win Jesus' support so as to gain points against their liberal opponents. Rather, they were attempting to set up a trip wire that Jesus would spring, entangling Himself in a net of complex biblical, theological, practical, and political controversy from which He wouldn't be able to extricate Himself. Little did they know that they weren't dealing with some amateur interpreter of the Law of Moses . . . they were dealing with the Author Himself!

Stanley Saunders: The Pharisees, following Deuteronomy 24, presume the legality and legitimacy of divorce, as well as male cultural dominance and prerogative in initiating divorce. Jesus will challenge each of these assumptions.

B. (:4-6) Exposition by Jesus Regarding God's Design for Marriage

“And He answered and said,”

1. (:4b-5) Argument from God's Design in Creation

a. (:4b) Potential for Marriage Union Derives from Creation of Male and Female

“Have you not read, that He who created them from the beginning made them male and female,”

No gender confusion back at the point of creation.

Stu Weber: Haven't you read implies that the answer should have been obvious. Jesus was unveiling the Pharisees' true motives, which was to trap him. In effect, he was saying, “You know better than to ask this question.” Marriage should reflect God's image, not guarantee our personal “happiness.” The permanent marriage bond is in keeping with God's original design for men and women.

Grant Osborne: Jesus’ point is that God created men and women to be together, not to be divorced. . . The purpose of creation is the God-given union of “male and female.”

Jeffrey Crabtree: The creation of the two sexes was foundational to God’s order. God’s creation of Adam as male and Eve as female shows God planned for their physical union from the beginning (Hendriksen 715). Their potential for union is one basis for the permanency of marriage.

- b. (:5) Permanence of Marriage Derives from Creation of New Family Unit
“and said, ‘For this cause a man shall leave his father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife; and the two shall become one flesh ?’”

Robert Gundry: Traditionally, marriage vows were “consummated” by sexual union. The Bible says husband and wife “become one flesh.” God planned for a man and a woman first to give their hearts, then their wills to each other, through wedding vows. Then they can give their bodies. Then, as the Bible says, they can be naked and feel no shame. We can reveal ourselves, show our warts, both literal and metaphorical. When two people pledge to love one another for life, it becomes safe to give the body. It is safe to become pregnant. When two people promise to love as long as they live, it is no longer a half-insane risk to have a child.

But God wants more than “safety” for us. The pledge of lifelong loyalty makes physical intimacy safe. But when the pledge begins to feel formal or dry, physical intimacy both expresses and rekindles love.

As the Song of Solomon celebrates love in marriage, the woman says, “I belong to my lover, and his desire is for me” (Song 7:10). We are used to hearing that we should control our desires, but the Bible encourages desire in marriage and for good reason. In marriage, we take the body of the beloved after we have first given mind and will to the beloved. Then we can take another without abusing the other, and we can give ourselves without fear of rejection or domination. That provides the foundation for intimate love.

But when we give the body without marriage, the relationship often becomes unsettled, insecure. People fret, “Is he committed to this relationship? As much as I am?” When premarital sex is common, it also leaves people less motivated to marry.

S. Lewis Johnson: And finally, I think we can say the Lord Jesus regarded marriage as a permanent union. We read, here, for example—or rather, verse 5—“For this cause a man shall leave his father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife.” That word is very interesting. That word in the Greek text is a word that meant, literally to glue or cement together—something I don’t think that we are to take literally—but you can see that it expresses a union that is regarded as permanent. Erasmus referred to this in the Latin text and translated this, aglutinabatur, which means the same thing, “shall be glued together.” You can recognize our English word from the Latin word, aglutinabatur, the future tense of that word. Glued together. So, the ideal is an indissoluble union. He says, “And shall cleave to his wife.”

2. (:6) Argument from the Nature of the Marriage Union

a. One-Flesh Union

“Consequently they are no longer two, but one flesh.”

b. Indissoluble Union

“What therefore God has joined together, let no man separate.”

II. (:7-9) PERMANENCE = CHRIST’S CLEAR COMMAND DESPITE CONFUSION OVER MOSAIC PRACTICE

A. (:7) Objection of the Pharisees

“They said to Him,

‘Why then did Moses command to give her a certificate of divorce and send her away?’”

Charles Swindoll: In their response, they essentially argued, “If what You say is true, that divorce was not part of God’s intention for marriage, then why would Moses—the great revealer of the Law—command that a man give his wife a certificate of divorce and send her away?” Here, they tried to pit Jesus against Moses—His words against the Law. Ignoring Jesus’ argument from Genesis 1 and 2, they went back to Deuteronomy 24:1-4. The argument, in their minds, was compelling: If it were unlawful to divorce a wife, based on the words of Genesis, then Moses was breaking God’s law by providing for divorce in Deuteronomy.

D. A. Carson: But what was the “indecent” in Moses’ day that allowed for divorce? “Something indecent” could not be equated with adultery, for the normal punishment for that was death, not divorce (Dt 22:22)—though it is not at all clear that the death penalty was in fact regularly imposed for adultery (cf. Henry McKeating, “Sanctions against Adultery in Ancient Israelite Society,” JSOT 11 [1979]: 57–72). Nor could the indecency be suspicion of adultery, for which the prescribed procedure was the bitter-water rite (Nu 5:11–31). Yet the indecency must have been shocking. Ancient Israel took marriage seriously. The best assumption is that the indecency was any lewd, immoral behavior, sometimes including, but not restricted to, adultery—e.g., homosexuality or sexual misconduct that fell short of intercourse.

R. T. France: This is a principle which applies much more widely than only to the specific issue of divorce: ethical norms should be sought not in legal texts which deal with the situation where things have already gone wrong, but in the most fundamental statements available of the positive will of God for human behavior. There is a saying, “Hard cases make bad law,” and it may be suggested that they make even worse ethics. The ethics of the kingdom of heaven, as we have seen them illustrated in 5:21–48, seek not primarily how evil may be contained and alleviated, but how the best may be discerned and followed. It would make a huge and beneficial difference to modern debates on divorce if this priority were observed, so that the focus fell not on what grounds for divorce may be permitted (as in the Pharisees’ question), but on how marriage may best live up to the Creator’s purpose for it. There will, no doubt, always be a need for trouble-shooting legislation and pastoral help when things have gone wrong, but if that is where our ethical discussion begins the battle is lost before it is joined.

- Those who start from Deut 24:1–4 will have as their basic presupposition that divorce is to be expected, the question being only how it is to be regulated.
- Those who start from Genesis 1–2 will see any separation of what God has joined together as always an evil; circumstances may prove it to be the lesser evil, but that can never make it less than an infringement of the primary purpose of God for marriage.

Van Parunak: The Pharisees want the Lord to comment on Deuteronomy 24 and divorce. The Lord deflects their attention to Genesis 3 and marriage. Frustrated, they try to pull him back to Deuteronomy. They carelessly drop their guard, and show their real attitude toward the passage by calling it a command. Matthew records this part of the conversation.

[The Pharisees] say unto him, "Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement, and to dismiss away?" He says unto them, "Moses because of your hardness of heart allowed you to dismiss your wives, but from the beginning it was not so" (Matt. 19:7, 8).

The Lord answers, not by opposing Moses, but by opposing their interpretation. They claim, "Moses commanded." He responds, "Moses allowed." Moses' legislation does not command divorce. It only makes allowance for it, by telling people what to do if they are divorced.

The Pharisees see divorce as a right guaranteed by the Law, following the three law interpretation of Deuteronomy 24. The Lord says that it merely makes provision for man's sin. He supports the interpretation of the entire paragraph as a single command.

The Lord has taken control of the conversation. From this position of strength he delivers his teaching:

And I say to you, "Whoever dismisses his wife, except for fornication, and marries another, commits adultery, and he who marries a dismissed woman commits adultery" (Matt. 19:9).

Ironically, this is probably just the sort of strong statement that the Pharisees originally hoped to elicit from him. Yet he delivers it only after making clear to them who is in control. His control extends beyond them to Herod, for inspite of their malice, they do not succeed in bringing John's fate upon him.

The Lord's teaching on divorce here is similar to that in the Sermon on the Mount. He again uses the Pharisees' word for divorce, meaning literally "dismiss." He again says that it is adultery to marry a dismissed woman. Going beyond the Sermon on the Mount, he adds that the husband who dismisses her and marries someone else commits adultery, unless he dismisses her for fornication. Once again, we understand from Deuteronomy 22 that in the case of fornication she is dead, and there is no danger of adultery.

B. (:8) Divorce Is Rooted in Hardness of Heart

*"He said to them,
'Because of your hardness of heart, Moses permitted you to divorce your wives;
but from the beginning it has not been this way.'"*

Grant Osborne: In light of the creation principle that God does not want divorce, Moses' statement becomes mere "permission" rather than command. As Keener points out, "To be able to exercise some degree of restraint over human injustice, Moses' civil laws regulated some human institutions rather than seeking to abolish them altogether: divorce, polygyny, the avengers of blood, and slavery." So what is behind it is not God's will but "the hardness of your hearts."

Stu Weber: Moses knew that hardhearted people would continue to divorce their spouses, so he passed on God's guidelines to protect those who were victims of divorce.

The second half of 19:8 states God's original intention, preparing for 19:9. But contrasts God's will concerning divorce (that there be none) with his permission of divorce through Moses. From the beginning refers to God's original plan. God's clear intention was that there be no divorce at all. He actually hates the concept (Mal. 2:16).

Jesus' point was that anyone who saw divorce and remarriage in terms of what may or may not be permissible was already out of line. Divorce is not some morally neutral option open to God's people. It is fundamentally sinful, and it grows out of the hardness of the selfish human heart.

Ken Peterman: General observations about the use of hardness in Scripture:

- Hardness is associated with stubbornness (Acts 19:9). Stubbornness involves an unwillingness to accept truth and perhaps a turning from the truth itself.
- Hardness is associated with disobedience (Hebrews 3:8). Disobedience involves an unwillingness to receive the truth rather than an inability to understand it (John 6:60).
- Hardness is associated with selfishness (Matthew 25:24). Selfishness is a product of the flesh, not the Spirit.

C. (:9) Christ's Clear Prohibition of Divorce

*"And I say to you,
'whoever divorces his wife, except for immorality, and marries another woman commits adultery.'"*

Leon Morris: We should be clear that he is not setting up a new set of regulations and providing for all the exceptions that a law must take note of. He is laying down in strong terms the permanent nature of the marriage tie in the face of a society where a marriage could be dissolved at any time a husband chose to write out a few lines containing the necessary formula, sign it before witnesses, and hand it to his wife. Jesus is saying that this is no way to treat a divine ordinance. He is not defining under what circumstances a divorce may or may not take place.

D. A. Carson: The second problem concerns the meaning of porneia (NIV, "marital unfaithfulness," GK 4518; KJV, "fornication"). H. Baltensweiler (Die Ehe im Neuen Testament [Zurich: Zwingli, 1967], 93) thinks that it refers to marriage within prohibited degrees (Lev 18), i.e., to incest. Many others, especially Roman Catholic scholars, have defended that view in some detail (cf. J. A. Fitzmyer, "The Matthean Divorce Texts and Some New Palestinian Evidence," TS 37 [1976]: 208–11). Appeal is often made to 1 Corinthians 5:1, where "a man has his father's wife" (his stepmother). But it should be noted that even here Paul gives no indication he is dealing with an incestuous marriage but only an incestuous affair. It is very doubtful whether Paul or any other Jew would have regarded an incestuous relationship as marriage: Paul would not have told the couple to get a divorce but to stop what they were doing. And in the next chapter, Paul uses the same word (porneia) to describe prostitution (1Co 6:13, 16).

Others have argued that porneia refers to premarital unchastity (A. Isaksson, Marriage and Ministry in the New Testament [Lund: Gleerup, 1965], 135ff.; Mark Geldard, "Jesus' Teaching on Divorce," Churchman 92 [1978]: 134–43); if a man discovers his bride is not a virgin, he may divorce her. This has the advantage (it is argued) of being no real exception to Jesus' prohibition of divorce, making it easier to reconcile Matthew and Mark, who omits the "except" clause. Moreover, it provides a neat background for the disciples' shock (v.10), for if porneia refers to every sexual sin, Jesus is saying no more than what many rabbis taught.

Still others hold that porneia here means "adultery," no more and no less (e.g., T. V. Fleming, "Christ and Divorce," TS 24 [1963]: 109). Certainly the word can include that meaning (Jer 3:8–9 LXX; cf. Sir 23:23). Yet, in Greek the normal word for adultery is moicheia (GK 3657). Matthew has already used moicheia and porneia in the same context (15:19), suggesting some distinction between the words, even if there is considerable overlap. A. Mahoney ("A New Look at the Divorce Clauses in Mt 5:32 and 19:9," CBQ 30 [1968]: 29–38) suggests porneia refers to spiritual harlotry, a metaphor often adopted by the OT prophets. Jesus then prohibits divorce except where one spouse is not a Christian. But it is almost impossible to conceive how such a response, couched in such language, could have any relevance (let alone intelligibility) to the disputants here. . .

The reason these and many other creative suggestions have been advanced lies in the difficulty of the verse as a whole, both in its immediate context and as a parallel to Mark-Luke. But it must be admitted that the word porneia itself is very broad. In unambiguous contexts, it can on occasion refer to a specific kind of sexual sin. Yet even then, this is possible only because the specific sexual sin belongs to the larger category of sexual immorality. Porneia covers the entire range of such sins (cf. TDNT, 6:579–95; BDAG, 854; Joseph Jensen, "Does Porneia Mean Fornication? A Critique of Bruce Malina," NovT 20 [1978]: 161–84) and should not be restricted unless the context requires it.

Van Parunak: There are two ways in which a man may "dismiss" his wife.

1. He may "divorce" her, putting her out of his house. In this case he causes her to commit adultery, for she will be without support unless she remarries.
2. But if she is guilty of fornication, he has another option. Deuteronomy 22 says that a married woman who commits fornication should be stoned to death. If she is guilty of fornication, he may "dismiss" her from life by having her tried and stoned. In this case he does not cause her to commit adultery, for she is dead and so cannot remarry.

The law of Deuteronomy 22 prescribes stoning not only for adultery (unfaithfulness after betrothal or marriage), but also for uncleanness before marriage that is concealed from the bridegroom. The word "fornication" covers both of these cases, and so the Lord uses it in his instruction.

The second part of the Lord's teaching is also clear.

And whoever marries a dismissed woman commits adultery.

Remarriage is possible only when the woman is "dismissed" in such a way as to leave her alive. Whenever the woman survives her "dismissal," remarriage is adultery, both for her and for her new spouse. When a woman is "dismissed" by stoning because of fornication, though, the question of remarriage does not arise.

The Lord thus rejects the Pharisees' notion that God sanctions divorce. Divorce and remarriage is adultery. By introducing the case of fornication, with its associated penalty of stoning, he emphasizes that only death can break the marriage bond. His answer reflects not only the Old Testament notion that "the Lord hates divorce" (Mal. 2:16), but also the law that condemns impure wives to death (Deuteronomy 22).

Various explanations of dealing with porneia here that would fit within the Permanency View:

- 1) Treating the act of dismissal as death by execution rather than divorce – advocated by Van Parunak
- 2) Treating this case as unfaithfulness during the Jewish betrothal period (John Piper, Voddie Baucham – see below in the notes)
- 3) Treating porneia as some other type of Jewish prohibited marriage within the prohibited relationships of Leviticus 18 (Charles Ryrie and J Carl Laney in The Divorce Myth.)

III. (:10-12) SHOCK OF THE DISCIPLES REGARDING JESUS' HIGH STANDARD OF MARRIAGE WITHOUT DIVORCE

A. (:10) Dismay of the Disciples over the Elimination of the Option of Divorce and Remarriage

*"The disciples said to Him,
If the relationship of the man with his wife is like this, it is better not to marry."*

Van Parunak: The disciples' next question shows that they have always thought of divorce as a possible escape from a bad marriage.

His disciples say to him, "If the case of the man be so with the wife, it is not expedient to marry" (Matt. 19:10).

If there really is no escape from marriage other than death, then one had better remain unmarried.

The disciples' suggestion shows how strong they understand the Lord's teaching to be. Some modern readers may try to find loopholes in the Lord's words. To the disciples, who hear the teaching over and over and discuss it with the Lord, there are no loopholes. The Lord's answer to their comment certainly doesn't add any, either.

Grant Osborne: The gift of celibacy is a valid option in the church. The disciples made an ironic statement that it would be better to be single (v. 10), but Jesus turns that on its head and says they are right. For many in ministry, it would be better to remain single and thereby have more time for kingdom business (cf. 1 Cor 7: 7, 26–35). This is as valid today as it was in the time of Jesus or Paul. We are all aware of those leaders who have chosen the path of celibacy (e.g., John Stott) and of the ministries they had as a result. Pioneer missionaries, evangelists, itinerant teachers, and many others should consider this gift as part of their calling. Most importantly, it is a calling and is not for everyone; Jesus does not elevate single status above marriage but rather says it is a valid calling for those in ministry.

Stu Weber: No matter how one interprets Jesus' stance on divorce and remarriage, it was far stricter than the disciples (or anyone else) expected. They had lived all their lives in a society where divorces were granted liberally. The prevalence of arranged marriages and the tendency for women to be viewed as property may have contributed to the number of divorces. To learn that there was no easy way out of an unsatisfactory marriage caused the disciples to rethink the marriage commitment. They considered that it might be better to avoid the risk of getting into a bad marriage by staying single. The disciples' conclusion, given Jesus' high standards, was, it is better not to marry. Jesus had made his point.

David Turner: Matthew 19:10–12 should not be read as requiring singleness for all those who have been divorced (contra Gundry 1994: 381–82; Heth and Wenham 1984: 88). This would imply that God has gifted all divorced people with celibacy. It should also be noted that this passage does not teach that celibates are holier than married people or that their lifestyle is morally superior. Only those who are enabled by special gift should choose a celibate lifestyle for the sake of the kingdom. This passage does not promote asceticism as the ideal for human existence.

B. (:11) Difficult Truth Regarding Celibacy

“But He said to them,

‘Not all men can accept this statement, but only those to whom it has been given.’”

C. (:12) Diverse Types of Celibacy Reflect the Possibility of Living a Life of Sexual Abstinence

Grant Osborne: This may be an example of Jesus' wisdom teaching, in which he uses two concrete realities of everyday existence (those born eunuchs and those made eunuchs) to support a third spiritual or moral truth (those eunuchs for the kingdom). The first two described the two different types of eunuchs in the world, those born without sexual organs or impotent and those “made eunuchs,” either castrated (often for service in a royal court [e.g., the Ethiopian eunuch in Acts 8] or in a harem) or had become impotent due to disease or accident.

John Piper: Jesus does not deny the tremendous difficulty of his command. Instead, he says in verse 11, that the enablement to fulfill the command not to remarry is a divine gift to his disciples. Verse 12 is an argument that such a life is indeed possible because there are people who for the sake of the kingdom, as well as lower reasons, have dedicated themselves to live a life of singleness.

1. Celibacy Caused by Physical Handicap at Birth

“For there are eunuchs who were born that way from their mother's womb;”

2. Celibacy Caused by Forced Surgery in Order to Serve the Interests of Powerful Men

“and there are eunuchs who were made eunuchs by men;”

3. Celibacy Caused by Voluntary Embracing of Ministry Opportunities

“and there are also eunuchs who made themselves eunuchs for the sake of the kingdom of heaven.”

4. Celibacy Not for Everybody

“He who is able to accept this, let him accept it.”

Craig Blomberg: If many Roman Catholics have overly exalted celibacy as an ideal, most Protestants have drastically undervalued it. Christian singles need much more support from their married friends and their churches, who must value them as equally significant members of the body of Christ. In a society that constantly pressures people into hasty marriages, the church desperately needs to encourage all who sense God leading them to remain single, for however long or short a period of time, to remain faithful to his guidance.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What was the intent of the Pharisees in raising this issue?
- 2) Why does Jesus insist that the starting point for any discussion of Divorce and possible Remarriage must be God's original design?
- 3) What is your view of the so-called "exception clause" in verse 9?
- 4) Why were the disciples so shocked by the position that Jesus advocated?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

R. T. France: The remainder of the journey narrative before the arrival in Jericho and the eventual climb up to Jerusalem consists of a series of episodes and sections of teaching some of which are provoked by people outside the disciple group, but the main focus of which is on the experience of the disciples as they are confronted by increasingly unsettling challenges to their conventional attitudes and values, especially as these relate to family and social life. The sequence will be concluded with the last and most detailed prediction of Jesus' coming rejection, death and resurrection, followed by the extraordinary request of the mother of James and John which reveals that the disciples' grasp of the values of the kingdom of heaven remains at best embryonic. Jesus' response to their continuing quest for positions of importance hinges on the key demand "It shall not be so among you" (20:26); things do not work the same way in the kingdom of heaven as they do in the kingdoms of the world. 19:30 sums up the revolutionary values of the kingdom of heaven, "Many who are first will be last, and the last first," and the same slogan will be repeated in 20:16; it is this lesson which, in a variety of ways, the disciples must learn while Jesus is still with them. It will not be a comfortable experience, as one situation or pronouncement after another reveals how far they have still to go before they can see things as he sees them. Their "human thoughts" must be set aside in favor of "the thoughts of God." (16:23) It may be deliberately symbolic of the disciples' experience that the last event which occurs before they reach Jerusalem, after this period of re-education, is a miracle of the cure of blindness, which results in those who have been cured "following" Jesus (20:34). . .

What matters is that they are on their way to Jerusalem, where the paradoxical values of the kingdom of heaven will be fully revealed and the disciples' grasp of them will be painfully put to the test.

Warren Wiersbe: The Characteristics of Marriage

- 1) It is a divinely appointed union.
- 2) It is a physical union.
- 3) It is a permanent union.
- 4) It is a union between one man and one woman.

H. Van Dyke Parunak: Let Not Man Put Asunder: A Biblical Study of Divorce [Summary Conclusions]

WHAT IS A MARRIAGE?

The Bible regards marriage as the only legitimate context for physical union between man and woman. Physical union, though, is not enough to make a couple man and wife before God. The Lord Jesus makes this clear to the woman at the well of Sychar when he tells her that the man with whom she is presently living is not her husband (John 4:18). In the next chapter, we will see that at least three things are true of unions that the Bible recognizes as marriage.

- The man and woman enter into a covenant or commitment to one another.
- They make this commitment in keeping with the standards of their society and culture.
- They unite physically.

In discussing unlawful union, we will use the terms "fornication" and "adultery" in keeping with their biblical usage. "Adultery" describes a union in which at least one partner belongs to someone else. It always involves unfaithfulness to marriage. "Fornication" describes any unlawful union, whether or not the participants are being unfaithful to their spouses. Every case of adultery is a case of fornication, but some cases of fornication (such as premarital union between single people) are not cases of adultery.

TWO IMPORTANT PRINCIPLES [this section comes from a later chapter]

Deuteronomy 22 gives us two principles of the Mosaic Law, principles that will be important in our later study.

Why were Marriages Terminated?

Moses' Law does specify circumstances when a marriage should be terminated. When a man or woman commits adultery, or when an unmarried girl involved in fornication hides this from her betrothed until after the wedding, Moses requires an end to the marriage.

The reason for ending the marriage is always moral impurity. There is no mention of "incompatibility," "mental cruelty," or "domestic violence." In fact, when a husband accuses his innocent wife, we can imagine that their relation is already very poor. Still, the Law does not separate them, but insists that they stay together.

How did the Law Terminate Marriages?

The means by which the Law terminates a marriage is death by stoning. This verdict is very severe to the guilty, but unlike modern divorces, it leaves no nagging questions about whether the innocent spouse may remarry. The survivor is not divorced, but widowed. The old union is over and done as only death can make it.

Does Moses approve divorce? [back to the Summary Conclusions]

He is recognizing that divorce does occur, and is telling people what they may and may not do as a result. In particular, Moses teaches that IF a couple is divorced, and IF the wife remarries, and IF that second union ends, whether by death

 or by divorce,
THEN the original couple may not remarry.

The Lord says that fornication excuses dismissing and remarriage. Thus many Christians feel that fornication is the one legitimate grounds for divorce and remarriage.

It is not.

We will see that "dismissing" does not mean exactly the same thing as "divorce." Divorce is one way to "dismiss" a member in a marriage. But "dismiss" in the Bible can also mean "put to death; kill." In the context of these verses about fornication and dismissal, the Pharisees are distorting what Moses taught about fornication and divorce, and the Lord is correcting their error. Moses taught that the nation Israel should put to death a spouse who is guilty of immorality. This, the Lord says, is the only way to dissolve a marriage so that one spouse is free to remarry.

In other words, the Lord is saying,

Anyone who dismisses his wife by divorce, as you people commonly do, causes her to commit adultery when she remarries, and commits adultery himself by remarrying. There is, however, one case in which remarriage is not adultery. If she is guilty of fornication, the Law requires Israel to dismiss her, not by divorce, but by execution. In that case, the surviving spouse may remarry.

Which Parties may Remarry? — In four different passages (Matt. 5:32; 19:9; Mark 10:11; Luke 16:18) the Lord Jesus describes a second marriage after a divorce as adultery. Modern Christians sometimes claim that such a marriage may not be adultery, depending on whether the previously married person initiated the divorce or not, or was guilty of infidelity or not. Close study of the Lord's words shows that both parties in a divorce commit adultery if they remarry.

Does Paul permit divorce?

God hates divorce, and his children do all they can to avoid it. Sometimes, though, a believer is divorced by an unbelieving spouse. May the believer remarry?

Paul's words in I Cor. 7:15 have been interpreted as allowing remarriage under these circumstances.

But if the unbeliever departs, let him depart. The brother or sister is not enslaved in such cases.

We will see in Chapter 12 that "bondage" here is not the marriage tie, but the obligation to share bed and board with an antagonistic spouse. Each partner in a marriage has duties toward the other. Paul teaches that when an unbelieving partner leaves the marriage, the believer is freed from those duties.

For instance, a wife should submit herself to her husband (Eph. 5:22). If he leaves her, she is no longer bound to obey him. It is quite another thing to say that she is no longer joined to him by God, and thus free to remarry. This Paul does not say. Divorce does not end a marriage so far as God is concerned, whether the one who institutes it is a believer or an unbeliever.

A SUMMARY PRINCIPLE

Out of the entire study, one overwhelming conclusion emerges:

There is no biblical basis for a second marriage after divorce while the first spouse lives.

Paul puts it this way, in a more restricted context:

*Let not the wife depart from her husband.
But if she depart,
let her remain unmarried, or let her be reconciled to her husband (I Cor. 7:10-11).*

It is a terrible thing when husband and wife separate. It may be unavoidable, when an unbelieving partner initiates it. Subsequent marriage to someone else is not unavoidable. As long as the first spouse lives, remarriage violates the Lord's solemn command, Thou shalt not commit adultery.

<https://www.cyber-chapel.org/LetNotManPutAsunder.pdf>

John Piper: Divorce & Remarriage: A Position Paper (1989)

All of my adult life, until I was faced with the necessity of dealing with divorce and remarriage in the pastoral context, I held the prevailing Protestant view that remarriage after divorce was Biblically sanctioned in cases where divorce had resulted from desertion or persistent adultery. Only when I was compelled, some years ago, in teaching through the gospel of Luke, to deal with Jesus' absolute statement in Luke 16:18 did I begin to question that inherited position.

Eleven Reasons Why I Believe All Remarriage After Divorce Is Prohibited While Both Spouses Are Alive:

1. Luke 16:18 calls all remarriage after divorce adultery.
2. Mark 10:11-12 call all remarriage after divorce adultery whether it is the husband or the wife who does the divorcing.
3. Mark 10:2-9 and Matthew 19:3-8 teach that Jesus rejected the Pharisees' justification of divorce from Deuteronomy 24:1 and reasserted the purpose of God in creation that no human being separate what God has joined together.
4. Matthew 5:32 does not teach that remarriage is lawful in some cases. Rather it reaffirms that marriage after divorce is adultery, even for those who have been divorced innocently, and that a man who divorces his wife is guilty of the adultery of her second marriage unless she had already become an adulteress before the divorce.
 - 4.3 I will save my explanation of the exception clause ("Except on the ground of unchastity") for later in the paper, but for now, it may suffice to say that on the traditional interpretation of the clause, it may simply mean that a man makes his wife an adulteress except in the case where she has made herself one.

5. 1 Corinthians 7:10-11 teaches that divorce is wrong but that if it is inevitable the person who divorces should not remarry.

6. 1 Corinthians 7:39 and Romans 7:1-3 teach that remarriage is legitimate only after the death of a spouse.

7. Matthew 19:10-12 teaches that special Christian grace is given by God to Christ's disciples to sustain them in singleness when they renounce remarriage according to the law of Christ.

8. Deuteronomy 24:1-4 does not legislate grounds for divorce but teaches that the "one-flesh" relationship established by marriage is not obliterated by divorce or even by remarriage.

8.1 The remarkable thing about these four verses is that, while divorce is taken for granted, nevertheless the woman who is divorced becomes "defiled" by her remarriage (verse 4). It may well be that when the Pharisees asked Jesus if divorce was legitimate he based his negative answer not only on God's intention expressed in Genesis 1:27 and 2:24, but also on the implication of Deuteronomy 24:4 that remarriage after divorce defiles a person. In other words, there were ample clues in the Mosaic law that the divorce concession was on the basis of the hardness of man's heart and really did not make divorce and remarriage legitimate.

9. 1 Corinthians 7:15 does not mean that when a Christian is deserted by an unbelieving spouse he or she is free to remarry. It means that the Christian is not bound to fight in order to preserve togetherness. Separation is permissible if the unbelieving partner insists on it.

9.12 The word used for "bound" (douloo) in verse 15 is not the same word used in verse 39 where Paul says, "A wife is bound (deo) to her husband as long as he lives." Paul consistently uses deo when speaking of the legal aspect of being bound to one marriage partner (Romans 7:2; 1 Corinthians 7:39), or to one's betrothed (1 Corinthians 7:27). But when he refers to a deserted spouse not being bound in 1 Corinthians 7:15, he chooses a different word (douloo) which we would expect him to do if he were not giving a deserted spouse the same freedom to remarry that he gives to a spouse whose partner has died (verse 39).

9.13 The last phrase of verse 15 ("God has called us to peace") supports verse 15 best if Paul is saying that a deserted partner is not "bound to make war" on the deserting unbeliever to get him or her to stay. It seems to me that the peace God has called us to is the peace of marital harmony. Therefore, if the unbelieving partner insists on departing, then the believing partner is not bound to live in perpetual conflict with the unbelieving spouse, but is free and innocent in letting him or her go.

10. 1 Corinthians 7:27-28 does not teach the right of divorced persons to remarry. It teaches that betrothed virgins should seriously consider the life of singleness, but do not sin if they marry.

11. The exception clause of Matthew 19:9 need not imply that divorce on account of adultery frees a person to be remarried. All the weight of the New Testament evidence given in the preceding ten points is against this view, and there are several ways to make good sense out of this verse so that it does not conflict with the broad teaching of the New Testament that remarriage after divorce is prohibited.

11.1 Several years ago I taught our congregation in two evening services concerning my understanding of this verse and argued that "except for immorality" did not refer to adultery but to premarital sexual fornication which a man or a woman discovers in the betrothed partner. Since that time I have discovered other people who hold this view and who have given it a much more scholarly exposition than I did. I have also discovered numerous other ways of understanding this verse which also exclude the legitimacy of remarriage. Several of these are summed up in William Heth and Gordon J. Wenham, Jesus and Divorce (Nelson: 1984).

<https://www.desiringgod.org/articles/divorce-and-remarriage-a-position-paper>

Voddie Baucham: The Permanence View of Marriage – Matt. 5:31-32

Context of Sermon on the Mount: Key Principles:

- The law of God is perfect, timeless and relevant and yet insufficient for our salvation.
- Jesus is our key to interpreting the OT in light of the Kingdom.
- Our righteousness must exceed the righteousness of the Pharisees.

Must look at Pharisaism thru lens of original hearers – think of the most righteous people you can imagine (not as group of hypocritical, self-righteous wicked people).

Consistent pattern throughout these 6 antitheses.

- “You’ve heard this”
- “But I say this”

It is as wrong to keep the law as if that will justify you as it is wrong to not keep the law.

Continuing discussion with the 7th commandment relating to adultery. Now Jesus brings in the issue of Divorce and Remarriage.

These are forgivable sins. Person may have a fulfilled life of service after repentance. God also blesses second union after repentance.

Overwhelming number of Christians today do not hold to this Permanence view of Marriage that we hold.

Shortest and most concise of these 6 antitheses. Jesus referring to the case law here of Deut. 24:1-4, not directly to the Ten Commandments. The case law is the outworking of God’s moral law to particular situations.

Two schools of thought in Jesus’ day regarding reference to “indecency”:

- School of Shammai – gross indecency or immorality
- School of Hillel – more liberal and generous – extended meaning to all types of real or imagined offenses including an improperly cooked meal

(comes into play more in Matt. 19 text)

Major Views on Divorce and Remarriage in the church:

- 1) Permanence View – no divorce; no remarriage under any
- 2) Semi-Permanence View – allows for divorce, but doesn’t allow for remarriage
- 3) Permissive View – allows for divorce and allows for remarriage
 - One Clause view -- Some say remarriage allowable in the case of adultery only; but not abandonment or anything else
 - Two Clause view – In the case of adultery and in the case of abandonment of a believing spouse by an unbelieving spouse
 - Liberal View – For just about anything

Nuances within each of these views. Not a deal-breaker; doesn't mean we can't fellowship with others. Not arguing that everybody that disagrees with us is out in the weeds.

Argument: Difficult to hold to Permanence View from a pastoral perspective because of so many people in difficult situations. But there's difficulty regardless of your position. Still people you have to look in the eye and say "No you may not divorce; No you may not remarry."

e.g. what about abuse or neglect or incompatibility or fiscal irresponsibility or idolatry or blasphemy or lying and deceit or refusing to have children or drunkenness or addiction or lengthy imprisonment or unbelief in prior marriage = not biblical grounds for divorce and then remarriage even if you hold to Two Clause Position

Only difference is that despite the thousands of difficult situations that we might encounter, the Permanence View has only 2 more difficulties to deal with than the Permissive View.

It's difficult regardless of the position you hold. But it is a moot view because we don't base our position on the pastoral difficulties involved in counseling others.

Principles of the Permanence View:

1) The one-flesh union created in marriage is permanent until death.

Matt. 19 – look at what happens before you get to the exception clause. Pharisees questioning Jesus on a number of things that he had preached on. Jesus points them back to marriage ordinance in Genesis. Jesus only gives the exception clause after He has been asked another question. This first question is asked and answered with no exception clause given. Unequivocal answer of "No" – you cannot separate them.

Mark 10:9

In our vows we say "For better or worse, forsaking all others until death do us part" – otherwise we should change our vows

Next antithesis Jesus addresses in Matt. 5 = oaths and vows – marriage vows are permanent

2) Initiating a divorce is never lawful.

Next question in Matt. 19 – diving into the case law; Jesus says you are reading the case law wrong; Moses did not command Israel to give certificate of divorce; Deut. 24 is about remarriage; Moses assumes that divorce is already happening – not addressing that; putting restrictions on the existing practice

1 Cor. 7:10-11 – don't get divorced

1 Cor. 7:12-16 – don't get divorced

3) Remarriage after divorce is an act of adultery if a former spouse is living.

Rom. 7:2-3 – no exception clause in any of these passages; only death paves the way for remarriage without adultery [notice that it says "act of adultery" – not perpetual adultery]

Mark 10:10-12 – no exception clause; whoever does this commits this

Luke 16 – the other parallel passage

Matt. 5:31-32 – What’s this a statement about? If she has committed this act she has already made herself an adulteress – you haven’t made her an adulteress. But if you divorce her for some other reason you have made her an adulteress when she goes and remarries.

Whoever marries a divorced woman for any reason for any circumstance as long as her former spouse is still alive (doesn’t say “Unless her divorce was a lawful one”) – no exception clause

Exception Clause – Only in Matt. 5 and Matt. 19 --

Porneia used – instead of word for adultery – sexual immorality – Why use this broader term; associated with Jewish betrothal law not a consummated marriage; betrothal was a covenant; a legally binding document; Matthew wrote to a Jewish audience; Joseph was going to put Mary away for porneia

3 Purposes for Marriage: Procreation / Sanctification / Illustration – think about divorce and remarriage within this framework

1) Procreation

Mal. 2 – God was seeking godly offspring

2) Sanctification

1 Cor. 7 – legitimate desires God has given for sex can be legitimately fulfilled within context of marriage

3) Illustration of the relationship between Christ and His Church

Divorce and Remarriage is a perversion of this intended picture;

Unthinkable under any circumstance to think that Christ would divorce the bride for whom He died.

What about principle that your righteousness must exceed that of the Pharisees?

- Hillel School – no problem here
 - Shammai School – big problem – Jesus would be saying: “The Pharisees say that you can only divorce in the case of gross immorality; I say to you exactly the same thing”???
- You don’t have to do any better than they do.

Pastoral Implications:

1) We will always encourage you to stay married. To keep your vows.

No reasons you can give that would change our mind to say that divorce is allowed in your extreme situation.

2) We will always walk with you through difficult marriage circumstances with a view towards repentance and reconciliation. No loophole that allows you to check out and be completely righteous. We will not perform wedding ceremonies for those seeking a second marriage while the first spouse is living. Go be reconciled.

Pastoral responsibility to protect a spouse who is being abused. But still would not advise divorce.

What this does not mean:

- That the couple is committing new acts of adultery with every instance of intimacy thereafter

- Does not mean you should divorce current spouse and return to initial spouse; you don't re-commit a sin to demonstrate your repentance for the first time you did it; Instead, now grab ahold of the Permanence View and don't let go
- Does not mean that divorced and remarried people are second class citizens in the kingdom of God

Don't mess with God by presuming on His grace and reasoning: I know that God forgives this sin as with any other so I will go ahead and sin and then look for forgiveness

I tell my wife: "If you leave me, I'm going with you."

Marriage is not difficult because of the person you are married to. You are the problem. If leave and enter another marriage you take with you the problem = You!

<https://www.sermonaudio.com/sermoninfo.asp?SID=11309913170>

Adam C. Parker: Position on Remarriage After Divorce

The thing that I would like to close with is a re-emphasis of the absolute permanence of marriage in the eyes of God, as well as a quick word regarding those who have already remarried. It is essential that those who have already remarried recognize the sinfulness of what they have done. I know of the parents of a friend of mine who both agree that their decision to leave their first spouses and marry one-another was sinful. This was not an easy conclusion to come to, since they didn't deliberately disobey, but they still recognized that remarrying was wrong. Those who have remarried should remain with their new spouse, however, because divorcing for a second (or third or fourth time) would be an even greater sin. Besides that, it is important that a new union has been formed and that, "while not the ideal state, staying in a second marriage is God's will for a couple and their ongoing relations should not be looked on as adulterous."

It is also important that those who are divorced and single depend upon the strength that God provides to remain single. In some situations, if they nor their spouse have remarried, there is still time for reconciliation, though this is often difficult and challenging for both parties to work through the hurt they have endured and inflicted upon one another.

To those who have yet to marry, I think that this position on divorce and remarriage gives a great opportunity for us to reflect upon the seriousness, the permanence, and the absoluteness of marriage. It is a challenge to the to-be-newlyweds that one must look before they leap, recognizing that their choice of a nuptial partner will be set in stone. "Til death do us part" seems to take on a much more literal meaning, given this view. Scripture does not give Christians a secret "back-door" out of a marriage, but even if that back-door is taken, the door only opens from one side, and Christians today divorce just as often as their secular counterparts, and I believe that a loose view of marriage, which permits remarriage, is one of many contributors to this cultural malaise in the Christian community. This view of marriage should not be held to because of its usefulness (that is a utilitarian concept), but instead because it is indeed the Scriptural view.

http://www.mountainretreatorg.net/articles/remarriage_after_divorce.shtml

Ken Peterman: (Source: Remain Faithful to Your Spouse in a Soap Opera Society)

Fundamental hermeneutical principle: Interpret a cloudy passage of Scripture in light of a clear passage – never vice versa. . . Scripture should always be interpreted in light of other Scripture passages. . . If five different passages teach a given truth and the sixth passage seems to contradict it, the cloudy (the sixth passage) is suspect, not the five clear ones! In the case of marriage and divorce there are several passages that clearly contradict the teaching that adultery is the one legitimate basis for divorce. Consider the following observations:

A. It is absurd to think that by this one exception clause the Lord Jesus would violate His extensive teaching about complete and total forgiveness in Matthew 18 (and many other forgiveness passages in the New Testament.).

B. It is absurd to think that by this one exception clause the Lord Jesus would violate the extensive teaching about the unity in marriage as found in Matthew 19:6 and Ephesians 5:31.

C. It is absurd to think that by this one exception clause the Lord Jesus would violate the clear biblical teaching that marriage is binding until death (with no exceptions) as found in Romans 7:1-3 and Matthew 19:6.

D. It is absurd to think that by this one exception clause the Lord Jesus would violate the obvious biblical teaching that marriage represents the mystical and enduring relationship between Him and the Church as found in Ephesian 5:22-23.

E. It is absurd to think that by this one exception clause the Lord Jesus would violate the encouragement to reconciliation as found in 1 Corinthians 7:10, 11.

F. It is absurd to think that by this one exception clause the Lord Jesus would violate the responsibility of forgiveness as mentioned in Ephesians 4:32.

G. It is absurd to think that by this one exception clause the Lord Jesus would violate what He just told the Pharisees in Matthew 19:4-6 about the permanency of marriage.

H. It is absurd to think that by this one exception clause the Lord Jesus would violate what He just taught in Matthew 19:6 about the one-flesh relationship.

I. It is absurd to think that by this one exception clause the Lord Jesus would violate the “one-flesh” relationship He has with the Church (Ephesians 5:29-32).

John MacArthur: [Alternative View:]

Divorce is a severe and staggering problem. Forty-eight out of the 50 states have no fault laws, which make divorce as easy as getting married, except you don’t need a blood test. Now in past years, families and marriages were held together. This is a relatively new phenomena. The divorce rate in America has doubled in the last 20 years, and threatens to do so again in the next.

I think the problem is not that the Bible is unclear, but that thinking is fuzzy. And what fuzzes up people’s thinking is that they go to the Bible with certain preconceptions. For example, you have some people who are looking at the divorce rate and saying, “We’ve got to stop divorce.” And so in order to stop divorce, we’ll just have to come up with a doctrine that says no divorce, no time, for nobody, for no reason. So we have people who are doing that, and they’re advocating the fact that there's no divorce, for nobody, forever, for any reason whatever, and absolutely no remarriage anytime for anything. . .

So on the one hand, you have people who want to raise the standard, on the other hand you have people who want to lower the standard, and what we must we do is go back and see what Jesus said and what God says in the pages of Scripture. And we're going to do that in verses 1-12.

So you have Jesus presenting himself in Judea and Jerusalem, you have him moving toward his passion, the crowds are there, the people are there, the populous is there, but interspersed and woven through all of that lessons, and more lessons, and more lessons for the disciples who are to carry on the ministry. So it's a great time of transition for the Lord. . .

4 Reasons Divorce is not God's desire:

- 1) One man created for one woman.
- 2) A strong bond – leaving and cleaving
- 3) They have become one person in the union of marriage. It is an indivisible number.
- 4) What God puts together, don't divorce.

The reason we keep a marriage together is because God says that's His priority, and what we want to do is to submit to the authority of the Word of God, right? And we're right back there. As we walk in the Spirit, we have wonderful submission to one another because we reverence God. And wives in the power of the Spirit can return to that pre-fall bliss of being wonderfully submissive to their husbands. And husbands can return to that pre-fall bliss in a sense of being loving, caring, nourishing, cherishing toward their wife. And where sin comes in, there will be forgiveness, as God forgave Israel and Christ the church. . .

If God made you, he knows how to make you work best, right? If he's the manufacturer, he's got the manual on your operation. And so we come right back to where we started. Listen. The job of the pastor and the role of the church is to bring you under submission to the authority of this Word. And we've done that, and we've told you what God feels about divorce. We've laid out God's perspective on divorce. And the only thing we can say in response is "cursed" or "woe" be unto the person who fights or argues with his maker. . .

What makes a marriage? It is not the sex act that makes a marriage; it is the covenant that makes a marriage. It is the coming together of two people who pledge lifelong covenant of companionship. The Bible affirms that the covenant makes a marriage. Marriage is a covenantal arrangement for lifelong companionship. And so, when a person has a sex relationship with someone, that doesn't make a marriage; and when a person in a marriage has a sex relationship with someone else, that doesn't make another marriage. That just is a sin against the marriage the person is in by covenant. So, it is the binding covenant of lifelong pledge of companionship that constitutes a marriage.

And anytime that happens, anytime two people make that covenant, whether they're saved people or not, they come together in a God-ordained and God-created union which therefore should never be divorced. That's the essence of what our Lord is saying. And so, that's His answer. . .

Now, what amazes me here is that they are not all interested in the divine ideal that the Lord has just presented. The Lord has affirmed lifelong marriage. The Lord has said God hates divorce, in essence. From the very beginning, God never intended that. But they are not interested in the divine ideal. They are only interested in the exception. And this is how it is with sinful people. They're not interested in abiding by the law; they're only interested in finding the loopholes, that's all. And the Pharisees are classic cases of people looking for loopholes in God's law. On the one hand, they want to be thought of as keeping God's law because that's how they enter into God's favor. On the other hand, they want to find every way out they possibly can. . .

Deut. 24 – “some uncleanness, some indecency” -- It seemed to be a very obvious issue of decency, and that is the very same term that is used in 24:1: he found in her some indecency, some unclean thing, some dirty thing, some vile thing, some shameful thing, some improper thing, something unbecoming to a woman, something embarrassing to her husband. But, it cannot refer to adultery. Because adultery, at this point, resulted in, what? In death. And it would have said adultery. It is something dirty, something embarrassing, something gross but not adultery because Deuteronomy 22 very clearly says that there is to be death for adultery, in verses 22 to 24. So, this has got to be something short of adultery. Now, we don't know what it was, but let me give you what I think is the proper understanding.

If you knew in your society that adultery ended in death, you might do a lot of things but you generally would control yourself just short of adultery, true? I mean, you really wouldn't want to die. And so, apparently what happened was, there were people who were entering into shameless indecent, habitual indulgence in sexual sin or other sin, but coming just short of actually committing adultery, acts that stop just short of adultery. And that appears to be what happened in Deuteronomy 24. Here's a woman who is shameful, who is vile, and she stops short of adultery so the death penalty cannot be applied, but she commits these evil things and her husband just divorces her. . .

And so, this text does not command divorce; it commands that you do not remarry an illegitimately divorced person.

So, Moses did permit it, but it wasn't in the Deuteronomy 24 passage that it was permitted. Frankly, dear friends, we don't know where in the Old Testament Moses actually permitted it because it doesn't say that, but we do know that it must have been permitted for a legitimate basis or it wouldn't have been discussed for illegitimate basis in Deuteronomy 24. But the Old Testament does not give us a text where it says I permit you to get a divorce on the basis of this. So, we have to sort of draw that out. And I think there's a reason for that. I think God avoided saying it. It is a permission, but it's sort of way behind the scenes, it's not overtly stated lest people hurry to that passage to justify themselves. . .

And as I said before, if divorce is a merciful concession to the adulterer, do we then say that because God shows mercy to the guilty, He penalizes the innocent? In other words, let's say in the Old Testament your husband commits adultery, he's dead. He has no chance to repent. If he's unredeemed, he's in hell forever. Are you free to remarry? Sure, because death breaks the marriage. If God allows you to divorce, he allows that person to live in order that that person may have time to repent and be restored and even redeemed. Because He's gracious to that person, does He penalize this innocent person over here to a life of celibacy? Hardly, because God doesn't have to make tradeoffs. He isn't gracious to one, and make somebody else pay the price. And so, we believe that where there is grounds for divorce, there must therefore be grounds for remarriage. The purpose of the divorce, after all, was only to show mercy to the guilty, not to sentence the innocent to lifelong singleness, loneliness or misery.

The Pharisees came to Jesus in Matthew chapter 19 and they said in verse 3: “Is it lawful for a man to divorce his wife for every cause?” And Jesus, in effect, said: no, you cannot get a divorce for every cause. There’s only one cause in the law of God for God’s people and that is hard-hearted adultery and then the innocent partner is free to remarry. Now, that is a simple statement. I really don’t think there’s a lot of confusion about that if you understand the Scripture. Now you can back into the Bible with your pre-conceptions and come up with a lot of things, and people have done that and confused the church in many ways. But it’s very clear if you just take it from the text. The problem with it is it’s so isolated, it doesn’t tell us about all the exceptions. It doesn’t answer all of our myriad questions. It just lays down one principle. . .

1 Cor. 7 -- So, is sex unspiritual? No, it’s not. It’s okay not to engage in that, if God’s called you to a life of singleness and has given you the gift to deal with that. It’s also okay to be married. And if you are married, it’s not okay to be celibate. So, sex is not unspiritual. Sex is very spiritual. It’s created by God; it is the most obvious affirmation of the one-flesh truth. And keep in mind if you are single, it’s not for freedom’s sake, it’s not for promiscuity’s sake, and it’s not for lack of commitment’s sake. It’s for the service of the kingdom sake.

So, question number two, still with me, folks? So, question number two, should formerly married people remarry? The answer is: it’s optional. If you can stay single, stay single. If you can’t, then marry, it’s okay. It’s better to marry than to burn. . .

So, the question then he has to answer is: what happens now that you’ve become Christians, you’re still married, do you stay married or do you shed your partner, what are your rights and privileges in that regard?

Should those saved after widowed or divorced remarry? Yes. If they can’t stay single for the service of the Lord. What are the alternatives for those who are married? If you’re married to a Christian, stay married. If you’re married to a non-Christian, stay married; unless the non-Christian wants out, then you’re free to remarry. Should salvation change your marital status? No.

If you’re a believer and an unbeliever, cling to that marriage and be everything you should be as a Christian and in living your Christian life to the very fullest, if that unbeliever wants out, you’re free. You’re free, and I believe your freedom is a freedom to remarry. If it wasn’t, he would have repeated what he repeated in verse 11 when he said there: “If you divorce, then you must remain unmarried or be reconciled.” And, if you could only be free from that marriage but never marry again, why wouldn’t he have repeated that same phrase? No, no. If you’re free, you’re free. Just the same freedom in Romans 7 that death gives. So, if an unbeliever has left you, if they wanted out of that union, you’re free. . .

Now let’s get to the virgins, he says, parthenos. “I have no commandment of the Lord.” The Lord never commented on this, so I can’t quote Jesus, “But I’m going to give you my judgment and it is the judgment by the way of a man who was faithful to God.” So, this is the divine judgment. I’m being true to the faith. I’m being consistent with God. I’m giving you good advice from the Holy Spirit as a man who’s received mercy from the Lord to be faithful. So, this is God’s advice to you. “If you’re a virgin,” he says in verse 26, “it’s good.” See, he’s right back to that advocating of singleness again. It's good. You see, society wants to pressure everybody to be married but there's a reverse trend in this chapter where Paul's trying to pressure people to stay single if they can handle it, because of the tremendous liberty in serving the Lord. So he says, I think it's good. Stay single.

So, the Apostle is giving us a good word here. He's saying it's good to be single. It's good to be single, because of the passing world, the hard time's coming, the difficulty of sinners living that close intimacy and proximity, because of the difficulty in being free to serve the Lord fully, and so forth and so on. So, if you're a virgin, it's good. Stay single. But, verse 28: "If a virgin marry, she hasn't sinned." It's no sin to marry. It's good to marry, too. . .

Let me summarize quickly, listen now. You're single. If you're single, you fall into four categories. Category number one is what I call the delay. You're single, but you're not going to stay that way. This is just a delay until you can get married. What does the Word say to you? Get married, right? Better to marry than to burn. You're single by divine design for the service of Christ. What should you do? Stay single. You're single by divorce. Well, you should consider whether you ought to stay single first of all, and then if you've been divorced out of an adulterous situation, or if your divorce was before you were saved, or if your divorce was an unbeliever departing, you're free to marry. In fact, it's better for you to marry than to burn also. And the fourth category of singleness is those that are single by death. Stay single if you can. But, if you can't get married, you haven't sinned.

Now what about the married? If you're married to a Christian, what? Stay married. If you're married to a non-Christian, what? Stay married. If the unsaved person wants out, let him out, you're free. Now, there's only one other category. And some of you are sitting there saying, "I've got a problem, because I got a divorce that wasn't legitimate when I was a Christian. I fouled up my marriage when I was a Christian. I am an adulterer or an adulteress. I remarried when I had no grounds. What is my status?" Well, you're a sinner. Welcome to the club. If you've already violated God's laws as a Christian, if you were illegitimately divorced, illegitimately remarried when you had no grounds, if you're in a union that the Bible defines as an adulterous union, you have only one recourse: that is, to confess the sin, tell God the sorrow of your heart, and stay in that same union and see if God will not make sweet out of the bitter, honey out of the lion's body.

TEXT: Matthew 19:13-15

TITLE: JESUS BLESSES THE LITTLE CHILDREN

BIG IDEA:

JESUS WELCOMES LITTLE CHILDREN AND POINTS TO THEIR HUMILITY AND DEPENDENCE AS IDENTIFYING MARKS OF KINGDOM CITIZENS

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: The movement from husband-wife relations to children is a natural progression. Children here become a model for discipleship and an essential part of the kingdom community. Far from nuisances to be avoided, children are God's special gift to the community and are to be embraced. Even more than that, they are the very embodiment of the kingdom in the church.

J. Ligon Duncan: This event seems mundane enough but it was important enough to the gospel writers that not only Matthew but also Mark and Luke took the time to record it, with Mark adding some details that Matthew and Luke do not provide. So its brevity belies its significance. There is terse truth in this passage that warrants our attention.

Lesson: We must aspire to child-like lowliness and humility if we want to be in the kingdom of Jesus Christ.

Brian Evans: Jesus shows how important children are to the Kingdom of God and how important children are to Him. This vital significance of children must also be shown by all who belong to Christ and His Kingdom. We too must value others especially children.

William Barclay: To Jesus no one was unimportant. Some might say: 'They're only children; don't let them bother you.' Jesus would never say that. No one was ever a nuisance to Jesus. He was never too tired, never too busy to give all of himself to anyone who needed it. There is a strange difference between Jesus and many famous preachers or evangelists. It is often next to impossible to get into the presence of one of these famous ones. They have a kind of retinue and bodyguard which keep the public away lest the great figure be wearied and bothered. Jesus was the opposite of that. The way to his presence was open to the humblest person and to the youngest child.

Charles Swindoll: By the rules of this world, the more wealthy, famous, important, and powerful you are, the less approachable, accessible, and available. None of us can stroll into the White House, knock on the door of the president of the United States, and ask for a few minutes of time to talk. If we were to see an Academy Award-winning actress dining at a pricey Hollywood restaurant, who of us would be able to slip into an empty seat at the table and ask about her next project? In our world, inaccessibility is a measure of importance.

Not so with Jesus. As usual, He defied cultural expectations and turned the rules of the world upside down. He didn't favor the powerful, give special access to the elite, or make extra space for the influential. He was eminently approachable, accessible, and available . . . to everyone. Jesus was in touch with every kind of person —young and old, poor and rich, sick and healthy, corrupt and honest, harsh and courteous, hateful and loving, humble and proud, the devoted follower and the cruel critic. His refusal to construct social barriers and to limit access is nothing short of astonishing.

David Thompson: (:13-26) Christ's disciples are totally confused about the kingdom.

THE DISCIPLES ARE CONFUSED AS TO WHOM WILL BE BLESSED IN THE KINGDOM AND CONFUSED ABOUT WHO WILL BE IN THE KINGDOM, SO JESUS GIVES THEM SPECIFIC INSTRUCTION DESIGNED TO UNRAVEL THEIR CONFUSION.

Now I want you to notice that in both episodes described in these verses, the disciples respond wrong -- 19:13b; 25. They have been with Jesus nearly three years and yet still they are not quite tuned in to His program. So these two episodes are designed to help straighten them out.

I. (:13a) IMPORTANCE OF BRINGING LITTLE CHILDREN TO JESUS

A. Positive Example of the Parents

"Then some children were brought to Him"

Grant Osborne: This is the normal form for a blessing in the ancient world. Laying on of hands was used for parental blessing (Gen 48:14, 17-18), ordaining leaders (Num 27:18; Deut 34:9; Acts 6:6; 13:3), presenting sacrifices (Exod 29:10, 15; Lev 1:4), healing (Matt 9:18; Mark 6:5; 7:32), and giving the Holy Spirit (Acts 8:17; 19:6). In Matthew the bringing of the children to Jesus recognizes his "authority as the one who determines human destiny" as well as his "mercy and compassion" for those who need his help.

Warren Wiersbe: It is fitting that our Lord's teaching about marriage should be followed by His blessing of the children, for children are the happy heritage of those who are married. Jesus did not look on the children as a curse or a burden. "Two shall become one flesh" is fulfilled in the birth of children, and the love of the parents is deepened and matured as it is shared with others in the home.

David Thompson: The noun "children" in Greek is παιδια, which refers to a "little" child. These were little children who could not come to Christ on their own, so they were brought by their parents. Now when the children were brought to Christ, the parents wanted Christ to "lay hands" on them and "pray." What this means children were not brought to Christ for healing, but for blessing. The laying on of hands and is that these praying was that which a religious leader would do to ask God to bless a person and to greatly use them.

B. Negative Example of the Disciples

"and the disciples rebuked them."

D. A. Carson: Why did the disciples stoop to this rebuke? Perhaps they were annoyed that Jesus was being delayed on his journey to Jerusalem; perhaps they felt they were being interrupted in their important discussion. Although children in the Judaism of the time were deeply cherished, they were thought in some ways to be negligible members of society. Their place was to learn, to be respectful, to listen. But two deeper insights suggest themselves:

- (1) the preceding pericope (vv.3-12) implicitly stresses the sanctity of the family, and vv.13-15 continue by saying something important about children; and
- (2) in 18:1-9, children serve as models for humility, patterns for Jesus' "little ones"; yet

Jesus' disciples, his "little ones," show little humility here.

J. Ligon Duncan: It may have been that the disciples thought that Jesus was too important to be bothered with dealing with children that would have been too young to understand His message, the proclamation to the kingdom of heaven to the people of Israel, that Israel should repent and turn to the God of their fathers and should receive the blessings of the kingdom of heaven and recognize Jesus as the Messiah. Perhaps the disciples thought that Jesus was too great a personage as the Messiah of Israel to be bothered with these children. Perhaps it was their concern that by praying for these children, by blessing these children, it would delay the Lord Jesus in His journey toward Jerusalem. Perhaps they thought that this request was too similar to a current practice that was done by the people, whereby they took their children to the scribes and asked the scribes to bless their children. And perhaps the disciples thought, "O well, you see they are equating the Lord Jesus with the scribes and that's a bad thing, it sort of offends us, and so we're going to keep them away."

II. (:13b) PURPOSE OF BRINGING LITTLE CHILDREN TO JESUS = BLESSING

A. Laying on of Hands

"so that He might lay His hands on them"

B. Praying

"and pray;"

Do we value the intercessory prayer that Jesus is offering right now on our behalf at the right hand of the Father?

III. (:14) APPROPRIATENESS OF BRINGING LITTLE CHILDREN TO JESUS

A. The Command

"But Jesus said, 'Let the children alone, and do not hinder them from coming to Me;'"

Grant Osborne: The priorities of the disciples were warped, and they had not assimilated what Jesus taught in 18:3–5 about the centrality of little children in the kingdom community. As stated in 18:3–5, little children model kingdom realities in their helpless state and vulnerability as well as their sense of total dependence.

Brian Evans: Mark's Gospel records the fact that Jesus was angry with the disciples. He uses the word indignant in the Authorized. He was furious with them. Only two or three times He really got mad at them. Frustrated with them – a lot, disappointed – a lot, but really angry – just a few times. This is one of them, and the only time that particular word of indignation is used of Jesus in reference to them. He was very angry with them for trying to stop these parents from bringing their children, and it is expressed as to why He was angry with them, if you just think about the scene.

Why was Jesus so angry?

There were those who wanted to come to Him and the disciples were blocking the way. The parents were wanting to come to Jesus with their little ones for a blessing and a prayer. Jesus was not saving these children. He was not entering them into the Kingdom of God through salvation. He was not instituting infant baptism as some of our Presbyterian friends might argue. He was welcoming them, praying for them and sending them away with a blessing. From their Jewish education, the disciples thought Jesus was too busy to be bothered with children.

Interesting that He uses two verbs, and there's a reason. The first one is in the aorist tense: point action, permit right now, this moment, let them come; and then "forbid them not" is present tense. And what He's saying is, "Right now, let these come, and from now on, don't ever make it a practice to stop them from coming." So, He takes care of the present and the future, and by the way, He doesn't rebuke the parents at all, so it indicates to me that their motive was pure.

B. The Lesson

"for the kingdom of heaven belongs to such as these."

Charles Swindoll: Earlier, when the disciples had asked who was the "greatest in the kingdom of heaven" (18:1), Jesus had answered, "Unless you are converted and become like children, you will not enter the kingdom of heaven" (18:3). Something about a child's simplicity, openness, honesty, and wonder perfectly illustrates the kind of person who is closest to the kingdom of heaven in attitude and actions. No pretenses, no agenda, no inhibitions, no reluctance, no self-consciousness—children displayed none of those things that hold back heavy-laden adults from approaching Jesus with nothing but their own desperate neediness.

And these children stood in direct contrast to the next person to show up looking for an audience with the Master.

(:15) JESUS MINISTERS TO THE LITTLE CHILDREN AND DEPARTS

A. Significance of Laying on of Hands

"And after laying His hands on them,"

Leon Morris: Jesus did as he was asked and laid his hands on them. Matthew does not specifically say that he prayed, but we must surely understand that he did this. He had been asked to do so, and he had rebuked those who tried to keep the children away from him. So, of course, he would have prayed for them.

B. Geographic Transition

"He departed from there."

Stu Weber: The Messiah-King stooped to impart his blessing on the children by laying his hands on them (19:13). Then he moved on, nearer to Jerusalem and the cross. This final comment by Matthew, he went on from there, brings into focus the contrast between Jesus, the meek lover of children, and the looming shadow of the cross. How could such a gentle man be found guilty of death? Perhaps Matthew wanted us to see the gentle, sacrificial lamb of Isaiah 53:7-9 (cf. 1 Pet. 2:21-25), being led toward the slaughter.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What are some practical ways we can show children their value in the kingdom and encourage them to come to Jesus?
- 2) When do we treat children as unimportance or as a nuisance or as a disruption to our agenda?
- 3) What is the significance of the laying on of hands?
- 4) Are we consistently praying for the spiritual welfare of the little children in our world?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Grant Osborne: Jesus had a special place in his heart and in the kingdom for the downtrodden and despised of the world—tax collectors, the poor, women, and children. With their simple faith, vulnerability, lowliness, and humility children are not only welcome in the kingdom but are also special models of the kingdom that all disciples must emulate in following Christ. All the disciples are “little ones” (Jesus’ special term for them in 10:42; 18:6, 10, 14) as the lowest in society. Their greatness will be found not in their accomplishments but in their servanthood (18:4; 20:26–28).

Richard Gardner: Most interpreters today agree that the passage does not address the topic of infant baptism one way or the other. The text, nevertheless, invites the church to ask: How might we symbolize what Jesus himself signified when he blessed the children? Some believers church bodies, in response to the text, conduct a service of dedication for infants and parents. Indeed, one Anabaptist, Pilgram Marpeck, provided instructions for infant dedication in the congregation (Klaassen: 124-125). In such a service, the community has an opportunity to receive children, to embody God’s blessing, and to affirm its role in the faith development of the young. Similar blessings for children older than infants are sometimes celebrated at milestones of life and spiritual development. Equally important are the occasions the church provides for children to contribute their gifts to the community—and thereby know that their presence is valued.

J. Ligon Duncan: And there are a couple of good tests that we can apply to ourselves to evaluate how we are doing with regard to gospel humility. The first one is this: do you love, or do you resent the gospel? When someone comes to you and tells you that you’re a sinner and that you deserve the condemnation of God, but that God in His love and mercy sent His Son to bear your sins so that by His grace through trust in the Lord Jesus Christ you can be made a child of God, does that offend you? Does it offend you for someone to say, yes, you’re a sinner and you deserve to be condemned? Does that sound a little old fashioned? Does that sound a little out of date? Does that sound offensive to the good person that you are? If so, you may not yet have tasted of the gospel humility that Jesus says is necessary for His kingdom. Or do you love the gospel? When you hear that message that you are but a sinner saved by grace does it thrill you again? Do you love to hear that message realizing that your salvation is by grace alone through faith alone in Christ alone and none of your deeds contributed towards it? If that message thrills you then it is very, very probable that gospel humility has taken root in your heart and is growing. And you’ll never get tired of that story of God’s grace.

There's a second test. What about when difficulties come into your lives? Do you find yourself resenting God and thinking of God as someone who is treating you unfairly. Someone who is doing you wrong. Someone who is an ogre in the sky, raining on your parade, destroying your life without compassion? Then, that shows that you do not have gospel humility. For gospel humility, even in the dark providences of life, recognizes that behind that frowning providence is the smiling face of the loving God and Father. And gospel humility accepts from the hands of the Lord the trials, the losses and crosses that He brings into our experience and asks His Holy Spirit to help us endure. Both of those would be good tests to ascertain whether we have gospel humility. Now that's the first lesson that Jesus teaches in this passage. Jesus uses children, in other words, as a metaphor to speak of those who are child-like in their humility. He's saying, my kingdom belongs to those who will humble themselves like these children, to those who will be child-like in their humility.

John Schultz: Mark states that Jesus did more than place His hands on the children. We read: "And he took the children in his arms, put his hands on them and blessed them." The parents' intent had merely been for the children to be able to touch Jesus, but Jesus did much more than allow Himself to be touched. The hug of a father is an act of tender and protecting love that provides the essential elements for a well-balanced life in adulthood. Jesus always does more than we expect Him to do for us.

The placing on of hands speaks of authority in connection with the future. Little children usually evoke tender feelings in us. But Jesus sees more in them than rosy little cherubs. His imposition of hands stands for a sharing of authority and dignity which the Creator included in His image in man. Jesus sees in these children adult human being who are above the angels in the order of creation and who are predestined to rule as kings and to serve as priests. Jesus' laying on of hands has the same content as the Old Testament anointing of the kings, priests and prophets. It symbolizes the coming of the Holy Spirit upon them. Jesus nowhere else imparted the Holy Spirit in such a direct way as here. Even the disciples who were the first recipients of the Spirit at the day of Pentecost did not receive Him by the laying on of hands. We read: "And with that he breathed on them and said, 'Receive the Holy Spirit.'"

Jesus' blessing represents the fullness of everything God wants to give us. It is the crown of victory, the fulfillment of God's promises, and the inheritance in heaven. In this simple act, Jesus again reaches out in the future to the moment He will pay for it all with His own body and blood. None of these parents can have understood that this itinerant rabbi had the authority to impart God's riches to mankind, even to little children

John MacArthur: Jesus Loves the Little Children

A significant enough passage to have been given full involvement by all the synoptic writers. It appeared to the disciples that the whole idea of bringing little children to Jesus was rather an intrusion of a trivial nature, but not so, as we shall see. Parents in this scene wanted Jesus to touch their children, to bless their children, to pray for their children. . .

There are many words in the New Testament for children. The word here is paidía; paidia. It means little children, but it doesn't tell us how little. But if we were to compare the other passages, we would find the term brepfos, and that word means a suckling, a nursing baby, an infant. They were bringing in their arms their infants, and we know they must have been infants by our Lord's response, because the Bible says in Mark that He took them in His arms, and blessed them. They were bringing babies to Jesus. They wanted Him to pray for them, with His unique divine power, with His unique proximity to God, they felt they wanted His prayers on the behalf of their little ones. . .

It says nothing about the faith of their parents, nothing about any rite or ritual or baptism, nothing about them being elect or non-elect. He just says, “Those who are like these belong in My Kingdom.” And I believe grace is extended to them. That’s why I believe with all my heart that if a baby dies, that baby goes into the presence of Jesus Christ, because they are uniquely in the care of the King. Now, I don’t know how God dispenses that grace to them, other than by a sovereign act on His own part.

I do know that it is dispensable to them, by virtue of the death of Jesus Christ for their sin. It is applied to them by the sovereignty of God in their behalf, because they cannot choose on their own. . .

Now, just to be theological for a moment, I don’t think that means necessarily that all little babies are saved. I just think they’re under special protection, and if they die, at that moment, they’re redeemed. If they were all saved, then when they got to be old enough, they’d lose their salvation, and I’d have theological problems with that. So, I just believe they’re all under special protection, and if, in fact, they die, the Lord gathers them to Himself. It’s a wonderful confidence. . .

Whoever comes into the Kingdom in adult life, comes, when they come, like a little baby. So, the Kingdom is populated, folks, by just two kinds of folks: those who are babies, and those who come in like babies. And what does He mean by that? We went into that in Matthew 18:3 in detail; I’ll just remind you. He means the simplicity, the openness, the honesty, the lack of pretention, the lack of hypocrisy, the dependency, the weakness, the simplicity. The humility that casts oneself, in utter humility and dependence, on the strong arms of the Lord.

Brother Rory: Jesus Loves the Little Children

Children are vitally important to God.

They are a massive part of His world.

- They should be loved
- They should be cherished
- They should be trained
- They should be disciplined
- They should be protected

And here we learn that they should be brought to Jesus.

<https://fbcpur.org/jesus-loves-little-children-matthew-1913-15/>

Brian Evans: Salvation of Infants

What does the Bible teach? What have solid theologians believed down through the ages?

2 Samuel 12:19–23 (ESV)

19 But when David saw that his servants were whispering together, David understood that the child was dead. And David said to his servants, “Is the child dead?” They said, “He is dead.” 20 Then David arose from the earth and washed and anointed himself and changed his clothes. And he went into the house of the Lord and worshiped. He then went to his own house. And when he asked, they set food before him, and he ate. 21 Then his servants said to him, “What is this thing that you have done? You fasted and wept for the child while he was alive; but when the child died, you arose and ate food.” 22 He said,

“While the child was still alive, I fasted and wept, for I said, ‘Who knows whether the Lord will be gracious to me, that the child may live?’ 23 But now he is dead. Why should I fast? Can I bring him back again? I shall go to him, but he will not return to me.”

I thank God that when I was searching for truth to share with those who had lost children that He led me to Calvin, and other Reformed Theologians and to John MacArthur’s book called, Safe in the Arms of God

A. All People are Born with a Sin Nature

Babies and infants are born with the bent toward sin and as soon as a child reaches an age of moral understanding, the child will choose sin. The Scriptures speak in multiple places that we are born into sin.

Psalm 51:5 (ESV)

5 Behold, I was brought forth in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me.

Isaiah 48:8 (ESV)

*8 You have never heard, you have never known, from of old your ear has not been opened.
For I knew that you would surely deal treacherously, and that from before birth you were called a rebel.*

Genesis 8:21 (ESV)

21 And when the Lord smelled the pleasing aroma, the Lord said in his heart, “I will never again curse the ground because of man, for the intention of man’s heart is evil from his youth. Neither will I ever again strike down every living creature as I have done.

What we cannot say is that babies go to heaven when they die because they are innocent but that babies die and go to heaven because God is gracious.

B. Salvation is a Matter of God’s Grace Not Man’s Works

Listen to what Charles Spurgeon once wrote... We hold that all infants who die are elect of God and are therefore saved, and we look to this as being the means by which Christ shall see the travail of His soul to a great degree.

Charles Hodge agreed. He wrote, “All who die in infancy are doubtless saved, but they are saved by grace” (Systematic Theology, ii, 11).

John MacArthur writes, There is no clearer manifestation of this truth (speaking that salvation is by God’s grace) that the gift of eternal life is given to a helpless infant. The saving grace given to an infant who has no part whatsoever in his salvation is a perfect example of salvation, which is always wrought sovereignly by God through grace.

The Westminster Catechism argues that infants who die are in glory (ch. 10, sec. 3 says those “dying in infancy are regenerated and saved by Christ”).

Loraine Boettner explained why the doctrine of infant salvation must be uniquely Calvinistic: “The doctrine of infant salvation finds a logical place in the Calvinistic system; for the redemption of the soul is thus infallibly determined irrespective of any faith, repentance, or good works, whether actual or foreseen.

C. We are Saved by the Sacrificial Work of Jesus Christ on the Cross

Salvation comes by the atonement of the sacrificial death of Jesus Christ on behalf of His elect. His blood was shed for His own whether they die at 110 years old or in the womb, His blood has washed them clean. God chooses those who will be saved and those who will die as an infant.

The great reformed theologian BB Warfield wrote speaking of infants who die, Their salvation is wrought by an unconditional application of the grace of Christ to their souls, through the immediate and irresistible operation of the Holy Spirit prior to and apart from any action on their own proper wills...That is but to say that they are unconditionally predestined to salvation from the foundation of the world.

John Calvin condemned Servetus' theology. He said that Servetus' theology was so twisted that it stressed free will to the point that if you followed him, you would be forced to conclude that even infants who died were damned to hell because they were not able to exercise their will to believe in saving faith (Institutes IV, 16, p 31). In that same section, Calvin addresses John 3:36, and argues that it points to infant salvation, as infants were not able to exercise willing unbelief, so they do could not possibly stand condemned.

D. We are Saved by Grace but Damned by Works

Revelation 20:11–15 (ESV)

11 Then I saw a great white throne and him who was seated on it. From his presence earth and sky fled away, and no place was found for them. 12 And I saw the dead, great and small, standing before the throne, and books were opened. Then another book was opened, which is the book of life. And the dead were judged by what was written in the books, according to what they had done. 13 And the sea gave up the dead who were in it, Death and Hades gave up the dead who were in them, and they were judged, each one of them, according to what they had done. 14 Then Death and Hades were thrown into the lake of fire. This is the second death, the lake of fire. 15 And if anyone's name was not found written in the book of life, he was thrown into the lake of fire.

Scripture teaches eternal punishment is the wage due those who have willfully sinned. The inhabitants of hell are those who willfully sin against God.

Galatians 5:18–21 (ESV)

18 But if you are led by the Spirit, you are not under the law. 19 Now the works of the flesh are evident: sexual immorality, impurity, sensuality, 20 idolatry, sorcery, enmity, strife, jealousy, fits of anger, rivalries, dissensions, divisions, 21 envy, drunkenness, orgies, and things like these. I warn you, as I warned you before, that those who do such things will not inherit the kingdom of God.

Infants who die have no willful sin against God to pay for. They have no rebellion or unbelief, no works of the flesh to pay for.

Jonah 4:10–11 (ESV)

10 And the Lord said, “You pity the plant, for which you did not labor, nor did you make it grow, which came into being in a night and perished in a night. 11 And should not I pity Nineveh, that great city, in which there are more than 120,000 persons who do not know their right hand from their left, and also much cattle?”

Infants have not suppressed God’s truth through disobedience...

Romans 1:18 (ESV)

18 For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who by their unrighteousness suppress the truth.

Infants cannot nor have they been given the opportunity to believe. They are not intellectually capable of saving faith nor are they intellectually capable of unbelief. Salvation is entirely by grace apart from works. Damnation is completely by works, apart from grace.

Review...

So, children need a Savior

God has provided a Savior, Jesus Christ for them

All children who die before understanding sin and corruption so that their sins are deliberate are graciously saved by God through Jesus Christ.

Every baby who has died in the womb whether from miscarriage or from abortion and every infant that has died after birth has been immediately brought to the Father through the sacrifice of Jesus on the cross.

Calvin, the Westminster divines, Hodge, Spurgeon, Warfield, and Boettner. In our own life time, it has been ably defended by John MacArthur and John Piper. I want to give you confidence in God’s goodness, and assure you that your confidence is not false and not coming from sentiment, but rather it has its foundation in the deep and saving nature of God.

So, Jesus tells His disciples and us do not hinder but let the children come to Me for such is the Kingdom of God.

<https://gccwaverly.net/2022/02/23/sermon-the-children-are-brought-to-jesus-matthew-1913-15/>

TEXT: Matthew 19:16-26

TITLE: RICH YOUNG RULER -- SALVATION IS FOR THOSE WHO FORSAKE EVERYTHING AND FOLLOW JESUS

BIG IDEA:

LOVERS OF WEALTH MUST CHOOSE BETWEEN FOLLOWING CHRIST OR CLINGING TO THEIR MATERIALISTIC VALUE SYSTEM (THE IDOLS OF POSSESSIONS)

INTRODUCTION:

Donald Hagner: The narrative now turns to the story of a young man whose great riches kept him from the full and unreserved commitment required of one who would become a disciple. This in turn leads to a brief discussion of the difficulty of the rich entering the kingdom (vv 23–26) and the rewards of sacrificial discipleship (vv 27–30). The absolute value of the kingdom provides the underlying unity of these passages. If the kingdom demands one's all, the rewards more than compensate for the sacrifices.

Grant Osborne: (:16-30) This passage on wealth reverses that of becoming like a child in vv. 13–15 and yet at the same time tells how to become “like a child.” It turns to a major barrier against doing so—the riches and rewards of this world. The rich young man embodies this anti-kingdom perspective as he chooses wealth over following Christ. As Blomberg says, “The children turn out to be nearer to the kingdom than most might have suspected; the rich man demonstrates that he is further away than most would have guessed.” This passage also continues the emphasis on the household affairs of everyday life, now turning to the subject of money and its proper place. Finally, this story is in a sense an illustrative vignette of the saying in 6:19–21 (seek treasures in heaven, not treasures on earth).

Walter Wilson: As Jesus had explained in 6:24, it is not possible to serve both God and mammon. Wealth may not be an impediment to keeping the commandments (19:18–20), but it can be an impediment to following Jesus (19:21–22). . .

Much like the first pericope of the unit (see 19:3–9+19:10–12), this pericope has two parts, an exchange with a non-disciple about the law (19:16–22) being continued (and commented upon) by an exchange with the disciples about the kingdom (19:23–30). Each pericope begins (19:3, 16) with the non-disciple(s) approaching (προσέρχομαι) Jesus and asking him a question, to which Jesus responds with a counter-question (19:4–5, 17a). The first part of the second pericope (19:16–22) is organized around a series of three questions posed to Jesus by the rich young man (19:16, 18a, 20), while the second part (19:23–30) is subdivided by a question posed to Jesus by Peter (19:27). Besides casting Jesus in the role of a teacher fielding questions, the two parts are united by the catchwords “follow” (19:21, 27) and “eternal life” (19:16, 29), the latter creating a frame around the entire pericope. Indeed, by the time they reach the end of the pericope, the readers will have encountered an array of images for depicting participation in divine redemption: not only eternal life but also treasure in heaven, entering the kingdom, sitting on thrones, being “first,” and being “saved.”

I. (:16-22) GOOD INTENTIONS CAN'T GUARANTEE SALVATION – ENCOUNTER WITH THE RICH YOUNG RULER

A. (:16) Desire for Eternal Life

1. Coming to the Right Person = the Source of Truth

“And behold, one came to Him and said,”

2. Asking the Right Question = How to Obtain Eternal Life

“Teacher, what good thing shall I do that I may obtain eternal life?”

Daniel Doriani: Clearly, this man wants to know how he can fulfill the conditions that will let him obtain eternal life. He wants to know what he owes God. Better yet, what can he do so that God is obligated to him, so the Lord owes him eternal life?

Michael Wilkins: The “god” of a person’s life is whatever rules his or her values, priorities, and ambitions. The lack this young man sensed could not be filled with his wealth or his own religious efforts. It could only be filled with the perfection that comes through entering the kingdom of heaven and experiencing the inner transformation of heart; those two things will set him on the path to be perfect as the heavenly Father is perfect. The inner change will produce a transformation from the inside out.

Jeffrey Crabtree: The young man’s desire was right and his question revealed that he understood the purpose of Jesus’ message. Jesus was offering eternal life. However, the young man did not understand how to receive it. He was thinking works: “What good thing can I do?” Matthew’s readers know that humble belief, not works, is required (18:6) for entrance into the kingdom (21:31-32; 13:19; Lk. 8:12; Jn. 1:12; Eph. 2:8-9).

B. (:17-21) Discipleship Challenge

1. (:17a) Redirecting the Conversation to the Absolute Nature of Goodness

“And He said to him, ‘Why are you asking Me about what is good? There is only One who is good;’”

This young man comes to Jesus already evaluating himself as relatively a good person who still lacks something in his spiritual makeup. He is looking with great respect to Jesus to reveal that one secret aspect of performing righteousness that will put him over the top and secure eternal life. Clearly he needs to completely revamp his perspective on goodness.

J. Ligon Duncan: And Jesus’ response to this young man, in the very first words He says to him, shows us both Jesus’ deity and His ability to look into the hearts of men. I want you to look at verse 17 at what Jesus says when He responds to the young man. The young man says to Him, “What good thing must I do in order to obtain eternal life?” Jesus’ first response is to say, “Why are you asking Me about what is good? There is only One who is good.” Now I want you to stop right there. And I want you to recognize what Jesus has done. In a few moments, this young man is going to claim to be good. When Jesus asks him to keep the commandments, this young man is going to say, “I’ve done that. I am a good person”. And I want you to notice what Jesus has already said to him before he ever says that. “No one is good except God.”

Do you realize what the Great Physician of our souls is doing here? He is diagnosing this man’s spiritual condition before the conversation ever begins. And He is saying, “Your fundamental problem is that you think that you are good. You think that you are spiritually wealthy before the Lord. You do not recognize your own poverty. No one is good except God.” And then He says, “Now, keep the commandments.” The Lord Jesus in this passing comment before He ever gives an answer to the man’s direct question is telling us that no one is good. . .

I want you to also see that Jesus in this passage zeroes in on the question of the nature of goodness. The nature of holiness. What does it mean to be good? That is a very important question. Over and over Jesus has said it means more than to be outwardly moral. Because our actions are not only seen in the outward things that we do, the reality of the goodness of our actions is not only seen in the outward things that we do, but in our heart attitude and why we do them. Goodness begins in the heart. And it is implanted there only by God’s grace. And so Jesus is zeroing in on the crucial issue here of what it means to be good.

Charles Swindoll: I like how Jesus didn’t let the man have control of the conversation for an instant. If we read Matthew, Mark, and Luke together, it seems that the man was engaging in a bit of flattery as well as self-justification. In response to being called “good” (Mark 10:17; Luke 18:18), Jesus suggested that the man didn’t know what he was saying: “Why do you call Me good? No one is good except God alone” (Luke 18:19). Matthew’s account notes how Jesus turned this flattery into an exposé of the man’s insufficient notion of “good” (Matt. 19:17). In the rich man’s eyes, moral or ethical goodness was measured on a horizontal scale —comparing righteousness among people. In the man’s worldly eyes, Jesus was pretty high on the “goodness scale.” Jesus blasted that whole concept of horizontal righteousness and replaced it with a divine standard: “There is only One who is good” (19:17). The standard for goodness and righteousness is not how much better we are than the people around us but how we measure up to God’s perfect holiness. . .

On the one hand, this is a valid offer. Theoretically, if a person had innate righteousness and goodness, he or she would keep all the commands perfectly, with a willing heart and humble spirit, as an act of loving worship toward God. Such a person —if they ever existed —would please God in every respect and would merit eternal life. Theoretically. In reality, the only person with such innate righteousness and goodness is the God-man, Jesus Christ. He alone was born without the total depravity and fallen sinful nature that characterizes humanity. He alone is “good” in the absolute sense. And He alone could live a perfect life in obedience to God’s commands and please Him in every respect. So, while Jesus stated the truth that keeping the commands could open the door to eternal life, He didn’t bother to tell the rich young ruler that it was impossible for anybody to do it but Himself!

Warren Wiersbe: Jesus forced the young man to think seriously about the word good that he had used in addressing Jesus. . . If Jesus is only one of many religious teachers in history, then His words carry no more weight than the pronouncements of any other religious leader. But if Jesus is good, then He is God, and we had better heed what he says.

Craig Blomberg: Jesus is diverting attention from the young man's inadequate criteria for entering into life and focusing on the standard of divine goodness.

D. A. Carson: In the absolute sense of goodness required to gain eternal life, only God is good (cf. 1Ch 16:34; 2Ch 5:13; Ps 106:1; 118:1, 29). Jesus will not allow anything other than God’s will to determine what is good. By approaching Jesus in this way (esp. vv.16, 20), the young man reveals simultaneously that he wants something beyond God’s will (v.20) and that he misconstrues the absoluteness of God’s goodness.

Donald Hagner: The issue in Matthew, however, concerns the definition of the good. God has given the commandments precisely to define righteousness, and Jesus, loyal to the law, stands behind them. While Jesus interprets the meaning of those commandments, they themselves are the beginning point for the definition of righteousness. One who seeks eternal life should accordingly look to the commandments.

2. (:17b-19) Relationships Viewed through the Prism of the Law Reveal Hidden Sin

“but if you wish to enter into life, keep the commandments.

He said to Him, ‘Which ones?’

And Jesus said, ‘You shall not commit murder; You shall not commit adultery;

You shall not steal; You shall not bear false witness; 19 Honor your father and mother; and You shall love your neighbor as yourself.’”

Stu Weber: The man's next question revealed his misunderstanding still further. He did not understand that God required absolute perfection. He seemed to presume that God graded on a curve and that his “goodness” was better than many. Jesus let this man know that anything less than perfection is no “good” at all. A righteous man would have to keep all of the commandments perfectly. The man, grasping for possibilities, assumed that there must be some special set of commandments that made a person particularly righteous.

Daniel Doriani: We are tempted to question Jesus’ judgment here. When the rich man asks what he should do to gain eternal life, we expect Jesus to present the standard evangelistic reply: “You cannot do anything. You need to repent and believe and trust Jesus to do it for you. He offered God his perfect obedience all through his life, and he offers his obedience to you if you trust in him. Further, he died on the cross for you to atone for all of your sins, and he rose again to gain the victory over death.”

The standard reply is absolutely true, but Jesus said no such thing. He told the man who trusted in his strength to be strong and obey the law. Then, when the man asked, “Which ones?” Jesus surprises us again. We expect him to lead the man to the first, vertical commandments, “Have no other gods; cherish no idols; love the Lord of Israel.” But Jesus takes him to the horizontal or social laws: do not murder, steal, bear false witness. That, of course, is the sort of command the man thinks we can keep. Among the social laws, Jesus even neglects to say “You shall not covet” (Ex. 20:17)—the commandment that would have forced the man to examine his motives. So Jesus’ reply seems only to toss fuel onto the flame of the man’s inflated self-confidence. . .

Jesus does not quibble. He accepts the man’s self-judgment and moves on. It is as if he says, “Ah yes. Sorry. I was not aware of your achievement. You have perfectly fulfilled God’s law and want to do something more? Very well then, perhaps there is just one more thing you could possibly do: ‘If you want to be perfect, go, sell your possessions and give to the poor, and you will have treasure in heaven. Then come, follow me’” (19:21). . .

Of course, the Lord does not ask everyone to sell his goods and so to live as a disciple. If wealth is not our god, something else is. But the Lord asks everyone to give up something. There is a cost to discipleship for everyone; everyone must give up the god he worships. . .

Observe the way Jesus reaches hearts, then and now. When the man said he had perfectly obeyed God’s law, Jesus let the claim pass, without comment. He said nothing of the small, private sins that we commit every day: boasting and pride, envy and lust, self-pity and anger, gossiping and complaining. Instead Jesus gave him the great work he sought, because the command would become a mirror to the man's soul, so he could see himself as he was. He would see that he was not quite the servant of God that he imagined. He was the flag on the rope as two teams—two gods—played tug of war for his soul. The rope danced back and forth as the claims of God and the claims of money tugged at his soul.

Stanley Saunders: When pressed to identify which commandments he has in mind. Jesus points the man toward the Ten Commandments, especially those which focus on human relationships, which he underlines by adding to the list the commandment to love your neighbor as yourself (19:19; cf. 22:39; Lev 19:18).

Jeffrey Crabtree: Jesus may have used these particular commandments to show the young man his sin. The law promised life (Lev. 18:5; Dt. 30:11-20; Rom. 7:10; 10:5) to all who obeyed it but because no one was able to obey it fully (Rom. 8:3), the law only brought condemnation and death. As Paul later taught in Romans 7:7-8, one function of the law is to show sinners their sin and sinfulness (also 3:20). Jesus may have referred this man to the law, then, to convince him of his sin.

William Barclay: Jesus cites one commandment, as it were, out of order. He cites the command to honour parents last, when in point of fact it ought to come first. It is clear that Jesus wishes to lay special stress on that commandment. Why? May it not be that this young man had grown rich and successful in his career, and had then forgotten his parents, who may have been very poor? He may well have risen in the world, and have been half-ashamed of his family back at home; and then he may have justified himself perfectly legally by the law of Corban, which Jesus had so unsparingly condemned (Matthew 15:1-6; Mark 7:9-13). These passages show that he could well have done that, and still have legally claimed to have obeyed the commandments. In the very commandments which he cites, Jesus is asking this young man what his attitude to other people and to his parents is, asking what his personal relationships are like.

Grant Osborne: In v. 17 he turned the man's focus from self to God, now he turns that focus also from self to others. The basic problem is that he has lived only for himself and his possessions. The Decalogue makes it clear that one can only find "life" by centering first on God (the first table) and then on others (the second table). "As yourself" (ὡς σεαυτόν, see further on 22:39) means to love those around you as deeply and as sacrificially as you love yourself. . .

The man needs ethical completeness, true obedience to all God has said in his revealed Word. So Jesus turns to the primary problem in the man's life. His possessions have clearly become his god and have thus replaced God in his life. Therefore, the only recourse is to do what must be done with all idols: get rid of them. Moreover, if he is truly to "love his neighbor," he must sell the idolatrous possessions and then give the money "to the poor." This does not mean he had never engaged in almsgiving; he could not have said he had kept "all" the commands if he had not. Jesus is not talking about almsgiving but about idolatry.

3. (:20-21) Repentance Hinges on Total Abandonment to Follow Jesus

a. (:20) Spiritual Blindness

"The young man said to Him,

'All these things I have kept; what am I still lacking?'"

- b. (:21) Specific Discipleship Test Geared for the Rich Young Ruler
“Jesus said to him, ‘If you wish to be complete, go and sell your possessions and give to the poor, and you shall have treasure in heaven; and come, follow Me.’”

Charles Swindoll: When the young man claimed that he had kept all those commandments, Jesus let it go. I’m sure He could have poked and probed, revealing some area of neglect, a secret lust or hatred, a disrespect of parents, or some other blind spot. But instead, Jesus once again went straight for the jugular: in this case, the source of the man’s pride, power, and self-confidence — his riches.

J. Ligon Duncan: All of us have different sins that vex us. All of us have pet sins. And they’re different in each. Each of us have different temptations. Each of us have different inclinations. And those sins, those root sins, those grand sins which are the cause the source, the fountainhead of other sins, those sins give us a clue to the state of heart. We may look outwardly moral to everyone around us, but when we deal with ourselves in the quietness of our own room, and we look at our own hearts, and we know the things that we struggle with that maybe even those closest to us don’t know about, we know in our heart of hearts we are not good. We know that we cannot earn our way to salvation, because our hearts are in a state of rebellion. And Jesus is zeroing in on this man. He wants to get to his root sins. When Jesus says to him, “keep the commandments,” Jesus is not telling this young man salvation is by work- salvation is by earning it- salvation is by your good works- Jesus is using that statement as a spiritual diagnostic tool in order to force this man to look at his own heart and recognize that he hasn’t kept the law.

Jeffrey Crabtree: Jesus was specific about how the young ruler could possess eternal life, requiring three things:

- (1) The young man was to dispose of his wealth. He was to liquidate everything.
- (2) He was to give the proceeds to the poor. This was one way he could love his neighbor as himself, and his almsgiving would be transformed into eternal riches (Lk. 12:33). Ridding himself of his possessions would also free him of his worship of mammon (6:24) and the deceitfulness (13:22) and snare (1 Tim. 6:9) of riches. Then
- (3) he would follow Jesus.

Jesus’ words were imperatival and called for a decisive exercise of the will: “Go!” “Sell!” “Give!” “Come!” “Follow Me!” Jesus did not choose for the man. He presented the requirements and encouraged the young man to make the right choices. “Sell” and “give” are decisive and denote urgency (Greek ingressive aorist). “Go” and “follow” denote positive commands that expect continuing action (Greek present). To “follow” Jesus is not a single event as when a person receives Him as Savior but an ongoing action beginning at conversion and continuing through life in a disciple-Lord relationship.

William Barclay: Here is the key to the whole passage. The young man claimed to have kept the law. In the legal sense, that might be true; but in the spiritual sense it was not true, because his attitude to other people was wrong. In the last analysis, his attitude was utterly selfish. That is why Jesus confronted him with the challenge to sell all and to give to the poor. This man was so shackled to his possessions that nothing less than surgical removal of them would suffice. If people look on their possessions as given to them for nothing but their own comfort and convenience, those possessions are a chain which must be broken; if they look on their possessions as a means to helping others; those possessions are a crown.

The great truth of this story lies in the way it sheds light on the meaning of eternal life. Eternal life is life such as God himself lives. The word for eternal is aiōnios, which does not mean lasting forever; it means such as befits God, or such as belongs to God, or such as is characteristic of God. The great characteristic of God is that he so loved and he gave. Therefore the essence of eternal life is not a carefully calculated keeping of the commandments and the rules and the regulations; eternal life is based on an attitude of loving and sacrificial generosity to other people. If we would find eternal life, if we would find happiness, joy, satisfaction, peace of mind and serenity of heart, it will not be by piling up a credit balance with God through keeping commandments and observing rules and regulations; it will be through reproducing God's attitude of love and care to our neighbours. To follow Christ and in grace and generosity to serve the men and women for whom Christ died are one and the same thing.

In the end, the young man turned away in great distress. He refused the challenge, because he had great possessions. His tragedy was that he loved things more than he loved people; and he loved himself more than he loved others. Those who put things before people and self before others must turn their backs on Jesus Christ.

Richard Gardner: The demand is a symbolic test of loyalty, a test that confronts every would-be disciple in one form or another: Will we serve God and seek first his kingdom, or will we serve wealth and status in pursuit of our ambitions (cf. 6:19-34)? When the rich young man goes away sorrowful (v. 22), he mirrors the tragic plight of all who choose the second option.

Leon Morris: It would seem that the young man was somewhat disappointed. He had come to Jesus looking for a brilliant new insight into the ways of God, a challenge that would stir the blood, some great deed to be done, after which his claim on eternal life would be certain. Instead all that had happened was that he had been referred to the commandments, old stuff that he had been keeping for years ("from my youth" is added in the other two accounts). . .

This does not mean that getting into heaven is a matter of rewards for meritorious acts. It means rather that the young man of this story was quite unaware of his failure to keep the commandment to have no other God but the one true God. He had made a god of his wealth, and when faced with the challenge he could not forsake that god. If his attitude to the true God had been such that he could have dispensed with his riches, then he would have had treasure in heaven, whether he gave them all away or not. But the challenge to get rid of them all showed that he did not have the right attitude to God. God demands undivided loyalty from those who would be his. "Come, follow me," Jesus went on. This is the challenge he had previously made to the fishermen as they were at their nets (4:19) and to Matthew as he sat at his place of work (9:9). They did not have the riches of this young man, it would seem, but they left what they had and followed Jesus. They were prepared to sacrifice everything; that is the path of the service of God.

D. A. Carson: Many have taken these verses to indicate a two-tier ethic. Some disciples find eternal life, and others go further and become perfect by adopting a more compassionate stance (e.g., Harrington; NIDNTT, 2:63). But G. Barth ("Matthew's Understanding of the Law," 95ff.) convincingly disproves this exegesis. In particular the young man's question in v.20, "What do I still lack?" clearly refers to gaining eternal life (v.17), and Jesus' answer in v.21 must be understood as answering the question. A two-tier Christianity is implicitly contradicted by 23:8-12, and the same word ("perfect") is applied to all of Jesus' disciples in 5:48. Matthew shows no strong tendency toward asceticism. Therefore, the basic thrust of v.21 is not “Sell your possessions and give to the poor” but “Come, follow me.”

R. T. France: The young man’s request for some “good thing” to do has brought him face to face with goodness at a level which will prove too high for him. The “goodness” of keeping commandments is, as v. 17 has reminded us, always relative; Jesus now replaces it with a demand which is absolute, the demand of the kingdom of heaven.

The practical outworking of the man’s search for perfection thus takes an unexpected direction. Rather than some spiritual exercise or mystical pilgrimage Jesus first prescribes a very practical action. But this is no token gesture, but the total disinvestment and irrevocable disposal of everything that has provided the basis for his “good” life so far. He has no doubt, like all pious Jews, made regular and generous contributions to the relief of the poor and disadvantaged within his community (that is at least part of what he would understand by “loving your neighbor as yourself”), but Jewish charity operated within prudential limits, whereas Jesus puts no limit to his demand. To follow it will place this self-sufficient young man in the same position as the birds and the flowers in 6:25–32, depending directly on the provision of a heavenly Father for the essentials of life.

But even this radical action of dispossession is not simply another “good thing” to do; it is the prelude to something even more far-reaching. The imperatives “sell” and “give” are followed by “come” and “follow,” the essence of Jesus’ demand is not disinvestment but discipleship. So the giving up of possessions is not presented as a sacrifice desirable for its own sake, but rather as the means to something far better—treasure in heaven. . . The release from material preoccupation is not in itself the secret of eternal life; it is the introduction to a new way of life as a disciple of Jesus: “follow me.” It is in this, rather than in the act of renunciation and generosity alone, that the eternal life which the man is looking for will be found. This is the treasure in heaven.

C. (:22) Decision to Cling to Possessions Rather than Abandon All and Follow Christ

1. Best Gospel Message from the Best Messenger Doesn’t Guarantee the Best Results

“But when the young man heard this statement, he went away grieved;”

S. Lewis Johnson: Someone has said that the rich young ruler came to the right person, asked the right question, got the right answer, but made the wrong decision. That is true. It is sometimes said by young men, even in theological seminaries, that when love is felt the message is heard. We often hear people make a stupid comment that if we really love people they will respond to the ministry of the word of God. That is not true. No one ever loved more than Jesus Christ, and yet this man did not come. No one ever loved more than the Apostle Paul who was human, and yet men did not always respond to the apostle’s messages. As a matter of fact they did not generally respond. The Lord Jesus loved perfectly and only a small remnant of men responded. When love is felt the message may be heard or the message may not be heard.

Michael Wilkins: The young man knows that Jesus has correctly pinpointed what is lacking in his life. His “great wealth” (lit., “many possessions”), which include money, but also his houses, land, animals, and so on, has captivated his heart, and he cannot exchange this god of his life for Jesus (cf. 6:21–24). So he goes away with great distress (cf. 26:22, 37), because he knows deep in his heart that he has made a decision that will have eternal consequences.

2. Earthly Possessions Can Prove More Enticing than Kingdom Treasures

“for he was one who owned much property.”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Matthew’s syntax, literally “was having,” may suggest that this young man had possessed this wealth for some time. He was accustomed to wealth. Hagner (33B:558) thinks the words suggest that he was preoccupied with his wealth. Apparently, wealth was so important to him that he would not do as the Lord required and he walked away. In exchange for his soul (16:26), he chose wealth. He chose his present possession over the one pearl of great value (13:46) and over the treasure in the field (13:44). He did not get past the first requirement of discipleship (16:24). The young man whom Jesus loved walked away from the one who was on His way to the cross to save his soul.

This is the only person according to the Gospel records that Jesus told to sell everything. The Twelve “left all” to follow Him (v. 27), but even they had not given away their properties (Mt. 8:14). This means that complete obedience to Jesus is required of all, but the individual orders are not always the same. All who would follow Jesus are required to repent and trust Jesus as Savior and Lord. How that is lived out will be different for each person and can mean selling all, leaving family (Mt. 8:22), leaving occupations (Mt. 4:18-22; 9:9), staying home and witnessing (Mk. 5:18-20), or whatever He directs (Mt. 16:24-25; Jn. 21:22).

Robert Gundry: In telling why the young man went away sorrowing, the explanation “for he had many acquisitions” illustrates Jesus’ having said that “where your treasure is, there will be your heart too” (6:21 [see also 6:24; 19:23–24]). “He had many acquisitions” contrasts both with the selling he’d told the young man to do and with Jesus’ having told the Twelve, “You shouldn’t acquire gold or silver or copper [coins] [and so on]” (10:9–10a). “Acquisitions” defines the young man’s possessions as things he’d gotten as a result of coveting in violation of the commandment left conspicuously unquoted. This youth’s going away from Jesus therefore presents a sad contrast with the little children who came to Jesus in 19:13–15. But just as that earlier passage threw open the church to youth, the present passage calls on youth to renounce affluence in order to become true disciples of Jesus.

David Turner: Jesus alone determines what is genuine Torah obedience. His demand for total commitment to the kingdom is in reality a gracious gospel offer that calls the man to rely not on wealth but on Jesus and the values of the kingdom (cf. 6:21, 24; 13:22). The young man walks away from Jesus in a very sad frame of mind. Jesus has identified the inadequacy that haunts him, but he is not yet willing to obey Jesus. . . .

At this point Jesus gets to the heart of the problem by commanding the man to give his wealth to the poor and become a disciple. In effect, Jesus asks the man to reprise a role previously scripted in two parables (13:44–46). The man will lose everything, but he will gain Jesus and the kingdom, which he has lacked all along (16:24–26). His sorrowful departure demonstrates he has not loved his neighbor as himself (19:19) and thus he has not kept all the commandments after all. Jesus did not directly cite the tenth commandment, “You must not covet” (Exod. 20:17), but the man’s response clearly shows that he has broken it. Finally the man implicitly acknowledges what he lacks. His wealth has become an idol, and he is violating the first commandment (Exod. 20:2–3). His refusal to do a good thing—to divest himself of wealth and follow Jesus—shows that he does not acknowledge God’s goodness. He serves money, and so he cannot serve God (Matt. 6:24). “Jesus demands not alms but everything” (W. Davies and Allison 1997: 46; cf. Calvin 1972: 2.256–57). But materialism prevents him from seeking the kingdom first (6:33). His sorrow indicates not only that he is not ready to follow Jesus but also that now he knows what he lacks. Perhaps he eventually will follow Jesus's instructions, since "with God everything is possible" (19:26).

II. (:23-26) SALVATION DEPENDS ON THE POWER OF GOD

A. (:23-24) Difficulty of the Rich Entering the Kingdom

1. (:23) Statement of the Difficulty

*"And Jesus said to His disciples,
'Truly I say to you, it is hard for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven.'"*

R. T. France: The story of one man's spiritual failure becomes the model for a general and emphatic pronouncement by Jesus (see on 5:18 for "I tell you truly"), which picks up and takes further the warning in the interpretation of the parable of the sower that "the worries of this world and the false lure of wealth [can] choke the message [so that] it cannot produce a crop." (13:22) Whatever the specific pressures faced by the young man, his experience is now universalized as the danger which faces "the rich" in general.

Grant Osborne: The wealthy have so much power and control over this life that they perceive little need for the heavenly realm, as exemplified in the young man in the previous encounter. It is "hard" for such a person to turn to God.

2. (:24) Illustration of the Difficulty

"And again I say to you, it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God."

Grant Osborne: Jesus' analogy for the degree of difficulty has been long misunderstood. Many still say that it refers to the Needle's Eye Gate in Jerusalem, a low opening that would be hard for a camel to get through. However, no such gate existed in Jesus' time! Others have said "needle" simply refers to a low opening like the narrow door of 7:13-14 or they see it as a "rope" (κάμιλον as opposed to "camel" [κάμηλον] in the text). Such attempts to water down the imagery are unnecessary; this is rabbinic hyperbole (e.g., "straining the gnat but swallowing the camel" in 23:24), a stylistic device Jesus uses often. It depicts the largest animal in Palestine (a camel) going through the smallest hole (the eye of a needle) to illustrate how "difficult" it is for the wealthy to know God.

William Barclay: Riches have three main effects on people's outlook:

- 1) Riches encourage a false independence.
- 2) Riches shackle people to this earth.
- 3) Riches tend to make people selfish.

B. (:25-26) Possibility of Salvation by the Power of God

1. (:25) Difficulty Astonishes the Disciples

*"And when the disciples heard this, they were very astonished and said,
'Then who can be saved?'"*

Grant Osborne: Here the astonishment is caused by the general Jewish belief that riches actually signified favor with God, who blessed the piety of the family with earthly rewards. So for them the rich young man with his superficial piety was in reality one of God's chosen. His wealth “provided the possibility of both deeds of charity (almsgiving) and leisure for the study of Torah and the pursuit of righteousness.” If it is impossible for such a one to enter the kingdom, who can?

Warren Wiersbe: We cannot follow the King and live for worldly wealth. We cannot serve God and money. The love of money is the root of all kinds of evil (1 Tim. 6:6-10). Jesus Christ demands of all who will follow Him that they love Him supremely.

Donald Hagner: The fact that the young man was unwilling to respond to Jesus’ invitation to discipleship raises the question of the salvation of the wealthy. Granted the perspective of Jesus in the preceding pericopes, is it possible for the rich to be saved, and if so, how?

2. (:26) Difficulty Overcome by the Power of God

“And looking upon them Jesus said to them,

‘With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible.’”

Daniel Doriani: The rich are prone to trust in their wealth and connections. Their savings become their security. The poor may find it easier to see that they must trust in the Lord and no one else. But what is impossible for us is possible with God. It may be harder for a rich man to humble himself like a child, but God can touch and change any heart.

R. T. France: The young man exercised his freedom to decline God’s invitation, and it seems that the God for whom everything is possible is not prepared to override that decision. The pericope taken as a whole thus offers a salutary warning: anyone can be saved by God’s grace, but this does not remove human responsibility. The possible only becomes actual when Jesus’ call to “follow me” is freely obeyed.

Stanley Saunders: Jesus’ statement that only God, not humans, can make this happen is not meant as reassurance to the rich that God will find a way to get them in despite their baggage. He means, rather, that salvation is dependent on God, not on the things humans accumulate—whether possessions, power, honor, or security—in order to justify themselves and, they suppose, complete and perfect their lives. The prophets persistently warn against the corrosive power of wealth and its uselessness in the face of divine judgment (e.g., Amos 6:4–8; Ezek. 7:19–20). While God promises to bless faithful Israel with wealth (Deut. 28:1–14), God does not bless those who build up wealth at the expense of others.

Charles Swindoll: Wealth encourages false independence and blind arrogance. This is illustrated well in Jesus’ message to the church in Laodicea recorded in the book of Revelation. In His words of rebuke to that lukewarm church, He said, “You say, ‘I am rich, and have become wealthy, and have need of nothing,’ and you do not know that you are wretched and miserable and poor and blind and naked” (Rev. 3:17).

Again, Jesus turned the Jews’ socioeconomic world on its head. Rather than being a blessing, wealth is seen as a heady intoxicant. It leads people into thinking they don’t actually need God. Unlike children, who have no power, no defense, no resources, and no ability to accomplish what they want in life, the rich are blindly self-sufficient, independent, and proud. Truth be told, being rich has a way of luring our eyes away from the Lord and onto the things of this world. It creates a stubborn resistance against humble and helpless dependence.

Left to himself in his state of self-centered pride and self-justifying piety, the rich young ruler was hopelessly lost. In such a condition, the man's salvation wasn't merely difficult—it was impossible. Jesus' image of squeezing a large camel through the tiny eye of a needle was meant to communicate the utter impossibility of stripping oneself of pride and working oneself to heaven. The disciples understood this well when they asked, "Then who can be saved?" (Matt. 19:25).

Jesus' answer cleared up the matter and taught an essential lesson on the biblical doctrine of salvation (19:26). Self-effort of any kind does not result in salvation. That is, salvation is impossible by human effort. But when God does a work in a person's heart by the power of the Holy Spirit, He brings that person to humble faith in Christ, repentance from self-reliance, and submission to His authority. With God, any heart can be changed. What's impossible for people to accomplish is entirely possible for God. The rich young ruler's problem wasn't his riches per se, but the deceptive self-importance that accompanied his wealth. Just as the man may have earned extreme prosperity by human effort, he wanted to earn eternal life by doing good things. Impossible! Eternal life can't be earned and can't be bought. It can only be received by grace alone through faith alone in Christ alone (Eph. 2:8-9).

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How would some modern day evangelism methods differ from the approach that Jesus took with the rich young ruler?
- 2) How did Jesus expose the false confidence that this man had in his own demonstrated morality?
- 3) What is the role of the law in exposing sin and bringing a sense of condemnation that prepares a heart for the good news of the gospel?
- 4) How does this encounter encourage us in our witnessing to be faithful to the message and loving in our presentation but to leave the results with our sovereign God?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Walter Wilson: The perfection of commitment entails the perfection of love, that is, the love of neighbor (cf. 5:43–48), which in the case of the rich young man entails selling his possessions and giving the proceeds to the poor. In retrospect, the man's claim to have "kept" the law demanding love of neighbor (19:20) rings hollow. As the conclusion to 19:21 indicates, the commitment demanded by the Messiah also entails a commitment to the Messiah himself, that is, a life of discipleship, of becoming Jesus's follower. As Peter reminds Jesus in 19:27, his disciples have left "everything" to follow him (cf. 4:18–22; 8:19–22; 9:9; 10:37–39; 16:24–26). In his inability to heed such a call (19:22), the young man becomes a symbol of those whose reception of the word is choked off by "the worry of the world and the deceitfulness of wealth" (13:22).

R. T. France: The disciples' astonishment arises from the common Jewish assumption (reflecting an important strand in the OT, especially in the Wisdom tradition but also in the seminal passage Deut 28:1–14) that wealth is a sign of God's blessing and his reward for faithful service, so that when Jesus instead declares it to be an impediment to salvation he is undermining a fundamental part of their religious worldview. It is true that the OT prophets and psalmists had spoken against the oppressive rich and championed the pious poor, and such hostility to the wealthy continues to be expressed especially within the apocalyptic tradition but it seems unlikely that in popular thought material possessions as such were distrusted. This pericope does not say, however, that this young man was guilty of oppression of the poor, and Jesus' demand on him, while it includes giving to the poor, is expressed in terms of his own "perfection," "treasure in heaven" and discipleship. It is his actual wealth, and his attitude toward it, that is in focus rather than his social behavior; his affluence is a danger to the owner himself, rather than a threat to others.

Donald Hagner: The pericope (esp. v. 17c) should not be taken as teaching that salvation can be gained by simple obedience to the commandments. This is already evident in that although the young man was able to answer that he had kept the commandments, he was nevertheless conscious of falling short of entering, or being able to enter, eternal life. Jesus' conversation with the young man is designed from the start to bring him to the understanding that participation in the kingdom, through becoming Jesus' disciple, is the only way to the eschatological blessing of eternal life. Genuine obedience to the commandments—i.e., as interpreted by Jesus!—is possible only through participation in the kingdom. But the earlier teaching in the Gospel concerning the discipleship of the kingdom has shown repeatedly the absolute claim of the kingdom upon the disciple's life. It is just at this point, as Jesus knows, that this young man was most vulnerable. So attached was he to his great wealth that he was unwilling to part with it. Such is the insidiousness of riches that, as Bengel notes, "If the Lord had said, Thou art rich, and art too fond of thy riches, the young man would have denied it." He had to be confronted with all the force of a radical alternative. The seeming inevitability of the young man's decision raises the question whether any rich people can participate in the kingdom—a question that is addressed in the pericope that follows.

S. Lewis Johnson: Now of course this first request is a request that suggests that he is a person who is afflicted with a form of Pelegian legalism. He does say, good master, what good things shall I do that I may inherit eternal life or get eternal life? Now that in itself lets us know that he is a kind of person who thinks that life comes by the things that we do. There is in human nature, by reason of the fall of man, this fundamental string that we all think that we get to heaven by the things that we do. It is part of our fallenness; it is part of what has happened as a result of Adam's sin in the Garden of Eden.

Now today, as we think of the people with whom we do business, day by day, or with whom we have relationships day by day, I don't have to tell you that the world thinks we get to heaven by the things that we do. There are great numbers of citizens who think that you get to heaven by good citizenship, they think if you are a member of the Rotary or Kiwanis, or the League of Women Voters, of the John Birch Society, or some other significant human work, that that in itself gets you membership into the kingdom of God. And if you are a member of the American Civil Liberties Union, that means that you form part of the nobility in heaven.

Then there are those that think you get to heaven by virtue of your morality, that is, by hard work. You are kind, you do not cheat on your income tax, you give to the cancer fund and other types of endeavors such as that, and you will get to heaven.

And then of course there are the great numbers of people who think you get to heaven by religion. They think that church membership means that you are a member of the heavenly citizenship. That if, furthermore, you learn the catechism or you have been baptized and attend regularly Sunday school, if you have signed the pledge card and if you have become a part of the every members canvass, that surely you will get to heaven. And if you do not do something during the season of lent and have a St. Christopher's medal in your automobile, everything is sure to be alright.

There are even those that think that one gets to heaven by virtue of culture. You have attended a university, even an Ivy League university, or perhaps you are a member of the Junior League, or at least you have been a member of the Junior League, maybe even some think that because you are a member of the historical society of the Panhandle, you are sure to get to heaven. Or you are a member of the local country club. You are just a general good person who has been brought up in good Texas culture.

Well I know that these may seem ridiculous to you, but I am sure that there are a lot of people who just under the skin really feel like this. I imagine there are even some that say that we get to heaven because we are good and gentle, we wouldn't even squash a rollie pollie bug, as one of my friends likes to say.

You see we have all of these concepts of relative human righteousness by which we think that we shall get into heaven, failing to realize that the Scripture set forth for us an absolute righteousness, and we must possess this absolute righteousness if we are to ever enter into heaven. It is not sufficient to have human righteousness, it is not sufficient to be admired by human beings. God demands a perfect righteousness before we shall enter into heaven. We have to present him with a righteousness which he approves and the only righteousness which he approves is a perfect righteousness. And if we do not have that perfect righteousness, homo sapiens shall not enter into the kingdom of God.

John MacArthur: How to Obtain Eternal Life

Luke 14:33 says this: "So likewise, whosoever he is of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, cannot be My disciple." Now that is a very straightforward truth. Unless you forsake all that you have, you cannot be the Lord's disciple. Salvation is not for people who pray a prayer necessarily, or people who think they need Jesus Christ, it is for people who forsake all. There is an abandonment of everything in genuine salvation. And that, I think, is the essence of what our Lord is teaching us through His encounter with the young man in Matthew 19. . .

I guess I have to say this has got to be the hottest evangelistic prospect in the gospel so far. I mean this guy is really ripe. He is ready. But the amazing thing is he goes away without ever receiving eternal life. And the reason he goes away is because he is not willing to forsake everything.

Jesus actually set up an insurmountable barrier for the man. Instead of taking him where he was and just getting him to make the quote/unquote "decision," Jesus stops him dead in his tracks and makes it impossible for him to get saved on those terms, which he had already had come to.

Now you say, "What kind of evangelism is this? Jesus would have flunked the evangelism seminar. He doesn't know how to get closure. He doesn't know how to draw the net. He doesn't know how to sign the guy up. I mean you get a guy coming along saying, 'I want eternal life,' you've got a hot one. You don't want to lose it."

But, oh, do we need the truth that's in this text. We have so many contemporary, unbiblical modes of evangelism. Our mass evangelism with its decisions, statistics, and its aisle-walking, and its "hurry up and come to Jesus," and "just believe and there's nothing else" kind of approach is leading all kinds of people into the delusion that they're saved when, in fact, they're not. And so we must go to this passage for its very important instruction. . .

Eternal life means the ability to permanently respond to your environment. And eternal life carries with it the divine environment. In physical life, we can respond to a physical environment. In eternal life, we have the ability to respond to the divine environment. In other words, we respond to the life of God. That's why when we're saved, Paul says we enter into the heavenlies. Our citizenship takes on a divine character, and we all of a sudden come alive to God, and that's unending.

But it is a quality of existence, not a quantity of existence. It is the idea that I am sensitive to God, that I can respond to God. Before I was saved I was dead in sin, utterly unresponsive to the divine environment. When I became a Christian, I became capable of responding to the divine environment, and I shall always be capable of responding to the divine environment. . .

So he knew what he wanted. And I think that when we preach or evangelize, we're trying to get people to understand what they should want. We're trying to get them to see that they don't have eternal life, and they should have eternal life. That's part of it. And so he was on track.

The second element that comes through here is that not only did he know what he wanted, but he felt deeply the need. . .

That takes us to the third element. In obtaining eternal life, it is also necessary to seek diligently, to seek diligently. . .

That takes us to the fourth element of obtaining eternal life, and that is he came to the right source. You know, there are lots of folks looking for eternal life and looking real hard, but they're looking in the wrong place. . .

Fifthly, in moving through our outline, and we're still in verse 16, he asks the right question. He really did. Now a lot of people have sort of knocked the guy for the question he asked. They say he's saying, "What good thing shall I do?" and that he's asking some works-oriented question. Well, certainly he was works-oriented. Certainly he was raised in a Pharisaic system of tradition. Certainly he was trained to think that you did things religiously to gain divine goals and divine ends.

But I still think with all of that obviously in the background, the question's a fairly fair question. I mean I don't think we ought to knock him for the question: "What good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?" That's a fairly simple question. . .

The problem with this man is that by the time we get to the end of verse 16, there's something that hasn't been mentioned. What is it? His sin. There's been no mention of that. And the young man has no sense that he's offended a holy God. His desire for eternal life is purely wrapped up in his own anxieties and his own personal needs, and has no thought for the affront that his life is to an infinitely holy God. And that is a necessary element in understanding the truth of salvation.

All evangelism must take the imperfect sinner and place him up against the perfect law of God so he can see his deficiency. That's an utterly essential element. And evangelism which deals only with men's needs, only with men's feelings, only with men's problems lacks the true balance. And that is why the churches are jammed full of people who aren't really saved, because they sought and gained some kind of psychological affirmation and not transactional redemption. . .

Now this is the barrier. "Young man, you're incomplete. You've got to see yourself as living in violation of holy God, and you've got to be willing to acknowledge that and abandon that." And the Lord puts up a barrier, a pre-salvation barrier is what it is. . .

You know, this is the way self-righteous religion works, by the way. It's very self-deceiving; it's very self-convincing. This guy actually believed this. He believed he was righteous, he really did. He believed he'd kept the law, he'd kept the code, and he just couldn't figure out what else he ought to do. For him it wasn't, "Oh, I know I've fallen short." For him it was, "You know, I've done everything good. What other good thing could I think to do?" That's an incredible approach.

Now, the Bible says at this point, in Mark 10, "Jesus looked at him, and loved him." It's a very kind of pathetic statement: "Jesus looked at him, and loved him." The guy was sincere. There was something genuine in him. He really was a religious person. And Jesus loved him. And Jesus is not willing that any should perish. And the Lord Jesus Himself was about to die for the sins of this man, and He wanted this man in the sense that He longed for the soul of that man. But He would still not take him on his own terms. You understand? . . .

So I say again that the sixth point in our outline in obtaining eternal life is confession and repentance. Confession of sin, and repentance – turning from sin. And this is where this guy went out. I mean he wouldn't do it. And this is a necessary element. . .

This is the seventh element: Submit to obey the Lord. Here is a pre-salvation test for this guy. Jesus, in effect, is saying, "Are you going to do what I want you to do? Who runs your life? Do you or do I?" and He gives him a test. He gives him a command, and says, "When you're done with this first command, come right back here, and keep on following Me."

True salvation, I believe, includes confession of sin, repentance; and true salvation includes a submission to obey the Lord. Now let me say this. I don't think a person coming to Christ understands fully all that that confession may mean, and I don't think they understand necessarily all that that submission to the lordship of Christ may mean. But all the Lord is asking for here is the willingness; and He'll unfold the fullness of what it means.

Jesus really hit the sin of this guy. The sin of this guy was a sin of covetousness, it was a sin of indulgence, it was a sin of materialism, wealth and all that stuff. And he was indifferent to people who were poor and people who were in need, and He nailed him on that thing. And He said, "I want to give you the ultimate test. Will you do what I say? Will you obey My lordship?" . . .

Now salvation, I think, demands these two things. “Will you acknowledge your offense to God, and turn from your sin?” That’s what He’s saying. And the guy wouldn’t do it. He just wouldn’t acknowledge his sin.

And the second thing, “Will you leave your present perishing priorities and follow My commands though they cost you what is dearest to you?” That’s what He’s saying. I don’t know how else you can interpret the passage. Salvation is a commitment then to leave sin and follow Jesus Christ at all costs. And if you’re not willing to do it on those terms, Jesus doesn’t take you.

Donald Hagner: Preoccupation with their wealth is a notorious fault of the rich. The wealthy are generally held captive by their wealth. Exactly for this reason Jesus warned that “wherever your treasure is, there too will be your heart” (6:21). And it was also for this reason that the young rich man of vv 16–22 was required to part with his fortune. Discipleship is a matter of total, undistracted, and unqualified commitment. When Jesus said “you cannot serve God and money” (6:24), he also indirectly indicated the difficulty of the rich entering the kingdom. On the other hand, it seems clear that Jesus had a few relatively wealthy followers (e.g., Joseph of Arimathea, Lazarus, Zacchaeus, and perhaps Matthew) and was happy to take advantage of their hospitality (cf. Luke 8:3). If it is not theoretically impossible that the rich can be saved (i.e., without giving up their wealth), it is practically the case that only a relative few are able by the grace of God to live with their riches in a way that does not compromise their full, undivided commitment to Jesus in discipleship. But to live with wealth in this way is tantamount to giving it all away. It remains generally true that wealth “is a stumbling block to those who are avid for it, and every fool will be taken captive by it” (Sir 31:7). We should recognize that by the standards of first-century Palestine, most upper-middle-class Westerners and those on the Pacific rim would be considered wealthy. For all such persons the questions of wealth, discipleship, and the poor cannot be sidestepped if following Christ and his teaching means anything at all.

TEXT: Matthew 19:27 - 20:16

TITLE: REWARDS FOR SPIRITUAL SERVICE

BIG IDEA:

RATHER THAN INSECURITY OR ENVY REGARDING REWARDS FOR SPIRITUAL SERVICE, BELIEVERS SHOULD FOCUS ON GOD'S GRACE IN GRANTING ETERNAL LIFE AND HIS JUSTICE AND SOVEREIGN DISCRETION

INTRODUCTION:

This passage raises a number of difficult interpretative questions?

- Is the issue varying rewards in either the millennial kingdom or heaven or is the main point that every believer is treated alike in terms of inheriting eternal life by the grace of God [e.g. John MacArthur's position below in the Notes]?
- What type of foil is the rich young ruler in this context?
- Who is represented here as the "first" vs. the "last" when it comes to role reversal reflected in the fundamental principle repeated in 19:30 and 20:16?
[MacArthur reduces this principle to a mere statement of equality = everybody is in the same state of receiving eternal life – but the principle seems to be one of reversal rather than of leveling.]

Certainly the apostles are both being assured that following Christ is worth it and being warned not to concern themselves with accumulating the greatest rewards or the most prominent positions in the kingdom. There is the emphasis on humility throughout this context rather than selfish ambition.

- To what extent is it legitimate to seek heavenly rewards?
- If the parable speaks of the common eternal life God's grace grants to each believer, why is it couched in a works-oriented story? We have to be careful not to seek some type of symbolic significance for each detail of the parable. The goal is to capture the main lesson from Christ's teaching.

Stanley Saunders: The parable explicates the statements of reversal that frame it (19:30; 20:16). The "For" with which 20:1 begins also links the parable to what has preceded, where Jesus has lifted up eunuchs and children as models of those who belong in the kingdom of heaven (19:12; 19:14), and challenged the disciples' notion that the rich and pious are guaranteed salvation before all others (19:16–26). The disciples have left everything to follow Jesus (19:27–29). Yet Jesus is also aware that his disciples' spiritual pride can yield a form of self-righteousness that imperils their participation in God's empire no less than does the rich man's riches. The parable, then, forms part of Jesus' response to Peter's claims about the disciples' faithfulness to him (19:27). . .

God's justice reaches out to include the least, the last, the little ones, the children, the poor, the weak, and the suffering. God's justice consists of forgiving debts, restoring relationships, and making the creation whole. Justice ordered around "merit" or differentiation of status, on the other hand, preserves a world of division and alienation. If God does act as the landowner has, then the parable points to the radical, disruptive, even offensive character of God's free and unmerited grace toward humankind. The problem with such grace is that it "makes them equal to us," whoever "they" might be in our various systems of differentiation. Throughout its history, the church has often functioned in ways that confirm and preserve differences, whether economic, social, spiritual, or racial. This is precisely what the parable subverts.

William Hendriksen: The “point” or main lesson of the parable is therefore this: Do not be among the first who become last. This may be subdivided as follows:

- a. Avoid falling prey to the work-for-wages spirit with respect to matters spiritual (besides 20:2, 13 see also the context, 19:16, 22, and 19:27).
- b. Do not fail to recognize God’s sovereignty, his right to distribute favors as he pleases (in addition to 20:14b, 15a see again the context, 20:23).
- c. Be far removed from envy (see not only 15b but also the general context, 18:1; 20:20-28). Was not each disciple’s yearning to be the greatest a next-door neighbor to gruesome soul-destructive envy?

Jonathan T. Pennington -- Tabletalk: The Parable of the Laborers in the Vineyard

Big Idea: In the parable, Jesus reminds them that all that they have is from God, that all their blessings are from God’s generosity, not their own doing.

In the history of the church, there have been many attempted explanations of this parable. Some suggest the five different hirings represent five stages of world history during which God has called people to Himself, or different stages in life that one may become a Christian. The point, then, is that God is gracious to all and welcomes all into His kingdom, no matter when they were called. Some say the parable is a picture of God’s future kingdom where all saved people receive heaven, no matter how much they have worked for God. The broadest and maybe most popular interpretation is that this parable is simply a picture of God’s incredible and marvelous grace and generosity—the gospel in a nutshell.

Each of these interpretations has some truth in it. But there is something more to be seen. The key is to pay attention to the context that Matthew gives us for this parable. The story that precedes our parable is about a rich synagogue leader who ends up not following Jesus because his love for his possessions was too great (19:16–22). In response to this, the disciples are shocked. Jesus then promises them staggering rewards for giving up everything they had to follow Him (vv. 23–30). This promise that the disciples will sit on twelve thrones consumes the disciples’ thoughts so much that shortly thereafter, James and John are angling to be the ones to sit on the thrones closest to Jesus (20:20–28).

This context shows us that the parable is hitting right at our hearts, at the twin issues of self-congratulation and envy. When the young ruler goes away empty-handed but then the lowly disciples are promised to be rulers, it was impossible for the disciples not to be a little self-congratulatory, to take a little pride in their wise accomplishment, their better choice to follow Jesus. In the parable, Jesus reminds them that all that they have is from God, that all their blessings are from God’s generosity, not their own doing. The disciples are no better than the rich man. At the same time, Jesus presses right into our hearts, which are prone to envy. Jesus challenges His disciples not to look to what others have and become bitter and jealous. Rivalry is soul-destructive because all of life is a gift from God.

So, this parable gives us a vision for God’s generous grace toward us and toward others. Life is found when we fix our eyes not horizontally on what others have but vertically on the generosity of the whole-earth landowner, King Jesus, who calls us friends and who gives wisely and generously.

I. (19:27-30) PROMISE OF REWARD (ABUNDANT BUT ALSO SURPRISING) – REASSURANCE AND WARNING

David Thompson: ANY BELIEVER IN ANY DISPENSATION, WHO SACRIFICES FOR JESUS CHRIST, WILL BE ABUNDANTLY REWARDED ONE DAY BY JESUS CHRIST.

Jesus qualifies the time when the disciples will be rewarded. 19:28c -- It takes place when the Son of Man sits on His glorious throne. In other words, the disciples would experience the fullness of their rewards for following Christ when Christ comes to reign as King. This is when and where the outworking of rewards will take place.

A. (:27) Mercenary Question Exposes the Insecurity of the Apostles

“Then Peter answered and said to Him,

‘Behold, we have left everything and followed You; what then will there be for us?’”

Grant Osborne: This verse provides a transition, concluding vv. 23–26 and introducing vv. 28–30. In typical fashion Peter speaks for the group (cf. 14:28; 15:15; 16:16, 22; 17:4; 18:21), and as usual he shows his misunderstanding.

Stu Weber: Believers should not feel guilty about anticipating eternal reward. If it were a shameful thing, God would not have promised it so prominently throughout Scripture. The truth is that we need motivation, something to press on toward (Phil. 3:12-14). The eternal perspective, seeking God's prize, is the only mature perspective (Phil. 3:14).

Ray Fowler: Peter asked Jesus, “What do we get?” Jesus said, “Don’t worry about what you will get.” Why not? Because God is perfectly just. He is wonderfully merciful. He is incredibly gracious. Perfect justice. Wonderful mercy. Amazing grace. That’s who God is. Once again, think good thoughts of God.

R.V.G. Tasker: The fact that Peter could ask such a question was evidence that he had not fully grasped that God promises rewards to those who obey Him without thought of reward, for in the kingdom of God all reward is the result of God’s grace and not of human merit.

B. (:28-29) Manifold Rewards Climax in the Common Goal of Eternal Life

1. (:28) Significant Positions of Privilege and Power in the Millennial Kingdom

“And Jesus said to them, ‘Truly I say to you, that you who have followed Me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man will sit on His glorious throne, you also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.’”

John Walvoord: This is clearly a picture of the millennial earth, not heaven. Late in Christ’s ministry, He supports the concept that the kingdom, while postponed as far as human expectation is concerned, is nevertheless certain of fulfillment following His second coming.

2. (:29) Sacrifices in Spiritual Service Will Have Been Worth It

a. Abundant Blessings in This Life

“And everyone who has left houses or brothers or sisters or father or mother or children or farms for My name's sake, shall receive many times as much,”

Matthew Henry: A hundred times as much in this life; sometimes in kind, in the things themselves which they have parted with. God will raise up for his suffering servants more friends, who will be so to them for Christ's sake, than they have left that were so for their own sakes. The apostles, wherever they came, met with those who were kind to them, and entertained them, and opened their hearts and doors to them. However, they will receive a hundred times as much, in kindness. Their graces shall increase, their comforts abound, they shall have signs of God's love, and then they may truly say they have received a hundred times more comfort in God and Christ than they could have in wife, or children.

b. Eternal Life in Heaven = Ultimate Inheritance for All Believers
“and shall inherit eternal life.”

Van Parunak: The parallels in Mark and Luke make clear that the reward here promised is not in the coming kingdom, but now:

Mar 10:29 And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's, 30 But he shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life.

Luk 18:29 And he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake, 30 Who shall not receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come life everlasting.

How can this be “in this present time”? The answer must lie in the love and care of believers for one another. Recall our Lord's words at the end of ch. 12, where he gives an example of giving up “mother and brethren,” and receiving far more in return.

Grant Osborne: Jesus expands the focus from the Twelve to “every” follower. Since Peter said they had “left everything,” Jesus picks up on that and names two main types of things that various followers have had to surrender—loved ones (brothers, sisters, father, mother, children) and possessions (“fields”), with “homes” referring to both. The promise is that in eternity they “will receive” (from God) a hundred times as much, referring to the incredible family and home in heaven (cf. John 14:2–3).

David Turner: The prospect of a gloriously enthroned Jesus anticipates 25:30–31. The terminology focusing on the twelve tribes of Israel is remarkable (cf. Luke 22:30; Rev. 21:12; J. Baumgarten 1976), as is the description of the eschaton as a time of regeneration. Eschatological renewal of the transitory present world (Matt. 5:18; 24:35) is part of the messianic salvation accomplished by Jesus (1:21; 20:28; 26:26–29; cf. Rom. 8:18–23). Cosmic eschatological renewal is linked to Jesus's previous stress on the priority of the created order in Matt. 19:4, 8. The moral disorder of the present world is contrary not only to God's past creation but also to God's future renewal of that creation. The end will renew the beginning; eschatology restores protology. The judgment of Israel probably implies both sharing in final judgment and ruling in the world to come. The striking teaching that the disciples will share with Jesus the rule of the coming kingdom may be based on Dan. 7:9, 13–14, 18, 22, 27 (cf. Luke 22:30; 1 Cor. 6:2; Rev. 2:26–27; 3:21; 20:6; Wis. 3:8). . . The eschatological reward of Jesus’s followers will far outweigh their present sacrifice and should motivate them to suffer with Jesus in the present (16:24–28; Rom. 8:18–25).

C. (:30) Fundamental Principle: Some Surprising Reversal of Expectations

“But many who are first will be last; and the last, first.”

Grant Osborne: This is often called “the reversal of roles” and is a frequent theme in Luke. It will be repeated at the end of the next pericope in reverse order (20:16), with the inclusion forming a chiasm. The parable of the workers in the vineyard (20:1–15) is intended as an illustration of this very principle, so it is a dominant theme here. Those like the wealthy young man who seek primacy in this life will suffer the greatest loss eternally, and those like the disciples (claimed in 19:27) who surrender everything will have the greatest reward. As in 18:1–5; 19:13–15, followers must be willing to take the lowly place and humble attitude of a child to be “greatest” (18:1, 4) in the kingdom.

Leon Morris: All this points to a reversal of the generally accepted order of things (cf. 20:16). Those who are highly esteemed and held to be first in this world’s order of things will end up last, in the worst possible position. The point is that they have put their whole effort into earthly success without reference to the more worthwhile life of service to which Christ is calling them. Inevitably when the time comes that earthly success is seen for the tawdry and temporal thing it is, they will rank with the last. That is what they have qualified for, and that is where they will be. The corollary of that is that those who are last here and now will often be found to be among the first in the life to come. They have not accepted the false values of the world but have set their sights on the service of God and of their fellows no matter what the cost to themselves, and they reap the consequences accordingly. The words are a strong warning against being deluded by earthly ideas and standards and shutting one’s ears to the call of God.

Stu Weber: Many people who seem to be deserving of reward will receive less than is expected (though no less than they deserve). And many whom we might judge as undeserving will prove, in God’s economy, to be first, receiving great reward.

David Turner: The disciples can be encouraged that their sacrifice will be rewarded, but they also are warned against presuming on the grace of God. The promise is that although they are presently “last,” they will be “first” in the eschaton. The warning is that although their prospect is to be “first,” they could yet be “last” if they forget the way of the cross and God’s sovereignty in dispensing reward. The unfortunate chapter division at 20:1 obscures the fact that the parable of the landowner in 20:1–16 continues the answer to Peter’s question, as did the parable of the unforgiving servant in 18:21–35.

The description of the future kingdom in terms of the twelve tribes of Israel appears to justify belief in the eschatological conversion of the nation of Israel to faith in Jesus as the Messiah. This would be in keeping with Matthew’s overall emphasis on the fulfillment of Scripture preeminently through the words and deeds of Jesus the Messiah. The followers of Jesus, the ultimate teacher of the Torah, constitute Israel within Israel, the eschatological remnant (cf. Rom. 9:6). In the end they, not the faithless shepherds who presently lead God’s flock (Matt. 9:36; 10:6; 15:24), who will judge or govern the nation as a whole (21:43; Gundry 1994: 393– 94; Overman 1996: 285). A different approach views this language as indicating that the gentile church, which is understood to supersede Israel, will rule over the nations as a whole (Blomberg 1992a: 301; France 1982: 65–67; Hendriksen 1973:730). This understanding anachronistically renders Matthew’s Jewish language as symbolic and dissolves Jesus’s distinction between the disciples’ rule over Israel (19:28) and the reward of all who sacrifice to follow Jesus (19:29). If the church supersedes Israel, this distinction would be meaningless.

John Walvoord: By this, Jesus meant that God’s estimation of worthiness for reward may be entirely different than man’s estimation. Those prominent in this life may not necessarily be first in reward in the life to come. The widow who gave her two mites but had nothing else to give may be ahead of those who have given much. Those who labor merely for reward may miss it. His discussion of this point is illustrated in the next chapter.

R.V.G. Tasker: The last verse of the section indicates that late-comers into the kingdom of God will be treated on an equality with those who have come in first, a truth which Jesus proceeds to illustrate in the parable which follows.

[Therefore, Jews have no advantage over the Gentiles who are grafted in to the people of God later in time; people who are saved in infancy have no advantage over people saved in old age; etc.]

I. (20:1-16) PARABLE OF THE WORKERS – GOD REWARDS IN ACCORDANCE WITH HIS JUSTICE, DISCRETION AND GRACE

A. (:1-7) Hiring of the Laborers

1. (:1-2) Initial Hiring in the Early Morning for Set Wage

“For the kingdom of heaven is like a landowner who went out early in the morning to hire laborers for his vineyard. 2 And when he had agreed with the laborers for a denarius for the day, he sent them into his vineyard.”

Grant Osborne: It was normal in the first century to work twelve-hour days during harvest (though it must be admitted that the same was true of sowing the seed—the text does not say), and so ἅμα πρωῒ refers to “sunrise,” the beginning of the workday. So this reflects harvest season, when the owner would need to hire extra workers to take the grapes off the vine and to do various other tasks (e.g., guard the crops, drive the donkeys). Day laborers (the lowest social group outside of slaves) would gather in the marketplace of towns and wait to be hired. It was a precarious existence, but they had little choice. Many were “freedmen,” former slaves. . . . So in the story there are five groups, hired at 6 a.m., 9 a.m., noon, 3 p.m., and 5 p.m.

Stu Weber: We should be careful in our attempts to discern who these full-day workers (or any of the other four groups) represent. We may be tempted to think this first group represents those who have been Christians for most of their lives, whereas the later groups are those who come to Christ later in life. Or we might think the full-day workers are those who are especially faithful in their lifetime as a Christian, while the later groups are not so faithful. Such interpretations distract us from Jesus' main point—that God's way of compensating for righteous working may differ from what we expect. God's sense of “fairness” is not the typical self-serving human perspective. He does not compare us to one another but to our fulfillment of our own stewardship (see 1 Cor. 3:3-5). . .

Jesus revealed here the way we as humans think about what is fair and just. When we see rewards handed out in heaven, we are sure to be in for some surprises. Some of the people and ministries that we have deemed insignificant will be celebrated, while many of the more prominent people and their ministries will receive little recognition. It is not Jesus' purpose here to explain the criteria he uses for such decisions, but only to warn us against false assumptions and expectations.

Ligonier.org: Grapes were one of the most valuable commodities in ancient Israel because they could be transformed into fine wines. So important were the vineyards that the prophets often describe the salvation of God's people as including the restoration of the vineyards of the Promised Land (for example, Amos 9:14). Vinedressers and vineyard owners know, however, that the profitability of their vineyard depends on harvesting the grapes at just the right time. Wait too long, and the wine produced from the grapes will not be as good and will not command as high a price as it could. Consequently, when the time of harvest comes, vineyard owners often employ many day laborers in addition to their regular staff so that all of the grapes can be picked before it is too late. That is the setting of today's passage, wherein the master of the house must find "laborers for his vineyard" (Matt. 20:1).

2. (:3-4) Additional Hiring at the Third Hour for Discretionary Wage

“And he went out about the third hour and saw others standing idle in the market place; 4 and to those he said, 'You too go into the vineyard, and whatever is right I will give you.' And so they went.”

3. (:5) Additional Hiring at the Sixth and Ninth Hours

“Again he went out about the sixth and the ninth hour, and did the same thing.”

4. (:6-7) Final Hiring at the Eleventh Hour

“And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing; and he said to them, 'Why have you been standing here idle all day long?' 7 They said to him, 'Because no one hired us.' He said to them, 'You too go into the vineyard.’”

B. (:8-12) Payment of the Laborers

1. (:8-9) Last Group Paid First

“And when evening had come, the owner of the vineyard said to his foreman, 'Call the laborers and pay them their wages, beginning with the last group to the first.' And when those hired about the eleventh hour came, each one received a denarius.”

Keith Throop: Notice that the order in which the workers are paid is reversed from the order in which they were hired. They are paid beginning with the last to the first (vs. 8). This reflects Jesus' earlier statement that “many who are first will be last, and the last first” (19:30). Thus Jesus is clearly identifying the theme He wants to emphasize.

<https://reformedbaptistblog.com/2014/02/15/parable-of-the-workers-in-the-vineyard-matthew-201-16-teaching-outline/>

2. (:10-12) First Group Expresses Displeasure

a. (:10) Inflated Expectation

“And when those hired first came, they thought that they would receive more; and they also received each one a denarius.”

Grant Osborne: When “even they” receive the denarius promised in v. 2, it is not that this would be unfair, since that was the contract. Rather, it was the master’s generosity to the final group that has everyone confused. As Nolland says, “Despite a dramatic contrast in work done, there is no difference in wage received. Not only in the ancient world would such behavior cause resentment but today as well.”

b. (:11-12) Grumbling Response

“And when they received it, they grumbled at the landowner, 12 saying, ‘These last men have worked only one hour, and you have made them equal to us who have borne the burden and the scorching heat of the day.’”

C. (:13-15) Principles of God’s Justice, Discretion and Grace

1. (:13) Strict Justice of God -- Referencing the Legal Contract

“But he answered and said to one of them, ‘Friend, I am doing you no wrong; did you not agree with me for a denarius?’”

Stu Weber: This parable highlights both the justice and the grace of God. Neither is to be taken for granted. When God chooses to reward or punish according to what is justly due a person, no one has a right to complain. On the one hand, his rewards are “recompense” or “pay back” (Matt. 16:27; 2 Cor. 5:10; Col. 3:24-25). On the other hand, the God of Scripture is a God who delights to lavish blessing on his children (e.g., Eph. 1:3-14). But we must be careful not to presume upon his generosity. His gifts are not something we deserve; they are given freely at his discretion. If anyone receives the “raw end of the deal” (by our reasoning), it would be God, who gives much more than he “owes.”

2. (:14) Sovereign Discretion of God

“Take what is yours and go your way, but I wish to give to this last man the same as to you.”

Ray Fowler: In the parable the earlier workers boasted in their works. They said, “We bore the burden of the work and the heat of the day!” But that’s the problem. Those who trust in their works receive God’s justice, but they forfeit God’s mercy and grace. If you want justice, you will get justice. I don’t recommend it, because we are all on the wrong side of God’s law. If you want justice, you will get justice, but if you want mercy and grace, then you need to put your faith in Jesus.

We can also apply this to heaven and eternal rewards. On the one hand we all receive differing rewards depending on what we have done for Christ. But on the other hand, we all get the same reward, in that we all inherit eternal life with God forever. Because once you have eternal life, what do all the other rewards really matter?

3. (:15) Surprising Grace and Generosity of God

“Is it not lawful for me to do what I wish with what is my own? Or is your eye envious because I am generous?”

Grant Osborne: The “good” (ἀγαθός) generosity of the landowner is the antithesis of the jealous, angry heart of the complainers (“evil” [πονηρός]).

Daniel Doriani: So then, as Jesus says, he is fair to everyone, whether one works all day or one hour. To be precise, there are three lessons, one for each character in the story:

- The early workers must know that God treats no one unfairly. If they stumble, they stumble over God’s grace and generosity, not his injustice.
- God is generous to those who deserve nothing. It is his sovereign pleasure to give good gifts to his children.
- All believers receive the same gift, eternal life with the Lord.

D. (:16) Fundamental Principle: Some Surprising Reversal of Expectations

“Thus the last shall be first, and the first last.”

Richard Gardner: The purpose of these sayings is not to establish a new order of precedence, but rather to tell us to stop calculating. As noted earlier, the riches of the kingdom are God’s to distribute—and God is full of surprises!

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) In the context of Matthew 19-20, who would have regarded themselves in the category of the “first” and would have expected greater amounts of God’s blessing?
- 2) How does this section of Scripture serve as both an encouragement and a warning to the twelve apostles?
- 3) Are there Scriptures that teach that there will be varying degrees of rewards based on faithful service?
- 4) What is the significance of all the workers in the parable being paid the same amount at the end of the harvest day?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Grant Osborne: Rewards

While we do not serve the Lord for the reward we will get, Jesus wants us to know that God will indeed reward us for our life of piety. We do not want to fall into Peter’s error of asking, “What’s in it for us?” That is a veneer of piety turned into self-interest. Yet at the same time Jesus wants us to know that God will vindicate us for our sacrifices and suffering. In fact, “reward” occurs seven times in 6:1–18 (1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 16, 18) and is a central theme of the entire Sermon on the Mount (e.g., the eschatological promise in each of the beatitudes of 5:1–12). The key is our motivation and priorities—earthly or heavenly (cf. 6:19–21). Do we live for the glory of God or for self? Do we strive for the things of this world or the things of God? That will determine our true destiny.

David Turner: All in all, taking 19:30 as a promise to disciples and 20:16 as a warning anticipating 20:20–28 seems best. Yet there are many specific contextualized approaches to this fecund imagery. The reversal spoken of here has been understood as a warning to many different “in” groups that they should not despise “out” groups. Bruner (1990: 723) gives several potential examples of such interpretations. Three approaches to the reversal described in the crucial bracketing saying (19:30; 20:16) are particularly noteworthy:

1. Religious reversal: The tax collectors and sinners who enter the kingdom last are preferred by God to the Jewish religious leaders (Beare 1981: 404; Hagner 1995a: 573; Hare 1993: 230–31; Hill 1972: 285). No doubt this is a key Matthean theme (9:11–13; 11:19; 21:31).

2. Redemptive-historical reversal: The workers hired at different times represent successive epochs in history. Gentiles instead of Jews eventually come into prominence (Barclay 1975: 2.224; Gundry 1994:399). In many places, Matthew indicates that, surprisingly, many Jews reject the kingdom, and many Gentiles receive it (e.g., 8:10–12; 15:22–28). This may well be the most prominent view throughout the history of the church (Irenaeus, Haer. 4.36.7; Augustine, Homilies on the Gospels 37; Hauerwas 2006: 176–77).

3. Ecclesiastical reversal: Those among the disciples who wish to be prominent will be humbled, but those who are humble will be considered truly great. At least two important texts underline this point (18:1–4; 20:25–28; Barclay 1975: 2.224).

The problem with all the above approaches is that they are not supported by the immediate context, which places the parable’s promise and warning in tension: although Peter and the disciples will be rewarded, they must not presume upon God’s grace and seek rewards (Schweizer 1975: 395). They are in danger of grumbling against God (cf. Exod. 16:7–12; Num. 14:27; Deut. 1:27) when others who come into the kingdom (Matt. 19:29) are rewarded. They must accept whatever reward God graciously gives them without comparing themselves with others (cf. m. ’Abot 1.3, 13; 4.5; Hultgren 2000: 42–43). This parable anticipates the problem of Zebedee’s sons—ambitiously seeking the greatest status in the future kingdom (20:20–28).

John MacArthur: Equality in the Kingdom (19:30 – 20:16)

Now when it comes then to the blessings of salvation, God give to all equally, equally. All of us who come to the Lord Jesus Christ receive the same salvation. No matter what the circumstances of our coming, no matter how diligent or faithful our service, it is God’s pleasure to give us the same glorious salvation.

1) The Proverb (19:30; 20:16)

Everybody’s the same.

2) The Parable

You see, they weren’t in a negotiating position; they had no choice. If they didn’t work, they didn’t eat, they’d have to take whatever they could get. Consequently, they were often taken advantage of. But apparently they trusted this man. And so without negotiating any price, they went their way. . .

The issue here is not whether the householder is fair, the issue is the jealousy of the people who worked the longest, right? Don't impugn God, impugn them. They got what was right and fair. But they were filled with envy, and they griped. And they give this little speech, "You made them equal unto us. And we borne the burden and heat of the day." And they get real, you know, kind of expressive here. The word they used for "heat" is the word for "burner." It's the word that's often used of the scorching east wind that parches the lips and cracks the skin when that hot east wind blows. I mean they were really dramatizing their plight. . .

Jealousy is a part of our fallenness, isn't it? You see, it wasn't that they didn't get a fair wage. They got a very fair wage, a generous wage. It's that they couldn't stand somebody else getting the same thing without working as hard as they did. Instead of saying to themselves, "Isn't it wonderful that he's so generous to those who have the same need we have, but weren't hired early. Isn't it wonderful that even though they had to wait all day to be hired, their need wasn't any less; and he gave them according to their need, not according to their effort, not according to their work."

Instead of saying that – that's what the magnanimous heart says: "I rejoice that you received as much as I did, because that's what you needed, even though you didn't work as hard as I worked." That's the magnanimous heart. Well, that's the parable. And he says, "I have the right to give whatever I want. Are you going to be jealous if I give it?"

3) The Point of the Parable

The man is God, the householder. The vineyard is the kingdom, the sphere of God's rule. It is the kingdom of grace, the kingdom of salvation. The laborers are those who come into salvation; they come into the kingdom; they come into the service of the king, the service of God. The day, the day of work is lifetime. The evening is eternity. The denarius is eternal life. And maybe you could even say the steward Jesus Christ, to whom has been committed all judgment.

So what's it saying? It's saying this: No matter how long you worked in the kingdom, no matter how hard or how easy your circumstances were, no matter how difficult the task, when you get to the end, you're all going to receive the same eternal life. Isn't that a great truth? That's really what He's teaching. . .

So you see, it was this selfish, indulgent, envious, confused perception of the disciples that I think our Lord was dealing with. And all He's saying in this wonderful parable is, "Look, salvation and eternal life isn't something that you earn, it's a gift that I give according to My sovereign will." And it is not a question of when you came in, and it is not a question of how long you worked, or how hot the day was, or how hard you worked. There's nothing in that parable about how hard anybody worked, nothing; because eternal is not something you – what? – you earn. "And I'm going to give everyone the same reward."

You say, "Well, now wait a minute, John. Doesn't the Epistles tell us something about rewards for service and crowns for service?" Yeah, that's a different issue. You get to that a little later in the Scripture. That's not the issue here. There will be differing rewards the Lord is pleased to give His children. That's not the issue here. The issue here is the equality of eternal life.

4) The Principles

1. God initiates salvation sovereignly.
2. God establishes the terms.

3. God continues to call men into His kingdom.
4. God is redeeming those who are willing.
5. God is compassionate to those who have no resources.
6. All who come into the vineyard worked.
7. God has the sovereign authority ability to keep His promise.
8. While He always gives what He promised, He also always gives more than we deserve.
9. Humility is the only right attitude.
10. All that we receive from God is a matter of His grace.

Henry Mahan: What About Rewards in Heaven?

When you want to study a parable in the Scripture you find out

- what was said,
- the occasion,
- the people who said it,
- what was said before our Lord spake the parable. . .

Now this parable; (now you listen) this parable is a rebuke to those who fall into a legal spirit of works and merit and reward. This parable is a rebuke to people who begin to calculate what their reward ought to be in heaven in exchange for their works here on this earth.

Degrees of punishment in hell are based upon opportunity, are based upon works, are based upon light, and are based upon sin. But my friend; there can be no degrees of glory for glory does not depend upon opportunity or works or sin. It depends upon the grace of God, totally on the grace of God. . .

Now, you can't have degrees of glory and degrees of reward if it's based not on what I did, but what somebody else did. His grace will be our reward. The crowns will be at His feet. The crowns will be on His head. Do you see what I'm saying? There may be degrees of punishment in hell based upon what I did but there can be no degrees of reward in heaven because heaven is not based on what I did. It's because of what He did. "Not by works of righteousness which we've done but according to His mercy hath He saved us," His mercy. . .

It's disturbing to me that any believer would want a higher seat than somebody else. I really can't connect that with humility or grace or love. It's disturbing to me that any believer, that any child of God who says "I'm the chief of sinners. I'm less than the least of all the saints," would want a brighter crown than somebody else or a greater reward or a bigger house; this is a denial of everything we preach.

And when we render the best we can; you just say this; "I'm still an unprofitable servant, an unprofitable servant. The last shall be first and the first shall be last. And he that would be greatest among you; let him be your servant!"

<https://media-cloud.sermonaudio.com/text/830717837.pdf>

GotQuestions.org: The first group of workers in the vineyard resented receiving the same wage as the last group. Their attitude was similar to that of the Pharisees, who were incensed at Jesus' teaching that others could inherit a heavenly kingdom they thought was reserved for them alone. They despised Jesus for offering the kingdom to poor, oppressed, weak sinners whom He made equal to them. In verse 15, the landowner asks, "Is your eye evil because I am good?" The "evil eye" was a Hebrew expression referring to jealousy and envy. God's goodness and mercy produced in the self-righteous Pharisees the evil eye of envy. The rest of the workers received their wages without complaint or envy of others. In the same way, as Christians, we should rejoice when others come to the Savior, as we should rejoice in the service others render to Him. He is faithful to reward us for our service as He has promised, and how He rewards others should be of no consequence to us, nor should it affect our devotion to Him.

The message in verse 16, "the last will be first, and the first last," is that no matter how long or how hard a believer works during his lifetime, the reward of eternal life will be the same given to all—an eternity of bliss in heaven in the presence of God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. The thief on the cross (Luke 23:39-43), whose life of service was limited to a moment of repentance and confession of faith in Christ, received the same reward of eternal life as the apostle Paul. Of course, Scripture also teaches that there are different rewards in heaven for different services, but the ultimate reward of eternal life will be achieved by all equally.

TEXT: Matthew 20:17-19

TITLE: JESUS'S THIRD PROPHECY OF HIS PASSION AND RESURRECTION

BIG IDEA:

JESUS CONTINUES TO PUT THE FOCUS ON HIS UPCOMING BETRAYAL, CRUIFIXION AND RESURRECTION (WHILE HIS FOLLOWERS ARGUE OVER WHO IS THE GREATEST)

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: Jesus is aware of his destiny and deliberately chooses the cross, while the disciples, aware of nothing, are consumed with their own desire for greatness.

David Turner: The third passion prediction is the most lengthy. New details include the involvement of the Gentiles in mocking, flogging, and crucifying him. Jesus's focus on his coming suffering in this unit is in stark contrast to his two disciples' focus on their future reigning in the next unit.

Stu Weber: It is no accident that Jesus' third formal prediction of his suffering, death, and resurrection followed immediately after the extended explanation of the principle that "the last will be first, and the first will be last" (see 19:30-20:16; cf. 16:21; 17:22-23). He told of the humiliation of his betrayal, the mockings and beatings he would endure, and his death. He who was supremely first over all creation would submit to being treated as the lowest of criminals. (This is the first specific mention of crucifixion, which was a punishment of ultimate humiliation, reserved only for the most despised criminals.) But out of the "lastness" of apparent defeat, the king would rise triumphant over death. Philippians 2:5-11 describes this dual paradox in greater detail: The One obedient to "death on a cross" would be the One who has a "name that is above every name."

Stanley Saunders: Have the disciples understood the kind of justice set forth in the preceding parable and what it requires of them? Are they ready for what will happen in Jerusalem? The stories in this section suggest that envy, competition, self-interest, and blindness are still problems that Jesus must address as he prepares his disciples for their entry into the city. For the final time before he enters Jerusalem, Jesus warns the disciples of his impending passion. The new information supplied in 20:19 makes this the most detailed prediction yet (cf. 16:21; 17:12; 17:22-23): he will be mocked and beaten, and his death will be by crucifixion. For the first time "the Gentiles" also enter the picture as participants in Jesus' death. When Jesus had first predicted his death (16:21), Peter had openly rebuked him. The second time (17:22-23) the disciples were "greatly distressed." This time Matthew records no reaction of the disciples, but instead tells about the request of the mother of the "sons of Zebedee" and the conflict it generates. Mediterranean mothers are expected to advocate for their sons' advancement (see, e.g., Bathsheba's manipulations on behalf of her son, Solomon: 1 Kgs. 1:11-31). Like King David's sons, the disciples are now positioning themselves for the succession. But they still misunderstand the nature of Jesus' kingship. The succession to power in this empire will be through suffering.

Warren Wiersbe: In contrast to this announcement of suffering and death, we have the request of James and John and their mother, Salome. Jesus spoke about a cross, but they were interested in a crown. They wanted reserved seats on special thrones! We get the impression that the mother, Salome, was the real inspiration behind this request, and that she was interested in promoting her sons.

Donald Hagner: This prediction makes a particularly sharp contrast with both the preceding sections, where the disciples seem preoccupied with rewards (19:27–30), and the following pericope describing the overt ambition of the sons of Zebedee (vv 20–23). Jesus again affirms the cross as his goal and thus serves as the model according to which the disciples must learn to pattern their own lives. But while he is “last,” his disciples compete for being “first.” This prediction serves the function of building up the tension prior to the momentous events that will happen in Jerusalem, where the earthly work of Jesus will find its climax. . .

For the third time Jesus predicts his imminent suffering and death in Jerusalem. This time the prediction includes very specific details meant to convey the sovereign direction of God in these events. Jesus’ fate in Jerusalem will be no tragic accident of history but the outworking of God’s saving purposes for humanity. This is the preeminent work of Jesus—not his powerful deeds and words, nor his ministry among the Jews of Galilee and Judea, but his death on the cross. Although the meaning of that death has not yet been addressed in the Gospel (it has been hinted at more than once, however: e.g., 1:22; 3:17), the next pericope will culminate in a statement that can leave no doubt concerning it (v. 28). Jesus goes the way of the cross for the sake of others.

(:17) PROLOGUE – OCCASION FOR THE THIRD PASSION PROPHECY

*“And as Jesus was about to go up to Jerusalem,
He took the twelve disciples aside by themselves, and on the way He said to them,”*

Grant Osborne: The centrality of the journey to Jesus’ destiny (note this only relates to “Jesus,” not the Twelve) continues (as in Mark and Luke). It is stated twice that Jesus is “ascending” (see v. 18), and they are “on the road [way]” (cf. Mark 9:33–34; 10:32, 52; Luke 9:51–53, 57) to his appointed hour. The “way” (ὁδός) defines the journey to true discipleship as well, and here it is implied (as in 16:24) that Jesus is on the road to the cross; the passage is framed with the model of Jesus (20:17–19, 28).

This is the first time the disciples are called “the Twelve” (cf. 26:14, 20, 47), and apparently they are traveling with a larger group, because Jesus “takes [them] aside privately” to give them his third passion prediction (a brief fourth prediction occurs in 26:2).

Stu Weber: At this point in the journey, Jesus and his companions were about to go up to Jerusalem. The tension between Jesus and the religious establishment, headquartered at Jerusalem, had been building throughout Matthew's Gospel. Before long the conflict would come to its tragic but triumphant end.

The word up alludes to the fact that Jerusalem was situated on a ridge at 2,550 feet above sea level. From any direction, Jerusalem was “up.” But especially from the crossing of the Jordan River, near its entrance into the Dead Sea, at about 1,200 feet below sea level, the climb was substantial. This would have made for at least a 3,700-foot elevation gain. Perhaps Jesus and his disciples had just crossed the Jordan, or perhaps they were at Jericho, on the way to Jerusalem (see 20:29).

I. (:18) BETRAYAL – DELIVERY TO CHIEF PRIESTS AND SCRIBES FOR CONDEMNATION

A. Destination

“Behold, we are going up to Jerusalem;”

B. Betrayal

“and the Son of Man will be delivered to the chief priests and scribes,”

John MacArthur: And He was turned over the chief priests – the chief priests among the priests, and there were thousands of them. The chief priests were the upper echelon ones. There were the Levites; they were at the bottom of the priestly totem pole. And then there were the normal course of priests. And there was the guy who was the head of the daily course, the guy who’s ahead of the weekly course. And then there was the sort of the captain of the temple, and then there was the high priest. And the guys at the top of the ladder were known as the chief priests. And so these chief priests were the hereditary aristocracy. They were in the priestly line; they got their rank by heredity.

They were also accompanied by the scribes, who got their rank not by heredity, but by knowledge. They attained to knowledge by studying the law. They were the lawyers, and nobody could interpret anything without them. Very much like today, if you want to interpret any kind of law, you get into any kind of legal situation, you have to have a lawyer. Well it was that way then. In trying to interpret the Mosaic economy, they had to have “lawyers,” quote/unquote, who really were the scribes who could come along side and explain the meaning of the law, and interpret the law, and so forth.

C. Condemnation

“and they will condemn Him to death,”

II. (:19A) CRUCIFIXION – DELIVERY TO THE GENTILES FOR SCOURGING AND CRUCIFIXION

“and will deliver Him to the Gentiles to mock and scourge and crucify Him,”

Stu Weber: For the first time, Jesus gave the details of his passion. Jesus' remarks were painful for the disciples, but they pointed out Jesus' sovereignty in all these things. He was going into a difficult time, but he went as a king and never as a victim. He would be mocked and flogged (using a whip of leather thongs, with jagged bits of metal or bone that would rip the flesh of the victim's back) and crucified. The disciples would have cringed at all three of these words, but especially at crucifixion. This was a slow, torturous death which usually lasted for days—the most humiliating punishment used by the Roman Empire. It was reserved only for the lowest criminals. And crucifixion was also a sign of God's curse (Deut. 21:23; Gal. 3:13).

R. T. France: There is, however, no suggestion that it is really all the fault of the Romans, since Jesus is to be handed over by the Jewish authorities to the Romans in order to be mocked, flogged and crucified, in pursuance of the verdict that the Jewish leaders have already reached.

This corresponds to the historical reality (expressed in John 18:31) of the limited judicial competence of the Sanhedrin under Roman occupation. Previous predictions have spoken in more general terms of Jesus' "being killed," but now that the Romans have been explicitly brought into the scene the means of execution can be specified as crucifixion (for which see on 10:38). The careful reader will not be surprised, since Jesus has already called his disciples to "carry their cross" after him in 10:38; 16:24. After this comprehensive portrayal of rejection (both by his own people and by their imperial rulers) and of brutal suffering and humiliating death the almost matter-of-fact concluding statement (already familiar from 16:21 and 17:23) that he will be raised on the third day reads even more incongruously.

Jeffrey Crabtree: Matthew says no more about this. However, Luke 18:34 says the disciples did not understand what Jesus meant because the meaning was hidden from them. This means that for some reason the Father kept the disciples from understanding this plain statement about Jesus' death (Marshall 691).

Charles Swindoll: The disciples clearly weren't on the same page as Jesus! They were neither ready nor willing to hear anything about His upcoming betrayal, arrest, suffering, and crucifixion, nor, for that matter, were they able to grasp the significance of His resurrection. What in the world were they thinking?

The answer to that question becomes clear in the next scene. They were thinking about themselves!

III. (:19b) RESURRECTION ON THE THIRD DAY

"and on the third day He will be raised up."

David Turner: All three of the passion predictions conclude with the resurrection of Jesus, which becomes the central focus of the preaching of the early church (26:32; 27:63; 28:6; Acts 2:24–36; 3:15; 4:10; 5:30; 10:40; 13:30, 33–37; 1 Cor. 15:4–28).

William Barclay: Even at such a time, that was not the end of his words, for he finished with the confident assertion of the resurrection. Beyond the curtain of suffering lay the revelation of glory; beyond the cross was the crown; beyond the defeat was triumph; and beyond death was life.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why does Jesus keep repeating this prophecy?
- 2) What new details are revealed in this pronouncement?
- 3) Does our gospel preaching faithfully reflect the appropriate focus on the death and resurrection of Jesus?
- 4) How does divine predetermination mesh with the roles spelled out here for the chief priests and scribes and for the Gentiles?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

David Turner: Jesus's Three Passion Predictions

Matt. 16:21	Matt. 17:22–23	Matt. 20:17–19
21 Ἀπο τότε ἤρξατο ὁ Ἰησοῦς δεικνύειν τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ	22 Συστρεφομένων δε αὐτῶν ἐν τῇ Γαλιλαίᾳ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς·	17 Καὶ ἀναβαίνων ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα παρέλαβεν τοὺς δώδεκα [μαθητὰς] κατ' ἰδίαν καὶ ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς·
ὅτι δεῖ αὐτὸν εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα ἀπελθεῖν	μέλλει ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου	18 ἰδοὺ ἀναβαίνομεν εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα , καὶ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου
καὶ πολλὰ παθεῖν ἀπὸ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων καὶ ἀρχιερέων καὶ γραμματέων	παραδίδοσθαι εἰς χεῖρας ἀνθρώπων,	παραδοθήσεται τοῖς ἀρχιερεῦσιν καὶ γραμματεῦσιν, καὶ κατακρинуσιν αὐτὸν θανάτῳ 19 καὶ παραδώσουσιν αὐτὸν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν εἰς τὸ ἐμπαῖξαι καὶ ἀποκτανθῆναι	23 καὶ ἀποκτενοῦσιν αὐτόν,	καὶ μαστιγῶσαι καὶ σταυρῶσαι, καὶ τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ ἐγερθῆναι.	καὶ τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ ἐγερθήσεται.	καὶ τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ ἐγερθήσεται.
	καὶ ἐλυπήθησαν σφόδρα.
21 Apō tote ērxato ho Iēsous deiknyein tois mathētais autou	22 Sustrephomenōn de autōn en tē Galilaia eipen autois ho Iēsous:	17 Kai anabainōn ho Iēsous eis Hierosolyma parelaben tous dōdeka [mathētas] kat' idian kai en tē hodō eipen autois:
hoti dei auton eis Hierosolyma apelthein	mellei ho huios tou anthrōpou	18 idou anabainomen eis Hierosolyma, kai ho huios tou anthrōpou

kai polla pathein apo tōn presbyterōn kai archiereōn kai grammateōn	paradidosthai eis cheiras anthrōpōn,	paradothēsetai tois archiereusin kai grammateusin,
		kai katakrinousin auton thanatō ¹⁹kai paradōsousin auton tois ethnesin eis to empaixai
kai apoktanthēnai	²³ kai apoktenousin auton,	kai mastigōsai kai staurōsai,
kai tē tritē hēmera egerthēnai.	kai tē tritē hēmera egerthēsetai.	kai tē tritē hēmera egerthēsetai.
	kai elypēthēsan sphodra.
²¹ From that time Jesus began to make known to his disciples	²² And as they were gathering in Galilee, Jesus said to them,	¹⁷ Now as Jesus was going up to Jerusalem, he took the twelve [disciples] aside by themselves, and on the way he said to them, that he must go to Jerusalem,	“The Son of Man is about	¹⁸ “Look, we are going up to Jerusalem, and the Son of Man and suffer many things from the elders and chief priests and scribes,	to be handed over into the hands of men;	will be handed over to the chief priests and scribes, and they will condemn him to death ¹⁹ and will hand him over to the Gentiles to be mocked and be killed,	²³ and they will kill him,	and flogged and crucified, and on the third day be raised.	and on the third day he will be raised.”	and on the third day he will be raised.”
	And they were deeply grieved.

Daniel Doriani: Because he knew his fate, Jesus predicted it, to prepare his disciples for it. But they loved and admired him too much to take it in. Now as they ascend toward Jerusalem for the last time, he tells them, one more time, what lies before him. Earlier, he said he must “suffer many things at the hands of the elders, chief priests and teachers of the law, and that he must be killed and on the third day be raised to life” (Matt. 16:21). He said that they would treat him as they had treated John the Baptist; they would do “to him everything they wished” (17:12; cf. 17:22–23; 10:38).

Now Jesus tells his disciples, in more detail than ever, what will befall him when he arrives in the great city: “We are going up to Jerusalem, and the Son of Man will be betrayed to the chief priests and the teachers of the law. They will condemn him to death and will turn him over to the Gentiles to be mocked and flogged and crucified. On the third day he will be raised to life!” (Matt. 20:18–19). Jesus will be betrayed, condemned, mocked, flogged, and crucified, and on the third day he will be raised to life.

In the next few days, Jesus will challenge the religious leaders for corrupting the temple. In anger, they will try to trick him so as to turn the crowds against him, or to trap him into saying something they can tell the Romans. When that fails, they will resolve to arrest him in secret so as to kill him (Matt. 21–22; John 11:45–57). Jesus will reveal their hypocrisies. He will predict the downfall of their city and its false religion (Matt. 23–24). Rather than repent, they will hate Jesus all the more and take their plots to their end, the death of Jesus.

The crucifixion will kill Jesus’ body, yet Jesus will not simply die. He will do what he planned so long ago—he will bear the punishment that his people deserve. When it is finished, his spirit will leave his body (27:45–50) and go to the Father (Luke 23:46). Certain disciples will take his body and bury it, and Romans will guard the sealed tomb. Yet his body will rise and break through the tomb, for death cannot hold him (Acts 2:24).

Jesus knew all this. As a man, he confessed that some aspects of the future were hidden from him. In his humanity, he did not know the precise hour of his return (Matt. 24:36). This ignorance is consistent with his full and true incarnation. Nonetheless, Jesus knew he would die, and knew it in two ways. He knew the hearts and minds of men (John 2:24–25). He saw that they envied his popularity, that their increasingly implacable opposition made them suspect his every move. He knew that the priests and Pharisees thought he was a sinner, because he violated their traditional interpretations of the law. He knew that they feared his power and that they thought he might use it to lead the nation to follow him—so they thought—into sin. He knew they wanted to put him to death.

More than that, Jesus knew he would die because it was God’s set plan. It was the goal of his incarnation. Near the midpoint of his ministry, Jesus “set his face to go to Jerusalem” (Luke 9:51 ESV). Matthew says that “as Jesus was going up to Jerusalem, he took the twelve disciples aside” to tell them what awaited him there: betrayal, condemnation, abuse, and death (Matt. 20:17).

Yet, the Bible says, God used those acts of cruelty and injustice to accomplish our salvation. Jesus, the one innocent man, suffered death, but not for his sins. The wages of sin is death, but since Jesus committed no sin, God would be unjust to let Jesus die undeservedly. But God is just, for Jesus died not for himself but for our sins. As a willing substitute, he bore the punishment our sins deserve. So then, Jesus both suffered the sins of wicked men and fulfilled his divine calling as the Savior of the world. On that first Easter Sunday, the Father raised him from the dead. This, the apostle Paul says, is “the gospel of God,” that “through the Spirit of holiness [he] was declared with power to be the Son of God by his resurrection from the dead: Jesus Christ our Lord” (Rom. 1:4).

Walter Wilson: With regard to the prediction’s internal composition, it is significant that the events of Jesus’s passion are framed by elements formulated as divine passives, namely, “will be handed over” (παραδοθήσεται) and “will be raised” (ἐγερθήσεται). His fate, then, accords with God’s will. The same can be said of the suffering servant, to whom our passage probably alludes. Thus Isa 53:6 and 53:12 speak of him being “handed over” (παρεδόθη) to death, Isa 50:6 speaks of him receiving floggings (μάστιγες), and Isa 52:13–15 and 53:10–12 speak of his ultimate vindication. Such texts not only create a background for the prediction in 20:17–18 but also prepare the way for the servant imagery to which Jesus has recourse later in the pericope (20:26–28).

John MacArthur: The Sufferings of Christ

Now it is obvious to anyone who knows anything about the Christian faith that the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ is the center of biblical revelation, that it is the most important Christian truth, and so we are dealing with very crucial material here. The theme of this particular announcement, however, takes us beyond the earlier two, which simply talked about Him dying and rising; and this one seems to stress the nature of His suffering and the details of it. He doesn’t just say He will die and rise. He doesn’t just say He will be crucified and rise. But rather He explains detail by detail that He will be betrayed, He will be handed over to the chief priests and the scribes. They will condemn Him to death, then hand Him over to the pagans where He will be mocked, scourged, and finally crucified. And following that, He will rise from the dead. Tremendous amount of detail is given. . .

Now I believe He wanted the disciples to understand this. They were so honed in on the glory of the kingdom, they were so in tune with the glories of the Messiah; those prophecies they seemed well to understand. It was the suffering Messiah they didn’t understand. And we don’t want to be too hard on them, because Jews today with all that they know still don’t understand that. You see, the disciples were looking for a lion, they didn’t know they needed a lamb. But Jesus knew that. And so our Lord calls them aside for the third time and tells them this. . .

So Jesus going to suffer is no accident. It is not a bad turn in a nice revolution. It is no shock. This was foretold by myriads of prophets. And people who accuse Jesus of being some misguided patriot or some well-meaning peacemaker whose revolution went array, not only do they not understand Jesus, but they don’t understand the Old Testament either, and all they do is demonstrate their ignorance. This is the culmination of the redemptive plan of God. And you can go back into the Old Testament, and you will find passage, upon passage, upon passage predicting all of the factors of Jesus Christ’s life. . .

Different dimensions of the sufferings of Christ:

- Suffering of the body
- Suffering of rejection
- Suffering of sorrow and grief
- Suffering of bearing the pain of others
- Suffering of loneliness
- Suffering of false judgment and prison

- Suffering of being stricken by God to bear sin
- Suffering of the pain of disloyalty
- Suffering of humiliation
- Suffering of unjust guilt

And the greatest suffering is not physical, the greatest suffering is the suffering of the soul. And the proportions of Christ's suffering, as I think Isaiah 53 is trying to tell us, by almost to a point of being criticized from the literary standpoint, repeating over and over and over and over and over different words to say the same thing, is an act on Isaiah's part by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit to give us a little bit of an understanding of how wide, and broad, and vast the degree of His suffering was.

J. Ligon Duncan: The King Must Die

The first 16 verses of this great chapter contain the parable of the landowner. When we studied it a couple of weeks ago together, we said that that parable is basically a gigantic illustration of the very last verse of Matthew chapter 19, verse 30: Many who are first will be last and the last first. Jesus uses that story to explain to His disciples the principle that in His kingdom the last are first and the first are last.

Now that means a lot of things, but we learned from the parable at least these things. We learned first of all that we shouldn't work in the kingdom with the spirit of a hireling, thinking that we've got to do certain things in order for the Lord to bless us. Thinking that somehow He's going to shortchange us. If we serve in the Lord's kingdom like that, not only will we be miserable, but we are endanger of missing the kingdom itself. Our Lord is generous and gracious, and He promises to reward His children far more than we deserve, and we need to work with that spirit in mind.

But it also teaches us, that parable also reminds us that God's reward are not according to human and earthly measure. The human and earthly measure would expect those who worked longer in the day in the parable of the landowner to get more than those that had only worked an hour. But human measurements don't apply in the kingdom of heaven. God is sovereign, all His gifts are gifts of grace, and therefore we need to bow before that and acknowledge that. And so it's important for us as we serve in the kingdom not to serve with the spirit of wanting to get more honor and more recognition and more authority given to us than to our brethren. And so Jesus in this great story is really getting at an issue that He has been discussing with the disciples for many chapters, the issue of what true greatness is. And it's no mistake, is it, if you'll cast your eyes on verse 20 of Matthew chapter 20, that they go right back to that same issue of what greatness is in the kingdom after the passage we're going to study today. And so though this passage highlights what Jesus is going to do in Jerusalem, it also tells us something very important about how we ought to respond to the example that Jesus has given us in His life and death.

I. Christ manifests His love for His people even in the manner of His truth-telling.

II. Christ's prediction is a living illustration of "the last shall be first"

III. Christ predicts the cross.

IV. Christ always holds before us the glory on the other side of the cross.

TEXT: Matthew 20:20-28

TITLE: SQUASHING SELFISH AMBITION

BIG IDEA:

TRUE GREATNESS IN THE KINGDOM DERIVES FROM HUMBLE SERVICE AS MODELED BY JESUS, NOT THE SELFISH AMBITION OF THE WORLD

INTRODUCTION:

Donald Hagner: After the immediately preceding announcement of the suffering and death that await Jesus, the two disciples' quest for power and status in the present pericope seems all the more shocking and objectionable (note Matthew's τότε, "then" [v. 20]). It provides the occasion for yet further teaching from Jesus concerning the nature of greatness and priority in the kingdom. The sons of Zebedee are thus shown to be completely wrong in their concept of greatness. They demonstrate that they have not understood Jesus' teaching in the preceding material about the first being last and the last being first (19:30; 20:16). True greatness, the greatness of the kingdom, is reached only through service and self-sacrifice. Jesus is himself the supreme model of that kind of greatness.

Stu Weber: Our human efforts at earthly greatness display our ignorance and misunderstanding of kingdom greatness.

R. T. France: The question "Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" was raised and answered in 18:1–4 and in the portrayal of the "little ones" which followed in ch. 18; it was more obliquely addressed in the passages about the blessing of the children (19:13–15) and the rich man (19:16–26), and has come to the fore again in the discussion of rewards in 19:27–29, especially in the repeated slogan "The first will be last and the last first" in 19:30 and 20:16 together with the illustrative parable which comes between them. Now the same question arises in its most memorable form in the request of the sons of Zebedee and is dealt with definitively by Jesus in vv. 25–28; it will be broached again in 23:8–12. The natural human concern with status and importance is clearly one of the most fundamental instincts which must be unlearned by those who belong to God's kingdom.

David Thompson: THOSE WHO WILL END UP GREAT WHEN CHRIST REIGNS AS KING WILL HAVE BEEN THOSE WHO SERVED OTHERS WITH THEIR LIVES AS HE DID.

Van Parunak: Her request reflects two failings on the part of the disciples, failings that we must be careful to avoid.

- First, in spite of the Lord's gentle introduction of the gruesome suffering that awaits him, the disciples still don't get it. The only thing they hear is "Behold, we go up to Jerusalem," and their minds are so preoccupied with the coming glory of the kingdom that they miss his detailed prediction of his passion. He has just told them, twice, that those who would be first must be the last (19:30; 20:16), and reminded them of the repeated OT teaching that the saints who will rule the kingdom must first suffer. But they cannot see the suffering, and think only of the glory. It is wonderful and good for us to contemplate the glory that the Lord has in store for us, but we should not be surprised when the road to that glory must lead through suffering and tribulation.

- Second, in spite of his example of humility, they continue the error of 18:1, seeking to be the greatest. They have not caught the lesson he has twice presented (18:1-4; 19:13) that they must be like little children.

The Lord gives two answers: clarifying what their request involves, and pointing them to the one who has the authority to make such appointments. Then, in vv. 25-28, he exhorts all the disciples once more concerning humility, presenting himself as the central example.

I. (:20-23) THE ARROGANCE OF SELFISH AMBITION

A. (:20-21) Selfish Ambition Seeks Positions of Prominence

1. (:20) The Approach

“Then the mother of the sons of Zebedee came to Him with her sons, bowing down, and making a request of Him.”

Charles Swindoll: Although their mother was the mouthpiece of the request, James and John were the originators and instigators. The Gospel of Mark makes this clear, leaving the mother out of the account completely and noting that the request came from the two brothers (Mark 10:35-37). R. V. G. Tasker notes, “It is clear that, in fact, the request emanated from the brothers themselves, for the remaining ten apostles, when they hear about it, do not in Matthew’s narrative any more than in Mark’s turn in indignation upon the mother but upon her sons.”

2. (:21) The Ask

“And He said to her, ‘What do you wish?’ She said to Him, ‘Command that in Your kingdom these two sons of mine may sit, one on Your right and one on Your left.’”

Scott Harris: How could this woman be so bold to ask such a thing. One reason, other than sheer audacity, is her relationship to Jesus. By comparing the accounts of the crucifixion we know that her name is Salome, and she is the sister of Mary, the mother of Jesus. She is Jesus’ aunt, and James and John are Jesus’ first cousins. This closeness of relationship explains to some degree the boldness she has in coming to Jesus with this request. . .

James, John and their mother desired to gain the prominent positions from Jesus. It was a wrong thing to seek that for several reasons, among them

- the inappropriateness of asking for this right after Jesus had told them He was going to Jerusalem to suffer and die;
- they had not considered the price that would have to be paid;
- it was not Jesus’ place to appoint those positions; and most of all,
- it was wrong because it demonstrated that they – and the other disciples – were still largely infected with the world’s values.

Donald Hagner: The request is not merely that the sons might rule with Jesus (a promise already granted in 19:28) but that in that glorious manifestation of the reign of Jesus, they might enjoy the most exalted positions of importance, first and second in the kingdom, on his right and left hands, respectively (in keeping with the custom of ancient monarchs; cf. Jos., Ant. 6.11.9 §235).

ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ σου, “in your kingdom,” means the overt and thus eschatological manifestation of that kingdom (cf. “your glory” in Mark 10:37), which the disciples apparently associated with Jesus’ arrival in Jerusalem. The kingdom is referred to as Jesus’ kingdom also in 13:41; 16:28 (both referring to the Son of Man; cf. Luke 22:29; 23:42).

R. T. France: James and John, the sons of Zebedee, have featured alongside Peter as, with Andrew, the first disciples called (4:18–22) and as the core group whom Jesus singled out to accompany him up the mountain in 17:1, as he will again in Gethsemane (26:37); Mark adds two further such occasions (Mark 5:37; 13:3). In 10:2 their names follow Peter (the “first”) and Andrew at the head of the list of the Twelve. But only one of that leading group, Peter, has featured prominently in the story so far, and has been given a special accolade in 16:17–19, while James and John have not received any individual attention. Their open bid for leadership now is therefore a direct challenge to Peter’s leading position: if James and John are at Jesus’ right and left, where will Peter be? It may be that the brothers have detected in 19:30 a rebuke of Peter’s assumption of a leading role in the kingdom of heaven, and regard this as a good opportunity to press their counterclaim. Peter’s gaffe in 16:22 and Jesus’ sharp rebuke of him in 16:23 may also have raised their hopes of supplanting him. At any rate, the egalitarian picture of the “twelve thrones” in 19:28 is now challenged by the brothers’ concern for personal status.

Grant Osborne: There may well be a deliberate irony, since Matthew changes Mark’s wording slightly (cf. Mark 10:37) to conform to 27:38 (the two thieves at the cross “on his right and on his left”). This produces a sense of irony; the place of honor they sought would be fulfilled in an entirely different way by the two criminals.

D. A. Carson: What the sons of Zebedee want and their mother asks for is that they might share in the authority and preeminence of Jesus Messiah when his kingdom is fully consummated—something they think to be near at hand without the cross or any inter-advent period.

B. (:22-23) Selfish Ambition Displays Presumptuous Ignorance and Unrealistic Expectations

1. (:22) Presumptuous Ignorance

*“But Jesus answered and said, ‘You do not know what you are asking for. Are you able to drink the cup that I am about to drink?’
They said to Him, ‘We are able.’”*

Charles Swindoll: My guess is that they thought Jesus was talking about some kind of festive banquet, or the spoils of victory associated with the crown and the kingdom. But He was actually talking about the suffering He was facing with the agony of the Cross ahead (see 26:39). Had they fully grasped the point of Jesus’ repeated warnings of His coming death and resurrection, they would have known that to follow Him as a disciple meant that suffering comes before significance, brokenness before usefulness, humility before authority, the bitter cup of pain before the sweet glories of promotion!

Craig Blomberg: “Cup” was a common Old Testament metaphor for suffering, especially that caused by God’s wrath (e.g., Ps 75:8; Isa 51:17). Jesus asks if John and James are prepared to experience rejection and persecution for their faith. They may not literally die for their discipleship (James did— Acts 12:2; reasonably strong church tradition suggests that John did not), and they will not experience God’s wrath (only Jesus could atone for the world’s sins), but they can expect to encounter a variety of hostilities in response to their Christian testimony (recall 10:16-25). Their affirmative reply, that they can “drink the cup,” simply shows that they still do not understand (v. 22b).

Donald Hagner: It is questionable, however, whether the brothers understood at this point that drinking Jesus’ cup meant their own martyrdom. Their easy answer, δυνάμεθα, “we are able,” comes too quickly to conclude that. When they heard the metaphor, they probably thought only of a limited suffering prior to glory (cf. 26:56c).

Grant Osborne: The Cup of Suffering

We must be willing to drink the cup of Jesus’ suffering (see on 10:17–31), but the clear message here is that we seek no greatness but the path of Christ, which will often involve suffering and persecution. As Jesus said in 16:24, we must “take up [our] cross,” and that means a willingness to die if God so wills. In Phil 3:10 Paul talked about “participation in his suffering,” and in Col 1:24 Paul discussed filling up “what is still lacking in regard to Christ’s afflictions.” Paul meant that suffering was a participation in Christ’s life and a special eschatological event connected with the eschaton.

2. (:23) Unrealistic Expectations

“He said to them, ‘My cup you shall drink; but to sit on My right and on My left, this is not Mine to give, but it is for those for whom it has been prepared by My Father.’”

Robert Gundry: James died an early martyr (Acts 12:2); and though John died a natural death according to tradition, he first suffered exile on the island of Patmos (John 21:22; Revelation 1:9).

Charles Swindoll: Jesus then attempted to set the record straight regarding those coveted high positions in the future kingdom. Those places of honor would be given to those whom God the Father chose. A high position in the kingdom isn’t something that can be earned. And it certainly isn’t something that can be inherited through close family connections. Those are the ways of the world. Jesus’ words suggest that those places “have already been assigned” in the plan and purpose of God. Therefore, the way the disciples were wrangling and jostling among themselves over such positions was utterly futile.

II. (:24-28) THE ANTITHESIS TO SELFISH AMBITION

A. (:24) Cancer of Competitive Jealousy

“And hearing this, the ten became indignant with the two brothers.”

Grant Osborne: It is a jealous anger on the part of those who are upset that James and John thought of it first and got to Jesus before they could. They are upset that the two are “acing them out” and getting ahead of them in the race for greatness (as also 18:1).

B. (:25-27) Contrast between Worldly and Spiritual Leadership Styles

1. (:25) Worldly Leadership Style = Domineering Power

“But Jesus called them to Himself, and said, ‘You know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and their great men exercise authority over them.’”

R. T. France: Human society needs properly structured authority, of course, but Jesus' emphasis here is on the way that authority is exercised. . . If there is to be ambition in the service of God (note the repeated "whoever wants"), it must be the ambition to serve others (cf. Paul's similar challenge in a different context, 1 Cor 14:12).

Stu Weber: In the unbelieving world, it is assumed that power and authority define greatness. The rulers and high officials were examples of worldly greatness. The way they demonstrated their "greatness" was to lord it over others and to exercise authority. Jesus was not criticizing authoritative or hierarchical structure but the "strutting." Such behavior is born out of insecurity and pride. The person who "bosses" others around is trying to prove to himself that he is as great as he hopes. It is only an illusion, for such a person is actually fearful and weak.

Scott Harris: While it may be common practice for those that do not know the Lord to use their power in a tyrannical manner to push around those under them, Jesus tells us in vs. 26 that it is not to be that way among believers. It is a great tragedy in the church when a person comes to power, whether that is by position or by a charismatic personality, and they view themselves as superior and they use people for their own advantage.

2. (:26-27) Spiritual Leadership Style = Humble Servant

a. (:26) First Example of Path to Greatness

"It is not so among you, but whoever wishes to become great among you shall be your servant,"

Grant Osborne: "It must not be this way among you" (οὐχ οὕτως ἔσται ἐν ὑμῖν). "Must be" (ἔσται) is an example of the future with imperatival force (cf. 5:21, 27, 33, 43; 23:10). The citizens of the kingdom must never be like the Gentiles in a lust for power.

b. (:27) Second Example of Path to Greatness

"and whoever wishes to be first among you shall be your slave;"

Charles Swindoll: You could have probably heard their jaws drop when Jesus uttered those words. The words were revolutionary. They turned the world's ways on their head. Once again, Jesus was unpacking the meaning of His statement that "the last shall be first, and the first last" (20:16). And with each pass at this confusing teaching, He hoped the disciples would get closer and closer to understanding His mission, which would become their own mission when He departed this world. Only when they fully grasped this mission would they understand what true greatness in the kingdom of heaven really is. He concluded the lesson by pointing to Himself as the ultimate example of what He had just been trying to teach them.

William Barclay: Therein is greatness. The world may assess people's greatness by the number of people whom they control and who are at their beck and call; or by their intellectual standing and their academic eminence; or by the number of committees of which they are members; or by the size of their bank balances and the material possessions which they have amassed; but in the assessment of Jesus Christ these things are irrelevant. His assessment is quite simply: how many people have they helped?

C. (:28) Commendation of the Example of the Son of Man

"just as the Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and to give His life a ransom for many."

Donald Hagner: But although following Jesus' example may entail drinking the cup that he must drink (v. 22), the specific way the Son of Man is to serve, as spelled out in the final clause (the καί, lit. "and," is thus exegetical and should be translated "that is"), is unique: καὶ δοῦναι τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ λύτρον ἀντὶ πολλῶν, "that is, to give his life as a ransom for many." "Ransom," although drawn from the background of purchasing the freedom of a slave or captive (i.e., to free by payment), is here used in a metaphorical sense for a setting free from sin and its penalty at the cost of the sacrifice of Jesus. This is the service performed by the suffering servant of Isa 53 (see esp. Isa 53:10–12, where the servant [v. 11] gives himself up to death as an offering for sin and bears the sin of "many" [v. 12]). Jesus has already been identified with that servant by the quotation of Isa 53:4 in 8:17 and Isa 42:1–4 in 12:18–21.

Craig Blomberg: Jesus himself provides the perfect example of servant leadership (v. 28a; cf. esp. John 13:1-17). Few models are more desperately needed in an age of celebrity Christianity, high-tech evangelism and worship, and widespread abuses of ecclesiastical power for self-aggrandizement or, more insidiously, in the name of "attracting" more people to the gospel—a "gospel" that is thereby badly truncated. D. A. Carson observes: "One of the ironies of language is that a word like 'minister,' which in its roots refers to a helper, one who 'ministers,' has become a badge of honor and power in religion and politics."

Scott Harris: Proud, boastful Simon was changed into the Apostle Peter who wrote, "God is opposed to the proud, but gives grace to the humble. Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt you at the proper time" (1 Peter 5:6, 7). The truly great follow Jesus' example and seek to serve, not be served; to sacrifice of themselves, not seek others to sacrifice for them. If you want to be great, you do not need to exalt yourself. In all humility be the slave of Christ and serve Him and His people and let God be the one that exalts you.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Do our churches exhibit these characteristics of suffering and self-sacrifice as intrinsic to our model of leadership?
- 2) Where have you seen selfish ambition operating in church politics?
- 3) Why didn't Jesus contest their presumptuous overconfidence as they claimed to be able to drink the "cup"?
- 4) What are some of the ways that churches wrongly employ Gentile concepts of governance and leadership?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Stanley Saunders: Jesus, the Son of David, rules in service and suffering. To the world, this kind of leadership is upside down. This kind of leadership means that in the community of disciples there are no rulers, masters, rabbis, kings, or Caesars (cf. 23:8–12). How is leadership expressed in our congregations and ecclesiastical structures? What models of power does the leadership we see in the church draw upon? To what reality does it bear witness? In the stories in Matthew 19–20, Jesus has already taught his disciples that marriage, celibacy, childlikeness, and poverty are forms of witness to God’s rule and power. Now he names service and death as a slave for the sake of others as crucial forms of that same witness. This means that the church’s vocation also necessarily entails suffering and death, because precisely this form of witness is required to reveal that the powers of violence and death are impotent, and to display the true nature and reach of God’s presence, mercy, and power. Is this a cup the church today is willing to drink? Will we drink the cup of suffering only when, or if, it is forced on us? Or will we do so knowing the true nature of our calling as disciples of Jesus and trusting God’s power to redeem and vindicate?

Richard Gardner: According to Jesus, the sign of stature in his community (note the three occurrences of the phrase among you in vv. 26–27) differs radically from that recognized by the world. In the world, greatness is measured by the degree of domination, but in the church by the degree of one’s service to fellow members. The twin statements that make this point (vv. 26b, 27) exhibit a paradox that builds in force from one line to the next:

To be great, become a servant.

To be first, become a slave!

Equally forceful is the language in the final saying (v. 28), which cites Jesus’ own ministry as a model of servanthood. Instead of lording it over persons, he chose to serve their needs and seek their wellbeing at considerable expense. The word for ransom (Greek: lutron) denotes a price paid to free captives such as slaves, those in debt, and prisoners of war. Here the bondage in question is the grip of evil, and Jesus’ role as a deliverer is the role of the servant in Isaiah 53: He sacrifices himself to bring forgiveness to many (Isa. 53:10, 12), to all whose lives are linked with his life (cf. Matt. 26:27–28).

Daniel Doriani: JESUS OUR RANSOM, OUR EXAMPLE

There are two aspects to Jesus’ declaration that he came to serve. The first declares his unique work. When Jesus says he “came to serve,” he hints at his preexistence and his divine mission. Before Jesus came to us, he was somewhere else. He came here to accomplish something, a God-given mission.

- He came “to call . . . sinners to repentance” (Luke 5:32).
- He came “to seek and to save what was lost” (Luke 19:10).
- He “did not come to judge the world, but to save it” (John 12:46–47).
- He “came into the world to save sinners” (1 Tim. 1:15).

We must explore the claim that Jesus came to “give his life as a ransom for many” (Matt. 20:28). A ransom (or redemption—the terms are interchangeable) is a purchase price paid to obtain the release of a captive. In antiquity, a king might pay a ransom to set free a general or a son who was captured in battle. A commoner might pay a price to set a slave free. But these concepts, well known both in Israel and in the Roman Empire, are merely the starting point of a metaphor that points to something far deeper: Jesus offered himself—not money—to deliver us from bondage to sin, its power, and its consequences.

In the Old Testament, God acted as Redeemer by delivering his people from captivity. He said: “I am the LORD, and I will bring you out from under the yoke of the Egyptians. I will free you from being slaves to them, and I will redeem you with an outstretched arm and with mighty acts of judgment. I will take you as my own people, and I will be your God” (Ex. 6:6–7). Psalm 130 expands the concept, saying the Lord “will redeem Israel from all their sins” (130:8).

Matthew introduces the ransom concept with a question: “What can a man give in exchange for his soul?” (16:26). The answer is “A man can give nothing.” But Jesus, the God-man, now promises that he will “give his life as a ransom” (20:28). That is what he does on the cross. Jesus did not do this with money, with gold or silver. The Bible never hints that God pays anyone anything. No man, no fallen angel, can own a person so that Jesus has to pay them off. As Peter says, “It was not with perishable things such as silver or gold that you were redeemed . . . but with the precious blood of Christ, a lamb without blemish or defect” (1 Peter 1:18–19).

Here in 1 Peter and throughout the New Testament, the Lord places our ransom in the context of the substitutionary atonement Jesus accomplished when he offered himself as a sacrifice for us on the cross (Matt. 20:17–19). In Romans 3 Paul links justification by faith and redemption. Through the work of Christ, God granted to godless, unrighteous, sinning people an alien righteousness, a righteousness that “comes through faith in Jesus Christ to all who believe” (Rom. 1:18; 3:21–23). Now we are “justified by his grace as a gift, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, whom God put forward as a propitiation by his blood, to be received by faith” (3:24–25 ESV).

So then, ransom or redemption is an aspect of the work of Christ when he offered himself as a blood sacrifice to atone for our sins. Yet “ransom” is more than a synonym for “sacrifice” or “atonement.” The term elicits specific aspects of Jesus’ work.

First, the concept of ransom compares the human condition to slavery or captivity from which we cannot extricate ourselves. We cannot liberate ourselves from our predicament. Our only hope is an outside intervention. Jesus alone can secure our release from sin, its power, and its consequences, which include guilt, condemnation, and both physical and eternal death. The only contribution we make to our salvation is the sin that made it necessary.

Second, a price is paid. The payment is not monetary, but it is real. We often speak of great sacrifices with monetary metaphors, saying that people “pay a price” to get into medical school or to start a business. The price Jesus paid is far greater than these; it was his “precious blood” (1 Peter 1:19).

Third, we belong to a new master. Acts says Jesus “obtained” or “acquired” us. First Corinthians says we “were bought with a price” (Acts 20:28; 1 Cor. 6:20; 7:23 ESV). By paying this price, the Lord liberates us from sin and its power. Whatever our outward circumstances in this world, we are never spiritual slaves. We are free, heirs of a new life. Yet as the metaphor suggests, we are not absolutely free. We belong to the Lord, who purchased us not only to liberate us from a malign master, but to place us in his household. We are liberated from an evil servitude and gain a noble service.

THE OBJECT OF THE RANSOM

Jesus pays that price “for many.” The many, in this case, are the people, the children, the elect of God. This use of the term “the many” was common in Jesus’ day, but the idea is grounded in Isaiah 53.7 As he described the work of God’s Suffering Servant, Isaiah, speaking for the Lord, said, “My righteous servant will justify many, and he will bear their iniquities” (Isa. 53:11).

Romans says the same thing. By the sin of one man, Adam, Paul declares, many died and suffered condemnation. But now the death of the one man, Jesus, brings life and justification to many (Rom. 5:12–17). Jesus came to give his life in the place of many, as a substitute and exchange for many. He drank the cup we were scheduled to drink.

Jesus came to teach, to heal, and to reveal the Father. But above all, he came to deliver us from the grip of sin and Satan. He came to drink the cup that was set at our table. He drained the cup of the wrath of God. That is his gift. To receive it, we need to recognize that we cannot drain that cup. If it is ever to empty, Jesus must drink it to the last—for us.

THE IMITATION OF CHRIST

This act of Jesus is unique and unrepeatable. Yet Jesus also says we should serve “just as” the Son of Man came to serve. Thus, while Jesus’ work is unique, his life is still a pattern for us. In fact, Jesus often says this. For example, Jesus washed his disciples’ feet, then said we should “wash one another’s feet” (John 13:14). Before he went to the cross, he also said, “Take up [your] cross and follow me” (Matt. 16:24). In Matthew 20 Jesus says we must serve others as he has served us.

It is so easy to be abstract here, to say “I want to serve” while we take care of ourselves. Jesus’ service was concrete. He cured people who needed healing. He went to the cross for sins that needed to be atoned for. So let us be concrete. Let us get up and help clear the table instead of looking for a way out. If a coat is on the floor, the milk is out, a towel is in a heap, put them away, quietly, without telling anyone. When a job truly needs to be done, we should find a way to do it.

Grant Osborne: Servanthood is the only path to greatness in the kingdom. Jesus makes absolutely clear that the kingdom values and lifestyle are the exact opposite of the surrounding pagan world. This is exemplified in Luke 16:1–13, in the parable of the shrewd manager (vv. 1–8a) and Jesus’ interpretation of it (vv. 8b–9, 10–13). The world “gets ahead” by taking, but the “people of light” by giving.” Following Jesus, who was “in very nature God” but who in his incarnation took on “the very nature of a servant” (Phil 2:6–7), the disciple must seek humility but leave the glory up to God (the message of Phil 2:6–11).

Servanthood must exemplify every Christian leader, indeed every Christian. We will never be Christlike until we serve rather than manipulate others to serve us (cf. Phil 2:3–4). As Wilkins says, “Because of the impact of God’s love in our lives, we can now love (1 John 4:19). And because of the transforming impact of God’s gift of grace in our lives, we can now give ourselves to serve others.”

Warren Wiersbe: There were several things wrong with their request. To begin with, it was born in ignorance. “Ye know not what ye ask,” Jesus replied. Little did Salome realize that the path to the throne is a difficult one. James was the first of the disciples to be martyred, and John had to endure hard days on the isle of Patmos. These three believers wanted their will, not God’s will, and they wanted it their way.

Another factor was their lack of heavenly direction. They were thinking like the world: James and John wanted to “lord it over” the other disciples the way the unsaved Gentile rulers lorded it over their subjects. Their request was fleshly (sensual), because they were selfishly asking for glory for themselves, not for the Lord. No doubt they felt relieved that they had gotten to Jesus with this request before Peter did!

Finally, the request was not only of the world and the flesh, but it was also of the Devil. It was motivated by pride. Satan had sought a throne (Isa. 14:12-15) and had been cast down. Satan had offered Jesus a throne and had been refused (Matt. 4:8-11). Satan magnifies the end (a throne) but not the means to that end. Jesus warned Salome and her sons that the special thrones were available to those who were worthy of them. There are no shortcuts in the kingdom of God.

Michael Wilkins: Sacrifice is a readily understood concept when we think of it in terms of our own benefit. “No pain, no gain” is an old adage that communicates a well-known and appreciated value among those who must sacrifice the present pleasure for personal gain, whether that means experiencing the pain of exercise for the gain of a healthy physical heart or the pain of sacrificing a periodic night at the movies to save enough for that long-anticipated skiing vacation.

Jesus would not overturn that principle completely, but he would reverse the focus to say, “My pain, others’ gain.” Jesus’ sacrificial servanthood was not directed toward his own personal gain, but for the gain of all those who would believe on his atoning work on the cross and gain forgiveness of their sins. As such his servanthood provides us with the example we now must display toward one another. We sacrifice for the sake of empowering others.

J. Ligon Duncan: The Cup of the King

What does it mean to be great? Perhaps that’s a question that we don’t allow ourselves to ask out loud, at least pertaining to ourselves. We may engage in a discussion about who was the greatest basketball player of all times, we may engage in some question of which was the greatest team of all time in some particular sport, and we ask questions of greatness about sports all the time, but I’m asking this question about our own lives, our own agendas, our own vocations, and maybe we don’t quite phrase it that way when we’re discussing this matter. Maybe we ask the question this way: what does it mean to be successful? What does it mean to be significant? What does it mean to be respected or influential? Maybe that’s how we would put the question of greatness. This is a standing issue for us today, because we ask ourselves things like this. We compare ourselves with others to see how we’re doing. We wonder sometimes if we have risen to the top of our class. We are interested in being respected and we are interested in being noticed and successful.

And in this passage, Jesus is teaching His disciples about what it means to be great in His kingdom. True kingdom greatness, He is going to teach us here, true kingdom greatness is a gospel grace. That is, you cannot achieve greatness apart from the grace of God, in fact you can’t even see what true greatness is until the Lord has opened your eyes. And, furthermore, He teaches us that true kingdom greatness manifests itself, not being perceived by all those around us as influential and respected and important, but instead it manifests itself in our willing service of the brethren for the sake of Christ. And so Jesus gives us a contrast between our views of worldly greatness and importance, and spiritual greatness and importance. And that’s what I’d like to look at with you today in this great passage. I’d like for you to look at two or three things.

I. Our pride and sinful ambition blinds us to the true nature of greatness.

II. Humility is demanded when we pledge to take Christ's cup.

III. Kingdom greatness is measured by kingdom service.

John MacArthur: How to be Great in the Kingdom

We live in a Christianity now that thinks God's only design for us is to be healthy, wealthy, prosperous, happy, satisfied, fulfilled, and so forth. We know very little about sacrifice. We know very little of the pain of suffering. All we want to do is eliminate all that so that we can get on to self-fulfillment. We're consumed with the creature comforts, pleasure, vacations, travel, you name it, for the self-satisfying feeling that we get by fulfilling what we believe to be deep needs.

And in the process, we have begun to exalt pride. We've given place to pride, to self-fulfillment, to self-glory, to self-promotion, and we've begun to forget the whole subject of humility. People are not interested in that. There was a time in the church, you go back, and there were many who were teaching and preaching on humility, and there was a certain brokenness in the church. You look around the time of the Reformation, or the time of the Puritans, and you find there was a dominant sense of brokenness, of contrition. There was a trembling at the Word of God. There was a humility, a meekness within the church that gave it great power. But now the church wants to be proud, and fulfilled, and indulgent, and so forth; and it has fallen prey to flip-flopping the sin of pride and the virtue of humility, and making pride a virtue and humility a weakness.

Now the lesson of honor through humility, of glory through suffering, we need to learn. And we're not alone; the disciples needed to learn it, too. And that is the essence of verses 20 to 28. They too sought self-glory. They were into the self-esteem cult, up to their proverbial ears. They were into self-promotion, self-glory, seeking to be somebody special, to be recognized, to be esteemed. They sought the high places. And the Lord needed to correct that; and He does correct that in this passage. Unfortunately, He taught a lot better than they learned; and He has to reteach this lesson just a few days after teaching here on the way to Jerusalem. . .

They should have forsaken all, followed Jesus without ever asking, "What's in it for me?" But they kept asking, "What's in it for us? What's in for us?" In fact, back in chapter 19, verse 27, "What shall we have?" said Peter. "What shall we get? What do we get out of this self-abandoning thing?" Oh, the treachery of the human heart. Selfishness is incurable in this life. It only can be brought under control, it can't be eliminated. . .

Now we need to reexamine then this whole idea of humility as a path to glory; and I think we can in this passage. Let's look at it right now. Two points: how not to be great, verse 20 through 25; how to be great, 26 to 28. We'll take point one today.

I. How not to be great (:20-25).

Four wrong, worldly ways to seek greatness are given in this – two by example and two by instruction of our Lord. And there are earthly means to greatness in men's eyes. And men pursue greatness through those means, but they are not adaptable to God's kingdom. Jesus said, "My kingdom is not" – what? – "of this world." And the principles for the world's kingdom do not operate in His kingdom. Here are the ways not to be great in God's kingdom.

Number one is “political power play.” Now the world will tell us if you want to get something, it all depends on who you know, right? If you want to go up the ladder, you’ve got to get next to the people who’ve got the influence. And so in exceeding to places of prominence and glory in the world, political power play is a common approach. You manipulate people and circumstances to find your way in with those you want to get in with, and they’ll pull you to the top. . .

There’s a second wrong road to honor. In verses 22 to 24, I call it audacious ambition. This is just mindboggling, this passage: “Jesus answered and said, ‘You don’t know what you’re asking. Lady, you don’t even know what you’re talking about. You’re asking for glory; and what you don’t realize is that the path to glory is suffering. You don’t know what you’re asking. You’re saying, “I want my boys on the right,” – you don’t know what you’re asking. The highest places of glory are reserved for those who went through the deepest places of suffering.’” . . .

And so the Lord says, “I think I need to teach you a lesson.” And He gives them two more wrong ways – ways that men get greatness, but not in God’s kingdom. The first is in verse 25 is dominant dictatorship, dominant dictatorship. Look at verse 25: “Jesus called them unto Him and said, ‘You know that the princes of the Pagans’ – the rulers of the Pagans – ‘exercise dominion over them.’”

That word is a very interesting word: katakurieuō. It means to lord it over. They lord it over them. And this is dominant dictatorship. This is the world’s way. Not only does the world seek greatness through its political power play and its audacious ambition, but the world seeks prominence by dominating as dictatorship. . .

And then there’s a final one; we’ll call it charismatic control. Verse 25 says, “And they that are great,” – megaloi, the chief ones, the leaders – “exercise authority over them.” That’s katexousiazō for you Greek students — exousiazō has to do with authority: down. It’s to throw your weight around colloquially; and it is the idea of vaunting their power.

And it seems best to see this in the comparison also with the other passages as the power of personality. The dominant dictatorship is the power of position, this seems to be the power of personality. And so I call it charismatic control: the charm, the charisma, the wit, the verbiage, the ability to speak with glibness and so forth, gives them a certain power to sway and move people. And there are people who achieve greatness in the world by virtue of their charismatic ability to control people.

I. How to be great (:26-28).

So, if we pursue greatness, we pursue it on the path of humility. If we pursue greatness, we pursue it on the path of service; we pursue it on the path of slavery. And that takes us, then, to verses 26 to 28.

There are two things to notice in these three verses: the exhortation and the example, or, if you will, the precept and the pattern. The exhortation comes in verses 26 and 27, and the example is given in verse 28. . .

Jesus never promotes a sinful ambition, and Jesus dealt with the sinful ambition of James and John. But He reaffirmed that it wasn’t wrong to seek to be great; it was only wrong to seek it for the wrong reason. That's all. I mean even John said, "*Look to your selves that you lose not the things that you've wrought, but that you receive a full reward."

And Paul said, "Run that you may win." And he also reiterated that we ought to be concerned that our works, when they stand the test of fire at the judgment seat of Christ are not wood, hay, and stubble, but gold, silver, and precious stone. And that we so live, according to 2 Corinthians, that when we come to that day and face the Lord Jesus Christ, we may receive reward for the things done in the body, whether they be good or worthless.

And John reminds us, at the climax of the whole Bible, that the Lord said, "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is in my hand to give you, according to your work." And so, it's not wrong to seek glory in eternity. It's not wrong to seek exaltation. The Lord has given us that as a goal. It's not wrong to seek that. It's only wrong to seek it for the wrong reason. It's only when you're motive isn't right. When like James and John you seek it so you can lord it over the others, or you see it so you can be more esteemed than others in this life, or you seek it so that you can have for yourself greater authority, greater power, greater comfort. It's not wrong to seek it; it's wrong to seek it for wrong and selfish reasons. . .

Greatness in the kingdom, capacity for glory in the kingdom is in direct proportion to humility and selfless service rendered. Simple and yet profound truth.

Ray Pritchard: Christ Speaks to the Problem of Misguided Ambition

Let's face it. Life is about winning and losing. That's why we keep score. That's why we love sports and board games. We want to know who's up and who's down, who's hot and who's not.

And that's why this mother came to Jesus. In the great game of life, she wanted to make sure her boys came out ahead. If that meant asking for a favor from the Lord, she was glad to do it because she felt like her boys deserved it. She had big dreams and her sons had large ambitions.

And despite what you may think, ambition itself is not evil. If you don't have any ambition, why bother getting out of bed in the morning? You might as well roll over and sleep all day. Ambition is merely a strong desire regarding the future. As such, it can be positive or negative, good or bad, righteous or evil. It can be very useful if we are ambitious for the right things.

I. High Ambition (:20-21)

II. High Cost (:22-23)

III. High Standard (:24-28)

TEXT: Matthew 20:29-34

TITLE: RESTORING SIGHT TO THE BLIND

BIG IDEA:

BLIND PEOPLE CAN HAVE THEIR SIGHT RESTORED BY CALLING UPON JESUS FOR HIS COMPASSIONATE MERCY

INTRODUCTION:

D. A. Carson: It reminds us that the one going up to Jerusalem to give his life as a ransom for many is the Messiah, the Son of David, whose great power, used mercifully (v.30) and compassionately (v.34), is not used to save himself.

Robert Gundry: For Matthew and his audience, their shouting “Lord” two times puts a double emphasis on Jesus’ divine lordship, and their shouting “Son of David” two times puts a double emphasis on Jesus’ human kingship. Their double plea for mercy (the second one implied) asks him to exercise the mercy that he commanded others to exercise (9:13; 12:7 [compare 5:7]). The greater loudness of their shouting a second time and its coming despite the crowd’s reprimand strengthen the plea.

Craig Blomberg: Matthew 19:1 - 20:34 has now concluded the way it began—with Jesus on the road, surrounded by great crowds and healing people (cf. 19:2). Matthew is building up to the climactic entry of Jesus into Jerusalem with which chap. 21 begins. Jesus seems to have a great host of followers and admirers, but they will soon turn fickle and abandon him.

Donald Hagner: Just before arriving in Jerusalem, Jesus performs a striking miracle in the healing of two blind men, who appeal to him using the title Son of David. This is the same title with which Jesus will be greeted on his entry into Jerusalem (21:9). In the temple Jesus will again heal the blind and the lame too (21:14). The present passage thus at once rounds out the preceding main section of the Gospel and serves as a transition to the arrival of Jesus in Jerusalem and the events to occur there. The present miracle has the effect of confirming the messianic identity of Jesus as the Son of David. With sovereign power he brings sight to the blind, and they respond by following him in discipleship—all this in strong contrast to the way he will be received by the Jerusalem authorities. . .

Jesus on the way to his death in Jerusalem does not cease being the Messiah who meets the needs of individuals. The giving of sight to the blind is a dramatic miracle that points to the dawning of the era of messianic fulfillment. The Son of David is present among his people. And as he compassionately delivers them from their literal darkness, so he continues on his way to Jerusalem, where in his sacrificial death he will deliver all of humanity from an even greater darkness—that of the bondage to sin and death. . . This healing pericope thus may be seen as the gospel in a microcosm.

Grant Osborne: Jesus takes the blind living in darkness and gives them the light of God so they can see spiritual truth. In Jesus, God is ever open to bring sight to those who call out for divine mercy and open themselves up to his healing presence in their lives.

(:29) GEOGRAPHICAL TRANSITION

“And as they were going out from Jericho, a great multitude followed Him.”

D. A. Carson: Matthew and Mark say that Jesus was “leaving,” Luke that he was “entering,” Jericho. . . Many avoid geographical contradiction by noting that in this period there were two Jerichos—an older town on the hill, largely in ruins, and the new Herodian town about one mile away (cf. Josephus, J.W. 4.459 [8.3]). In this view, Matthew and Mark, under Jewish influence, mention the old town Jesus was leaving; Luke the Hellenist refers to the new one, which Jesus is entering. This may well be the explanation. But there is no certain evidence that the old town was still inhabited at this time, and we do not know the local names of the two sites. . .

Jericho was not only the home of Jesus’ ancestor Rahab (1:5) but was also a day’s journey from Jerusalem. The “large crowd” implies more than messianic excitement; it also reflects the multitudes of pilgrims from Galilee and elsewhere heading to Jerusalem for the feast.

Michael Wilkins: Jesus leaves Jericho for the final approach to Jerusalem, which lies ahead on a winding road for fifteen miles as it ascends three thousand feet through dry desert. It would take some six to eight hours of uphill walking, so he and the disciples are naturally eager to make it to their destination before nightfall, because the road was infamous for highway robberies (cf. Luke 10:30ff.).

I. (:30-31) PERSISTENT PLEA FOR MERCY BY TWO BLIND MEN

A. (:30) Seizing the Opportunity to Petition Jesus for Mercy

1. Incident

“And behold, two blind men sitting by the road,”

Grant Osborne: Matthew frequently uses “look” (ἰδοῦ) to add a dramatic emphasis to a scene (see on 19:16). These men are “sitting alongside [παρά] the road,” probably the trunk road to Jerusalem in order to beg alms from pilgrims passing by (quite lucrative at this time of year). The presence of “road” (ὁδός) continues the road to Jerusalem theme (cf. 20:17; 21:8, 19). The emphasis on “hearing” most likely refers both to the excited talk of the crowd that Jesus is approaching and to the previous stories the two blind heard about Jesus.

Bethany Bible Church: Our Savior was on His way at that very moment to accomplish the most momentous work of service in all of history—His sacrifice on the cross for our sins, and His resurrection from the dead for our justification. And yet—even at such an important moment as as that—Jesus willingly stopped on His course to the city to respond to the pleas of to two poor, miserable, blind men whom the rest of the world had largely ignored.

What an encouragement this ought to be to us to cry out to the Savior with importunity! He is never too busy to minister to those who genuinely trust Him and who cry out to Him in sincere faith.

<https://www.bethanybible.org/archive/2008/020308.htm>

2. Intelligence

“hearing that Jesus was passing by,”

Matthew McCraw: It's important to realize that life for blind people is much different today. There are resources, organizations, and advances in today's culture that are able to assist visually impaired people in a lot of ways. However, blind people in Jesus' day were often unable to receive any kind of genuine help and as a result, it left them in desperate situations. These two men needed help and they knew that they needed help. They needed mercy from Jesus and they knew that Jesus had mercy for them.

3. Importunity

"cried out, saying, 'Lord, have mercy on us, Son of David!'"

Daniel Doriani: Each element of their address merits reflection.

- "Lord" may be the Greek substitute for the name of Yahweh, the living God, or it may be a term for a leader (as in "lords and ladies"). Since most people thought of Jesus as a prophet (21:11) and since we can hardly expect these beggars to know that Jesus of Nazareth is the Second Person of the Trinity, it is the latter.
- Yet the next title, "Son of David," shows that the beggars knew Jesus was more than a mere man. "Son of David" refers to the king who fulfills the prophecy of 2 Samuel 7. That Son of David would be the king, healer, and leader of Israel.
- Finally, the plea for mercy ("Have mercy on us") means they believe Jesus has the power to stop and heal them.

Jason Lim: These two blind men, they have 20/20 vision. They were physically blind, but they were spiritually sharp. They knew that this poor carpenter's son is the very Messiah, the everlasting King. Now many people didn't see it, especially the Jewish religious leaders. They were blinded! They saw, they heard about Jesus's great miracles. They heard about his great preaching, but they do not recognize Him as the Messiah. They were blinded by arrogance and pride. But these blind men, reduced to nothingness in society had perfect vision, seeing that Jesus is the Christ.

<https://gospellight.sg/sermons/blind-men-with-2020-vision-matthew-2029-34/>

Ray Fowler: There's a lesson here for us as well. Don't let Jesus pass you by. You never know whether this may be your only opportunity to come to Jesus. None of us has a claim on tomorrow. That's why the Bible says today is the day of salvation. Don't miss out on opportunities for salvation or Christian growth. Don't let Jesus pass you by. These two men were determined not to miss out on this opportunity, so they cried out for mercy in faith.

<https://www.rayfowler.org/sermons/matthew/what-do-you-want-jesus-to-do/>

B. (:31) Shouting over the Opposition to Persist in Asking Jesus for Mercy

1. Muzzled by the Multitude

"And the multitude sternly told them to be quiet;"

Daniel Doriani: A little earlier, the apostles had tried to keep little children away from Jesus. On this day, the crowd tried to keep the blind men away from Jesus. The crowd rebuked them and ordered them to silence.

Walter Wilson: In overcoming the attempt of a third party to block their access to the healer, the blind men bring to mind the tenacity of the Canaanite woman, who even utters a similar appeal: "Have mercy on me, Lord, Son of David" (15:22). In contrast to Mark 10:46, Matt 20:30 mentions neither the names nor the occupation of the two men, thereby enhancing their representative potential (cf. Matt 9:18 || Mark 5:22). In the same vein, no information is provided regarding how the men have come to know that Jesus is the Son of David, though perhaps the reader is meant to assume that, being blind, they are endowed with prophetic insight. In any event, when they hear that Jesus is passing by the spot where they are sitting alongside the road, they cry out to him (20:30). The response of the crowd, which rebukes the blind men (20:31a), strikes the interpreter as odd, since elsewhere crowds are depicted as following Jesus specifically for healing (cf. 4:24–25; 12:15; 14:13–14; 19:2), and in a short while they will be crying out something very similar (21:9). Perhaps the role of the crowd in this instance is simply to “act as a foil to the welcoming attitude of Jesus,” just as the disciples had done in 19:13–15 (also with ἐπιτιμάω). Note, too, how Matthew omits the mediating action attributed to the crowd in Mark 10:49b, thereby simplifying their role and making the contrast with Jesus more apparent.

2. Motivated to Shout Louder

“but they cried out all the more, saying, ‘Lord, have mercy on us, Son of David!’”

R. T. France: Matthew does not explain the source of their knowledge. No explanation is given for the crowd’s attempt to silence them, and perhaps none is needed: crowds can be like that! But the result is that the reader is shown the men’s persistence and is given a second chance to hear the title “Son of David,” and perhaps to reflect on the ability of these Judean beggars to discern who Jesus is when the religious leaders in Jerusalem will so signally fail to do so.

Matthew Henry: Here is an example of importunity in prayer. They cried out as men in earnest; men in need are earnest, of course. Cold desires only beg for denials. When they were discountenanced in it, they cried the more. The stream of fervency, if it is stopped, will rise and swell the higher. This is wrestling with God in prayer, and makes us the fitter to receive mercy; for the more it is striven for, the more it will be prized and thankfully acknowledged.

II. (:32-34) MERCIFUL MIRACLE – RESTORATION OF SIGHT TO THE BLIND

A. (:32) Perception of Jesus

“And Jesus stopped and called them, and said, ‘What do you want Me to do for you?’”

B. (:33) Problem of Blindness

“They said to Him, ‘Lord, we want our eyes to be opened.’”

Daniel Doriani: In the Old Testament, there is no record that a prophet or servant of God ever heals the blind. But the healing of the blind is Jesus’ most common miracle. Why? Because the Bible says God alone gives sight to the blind (Ex. 4:11; Ps. 146:8–9). When God restores all things, when his Servant comes, then “the eyes of the blind will see” (Isa. 29:18; 35:5; 42:7). Thus Matthew attests the deity of Christ.

C. (:34) Performance of Miracle

1. Two Components

a. Motivated by Compassion

“And moved with compassion,”

b. Methodology of the Physical Touch “Jesus touched their eyes;”

Grant Osborne: Jesus’ compassion and touching their eyes are not found in Mark and add to the centrality of the messianic miracle in Matthew. Jesus’ compassion is also found in 9:36; 14:14; 15:32, all connected to his miraculous ministry to the crowds. Jesus had great pity for the human dilemma and always responded. Most busy teacher-rabbis, let alone messianic pretenders, would never have “stopped” in their rush to destiny to help the unfortunate, but Jesus does so every time. The use of “touch” for healing is also found in 8:3, 15; 9:29 (9:20–21; 14:36 of people touching Jesus) and stresses further the physicality of the miracle.

2. Transformation to Discipleship

“and immediately they regained their sight and followed Him.”

D. A. Carson: Matthew’s account is simple but stresses that Jesus mercifully healed the men despite the opposition of the crowds (v.31) that, like the disciples (cf. 19:13–15), wanted to bask in his glory but not practice his compassion. After this healing, unlike 9:30, there is no command to be silent. That point in Jesus’ ministry has been reached when more public self-disclosure could not change the course of events. The two healed men joined the crowds following Jesus (20:34), pressing on to the Passover they expected and the cross they did not.

Daniel Doriani: By this miracle, Jesus demonstrated mercy in all of its forms.

- First, he acted in mercy by restoring their sight.
- Second, Jesus felt mercy and affection for the men, as we read, “Jesus had compassion on them and touched their eyes” (20:34).
- Third, Jesus entered a relationship with them and they followed him.
- Fourth, he entered Jerusalem where he would offer his life for them so he could grant them the mercy of forgiveness.

Matthew McCraw: How many of you all have been changed by Jesus? Now, you are followers of Jesus. Listen, church: Jesus has transformation for you and that transformation is life-changing. That transformation leads to devotion to Jesus. That transformation not only transforms your life, it also transforms you into a Jesus follower.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Which is easier to accomplish: the miracle of restoring physical sight or of restoring spiritual sight?
- 2) What obstacles did these two blind men have to overcome to receive mercy from Jesus?
- 3) Why did Jesus ask them “What do you want Me to do for you?” when He surely already knew the answer?
- 4) Have you been so transformed that you are now a faithful follower of Jesus?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

David Turner: When Jesus and the disciples leave Jericho, Jerusalem is only fifteen miles away, and the ominous events repeatedly predicted by Jesus will occur soon. But Jesus does not focus on his own concerns. He has just told his disciples that true greatness is measured by service, not power. He now compassionately uses his power to serve the blind men in their need. They respond to their healing by following Jesus on the way to Jerusalem. Jesus does not command the blind men to be silent (contrast 8:4; 9:30), since Jesus's hour has come. Their cries to the son of David (20:30–31) will soon be echoed by others on the approach to Jerusalem, but the religious leaders do not join the chorus (21:9, 15–16).

Daniel Doriani: Jesus was going to Jerusalem for the last time. There he would meet the guardians of a decayed form of Judaism. He would meet the alleged protectors of Israel and its faith, and find that they were most interested in preserving their positions, even if it meant a fair measure of collaboration with Rome. The Jewish and Roman leaders were both intent on keeping the peace and keeping their place. As they saw it, Jesus disturbed the peace and threatened their place. Representatives of a distorted religion and a brutal state, they were willing to execute Jesus as a troublemaker in order to keep the peace. Jesus knew the authorities would kill him. He also knew that they would not simply take his life, he would give it up, as an atoning sacrifice for his people.

As Jesus left Jericho, Jesus knew what awaited him in Jerusalem. In Jerusalem the chief priests and elders of the people would fulfill their plots against Jesus (26:1–5). In Jerusalem, Judas would betray him with a kiss and the temple police would arrest him (26:14–16, 47–55). In Jerusalem, the disciples would desert him (26:56). In Jerusalem, Jesus would appear before the ruling Jewish council on false charges. They would condemn him to death and send him to Pontius Pilate, the Roman procurator (26:57–68). Pilate would know Jesus was innocent, but lack the courage to acquit him. In Jerusalem, the chief priests would incite an angry mob to call for Jesus' crucifixion, and Pilate would capitulate (27:11–26). In Jerusalem, Roman soldiers would mock, flog, and crucify him (27:27–44). But from Jerusalem, Jesus would rise again, send his Spirit, and build his church.

All this Jesus knew. It was his secret burden as he traveled to Jerusalem for the Passover week that would soon begin. Along with many thousands of Israelites, Jesus wanted to be in the temple precincts for the feast. Northern Jews, living in Galilee, walked south to Jerusalem. To avoid walking through Samaria, which they considered a defiled land, they traveled east, to the Sea of Galilee, then south alongside the Jordan River. Jericho was an oasis city located at the southern end of the Jordan, where it emptied into the Dead Sea. At Jericho, worshipers turned west and walked one day, about fifteen miles, to Jerusalem.

Jesus walked with his disciples, but hundreds of others walked nearby. We can imagine the scene, the people streaming into Jerusalem. The disciples were nearest to Jesus, but hundreds more walked near him, as part of a larger mass of humanity that strode toward the city.

Walter Wilson: Because Jesus has already spoken about those who are unable to “see” the truth (13:13–14) as well as their “blind” guides (15:14), the reader will be inclined to interpret the experience of blindness in this story metaphorically. In something of a twist, however, the imagery of blindness is applied not to unbelieving Israel (cf. 8:12) but to Jesus's own followers. This much is suggested by the correlation of the redactional references to the "two" sons of Zebedee in 20:21, 24 and the redactional reference to the "two" blind men in 20:30. There is also an interesting correlation between the question Jesus asks the two brothers' mother in 20:21 ("What do you want?") and the question Jesus asks the two blind men in 20:32 ("What do you want me to do for you?"). The intimation that James and John (serving as representatives of the group) are afflicted by spiritual blindness is countered by the hope that they can be "healed" by Jesus (cf. 4:16). Indeed, it is only through such healing that they will be able to "follow" him at all (cf. 5:14–16). The fact that 20:32–34 exhibits the basic features of a call story (bringing to mind examples of prophetic discourse) further encourages us to see the two blind men as somehow representative of the disciples. Note in particular how Jesus calls the men in 20:32 and they "follow" him in 20:34, evidencing a pattern that can be compared to the call of James and John in 4:21–22.

Stu Weber: The greatest in the kingdom will stoop to serve the least. . . Beggars were considered outcasts in Jewish society. Matthew, writing to Jews who desired two witnesses, mentioned both men. Mark and Luke referred only to one beggar, probably the speaker of the two. He was identified in Mark 10:46 with the nickname "Bartimaeus," or "Son of Excrement." Even though Old Testament law provided for the needy in Israel, few holy men would have anything to do with beggars. They feared they might be made unclean if they associated with beggars. Jesus had already performed one healing similar to this in 9:27–31. But this episode was unique in its purpose for Matthew's story. These two "low-lives" were among those whom the Son of Man had come to serve (20:28). . .

The Messiah-King was on the verge of entering "the city of the Great King" (Matt. 5:35; Ps. 48:2). He was about to ascend to the sanctuary of Yahweh, which only the blameless may do (Ps. 15). He was about to purify his own house, the temple (21:13), and was preparing to perform the central messianic act of salvation (Isa. 53). The crowd and the disciples were to know beyond any doubt who was entering Jerusalem and the source and extent of his authority.

God views all people—regardless of age, gender, social status, or nationality as of equal value. The greatest person in God's kingdom is the humblest servant toward fellow believers. We must follow Jesus' example by stooping to serve those considered least worthy by worldly standards.

J. Ligon Duncan: The Compassion of the King

God is teaching us one grand lesson in this passage. He is showing us the greatness and compassion of our Lord Jesus Christ as a picture of what true kingdom greatness is. As the disciples are jostling amongst themselves to be counted great, here is Jesus ministering to outcasts. It is a picture of what true greatness is in His kingdom. But, along the way there are several other important, valuable, relevant issues that are dealt with. And I'd like to look at those as well as we consider this passage before us today. There are three parts to the passage, and I'd like you to see two or three things.

I. We cry out to the Lord when we realize we need Him.

As Jesus is passing through Jericho, on the way to Jerusalem, He is encountered by two blind men. Now Jesus was being followed by a great crowd. And the blind men perceived that Jesus was coming. Perhaps, they heard Him. They heard people talking about the fact that He was in the vicinity. And so they immediately begin to cry out for mercy. And is it not a picture of those who are the least fortunate, those who are the last those who are the outcast those who are unimportant in the society around them. And yet the Lord Jesus takes time to minister to them.

John Flavel, the old Puritan, once said, “Christ is not sweet until sin is made bitter to us.” And the fact of the matter is there are a lot of people who don’t think they need Christ’s grace, because they don’t see their sin and they don’t see their need. And this passage is a mirror to us. And it’s saying to us, if we are spiritual beggars, then we ought to be crying out for mercy to Christ. Do we realize what we are if we’re apart from Him?

II. A healthy prayer life flows from a sense of need and apprehension of the Savior.

Let me suggest to you that in verse 31 we also see a pattern for persistent prayer for believers. I know this passage isn’t ultimately about prayer. But don’t we see a paradigm for Christian prayer set forth in the attitude of these men. A healthy prayer life, you see, flows from a sense of need and a sight of the savior. If you sense your need, and you have seen the savior, you’ve got the essential ingredients needed to motivate you to a healthy prayer life. Look at how these men respond to Jesus Christ. They called out to Him, “Lord, Son of David, have mercy on us.”

But look at the qualities of their request and what they teach us about prayer.

- These men were earnest.
- Notice also that these men were humble.
- Notice that they were believing.
- Their prayer was simple.
- Their prayer was scriptural.

III. Jesus’ compassion and power can make us whole.

John MacArthur: The Blind Who Saw

People who were nothing but an irritation and a distraction to the crowd were a cause for deep pain to Him – the pain of sympathy, empathy, and compassion. While the world wanted to silence these kind of people, Jesus wanted to hear what they had to say. While the world wanted to make sure they didn’t get in the way, Jesus wanted to be sure He stood with them. While the world wanted to be sure they didn’t interrupt anything by articulating their need, Jesus wanted not only to know their need but to meet it.

And so, at best, this wonderful little story is a demonstration of the heart of God, which is a heart of compassion. And that is to say, beloved, that God not only knows what pain we endure, He feels it. That’s right. He not only knows it, it is not just cognition, it is not God in heaven saying, “Oh, I understand. So-and-so is suffering.” It isn’t just that. It’s the feeling of that suffering; it’s the pain of that which touches His own great heart. And therefore, when God allows you to suffer, He allows Himself to suffer as well and be sure then that if, indeed, you’re suffering is not alleviated, He continues to suffer with you and must, therefore, have some great purpose in mind, for He Himself could eliminate His own suffering as well. . .

But even more common than physical blindness was spiritual blindness. And metaphorically, the Gospels and the epistles speak often of the blindness of the heart. In fact, it’s summed up in the words of John 1, which simply says, “That was the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. He was in the world. The world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not. He came unto His own, and His own received Him not."

Or in the third chapter, where it says that men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil. Or Romans 11:25, which says, "Blindness in part is happened to Israel." Or 2 Corinthians 3:14, "Their minds were blinded." Or Jesus words in Matthew 23, "Woe unto you blind guides, you blind Pharisee," He said. Blind to God. Maybe able to see physically, but blind to God.

Now, the case of these men is most interesting, because while they are physically blind, they appear to have unusually clear spiritual sight. Physically they see nothing; spiritually they see very well. And they will see even better when the Lord Jesus is finished with them. And they will also see physically. . .

And sometimes He gave physical sight to blind eyes. And I think He did that for three reasons.

- First of all, it was part of messianic proof. He was demonstrating that He was the Messiah.
- Secondly, it was part of millennial preview. He was showing them what it was going to be like in His kingdom when all of that kind of thing was turned over and there was glorious wholeness and healing in the kingdom.
- And thirdly, I think it was a matter of symbol or picture. It was a marvelous picture. Every time He healed someone of physical blindness, He was, in effect saying, "That's only a symbol of what I want to do to the soul."

I. Their Sad Plight.

II. Their Strong Persistence

III. Their Supernatural Privilege

IV. Their Submissive Pursuit

Bethany Bible Church: Lessons

One thing we should learn from these two blind men is that we should never be ashamed to admit how disparately we need Jesus.

Unbelieving people will always be inclined to mock us for being so "needy" as to cry out to Jesus for salvation. They'll condemn us for not being "self-reliant". They'll say, "You're just using Jesus as a crutch." And when they do, let's be real. Let's go ahead and freely admit that Jesus is our "crutch"—and that it's a good thing we found Him too, because we discovered that our souls are crippled by sin. There's no shame in using a crutch when you're crippled. We might even want to go further, and tell them that their soul has been crippled by sin too. It's just that they don't realize it yet. And we might also say that, when their eyes are finally opened as ours have been, and when they finally see how much their soul has been crippled by sin, that we're very happy to recommend Jesus to them as the greatest "crutch" a crippled soul can ever lean on.

Another thing we should learn from these two men is that Jesus is abundantly merciful to every one of us poor, miserable, blind, crippled souls that has ever cried out to Him.

As this story teaches us, He is never too busy for us. He stops in His tracks for us and hears our plea for mercy. He graciously asks us what it is that we want from Him—even if it is so great a thing as the restoration of our spiritual sight so that we can see the truth about our need—and even if it is so great a thing as the saving of our souls from the crippling effects of our sin. He graciously reaches out and touches us in our need. The Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and to give His life a ransom for many. We can safely cry out to Him.

And finally, we should from these two blind men to follow their example in their asking. Because of how disparately we need Jesus, and because of how ready He is to show mercy to whoever cries out to Him, let's cry out to Him with all our being—and never care what the world thinks! For Jesus mercifully gives His attention to those who sincerely cry out to Him, in their deep need, with unrelenting importunity of faith.

<https://www.bethanybible.org/archive/2008/020308.htm>

Ray Fowler: Jesus' miracles always have a spiritual meaning as well. And on the spiritual level, we demonstrate faith by recognizing our spiritual darkness and need. We cry out for mercy. We call on Jesus as Messiah and Lord. We persist in faith by persevering through the obstacles in our way. We ask Jesus to open the eyes of our heart that we may see and follow him.

That phrase "the eyes of your heart" comes from a beautiful prayer in Ephesians 1 where Paul writes: "I pray that the eyes of your heart may be enlightened in order that you may know the hope to which he has called you, the riches of his glorious inheritance in the saints, 19 and his incomparably great power for us who believe." (Ephesians 1:18-19)

When you cry out for mercy, when you ask Jesus to open the eyes of your heart, he will have compassion on you. He will touch you. He will give you the sight you need. You will be able to sing those other words John Newton wrote in the hymn Amazing Grace: "I once was lost, but now am found; was blind, but now I see."

TEXT: Matthew 21:1-11

TITLE: PUBLIC ENTRY INTO JERUSALEM AS THE MESSIAH KING

BIG IDEA:

GRAND ENTRANCE OF THE MESSIAH KING INTO JERUSALEM ACCOMPANIED BY POPULAR PRAISE BUT BLIND PERCEPTION

INTRODUCTION:

Michael Wilkins: The crescendo of Jesus' messianic ministry occurs as he enters Jerusalem, the city of the great King (Ps. 48:1–2), the center of Israel's spiritual life and messianic hope. This initiates the "Holy Week" or "Passion Week." "Passion" comes from the Latin passio ("suffering"), which originally meant the suffering of a martyr. Early Latin translations of the New Testament adopted the term passio to point to the Gospel narratives of Jesus' suffering and its attending events. The earliest message about Jesus given by the apostolic band was the Passion, as we can see from the earliest preaching accounts in Acts. If we look at percentages of the Gospels given over to the Passion Week, it comprises from 25–48 percent of their materials.

Donald Hagner: Jesus' arrival in Jerusalem is an important dividing point in the Gospel. The Galilean ministry has come to an end, and the journey to Jerusalem has been completed. Now all that remains are the events, the deeds and teaching in Jerusalem, that are preliminary to the goal and climax of the entire Gospel narrative. We now meet in chaps. 21–23 the final encounter between Jesus and Israel, consisting of a trio of parables (21:28 - 22:14), conflict stories (22:15–46), and the diatribe against the Pharisees in chap. 23. This pericope describing the actual arrival in the holy city presents a poignant mixture of truth and irony. Jesus is welcomed for what he in truth is, the Son of David, the Messiah of Israel, yet it is precisely as such that he will be rejected by the people. For the moment, however, Jesus will receive the acclaim of the people, and Matthew will record the impact of his arrival in Jerusalem. But when Jesus shows that he is a different kind of Messiah than that of the popular expectation, the people will no longer support him. Paradoxically they will send the one they now receive with such jubilation to his death on the cross. Thus the triumphal entry is a prelude to the passion.

Stu Weber: For a short time, the people would acknowledge Jesus' true identity as the sovereign Son of David, but they would fail to identify him also as the sacrificial Son of Abraham. They knew he had come to restore his kingdom, but they missed the fact that he was also here to redeem his people. They anticipated the sovereignty but overlooked the sacrifice. Jesus would not exercise the rule without the redemption.

Richard Gardner: The use of a donkey rather than a mighty war-horse says something about the character of the Messiah's reign. A ruler who comes to Israel on a donkey symbolizes a humble reign of serving the common good, not a kingdom of violence and military conquest. For Matthew, then, the scene of Jesus entering Jerusalem on a donkey both proclaims Jesus to be the Messiah and conveys a picture of the servant role which defines his messiahship.

Daniel Doriani: The time of Jesus' betrayal, arrest, trial, torment, crucifixion, and death will soon be upon him, but before his humiliation, Matthew provides Jesus' disciples with one more reminder that he is King and Lord. At that point in his ministry, his royalty and reign were veiled, just as it is today, when the lordship of Jesus is often veiled. Matthew 21 reminds us that things are not always as they seem and that symbolic acts often provide profound insight into hidden truths.

Walter Wilson: As the Messiah approaches Jerusalem, his royal status is manifested in a public way. When they reach Bethphage, Jesus sends two disciples to bring him a donkey and a colt, the implication being that their availability is a matter of divine provision. Matthew further shows his readers how Jesus's use of the animals took place in fulfillment of a biblical prophecy, one that praises the humility of the coming king. The crowds accompanying Jesus, meanwhile, praise him as the Son of David and the one who comes in the name of the Lord, that is, the one sent by God's very self (cf. 11:3). Everything that transpires, then, follows a divine plan. The impact of the Messiah's actual entrance into Jerusalem is heightened by the scene of the entire city being shaken as though by an earthquake (cf. 27:51; 28:4). To queries from the city's populace about the identity of the one whose appearance is creating such tumult, the crowd of pilgrims acclaims him as a prophet from Nazareth. Ironically, the citizens of Israel's capital do not know that they are about to meet their king. . .

Jesus is not a military conqueror or a distinguished visitor. His actions culminate not in legitimization but in confrontation (21:12–16). For their part, the readers know that Jesus is in fact the king (21:5), and that in failing to receive him properly, the city's leadership is in fact dishonoring their king, a deed bound to have dire consequences. This triumph, then, is ultimately an act of judgment.

Warren Wiersbe: But the Jews still did not recognize Jesus as their King. What caused Israel's spiritual blindness? For one thing, their religious leaders had robbed them of the truth of their own Word and had substituted man-made traditions (Luke 11:52). The leaders were not interested in truth; they were concerned only with protecting their own interests (John 11:47-53). "We have no king but Caesar!" was their confession of willful blindness. Even our Lord's miracles did not convince them. And the longer they resisted the truth, the blinder they became (John 12:35ff.).

(:1a) GEOGRAPHICAL TRANSITION

"And when they had approached Jerusalem and had come to Bethphage, to the Mount of Olives,"

Stu Weber: The name Bethphage means "House of Unripe Figs." This was a village on the southeast slope of the Mount of Olives, east of Jerusalem. The mountain was several hundred feet higher than Jerusalem, providing a spectacular view of the city.

William Barclay: It was the Passover time, and Jerusalem and the whole surrounding neighbourhood were crowded with pilgrims. Thirty years later, a Roman governor was to take a census of the lambs slain in Jerusalem for the Passover and find that the number was not far off 250,000. It was the Passover regulation that there must be a party of a minimum of ten for each lamb, which means that at that Passover time more than 2,500,000 people had crowded their way into Jerusalem. The law was that every adult male Jew who lived within fifteen miles of Jerusalem must come to the Passover; but not only the Jews of Palestine, Jews from every corner of the world made their way to the greatest of their national festivals. Jesus could not have chosen a more dramatic moment; it was into a city surging with people keyed up with religious expectations that he came.

Donald Hagner: [Bethphage] was apparently on τὸ ὄρος τῶν ἐλαιῶν, “the Mount of Olives,” just overlooking Jerusalem and close to Bethany, with which it is linked in Mark 11:1; Luke 19:28. The village to which the two disciples were sent (v. 2) was probably this Bethany. Zech 14:4 (a passage with messianic associations) speaks of Yahweh standing on the Mount of Olives in the time of eschatological fulfillment, and perhaps for this reason it is from the Mount of Olives that Jesus ascends to heaven and to that site that he will return when the eschaton is fully and finally to dawn (cf. Luke 24:50–51; Acts 1:11–12; Jos., Ant. 20.8.6 §169; J.W. 2.13.5 §§261–62).

I. (:1b-5) PREPARATION FOR PUBLIC ENTRY INTO JERUSALEM AS THE MESSIAH

A. (:1b-3) Donkey Retrieval Showing Divine Control

1. (:1b-2) Instructions Based on Divine Control

“then Jesus sent two disciples, 2 saying to them, ‘Go into the village opposite you, and immediately you will find a donkey tied there and a colt with her; untie them, and bring them to Me.’”

Charles Swindoll: The fact is, though two beasts of burden were present at the Triumphal Entry, Jesus didn’t ride on both animals at once. In no case would that be a believable scenario. Jesus rode on the younger donkey, upon which no one had ever ridden. Mark, Luke, and John focus full attention on the single animal, the colt, upon which Jesus rode. They saw no need to mention the other beast of burden that would have been carrying only excess baggage and clothing. . .

The geography of this event is important. Because of the journey through peaks and valleys from Bethany to Jerusalem, thousands of pilgrims on the road would have been able to see from a distance the man riding on a young donkey. The presence of the colt’s mother beside him would have been a clue that the rider was making some kind of statement. I’m sure that with that many devoted Jews seeing the scene from either above or below, several in the crowd would have made the connection with the messianic prophecy of Zechariah 9:9.

Donald Hagner: the two animals, which were kept so closely together, are conceptually regarded as a single, inseparable unit (which is probably also how Matthew understood the Zechariah quotation with its literally understood coming “upon” two animals; see Frenz), despite the plural language, which, as argued above, is kept by Matthew for the detailed coincidence with the OT quotation. Thus when Jesus sat upon “them,” we are probably to understand simply that Jesus sat upon the colt with the ass just beside it.

David Turner: Jesus’s supernatural knowledge and control of this situation are remarkable in light of Matthew’s emphasis on his humility. To stress the entry as an acted parable (Hill 1972: 290) of Jesus’s humility, Matthew cites Zech. 9:9, conflated with introductory words from Isa. 62:11 (cf. John 12:14–15). The term “daughter of Zion” is a common biblical expression that refers to Jerusalem and its inhabitants (cf., e.g., 2 Kings 19:21; Ps. 9:14; Isa. 1:8; 16:1; 37:22; Jer. 4:31; 6:2; Lam. 1:6; Mic. 4:8, 10, 13; Zeph. 3:14; Zech. 2:10). Zechariah 9:9 mentions that the coming king will be just, bring salvation, and be humble, but Matthew selects only the last characteristic, humility (cf. Matt. 5:5, 9; 11:29). Humility is commonly mentioned as a characteristic of biblical kings: Saul (1 Sam. 9:21), David (2 Sam. 7:18–19), Ahab (1 Kings 21:29), and Josiah (2 Kings 22:18–20).

2. (:3) Insistence Based on Divine Control

“And if anyone says something to you, you shall say, ‘The Lord has need of them,’ and immediately he will send them.”

Craig Blomberg: As again later with their preparation for the Passover (26:18), it is not clear whether the disciples' rendezvous stems from Jesus' prior arrangements or from his supernatural insight. “The Lord” is, more literally, their Lord/Master and also suggests a double entendre. The disciples will act as if they are servants of the donkey's owner. If anyone becomes suspicious of their behavior, their reply need mean nothing more than that the owner has asked them to bring him the animals. But Matthew undoubtedly sees Jesus as the true Master, not only of the donkeys but of all people's property, which he can rightfully demand at any time.

B. (:4-5) Prophetic Fulfilment Showing Humility of Mission

“Now this took place that what was spoken through the prophet might be fulfilled, saying, 5 Say to the daughter of Zion, ‘Behold your King is coming to you, Gentle, and mounted on a donkey, Even on a colt, the foal of a beast of burden.’”

Daniel Doriani: The prophecy has three elements.

1. First, Jerusalem must rejoice, for her king is coming.
2. Second, the king comes gently, in peace. He does not come to make war, but to remove the instruments of war—chariots, war horses, and battle bows.
3. Third, the king brings salvation, for his reign will extend from sea to sea.

R. T. France: Matthew (like John) explains Jesus' ride on the donkey as the fulfillment of Zech 9:9. Even without an explicit quotation of that prophecy in the text, any Jewish reader of the story could hardly fail to be reminded of it and of the royal ideology which underlies it. Zechariah's prophecy of a humble and peaceful king coming to Jerusalem “vindicated and saved” is based on the story of David's return to the city after the defeat of Absalom's rebellion, when he came in triumph as king, and yet humbly and in peace (2 Sam 19–20). When the Son of David chose to ride down to the city from the Mount of Olives on a donkey, the acted allusion was unmistakable. A further messianic nuance is added by the “foal” and “donkey's colt” which feature in the royal oracle of Gen 49:10–11, and observers might also have remembered how Solomon, the son of David, rode on a mule to his enthronement in 1 Kgs 1:38–40. We shall note below (see on vv. 2–3) that Jesus' donkey-ride was a matter of deliberate choice, and indeed probably of careful planning, rather than a matter of necessity. Among a crowd of pilgrims on foot the rider on the donkey intended to be noticed and expected his supporters to draw the appropriate conclusion. He cannot have been surprised or displeased when they did. Such a deliberately provocative approach to the city is consistent also with the equally public and provocative action which Jesus was to take on his arrival in the temple area (vv. 12–13). Among the Passover crowds coming into the city it would have been possible for Jesus and his disciples to arrive without drawing attention to themselves, but Jesus has not come to slip quietly into Jerusalem. . .

But in deliberately presenting himself before Jerusalem as its messianic king, Jesus has chosen an OT model which subverts any popular militaristic idea of kingship. The meek, peaceful donkey-rider of Zech 9:9 is not a potential leader of an anti-Roman insurrection. In 20:25–28

Jesus has spoken of a type of leadership which is completely opposed to the world's notions of kingship and authority, and now he models it in the "meekness" of his royal procession to the city.

II. (:6-9) PRAISE ACCOMPANYING PUBLIC ENTRY INTO JERUSALEM AS THE MESSIAH

A. (:6-7) Donkey Saddling

1. (:6) Following Instructions

"And the disciples went and did just as Jesus had directed them,"

2. (:7) Functioning Saddle

"and brought the donkey and the colt, and laid on them their garments, on which He sat."

B. (:8-9) Celebratory Procession of Praise

1. (:8) Paving the Way

"And most of the multitude spread their garments in the road, and others were cutting branches from the trees, and spreading them in the road."

Donald Hagner: Although the king rides into the city humbly upon the lowly colt of an ass, the crowds bring him into the city with a public demonstration befitting a king.

Craig Blomberg: The whole picture conveys celebration and honor, reminiscent of the victory parades with which triumphant kings and generals in Old Testament and intertestamental times were welcomed (cf. 2 Kgs 9:13; 1 Macc 13:51). The strewing of garments and branches further demonstrates how the crowds have the wrong messianic concept. There will be no victory party when they arrive in Jerusalem.

2. (:9) Praising the Messianic King

"And the multitudes going before Him, and those who followed after were crying out, saying, 'Hosanna to the Son of David; Blessed is He who comes in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest!'"

William Barclay: It may be that the word hosanna had lost some of its original meaning, and that it had become to some extent only a cry of welcome and of acclamation, like 'Hail!'; but essentially it is a people's cry for deliverance and for help in the day of their trouble; it is an oppressed people's cry to their saviour and their king.

R. T. France: "Hosanna" and "Blessed is he who comes in the Lord's name" both derive from Psalm 118 (vv. 25 and 26 respectively), which was the last and longest of the Hallel psalms (113–118) traditionally chanted at the major festivals in Jerusalem. The latter part of Ps 118 apparently describes a joyful pilgrimage (with green branches, v. 27) into the temple, led by the king (the "one who comes in the Lord's name"), and it is from those verses that the crowd's shouts are drawn. "Hosanna" is a Greek representation of the Hebrew hôšî' â-nâ', "Save us now", which opens the plea for God's blessing in v. 25; the phrase seems to have passed into more general use as a shout of praise, like Hallelujah, and that is how it is used here, where the following dative "to the Son of David" makes it clear that it is an ascription of praise rather than a prayer. The same sense is required in the second Hosanna clause by the addition of "in the highest,” a reverent way of speaking of God in heaven (cf. Luke 2:14). The fact that the same praise formula is applied to the Son of David and to God is interesting in the light of later christological developments, but that is probably to read too much into the instinctive exuberance of this pilgrim crowd. In the psalm “the one who comes in the Lord’s name” was probably the king, leading the festival procession, and as such the acclamation fits well with Jesus’ regal approach to the city. But in the light of the title “Son of David” it seems clear that for the crowd Jesus was not just any king, but the expected Messiah whose “coming” the prophets had foretold.

Leon Morris: Matthew goes on to the acclamations that were a feature of the excitement. He speaks of two crowds, one ahead of Jesus and one behind. The one will doubtless be pilgrims going up to Jerusalem for the Passover (whose enthusiasm was perhaps generated because they had heard his teaching and seen his miracles in Galilee), and the other is probably mainly local, those who lived in the capital city and its environs (and who had been there when Jesus raised Lazarus from the dead or had heard of it). Characteristically Matthew has the plural form crowds for both. His verb were shouting is in the imperfect tense, which indicates that the shouting kept on for quite some time. The picture we get is one of great excitement. Evidently there were many Galileans who had thought of Jesus as the Messiah and were disappointed that in his own area he made no public declaration of who he was and of his determination to establish a kingdom that would throw the mighty Romans out of the land. But they had heard his teaching and they had seen him do miracles. As a result they had hoped that he would proclaim himself King, and they were prepared to follow him if he did. Now they thought he was going to fulfil their hopes, and they were ecstatic at the prospect. . .

To come “in the name” of anyone was to come in some sense representing him and to come in order to set forward his purposes. The crowds proclaim Jesus as God’s representative, one who would set forward the divine purpose. Luke and John both include “the king” in this part of the crowd’s cry, and although Matthew does not use the expression, it is implied. It was because they foresaw a Galilean King that the crowd of pilgrims got so excited. They cried “Hosanna” once again, and this time added “in the highest.” It is an enthusiastic cry and probably means that Jesus is to be praised everywhere, right up to heaven itself.

Daniel Doriani: “Hosanna” was often a nationalistic cry, rather like “God save the king” in England or “God bless America” in the United States.

III. (:10-11) PUBLIC PERCEPTION OF JESUS INADEQUATE

A. (:10) Curiosity Regarding Jesus’ Identity

“And when He had entered Jerusalem, all the city was stirred, saying, ‘Who is this?’”

R. T. France: The entry follows the royal acclamation, in which the people of Jerusalem are not yet involved. What happens in vv. 8–9 is outside the city walls, and the people who hail Jesus as the Son of David are specifically described as Jesus’ traveling companions, “the crowds, both those who were going ahead of him and those who were following him.” (v. 9) It is only in v. 10 that we are introduced to the people of the city, and their reaction is specifically contrasted in vv. 10–11 with that of the enthusiastic, mainly Galilean (see on 20:29) crowd. All this can be discerned by the careful reader of Mark 11:1–11, but Matthew, by his addition of vv. 10–11, has more clearly drawn the reader’s attention to the opposing views of the Galilean pilgrims and of the people of Jerusalem. It is surprising how many readers, unaware of the “tribal” distinction between Galilee and Judea, have failed to notice this element of the story, and so continue to talk and preach about the fickleness of a crowd which could shout “Hosanna” one day and “Crucify him” a few days later. That is an unfortunate misreading both of the texts and of the historical situation: the Jerusalem crowd of 27:15–25 were not the same people as the pilgrims who had escorted Jesus into the city.

B. (:11) Characterization as a Galilean Prophet

“And the multitudes were saying, ‘This is the prophet Jesus, from Nazareth in Galilee.’”

Richard Gardner: Finally, in a piece of narration found only in Matthew (vv. 10-11), Jerusalem itself responds to Jesus’ festive entry. With the same verb he uses elsewhere to describe a storm or earthquake (cf. 8:24; 24:7; 27:51-54; 28:2-4), Matthew tells us that the whole city was thrown into an uproar (GNB). The description recalls the scene in 2:3 when all Jerusalem was troubled by the news of Jesus’ birth! So it is that the residents of the city ask: Who is this? The somewhat subdued answer identifies Jesus in terms of his Galilean roots (cf. 2:23; 4:12-16) and the prophetic role in which he will soon confront the city. It is an ominous answer, we will learn shortly, because Jerusalem has a reputation of killing God’s prophets (23:37). To call Jesus a prophet, therefore, is to signal in advance the fate that awaits him.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Is “The Triumphal Entry” the best title for this incident?
- 2) How did Jesus demonstrate that He was in control of all the events leading up to His crucifixion and resurrection?
- 3) If Jesus fulfilled prophecy relating to His first coming and death and resurrection in such detail, what should we expect with respect to prophecies regarding His second coming?
- 4) What different types of responses to Jesus do we see in this passage?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

R. T. France: Here, for the first time in the Synoptic accounts¹ (except for a childhood visit in Luke 2:41–52), Jesus and his disciples come to the Jewish capital, the site of the temple which was the earthly focus of the religion of Israel. The visit will be brief. All the narrative of 21:1 to 28:15 appears to cover a period of only about one week, focused on the Passover festival which takes place as its climax and in the context of which Jesus will be executed. During this week the events which Jesus has so starkly predicted in 16:21; 17:22–23 and 20:17–19 will at last take place, and the fulfillment of those predictions will be carefully documented in these chapters. The shadow of those events has fallen across the whole of the journey narrative in chapters 16–20, and now with the arrival of Jesus and his Galilean followers outside the city walls we see the beginning of the decisive confrontation with the Judean authorities for which we have been well prepared. . .

The Confrontation Begins: Three Symbolic Actions (21:1–27)

Jesus' arrival in Jerusalem is deliberately dramatic. It begins with two actions designed to draw attention and to provoke people to think about Jesus' messianic claim (the royal procession to the city walls and the attack on the traders in the temple courtyard), together with a further symbolic action (the miraculous destruction of the fruitless fig-tree) which, though witnessed only by Jesus' immediate entourage, seems to be closely connected with his prophetic action in the temple. In the first of these actions Jesus is supported and acclaimed by the pilgrim crowd who accompany him to Jerusalem, but in the second he apparently acts alone. In both cases, however, Matthew tells us of the hostile reaction of Jerusalem, in the first case in the response of "the whole city" (v. 10) and in the second as focused in the leading group of "chief priests and scribes" (v. 15). Jesus has publicly thrown down the gauntlet, and so this section concludes with the response of the "chief priests and elders of the people," representing the Sanhedrin, who publicly question Jesus' right to act in this high-handed way. That this challenge takes place in the temple courtyard where Jesus' most provocative action has been staged sets the scene for the continuing confrontation which will all be set in the same temple area until Jesus finally and decisively leaves the temple in 24:1.

Three aspects of the historical situation are important for understanding the significance of these and the following incidents in Jerusalem.

(1) The "temple." I have spoken of "the temple courtyard" (where Matthew speaks simply of "the temple") to make it clear that the location for these scenes is not the temple building itself, the place of sacrifice (into which only priests were allowed to go) but the much more extensive area surrounding the temple building, which we refer to as the Court of the Gentiles. The majority of the huge temple complex (about 13.5 hectares, 33 acres, roughly six times the size of Trafalgar Square) consisted of this open space, nearly a mile in circumference, surrounding the temple building and its inner courtyards and itself surrounded by porticoes, into which anyone could go so long as they did not pass the barriers which restricted the central area to Jews. It formed the natural meeting place for visitors and locals alike, especially at festival seasons, and the porticoes provided shaded areas for groups to gather and for teachers to collect a crowd, and in the days before the Passover also for the flourishing market in sacrificial animals and sacred money (see below). When Jesus "taught in the temple" he may well have been one of several such teachers, but he was in the place where people in general could best be reached.

(2) Passover. Of the three pilgrimage festivals when all adult male Jews were in theory expected to visit the temple in Jerusalem (Passover, Weeks [Pentecost] and Tabernacles; Deut 16:16) Passover seems to have been the most enthusiastically observed. Passover pilgrims came not only from Galilee and other Palestinian provinces, but from all over the Mediterranean world where Jews were settled. The nearest modern equivalent is perhaps the Hajj to Mecca. Ancient and modern estimates of the numbers involved vary wildly, but the calculation of J. Jeremias⁷ perhaps offers a reasonable approximation: he estimates the normal population of Jerusalem at the time as about 30,000, but the number present at Passover as something like 180,000. There were therefore many times more people than the city could properly accommodate, and Passover groups camped all around the city (see on 21:17). The official city limits were extended at Passover time to include the surrounding hill-sides, Bethphage (v. 1) being the outer limit according to the Talmud. The temple courtyard would be the natural gathering ground for this huge throng of people during the festival.

(3) Galileans. A Galilean was essentially a foreigner in Jerusalem, and Jesus' entourage, being made up of Galileans, would normally stand out as distinctive among the Jerusalem crowd. At Passover time the cosmopolitan crowd would make this less obvious, and of course there would be many other Galileans present. We have already noted (see on 20:29) that the "large crowd" which accompanied Jesus to the city were probably mainly Galileans, and no doubt others were already there or arrived during the week. We shall note below in vv. 10–11 the impact of this Galilean influx on the city. But Jesus' recorded dealings are not with the larger Passover crowd but with the Jerusalem authorities, and to them the challenge of the prophet from Nazareth and his Galilean movement (v. 11) represented an unwelcome threat. The comment on Peter's Galilean accent in 26:73 reveals something of the cultural background to this confrontation.

Matthew Henry: In the borrowing of this donkey,

(1) We have an instance of Christ's knowledge. Christ could tell his disciples where they should find a donkey tied, and a colt with her.

(2) We have an instance of his power over the spirits of men. Christ asserts his right to use the donkey, in bidding them bring it to him; but he foresees some hindrance which the disciples might meet with in this service; "If anyone says anything to you, tell him that the Lord needs them." What Christ sets us to do, he will bear us out in the doing of; "He will send them right away."

(3) We have an example of justice and honesty, in not using the donkey without the owner's consent.

William Barclay: We may then take it that Jesus' actions in this incident were planned and deliberate. He was following a method of awakening people's minds which was deeply interwoven with the methods of the prophets. Again and again in the religious history of Israel, when the prophets felt that words were of no avail against a barrier of indifference or incomprehension, they put their message into a dramatic act which the people could not fail to see and to understand.

There are two pictures behind Jesus' dramatic action.

(1) There is the picture of Zechariah 9:9, in which the prophet saw the king coming to Jerusalem, humble and riding upon a donkey, on a colt the foal of a donkey. In the first instance, Jesus' dramatic action is a deliberate messianic claim. He was here offering himself to the people, at a time when Jerusalem was surging with Jews from all over the country and from all over the world, as the Anointed One of God. Just what Jesus meant by that claim we shall go on to see; but that he made the claim there is no doubt.

(2) There may have been another intention in Jesus' mind. One of the supreme disasters of Jewish history was the capture of Jerusalem by Antiochus Epiphanes about 175 BC. Antiochus was determined to stamp out Judaism and to introduce into Palestine Greek ways of life and worship. He deliberately profaned the Temple, offering pig's flesh on the altar, making sacrifices to Olympian Zeus, and even turning the Temple chambers into public brothels. It was then that the Maccabees rose against him and ultimately rescued their native land. In due time, Jerusalem was retaken and the desecrated Temple was restored and purified and rededicated. In 2 Maccabees 10:7, we read of the rejoicing of that great day: 'Therefore, carrying ivy-wreathed wands and beautiful branches and also fronds of palm, they offered hymns of thanksgiving to him who had given success to the purifying of his own holy place.' On that day, the people carried the palm branches and sang their psalms; it is an almost exact description of the actions of the crowd who welcomed Jesus into Jerusalem.

It is at least possible that Jesus knew this, and that he entered into Jerusalem with the deliberate intention of cleansing God's house as Judas Maccabaeus had done 200 years before. That was in fact what Jesus did. He may well be saying in dramatic symbol not only that he was the Anointed One of God, but also that he had come to cleanse the House of God from the abuses which defiled it and its worship. Had not Malachi said that the Lord would suddenly come to his Temple (Malachi 3:1)? And, in his vision of judgment, had not Ezekiel seen the terrible judgment of God begin at the sanctuary (Ezekiel 9:6)?

To conclude our study of this incident, let us look at Jesus in its setting. It shows us three things about him.

(1) It shows us his courage. Jesus knew full well that he was entering a hostile city. However enthusiastic the crowd might be, the authorities hated him and had sworn to eliminate him; and with them lay the last word. Almost any other man in such a case would have considered discretion the better part of valour; and, if he had come to Jerusalem at all, would have slipped in under cover of night and kept prudently to the back streets until he reached his shelter. But Jesus entered Jerusalem in a way that deliberately set himself in the centre of the stage and deliberately riveted every eye upon himself. All through his last days, there is in his every action a kind of magnificent and sublime defiance; and here he begins the last act with a flinging down of the gauntlet, a deliberate challenge to the authorities to do their worst.

(2) It shows us his claim. Certainly it shows us his claim to be God's Messiah, God's Anointed One; very probably it shows us his claim to be the cleanser of the Temple. If Jesus had been content to claim to be a prophet, the probability is that he need never have died. But he could be satisfied with nothing less than the highest place. With Jesus, it is all or nothing. People must acknowledge him as king, or not receive him at all.

(3) Equally, it shows us his appeal. It was not the kingship of the throne which he claimed; it was the kingship of the heart. He came humbly and riding upon a donkey. We must be careful to see the real meaning of that. In western lands, the donkey is a despised animal; but in the middle east the donkey could be a noble animal. Often a king came riding upon a donkey; but when he did, it was the sign that he came in peace. The horse was the mount of war; the donkey was the mount of peace. So when Jesus claimed to be king, he claimed to be the king of peace. He showed that he came not to destroy but to love; not to condemn but to help; not in the might of arms but in the strength of love.

So here, at one and the same time, we see the courage of Christ, the claim of Christ and the appeal of Christ. It was a last invitation to men and women to open not their palaces but their hearts to him.

Donald Hagner: Jesus enters Jerusalem humbly, seated upon a lowly beast of burden, while being acclaimed the messianic king of the line of David and accepting this acclaim. The arrangements for the entry are made under divine superintendence and in fulfillment of prophecy. Yet in spite of this the crowds hardly understood the significance of this humble entry of Jesus into the capital. Their thoughts concerning the messianic king, the Son of David, were dominated by ideas of power, glory, the overthrow of the Roman authorities, and the establishment of a national-political kingdom. It was precisely for this reason that earlier Jesus tried to keep his messianic identity a secret (which was now no longer necessary). If the crowds' identification of Jesus as the Davidic king was correct, they missed the paradoxical character of that kingship. The irony was that the king, who really was the promised Messiah, came to Jerusalem not as a warrior upon a stallion but humbly as a servant—indeed, as the servant who had come to die. The goal was a more fundamental salvation and a kingdom that was universal in scope, one that far transcended the limited horizon of the crowds.

Grant Osborne: Wilkins provides an excellent harmony of the events that take place during this week:

Friday	Arrival in Bethany (John 12:1)
Saturday	Mary's anointing of Jesus (John 12:2–8; cf. Matt 26:6–13 par.)
Sunday	Triumphal entry (Matt 21:1–11 par.), surveying the temple (Mark 11:11), return to Bethany (Matt 21:17; Mark 11:11)
Monday	Cleansing the temple (21:12–13 par.); cursing the fig tree (21:18–22); miracles and challenge in the temple (21:14–16); return to Bethany (Mark 11:19)
Tuesday	Disciples' questions regarding the fig tree (Mark 11:20–21); debates with the leaders in the temple (Matt 21:23–22:46 par.); Olivet Discourse after return to Bethany (Matt 24–25)
Wednesday	Little recorded in the gospels—Jesus and disciples apparently remain in Bethany; Judas arranges for his betrayal (26:14–16 par.)
Thursday	Preparation for Passover (26:17–19 par.); after sundown, Passover meal and Last Supper (26:20–35); Farewell Discourse (John 13–17); Gethsemane (Matt 26:30–46 par.)
Friday	After midnight, the betrayal and arrest (26:47–56); Jewish trials—Annas (John 18:13–14), Caiaphas and partial Sanhedrin (Matt 26:57–75 par.), full Sanhedrin (27:1–2); Roman trial—Pilate (27:2–14 par.), Herod Antipas (Luke 23:6–12), Pilate (Matt 27:15–26 par.); crucifixion (9 a.m. to 3 p.m., 27:27–56); burial (27:57–61 par.); tomb sealed with guards (27:62–66)

Stanley Saunders: His entry into Jerusalem is a “prophetic-symbolic” action, a form of “street theater,” in which he will use the generic signals associated with the “parousias” of emperors and military conquerors in conjunction with signs that point to the character of his rule. By twisting the political rituals associated with Roman and Jewish elite power to his own ends, he puts the powers into his parody parade. Jesus’ “triumphal entry” signals the triumph of God’s identification with the weak, the lowly, and the marginal—those who will come to him for healing and to praise him in the temple in the next episode (21:14–16). Jesus’ actions implicitly make the source and character of his power the central issue (cf. 21:23). On the world’s terms, this scene is not really triumphal at all, but an affirmation of the kind of power Jesus has displayed all during his ministry in Galilee, and simultaneously a mockery of what ordinarily passes for power among the Jerusalem elite. The “triumphal entry” tears the facade from the scaffolding that holds the Jerusalem “establishment” together.

Throughout this story Matthew carefully foreshadows events, images, and themes that will be developed in the subsequent narrative (e.g., Mount of Olives, Matt. 24:3; 26:30; Jesus as king, 27:11, 29, 37, 42; Son of David, 21:15; 22:42–44; prophet, 21:46; 26:68; Jerusalem shaken, 27:51, 54). The evangelist also continues to exhibit a penchant for “twos”: two citations of Scripture around which the passage is structured (21:5 = Isaiah 62:11 and Zechariah 9:9; 21:9 = Psalm 118:25–26); two disciples who go to secure the animals for Jesus’ entry; and not one, but two animals upon which Jesus rides. Both of the citations focus on God’s victory over the nations on Israel’s behalf, and establish a clear messianic frame for Jesus’ entrance. The reference to Psalm 118, which will be featured again later in the chapter (21:42), suggests the fate that awaits him at the hands of Israel’s leaders and Rome’s imperial order, but also affirms God’s steadfast love and vindication of the psalmist before his enemies. The acclamation of Jesus as Son of David according to this psalm is one of many ironic references in this story.

John MacArthur: The Humble Coronation of Christ

I. THE END OF THE PILGRIMAGE

Now this is a very important event in these eleven verses because it initiates the last week of the life of our Lord prior to His crucifixion. It is the last drama. It is His last public act prior to being crucified, the last event of His ministry. And it has to be treated with a great amount of respect, and it has to be understood for what it really is or you won’t understand what comes after it. I really feel that the earthly coronation of Jesus Christ, sometimes called the triumphal entry, gets bypassed far too much. It is a very significant event. And you’ll see that significance unfold as we examine it together.

He wanted to demonstrate to the world that He was no victim, that He was not caught up in some euphoric Messianic movement, but that it was all under His total control, and it was all within His own power. Every detail was worked out accurately. And He wanted to create a mass demonstration. That’s right. He wanted the people to cry “Hosanna to the Son of David. Blessed is the One who comes in the name of the Lord. Hosanna in the highest.” He wanted them to cry out that He was the Messiah, because He wanted it in their very mouths that He had indeed proved Himself to be who He was. He wanted them to bespeak the fact that there was no doubt about the credentials of Jesus Christ. He wanted that whole mob, that whole national multitude to be crying out that this was the Messiah, so that forever and always it could never be said they really didn’t have enough information. They knew what He had taught and they knew what He had done. And the climax of it all was the resurrection of Lazarus whom they had known to be dead for four days. And out of their own mouths came their own affirmation that became for them either the statement of their true belief or the statement of their damnation, because they knew who He was. And He set the scene to put it in their own mouths, and they said it. The credentials were overwhelming. The proof was unanswerable.

And there is another reason that He created this mass demonstration, and that is because it would lead to the anger of the Pharisees, which ultimately would lead them to desire His life, which would ultimately lead to His crucifixion. And He had to set that in motion, too, because it was important not only that He be selected as the Lamb to die, but that He die on the Passover day. And He had to set that all in motion. I don't know if you know this, but the day He rode in there, on Monday, was the day traditionally that the Jews selected their lamb for sacrifice. And He offered Himself on that day as the Lamb for the whole world. And He had set it in motion so that by Friday the Passover day, He would die. And so Jesus took charge of all the events, creating the situation as He wanted to create it. He also did what He did here, sending the disciples to get these two animals, in order to fulfill prophecy, as it says in verse 4. "It was all done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet." He was in control of everything. He was on a divine schedule. And so He initiated His own coronation. And so we begin then with the end of the pilgrimage. And we see Him as He arrives at Jerusalem. . .

II. THE EXACTNESS OF PROPHECY

He's not a king like Alexander the Great. Not at all. He's not a foreign tyrant; He's Israel's own king. He's not cruel and oppressive; He's righteous and bringing salvation, says Zechariah 9:9. Literally the text says, "Showing Himself a Savior." He's not slaying; He's saving. He's not rich; He's poor. He's not proud; He's meek. He's not riding a great steed; He's riding a donkey's colt. You say, what's the point? The point is, He's a king unlike any other king, and He has a coronation unlike any other coronation. It's a strange coming by kingly standards. But He's declaring who He is in a very important way.

III. THE EPITOME OF PRAISE (:8-9)

And the palm branches they threw down, palm branches – indicated in John 12 to be palm branches. Here it doesn't say what they were – were signs of salvation, symbols of joy. You can read about it in Revelation 7:9. They're waved at a time of great joy, a time of celebrating salvation. And so they're celebrating salvation. There's a joy. There's an excitement, an ecstasy as He comes in. They knew who He was. They knew what He taught. And they knew what He'd done. And they knew He could raise the dead. And so this multitude moves out, throws everything at His feet. And they cry out – look what they cry, "Hosanna to the Son of David." Hosanna means save now – save now – save now. They're crying for salvation. Now listen to me. But it is not soul salvation. It is military deliverance they're after.

IV. THE ELEMENT OF PERPLEXITY (:10-11)

So, that's how it is with Jesus. He offers Himself as a King and there are a few who understand – a few. And they embrace Him as the King that He is, the King of peace who brings salvation and makes men right with God. And then there is a group of people who understand who He is, and they see all of His credentials, but they're looking for external stuff. They want the materialistic kingdom: health, wealth, happiness, here now, give it to me fast. And they're not willing to face the reality of their sinfulness and emptiness and estrangement from God, and so they curse Him when He confronts that. And then there is the rabble crowd that just get caught up in the sweep and can go either way. How is it with you?

J. Ligon Duncan: The Triumphal Entry

I. We must live in the light of Jesus' kingly knowledge.

Now the triumphal entry of Jesus, and that's what this passage records, is done by Jesus for some very specific purposes. He has, in His design, at least four things that He wants to do by entering into Jerusalem in this way and I'd like to rehearse those things with you very briefly.

First of all, by entering into Jerusalem this way, Jesus is evoking a display of enthusiasm on the part of the crowds for Him. And He knew that the enthusiasm of the crowds was going to provoke the religious leaders.

Now secondly, and connected to that, Jesus by entering into Jerusalem this way, is provoking a crisis response on the part of the Sanhedrin.

Thirdly, Jesus by going into Jerusalem this way, fulfilled messianic prophecy recorded about him in Zechariah chapter 9 verse 9. Jesus does not attempt to restrain the crowd from saying to him "Hosanna to the son of David, blessed is the one who comes in the name of the Lord." He doesn't attempt to stop them from quoting messianic psalms, like Psalm 118 as they cry out to him. He had always done that before but now His time has arrived. And what is He doing? In this time when all of Israel is gathered in Jerusalem, He wants everyone to see very clearly who He claims to be and what He has come to do. And so by entering into Jerusalem this way, and drawing attention to His person in the work, He is actually advertising who He is and what He has come to do.

And finally, Jesus as He enters in this way to Jerusalem, is once again showing us that what Israel expected their Messiah to be like was not going to be what they got when He came. Once again, as Israel expects a great conquering military leader to come into Jerusalem with his mass armies to expunge those filthy Gentile Romans from the land to set up a rule of righteousness; to cast out those who are oppressive and wicked and corrupt in government to set up a rule of justice for all the people from the least to the greatest; to expand the boundaries of Israel to the former bounds of the Solomonic empire; to rule once again and set up a nation and a kingdom that would never fail; as they were expecting that, they get the Messiah riding into the town on a donkey. Once again, Jesus is teaching us that He is a King indeed, but He is not going to fit the expectations of the people of Israel. And so for all those reasons, Jesus enters into Jerusalem in this way.

II. Scripture proves His claims and reveals His person and work.

There's a second thing I'd like for you to see in this passage in verses 4 and 5. Not only do we have that kingly command and prediction of the first three verses, but we have this fulfillment of the Scriptures in this action of taking the foal and Christ riding on that foal into Jerusalem. We see a fulfillment of the Scriptures and we note again that Scripture proves Jesus' claims and reveals His person and work. Let me say that again a little bit differently. Scripture not only proves Jesus' claims, it also reveals His person and work so that when we attend Scripture, our idea of the Savior is changed so that we understand Him like He wants to be understood. We all have our preconceptions of Jesus. But Jesus wants to define Himself to us and even as we see Him fulfill Scripture, He is defining Himself to us.

III. Jesus' coming demands a response.

David Thompson: This passage of Scripture is commonly referred to as "Christ's Triumphal Entry Into Jerusalem." However, when we examine what is actually here, it would be better termed "Christ's Tragic Entry Into Jerusalem." This event is so crucial to the life of Jesus Christ that it is described by all Gospel writers (Matt. 21:1-11; Mark 11:1-11; Luke 19:28-42, John 12:12-14).

EVEN THOUGH JESUS WAS PUBLICALLY HONORED AS HE ENTERED JERUSALEM, THE RESPONSE OF MOST OF THE PEOPLE WAS TRAGICALLY EMOTIONAL AND NOT TRULY SPIRITUAL.

This should have been the greatest day in the history of Israel. The Davidic King, the Messiah was entering God's capital city, Jerusalem. But as we shall see, Christ's entrance stirs the emotions but it doesn't change the hearts.

TEXT: Matthew 21:12-17

TITLE: CLEANSING TEMPLE CORRUPTION

BIG IDEA:

THE MESSIAH KING ASSERTS HIS AUTHORITY OVER THE TEMPLE IN ANTICIPATION OF IMPENDING JUDGMENT

INTRODUCTION:

Daniel Doriani: We call this episode “the cleansing of the temple” but that phrase understates the significance of Jesus’ action. By taking such decisive action, Jesus is asserting his authority over the center of Israel’s religion and identity. Like the prophets of old, he protests against abuses in the temple. As Israel’s great high priest, he oversees the proper use of the temple, its worship and its sacrifices. As king, he exercises authority by governing the central symbol of Israel’s faith, the centerpiece of Israel’s identity as God’s people.

When Jesus cast out the money changers, he judged the priests and leaders who allowed such corruption of the temple. In fact, Mark says that at least for a while Jesus shut the temple down: he “would not allow anyone to carry anything through the temple courts” (11:16). If animals and people cannot go in or out, the temple is closed, at least temporarily.

Grant Osborne: The authority of Jesus Messiah, recognized at the entry into Jerusalem, is now demonstrated at the temple. The next two chapters center on this authority, seen first in cleansing the temple of evil practices, portrayed as judgment in the parabolic act that follows (vv. 18–22), and second in the temple debates with the leaders (21:23 – 22:46).

Jesus, called a prophet by the people (21:11, 46), now acts like a prophet and condemns the leaders for corrupting God’s temple. Via another prophetic symbolic action (as in 21:1–11) he purifies the temple of its false commercial activity (vv. 12–13) and then as the Son of David heals “the blind and the lame” (vv. 14–17). . .

Jesus has revealed himself not only as Messiah but also as eschatological Judge of his people. As royal Davidic Messiah, Jesus is also Lord of all and has complete authority to stand in judgment over the nation and the temple. So Jesus is the humble King whose office is to die as the suffering Servant, yet also the great King who will sit on his judgment seat over all, including the church. He has come to humble the proud leaders and exalt the powerless and the children.

Donald Hagner: When the Son of David, the messianic king, comes to Jerusalem, he goes directly to the temple, the physical center of the Jewish faith. There he performs a symbolic act in clearing the temple of mercantile activity by which he points to his own authority and identity as well as to a symptom of the failure of Judaism. In the temple, furthermore, he heals the blind and the lame, thereby pointing to the real presence of the messianic kingdom in and through his ministry, the rule of God wherein the unhindered communion between God and humanity—the very thing the temple had symbolized—alone is realized. He finally allows himself to be proclaimed Son of David and accepts the affirmation as he had in the entry into the city. One “greater than the temple” is here (12:6). The Messiah is thus among his people in judgment and in healing. The truth of Jesus' identity can be made public; the claim will not be widely received but instead will bring Jesus to the cross.

I. (:12-13) CONFRONTING TEMPLE CORRUPTION

A. (:12) Physical Confrontation and Cleansing of Corrupt Temple Commerce

1. Bold Entrance into the Temple

“And Jesus entered the temple”

Grant Osborne: “The temple” (τὸ ἱερόν) refers to the whole complex, not just the “inner sanctuary” (ναός).

R. T. France: On arriving in Jerusalem from the east the first area reached was the temple precinct. The importance of this sacred area for Jewish ideology can hardly be exaggerated. It was not only the focus of the nation's religious life, but also a symbol of national identity and pride, particularly since the Maccabean revolt of the second century BC had succeeded in reclaiming it from the deliberate paganization attempted by Antiochus Epiphanes. The purification and rededication of the temple in 164 BC were commemorated annually thereafter in the Festival of Dedication. The rebuilding and enlargement of the temple by Herod the Great had been on a scale to match its patriotic significance; as a later rabbi remembered, “It used to be said: He who has not seen the temple of Herod has never seen a beautiful building.” (b. B. Bat. 4a)

Matthew's account reads as if Jesus went straight into the temple area and took action straight away, whereas Mark 11:11–15 inserts a day's delay. In Matthew's account Jesus' second dramatic gesture thus follows directly and appropriately from the first, and the effect is no less startling and provocative. The day's delay mentioned by Mark suggests, however, that it was less a spontaneous outburst of anger than a planned act of defiance and public demonstration of the Messiah's authority.

2. Beat-down Expulsion of the Marketplace Participants

“and cast out all those who were buying and selling in the temple,”

Stu Weber: The practice of selling sacrificial animals in Jerusalem originated as a good and helpful idea. Jews coming to worship from all over Israel and other parts of the known world needed animals to sacrifice (birds for the poor people, larger animals for those who could afford more). Most of them traveled days—some even weeks—and it was easier to carry money to buy a sacrifice at their destination than to herd an animal along and carry supplies for its upkeep on the journey.

But there was no reason to carry on any of this business inside the temple itself. We can also assume that the priesthood gained a healthy profit from sales in the temple and that Jesus' disruption was an attack on one of their sources of wealth. It is likely that financial corruption was the order of the day; animals were sold and the money exchanged at exorbitant prices. The Jewish leaders were misusing the house of prayer for worldly profit.

Leon Morris: Worshipers had to make their offerings in Tyrian currency, and the money changers performed a necessary function. So did the sellers of sacrificial animals and birds. It was not practicable for people coming from all over the Roman world to bring their beasts or birds with them. If they were to offer sacrifice, there had to be some place where they could purchase them. But the point is that that place did not have to be within the temple precincts, and it is to this that Jesus was objecting.

Grant Osborne: The ingressive aorist (Wallace, 558–59) “began to throw out” (ἐξέβαλεν) was not just anger but a calculated act. Jesus obviously realizes this will not be a long-term solution but still considers the violent act a symbolic action aimed at the leaders for corrupting the temple with their mercantile activity. Most likely the activity resumes almost immediately (note the present participles emphasizing the ongoing activity of “selling” and “buying”).

3. Break-down of the Marketplace Environment

“and overturned the tables of the moneychangers and the seats of those who were selling doves.”

Warren Wiersbe: The purpose of the court of the Gentiles in the temple was to give the “outcasts” an opportunity to enter the temple and learn from Israel about the true God. But the presence of this “religious market” turned many sensitive Gentiles away from the witness of Israel. The court of the Gentiles was used for mercenary business, not missionary business.

B. (:13) Prophetic Condemnation of the Subversion of Temple Worship

1. Intended Function of Worship in the Temple

“And He said to them, ‘It is written, My house shall be called a house of prayer;’”

Daniel Doriani: In Mark, we have the additional phrase that it was to be “a house of prayer for all nations” (Mark 11:17). In this context, “prayer” is a synecdoche for all the elements of public worship—prayer, teaching, sacrifice, and praise.

R. T. France: Jesus’ explicit protest is against the misuse of God’s house for trade instead of prayer. The phrase “bandits’ cave,” traditionally translated “den of thieves,” has sometimes been taken to mean that he was attacking unfair trade practices which exploited the poor pilgrims, but that is not the most likely reason for this allusion to Jer 7:11. Nor would it explain his expulsion of the buyers along with the sellers. It is where the trade is being carried out rather than how that is the focus of his displeasure. And that means that the protest is directed not so much against the traders themselves but against the priestly establishment who had allowed them to operate within the sacred area. Commercial activity, however justified in itself, should not be carried out where people came to pray, and a temple régime which encouraged this had failed in its responsibility. This was, therefore, apparently a demonstration against the Sadducean establishment.

2. Illegitimate Function of Commerce in the Temple

“but you are making it a robbers’ den.”

Donald Hagner: The messianic king cannot countenance proceedings within the temple precincts that violate its divinely intended purpose.

Michael Wilkins: The religious leaders were treating the temple as robbers do their dens—a place of refuge for both accumulating illicitly gained wealth and for plotting future illegal activities. Caves in Palestine were regularly used as robbers’ dens, so the metaphor was clear to Jesus' hearers. The temple's primary purpose, as a house for communing with God, was lost in the frenzy of temple activity.

Daniel Doriani: The Greek word translated “robber” (lēstēs) always carries the connotation of violent action, so that it refers to more than economic dishonesty. The word ordinarily means bandit, revolutionary, or insurrectionist, and never means thief. When we link this with Luke 19:42, where Jesus laments that the city did not know “the things that make for peace” (ESV) and predicts a devastating defeat at Rome's hands, we realize that Jesus foresaw that the nationalism that led to this abuse of the temple would lead Israel to rebel against Rome—and lose—forty years later. When Israel rebelled and Rome counterattacked, as Jesus predicted, Jewish armed forces chose the temple as their primary fortress, thinking, apparently, that the temple would protect them. Thus Jesus foretold the fall of Jerusalem, the temple, and the nation. To use the temple to guarantee military victory perverts the very purpose of Israel, whom God called to be a light to the nations. Nationalism breeds corruption and he will clean it out, then and now!

II. (:14) CARING FOR THE CRIPPLED

“And the blind and the lame came to Him in the temple, and He healed them.”

Daniel Doriani: While he was still there, Jesus reopened the temple for the neediest people in Israel: “The blind and the lame came to him at the temple, and he healed them” (Matt. 21:14). The healings are acts of love, but also a protest and a correction. At that time, the Qumran community banned the lame and blind from their assembly, and the law of Moses barred them from the temple precincts (Lev. 21:18–20). So Jesus expelled those whom the authorities permitted and permitted those whom the authorities expelled: he drove out the money changers and he welcomed the crippled. He gave grace to those whom the leaders excluded from the realm of grace.

David Turner: Jesus also acts on behalf of those who are physically needy. This account of healing the blind and lame is the last healing account in Matthew (cf. 9:27–28; 11:5; 12:22; 15:30–31; 20:30). Evidently, it occurs in the outer Court of the Gentiles, since blind and lame people are to be excluded from the temple (Lev. 21:18–19; 2 Sam. 5:8; m. Hag. 1.1; cf. CD 15.15–17; 1QSa 2.8–9; 1QM 7.3–4; 4Q394 [MMTa] frg. 2.18–19; but cf. John 9:1; Acts 3:1–2). In any event, Jesus removes the barrier to their full participation in God's house of prayer. His clearing the temple of financial dealings amounts to casting out the insiders; his healing amounts to welcoming the outsiders (Boring 1995: 406; Patte 1987: 290).

D. A. Carson: These two actions—cleansing the temple and the healing miracles—jointly declare his superiority over the temple (Heil, “Significant Aspects of the Healing Miracles,” 283–84) and raise the question of the source of his authority (v.23).

Grant Osborne: In the context, Jesus uses the healings to display what the temple should look like as a “house of prayer,” in contrast to the leaders who have turned into a place of commerce. His authority over the temple and over issues of uncleanness continues; Jesus is not only the “final interpreter of Torah” but has authority over Torah and temple (cf. 12:8). He is greater than the temple, and in the temple precincts themselves he heals and makes the impure pure.

Donald Hagner: The Messiah thus manifests the blessings of the kingdom precisely in the precincts of the temple (see Trautmann), which is thereby transformed from a commercial center to a place of healing (one cannot but think of Matthew's earlier citation of Hos 6:6 [Matt 9:13; 12:7]).

David Thompson: The temple of God is a great place to be healed. The blind and lame came and He healed them. The aorist tense indicates He did this in one moment of time. A person can be healed from all sin in one moment of time and have their eyes opened to behold wonderful truth and they can begin to walk right and straight. The church of God should be a healing center, giving hope to those who have been crippled and blinded by sin.

III. (:15-16) CORRECTING THE CRITICS

A. (:15-16a) Anger of the Religious Leaders over Messianic Acclamation

1. (:15a) Rejection of Messianic Acclamation

a. Messianic Acclamation from the Healing Miracles of Jesus

“But when the chief priests and the scribes saw the wonderful things that He had done,”

Donald Hagner: They had seen the θαυμάσια, “wonders” (the only occurrence of the word in the NT) performed by Jesus. Despite these remarkable healings, however, they were unwilling to draw the appropriate conclusion concerning Jesus' messianic identity.

b. Messianic Acclamation from the Praise of the Children in the Temple

“and the children who were crying out in the temple and saying, ‘Hosanna to the Son of David,’”

Leon Morris: Once again we notice Jesus' attraction for little children; it is significant that on a day of such high drama Jesus should find time for children. They were using the acclamation “Hosanna” and speaking of Jesus as “the Son of David.” We have seen that this was a messianic term; it is unlikely that the children understood all that the term signified for their elders. But the priestly and academic people knew what it meant, and it annoyed them that children, however innocently, were using such a term for Jesus. In any case, in the usages of the time such exalted personages would not have cared greatly for children. So it does not surprise us that they were indignant. It was bad enough to have the enthusiasm of the crowds at Jesus' entry to the city, but it was worse to have him invade the temple precincts (their own special territory) and destroy a lucrative source of income, and it was intolerable that there, in the temple courts, he was doing his miracles and now being acclaimed by children (who knew no better!) in messianic terms.

John Walvoord: These were boys, who like Jesus, had come to the temple for the first time at the age twelve.

2. (:15b) Reaction to Messianic Acclamation

“they became indignant,”

3. (:16) Refutation of this Messianic Acclamation Demanded

“and said to Him, ‘Do You hear what these are saying?’”

Richard Gardner: The only feature that shatters this idyllic scene is the complaint of the chief priests and the scribes (vv. 15-16; cf. Luke 19:39-40), who represent the old order that Jesus is challenging. They are offended by what they see and hear. Jesus deflects their criticism, however, by interpreting the children's praise as a fulfillment of the psalmist's words in Psalms 8:2. (Note the question-and-answer format of verse 16, which resembles a rabbinic dispute.) In short, infants or little ones discern and rejoice in what they see in Jesus, as they have throughout the Gospel (cf. 11:25!), while the guardians of Israel fail to perceive what is happening.

B. (:16b) Acceptance by Jesus of Praise and Worship from These Young Children

“And Jesus said to them, ‘Yes; have you never read, Out of the mouth of infants and nursing babes Thou hast prepared praise for Thyself?’”

R. T. France: The most striking feature of this quotation, however, is the bold assumption by Jesus that what the psalm says about the praise of God (in distinction from mere human beings, Ps 8:4) is applicable to the children's praise of him.

Stu Weber: Their assumptions concerning Jesus' identity led the chief priests and scribes to believe that pointing out the children's “error” would cause Jesus to be horrified at their actions. Surely he would command the children to stop. Any Jewish teacher would have been horrified to be proclaimed “Son of David.” For anyone other than the Messiah to accept such acclaim was equivalent to blasphemy.

But the Son of David saw no problems with the children's praise. When his attention was drawn to it, he affirmed its appropriateness, supporting it with a quote from Psalms 8:2. His have you never read revealed his enemies' lack of understanding of the Old Testament Scriptures, on which they were supposed to be experts (cf. 12:3; 19:4; 21:42; 22:31). Jesus used the children's praise to show how obvious it should have been that he was the Son of David.

Charles Swindoll: This scene reminds us that Jesus was not the kind of Messiah those scholars and priests were looking for. They had no interest in personal righteousness; they were concerned only with political power. They had no time for national repentance; they were looking only for military might. They weren't longing for peace, justice, and mercy; they cared only about their own economic prosperity. If the Messiah came for anything other than their own personal gain, they weren't interested.

Jesus could have stood there and debated the priests and scribes for hours. Instead, He let Scripture have the last word. Having made His point that things weren't right with the religious and political heart of the nation of Israel, Jesus departed the way He had come and returned to Bethany (21:17).

Jeffrey Crabtree: Jesus (1) justified the children's praise of Him with this verse from Psalms 8 and (2) thus identified Himself as the LORD of that Psalm. By using this verse, He (3) at least inferred that the children were praising Him as part of the Lord's plan. Jesus was not going to forbid the children to call Him “Son of David,” because this was exactly what He wanted them to do. Rather, He used the objection from the priests and scribes to further state His claim that He was more than just the human descendant of David. In other words, as offended as they were that Jesus would assume the title “Son of David,” He was assuming even more than that.

(:17) EPILOGUE -- GEOGRAPHIC TRANSITION

“And He left them and went out of the city to Bethany, and lodged there.”

Robert Gundry: Abandoning the chief priests and the scholars and lodging outside the city in Bethany symbolize judgment on both the city and the Jewish authorities there. Apart from this symbolism, the crowding of Jerusalem during festivals, especially during Passover, forced many pilgrims to find lodging outside the city.

Stu Weber: Having accomplished his grand entrance, the king left the priests and scribes. Matthew used the Greek verb kataleipo, meaning “to leave behind.” It is a stronger verb than leipo, implying a purposeful departure, possibly in disgust or righteous anger, after the confrontation. The same verb kataleipo was used in Matthew 16:4 when Jesus left his challengers to cross the Sea of Galilee, and in 19:5 of a man leaving his parents. There was calculated determination in Jesus' action. In the flow of Matthew's argument, this is most significant. Jesus (in light of the leaders' rejection and opposition) had now deliberately abandoned the chief priests, the scribes, the temple, Jerusalem, and everything else related to official Israel and its false religion.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How important is the priority and purity of worship to the Lord Jesus?
- 2) What made the religious leaders so indignant at the behavior of the children in the temple?
- 3) What does this passage demonstrate regarding the credentials of Jesus as the promised Messiah?
- 4) How fearsome will Jesus be at His Second Coming when He unleashes the wrath of God in judgment?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Daniel Doriani: The temple courts were arranged as boxes inside boxes. In the outermost box, under covered colonnades, people met and teachers taught. The next box was the court of the Gentiles, who could go no closer to the most holy places. Inside that box came the court of the women. They could not go beyond their court. Next came the court of Jewish men, then courts for priests. Finally, the innermost court was the holy of holies, where only the high priest could go, and that but once a year. By locating commerce in the court of the Gentiles, the priests took away the one place Gentiles could meet.

David Turner: Renewal or Destruction?

This episode reinforces the previous episode's stress on Jesus as the messianic son of David. Jesus's first action upon entering Jerusalem is to deliver it not from the oppressive Roman occupying forces but from its own hypocrisy. His entrance to the city is royal, but his action in the temple is prophetic (W. Davies and Allison 1997: 133–34). Previous “cleansings” of the temple were accomplished by Josiah, Hezekiah, and Judas Maccabeus (2 Kings 22–23; 2 Chron. 29:3–11; 1 Macc. 4; 2 Macc. 10). Instead of directly threatening the political status quo, Jesus confronts the temple, the religious center of Israel, and its established leadership. His major activities in the temple are directed against hypocrisy and on behalf of the needy. As did the prophets before him, Jesus spoke and acted against the corruption of Israel’s established worship (cf. Zech. 14:21; Mal. 3:2–4) and for those who were without status. Therefore Jesus’s acts in the temple augur the eschatological reversal in which the meek “will inherit the earth” while the corrupt leaders will be brought low. Jesus’s healing in the temple and his cleansing it both demonstrate the truth of Matt. 12:6: “Something greater than the temple is here” (cf. Mal. 3:1). Jesus’s citation of Ps. 8:2 in Matt. 21:16 is an implicit claim that he is worthy of the praise and worship that the psalm directs to God.

Jesus’s action in the temple has been commonly viewed as an act of correction or purification. But some scholars argue that Jesus was not so much reforming the temple as announcing its doom (R. Horsley 1987; E. Sanders 1985). Jesus did in fact predict the destruction of the temple (24:2; cf. Jer. 26:1–11; Josephus, J.W. 6.300–309), but his activities here condemn not the priestly sacrifices or the temple as a divine institution but its parasitic commercial enterprises. Although the biblical prophets commonly denounced the corruption of the temple and its priests, their oracles did not oppose the sacrificial system itself but the abuses of it. Later Jewish texts also critique the corruption of Jerusalem and the temple.

The cleansing of the temple symbolizes both the reformation of its abuses and the judgment that will come if the abuses continue (W. Davies and Allison 1997: 135–37; Keener 1999: 496–501). Protest against present corruption and warning of future destruction are compatible elements of the prophetic message when there is hope of repentance (Matt. 23:39) and the rise of an eschatological temple (Ezek. 40–48). Biblical prophetic ministry confronts Israel’s abandonment of covenant obligations, calls Israel to repentance, and promises judgment and hope based on Israel’s response. Matthew perhaps saw in Jesus’s acts a fulfillment of the Lord coming suddenly into his temple (Mal. 3:1–4). Another possibility is stated by the most likely translation of Zech. 14:21, which envisions a day in which there will be no more merchants in the house of the Lord.

Leon Morris: All three Synoptists have this story of Jesus driving the traders from the temple precincts at this point, the end of his public ministry, whereas John has a similar story at the beginning (John 2:13–17). It is perhaps significant that in both traditions the temple cleansing comes at the beginning of Jesus’ first visit to Jerusalem. It is usually assumed that the action took place once only, and argument centers on whether John or the Synoptists have it in its correct place. But against this are the many differences. First, there is the fact that John has the story in a large block of non-Synoptic matter (in John 1–5 nothing occurs in the Synoptic Gospels except the ministry of John the Baptist, and this is so different that there is no question of dependence either way). Then there are the many differences in the narrative. John has a reference to oxen and sheep and to a whip made of cords, none of which is in the Synoptists. And where they are talking about the same thing, the words are mostly different: the word for money changers is different (though in a second reference John also has the Synoptic word), as is that for overturned. John speaks of the money as being poured out and says that Jesus commanded the traders to take their things away, while none of the Synoptists mentions this. The Synoptists all tell us that Jesus quoted Isaiah 56:7, but John does not say that he cited Scripture at this point. He does, however, say that the disciples remembered the words, “Zeal for your house will eat me up” (Ps. 69:9), which is not found in any of the Synoptic accounts. There are other differences from Mark in parts of the story that Matthew does not reproduce. So many differences in a very short narrative make it unlikely that the Synoptists and John are describing the same event. And we must bear in mind that the Synoptists omit the whole of Jesus’ early ministry in Jerusalem. There seems to be no good reason why they should take this one solitary incident from those days and include it in their accounts as far away from its rightful place as possible. We should also bear in mind that if Jesus did throw the traders out in the early part of his ministry, it is not at all unlikely that they would return in due course. Nor that Jesus should repeat his action.

William Barclay: In this Court of the Gentiles, two kinds of trading were going on. There was the business of money-changing. Every Jew had to pay a temple tax of one half-shekel, and that tax had to be paid near to the Passover time. A month before, booths were set up in all the towns and villages, and the money could be paid there; but after a certain date it could be paid only in the Temple itself, and it would be there that the vast majority of pilgrim Jews from other lands paid it. This tax had to be paid in certain currency, although for general purposes all kinds of currencies were equally valid in Palestine. It must not be paid in ingots of silver, but in stamped currency; it must not be paid in coins of inferior alloy or coins which had been clipped, but in coins of high-grade silver. It could be paid in shekels of the sanctuary, in Galilean half-shekels, and especially in Tyrian currency, which was of a very high standard.

The function of the money-changers was to change unsuitable currency into the correct currency. That seems on the face of it to be an entirely necessary function; but the trouble was that these money-changers charged a commission for changing the currency at all; and, if the coin was of greater value than a half-shekel, they made a further charge for giving back the surplus change. That is to say, many pilgrims not only had to pay the half-shekel but also the fees for changing currency. All this made a considerable impact on a working man’s income.

This surplus charge was called the qolbon. It did not by any means all go into the money-changers’ pockets; some of it was classed as free-will offerings; some of it went to the repair of the roads; some of it went to purchase the gold plates with which it was planned entirely to cover the Temple proper; and some of it found its way into the Temple treasury. The whole matter was not necessarily an abuse; but the trouble was that it lent itself to abuse. It lent itself to the exploitation of the pilgrims who had come to worship, and there is no doubt that the Temple money-changers made large profits out of it.

The selling of doves was worse. For most visits to the Temple, some kind of offering was essential. Doves, for instance, were necessary when a woman came for purification after childbirth, or when a leper came to have a cure attested and certified (Leviticus 12:8, 14:22, 15:14, 15:29). It was easy enough to buy animals for sacrifice outside the Temple; but any animal offered in sacrifice must be without blemish. There were official inspectors of the animals, and it was to all intents and purposes certain that they would reject an animal bought outside and would direct the worshipper to the Temple stalls and booths.

Craig Blomberg: This whole episode, combining cleansing and condemnation of the temple, proves more significant than is usually recognized. . . It provides the final impetus for Jesus’ crucifixion (Mark 11:18). It offers an example of Jesus’ genuinely human but sinless anger expressed in righteous indignation against the profaning of that which is holy. . . But, like many of the Old Testament prophets, Jesus provides a good paradigm for speaking out publicly about God's indignation against the flagrant defiance of his standards in the world. Once again it is the “clergy” and the “Bible teachers,” not the disreputable people of society, who are Jesus' target for attack. Corruption among the leadership of God's people arouses Jesus' wrath more quickly than anything else. But Christ does more than denounce injustice—he takes action against it. That the temple merchants quickly resumed business as usual is often speculated, but we are not told one way or the other. The point is that Jesus did what was right, irrespective of the duration of its effect.

Walter Wilson: The fact that in 21:13 Jesus alludes to Jer 7:11 is also relevant in determining the meaning of the demonstration in 21:12, since the text from which it is drawn, Jeremiah's so-called temple sermon (7:1–15; cf. 26:1–11), concludes with a prediction of the temple's destruction (7:14–15). In the same vein, the demonstration itself can be compared with the symbolic act attributed to the prophet in Jer 19:10, in which he smashes a jar, interprets the act as a sign of destruction (19:11–12), and then announces God's judgment on Jerusalem in the court of the temple (19:14–15), an act that provokes the anger of the temple's chief officer (20:1–2). An examination of subsequent texts in the gospel is also of value in this regard. Specifically, the imagery of the withered fig tree (21:18–19), of “this” mountain being cast into the sea (21:21), of the vineyard's tenants being put to death (21:41), of “their” city being burned (22:7), and of Jerusalem's “house” being left desolate (23:38) suggests that Jesus's action against the temple here has some relation to his prediction of the temple's destruction in 24:2 (cf. 26:61; 27:40). Thus the temporary suspension of commercial activity foreshadows the permanent cessation of all temple-related activity when the temple is destroyed, the overturning of tables and chairs signifying its physical downfall.

John MacArthur: Purging the Perverted Temple – Divine Credentials of the Messiah

And so, by going to the temple as the first official act after His inauguration, He is identifying for us clearly the turf or the territory of His mission. Three years had not changed that purpose. He goes right back to the temple. . .

Jesus walks in. His eyes, His ears, and His nostrils are filled with the sights and sounds and smells. The stench of a stockyard, the wrangling and haggling and haranguing of people bargaining over the price of animals. The noise the animals make. All the chaos of the crying animals being slaughtered. Blood. It is a scene that's unbelievable.

This is Jesus' turf, because this is the house of God, and it has been turned into a cave for robbers. And so, He comes and sees this horrifying but familiar scene. And it says to us something so important; it says that Christ came, first of all, to deal with men on a spiritual level. You understand that? That's the point. He came to throw out corrupt worship and to bring in true worship. He is on a divine mission.

Second point, He has divine authority. He has divine authority. If we can't see that He's the Messiah because of His mission, boy, we ought to see that He's the Messiah because of His authority. Now listen, the most powerful thing going on in that country was the temple. I mean the high priest was a powerful man. And the man who is next to the high priest was equally powerful. And the one who was the head of the temple police was powerful. . .

There's a third credential that I want you to see in verse 13. He not only showed He was on a divine mission and demonstrated divine authority, but he revealed a commitment to divine Scripture. He revealed a commitment to divine Scripture. You see, He vindicates what He does by this in verse 13, “He said unto them, ‘It is written,’” and then He quotes Isaiah 56:7, “My house shall be called the house of prayer” - and Isaiah adds, and Mark also includes - “of all nations.” Matthew leaves it out because His audience is primarily Jewish.

But the Lord says, “I vindicate what I do, because I’m doing something consistent with the Word of God.” Oh, that’s so great. As Messiah, He was always hooked to the Word of God. In John He says, “I never do anything that the Father doesn’t show Me to do. I never do anything that the Father doesn’t tell Me to do.” Everything He ever did was consistent with the Word of God. He vindicates His anger by basing it on Scripture. . .

There’s a fourth thing I want you to see. He not only shows His divine mission, His divine authority, and His commitment to the divine word, but we see Him as the Messiah because of His divine compassion. . .

And so, we see them come, and in compassion, He heals them. And may I suggest to you that that’s the truest kind of worship? True worship is in the name of the Lord meeting the need of someone. That is a far greater worship than a sacrifice, is it not? Sacrifices, sacrifices, sacrifices by the millions. But where was the worship of love to one in need?

And then another mark, a divine credential, if you will. We see His divine mission; His divine authority; His commitment to the divine Word; divine compassion, and also His divine power. . .

One other credential that I see in a positive sense, He accepted divine worship. . .

There’s one other thing. He gives His credentials: divine mission, divine authority, divine word, divine compassion, divine power, divine worship, and one other thing. One other thing that proves He was the Messiah. It’s this: He was rejected.

J. Ligon Duncan: The Cleansing of the Temple

I. (:12-13) Judgment begins at the house of God.

You see, this passage is a picture of the spiritual state of Israel. Israel thinks she is doing fine with God, but in fact, her worship is empty. It has all the external forms, but it is emptied of the heart, and the very context in which they are worshiping it is almost like a cattle show. The context in which they are worshiping is a visible picture of how empty that worship is. And the Lord Jesus makes a beeline for that in order to give them self-consciousness about their spiritual state. God’s reforming and refining and sifting work begins with the people of God, and with the way we worship.

II. (:14) God’s grace extends to marginalized people.

Is our religion real? And Tasker said, “Service rendered to the afflicted is worship more acceptable to God than multitudes of sacrifice.” A truth brought out in Matthew when He, alone, of all the evangelists reports that Jesus miraculously healed the blind and the lame that came to him in the temple. Is that our attitude? Are we on the lookout for mercy ministry amongst our own congregation? And then, beyond that, are we on the lookout as to how we can minister to the broader community, and display the mercy of the Lord Jesus to them? are we creatively and actively and immediately looking to do that? If we follow the Lord Jesus, we will.

III. (:15-17) The Poor in Spirit see God.

Finally of course, He is indicating once again that it is the humble, it is only the humble who perceive spiritual truth and reality and worship God. In this case it is the children; the adults, the pious religious leaders, they don't see God! But the children, they see Jesus clear out the temple, they see Jesus heal those outcasts, and they instinctively know that that is true religion, and they instinctively know that He is the son of God. See, Christ's glory is hidden from the prideful. But it is revealed to the humble. The chief priests and the scribes were indignant, that Christ did not take notice of this display of irreverence within the temple precinct, even though they weren't concerned with all the trade being conducted within the same bounds. And so Jesus makes it clear that in fact the praises sounded by these children were in the nature of a rebuke to those religious superiors, and He drew their attention to that truth expressed in Psalm 8, that God has called children and infants to sound aloud His praises.

S. Lewis Johnson: Now that is very important and has many different applications and in a moment we'll talk about some of them, but these I think are the two important truths of this passage. They have to do with prophecy.

1. The king claims his rights as king in his temple, and
2. he also expresses in it his view that the spiritual takes precedence over everything else.

I cannot possibly imagine this taking place were it not for the fact that there was something about the majesty about the Lord Jesus that suggested the majesty of the eternal God that enabled him to accomplish this task. It's almost as if there was given through him an overwhelming sense of the dignity of his character. There was almost a lifting of the veil of his humanity so that there came forth something of the majesty of deity.

o me it remind it reminds me of the incident when the soldiers came in the Garden of Gethsemane to take the Lord Jesus with Judas the Betrayer, and they came up to him asked and he asked them whom they were seeking. They said, Jesus of Nazareth. He said I am. And I think we probably should add, he – I am he. But when he said that the soldiers went back and fell to the ground. Again there was a lifting of the veil of his humanity so there was something of the overwhelming majesty of his person that came through, and these Roman soldiers found themselves groveling in the dust, and he had only spoken a word. So it was this, I think that enabled him to cast them all out. I'm sure there must have been fear and awe on the part of those who stood about wondering what had happened that this man was able to accomplish this. . .

The thing that our Lord spoke about of course was the desecration of the temple of God, and I say again as I close simply this, that it is possible for us to desecrate the presence of God in our lives by putting other things before the primary thing which is the worship of the living God through Jesus Christ. It's possible for us today to introduce into our own being as believers contending things and thus instead of our bodies being the place of worship and praise primarily, they are primarily instruments by which we are engaged in enlarging our bank accounts or other issues, other activities that are less than the highest, and I think the Lord Jesus speaks directly to that in this statement. Make not my father's house a house of merchandise; let it not be a den of robbers and thieves, but let it be what it should be a house of prayer. May the Lord enable us as Christians to hear and respond and pray that, O Father, make not the house of the Holy Spirit a house of merchandise, but make it truly a house of prayer.

TEXT: Matthew 21:18-22

TITLE: CURSING OF THE FRUITLESS FIG TREE

BIG IDEA:
JUDGMENT ON THE HYPOCRISY OF ISRAEL FORESHADOWED IN THE CURSING OF THE FRUITLESS FIG TREE

INTRODUCTION:

Jeffrey Crabtree: Commentators divide over the significance of this miracle. Hagner (33B:604) says this miracle can only be understood as anticipation of national Israel's soon demise and the temple's soon destruction. Walvoord (159-160) thinks this cursing of the fig tree had nothing to do with Israel and was only about faith and miracles, nothing more.

It seems probable, however, that the fig tree incident fits in with the theme of the cleansing of the temple and the challenge to Jesus' authority (Carson, Matthew 444-445). Both were about hypocrisy. Jesus' condemnation of the tree for its barrenness, when it looked like it should have had at least some fruit, was a sign of judgment against Jerusalem's spiritual hypocrisy and barrenness (Lk. 13:6-9). If this is the right understanding, Jerusalem and all Israel were facing severe judgment for their hypocrisy (23:38; 24:2, 15-22) and spiritual barrenness (v. 43; 23:3; Hagner 33B:605).

Stanley Saunders: But the surprising, hyperbolic, and even abrasive character of this action should help us identify it as a prophetic sign-act, delivered not in response to Jesus' hunger but for the sake of Jesus' disciples and directed against the "fruitlessness" of the Jerusalem leaders. The story interrupts the flow of Jesus' conflicts with the Jewish authorities in the temple (cf. 21:14-16 and 21:23-27) precisely in order to comment upon them. . .

Throughout Matthew fruit symbolizes appropriate responses to the proclamation of God's reign; it signifies human actions that are commensurate with God's mercy, presence, and healing power (cf. 3:8; 3:10; 7:16-20; 12:33), and with the harvest that Jesus is gathering (cf. 21:41, 43). The sweet fruit of a fig tree is a symbol of God's blessing (Num. 29:5; Deut. 8:7-8).

Stu Weber: In the preceding passage, the king had pronounced judgment on Israel and its leaders for their idolatrous behavior (21:12-13). With the fig tree, Jesus acted out a parable or "mini-drama" to illustrate the reality of Israel's fruitlessness and its doom. Just as the leaves of the fig tree advertised fruit, so the Jewish leaders claimed to be fulfilling God's purpose. However, the advertising was a lie. Under the "leaves" of their showy religion (6:1-18; 15:8-9) their hearts were barren and unbelieving. They had missed their opportunity to repent and to bear true fruit, and so the king pronounced their judgment. There would be no more opportunities for these hypocrites—they would never bear fruit but would die through the judgment of God.

Grant Osborne: Two primary themes are linked together because both flow out of the authority and spiritual power of Jesus.

- (1) The cursing of the fig tree is a parabolic enactment of the judgment Israel will soon face because the people have rejected God's Messiah and defiled his house, the temple.

(2) Jesus promises that his followers will share his authority through prayer—with faith the disciple taps into the same power source as Jesus did.

I. (:18-19) POINT OF THE MIRACLE: JEWISH NATION WILL SOON BE JUDGED FOR ITS HYPOCRISY – PROFESSION WITHOUT FRUIT

A. (:18) Occasion for the Miracle

“Now in the morning, when He returned to the city, He became hungry.”

B. (:19) Cursing of the Fig Tree

1. Show without Substance

*“And seeing a lone fig tree by the road,
He came to it, and found nothing on it except leaves only;”*

R. T. France: By speaking of “a single fig tree” rather than just “a fig tree” Matthew probably intends to alert the reader that this tree, perhaps standing on its own, was unlike others which at that season would not have fully developed leaves. Its precocious show of foliage promised, but did not provide, the fruit which normally came with the leaves.

William Barclay: But it is the fig tree’s habit of fruit-bearing which is relevant here. The fig tree is unique in that it bears two full crops in the year. The first is borne on the old wood. Quite early in the year, little green knobs appear at the end of the branches. They are called paggim, and they will one day be the figs. These fruit buds come in April, but they are quite inedible. Bit by bit, the leaves and the flowers open out, and another unique thing about the fig is that it is in full fruit and full leaf and full flower all at the same time; that happens by June. No fig tree ever bore fruit in April; that is far too early. The process is then repeated with the new wood; and the second crop comes in September.

The strangest thing about this story is twofold.

- First, it tells of a fig tree in full leaf in April. Jesus was at Jerusalem for the Passover; the Passover fell on 15th April; and this incident happened a week before.
- The second thing is that Jesus looked for figs on a tree where no figs could possibly be; and Mark says: ‘for it was not the season for figs’ (Mark 11:13).

The difficulty of this story is not so much a difficulty of possibility. It is a moral difficulty; and it is twofold.

- First, we see Jesus cursing a fig tree for not doing what it was not able to do. The tree could not have borne fruit in the second week of April, and yet we see Jesus destroying it for not doing that very thing.
- Second, we see Jesus using his miraculous powers for his own ends. That is precisely what in the temptations in the wilderness he determined never to do. He would not turn stones into bread to satisfy his own hunger.

The plain truth is this – if we had read of anyone else cursing a fig tree for not bearing figs in April, we would have said it was an act of ill-tempered petulance, springing from personal disappointment. In Jesus, that is inconceivable; therefore there must be some explanation. What is it? . . .

Lessons: Uselessness invites disaster, and profession of faith without practice is doomed.

2. Severe Curse

“and He said to it, ‘No longer shall there ever be any fruit from you.’”

Donald Hagner: The surprising curse (note esp. εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, “forever,” with the connotation of final judgment), its harshness, and the immediate withering of the tree disclose that what occurs here is a prophetic sign that points beyond itself to a far more grievous kind of barrenness.

3. Sudden Withering

“And at once the fig tree withered.”

II. (:20-22) DERIVED LESSON: POWER OF FAITH EXPRESSED IN PRAYER

Stanley Saunders: Prayer coupled with “faith” creates a social space in which God’s power is manifest, thereby providing an alternative to the temple, which has been controlled by those who produce no fruit. Prayer and faith are at the heart of God’s alternative temple; they are the locus of God’s presence and power, the means by which God will produce fruit in the disciples.

Richard Gardner: Jesus’ miracle is a sign not only of judgment, but of the power available to disciples through prayer (cf. 7:7-11; 18:19; John 14:13-14), prayer that expresses an unwavering confidence in God (cf. Luke 17:5-6). Up to now, the faith of Jesus’ followers has been hesitant and shaky, little faith (cf. 14:31; 17:14-20). If that faith becomes firm and articulate, however, the disciples will be able to do even more amazing things than Jesus has just done.

A. (:20) Curiosity Regarding the Rapid Withering of the Cursed Fig Tree

“And seeing this, the disciples marveled, saying, ‘How did the fig tree wither at once?’”

R. T. France: Their words here, as in 8:27, imply that Jesus’ power is unique, which will make it all the more remarkable when he goes on to suggest that they too can do what he has done.

Daniel Doriani: So the fig tree withered immediately. We expect the disciples to ask why Jesus cursed the tree. Instead they ask how he did it. “When the disciples saw this, they were amazed. ‘How did the fig tree wither so quickly?’ they asked” (Matt. 21:20). As so often, the Twelve partially miss the main point, focusing on the wrong thing. They were thinking, “That was amazing. How did you do that? Can you teach us to do it too? It could be useful to curse and destroy from time to time.”

B. (:21-22) Connection between Power and Prayer of Faith

“And Jesus answered and said to them,”

1. (:21b) Prospect of Exercising Such Power

“Truly I say to you, if you have faith, and do not doubt, you shall not only do what was done to the fig tree, but even if you say to this mountain, ‘Be taken up and cast into the sea,’ it shall happen.”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Moving mountains (v. 21) is hyperbole (1 Cor. 13:2) and speaks of doing very difficult things (17:20; Zech. 4:6-9) that might seem impossible.

R. T. France: The “faith” which receives answers to prayer is characterized by practical confidence in God’s power and willingness to respond. In view of what has been said in 18:19–20, it should also be noted that the verbs in these verses are all plural; the promise of effective prayer is made to the united praying community rather than to the private interest of the individual.

Stu Weber: The necessary ingredient was faith (taking God at his word), which the disciples lacked. Jesus clarified his meaning by mentioning the opposite of faith—doubt. . .

Jesus meant us to assume that mountain-moving faith should not be exercised in such frivolous ways as rearranging the earth. In fact, faith cannot be exercised in any way except according to God's will. It is not the faith which moves mountains, but the power of God in response to the expression of faith. True faith is always in keeping with God's will and is based on intimacy with God and an understanding of his heart and will.

Daniel Doriani: As Jesus traveled from Bethany to Jerusalem, he stood in sight of the Mount of Olives and Mount Zion, the temple mount. When he spoke of a mountain, therefore, Jesus had to mean the temple mount. That is the mountain they should want to move, not physically, but spiritually. Faith alone can move the mountain where dead religion flourishes. As Jesus told his disciples that faith can move the temple mountain, he reinforced the lesson of the fig tree. By faith we can move the temple mountain, the mountain that is all show and no substance, into the sea.

Grant Osborne: “Doubt” (διακρίνομαι) refers not to a certainty that God will give anything one asks (see on v. 22) but rather to a “divided mind” that trusts God only partway and is centered more on self. Bruner says, “Doubt, in Jesus’ teaching, is the decision to live as if God does not exist, and for disciples of Jesus this decision is disloyal. (In French, the word for doubt is defiance.)” . . .

Furthermore, faith is much more than a power that infuses our prayer life. Primarily, it is a perspective on life, a lifestyle that centers on God and immerses one’s self in God. Faith is a way of thinking in which God is everything, the sphere within which we live, and this type of prayer is not just intercessory, a prayer life centered on getting God to do things for us. It is more a constant desire to do things for God, and such a life has great power because it centers on doing things for God. This is a true life of faith.

2. (:22) Principle of Seeking God’s Will via Believing Prayer

“And all things you ask in prayer, believing, you shall receive.”

Charles Swindoll: Where does a knowledge of God’s will come from, so we know that what we pray will be answered? Colossians 1:9 gives us a hint: “We have not ceased to pray for you and to ask that you may be filled with the knowledge of His will in all spiritual wisdom and understanding.” Such knowledge of God’s will is a work of divine wisdom, which necessarily comes from the Spirit. As we learn and live the Spirit-breathed Word of God (2 Tim. 3:16), we will be equipped to pray according to His will.

David Turner: The fig tree incident also shows that Jesus’s disciples still need to develop faith that God will answer prayer. Jesus has previously rebuked their “little faith” (6:30; 8:26; 14:31; 16:8; 17:20). Here their faith is challenged again in a context connected with the temple, which is called “a house of prayer for all nations” (Isa. 56:7; Matt. 21:13).

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What is God’s response when He expects to see fruit and finds none?
- 2) How do people today make an outward show and profession of spirituality while never evidencing any fruit that points to genuine life transformation?
- 3) What shocked the disciples about this miracle?
- 4) How is this promise of answered prayer a helpful preparation for the upcoming ministry of Jesus’ disciples?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

John MacArthur: The Way of the Fig Tree: Promise Without Performance

On Wednesday, He came again to the city of Jerusalem, and again into confrontation with the religious leaders. That confrontation is recorded for us in verses 23 and following. But we need to stop at this point. Because when He came in on Tuesday, and when He came in on the morning of Wednesday – on both of those two days, there was a fig tree that came into play. Mark tells us the first meeting with the fig tree was on the first day He came in to cleanse the temple. And then the second day, when He came back again, there was a second encounter with the fig tree. That’s in Mark chapter 11.

Matthew condenses both of those into just one narrative, from verse 18 to 22. Matthew isn’t so concerned with the chronology as He is with the point, the message of the fig tree, and that ought to be our emphasis as well. . .

Now, Jesus, then, on Monday, when He rode in, listened to the accolades and the hosannas and accepted the coronation, fickle as it was. And having been affirmed and inaugurated as King on Monday, He then proceeds immediately to do two kingly things. The first thing He did was cleanse the temple; the second thing He did was curse the tree. Both of those are acts of sovereign authority. . .

The first thing, cleansing the temple, was a denunciation of their religion. It was a denunciation of their worship. The second thing, cursing the tree, which we’ll see today, was a denunciation of them as a nation. . .

But this fig tree was unlike most fig trees. In the first place, it shouldn’t have even been there with leaves on it, because it was only April, and fig trees, though they bloom twice a year, the early fruit doesn't come until May or June. And for a fig tree to have leaves in April was very uncommon. Maybe in Jericho they had already eaten of the figs, because everything blooms early in Jericho, the sun is so constant and so intense. But up on the hilltop, it just didn't happen that in April fig trees bloomed and bore fruit. . .

The fig tree is a symbol of the prosperity and the wealth and the richness of that land agriculturally. So, the presence of fig trees are the mark of the prosperity of the land, the absence of fig trees, the mark of the judgment of the land. . .

Now, fig trees bear fruit twice a year: May/June and then later in the year. And here's the important point: the fruit comes before the leaves. The fruit comes before the leaves. And so, if you see a tree with leaves, what should you expect? Fruit. And when the Lord saw the tree with leaves, it was amazing, because in Jerusalem, it's too early for that. Oh, maybe this tree was at a very fertile point in the soil. It may have been that that soil had unique nutrients. It may have been that it was near a brook, and water was in abundance, provided to the roots. It may have been that somebody specially cared for that, or it may have been that God just had that tree bloom a little early. But it should have had fruit because it had leaves. . .

That fig tree is symbolic of Israel. The leaves are symbolic of Israel's religious activity, and the fruitlessness is equally symbolic of Israel. They have a form of godliness. Right? Without power. "They have a zeal for God without knowledge," Paul says in Romans 10:2. . .

Now, people, the cleansing of the temple and the cursing of the tree then, you see, is very dramatic, don't you? Devastating. And it's little wonder that they reacted by hating Jesus Christ and wanting Him dead. Jerusalem and Judaism is spiritually fruitless, sinful, cursed for judgment. That's essentially the message of Jesus as the King. He is coronated on one day. This is His message the next day, "You're doomed." Boy, they really didn't expect their Messiah to come to deliver that word, did they? . . .

So, the parable is understood. Powerful. But remember that I said the Lord had his disciples with Him? And the Lord wants to use this to teach them something. So, we turn a little corner as we come to verse 21, and let's call this the principle. And here the Lord moves from the parable to the principle. And this is a principle for the disciples.

The first principle, we could say, is the obvious truth that profession without reality is cursed. That was something they must have learned from this, that it doesn't do any good to profess to be religious if there's no fruit. That's a profound lesson. And while it is a national illustration in the parable, it certainly has individual implications. And I warn you that if your life is a life of leaves without fruit, you are cursed and doomed just like the nation Israel was. God's going to judge the religious. God is going to damn to eternal hell those people who have had a show of religion without the truth. That is the first principle. . .

And the Lord is saying, "Look, I want you to know that You have this power. And this power's available to you through faith. If you would believe and not doubt, you can see God's power." It's like – recorded in the Gospel of John in the upper room, when the Lord said to them, "Greater works shall these – than these shall you do, because I go to My Father." In other words, there's great power available.

John 14, He says, "Whatever you ask in My name, I'll do it." And in verse 22, He sums it up by saying, "All things whatever you shall ask in prayer believing you shall receive." This is a tremendous thing. They're saying, "Lord, what power. You wish that tree dead, and it was dead."

And He says, "You've got the same power available. You've got the same power." And He turns it into a lesson about prayer for them, that you can see the same power working if you believe. .

Boy, when I see a verse like 22 of Matthew 21, "All things whatever you shall ask in prayer, believing you shall receive," that's a pretty dynamite promise, folks. And if you understand that that means all things in the will of God, it doesn't hurt it, it just makes it all the better. Right? Because what do you want? You only want what God wills. Right? I want whatever God wants for me. I want the best that God wants for me. I want the best that God wants for you. I want the best that God wants for this church. I want the best that God wants for this ministry, whatever it is. I want that. With all my heart I want that. And here the Lord says, "If you really believe God wants that and God can do that, then let's see the exercise of your faith in persistence. And some of us have not received the blessing of God in our lives simply because we have not persisted in prayer.

Now, my job is not to harmonize all of that with God's sovereignty. God does that part. I can't do that, but my job is to respond in faith and simple trust to the confident statement of verse 22, that if I ask in prayer, believing that God will do what He will do and is able to do what He says He will do, that I'll see His power. I just – I get tired of impotence. I get – I'm weary of a church without power. I'm weary of a life without power. I'm weary of people without power. I'm weary of not seeing the hand of God in an almighty way. I want God to be at work, and I know that the plan here is given very clearly if we ask in prayer, not doubting. And, you know, a lot of folks start their prayer – oh, great faith – and they don't get an answer in the next 24 hours, and... phist. That's not mustard seed; that's not getting stronger, and bigger, and larger. You keep pursuing, keep persisting, keep knocking, keep crying out.

J. Ligon Duncan: A Foreshadowing of Judgment: The Fruitless Fig Tree

I. (:18-19) Christ punishes pretended piety.

You'll see here Jesus address the issue of religious hypocrisy. If I could put this in a phrase, I might say it this way. Jesus is dealing in verses 18 and 19 with apparently fruitful fruitlessness.

Matthew is simply shortening the account and giving us an abbreviated version. There's no conflict between what Matthew says and what Mark said. You will notice, for instance, that Matthew is very, very vague about telling you the timeframe or using terms that specify exactly when things happen. That is because Matthew wants you to focus on one thing: the immediacy of the withering of this tree. He wants to show you a picture of the quickness of the judgment of God that is about to come against unbelieving Israel. It would be a matter of only years from the time that Jesus said these words to the time that Matthew wrote them down, to the time that Israel itself would be destroyed. And Jerusalem in particular would be savagely destroyed and burned and the people of Jerusalem would be driven out by the occupying Romans. God's judgment was going to come quickly against unbelieving Israel. And Matthew, the way he records this story, emphasizes the swiftness of that judgment. . .

Jesus is criticizing Jerusalem and her religious leaders. They appeared to be fruitful, but they were not. So Jesus here in this parable — in this story, in this event of the fig tree shows their future destruction. William Hendriksen says this. "The pretentious fig tree had its counterpart in the temple. There was bustling, religious activity there, but no sincerity and truth. Jesus was thus predicting the downfall of unfruitful Israel. Just as the cleansing of the temple was a symbolic denunciation of the Messiah, of the worship of the old Israel, so the withering of the fig tree was a symbolic denunciation by Him of the Jewish nation as the privileged people of God.” . . .

A person who is a hypocrite is more concerned about prestige than character. In fact, a person who is a hypocrite uses character, feigned character, simply as a means to an end. What they really want is to be esteemed by other people or not to be shamed. But they do not want to be close to God. And so Jesus brings a dire warning against them. They feign character in order to get what they really want, and what they really want is the applause of men. And Jesus wants us to understand how hypocrisy is a danger to our souls. Hypocrisy does not want to be shamed, and it wants to be liked and respected. And so it will hide certain sins of the heart so that no one will bring a reproach and so that you will be popular. But the more and more you hide that sin without confessing it or repenting of it, the more and more a wall is built in the heart until you become impervious to repentance and repentance is the very instrument of salvation in this case. . .

II. (:20-23) Christ’s disciples must realize the power of faith and prayer in the Christian life.

He makes it clear that His disciples must realize the power of faith and prayer in the Christian life. According to Matthew, one of the things that the disciples fixated on when they saw this miracle was the rapidity of the tree’s withering. They were impressed that it happened so soon. One night, and the tree was completely withered. . .

when He says if you believe, and he also speaks of prayer, He’s reminding us that He’s speaking about believing the Lord for things that He has promised in His word.

Michael Wilkins: The fig tree provided a striking lesson for the disciples. Just as its fruitfulness was a sign of its health, so fruitfulness was a sign of Israel’s faithfulness to the covenantal standards. Now that Israel, especially represented by its religious leadership, had perverted temple practices and had not repented at the appearance of Jesus Messiah proclaiming the arrival of the kingdom of heaven, Israel was being judged by God.

Jesus’ cursing the fig tree was not a fit of temper but a symbolic act, demonstrating that God’s creatures must produce that for which they were created. Even so we humans have been created by God to carry out his will, which means first of all entering into a relationship with him, which will then allow us to bear the fruit of that relationship, found especially in the fruit of the Spirit produced in our lives (cf. Gal. 4:6–7; 5:13–26). With the empowering of God’s Spirit, whatever he calls for us to do we can accomplish in his power, if we only will submit to his will.

TEXT: Matthew 21:23-27

TITLE: DISPUTE REGARDING THE SOURCE OF JESUS' AUTHORITY

BIG IDEA:

HARD HEARTS THAT REFUSE TO SUBMIT TO THE LEGITIMATE AUTHORITY OF JESUS CANNOT OBJECTIVELY JUDGE HIS CLAIMS

INTRODUCTION:

Warren Wiersbe: This series of three parables grew out of the demand of the chief priests and elders for Jesus to explain what authority He had for cleansing the temple. As the custodians of the spiritual life of the nation, they had the right to ask this question. But we are amazed at their ignorance. Jesus had given them three years of ministry, and they still would not face the facts. They wanted more evidence.

Walter Wilson: Undeterred by the hostile reception he received from the authorities on his first day in Jerusalem, Jesus once again enters the temple alone (21:23a; cf. 21:12a), once again is challenged by the authorities with a question (21:23b–c; cf. 21:16a), and once again responds with a counter-question (21:24–25a; cf. 21:16b).

Appropriately enough, the authorities raise a question about authority, and in so doing establish a basic rubric for the whole cycle of controversy stories and polemical parables that make up this part of the narrative (21:23 – 22:46). The reader, of course, recalls that Jesus teaches “as one having authority” (7:29, also with διδάσκω and ἐξουσία). In challenging this authority, the chief priests and the elders expose themselves to questions about the nature of their own authority. Indeed, the pericope (and the whole unit) can be understood as presenting a clash of different forms of authority. On one hand, there is the cultic authority of the chief priests (representing the temple) and the sociopolitical authority claimed by the elders “of the people” (21:23), who together with the scribes constitute the Sanhedrin, which in turn represents the nation. On the other hand, contrasting with this institutional basis of authority, the roles of king, teacher, and prophet are (as we have seen) all applicable to Jesus, though in this instance the association of Jesus with John the Baptist foregrounds the last of these roles (21:26; cf. 21:11), thereby drawing attention to his charismatic presence.

The character of this authority will be demonstrated in no small measure through the skillful manner in which Jesus debates his various opponents. In this case, he immediately understands that the question in 21:23c is a sham, and that his opponents are searching for some basis to accuse him of blasphemy (cf. 26:63–66). In response to their two-part question (regarding the nature and origin of his authority), Jesus responds with a two-part question of his own: was the baptism (and, by implication, ministry) of John the Baptist of heavenly or human origin (21:25a)? He prefaces the question by indicating that his willingness to answer their question is contingent upon how they answer his (21:24).

Stu Weber: The king's authority will threaten those who desire to usurp his authority for themselves. . . . If they really wanted a truthful answer, they would have admitted to the authority of God behind Jesus' teachings and miracles. Jesus knew they were not open to the truth, so he placed a hurdle between them and the answer to their question. They had to acknowledge that John's authority came from heaven. Their refusal to answer was acknowledgment of their resistance to the truth—that Jesus' authority came from God.

I. (:23) ENTRAPMENT QUESTION REGARDING THE SOURCE OF JESUS' AUTHORITY

A. Forum for Interrogation = the House of God

“And when He had come into the temple,”

Grant Osborne: In light of the imminent judgment that is his central theme at this time (see chs. 24–25) Jesus is likely proclaiming the judgment side of the arrival of the kingdom and calling for repentance. Most likely he is teaching in one of the porticoes in the Court of the Gentiles, where most teaching occurred.

B. Fallacious Interrogators = the Jewish Religious Leaders

“the chief priests and the elders of the people came to Him as He was teaching,”

Richard Gardner: The dispute narrated in verses 23-27 pits Jesus against two groups of Jewish leaders, one with the power of office {chief priests}, the other with representative authority (elders of the people; cf. Exod. 19:7; Isa. 3:14; Jer. 19:1). It is the same combination of opponents who shortly will plot Jesus' destruction (26:3-5) and condemn him to death after his arrest (26:57-68; 27:1-2). When these authorities question Jesus about his authority, they raise an issue that accompanies Jesus throughout the Gospel (cf. 7:28-29; 12:38; 16:13-15; 28:18): What are Jesus' credentials? Who or what authorizes him to act as he is now acting in the temple (cf. John 2:18)?

C. Fundamental Question = By What Authority and Who Gave You This Authority

“and said, ‘By what authority are You doing these things, and who gave You this authority?’”

Grant Osborne: The first question challenges his presumption to both teach and perform miracles in the temple; how can he act as both rabbi and prophet? In so doing they are laying a trap for him, since if he answers “human authority” he will contradict his actions, and if “divine authority,” he will be guilty of blasphemy. The second question assumes it could not have come from God, a possibility the leaders have long ago rejected. They are daring Jesus to incriminate himself by answering.

Leon Morris: The expression is very general and may cover the triumphal entry, the driving out of the traders, and the healings in the temple. Certainly these were significant happenings, and in the view of the questioners they should not be done without authority of some kind. What authority? The groups associated with the questioners had not given Jesus any authority, so they are intrigued. Their second question implies that nobody could assume authority. There had to be some superior person or institution that gave anyone the authority to act in ways like those Jesus had just demonstrated.

R. T. France: “These things” which the authorities object to are the openly messianic manner of his arrival and the high-handed way in which he has interfered with the business of the temple, compounded by his refusal to silence his young supporters. This northern villager, proclaimed by his followers as a prophet (v. 11), is assuming an authority which challenges the duly constituted leadership of the official guardians of the temple and of the religious life of Jerusalem. They could hardly ignore such a challenge. His behavior is not only highly irregular; it is a threat to their position. Just who does he think he is?

Donald Hagner: Not infrequently the request of information can hide, as here, a lack of receptivity and commitment.

Stanley Saunders: The question about the source of Jesus' power is not new; the Pharisees have already accused Jesus of casting out demons by Beelzebul (9:34; 12:24). These two questions together pose the fundamental terms of Jesus' struggle with the Jewish leaders and articulate the nature of the conflict that will lead to his crucifixion.

Daniel Doriani: The authorities think they have trapped Jesus with a dilemma. If he says he gained his right to criticize from a human authority, they will say, "But we are the human authority." But if he says his authority came from God, they will accuse him of blasphemy. So they decided in advance to reject both possible replies.

II. (:24-27) EMBARRASSING COUNTER TRAP

A. (:24-25a) Counter Question Posed by Jesus

1. (:24) Tit for Tat – I Will Answer If You Will Answer

"And Jesus answered and said to them, 'I will ask you one thing too, which if you tell Me, I will also tell you by what authority I do these things.'"

Grant Osborne: This is not just a way of avoiding giving an answer. The very question Jesus asks contains the answer to their two questions, for Jesus' mission and authority are tied closely to that of John the Baptist.

2. (:25a) The Authority Question Rephrased –

Based on Continuity with the Ministry of John the Baptist

"The baptism of John was from what source, from heaven or from men?"

Walter Wilson: Significantly, Jesus responds to a question about himself by talking about someone else, the presupposition being that there is a fundamental continuity between the authority that informs Jesus's ministry and the authority that informs John's.

Robert Gundry: John predicted that the one coming after him—that is, Jesus—would be stronger than he was (3:11). So if the chief priests and elders attribute heavenly authority to John's baptism, Jesus will ask them why they didn't believe John's prediction that Jesus has fulfilled, as proved by the marvels they've seen him perform the previous day right in the temple. From the quotation of Scripture in 3:3, of course, Matthew's audience know that John's baptism had divine authority behind it. "The crowd" consists of those who submitted to John's baptism because they considered him a prophet and who now follow Jesus as the stronger one predicted by John. With "we fear the crowd" the chief priests and elders confess to one another their principle of expedience and thus expose their guilt to Matthew and his audience.

D. A. Carson: He does not raise this question as a simple rebuke—as if to say that if the authorities cannot make up their minds about John, neither will they be able to do so about him. His question is far more profound. If the religious authorities rightly answer it, they will already have the correct answer to their own question. If they respond, “From heaven,” then they are morally bound to believe John—and John pointed to Jesus (see comments at 11:7–10; cf. Jn 1:19, 26–27; 3:25–30). They would, therefore, have their answer about Jesus and his authority. If they respond, “From men” (v.26), they offer the wrong answer—but they will not dare utter it for fear of the people. The religious authorities share Herod’s timidity (14:5).

R. T. France: The focus specifically on John’s baptism, rather than his call to repentance, picks out the element in his ministry which was likely to have been found most offensive by the Jewish establishment (see on 3:6), with its radical implications for the membership of the true Israel, a theme which will be explored further in Jesus’ parables which follow in 21:28 – 22:14.

B. (:25b-26) Consequences of their Answer Hamstring Their Response – Caught between a Rock and a Hard Place – No Safe Answer

1. (:25b) Considering the Answer: From Heaven

*“And they began reasoning among themselves, saying,
If we say, ‘From heaven,’ He will say to us, ‘Then why did you not believe him?’”*

Leon Morris: Their reasoning covers the consequences of each of the possible answers, and they give no attention whatever to the actual source of John’s baptism. They reasoned among themselves; this was not for public hearing.

R. T. France: The dilemma of the questioners is not an intellectual one—their view of John seems to have been clear enough—but tactical, involving the danger of “loss of face”. To voice their true view of John would have exposed them to popular anger, but to give an insincere answer would expose them to ridicule, since their rejection of John’s message was well-known, as Jesus will confirm in v. 32. While there is some ambivalence about the popular response to John as Jesus describes it in 11:16–19, the presupposition is that they went out to him as a prophet (11:9), even if his style of prophetic ministry proved not to be to their taste. John’s prophetic image is confirmed in 16:14, and his popular appeal, already mentioned in 14:5, is presupposed in v. 32.

2. (:26) Considering the Answer: From Men

“But if we say, ‘From men,’ we fear the multitude; for they all hold John to be a prophet.”

C. (:27) Contest Decisively Won by Jesus

1. Embarrassing Answer of Expediency by the Jewish Religious Leaders

“And answering Jesus, they said, ‘We do not know.’”

Walter Wilson: By responding out of cowardly self-interest (21:27a), the leaders demonstrate that their own authority is in fact human in character (21:25a), their failure to provide spiritual leadership revealing them to be blind guides (cf. 23:16–26). Their answer may be a calculating evasion, but the reader recognizes that in a real sense, the religious authorities do not “know” the truth about the nature of God’s involvement in the world.

D. A. Carson: Their equivocation gave Jesus a reason for refusing to answer their question. Rejection of revelation already given is indeed a slender basis on which to ask for more. In one sense, the Sanhedrin enjoyed not only the right but the duty to check the credentials of those who claimed to be spokesmen for God. But because they misunderstood the revelation already given in the Scriptures and rejected the witness of the Baptist, the leaders proved unequal to their responsibility. They raised the question of Jesus' authority; he raised the question of their competence to judge such an issue.

William Barclay: For a moment, the Jewish chief priests and elders were silent. Then they gave the lamest of all lame answers. They said: "We do not know." If ever anyone stood self-condemned, these men did. They ought to have known; it was part of the duty of the Sanhedrin, of which they were members, to distinguish between true and false prophets; and they were saying that they were unable to make that distinction. Their dilemma drove them into a shameful self-humiliation.

There is a grim warning here. There is such a thing as the deliberately assumed ignorance of cowardice. If we consult expediency rather than principle, our first question will be not 'What is the truth?' but 'What is it safe to say?' Again and again, the worship of expediency will drive us to a cowardly silence. We will lamely say: 'I do not know the answer,' when we know perfectly well the answer, but are afraid to give it. The true question is not 'What is it safe to say?' but 'What is it right to say?'

The deliberately assumed ignorance of fear and the cowardly silence of expediency are shameful things. If we know the truth, we are under obligation to tell it, though the heavens should fall.

2. End of Dispute Dictated by the Victor

"He also said to them,

'Neither will I tell you by what authority I do these things.'"

Robert Gundry: The chief priests and elders didn't really want to know the nature and source of his authority. They only wanted to embarrass him. So he doesn't tell them what they didn't want to know anyway, and embarrasses them instead.

Donald Hagner: If Jesus regarded the work of John as ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, "from heaven," it is clear that the same answer was implied with regard to his own ministry (cf. Bengel). That was implied already in the message that through his ministry the kingdom of God was being made manifest (cf. 12:28; 13:16–17).

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why do the Jewish religious leaders continue to test the wisdom and debate skills of Jesus after so many previous embarrassing failures?
- 2) Why is it sometimes best to answer a question with a question?
- 3) In what ways did Jesus view His message and ministry to be harmonious with that of John the Baptist?
- 4) How have you responded to the authority claims of Jesus over your life?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Michael Wilkins: Jesus's final conflict with the Jerusalem religious leaders began when he entered the city and acted prophetically in the temple (21:15–17), but at this point it escalates. The leaders' question about the source of his authority tends to set the tone for the controversy stories found throughout 21:23 – 22:46. Boring (1995: 409) takes all of 21:24 – 22:46 as a response to the leaders' question in 21:23. In his view, the two unanswerable questions Jesus puts to the leaders form the poles of a chiasmus:

- A Jesus's question (21:24–27)
 - B Three parables (21:28–32; 21:33–46; 22:1–14)
 - B' Three controversy stories (22:15–22; 22:23–33; 22:34–40)
- A' Jesus's question (22:41–46)

Whether or not the chiasm is valid, the ultimate conflict between Jesus and the leaders is indeed over the matter of his authority.

Leon Morris: The question of proper authority was important for the Jews of the day. They held that they were the people of God, and they therefore detested their Roman overlords. Of necessity they submitted to them, but they did not believe that the Romans had the right to govern them. They were God's own people, and their human lords were God's high priest and those associated with him in the appointed assemblies, the great Sanhedrin and the lesser councils throughout the land. People like John the Baptist and Jesus presented problems because they did not fit into this picture. They were not like the Romans, who ruled unjustly but had the military backing that enforced their demands. And they were not like the high priests and other officials, who because of their official position were regarded as authoritative persons by official Judaism. What authority, then, did they have?

Grant Osborne: The purpose of these controversies is to present both the messianic authority and teaching authority of Jesus in contrast to the growing rejection/apostasy of the leaders. In each of the episodes Jesus shows his superiority to the religious experts as he takes them on in rabbinic fashion and decimates them with his handling of Torah. Daube shows that the last four (22:15–46) correspond to the four main types of questions recognized by the rabbis:

- questions of wisdom, on a point of Torah (22:15–22);
- of mockery (scoffing at a belief), on the resurrection (22:23–33);
- of moral conduct, on the relationship between God and human beings (22:34–40);
- and of biblical exegesis, on a seeming contradiction between two passages (22:41–46).

Once again, Jesus is the final and authoritative interpreter of Torah (see on 5:17–20). The three parables between the first and second of the debates (21:28 – 22:14) center on the unbelief/opposition of the leaders and God's judgment of them. . .

In terms of reader response, there are two major issues here:

- (1) the absolute authority of Jesus, confirmed by the Baptist, and
- (2) the danger of self-righteous rejection of Jesus' authority, as exemplified in the leaders.

The first has been the message of Matthew throughout, the second is explored in 12:31–32; 13:11–15 and will dominate ch. 23. Rejection can go only so far, and then the opportunity to repent is gone, and only judgment remains (Heb 6:4–6; 10:26–31; 1 John 5:16. “It is a dreadful thing to fall into the hands of the living God” (Heb 10:31).

John MacArthur: The Authority of Jesus

The word “authority” is a strong word. It’s filled with meaning. When we hear the word “authority,” there’s a certain force about that word. There may be even a certain intimidation about that word. We talk about the authorities, and we rightfully have a sense of respect, maybe a sense of awe, maybe a sense of fear.

The word “authority” denotes permission. It denotes privilege; it denotes power; it denotes rule, control, influence. When someone has authority, that means they’re on top of other people. They have responsibility beyond the norm. They are able to determine things, to decide things, to render judgments, to wield certain rights and privileges. And we say in the home there’s authority, resting with the Father, with the parents. In the government there are authorities: the police and those who govern us. In the schools there are authorities. In business, in the plant, in the job – in any dimension of life there are authorities, people who have the privilege, the power, the permission to set the rules, to determine the judgments and the verdicts.

But there is one who has authority that surpasses all other authorities. In Matthew chapter 28, verse 18, Jesus said this, “All authority is given unto Me in heaven and in earth.” “All authority is given unto Me” – that is an amazing claim to privilege. That is an amazing claim to power, to permission, to right. And Jesus demonstrated that very well in His ministry. . .

Now, He had so much authority that He was a problem to the Jewish system. Because, you see, they believed that they were the authorities. And they had a very highly-developed and sophisticated system of authority. And He absolutely ignored it. He never asked their information for anything. He didn’t ask them to approve His doctrine. He didn’t ask them to approve His healings. He didn’t ask them to approve His casting out of demons. He didn’t ask them to approve His verdicts and His judgments. He didn’t ask them to help Him decide who were the children of God, and He didn’t ask for their advice on how to give eternal life. He totally ignored them. . .

You see, the Jews were amazed; they were distressed; they were appalled that He acted without any approval, without any authorization. I mean you just don’t go in and cleanse the temple. He never consulted the Sanhedrin. He never quoted an eminent rabbi. He did what He wanted; He said what He wanted, and He acted as He wanted. Such behavior was absolutely unacceptable to them. You see, rabbinical teaching had no inherent authority. The rabbis quoted the rabbis, who quoted the rabbis, who quoted the rabbis, who quoted the rabbis, and that’s the only authority they ever had. And you had to get approval from the Sanhedrin. You had to be ordained by the Sanhedrin to function as an accepted rabbi.

But Jesus was His own authority, because all authority had been given to Him by God, and He never had authorization from men for anything at all. In fact, He ignored their whole system of authorization, and this sets up conflict. It sets up conflict. All through His ministry, He’s in conflict with existing authorities in the Jewish community. And it comes to a head as we come now to Matthew chapter 21. And it comes to a very, very severe conflict. . .

So, He went into the temple and walking about, amidst the mass of people, He is teaching and preaching: teaching the kingdom, preaching the Gospel. And likely He talked about sin – the wretchedness of it and the folly of hypocritical religion. And likely He talked about judgment, the inevitability of hell for those who refused God’s truth and God’s way of salvation.

And no doubt He talked about righteousness, the hopelessness of self-righteousness and trying to attain salvation by your own good works. And He must have talked about humility and the place for brokenness, and self-emptying, and self-crucifixion, and bankruptcy of spirit. And He must have talked about love – the love of God and the love men should have for God. And He must have talked about peace. He must have talked about the fact that God wanted to make peace with men, not on a temporary basis, but on a permanent basis.

And maybe He talked about false prayers. And maybe He talked about vain repetition. And maybe He spoke about doing religious deeds to be seen by men. And maybe He talked about false humility. And maybe He spoke about spiritual pride. And maybe He talked about the cost of following Him. And maybe He talked about persecution. And maybe He talked about eternal glory.

Perhaps He spoke about the law of God, the Word of God; perhaps about honesty, or marriage, or forgiveness, or true riches, or faith, or hope, or grace, or mercy, or false teachers. Maybe He talked about entering the kingdom. Maybe about a narrow gate and a narrow way, or a broad gate and a broad way. Maybe He talked about life. Maybe He talked about death. Because He must have talked about the kingdom and preached the Gospel. . .

When unbelief investigates the truth, it comes up with the wrong answers, see? Because it’s already predisposed to ignore the facts. Typical of people who come to look at the Gospel message and look at the virtue of Jesus Christ, already having convinced themselves that their way is right and the way of God is wrong. And no matter how much evidence you give them, they’ll still reject, because that’s their predisposition.

J. Ligon Duncan: By What Authority?

I. Our response to Jesus’ authority is a spiritual diagnostic.

It is an indicator of where your heart is with God.

But I want you to see, friends, that the question that they are asking Him has already been plainly answered. It is vital for you to understand that. There is absolutely no question about the answer to this question. Jesus by His own words, His own teaching, by His claims, by His miracles, and by His life had made it abundantly clear where the source of His authority came from. Furthermore, God had witnessed to Jesus Himself. You remember, the Father spoke from heaven to accredit His ministry at the baptism of John. The Father spoke from heaven at His transfiguration. The Son was witnessed to by men, beginning with John the Baptist who said of Him, “Behold the Lamb of God who comes to take away the sin of the world.” And even His enemies, and even demons would confess that He was the Messiah, the Son of God. And furthermore, Scripture corroborated the claims that He was making. And so God and man and Scripture coalesced to testify to the authority of Jesus Christ. So the question that these leaders were asking was a question that had already been answered. And the reason they are asking this question is not because Jesus has not made a clear testimony to who He is. It is because their hearts are hard.

II. Jesus Responds

He's not just being tricky. He's saying, that if you answer this question, then you've got the answer to the question you just asked Me. If you answer rightly that John's ministry was from God, and John said of Me, behold the Lamb of God who comes to be slain for the sins of the world. If John acknowledges Him to be the Son of God, then you've got your answer. Jesus' answer points unambiguously to the authority of His person and His work. The witness of John shows that the work and the teaching of Jesus' ministry is from God.

Jesus in responding to His accusers shows that the claims that He has made about Himself are corroborated by God, by faithful men like John, and by the Scriptures.

III. The response of the leaders to Jesus.

They begin reasoning amongst themselves, and they begin trying to figure out how to get out of this mess that they've gotten themselves in. But their reasoning was not careful reflection on what Jesus had said. Their reason was not careful consideration of the claims of the Lord Jesus Christ. Their reasoning was rather scheming to figure out how to avoid answering the question. Jesus had put a question to them that they did not want to answer. And basically they considered amongst themselves how they could go about lying in response to that question. Instead of saying to Jesus, "Really I don't want to answer that question," or "We don't want to answer that question," they said, "We don't know." The chief priests were politicians. And the elders derived their authority as representatives of the people. And so they were being driven by popular discernment and perception. In other words, they were being led by polls. And the irony of this is these people who so wanted to assert their own authority are totally captive to popular opinion. So that they have no authority whatsoever in face of the question that Jesus Christ puts to them. Larry Richards says this: "Unwilling and unable to take a stand or exercise the authority they claim to have, these men replied, we don't know. Because that was the politically correct thing to do." . . .

And yet there are people who do not accept the claims of Christ. Why? Because they don't have enough information? No. Because there's not enough evidence? No. Because the claims aren't clear? No. Because they don't want to bow the knee. You see, when we come to Christ we don't negotiate terms. It's unconditional surrender. Come to the foot of that cross and He accepts only those who bow the knee and embrace him as Savior and Lord. He's given all the testimony in the world in the glory of His gospel, in His person, in His work, and our only proper response is to bow the knee and embrace Him.

TEXT: Matthew 21:28-32

TITLE: PARABLE OF THE TWO SONS – EXPOSING THE UNBELIEF OF THE JEWISH RELIGIOUS LEADERS

BIG IDEA:

ACTIONS MEAN MORE THAN MERE WORDS – GOOD INTENTIONS CANNOT BE SUBSTITUTED FOR GENUINE REPENTANCE AND THE OBEDIENCE OF FAITH

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: This is a parable about rejection and unbelief, a reluctance and yet a final willingness to do the Father’s will (the tax collectors and sinners) vs. an initial willingness and yet final refusal to follow his will (the leaders). It imparts the message that it matters more “what one does” (the tax collectors and sinners) than what one is (the religious leaders). . .

The allegorical elements are clear: the father is God, the vineyard is his kingdom community, the first son the outcasts, and the second son the leaders. The sinners turned against God for much of their lives but have now come back to God (and entered his vineyard) by turning to Jesus. The religious officials originally agreed to do God’s will but have now turned their backs on God by rejecting his Son. The obvious turning point in both cases is Jesus. . .

The leaders and the sinners show the contrast between those who say they will follow God, yet never come to faith and obedience, vs. those who initially reject but find repentance and belief, then do the Father’s will. The other aspect is that it is the despised members of society rather than the religious elite who are willing to do so.

Stu Weber: Jesus had struck the first of three blows against the credibility of the leaders of Israel—against their qualification to serve as the shepherds of God's people. In spite of the religious show they put on and their claims to be obedient to God, they had rejected the mission God had given them (see Ezek. 34). They were guilty of neglect and abuse of God's flock.

D. A. Carson: The shock value of Jesus’ statement can be appreciated only when the low esteem in which tax collectors were held, not to mention prostitutes, is taken into account. In our day of soft pornography in the media, we are not shocked by “prostitutes.” But Jesus is saying that the scum of society, though it says no to God, repents, performs the Father’s will, and enters the kingdom, whereas the religious authorities loudly say yes to God but never do what he says, and therefore they fail to enter. Their righteousness is not enough (cf. 5:20). Thus the parable makes no distinction between Jew and Gentile but between religious leader and public sinner.

Walter Wilson: Insofar as it illustrates the need to both hear and do what God requires, the parable in 21:28–31 reinforces the main point of the parable Jesus had used to conclude the Sermon on the Mount in 7:24–27.

Donald Hagner: Doing the will of the Father, for Jesus, is more than simply a matter of words; it is always a matter of deeds (cf. esp. 7:21–27; 25:31–46). It is one thing to say one does or will do the will of the Father; it is another thing actually to do it. Words alone mean nothing. A certain claim of serving God and being faithful to Torah went with being the religious leadership of the Jewish people. Yet in fact these leaders were not obedient to God. They had not heeded the message of John the Baptist, just as they now opposed the message of Jesus himself. But the paradox lay in the fact that the despised sinners, the tax collectors and harlots—those with no claim to righteousness whatsoever—believed both John and Jesus. Thus they, rather than the “righteous” establishment (cf. 9:13), were entering the kingdom of God. They who knew themselves to be desperately needy of grace were the ones open to it and thus the ones who received it.

Daniel Doriani: The parable teaches two lessons.

- First, anyone can come to Jesus through repentance and faith.
- Second, it is never enough to make promises to God, or to claim to believe, or to recite a creed. What counts is actual devotion: love of God, worship, and loving service to others.

In almost every church there are pretenders. Pastors rarely know who they are, but the Lord knows and he will reveal the truth to all who are willing to hear.

It is simple enough if the Lord is nudging someone to give up his or her charade. They need only repent of their pride and deceit, then heed his call to love and serve him. Why should anyone wait? There may never be a better time to get right with God. Let no one think he will repent later. If anyone chooses to deafen himself to God’s call, later may never come.

Ray Fowler: This is the ultimate meaning of the parable of the two sons. Repentance and faith are more important than outward religious show. It doesn’t matter if you say you believe in God if your actions don’t show it. Repentance trumps religion every time. A true conversion involves repentance from sin and turning to God in faith through Jesus his Son.

In other words, it doesn’t matter how religious you are. If you do not repent and believe in Jesus, you will not enter the kingdom of God.

And, it doesn’t matter how sinful you are. If you do repent and believe in Jesus, you will enter the kingdom of God.

What you say and what you do matters. If you truly believe in God, you will do what he tells you. And he tells you to repent of your sins, and to put your faith in Jesus his Son.

(:28a) PROLOGUE – ENGAGING THE TARGET AUDIENCE

“But what do you think?”

Grant Osborne: The introductory “What do you think?” occurs often (17:25; 18:12; 22:17, 42; 26:66) and asks the listener (here the leaders) to ponder carefully what Jesus is saying. In this sense it is similar to an “amen” (ἀμήν) saying (e.g., 21:21, 31) in pointing to an important truth. Through it we the real readers are also invited to think carefully about the story’s message.

Ray Fowler: Jesus begins by asking them, “What do you think?” Jesus was often interactive as a teacher – asking questions, probing people’s thoughts and motivations, helping people to dig deeper beneath the surface. Here he engages the religious leaders up front and lets them know he wants their feedback on what he is about to say.

Keith Throop: Context: Jesus had said He would tell them by what authority He did the things that He did, but only if they first answered His question about John the Baptist. Since they didn't want to give Him a straight answer to His question, He followed through on what He said and gave them no answer to their question.

Yet He doesn't simply drop the matter. Instead, He tells a short parable and continues to question them in order to highlight the real issue, namely their unbelief.

I. (:28b-30) SIMPLE PARABLE OF THE TWO SONS

(:28b) The Situation

"A man had two sons,"

A. (:28c-29) The First Son of False Profession

1. (:28c) Command of the Father

"and he came to the first and said, 'Son, go work today in the vineyard.'"

2. (:29) Hypocritical Response of the First Son

"And he answered and said, 'I will, sir'; and he did not go."

William Barclay: This parable teaches us that promises can never take the place of performance, and fine words are never a substitute for fine deeds. The son who said he would go, and did not, had all the outward marks of courtesy. In his answer, he called his father 'sir' with all respect. But a courtesy which never gets beyond words is a totally illusory thing. True courtesy is obedience, willingly and graciously given.

B. (:30) The Second Son of Genuine Repentance

1. Command of the Father

"And he came to the second and said the same thing."

2. Repentant Response of the Second Son

"But he answered and said, 'I will not'; yet he afterward regretted it and went."

II. (:31-32) STRONG REBUKE OF THE JEWISH RELIGIOUS LEADERS

A. (:31a) Self Incrimination

1. You Make the Call

"Which of the two did the will of his father?"

Jeffrey Crabtree: The power of choice is one of the presuppositions that made this parable work. Both sons made a real choice. The father did not choose for them. By His application, Jesus showed that individual choices determine entrance into the kingdom.

2. No Argument Here

"They said, 'The latter.'"

Stu Weber: Actions are more significant than words. This was so obvious that even Jesus' opponents answered correctly. It was the first son—the one who initially said no but who ultimately obeyed—who did the will of the father.

B. (:31b-32) Shocking Application to the Jewish Religious Leaders

1. (:31b) Worse Off than Tax-gatherers and Harlots

“Jesus said to them, ‘Truly I say to you that the tax-gatherers and harlots will get into the kingdom of God before you.’”

2. (:32) Confirmed Rejectors of the Way of Righteousness Preached by John the Baptist

a. First Indictment

1) You Failed to Believe

“For John came to you in the way of righteousness and you did not believe him;”

John Schultz: Jesus actually puts the priests and elder in the same category with the prostitutes and tax collectors. The difference is that the latter refused initially, but ended up repenting. The former kept on refusing. Jesus tried to make these pious people jealous by putting the prostitutes and tax collector before them as an example. Jesus also emphasized that there could be no doubt about the heavenly origin of John's baptism. He did not defend His cleansing of the temple or apologize for it. He attacked His accusers. John's baptism and the cleansing of the temple belong to the same category. There is also a relationship between the cleansing of the human heart through confession of sin, conversion and the cleansing of the temple. The temple was symbolic of God's revelation of Himself on earth. As Jesus indicated earlier in connection with another cleansing of the temple, the actual revelation of God is in the resurrected body of Jesus Christ.² We become members of that resurrected body through regeneration, of which the baptism of John was an indicator.

Ray Fowler: Jesus says, “John came to show you the way of righteousness.” What was the way of righteousness John came to show? John showed the way of righteousness was repentance and faith in Jesus. We read in Matthew 3: “In those days John the Baptist came, preaching in the Desert of Judea and saying, ‘Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is near.’” (Matthew 3:1-2)

So, John preached a message of repentance, and then he also pointed the people to Jesus. We read in John 1:29: “The next day John saw Jesus coming toward him and said, ‘Look, the Lamb of God, who takes away the sin of the world!’” (John 1:29)

John showed the way of righteousness was repentance and faith in Jesus rather than outward religious show. But the religious leaders did not believe him. In fact, even when they saw the tax collectors and prostitutes repenting and believing, they still did not repent and believe in Jesus themselves. This made them even more guilty than before.

They chose outward religious show over heartfelt repentance and faith in Jesus. And so, they were like the second son who said he would obey his father, but then did not do what his father told him. Jesus asked them, “What do you think? Which son did what his father wanted?” They already answered, “The first son.” Earlier they had tried to trap Jesus and failed. Now Jesus has trapped them, and they stand condemned by their own words.

2) Tax-gatherers and Harlots Did Believe

“but the tax-gatherers and harlots did believe him;

Donald Hagner: Jesus now provides the logic underlying his explanation of the parable. God had provided an invitation to the Jewish leaders in the preaching of John the Baptist (in mind from the preceding pericope), which they had rejected. John had come ἐν ὁδῷ δικαιοσύνης, “in the way of righteousness.” Probably this is to be understood as a reference to the process of the accomplishment of salvation in history through God’s sending of John as the forerunner of Jesus (the phrase occurs also in Prov 8:20; 12:28; 21:21[LXX]; 2 Peter 2:21, but in these instances the emphasis is clearly on ethical righteousness). John came preaching the imminence of the kingdom of God (cf. 3:2; 11:11–12). Yet the Jewish leaders “did not believe him” (οὐκ ἐπιστεύσατε αὐτῷ; cf. v. 25). The tax collectors and harlots, on the other hand, responded to John’s message (for the response of the former, cf. Luke 3:12; 7:29). Jesus further contrasts the Jewish leadership with the first, initially disobedient son by noting that unlike him they did not “change their mind afterwards” (οὐδὲ μετεμελήθητε ὕστερον; cf. the same language in v. 29) and respond appropriately by believing him. The words τοῦ πιστεῦσαι αὐτῷ, “and believe him,” ordinarily expressing purpose, here are exegetical, providing the content of the preceding verb (see MHT 1.216–17). Their culpability is stressed by the participle ἰδόντες, which may be taken as concessive, hence “although seeing.” The object of the participle remains unexpressed, although presumably intended is the witnessing of the response of the unrighteous to the ministry of the Baptist. The Jewish authorities thus have no excuse. The contrast noted here between the receptivity of sinners and the hardheadedness of the Jewish religious leadership in relation to the message of Jesus is a common motif in the Gospel tradition (cf. 9:10–13; Luke 7:29–30, 35–50; 18:9–14; John 7:48). The connection between John the Baptist and Jesus is such that those who reject John also reject Jesus.

b. Second Indictment = Persistence in Unbelief Despite Evidence of Transformed Lives

“and you, seeing this, did not even feel remorse afterward so as to believe him.”

Stanley Saunders: [Jesus’] own application of the parable turns on two details:

- First, Jesus links the parable with the preceding discussion about John’s baptism (21:25–27). For him, doing the father’s will corresponds to believing John, who “came to you in the way of righteousness,” and bearing the fruit of repentance (21:32a; cf. 3:2, 8). By this definition of “doing” what the father asks, all would agree that the leaders have failed.
- The second important detail concerns the matter of repentance. Jesus says that while John’s proclamation prompted belief among the tax collectors and sinners, “you did not change your minds and believe him” (21:32). Here Jesus uses the same word for “change your mind” as he had for the first child’s turnabout after refusing to go (21:29). Because the tax collectors and sinners did change their minds (which Jesus here equates with repentance) and bore the fruit of righteousness (e.g., joining at table with Jesus and his disciples, cf. 9:10–11), they will go into God’s kingdom ahead of the leaders, who did not change their minds and go into the vineyard (Israel) to work (bear fruit) (21:31).

Leon Morris: People whom they despised, the tax collectors and the harlots, were more open to John’s message. They did believe him, which means that they responded to his call for repentance and amended their whole way of living and of approach to God. Clearly the change was evident, for Jesus says, “you had seen this.” But even the evidence of what a true response to John’s preaching could do in people’s lives did not produce a change in the conventionally religious. They did not repent afterward, that is, after they had seen what repentance effected in the lives of those who responded to John; they did not believe John. Repentance and believing John are closely connected; had they produced the one they would have produced the other, but they produced neither.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) If there has been no transformation of life, has there really been any conversion?
- 2) Does our life match our profession of faith?
- 3) Do we freely receive all repentant sinners into the body of Christ?
- 4) How can we address religious hypocrites with the promise of the offer of the gospel?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Charles Swindoll: The father in the story clearly represented God the Father. The first son, “I Won’t,” represented the nonreligious, openly sinful tax collectors and prostitutes —the worst of the worst in the minds of religious Jews. These men and women heard John the Baptizer’s message and defiantly turned away from it, but then, after thinking it over, they believed and repented. Meanwhile, the “I Will” son reflected those who appear obedient and faithful on the outside but prove to be wicked and disobedient. Specifically, he represented Israel’s religious leaders who professed to believe, but who, deep within, didn’t. Jesus declared that those deemed “sinners” by the religious authorities would enter the kingdom of God before them. Ouch! Jesus pulled no punches in this straightforward rebuke of His devious critics. If the religious leaders hadn’t gotten the veiled references to their wickedness in His earlier parables, they certainly did now. Jesus directly pointed His finger at them and replayed their own rejection of John the Baptizer (21:32).

R. T. France: The Jewish leaders (like the second son) claimed to be living in obedience to God’s law, and kept themselves strictly apart from those who (like the first son) made no such claim. It was Jesus’ interest in such “tax collectors and sinners” (Luke 15:1–2) which gave rise to another parable about two sons (Luke 15:11–32). In this gospel the “underclass” of Jewish society have also been described as “tax collectors and sinners” (9:10, 11; 11:19), and on two occasions the Jewish tax collectors have been even more dismissively linked with Gentiles (5:46–47; 18:17). The substitution of “prostitutes” here for either “sinners” or “Gentiles” gives an even more offensive comparison, especially in so male-dominated a society as first-century Palestine. These are the people whom the “chief priests and elders of the people” would most despise and most heartily thank God that they were not like (cf. Luke 18:11). They had no place in respectable, religious Jewish society—how much less in the kingdom of God. So when Jesus speaks not only of their entering God’s kingdom but also going in there first, he is making a no less radical pronouncement than when he spoke of Gentiles coming into the kingdom of heaven to sit with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob while the “sons of the kingdom” found themselves outside (8:11–12).

Klyne Snodgrass: The primary feature of this text is clear. God requires productive and obedient living from his people. Claims and concerns for appearance are not enough. Churches often push for membership and professions of faith but allow (or even foster) a separation between believing and doing. How did people ever get the idea that obedience to the will of God is optional? Many parables, and especially this one, push for integrity of life before God. Talk and external appearance are cheap; what counts is actually doing the will of the father from the heart. Any separation of believing and doing is a distortion of the gospel message and is directly confronted by this parable. A person cannot believe apart from obedience. (Stories With Intent: A Comprehensive Guide to the Parables of Jesus, p. 275)

John MacArthur: The Authority of Jesus

It’s a parable. Very simple. A father has two sons. The reason you have a father and two sons here is because built into that relationship you have a responsibility for obedience. The father goes to his sons. He runs a vineyard. He says, “Go to the vineyard and go to work.” Son number one says, “I will not,” but afterwards, he repents and goes. Son number two says, “I will,” and never does. It would seem to me that somewhere there ought to be son number three who said, “I will,” and did. But not in this story. You just have two bad ones. It’s a characterization of humanity. See?

“What do you think?” He says.” And He says, in verse 31, “Which of the two did the will of his father?”

“And they say unto Him, ‘The first.’” And they’re so excited to be able to answer a question, thinking that at last they’ve got one that won’t incriminate them. But it did. “The first, the first. I mean the guy who did it was the guy who said he wouldn’t, but repented and did.”

Well, they were right. That was the characterization, the parable. Fourth is the connection. How does He connect that with them? How does He apply that? This is devastating. When they hurriedly answered, “The first,” they put themselves in a dire situation for a great rebuke. . .

The point here is you have people who claim obedience and don’t obey, people who deny obedience but ultimately do, and that’s the difference. Tax collectors and harlots go into the kingdom of God before you. I mean that is a strong statement, and boy, have they lost face in front of the crowd. He’s not saying, “You’re going to go in after them.” That’s not the implication. The idea is, “They’re going to go in, and you’re not.” Religion doesn’t get you in the kingdom. And sin repented of and forgiven doesn’t keep you out. Isn’t that good news? They were the worst of humanity. They were the very worst of humanity.

But the Gospels tell us, so beautifully, that in the ministry of John, many – it says, “Many harlots believed on Him.” It was the people who were overwhelmed with their sin. And they came down to John, and they said, “We got to get ready for the kingdom. If the Messiah’s coming, we got to get ready. We want to confess. We want to repent of our sins.”

But when the Pharisees – you remember in Matthew 3? – came down, and John was baptizing? And John says, “You snakes. You snakes. Who warned you to flee from the wrath to come? You better bring forth fruits unto repentance, because the Messiah's coming, and when He gets here, He's going to take the ax, and He's going to lay it at the root of the tree. And" – he says – "He's going to come, and in His hand is the fan, and He's going to separate the wheat and the chaff, and He's going to start a furnace of fire."

In other words, he gave them a whole judgment message. He was taking the sinners in, and they were confessing and repenting and being baptized in a baptism of repentance to get ready for the Messiah. And the religious leaders were coming, and not accepting the message, and not believing at all, and not repenting. . . .

And then comes your second indictment, because you, too, have sat and seen that power in that Gospel transform lives. And you've seen people's lives changed. And their lives transformed, and even after having seen that, you still don't believe. That's a double indictment. And the word that we see in this, to those men, is a word of final judgment; a word of doom; a word of hell; hopelessness for those who had been exposed to the full light of the Son of God, the full light of the prophet of God, the full light of the prophet of God - John the Baptist. They'd seen it all; they'd heard it all, and they wouldn't believe the message, and they wouldn't even believe the transforming power.

J. Ligon Duncan: The Two Sons

This story, this parable of Jesus, is unique to Matthew. You won't find it in the other gospel writers. It sets forth beautifully the comfort of repentance to those who have sinned and yet have seen their sin and turned from it and come to Christ. But it also has in it a very straightforward, powerful warning against hypocrites and the danger of their position. . . .

I. (:28-31a) A Picture of Israel's State.

Jesus is telling the parable in order to show Jewish religious leaders what Israel looks like in terms of its spiritual condition in the weight of John the Baptist's and Jesus' ministry. He's saying basically there have been two responses to John's ministry, and these are two responses. . . .

Basically, Jesus is asking this question: both of these sons responded wrongly in the first place, so which of them was right with God at the end of this scenario? The one who said that he would but didn't, or the one who said that he wouldn't but later did? Jesus is showing us a picture of a repentant son and a hypocritical son. The repentant son is the one who had first rejected God's commands, but then later had a change of heart and did what his father told him to do. The hypocritical son is the one who pretends to be very concerned and obedient to his father, but then never does his father's will. Jesus, in telling this parable, is showing these Jewish religious leaders themselves in talking about the son who says, "No, I will not." . . .

The message is, of course, that God is more willing to receive repentant sinners than sinners are to repent of their sins. Jesus is saying to us in this parable that the father is far more ready to receive you than you are to let go of your sins. His message to those in Israel, even to those Pharisees, is that if they would but relinquish their sin and cast themselves on the mercy of God, they will find the favor of God, the mercy of God, the grace of God. He will receive them. And so we learn here that God delights when the wicked turn from their sin to him. That's the great message here – the priority of repentance.

II. Jesus condemns hypocrisy.

God will exclude from His kingdom all those who are right in their own eyes. Why do you think Jesus is so strident when He speaks about the spiritual danger of hypocrisy? Let me tell you why in one phrase. Hypocrisy immunizes you from grace. Hypocrisy immunizes you from grace. The hypocrite wants to pretend he is right. He wants to pretend to be righteous. He wants to pretend to be in right relationship with God, even when he's not. And therefore, He immunizes himself from the grace which God is waiting to shower upon everyone who will simply admit that they are in need of a Savior. You see, if you don't think you need a Savior, then the offer of a Savior means nothing to you. If you don't think you need forgiveness of sins, then some preacher standing up and preaching on for half an hour about the glories of forgiveness of sins in Christ means nothing to you because you don't think you need it, and so Jesus is strident when He speaks to the sin of hypocrisy because it's a soul-killing sin. It immunizes us to the message of grace. . .

On the other hand, these Jewish leaders claimed to be outwardly obedient. They made a lot of confession with their lips, but their lives, their hearts, were not right with God. They were shutting themselves out and they were shutting their followers out of the kingdom by their hypocrisy. Their pride, their hypocrisy had two or three elements that I'd like to explore. The root sins connected to their hypocrisy were as follows: first, pride. These religious leaders acted like the kingdom was theirs, not God's. They didn't realize that they were merely God's appointed ministers in that kingdom; they had acted as if that kingdom belonged to them and not to God. We'll see that even more clearly in the next parable that Jesus sees, but its very clear that pride is at the root of their hypocrisy.

Secondly, however, they had a false understanding of God's love. They thought that they needed to look in order to obtain God's grace. They thought that there was something that they could do which would establish God's favor toward them. They thought that there was something that they needed to do in order for God to love them. They were wrong about that. God was far more willing to show them mercy and grace than they were to let go of their sin.

Finally, they desired more than anything else not to be shamed by their sins. They wanted to be respected and honored amongst the people of God, but they did not want to own up to the shame of their sin, and because they did not want to face the shame of their sin, they were hypocritical and they pretended as if their sin was not there. . .

We must be careful to care more about the reality of our relationship with God, than about other people's perception of our relationship with God. We need to care more about God's opinion of us than man's opinion of us. Hypocrisy is a soul-killing sin, you see, just because it cuts us off from the grace of God. Repentance leads us to obedience into the ways of righteousness. But hypocrisy insulates us from obedience. It makes us work very hard to look one way on the outside that we're really not on the inside; and that is not the way of righteousness that John taught.

S. Lewis Johnson: The Authority of John and Jesus

He moves on to discuss by an illustration the situation in Judaism at this time, and this passage, incidentally, is connected with the preceding, because in verse 32 he says, for John came out in the way of righteousness and you believed him not, but the tax collectors and the harlots believed him, and ye, when ye had seen it, repented not afterward that ye might believe him, so it is evident that this next illustration has a great deal to do with this ministry of John the Baptist. It is a very simple little story, incidentally. . .

It is one of the major points in this parable that we have a need that belief should behave in accordance with our belief. Moral standards today are still valid ,even in the midst of today's miasma of relativity. There is a story of a Scottish elder who was going to take a trip to the Holy Land, and he was very thrilled over it. The trouble with this elder was he was really a disagreeable person around the church, and so when he told the minister he was going to the Holy Land. He said, not only am I going to the Holy Land, but he said, I got a copy of the Ten Commandments, and I'm going to climb Mt. Sinai, and from the top of Mt. Sinai I'm going to read the Ten Commandments.

The minister said, I have got a better idea. He said what? He said, stay home and do them.

You know, we make these loud professions of orthodoxy, but it is extremely significant that these professions make these realities. And finally, I want you to notice one last thing here. Will you look at that word in verse 31 before you, that prepositional phrase, verily I say unto you, the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you? Now you know, I think from this story, you might have expected the Lord Jesus to say the publicans and harlots are going into the kingdom of God instead of you. But he didn't say that.

He said, before you, which leaves the door open, and you can see that even here in the midst of their sham and pretense and hypocrisy, we still have an unlimited invitation to faith in the Lord Jesus. The publicans and harlots – true, they have precedence over you now. They have already gone into the kingdom of God before you, but it's before you and the promise still remains for you. You have lost the precedence, but not the promise, and for open neglectors and nominal followers of the Lord Jesus, that is a promise the word of God contains.

TEXT: Matthew 21:33-46

TITLE: PARABLE OF THE WICKED TENANT FARMERS

BIG IDEA:

THE WICKEDNESS OF ISRAEL'S RULERS IN REJECTING GOD'S PROPHETS AND EVENTUALLY HIS OWN SON HAS CAUSED A RADICAL SHIFT AWAY FROM A KINGDOM FOCUS ON THE NATION OF ISRAEL

INTRODUCTION:

This parable must be interpreted from the perspective of the Apostle Paul's discussion in Romans 9-11 of how the nation of Israel fits into God's plan for the future. Jesus is prophesying the transition from the emphasis on the nation of Israel to the Church Age and the times of the Gentiles. But that does not mean that the church has permanently replaced Israel in God's kingdom program. Her blinding is only partial and only temporary while the Gentile believers are grafted into the people of God. But eventually there will be a national repentance in the end times and all of the nation of Israel at that time will be saved. But here we see the dramatic rejection of the Jewish religious leaders and the nation itself due to persistent unbelief and rejection of God's prophets and then God's own Son, the Messiah.

Donald Hagner: As in the parables on either side of this one, the emphasis here again falls on the unreceptivity of the Jews and in particular upon the Jewish religious establishment. This is heightened by the motif of the rejection and murder of the servants and finally the son. Here the correspondence between the story of the parable and the historical rejection of the prophets and the Son of God is nothing less than remarkable. The reference to the killing of the son (v. 39) and the rejection of the stone (v. 42) become in effect further prophecies of what is to befall the Son (cf. 16:21; 17:22-23; 20:18-19). What is most astonishing, however, is the salvation-historical perspective contained in the reference to the transferring of the vineyard from the original tenants to new ones—spelled out specifically as the transference of the kingdom of God to a new people (v. 43). For Matthew's Christian-Jewish readers, this served to explain both the present futility of the contemporary Judaism of the synagogue and the emergence of the new entity, largely but not exclusively Gentile in composition, the church. Finally determinative for this sequence of events was the response given to the Son sent by the Father. Those who reject the Son, who has become the cornerstone of the new reality of the church, which becomes in effect the new Israel, forfeit their favored position and bring themselves into judgment (v. 44), while those who receive the Son receive with him the blessed reality of the now-dawning kingdom of God (for the decisive importance of relation to the Son, cf. 10:32-33). Then, as now, relationship to Jesus is finally what matters.

Bock: This parable is one of the most important that Jesus tells, because it overviews the history of the leaders' response to Jesus. Here is a case of a parable with clear allegorical features, since virtually every step in the story has a correspondence in Israel's history.

R. T. France: The story of an absentee landowner reflects a familiar economic situation at the time; some of the chief priests and elders to whom Jesus is speaking would probably have owned land away from Jerusalem. The landowner must be a wealthy man, because a newly planted vineyard could not be expected to produce fruit for at least four years, during which he would have no return on his capital outlay. Once the vines began to fruit there would be an agreed proportion of the crop due to the owner, leaving the tenant to derive their living from the rest. The fault of the tenants in withholding the due produce (and in the violence perpetuated on the slaves) is massively compounded by their decision to murder the owner's son and so to attempt to take over the property. At this point the story has moved away from everyday reality, and, as often happens in parables (notably in 22:7), the intended symbolism has apparently invaded the tory-line: the murder of the son represents the forthcoming execution of Jesus.

(:33a) PROLOGUE – ENGAGING THE TARGET AUDIENCE

“Listen to another parable.”

John MacArthur: He uses the Greek word allos for “another.” It means another of the same kind. He has just given them a parable about two sons. And here is another parable in the same vernacular, in the same style. But more than that, the parable of the two sons was a parable about judgment. And here is another parable about judgment, another one of the same kind. It is a judgment parable. For they have manifested collectively a rejection of Jesus Christ. And so, the parables He gives them are parables that bring upon them the judgment due to those who reject Him. They have rejected Him; so, in these parables, He rejects them. And they are powerful to say the least.

I. (:33b-39) RELATING THE PARABLE OF THE WICKED TENANT FARMERS – CONTRAST BETWEEN EXTREME WICKEDNESS AND EXTREME FORBEARANCE

A. (:33) The Situation – Landowner Cultivates, Protects and Leases Out His Vineyard

“There was a landowner who planted a vineyard and put a wall around it and dug a wine press in it, and built a tower, and rented it out to vine-growers, and went on a journey.”

John Schultz: The question is what this vineyard stands for. It does not represent all of creation, at least not initially. It is the mandate that God had particularly entrusted to the people of Israel, which, after the rejection of the Son, would be given to the Gentiles. In v.43, Jesus identifies it as “the kingdom of God.” It represents God's revelation of Himself to mankind. Israel had been given the task of being the guardian of God's righteousness. God's intention had been that Israel would not keep this treasure to itself but that, by becoming a kingdom of priests, it would demonstrate this riches for the benefit of the whole world. Israel failed completely in the carrying out of this task, both as far as the keeping of the mandate and the testimony of God's righteousness. It used the fruits of the vineyard for its own consumption.

B. (:34-36) The Sending of Two Groups of Servants to Collect the Harvest Payment

1. (:34-35) First Group Beaten and Killed

“And when the harvest time approached, he sent his slaves to the vine-growers to receive his produce. And the vine-growers took his slaves and beat one, and killed another, and stoned a third.”

2. (:36) Second Group Beaten and Killed

“Again he sent another group of slaves larger than the first; and they did the same thing to them.”

Van Parunak: Throughout the OT, the rulers of the people abused the prophets.

- Jezebel and the prophets of the Lord (1 Kings 18:4, 13)
- Ahab and Micaiah (1 Kings 22)
- Joash and Zechariah (2 Chr 24:20-22)
- Jehoiakim and Jeremiah (Jer 26:21)

C. (:37-39) The Sending and Killing of His Son

1. (:37) Expectation of Respectful Reception

*“But afterward he sent his son to them, saying,
‘They will respect my son.’”*

William Hendriksen: The word “finally” is full of intense emotion and pathos. The owner has a son, a beloved son, his only child (see Mark 12:6). Besides that son there is no longer anyone else he can send. That son is his one and all. He is all there is left, the owner’s last word. So he sent his son, thinking, “They will be ashamed of hurting my son. They will respect him.” He spared not his own son! But what happens? When these wicked tenants see his son approaching they begin to plot. They enter into a consultation with each other. Accordingly, what they are going to do to him is not matter of impulse. On the contrary, it is “malice of aforethought,” the result of wicked deliberation, of corrupt, selfish scheming. It is premeditated murder. They reason as follows: “This is the heir. When we kill him there will be no other heir to worry about. So the inheritance which he would have obtained will be ours.” In their sinister folly they forget that the owner, the son’s father, is still alive, and will certainly wreak vengeance. How blatantly foolish is sin! How absurd! “He who dwells in the heavens will laugh. The Lord will hold them in derision” (Ps. 2:4).

2. (:38) Expedient Decision to Kill the Son and Seize His Inheritance

“But when the vine-growers saw the son, they said among themselves, ‘This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and seize his inheritance.’”

Thomas Constable: Israel's leaders did not reject Jesus because it was not clear who He was, but because they refused to submit to His authority (23:37). Jesus had announced to His disciples that the Jewish leaders would kill Him (16:21; 17:23; 20:18). Now He announced this to the leaders themselves and the people. The “inheritance” that the vine-growers (Israel's leaders) sought to seize from the heir (Jesus) was the messianic kingdom.

3. (:39) Expulsion and Killing of the Son

“And they took him, and threw him out of the vineyard, and killed him.”

D. A. Carson: Elsewhere [Matthew] shows (23:37) their fundamental unwillingness to come to terms with Jesus’ identity and claims because they did not want to bow to his authority. True, their attitude was not, according to the synoptic record, “This is the Messiah; come, let us kill him”; yet, in the light of the Scriptures, their rejection of him was no less culpable than if it had been that. Therefore, though all the parable’s details may not be pressed, rejection of the son (v.39) by the leaders is the final straw that brings divine wrath on them.

II. (:40-44) REJECTION OF THE MESSIAH LEADS TO THE REJECTION OF ISRAEL (JUDGMENT AND REPLACEMENT)

A. (:40-41) Self Indictment by the Religious Leaders

1. (:40) Judicial Question

“Therefore when the owner of the vineyard comes, what will he do to those vine-growers?”

2. (:41) Judicial Verdict

a. Radical Punishment on the Wicked Tenants

“They said to Him, ‘He will bring those wretches to a wretched end,’”

Daniel Doriani: The NIV captures a play on words in the Greek, which roughly reads “bad ones he will badly destroy.” So Jesus now says what he previously showed when he closed the temple and he cursed the fig tree: judgment is coming.

b. Radical Transfer of Stewardship of Owner’s Property

“and will rent out the vineyard to other vine-growers, who will pay him the proceeds at the proper seasons.”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Jesus applied both parables directly to His accusers. Their condemnation came from their own mouths (v. 41) as well as from His. Jewish leadership was not doing its job (9:36). They “serve[d] themselves rather than God” (Keener, Background 103)—just as they had been doing for centuries (Jer. 23:1-4; Ezek. 34:1-24)—and so God would replace them. In the parable of the tenant farmers was justification (v. 43, “therefore”) for their judgment and the appointment of new leadership who would direct fruit to God.

B. (:42-44) Divine Indictment by the Prophetic Scriptures and by the Lord Himself

1. (:42) Rejected Stone Elevated to Position of Highest Prominence

“Jesus said to them, Did you never read in the Scriptures, The stone which the builders rejected, This became the chief corner stone; This came about from the Lord, And it is marvelous in our eyes ?”

Michael Wilkins: The crowds at Jesus’ entrance into Jerusalem had sung out a portion of the last of the Egyptian Hallel psalms, “O Lord, save us,” a quotation of Psalm 118:25 (cf. Matt. 21:9). Now Jesus draws on Psalm 118:22 to point to his rejection and future vindication. God has given prominence to his suffering servant like a “capstone” (lit., “head of the corner”), either the stone that held two rows of stones together in a corner (“cornerstone”) or the wedge-shaped stone placed at the pinnacle of an arch that locked the ascending stones together. The suffering of the Son will be turned into the position of ultimate prominence and importance.

2. (:43) Rejected Kingdom Transferred from the Nation of Israel to a New People

“Therefore I say to you, the kingdom of God will be taken away from you, and be given to a nation producing the fruit of it.”

Grant Osborne: The salvation-historical move from the Jewish people to the Gentiles/church is seen in 8:11–12 (cf. 13:12) and is part of the universal mission theme in Matthew (see 1:3, 5–6; 2:1–12; 4:15–16; 8:5–13, 28–34; 12:21; 15:21–28; 24:14; 28:19). . .

The children of the kingdom now consist of the new kingdom community of the church. But this does not mean the Jewish people have no more hope. Paul clarifies this in Rom 9–11. God has not abandoned his covenant promises but even now has called a remnant from among the nation (Rom 11:1–10) and even has intended the Gentile mission to have as its main purpose making Israel jealous (Rom 10:19; 11:11–16), and the end result is intended that “all Israel will be saved” (Rom 11:25–32). Still, Jesus is prophesying divine judgment on a people and its leaders who have rejected and are about to kill the very Son of God.

John Schultz: The immediate result of the rejection of Jesus as the cornerstone was that the kingdom was taken away from Israel to whom it had been entrusted as guardian and given to someone else. The kingdom had been Israel’s “reason d’être.” God had chosen the nation to know His will and to obey it and thus to be the guardian of righteousness and a testimony to the world. All this was in preparation for the coming of the Messiah. Israel’s rejection of Jesus made them fall from their status with God, and their task to witness and guard is henceforth given to the church, which is the body of Christ, consisting of both Jews and Gentiles who confess Jesus as their Savior and Lord.

Robert Gundry: The church is called “a nation” because it will replace the nation of Israel with disciples from all nations, blended together into a new people of God. Implied is a comparison of this nation to a building (compare 16:18; Isaiah 5:7) whose key- or capstone will be the resurrected Jesus. But that kind of stone turns into a judgmental stone that shatters and pulverizes.

Jeffrey Crabtree: At this point, Jesus interpreted the tenant farmer parable (v. 43). The vineyard stands for Israel, or more particularly for the kingdom of God in Israel’s hands (vv. 41, 43; Hagner 33B:620). As with the landowner and the tenant farmers, God will remove the kingdom from under the watchcare of these Jewish leaders and give it to another nation that will produce fruit. Jesus did not identify this other nation. This writer believes this new nation is the new people of God (1 Pet. 2:9).

3. (:44) Rejected Stone Brings Crushing Destruction

“And he who falls on this stone will be broken to pieces; but on whomever it falls, it will scatter him like dust.”

Michael Wilkins: Those who stumble over the stone and try to destroy it, such as the religious leaders who reject Jesus and will later condemn him, will be destroyed. In the end Jesus will come as judge and fall on those who have rejected him (cf. chs. 24–25).

III. (:45-46) REACTION OF THE JEWISH RELIGIOUS LEADERS

A. (:45) Perceiving Themselves to be the Target

“And when the chief priests and the Pharisees heard His parables, they understood that He was speaking about them.”

B. (:46) Plotting How to Seize Jesus without Opposition from the People

“And when they sought to seize Him, they feared the multitudes, because they held Him to be a prophet.”

Stu Weber: The hypocrites could take a hint. They knew Jesus was accusing them of mismanaging God’s kingdom and that he was pronouncing judgment on them. They should have repented in the face of the truth, but instead they decided to remove the truth and continue in their denial. They were still thinking that if they could kill Jesus, they would win. They were tragically mistaken. How blind is the insanity of unbelief, especially when marked by hatred and bitterness.

Charles Swindoll: The message hit its target with full force. Up until that moment, the chief priests and Pharisees had been oblivious as to where they fit in Jesus' parables. After the one-two punch delivered in the stories of the two sons and the unfaithful tenants, Jesus got their attention. They now understood that He had been speaking about them (21:45). Though they fumed in rage, they could do nothing to Jesus in that public forum of the temple court. Because the people (rightly) believed that Jesus was a genuine prophet, the Jewish leaders feared openly arresting Him (21:46). They would have to wait for a more opportune moment.

Thomas Constable: Rather than fearing Jesus, whom they understood to have claimed to be the instrument of their final judgment, these leaders feared the multitudes—whose power over them was much less. Rather than submitting to Him in belief, they tried to seize Him. Thus they triggered the very situation that Jesus had warned them about, namely, His death at their hands. Their actions confirmed their rejection of Jesus and their consequent blindness.

D. A. Carson: The pericope ends with magnificent yet tragic irony (v.46). The religious leaders and others who do not accept God's Messiah are told they will reject Jesus and be crushed. But instead of taking the warning, they hunt for ways to arrest him, hindered only by fear of the people who accept Jesus as a prophet, and so trigger the very situation they have been warned about—a dramatic example of God's poetic justice. God in the Scriptures foretells this very event. These men, prompted by hatred, rush to bring it to pass.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How would you describe the depth of depravity of those Jewish religious leaders who opposed Jesus?
- 2) What are the limits of God's patience and forbearance?
- 3) Why does this parable not teach "replacement theology" – e.g. the church has now replaced the nation of Israel in God's Kingdom plans and there is no special prophetic future for the nation of Israel?
- 4) What are the practical applications (both in terms of Blessing and Judgment) of Jesus being the chief cornerstone and a stone of stumbling and rock of offense?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Stu Weber: These leaders would forfeit the kingdom, and the stewardship would be handed over to a people (literally, "a nation") who will produce its fruit. The Jewish leaders were attempting to keep what was not theirs (power and control of the people, self-elevation, ill-gained wealth) instead of leading Israel according to the will of its master. Therefore, the kingdom would be taken away from them. Soon the church would take over operations (as announced in 16:18-19; 18:18-20), giving glory and service to God and producing spiritual fruit for him. Two thousand years of church history have proven that even the church does not do this perfectly. But the new covenant, sealed by Jesus' blood, allows God to work through the imperfect church to accomplish his perfect plan. His Spirit now lives in believers, planting his law directly in their hearts and unifying them in a way that was impossible before.

The stewardship would reside in the hands of the church. But God was not finished with Israel. He grafted the church into Israel's roots, but he will see to it that his covenant with Israel and his calling of the nation will be fully realized upon a day yet future (following Daniel's seventieth week and its tribulation). This is the Holy Spirit's argument in Romans 9-11 (esp. ch. 11).

John MacArthur: Judgment on Christ's Rejectors

There are two things there. First is judgment. Second is replacement. Mark that. First is judgment, the replacement. So, they have said it with their own mouths they have concluded the illustration.

Now, thirdly, I want you to see the explanation. And this is missed by many people, but I want you to see it. This is the explanation. So powerful. Because Jesus speaks, explaining the parable, but explaining it in a veiled way. Watch verse 42, the explanation. "Jesus saith unto them, 'Did ye never read in the Scriptures, "The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner: this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes?"'" . . .

The rejected stone is the crucified Christ; the restored cornerstone is the resurrected Christ. It couldn't be more clearly said than that. Peter reiterates the same message in his first epistle, chapter 2, "Behold I lay in Zion" – verse 6 – "a chief cornerstone, elect, precious. He that believeth on Him shall not be confounded. Unto you, therefore, who believe He is precious. Unto them who are disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is become the head of the corner, and a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence." Peter says the same thing. Christ is the cornerstone. Christ is the cornerstone.

Paul says it in Ephesians chapter 2. Says, "We are fellow citizens" – verse 19 – "with the saints, in the household of God, and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Himself being the chief cornerstone."

Now, listen carefully and get this. The Lord is saying, by quoting Psalm 118:22 and 23 – the man – the men in the tenant farmer situation took the son out, and they slew the son. And these leaders say, "Well, when that man comes back, he's going to miserably destroy those wicked sinners and take away the vineyard from them."

And Jesus says to them, "The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner. Haven't you read that?"

And what He is saying is this: the stone is Jesus Christ. Right? We've seen that. The rejection constitutes the rejection of Israel. The restoration constitutes His resurrection and His following glory. . .

Jesus says to the leaders of Israel, "You have lost the right to be in the place of blessing." God turned from Israel. That was the end of a great day. Oh, my. That was the end of a great era. God turned away from Israel as the people of blessing and says, “I will give it to a nation.” What nation? Well, the word means people. What people? Well, the same nation of which Peter speaks in 1 Peter 2, “An holy nation.” I believe it’s the Church, the redeemed of this age.

So, those two results. A kingdom of God shall be taken from you, given to someone else. That’s the first one. Taken away. That’s sad. That’s replacement that we talked about earlier. You forfeited it. And Israel today is unblessed. We’ve been learning about that in Romans 9, 10, and 11, and I’m not going to, and I’m not going to go into developing it all, but Israel has been removed for the time being from the place of blessing.

You say, “Will they ever come back?”

Yes, they will. Yes, they will. God will graft them in, it says in Romans. All Israel will be saved. The gifts and calling of God are without repentance. “The day will come” – says Zechariah – “when they’ll look on Him whom they have pierced and mourn for Him as an only son.” Salvation will come to Israel.

Scott Harris: Results of Rejecting the Son

A LONGSUFFERING LANDLORD

We first meet this landlord when he sets aside one of his tracts of land and plants a vineyard in it. This would be a common practice. Vineyards were a good cash crop and so a good crop for an investor to plant. This landlord made a sizeable investment in this vineyard making sure it was equipped with all that would be needed. Not only was the ground prepared, but he put a wall around it to protect it from intruders, including both people and animals. He then dug a wine press. This would be either hewn out in the bedrock itself, or dug and then lined with stones. It would consist of a main vat where the grapes would be “pressed” by the feet of people walking around on them. At the low end of the vat there would be either a pipe or a trough that would allow the juice to run into another vat. Here the sediments in the wine would settle out and the clear wine skimmed off and put into containers that were either wineskins or jars.

This landlord even went to the additional trouble of building a tower in the vineyard. A watchman would be stationed in the tower to look out for enemies or for animals that might want to get into the vineyard. All of this points out that this landlord put together a first rate vineyard. .

The details of the illustration are only provided to further illustrate the point and they do not have to be probable in real life. And so we find here a landlord that has an incredible amount of patience.

In Mark’s account we find the story of each slave sent, here we find Matthew condenses the story. One slave is beaten, another is killed outright, and a third one is stoned and probably left for dead. Now we would think that after the first slave is beaten and certainly after the first slave is killed that this owner would retaliate against these wicked growers and bring them to justice. Yet we find that he continues to send more slaves in an effort to simply receive what is rightfully his. This demonstrates an unusual amount of patience to say the least, and verse 36 shows his longsuffering to be unbelievable in that he sends still more slaves.

Anyone with that kind of forbearance is incredible. Indeed, some have questioned whether Jesus really even told this story because it seems so implausible. But the incredible tolerance of this man is brought to the inconceivable limit when we see in verse 37 that this landlord now sends his son. Mark makes this even more stunning when we find out that this is the man's only son, his beloved son. His hope is that these men who have not respected his slaves, though they came with his authority, will respect his son.

This man's son shows that he is of the same essence as his father for in going, he shows that he is a selfless son.

A SELFLESS SON

Jesus is the selfless son. Jesus knew what was to happen to Him from the beginning. We have seen for quite a few weeks now in our study of Matthew that Jesus has been telling the disciples over and over again that He was now on His way to Jerusalem where He would suffer many things that the hands of the hypocritical religious leaders there, eventually being crucified and then raised from the dead on the third day. That crucifixion is now only two days away, and here we find that Jesus Himself in this parable is telling the very people that would have Him crucified what they will do to Him. Jesus is the selfless son. He said it best Himself in the passage we looked at several weeks ago, Matthew 20:28, The Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and give His life a ransom for many. Jesus came knowing that He would die at the hands of wicked men, yet he was not deterred.

CONDEMNED CONTRACTORS

The chief priests and elders condemned themselves again when they answered Jesus question about the parable, what will the owner of the vineyard do to those vine-growers? Again, the answer was so obvious that they answered before they thought about the ramifications of their answer. Of course the landlord would take those wretched vine-growers that he had contracted with and he will bring them to a wretched end. Justice will be brought to bear and they will pay the full penalty of their guilt. Then other men who are more noble and will fulfill the terms of their contract will be given charge over the vineyard.

The wicked vine-growers in the parable represented these treacherous religious leaders who while claiming to lead the nation in the paths of righteousness were so blind to the truth that they could not recognize that the man standing before them was sent from God. Jesus tells them directly that God was not going to take his kingdom away from them and give it to another nation that would produce the fruit of it.

But as for these wicked men, not only would the kingdom of God be taken away from them, but they were in danger of a terrible judgement. A warning is given to them in verse 44. They could neither resist nor ignore Him for to do so would result in being broken into pieces, crushed into powder and pulverized to be scattered by the wind. Quite graphic language for the judgement that would come upon them. Much like the language we find in Daniel 2, which we be examining in this evenings service, in which a rock comes and destroys the statue, pulverizing so that the wind blows it away.

THE HOPE OF MANY

Where do you stand today in terms of this parable and its application? Have you recognized that the longsuffering landlord is God who has equipped you to serve Him, and that in view of His manifold mercies to you that is only right that you present yourself as a living sacrifice to Him (Rom 12:1). Are you bringing to Him His due? Have you marvelled at the selfless Son whom God sent but was crucified on a cross outside the gate of Jerusalem as the payment for your sins?

Are you one of the wicked growers who refuses to yield to God and tries to usurp Him and His authority over your life by trying to run things yourself? If so, then today is the day to acknowledge that, repent of it, turn away from it, and to start following God's will over your own.

Or maybe your one of the new nation that God has created to bring forth the fruit of His kingdom. If so, you should not only rejoice over the privilege, but also make sure that you are bringing forth that fruit. Are you fulfilling the purpose of your life? Are you living in holiness while telling others of God's mercy to the repentant, humble sinner?

https://www.gracebibleny.org/results_rejecting_son_matthew_213346

TEXT: Matthew 22:1-14

TITLE: THE WEDDING BANQUET AND THE ILLEGITIMATE GUEST

BIG IDEA:
CONTEMPT FOR KINGDOM INVITATION AND KINGDOM REQUIREMENTS
RESULTS IN FATAL CONSEQUENCES

INTRODUCTION:

Definition of Contempt: a feeling that someone or something is not worthy of any respect or approval; lack of respect accompanied by a feeling of intense dislike

Grant Osborne: This third of the triad of parables continues the themes of the wicked tenants in terms of God's gracious invitation to the guests, their refusal to respond, the king's judgment that fell on them as a result, and the extension of the invitation to others both "the bad and the good" (v. 10). The two primary differences are

- (1) the eschatological orientation to the messianic banquet at the end of history as well as the imminent judgment at the destruction of Jerusalem (vv. 1–10, preparing for ch. 24); and
- (2) the demand that people allowed into the banquet come on God's terms rather than their own (vv. 11–14).

With this final parable, the action then returns to the remaining four controversies (22:15–46).

This [parable] moves from the centrality of the guilt of the leaders (the parable of the wicked tenants) to the guilt of the whole nation (building on v. 43). Two themes are uppermost—divine justice and divine grace. God is just in his wrath and judgment on those who flaunt his invitation and gracious in inviting both "the bad and the good" (v. 10) to the messianic banquet. . .

There is a salvation-historical movement in this parable from Israel to the Gentiles to the church composed of Jews and Gentiles who believe and live rightly according to the kingdom demands.

Stu Weber: Jesus will reject those who refuse his invitation into honor and privilege, replacing them with true worshipers—those restored from sin by his grace. . . For a person to participate in this celebration presupposed that he had placed his faith in the Messiah and become a part of his people, the Messiah's bride. The invitation to the feast was an invitation to discipleship and salvation. It was also an invitation to enjoy the king's blessing—the "food" of the feast as well as the honor of being invited.

Thomas Constable: The three parables in this series are similar to three concentric circles in their scope.

1. The scope of the parable of the two sons encompassed Israel's leaders (Matthew 21:28-32).
2. The parable of the wicked tenant farmers exposed the leaders' lack of responsibility and their guilt to the people listening in as well as to the leaders themselves (Matthew 21:33-46).
3. This last parable is the broadest of the three. It condemned the contempt with which Israel as a whole had treated God's grace to her.

The point of these three parables is quite clear. God would judge Israel's leaders because they had rejected Jesus, their Messiah. He would postpone the kingdom and allow anyone to enter it, not just the Jews as many of the Jews thought. [Note: See Toussaint and Quine, pp. 140-41.] The prophets had predicted that Gentiles would participate in the kingdom; this was not new revelation. However the Jews, because of national pride, had come to believe that being a Jew was all the qualification one needed to enter the kingdom. Jesus taught them that receiving God's gracious invitation and preparing oneself by trusting in Him was the essential requirement for participation.

Albert Mohler Jr.: Jesus confronts the religious leaders with a third parable that paints the consequences they face for rejecting his invitation to repent and enter the kingdom of heaven. Some reject the invitation with trivial excuses. Others abuse and even kill the king's servants. Their actions are not merely insulting but treasonous, and the king's rage and the form of punishment are appropriate for such open rebellion.

The second part of the parable takes another unimaginable turn. Those who consider themselves able to dispense with the king's invitation are undeserving. It is not the externally righteous but the sinners who are received into the kingdom of heaven (5:20; 9:12-13). The wedding guests gathered from the streets correspond to the sinners, tax collectors, and Gentiles who are responding to Jesus' gracious invitation into the kingdom.

The third part of the parable focuses on a person who entered the wedding but who has arrived inappropriately dressed. The man's speechlessness implies he has access to appropriate attire but declines to wear it. His actions reveal he has refused Jesus' invitation to the kingdom, resulting in eternal judgment.

"Chosen" (22:14) is an alternate expression for Jesus' true disciples (or "elect"; cf. 11:27; 24:22, 24, 31). While Jesus gives an open invitation to the kingdom it is only God's sovereign choice that brings about salvation. Only those who respond to the call appropriately can be part of the banquet, and their acceptance of the invitation reveals that they are chosen by God. The religious leadership of Israel lost their privileged position because they rejected Jesus' invitation.

Charles Swindoll: The cast of characters reflected in this parable is easy to identify. The king represents God; the son stands for Jesus. The elite who were invited to the banquet presumably represent the Jewish leaders. The invitation includes the various ways that God had already called the elite to discipleship in the kingdom of God. John the Baptizer had extended the invitation to repent and believe. Jesus and His disciples had been beckoning them to come. Besides this, the Old Testament prophets had foretold of the Messiah, His miracles, and His mission. And the amazing signs and wonders performed through the Holy Spirit should have sealed the deal for anybody with eyes to see and ears to hear. However, the scribes, Pharisees, priests, and other leaders of the Jews either rudely ignored these invitations or actively attacked those who extended them.

(:1) PROLOGUE – THIRD PARABLE IN THE JUDGMENT TRIAD

"And Jesus answered and spoke to them again in parables, saying,"

I. (:2-10) CONTEMPT FOR KINGDOM INVITATION -- THE WEDDING BANQUET

A. (:2) Royal Wedding Banquet = Grand Occasion

“The kingdom of heaven may be compared to a king, who gave a wedding feast for his son.”

1. Identity of the Kingdom of Heaven
2. Identity of the King
3. Imagery of the Wedding Feast
4. Identity of the Son

B. (:3-7) Rejected Invitations

1. (:3) Initial Round of Rejections = Treasonous Unwillingness of God’s Covenant People

“And he sent out his slaves to call those who had been invited to the wedding feast, and they were unwilling to come.”

Homer Kent: Oriental custom included an initial invitation and a second call at the stated hour. The invited ones, here certainly Israel, refused this call, and when further explanatory entreaties were made, became either brazenly rude or positively murderous.

2. (:4-5) Subsequent Round of Rejections = Rebellious Indifference of Spiritual Harlots

a. (:4) Lavish Preparations

“Again he sent out other slaves saying, ‘Tell those who have been invited, Behold, I have prepared my dinner; my oxen and my fattened livestock are all butchered and everything is ready; come to the wedding feast.’”

b. (:5) Lawless Disinterest

“But they paid no attention and went their way, one to his own farm, another to his business,”

Grant Osborne: From rudeness they turn to indifference, just walking away (lit., “those who did not care walked away”) from the king’s emissaries. “Paid no attention” (ἀμελήσαντες) connotes not just inattention but also unconcern. They act as if no invitation has come at all and just return to their daily work. . .

The mention of “field” and “business” sums up the basic two categories, agriculture and commerce, which thus stand for all the different occupations. Luke 14:18–20 is similar, with the people providing excuses for not coming—buying a field, buying five oxen, and recently getting married. Again, the insult is far greater than we realize. These typify the reaction of the Jewish people to Jesus—rejection and apathy.

William Barclay: It reminds us that the things which make people deaf to the invitation of Christ are not necessarily bad in themselves. In the parable, one man went to his estate: the other to his business. They did not go off on a wild binge or an immoral adventure. They went off on the, in itself, excellent task of efficiently administering their business life. It is very easy to be so busy with the things of the present that the things of eternity are forgotten, to be so preoccupied with the things which are seen that the things which are unseen are forgotten, to hear so insistently the claims of the world that the soft invitation of the voice of Christ cannot be heard. The tragedy of life is that it is so often the second bests which shut out the bests, that it is things which are good in themselves which shut out the things that are supreme. We can be so busy making a living that we fail to make a life; we can be so busy with the administration and the organization of life that we forget life itself.

Van Parunak: In the present context, the interpretation is straightforward. Remember from v. 1 that the feast represents the kingdom of heaven. These first verses recall the history of the invitation to the Jewish nation. Throughout the OT, the Lord taught Israel the basic principles of his kingdom. They had an early invitation to enter into it, and were given many clear signs when it should arrive—so much so that in the first century, there were those like Simeon, “waiting for the consolation of Israel” (Luke 2:25), or Anna, who “spoke ... to all them that looked for redemption in Israel” (Luke 2:38), or Joseph of Arimathea, “who also himself waited for the kingdom of God” (Luke 2:51). Even the pagan wise men, knowing Daniel’s prophecies, recognized that the time was right for the arrival of “the king of the Jews.” During his earthly ministry, the Lord’s focus was on “the lost sheep of the house of Israel.” He told his disciples to go only to these (10:6) and he rebuffed the Canaanite woman on the same grounds (15:24).

But these were exceptions. The bulk of the nation rejected the prophets when they brought additional details of the invitation, just as we saw in the previous parable. Now, when the final invitation arrives, announcing that the kingdom of God is at hand, their leaders spurn the king’s son, who will rule over the kingdom. Their behavior is parallel to that of the husbandmen in the previous parable.

3. (:6-7) Final Rejection of Violent Jewish Opposition Met with Angry Destruction

“and the rest seized his slaves and mistreated them and killed them.

But the king was enraged and sent his armies, and destroyed those murderers, and set their city on fire.”

Grant Osborne: Apparently the rebels are all from the same city, and the reprisal is directed only at them (“those murderers”) rather than at all who have rejected the invitation. Yet the others will face the king’s displeasure as well. The rage of the king and his strong response pictures God’s wrath at “the day of the Lord.”

J. M. Sherwood – The Biblical Illustrator: The danger of slighting these invitations.

1. It cannot fail to provoke the anger of God. “The king was wrath.”
2. It inevitably forfeits all the blessings of Christ’s meditation and sacrifice.
3. It shuts the door of mercy against the sinner.

C. (:8-10) Replacement Guests Sovereignly Summoned and Graciously Hosted

1. (:8-9) Replacement Gentile Guests Sovereignly Summoned

“Then he said to his slaves, ‘The wedding is ready, but those who were invited were not worthy. 9 Go therefore to the main highways, and as many as you find there, invite to the wedding feast.’”

Matthew Henry: The commission he gave to the servants, to invite other guests. The inhabitants of the city (Matthew 22:7; Matthew 22:7) had refused; Go into the high-ways then; into the way of the Gentiles, which at first they were to decline, Matthew 10:5. Thus by the fall of the Jews salvation is come to the Gentiles, Romans 11:11; Romans 11:12; Ephesians 3:8. Note, Christ will have a kingdom in the world, though many reject the grace, and resist the power, of that kingdom. Though Israel be not gathered, he will be glorious. The offer of Christ and salvation to the Gentiles was,

(1.) Unlooked for and unexpected; such a surprise as it would be to wayfaring men upon the road to be met with an invitation to a wedding feast. The Jews had notice of the gospel, long before, and expected the Messiah and his kingdom; but to the Gentiles it was all new, what they had never heard of before (Acts 17:19; Acts 17:20), and, consequently, what they could not conceive of as belonging to them. See Isaiah 65:1; Isaiah 65:2.

(2.) It was universal and undistinguishing; Go, and bid as many as you find. The highways are public places, and there Wisdom cries, Proverbs 1:20. "Ask them that go by the way, ask anybody (Job 21:29), high and low, rich and poor, bond and free, young and old, Jew and Gentile; tell them all, that they shall be welcome to gospel-privileges upon gospel-terms; whoever will, let him come, without exception."

2. (:10) Replacement Gentile Guests Graciously Hosted

"And those slaves went out into the streets, and gathered together all they found, both evil and good; and the wedding hall was filled with dinner guests."

Stu Weber: It was as shocking then as it is now that God accepts the worst of sinners unconditionally. As long as a sinner shows a willingness to accept God's grace by faith, God will transform him or her into a kingdom citizen. With such a group of people the king filled his wedding hall. It was a blend of good and evil, Jew and Gentile, slave and free, wealthy and poor. Truly, the Lord will fill his kingdom with "all nations" or all peoples.

II. (:11-13) CONTEMPT FOR KINGDOM REQUIREMENTS -- THE INAPPROPRIATE GUEST

A. (:11) No Righteousness

"But when the king came in to look over the dinner guests, he saw there a man not dressed in wedding clothes,"

[Traditional View:]

Homer Kent: It represents the robe of imputed righteousness that God graciously provides to man through faith (Isa 61:10).

[Alternate View:]

Van Parunak: So the picture is the same as in Colossians: the white garments are the practical righteousness in the lives of believers, which is made possible by God's gracious gift of free salvation.

Putting these results together, the guest without a garment is a false professor in the church who is revealed by the lack of righteousness in his life. The parable thus repeats what the Lord taught about false prophets in the Sermon on the Mount:

Mat 7:15 Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. 16 Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? 17 Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. 18 A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. 19 Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. 20 Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them. 21 Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.

Once again, we see the shadow of the fig tree. Simply being in the church doesn't save somebody. True inclusion depends on giving evidence of our salvation

[Consolidated View:]

William Hendriksen: Does this mean, then, that the wedding garment is to be limited to “the imputed righteousness which is ours by faith”? (Lenski) Not at all. God not only imputes but also imparts righteousness to the sinner whom he pleases to save. Although these two must be distinguished, they must not be separated. . . not only guilt must be forgiven but also the old way of life must be laid aside and the new life to the glory of God must take its place. Briefly, the sinner must, by God's grace, “put on Christ” (Gal. 3:27). There must be a complete turnabout, a thorough-going renewal or “conversion,” exactly as Jesus himself had taught (Matt. 4:17), and as the apostles after him were going to teach.

The one thought of the parable, then, is this: “Accept God's gracious invitation, lest while others enter into glory you be lost. But remember that membership in the visible church does not guarantee salvation. Complete renewal (including both justification and sanctification), the putting on of Christ, is what is necessary.”

B. (:12) No Excuses

*“and he said to him, 'Friend, how did you come in here without wedding clothes?'
And he was speechless.”*

The Biblical Illustrator: The hypocrite self-condemned

The guest referred to was speechless because-

- I. He could not plead ignorance of the will of the king who had invited him to the feast.
- II. He could not plead that in his case the wedding garment was not necessary.
- III. He could not plead that a wedding garment was not placed within his reach.
- IV. He had despised the wedding garment.
- V. He was overwhelmed with a sense of guilt.

Learn the worthlessness of mere profession, and the necessity of being prepared for coming judgment.

C. (:13) No Escape

*“Then the king said to the servants, 'Bind him hand and foot, and cast him into the outer darkness;
in that place there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.’”*

John Calvin: Let us not flatter ourselves with the empty title of faith, but let every man seriously examine himself, that at the final review he may be pronounced to be one of the lawful guests; for, as Paul reminds us, that the vessels in the Lord's house are not all of the same kind, so let every one that calleth on the name of the Lord depart from iniquity, (2 Timothy 2:19.)

I enter no farther, at present, into the question about the eternal election of God; for the words of Christ mean nothing more than this, that the external profession of faith is not a sufficient proof that God will acknowledge as his people all who appear to have accepted of his invitation.

III. (:14) FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLE – OPEN INVITATION BUT SOVEREIGN ELECTION

“For many are called, but few are chosen.”

Grant Osborne: The play on words between “called” (κλητοί) and “chosen” (ἐκλεκτοί) is the key. The “called” are those “invited” (see the cognate καλέω in vv. 4, 8, 9) and refers to the sense of election Israel claimed as the special people of God. However, the leaders and those who followed them in rejecting God's Son were not the truly “elect”/“chosen” of God. Here there is both human responsibility and divine sovereignty at work, a fitting conclusion to the parable. “Called” (κλητοί) catches it well: the people must respond to God's summons with both repentance and right living to be part of God's elect!

Stu Weber: The adjective chosen suggests that the faith decision is not totally in our hands, but it is a response to God's sovereign election. In particular, the unbelieving religious leaders were among those called but not chosen.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How does God demonstrate His grace in this parable?
- 2) How shocking is it that the gracious invitation of the king is spurned and what does that say to the culpability of disbelieving Judaism?
- 3) What types of judgments – both temporal on the city of Jerusalem and nation of Israel and eternal – are described in this account?
- 4) What are false professors lacking that distinguishes them in the eyes of the king from legitimate kingdom participants?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Stu Weber: With this, Jesus rounded out his trilogy of parables which condemned the Jewish leaders for their rebellious disbelief. They had:

- (1) neglected their God-given trust (21:28-32);
- (2) tried to commandeer the kingdom for their own ends, persecuting and killing God's messengers the prophets, and even his Son (21:33-46); and

(3) thrown away the honor and privilege of a covenant relationship with God, thereby dishonoring the Almighty and the Son.

W. M. Taylor – The Biblical Illustrator: Four different ways of treating God’s invitations in the gospel are here set before us.

1. We have it complacently ignored by those who went their ways to their farms and to their merchandise.
2. We have the gospel offer violently rejected. There is still a violent rejection of the gospel by open infidels.
3. The inconsistency and insolence of the man who professed to accept the invitation, and yet failed to comply with the conditions on which alone true acceptance of it was possible. He pushed into the festive hall without having on a wedding garment.
4. We have the gospel invitation sincerely and heartily accepted.

John MacArthur: Responding to a Royal Invitation

In the process of moving about the temple and teaching, He is confronted by these religious leaders. And in verse 23 of chapter 21, they stop Him in His tracks, and they say to Him, “By what authority doest Thou these things, and who gave Thee this authority?” In other words, show us Your credentials. Show us Your rabbinic ordination papers. Show us the approval that You have to go about saying and doing what You do. Who gave You authority to throw out all of the businesses in this place? Who gave You the authority to end all of the money changing? Who gave You the right to speak a message that is contrary to the tradition which we teach? Who gave You the authority to speak without any rabbinical authority? Show us Your credentials.

And they’re angry, and they are bitter, and they are hostile, and they’re already planning His death the Bible tells us. And so, He answers them. And He answers them with a trilogy of parables. The first one is in verse 28 to 32 of chapter 21, a parable about two sons. The second one is a parable a vineyard that was leased out to tenant farmers, in verses 33 to 46. And this is the third parable in the trilogy, in chapter 22, verses 1 to 14.

And each of the parables is alike in that their message is a message of judgment. The parables, reduced to a simple understanding, say this, “You have rejected Me. All of the Old Testament prophets spoke of Me. All of the miracles that I have done validate My claim to be the Son of God, the Savior, the Messiah. All of the words that I have said affirm that. But you have consistently and for three years repeatedly rejected Me, and now God rejects you.” That’s the essence of the parables. The table has turned, and they are parables of judgment. Parables of judgment. They climax in this third parable, very dramatic. . .

I. Scene 1: The Invitation Rejected (:1-6)

Now, what is the kingdom of heaven? It is the sphere of God’s rule. It is the dominion where God rules, where God is sovereign, where God is king. To simplify it even further, it is the dominion of redemption. It is the sphere of God’s gracious salvation. The kingdom is that place where God rules, where God’s subjects live. It is a spiritual kingdom. It is a community of people who are redeemed, who have come to salvation, who are under the rule and the guiding and the leading of God. . .

What is important is the Lord wants to identify the greatest celebration that those people could ever comprehend in their culture. And He is saying the kingdom of heaven is like the greatest celebration imaginable, thrown by the wealthiest person imaginable, for the most honored person imaginable. He wants to capture all the best that life could ever imagine to give. And so, He says, “There was a king, who made a wedding feast for his son.” I mean this was the blowout of all blowouts in that culture. . .

Let me ask you the question, Who are the already called people of God? The Jews. Israel. You can start in Genesis chapter 12, where God called out of the loins of Abraham the people of Israel and said, “I’m going to make out of your loins a great nation, a nation through whom the earth will be blessed. And anyone who blesses them will be blessed, and anyone who curses them will be cursed. And they shall be as the sand of the sea, and the stars of the heaven.” And God was going to multiply them and all of this. And he called out that special nation. They were the called.

In Hosea 11, there’s that wonderful, wonderful word of the prophet Hosea in reference to Israel. It says – and we ought to be reminded of it – “When Israel was a child, then I loved him and called My son out of Egypt.” They were in Egyptian bondage, and God called Israel to be His people. He called them and carried them for 40 years through the wilderness, and carried them into the Promised Land, and gave them a land that flowed with milk and honey. And God had a special design for that already called people.

In Amos, the prophet writes, in chapter 3, “Israel only,” says God, “have I loved, have I known.” And then that great, great picture in Ezekiel chapter 16. It’s just a dramatic picture. A picture of a baby torn from a womb and thrown bloody on the ground and left there, destitute. And God comes by and sees this infant, still bathed in its blood, and washes it, and makes it His own. Beautiful picture of the calling out of Israel to God’s own heart. They are the already having been called. They were the unique people of God. They were God’s channel to reach the world, God’s point of contact for the doctrine of salvation and the truth of righteousness. And so, it was the already having been called ones that were called.

And who are the servants that go out to call the already having been called ones? Preachers like John the Baptist, like Jesus Himself, like the apostles. Right? Sent out two by two to preach the kingdom. . .

Secularism is usually indifferent. False religion is hostile. You look at the history of persecution around the world, and the persecutors of the truth are the purveyors of error inevitably. And that is why in revelation 17, when you see the final world system of religion that comes together in the end times, it says that final world religious system is drunk with the blood of the martyrs because it is false religion that stamps out the truth in hostility. Secularism is indifferent; it’s not interested.

And so, when Jesus came, and God called His people Israel - the already having been called people – to a glorious celebration, there were the secularists. They were indifferent. They were indifferent.

And there were the religionists, and they were hostile. It’s still so. It’s still so.

II. Scene 2: The Rejectors Punished (:7-8)

The point of sending out group one and group two was only to show not some kind of distinctiveness in the two groups, but to show the generosity, kindness, forgiveness, grace, and mercy of the king. Right? . . .

And He says, “You’re city’s going to be burned.” Boy, was that prophetic; 70 A.D. it happened. Titus Vespasian, the Roman general, came to Jerusalem, conquered the city, murdered 1,100,000 Jews, threw their bodies over the wall. Slaughtered beyond that, multiplied thousands all around Palestine.

And Josephus, who was an eyewitness to the whole thing, wrote in his history of Jewish war these words translated, “That building, the temple at Jerusalem, however, God long ago had sentenced to the flames. But now in the revolution of the time periods, the fateful day had arrived. The tenth of the month of Lous, (Av), the very day on which previously it had been burned by the king of Babylon. One of the soldiers, neither awaiting orders nor filled with horror of so dread an undertaking, but moved by some supernatural impulse, snatched a brand from the blazing timber and, hoisted up by one of his fellow soldiers, flung the fiery missile through a golden window.

“When the flame arose, a scream as poignant as the tragedy went up from the Jews now that the object which before they had guarded so closely was going to ruin. While the sanctuary was burning, neither pity for age nor respect for rank was shown. ON the contrary, children and old people, laity and priests alike were massacred. The emperor had ordered the entire city and sanctuary to be razed to the ground, except only the highest towers and that part of the wall that enclosed the city on the west.”

And that’s why today remains the western wall. The rest of the things was burned. Jesus said He – the king burned up their city. It hadn’t happened, but it would. It was prophetic in a parabolic form. Objectors to the Son, rejectors of the Son are judged in a fiery judgment. So accurate is our Lord’s statement here. What was He saying? He was saying because Israel has rejected the Messiah, God rejects them. And those who hostilely kill the Son will be severely judged by God, and their city will be burned. It was.

III. Scene 3: New Guests Invited (:9-10)

So, the point is go everywhere and get everybody that’ll come. “Go into all the world and” – what? – “preach the Gospel and make disciples.” That’s the mandates. That’s what Paul says in the book of Romans when he says, “The fall of Israel is the rising of many.” Through their fall, we have come to salvation. We have replaced them in this particular time. And God yet has something for Israel. They’re going to come back into His favor. They’re going to come back into His redemptive plan. They’re going to yet come back. That’s why they’re regathering in the nation today. But in the meantime, He has stretched out His arms, and He has sent His message into everywhere to everyone. “As many as you can find, invite them all to come.” Isn’t that the heart of the Gospel message? That’s where we are now, isn’t it? Their fall became our rising. God will not be frustrated, beloved. The festival’s going to have some guests. The celebration’s going to go on. And if it isn’t going to be one group, it’s going to be another one. . .

God isn't going around looking for the moral people. I mean God is calling everybody, bad and good. And the thing that makes them worthy is not their inherent goodness or badness, but their willingness to accept – what? – the invitation. “And the wedding feast was furnished with guests.”

IV. Scene 4: The Intruder Expelled (:11-12) -- Kingdom Crashers --

These are kingdom crashers. These are tares among the wheat. They're not properly garmented. You say, “What's the garment?”

That's easy. Go back to Matthew 5:20 for a moment, and I'll show you the garment. In Matthew 5:20 it says, “For I say unto you, that except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, you shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.”

What is it that is necessary for entrance into the kingdom of heaven? What is it? Righteousness. And a righteousness different than the Pharisees, which was a self-righteousness - a God-given righteousness. It's just what Hebrews 12:14 says, “Holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord.” You don't go into God's presence without manifest righteousness, without manifest holiness.

Job 29:14, the text says, “I put on righteousness, and it clothed me.” The Jews would understand this – who were listening to Him, because they would remember one of the most beautiful texts of the entire Old Testament. It would be very familiar to them. It is Isaiah 61:10 and it says this, “I will greatly rejoice in the Lord. My soul shall be joyful in my God, for He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation. He hath covered me with a robe of righteousness.” So, they knew that. Righteousness was the robe.

And the king looked at this man; he saw no righteousness. That is no right living, no right thinking, no right speaking. He saw no holiness, no godliness. He said, “You don't belong in here. You can't crash the kingdom on your own terms. That which proves you belong is manifest righteousness.” . . .

And the whole thing closes with a very simple statement, “For many are called, but few are” – what? – “chosen.” The call goes out to so many, but only a few are chosen. Paul often talks about the call in Romans, and when he does so, it is an internal call. It is the true call to salvation. Don't confuse Paul's discussion there with this, obviously, from the parable and the context, the call referred to here is an external call. The Gospel invitation is sent out to everywhere. Some are indifferent. Some are hostile. Some try to crash the kingdom on their own terms. But few – oh, my – are chosen. And with the word “chosen,” we're introduced to the sovereignty of God.

Yes, there is the will of man in receiving the invitation. Yes, there is the will of man in rejecting the invitation. But the perfect balance to that is that God is sovereign, and those who come choose to come, the Bible says, because they're chosen by Him. That's a mystery we'll never fathom, but we believe it.

So, many are called, but few are chosen. The broad road, many go in that way. The narrow, few there be that – what? – find it.

J. Ligon Duncan: The Marriage Feast

I. (:1-7) Indifference to Christ and opposition to Christ are both rejection of Christ.

Jesus is telling a colossal tale here. And He's doing it to shock you into the reality of what it is when we reject the gospel offer. God has spread this feast for us in the gospel. It's cost him his son. He's invited all to come. And when we reject that offer, either by indifference or direct opposition, it is not something that is acceptable. It is not simply rude. But it is an offense to God almighty, and that is precisely what Jesus is trying to drive home in this particular parable.

Now there are two or three things that I'd like to zero in on in these first few verses with you. First of all, I want you to see that Jesus is making it very clear that by rejecting these invitations, the people are not simply rude, they are positively sinful. They are actually engaging in rebellion against the king who is, of course, God. They are not neutral. They're not victims when the slaughter comes. They're not innocent people who have been perpetrated against with a horrible crime. They are unwilling. They are indifferent. They are opposed to God. This is the picture that Jesus paints here. And, of course, He's describing the leaders of Israel in response to the gospel message. But, this is a picture of everyone who fails to embrace Christ. This gospel invitation is universal. It goes out to everyone. There's no one excluded from this invitation by their rank or file. And when those turn this invitation down, it is not a matter of indifference, it's a matter of unwillingness and opposition to God. And so, Jesus paints very clearly the wickedness of those who refuse the invitation. . .

The second thing you see is the extravagant love of God. We see the patience of God in this passage. We see the provision of God in the passage. We see His constraining love. He is coming up with every argument possible in order to draw in as many as is possible to a feast which they have not earned or deserved. It's a banquet. It's a celebration. He's inviting them to it.

II. (:8-10) God's offer of the gospel is free and His inducements to come are great.

Here we see this filled wedding hall, and it's a picture of the call of the gentiles. Matthew from the beginning to end is concerned to show us that the message of salvation, as Paul would put it, is to the Jew first and also to the Greek. That is, that the message of the gospel of the kingdom of heaven is not something that is only for ethnic Israel. It is for the Jews to whom the covenant promises were originally given in the days of Abraham, but it is also for the Gentiles. And here in this picture in verses 8-10, He shows us the calling of the Gentile. But He also reminds us of something very important. And that is this, that God's offer of the gospel is free. And the inducements to our accepting that offer of the gospel are great. . .

Because He loves His Son so much, He wants His Son to be honored by many. And He is determined to fill that hall. You see one of the great motivations of God and the work of missions. He is determined that His Son will be honored by the nations. . .

And so, they're sent out into the highways and byways, and all manner of people are drawn in. Perhaps, mostly from the underprivileged ranks. And we see here the unrestricted offer of the gospel. The provisions of the glory in both of these things, the unrestricted offer of the gospel and the provision of the Father's glory at that marriage feast, are rooted in his desire to honor the Son. The fact is, the sacrifice of Christ is for all. And so, regardless of race and nationality or sex or social standing. No nation has any special standing before God, Matthew says. But God desires all to come to Christ.

III. (:11-14) Not everyone who says “Lord, Lord” will enter the kingdom.

When Jesus pictures people from all the highways and byways sitting, all but one in their wedding garments, He is implying that those garments have been supplied by the king himself. That was not uncommon in those days for the king himself to supply those wedding garments. And so when you walk in and you see this one man not sitting in wedding garments, it's not because he didn't have time. It's not because he didn't have a set of wedding garments on his own. It's because he has clearly refused the king's offer, or the king's servant's offer, of a wedding garment. . .

What is Jesus saying? He had no excuse. He was without excuse. He was stunned into silence. He had nothing to say. But it's so ironic, because the king says, “Friend” and then one of the very next words out of the king's mouth, “bind him hand and foot and cast him into outer darkness.” Not normally something you say to a friend. Why? Jesus is showing us that there are some people who like to think of themselves as friends of his who aren't.

Gaebelein's Annotated Bible: The Parable of the Marriage Feast

The dispensational character of this parable is very marked. It is ushered in with the familiar words found alone in this Gospel. “The Kingdom of the heavens is like,” or as it ought to be, “has become like.” . . . The marriage feast which the King makes for his son and to which he invites guests typifies the gracious offer of God to give joy, comfort and blessings to those whom he wishes to partake of it. It is for the Son, in honor of the Son, that the feast is made. Of the Bride, who of course belongs also to the marriage feast, nothing is said. This parable foreshadows a great deal more than the other two parables in the previous chapter. It goes beyond the cross, for the offer is made not only to Israel but also to the Gentiles. The Kingdom was offered to the nation; had the Jews repented, there would have been a marriage feast for them, a feast of fat things, as promised by the prophets. God's mercy would have been manifested upon them. The invitation contained in the third verse was given in the preaching of the Kingdom before the death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ. Between the third and fourth verses these great events, as well as the ascension of the Lord Jesus Christ, must be placed. The preaching of the Kingdom with its gracious blessings stopped, as we learned in the study of this Gospel, with the twelfth chapter. In the thirteenth chapter the Lord teaches the mysteries of the Kingdom, that which takes place during this present dispensation. Now, in the fourth verse we read of a second invitation.

When was this second invitation given to the invited guests, that is to Israel? Not before the Cross, but immediately after, with the Holy Spirit come down from Heaven. These servants were to tell them which were bidden, that all things are ready. The work of redemption accomplished, God in His infinite mercy gives another call and now He can say that indeed all is ready, even for the people who had rejected the Son of His love and had crucified Him. The opening chapters of the Book of Acts give us the history of this invitation. There we find the record of the second call to Israel.

The preaching of the Kingdom is resumed for a brief period and with this preaching is the promise of forgiveness of sins and the times of refreshing and restitution. The invitation, which went forth after the Lord had taken His place at the right hand of the Majesty on high, is clearly stated by Peter in the third chapter of Acts. “Repent, therefore, and be converted, for the blotting out of your sins, so that times of refreshing may come from the presence of the Lord, and He may send Jesus Christ, who was foreordained for you, whom heaven indeed must receive till the times of restoration of all things, of which God has spoken by the mouth of His holy prophets since time began” (Acts 3:19-21).

No Gentile heard this message, nor was it meant for a Gentile; it was exclusively addressed to Jerusalem. It is a mistake to teach otherwise. The times of restoration or restitution of all things, refer us to that which is promised to Israel when converted, with the Kingdom restored. To use this passage, as it is done so often, as an argument for that wicked doctrine, the restitution of all things, including the unsaved, is fundamentally wrong. Most of the soul-destroying errors taught in these last days spring from a wrong division of the Word of Truth. If this new invitation had been accepted by the Jews, then the Lord would have returned and the restoration of all things, spoken by the prophets and promised to His earthly people, would have come to pass. But the call was not heeded; the restoration of all things, promised to Israel, has been postponed.

Of this refusal to accept this gracious invitation to come to the marriage feast we read in this parable in the fifth and sixth verses. They made light of it, they ignored the offer and occupied themselves with earthly things, such as merchandise. They did the same, what Judah had done after he had with his brethren sold Joseph, he turned a merchant (Genesis 38:1-30). But simple rejection of the gracious offer is not all, “the rest (the leaders of the people) laying hold of his bondmen, ill-treated and slew them.” The Book of Acts show how literally these words of the Lord were fulfilled. The climax was the stoning of Stephen.

And after this rejected second offer to the bidden guests, the Jews, comes the punishment sent upon them by God. Their city is destroyed, burned by fire, and these evil men, who are now called murderers, suffer the judgment as well. The Roman army came against Jerusalem, the city is burned; that awful judgment the Lord had predicted when He beheld the city, fell upon Jerusalem and the nation was dispersed. Again we say, what a literal fulfilment! This ends God’s dealing with Israel as a nation for the present age. He will deal with them again ere long; but nationally they are set aside during this age, which, however, does not mean that the individual Jew could not hear and accept the offer of Grace.

Now follows something new. It corresponds to that of which we read in the parable of the sower in Matthew 13:1-58, “the sower went out to sow.” It is now outside of Israel nationally that the Grace of God is offered and the invitation to the wedding feast is given. The servants go out into the highways and give the invitation and bring together all as many as they found, both evil and good, so that the wedding feast was furnished.

It is clear that this going forth of the servants stands for the Gospel call going out to the Gentiles. “By their fall salvation is come to the Gentiles” as the Holy Spirit later testifies through Paul, is taught by the Lord Himself in this parable.

Something follows, which is often misapplied. All the confusion about the wedding garment springs from the wrong conception of the parable, in giving it a church application and putting the scene into Heaven. However, the church is here not at all in view. It is, as in Matthew 13:1-58, the Kingdom of the heavens, the professing sphere of Christendom. The Lord shows that this sphere where His Name is professed and His gracious Gospel invitation is heard, is in a mixed condition. It is composed of professors and possessors. The call goes forth, many hear and follow the call, but not all believe with the heart unto salvation. The man without the wedding garment is the representative of this class and a large class it is. This is evident from the words with which our Lord closes the parable, “For many are called, but few chosen.” The many which are called are all those who heard the call and made an outward profession, without having accepted the Lord Jesus Christ. The wedding garment is the same as the “best robe” which by the Father was put upon the prodigal. The Lord Jesus Christ Himself is the wedding garment and all who are mere professors of Christ, without having put on the Lord Jesus Christ, will share the fate of this man in the parable. They will be cast into the outer darkness. Awful fate for every one who has not Christ to cover him in the presence of a holy and righteous God. However man may cover himself, however moral and cultured he may be, or religious and philanthropic, if he has not put on Christ he is naked and his place will be where there is weeping and gnashing of teeth forever. We only wish to add that the scene of viewing the guests must not be put in heaven. None but those who are Christ's, saved and in possession of eternal life, will be in heaven, and none of those can nor ever will be cast out. It refers to the same time as Matthew 13:40-43. Nor does the Lord teach the last things here, how judgment is to take place, where and in what order. In a general way He teaches this as a warning that though His invitation goes forth and many hear, yet not all will be chosen and that simply because they refuse to accept the gift of God -- the wedding garment, which alone fits us to be in the presence of the King.

The wonderful parable had been uttered; the fearful doom of Jerusalem and its evil leaders predicted; once more the Pharisees are silent in the presence of the King. Their hearts and moral condition had been uncovered, but determined to refuse the light which shone upon them, their darkness became greater than before. We see them withdrawing from His presence. They had nothing to say to Him; no answer to give; no confession to make. Led by their evil hearts, under the control of Satan they turned their backs upon the Lord. Light refused becomes darkness. “If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness.” This is a solemn word, especially in our day. Light received, truth revealed and not acted upon and followed, results in darkness in our days.

TEXT: Matthew 22:15-22

TITLE: THE TAX TRAP -- CONTROVERSY REGARDING PAYING TAXES

BIG IDEA:

BEGIN WITH YOUR PRIMARY OBLIGATION TO SUBMIT TO GOD AND YOU WILL HAVE NO STRUGGLE SUBMITTING TO CIVIL GOVERNMENT

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: Matthew now returns to the controversies that are the core of this section. The three parables have established the guilt of the leaders and the nation for rejecting the summons of the Son of God to enter the new kingdom reality. In the four debates that follow the Pharisees and Sadducees prove their guilt by repeatedly “testing” Jesus and trying to gather evidence against him. As stated in the introduction to this larger unit (21:23 – 22:46), the four controversies relate to the major types of rabbinic questions:

- wisdom (22:15–22),
- mockery against a belief (22:23–33),
- moral conduct (22:34–40), and
- biblical contradictions (22:41–46).

Jesus’ response to the Pharisees’ attempt to trap him lies at the heart of all “submission to government” passages in the NT (e.g., Rom 13:1–7; 1 Tim 2:2; 1 Pet 2:13–17). The point is not that allegiance to God is the antithesis of allegiance to government but that allegiance to government is part of allegiance to God. Yet at the same time God has the greater claim, and if a choice must be made, the believer must “obey God rather than human beings” (Acts 4:19; 5:29).

Matthew McCraw: God has designed us to be loyal in multiple human relationships and institutions. However, none of these are to take the place of our loyalty to God. We must be devoted to and faithful to God and that to which He has called us. He is Lord of our lives and He has a design for our lives.

Richard Gardner: The substance of Jesus’ answer, Pay Caesar what is Caesar’s and God what is God’s, could be paraphrased as follows: “Insofar as we live and participate in the civic order, there are civic obligations to fulfill. Our ultimate obligation, however, which sets boundaries and limits to all other obligations, is faithfulness to God, the ruler of all creation.”

Albert Mohler Jr.: Continuing their confrontation with Jesus, various leaders of the religious establishment now engage him in four debates. Threatened by Jesus’ pronouncement of judgment (cf. 21:45), the Pharisees attempt to have Jesus incriminate himself. The Pharisees combine forces with their rivals, the Herodians, to try to defeat their common enemy. Taxes were a volatile issue in Israel. If Jesus answers that it is appropriate to pay taxes to Caesar, he will be cast into disfavor among the tax-burdened people. If Jesus answers that it is not appropriate, his words may incriminate him as an insurrectionist against the Roman Empire. Seeing through their ploy, Jesus uses the denarius coin for paying taxes to make a profound counterpoint. As the Creator of all things, God has sovereign claim over creation. Giving to God what is God’s requires good stewardship of all he has created. This includes respecting governing authorities in a way that honors one's primary allegiance to God. Jesus' statement also clarifies his role at this point in God's salvation history. He is not establishing a political kingdom to oppose Caesar. Rather, in this age God's kingdom will operate within the existing political order, so those who respond to Jesus' invitation into the kingdom will have obligations to governing authorities of this world (cf. Ro 13:1-17; 1Pe 2:13-17).

I. (:15-17) EXECUTING THE TAX TRAP PUTS OUR OBLIGATION TO CIVIL GOVERNMENT IN OPPOSITION TO OUR ALLEGIANCE TO GOD

A. (:15) Sinister Scheming – Planning the Tax Trap

“Then the Pharisees went and counseled together how they might trap Him in what He said.”

Charles Swindoll: This is the only time the Herodians are mentioned in Matthew's Gospel. The Herodians were a group of Jews loyal to Herod's family —specifically, Herod Antipas —and thus in support of the Roman occupation and control over Judea. As such, they would have been in support of Rome's right to exact taxes from the Jewish people. The disciples of the Pharisees, however, would have been opposed to Roman interference in the affairs of the Jews, God's chosen people. Here we have the unprecedented alliance of liberal and conservative, secular and religious —working side by side to snare Jesus in a diabolical trap.

B. (:16) False Flattery – Preparing the Tax Trap

“And they sent their disciples to Him, along with the Herodians, saying, ‘Teacher, we know that You are truthful and teach the way of God in truth, and defer to no one; for You are not partial to any.’”

Matthew McCraw: The Herodians were primarily politically motivated, whereas the Pharisees were primarily religiously motivated.

Under normal circumstances, these two groups may not even get along. However, when it came to trying to trick Jesus, they seemed to get along just fine.

Grant Osborne: The Pharisees don't believe a word of what they are saying, but they are unconsciously stating absolute truth.

Stu Weber: The Pharisees and Herodians approached Jesus first, beginning with hypocritical flattery. They addressed him as Teacher, partly to gain favor with the crowd, and partly to catch Jesus off guard. They claimed to know that Jesus was a man of integrity and that he taught the way of God, when in reality they believed him to be a heretic. . .

They also pointed out Jesus' commitment to truth without consideration for the rank or social status of those who might agree or disagree with him. Jesus was known for being impartial toward all people and forthright in his teaching. They were hoping to coax Jesus into saying something politically incorrect.

Their statements about Jesus' impartiality were intended to force him to take one side or another, thereby showing partiality. The question was whether it was right under Old Testament Law to pay the poll tax (we presume) to Caesar, the Roman emperor. The two groups that asked the question were on opposite sides of the issue. If Jesus answered, “Yes, it is right,” then he would show partiality toward the Herodians, who supported Roman rule. Then the Pharisees would accuse Jesus of sympathizing with the Romans. This was not a crime, but it was not a popular position among the Jews.

If Jesus answered, “No, it is not right,” then he would show partiality toward the Pharisees, who opposed Roman rule and saw Roman taxation as robbing from God. Then the Herodians could arrest him and bring him before Herod Antipas on charges of treason against the Roman Empire.

In either case, they thought, Jesus would show himself to be partial. He would also alienate part of his following, and he might incriminate himself under Roman law.

Stanley Saunders: The Pharisees’ disciples have been well coached. They flatter him with effusive, fulsome praise, emphasizing his integrity and impartiality. In fact, the success of their plot depends on Jesus’ integrity and lack of deference to the powerful (22:16). A simple, politically naive answer—either yes or no—best accomplishes their purpose. But Jesus is not the country bumpkin they think he is. They claim to know a lot about his character (22:16), but he knows the evil in their hearts (22:18; cf. 9:4; 12:24–25). He tells them he is aware of their hypocrisy (22:18), and then asks for the coin used to pay the tax, which they readily supply.

C. (:17) Opposing Obligations -- Controversial Choice – Pay Poll Tax to Caesar or Not? Presenting the Tax Trap --

“Tell us therefore, what do You think? Is it lawful to give a poll-tax to Caesar, or not?”

Richard Gardner: It was not the amount, however, but rather the principle of subjection to Rome that aroused antagonism to the tax. Adding to the resentment was the fact that the coin used to pay the tax was stamped with a likeness of Tiberias Caesar, along with an inscription honoring him as the venerable son of the divine emperor Augustus (cf. w. 19-21a). Like others, the Pharisees found the tax distasteful, but reluctantly supported paying it.

Grant Osborne: There were three types of taxes for the Jews:

1. the temple tax of 17:24–27;
2. indirect taxes like customs duties, sales taxes, etc.; and
3. the direct poll or head tax paid only by non-Roman citizens.

This is the third type, and it became a form of tribute paid by all subject peoples. The amount was one denarius paid annually by all adults, women as well as men. It was controversial and opposed by many Jews. Judas the Galilean led a revolt against this tax in AD 6. So the Pharisees feel this will get Jesus in trouble however he responds, either with the Jews if he says yes or with the Romans if he says no.

Matthew McCraw: So, we have the issue of paying money to the big bad rulers, and we have the issue with the actual image on the coin. All the while, the taxes are due. The religious devotees could accuse Jesus of supporting pagan rulers if He said to pay the tax and the political devotees could accuse Jesus of not supporting the government if He said not to pay the tax.

II. (:18-21) EXTRICATING HIMSELF FROM THE TAX TRAP – SUBMISSION TO GOVERNMENT DOES NOT CONFLICT WITH OUR HIGHER ALLEGIANCE TO GOD

A. (:18) Exposing their Malicious Motivation

“But Jesus perceived their malice, and said, ‘Why are you testing Me, you hypocrites?’”

Grant Osborne: Jesus wants them to know he has seen behind their charade and is fully aware their question is not an honest one but a “test” (as in 16:1; 19:3; 22:35) designed not to ascertain truth but to entrap him. As a result of such dishonesty, they are “hypocrites” (on this see 6:2 and esp. 15:7 and throughout ch. 23), hiding their true purposes.

David Turner: “Jesus recognizes the daggers in the men’s smiles” (W. Davies and Allison 1997: 215). He sees the evil motive behind the flattery and asks his questioners why they are putting him to the test. Satan is the first to test Jesus (4:1–11; cf. 1 Cor. 7:5; 1 Thess. 3:5; Heb. 4:15; Rev. 2:10), and others follow (Matt. 16:1; 19:3; 22:18, 35). Their testing of Jesus bears similarities to incidents in the Hebrew Scriptures. Jesus’s opponents are often described as hypocrites in Matthew (cf. 6:2, 5, 16; 7:5; 15:7; 23:13, 15, 23, 25, 27, 29; 24:51). His severe language unmasks their insincerity and prepares the reader for the extended diatribe in Matt. 23.

B. (:19-21a) Examining the Coinage

“‘Show Me the coin used for the poll-tax.’

And they brought Him a denarius.

20 And He said to them, ‘Whose likeness and inscription is this?’

21 They said to Him, ‘Caesar’s.’”

C. (:21b) Explaining the Fundamental Principle

“Then He said to them, ‘Then render to Caesar the things that are Caesar’s; and to God the things that are God’s.’”

David Turner: Perhaps the Herodians expected a positive answer and the Pharisees a negative answer, but both are astounded by what they hear. The anti-Herod Pharisees are told to pay taxes to the Roman government, evidently because the providence of God has placed the Romans over the Jews (cf. Rom. 13:1–7; 1 Pet. 2:13–17; Abel 1969). The Herodians are reminded that their allegiance to God supersedes allegiance to the emperor. Both should recognize that the inscription on the emperor’s coin is wrong—he is neither God nor high priest—and his blasphemous coin does not belong in God’s temple (W. Davies and Allison 1997: 215). Jesus does not support the Pharisees by opposing Caesar’s tax, but neither does he support the Herodians by affirming total loyalty to Rome. Ironically, Jesus has truly taught the way of God despite the insincere flattery of his questioners (Matt. 22:16). W. Davies and Allison (1997: 218) correctly say that there is “no precise theory of governmental authority” in the aphorism of 22:21. Yet this passage is one of many biblical texts teaching that God’s providence places governments in authority and that believers ought to obey government as long as such obedience is not disobedient to God.

Charles Swindoll: Just as Caesar had minted coins with his likeness on them, God has placed His likeness on us (Gen. 1:26). As His image bearers, all humans owe Him our very selves. Physical, earthly treasures and powers are temporary. Why not give back to Caesar those trinkets of metal that have his image on them? God is much more concerned with what we do with the spiritual, eternal, heavenly dimensions of our lives. To give God the things that are God’s means to render to Him our whole being —to “love the LORD your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your might” (Deut. 6:5).

(:22) EPILOGUE – RETREAT IN DEFEAT

“And hearing this, they marveled, and leaving Him, they went away.”

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Have you ever interacted with believers who express the conviction that Christians should not pay their taxes to civil government? How did you respond?
- 2) Why are we not complicit with the injustice and corruption of civil government when we pay taxes to that government?
- 3) How could such authorities marvel at the wisdom of Jesus and yet not submit to His teaching?
- 4) What type of problem did both the Herodians and the Pharisees have with submitting to the authority of God in their lives?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Grant Osborne: Give to the state its due, whether it is worthy or not. Jesus is clear that government is to be respected and taxes are to be paid. Rome was not a godly government, yet Jesus commanded his followers to submit. The state is God’s servant and should be accorded respect in that role. This means that the believer is to respect the fact of government even if the particular government is not worthy, which was certainly the case with the Roman emperors.

Moreover, there is no room for armed insurrection. Jesus was not a supporter of the revolutionaries of his day. The Zealots did not appear in full force until AD 67–68, but there were many visible revolutionary movements (cf. “Simon the Cananaean,” 10:4) and messianic pretenders in the first century, and these issues are partly in mind in this passage. Jesus did not countenance such movements and demand respect for established government. Yet this does not mean that protest of evil in government is wrong, as exemplified in Jesus and his early followers in their condemnation of the Jewish leaders. But there is a difference between prophetic warning (as in the OT prophets) and armed rebellion. The former is part of respect for government (trying to remove evil and forestall divine judgment), the latter is taking God’s judgment in our own hands.

God is in control and deserves submission in every area of life. As Hagner puts it: “If one rendered to the state its restricted due, all the more is one to render to God his unrestricted due—the totality of one’s being and substance, one’s existence, is to be rendered to God and nothing less.” Submission to government takes place as part of one’s complete submission to God in every area. If there is conflict, we must “obey God rather than human beings” (Acts 4:19; 5:29), for God is sovereign over government and over every aspect of one’s being.

Charles Swindoll: God isn't an elected official or a disinterested deity. God is King of the universe. We owe Him —and Him alone —our highest allegiance. No other do we worship. Our postmodern, pluralistic society tells us that all gods are simply metaphorical for the sense of the transcendent and all “good” religions are basically the same. This is patently false, for “there is one God, and one mediator also between God and men, the man Christ Jesus” (1 Tim. 2:5). We owe our greatest love, highest honor, and humblest obedience to God, not to a political leader, nation, boss, parent, or even church. Our appropriate respect for and honor toward those other authorities in our lives will only be enhanced by an acknowledgment of God alone as our King. To worship any other person, thing, or idea is idolatry. We must render to God what is God's —our whole selves!

Donald Hagner: The design of the Pharisees to entrap Jesus failed because he was able to transcend the dilemma they forced on him. And in so doing, Jesus was at the same time able to articulate a fundamental principle by which the disciples could chart their existence as the people of God's kingdom living in a yet imperfect world governed by secular authorities. This logic served as the beginning point of what was to be elaborated centuries later in the Lutheran two-kingdom theory. The later NT writers regard the ruling powers as instituted by God and as worthy of honor, faithfulness, support, and intercession (e.g., Rom 13:1–17; 1 Peter 2:13–17). It is right to render to Caesar what is Caesar's. Jesus was no Zealot or revolutionary who advocated the overthrow of the Roman government. But neither did he put priority upon loyalty to secular government. If one rendered to the state its restricted due, all the more was one to render to God his unrestricted due—the totality of one's being and substance, one's existence, was to be rendered to God and nothing less. Loyalty to Caesar must always be set in the larger context and thus be relativized by the full submission of the self to God. The bottom line for the disciple of Jesus is to “render to God the things that are his.”

John MacArthur: Our Obligation to God and Government

We are somewhat barraged from time to time by some in the Church, and some who are Christians who tell us we ought not to pay our taxes. I don't know if you ever hear that, but I get all kinds of things on that in the mail, that we're not to pay taxes; taxes are both unconstitutional and ungodly, and we shouldn't give the things that we have received from God back to those who are godless and back to secular governments and so forth. . .

But now it is Wednesday. He's back in the temple, which He has cleansed, and He's moving around in the temple teaching. And His teaching is on the kingdom, and His preaching is on the Gospel. And He's collected, as He always did by the magnetism of His personality and the dynamics of His teaching, a massive crowd of people who are intrigued and interested and fascinated by what He is saying.

Now, this makes the religious leaders irate. They resent Jesus Christ. They resent Him because He opposes them. He unmasks their pride, self-righteousness. They not only resent Him because He opposes them, they resent Him because He captures the hearts of the people. And envy and jealousy fills them. They resent Him because He claims to be the Messiah, the Son of God, and doesn't identify with Him. They resent Him because He cleaned the temple without getting their permission. He is everything they are not. He's genuine; they're hypocrites. He threatens the system that exists: the system of self-righteousness as opposed to God righteousness, a symposium of works as opposed to a system of faith. . .

Now, they've got Him in the corner, they think, where He now knows that they think so highly of Him, that He's got so much integrity, so much truth, so much conviction, and so much courage of that conviction that He's going to answer them truthfully. He's going to have to live up to His reputation now. What a commendation. It was all true. They didn't intend it that way, just lying flattery. What an ugly sin. . .

Now, there's a fourth word to look at. We've seen the aim, the approach, and the attack. Now watch this - the accusation. The accusation. Verse 18, marvelous. "But Jesus, knowing their wickedness" – the word there is to know by discernment. I mean He knew because He knew everything. You can't sucker Jesus Christ. You can't sneak up on His blindside; there is no blindside. He's omniscient. He knew everything. . .

And so, He says, "Why are you tempting Me? Why are you putting Me to a test you think I will fail? Why do you want me to fail, you phonies? Your flattery was fake; it was hypocritical." That's such an ugly sin – hypocrisy, flattery – one so condemned in the Old Testament again and again. Read the Proverbs sometimes. Look up all the places in Proverbs where it talks about flattery and a lying tongue. So, Jesus' accusation was very serious. And again, He turns the tables on them and unmasks them.

Now, from His accusation, He turns to His analogy, and here's the heart of the text. . .

And when He's answering their question, He says, "Give it back. You're not giving him a gift. You're giving him what belongs to him. It is a debt, and it must be paid. You know what the Lord says here? Pay your taxes. That's right, pay your taxes. The payment of a tax is a debt. It's a debt set by a government. Even a pagan, idolatrous government; even a blasphemous government; even a government about to be the executioner of the Son of God; even a government which will hammer nails into His hands, ram a spear into His side, and watch Him die, even that kind of government that executes the Christ, pay your taxes. It is not a gift; it is not a choice; it is a debt for the benefits received, the benefits enjoyed. Caesar has his rights. And for the provision of physical, social, economic benefits, protection, etcetera, he's due a debt; pay it. .

It's the second half of this things that's so dynamic; He says – "and to God the things that are God's." Now, let me ask you this question: what was – with this coinage and all the rest, what was Caesar asking for that only God deserved? What was it? Worship. That's the issue. You can pay your tax to Caesar, but don't you dare render to him your worship. That's what He's saying, "Don't you dare give to him your adoration and your praise. Don't you swear to him your allegiance as your god and master." That's the issue.

And so, Jesus makes a beautiful hair-splitting statement, "You give the system what the system can demand out of you. And what it can demand is social and economic. What it cannot demand is spiritual and religious. And where this really becomes a problem would be if all of a sudden the president of the United States announced that he was god, and all the Senate and all the Congress were high priests, and everything we gave to them would be given to a religious system, and not only did we have to give it to them, but we have to worship them, and that's where we say – what? – "No. No."

J. Ligon Duncan: Render to Caesar

I. The unregenerate heart standing before truth flatters for advantage and schemes to destroy.

The unregenerate hearts of the Pharisees and their disciples are standing before the truth Himself, and yet their response to that truth is simply to flatter for their own advantage and to scheme to destroy Him. Bear that in mind as we look at this passage. The leaders of Israel had been strongly rebuked by Jesus Christ in the last three parables that we studied, and so being frustrated in that circumstance, being frustrated as I'm sure they felt shamed, in front of the people of Israel as Jesus spoke very directly about their sin and the wickedness of their hearts, they go off by themselves and they plot together to lay a trap for Jesus. . .

But there was an image of that emperor, and the emperor claimed to be divine. In fact, on one side of the coin, the inscription said, Tiberius Caesar Augustus, which literally translated means Son of the divine Augustus. The emperor was claiming to be the son of god, He was claiming to be a god. On the other side of that coin, it said Pontifex Maximus, literally translated, high priest. Therefore, the coin that was used to pay the poll tax was actually part of a claim by the Roman emperor to have not only political control over all those in his empire, but also spiritual control. Do you see why devout Jews would have grated against this command?

II. Jesus reveals His glory in His wisdom in His answer

And so Jesus once again makes them answer the tricky question that they had asked Him. Is it lawful to pay the poll tax? Jesus' response, and He makes them say it, is, who does the coin belong to in the first place? Caesar. He minted it. And so He makes them answer the question that they think that He is going to be tripped up on. . .

When you pay that poll tax, you aren't 'giving a gift to Caesar.' Caesar has already built you roads, Caesar has already given you justice courts, he has set up military protection for you, police and various other civil benefits. Therefore, if you have a problem with Caesar's provisions, you shouldn't be protesting the poll tax, you should have protested in the first place when he did the other things! You accept the roads, you accept the protection, and then you pretend to have religious scruples over paying him for it! So you give back to Caesar what already belongs to him! But you give to God what belongs to Him. And Jesus is saying, you know that only God is to be worshipped, only God is God, only God provides the high priest. So you don't worship Caesar as a high priest, you don't acknowledge him as a high priest, you pay him his money for his roads and for his protection, but you don't worship him as high priest. That belongs to God.

III. Despite the divine wisdom of Jesus' answer, hearts are unchanged.

Jesus' words pierce, and they amaze, and we look at verse 22, and indeed, even those who came to trap Him were flabbergasted. Hearing Jesus' response, we see them amazed, but still unbelieving. They're amazed by Jesus' wisdom. They don't know how He slipped this trap! They were expecting Him to be caught in its clinches, and Jesus slips the trap. But they still don't believe in Him. Once again we learn that despite the divine wisdom of Jesus' answer, their unbelieving hearts are unchanged. The tempters were filled with awe, wonder with amazement at how Jesus had responded to their question, but they were not converted. Look at the words of verse 22: "Hearing this, they were amazed, and leaving Him, they went away." Matthew Henry said: "You expect to read, 'they were amazed and submitted to Him.' That is what you expect to read; you expect to read, 'they were amazed and followed Him.' But what you read is, 'they were amazed and left Him.'"

Bethany Bible Church: The Things That Are God's

We should, of course, be very careful to perform our duties as citizens of the earthly government in which God has placed. But we should be even more careful to perform the greater duties and obligations we owe to the God of the universe—the God who made us for Himself, and who has absolute and complete Creatorship-rights over us.

To put it another way—a way that I'm sure you'll recognize—we shouldn't fail to render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's; but we should make even more certain that we render to God the things that are God's.

That, I believe, is the main point of this morning's passage. It's a passage that teaches us many important things; but the main thing I believe it seeks to teach us is that above all other obligations we have in life, we are obliged first to render to God His rights over us. . .

The word that Matthew uses—to "entangle"—is one that was used of the way a hunter trapped and ensnared an animal in order to take it captive. The means by which they intended to trap Him was through His own words; and the bait they proposed to use was this question. They had huddled together in order to craft the perfect question that would make it possible for them to bring Him before the authorities and discredit Him before the people—thus getting rid of Him without having to lay a hand on Him themselves. . .

That second obligation, it seems to me, is what really brought the conviction down on those who were seeking to trap Him with their question. Matthew tells us that, when they heard His answer, "they marveled, and left Him and went their way." Luke tells us, that "they could not catch Him in His words in the presence of the people" (Luke 20:26). If they had given to God what first belonged to God, they would not only render to Caesar what was Caesar's, but they would have also bowed down before the Lord Jesus Christ and pledged their first allegiance to Him.

Scott Harris: Obligations to Caesar; Obligations to God

The Herodians were needed by the Pharisees to carry out their plan for their question was designed to put Jesus in the position of either supporting Rome or agreeing with common Jewish sentiment against Rome. If Jesus spoke in favor of Rome, then the Pharisees could take care of the matter themselves and rally the people against Jesus. However, if Jesus spoke against Rome as they expected, then they would need people who were pro-Roman present to then make charges against Jesus as a subversive to the Roman authorities. The Pharisees could not have done this without becoming suspect themselves because their anti-Roman sentiment was well known. Instead, the Herodians, though detested by the Pharisees, were now useful to them as credible witnesses against Jesus to the Roman government. . .

Flattery is excessive praise used from motives of self-interest. It is therefore insincere and used by a person only in an effort to get what they want out of the person they are flattering. Lying is usually a part of flattery, but here it is in its worse form, for it is using truth as a means to gain a wicked end instead of being spoken as true praise.

Their use of flattery in posing their question exposes their true character for both the Scriptures and the Talmud speak against the use of flattery. Proverbs 20:19 warns us not to get involved with someone who has flattering lips. Proverbs 26:28 warns that a flattering tongue works ruin, and Proverbs 29:5 makes the point directly that a man that flatters does so to entrap his neighbor. Psalms 12 states that the Lord will cut off those who flatter, and 1Thessalonians 2:5 tells us as Christians that we are not to use flattering words at anytime. Why? Because it is insincere and really just a cloak for covetousness. It is a means to selfishly gain from someone else by inducing them to be favorable to you. . .

The supreme wisdom of this statement is often missed because it is so simple. It is a short statement. It is a pithy statement. It is an answer that could never have been anticipated by them. It is an answer that is neither rebellious against the government nor God. It is an answer that proclaimed clearly and practically God's command to meet our obligations and fulfill our responsibilities to both God and government. . .

Jesus' command to "render to Caesar what is Caesar's and to God what is God's" turned out to be a two-edged sword against the Herodians and the disciples of the Pharisees. That same sword still hangs over people today. The Herodians sought to render to Caesar, but they did not render to God. The Pharisees and their disciples did not render properly to Caesar, and their claim to render to God was false. They were in constant rebellion against both. The Herodians and the Pharisees would remain under God's judgment.

David Thompson: NO MATTER HOW THE RELIGIOUS LEADERS TRIED TO TRAP JESUS CHRIST, THEY COULD NOT EVER DO IT BECAUSE HE ALWAYS COMMUNICATED GOD'S TRUTH EVEN ABOUT TAXES, WHICH SHOWS THEIR HYPOCRISY.

Parting Thoughts:

1. Christians have the responsibility to honor and submit to governing rulers (Rom. 13:1).
2. Christians have the responsibility to honor and obey God.
3. Religious phonies reject God's truth and will not submit to any authority because they believe they are the authority.

TEXT: Matthew 22:23-33

TITLE: CONTROVERSY REGARDING MARRIAGE IN THE RESURRECTION

BIG IDEA:

THE DOCTRINE OF THE RESURRECTION CAN BE DEFENDED BY UNDERSTANDING BOTH GOD’S WORD AND GOD’S POWER

INTRODUCTION:

The issue at stake in this controversy with the Sadducees is the doctrine of the resurrection. The hypothetical case study of how to handle marriage in the resurrection is a mocking attempt to make the doctrine of the resurrection appear ludicrous – thereby discrediting Jesus in the eyes of the people as a teacher sent from God. But Jesus once again turns the tables and completely embarrasses the self-proclaimed religious experts who prided themselves on a literal interpretation of the Torah.

David Turner: In both this encounter with the Sadducees and the previous one with the Pharisees, Jesus is asked a difficult question that is intended to discredit him. But both times Jesus discredits and amazes his interlocutors. Here the question concerns not a hot political issue, taxation, but theology and the interpretation of Scripture. The Sadducees evidently believe that Torah-based levirate marriage cannot be squared with the Pharisees’ notion of an afterlife. Perhaps they want Jesus to align with them against the Pharisees (Hagner 1995a: 640). Whatever their agenda, Jesus says that their denial of the resurrection is an error caused by ignorance. They think of resurrection and the afterlife as mere reanimation to life as before. They are ignorant that God’s transforming power means that people after resurrection are no longer sexually active (cf. 1 Cor. 15:35–39). Sexuality is part of the goodness of creation, but life in the resurrection will transcend this aspect of creation. This renders the levirate law moot. Jesus’s argument from Exod. 3:6 shows that the Sadducees are also ignorant of the scriptural inference that God’s covenantal loyalty to the patriarchs proves their eventual resurrection, along with that of all God’s people.

Charles Swindoll: Being presently earthbound creatures, our perspective is riveted to the created order outlined in Genesis 1: dirt and stone, water and air, drifting clouds and distant constellations. Experiencing these things day after day, year after year, we can’t help but think of all reality in terms of earth, sky, and outer space. It’s next to impossible for us to remove ourselves mentally from our earthly existence and really imagine what it would be like to dwell in another realm.

When the subject of the afterlife comes up, it’s our natural tendency simply to transfer a picture of our earthbound lifestyle to our notion of heavenly existence. But we need to recognize the vast difference between the temporal life and eternal life, life on earth and life in heaven. For starters, our bodies won’t be in their present, mortal condition. Rather, as we learn from the words of Jesus, we will be “like angels in heaven” (Matt. 22:30).

Donald Hagner: Since the resurrection of Jesus and hence of all the dead was to become so critically important in the church (cf. Acts 4:2), much is at stake in the present exchange.

Stanley Saunders: Since Peter's confession that Jesus is "the Messiah, the Son of the Living God" (16:16), Jesus has been warning his disciples that he will suffer and die in Jerusalem at the hands of the leaders with whom he now debates, and promising that he will be raised from the dead after three days (16:21; 17:12; 17:22–23; 20:18–19). This story roots his claim about the resurrection in the foundational theological conviction that God is God of the living. Jesus knows what will happen in Jerusalem because he knows his adversaries, but also because he knows who God is. Jesus' crucifixion is not merely a story of tragic human disobedience, but the story of God's defeat of death and of those whose power is rooted in death. For Jesus, the resurrection is neither an artifact of popular belief nor merely an assertion that God will make things right in the end. The resurrection is the defining and crowning revelation of the nature and effect of God's power. The crucifixion and resurrection are thus the bedrock theological convictions that call forth and sustain all Christian proclamation and practice.

I. (:23-28) THE ATTACK ON THE DOCTRINE OF THE RESURRECTION BY THE SADDUCEES

A. (:23) The Attack Initiated by Resurrection Deniers Via a "Gotcha" Question

"On that day some Sadducees (who say there is no resurrection) came to Him and questioned Him, saying,"

This type of approach should remind you of that obnoxious student who would try to make the professor look bad in class by some convoluted type of argumentation. The Sadducees have no sincere interest in investigating the truth of the reality of future resurrection. Their only motivation is to try to discredit Jesus.

David Turner: Jesus has been telling parables, and now the Sadducees approach him with a sort of riddle-parable of their own (cf. Mark 12:18–27; Luke 20:27–40). The Sadducees, in their denial of an afterlife, disagreed with the Pharisees (Acts 23:8; Josephus, Ant. 18.12–17; J.W. 2.162–66). This was evidently due to their rejection of the Pharisees' oral tradition and their emphasizing the five books of Moses over the rest of the canon. Like others who are not Jesus's disciples in Matthew, they address Jesus as "teacher" (cf. Matt. 8:19; 9:11; 12:38; 17:24; 19:16; 22:16, 36).

Charles Swindoll: Having just dispensed with a plot of the Pharisees, Jesus had barely caught His breath when a group of Sadducees showed up. The pressure was mounting. Like a desperate military campaign to take a fortified city, Jesus' opponents were coming at Him from every angle with wave after wave of attacks. Little did the Messiah's enemies know that their unrelenting assaults were slamming against an immovable object. No political tricks or theological subtleties would be able to trap the One who could not only see through their devices but could also see into their hearts and minds. So when a small group of Sadducees came to question Jesus about His view on the doctrine of the resurrection, they had no way of knowing what they were up against. . .

By the time of Christ, the Pharisees had developed a rich doctrine of the afterlife, including a bodily resurrection of the saved and unsaved, as well as teachings concerning rewards and punishments. Meanwhile, their theological rivals, the Sadducees, believed that the soul perished with the body and that the concept of resurrection was a myth. Since they accepted only the authority of the books of Moses, they rejected any teachings about the afterlife or resurrection that came from later prophets. They also denied the existence of angels and demons. Because they rejected the notion of life after death, they did not believe in heaven and hell or eternal judgment and rewards. They believed that obedience to God brought blessing in this life and that disobedience brought retribution in the here and now. They were worried far less about losing their eternal souls in heaven than about losing their temporal control of political power. We might compare the Sadducees of Jesus' day to the very secular, theologically liberal clergy of our own day. In the book of Acts, Luke briefly notes the differences between the Sadducees and the Pharisees this way: "The Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, nor an angel, nor a spirit, but the Pharisees acknowledge them all" (Acts 23:8).

William Barclay: The Sadducees were not many in number; but they were the wealthy, the aristocratic and the governing class. The chief priests, for instance, were Sadducees. In politics, they were collaborationists, quite ready to co-operate with the Roman government if co-operation was the price of the retention of their own privileges. In thought, they were quite ready to open their minds to Greek ideas. In their Jewish belief, they were traditionalists. They refused to accept the oral and scribal law, which to the Pharisees was of such paramount importance. They went even further; the only part of Scripture which they regarded as binding was the Pentateuch, the law par excellence, the first five books of the Old Testament. They did not accept the prophets or the poetical books as Scripture at all. In particular, they were at variance with the Pharisees in that they completely denied any life after death, a belief on which the Pharisees insisted. The Pharisees indeed laid it down that anyone who denied the resurrection of the dead was shut out from God.

B. (:24-27) The Attack Framed in a Convoluted Test Case Regarding Levirate Marriage

"Teacher, Moses said, 'If a man dies, having no children, his brother as next of kin shall marry his wife, and raise up an offspring to his brother. 25 Now there were seven brothers with us; and the first married and died, and having no offspring left his wife to his brother; 26 so also the second, and the third, down to the seventh. 27 And last of all, the woman died.'"

Grant Osborne: The purpose of levirate marriage was to protect the name of a deceased brother without children and to guarantee that he would have legal heirs and thus the ancestral lands would continue in the family, as well as to take care of the widow who would often be left destitute. So when a man died childless, his brother was supposed to marry his wife and bear children in his name. In Deut 25:7–10 the brother could refuse but would be publicly shamed for doing so. We do not know how extensively this was practiced in Jesus' time (no instance is recorded), but the point of law was well known (discussed in Josephus, Ant. 4.254–56; m. Yeb.).

The use of "seven" is due to its being the number of completion; this is a "perfect" example. So far this is a classic case of levirate marriage, a childless widow given to the deceased man's brother.

C. (:28) The Attack Launched Via a Ludicrous Question Aimed at Mocking the Doctrine of the Resurrection

*"In the resurrection therefore whose wife of the seven shall she be?
For they all had her."*

Grant Osborne: The question itself assumes a stance against polygamy, and the Sadducees are trying to force Jesus into a no-win situation. Either he denies the afterlife or accepts polygamy.

It is clear that their entire purpose is to “ridicule the idea of life after death” and in so doing to “trap Jesus and discredit his teaching.”

II. (:29-32) THE DEFENSE OF THE DOCTRINE OF THE RESURRECTION BY THE ONE WHO IS THE RESURRECTION AND THE LIFE

A. (:29) Two Errors of Self Deception

“But Jesus answered and said to them,”

1. First Error of Self Deception = Ignorance of the Word of God

“You are mistaken, not understanding the Scriptures,”

Daniel Doriani: First, they deny the resurrection even though Scripture clearly teaches it.

- Isaiah said, “Your dead will live; their bodies will rise. You who dwell in the dust, wake up and shout for joy. Your dew is like the dew of the morning; the earth will give birth to her dead” (Isa. 26:19).
- Job said, “I know that my Redeemer lives, and that in the end he will stand upon the earth. And after my skin has been destroyed, yet in my flesh I will see God; I myself will see him with my own eyes—I, and not another” (Job 19:25–27).
- Daniel said, “Multitudes who sleep in the dust of the earth will awake: some to everlasting life, others to shame and everlasting contempt” (Dan. 12:2).

These Scriptures promise more than the immortality of the soul, that is, a soul that survives death. They promise a new body, one suited for the renewed creation, and one where wind still blows through our hair.

2. Second Error of Self Deception = Ignorance of the Power of God

“or the power of God.”

B. (:30-32) Two Lines of Defense to Address Each of These Two Errors

(Jesus takes up each of these two errors and addresses them in reverse order)

1. (:30) The Power of God Will Transform Human Existence in the Resurrected State

“For in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are like angels in heaven.”

This transformation and new creation makes the question of the Sadducees a moot point.

David Turner: Again Jesus does not directly answer his interlocutors. Instead he strongly rebukes them, telling them that their ignorance of Scripture and of God’s power has led to error (22:29). He first responds to their argument from Deut. 25:5 by affirming that people, like angels, do not live as married couples in the afterlife (Matt. 22:30). The Sadducees evidently err in assuming that the afterlife will be just like the present life, extrapolating from the present to the future (Hagner 1995a: 641). They also err in not accounting for the power of God to transform human existence.

Stu Weber: Since there was no marriage in heaven, the Sadducees' question was invalid. The answer was that no one would be the woman's husband at the resurrection. This, together with Ephesians 5:22-33, can lead us to the conclusion that God's primary purpose for marriage is to paint a picture on earth of the heavenly marriage between the Messiah and his bride. When the actual marriage of Christ and the church takes place in heaven, there will be no more need for human marriage. It will be displaced by the greater reality toward which it pointed while we were on earth.

Donald Hagner: Modern disbelief in the future resurrection of the dead is the result of an entirely different set of circumstances, especially the naturalism of modern science. Such a viewpoint, however, is not dissimilar to that of the Sadducees, especially in the underestimating of the power of God and the misunderstanding of the NT view of the resurrection and the world to come. If God is truly God, then the raising of the dead can be no problem for him. The power to revivify cannot be denied to the One who created life in the first place. Furthermore, resurrection bodies and the world of the eschaton are neither to be misunderstood as “spiritual” or immaterial, intangible realities completely discontinuous with life as we know it nor, on the other hand, as flesh and blood, material realities completely continuous with the world we know. Although we know little concerning the nature of the world to come and our own existence in it, that future reality will be both continuous in some ways and discontinuous in other ways with what we have known. For one thing, we will have bodies, and thus we will not be disembodied spirits, yet those bodies will not be of flesh and blood but bodies of a new kind that we have yet to experience (the NT discussion of this subject is, of course, 1 Cor 15:35–50). Then the creation will have become the new creation of God.

Daniel Doriani: This leads to a common question: will there be sex in heaven? We can link this to similar questions: Will there be golf in heaven? Ice cream in heaven? Rock and roll or hip-hop music in heaven? (For some reason, people simply assume Bach’s music is in heaven.) The answer to all these questions is the same: If the Lord wills it, then we will experience them in heaven. If not, we will not miss them, because the Lord will give something better. There will be no grief, no sense of loss, in heaven.

There will be a “new world,” a regenerated world (palingenesia, Matt. 19:28), a new heaven and a new earth (2 Peter 3:11–13). We know there will be some continuity with this life. For example, there will be music, for we will sing new praises to God (Rev. 5:9; 15:3). There will be food, for we will enjoy our marriage feast with Jesus (19:9). We will be strong, for we will rest, but not sleep at night (Heb. 4:1–11; Rev. 22:5).

2. (:31-32) The Word of God Offers Clear Testimony to the Reality of the Resurrection

a. (:31-32a) Covenantal Relationships with Each of the Patriarchs

“But regarding the resurrection of the dead, have you not read that which was spoken to you by God, saying,

‘I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob ’?”

Grant Osborne: Now Jesus turns to the witness of Scripture itself and deliberately chooses a passage from the Pentateuch, the portion the Sadducees accept as canon. He begins with his typical challenge to their biblical understanding, “Have you not read?” (cf. 12:3; 19:4; 21:16, 42). By introducing Exod 3:6 with “what was spoken ... by God” (cf. 1:22; 2:15), Jesus emphasizes the divine inspiration behind the passage, thus a double indictment (ignorance of God as well as Scripture). In v. 24 they asserted “Moses said,” so now Jesus trumps that by saying, “in actuality God said.” The presence of “to you” (ὕμῖν) and the present tense participle “spoken” (λέγοντος) highlight the fact that through the OT passage God is speaking now directly to the Sadducees (so Bruner).

David Turner: God’s ongoing covenantal relationship with the patriarchs implies their eventual resurrection. God’s being the God of the patriarchs during the “intermediate state” between their death and resurrection is tantamount to and guarantees his relationship with them in their final resurrected state (cf. 1 En. 20.8; 22.1–14; 60.8; 62.15; 2 Macc. 7:9, 36; 2 Esd. [4 Ezra] 7; Josephus, J.W. 3.374). The Sadducees have no rejoinder to this argument (Matt. 22:34), and the watching crowd is amazed (cf. 7:28; 13:54; 19:25). Jesus’s reference to angels in 22:30 may be intended to irritate the Sadducees, who do not believe in angels (Acts 23:8; Blomberg 1992a: 333; but see W. Davies and Allison 1997: 227 for a contrary view).

b. (:32b) Clinching Truth – God Is the God of the Living
“He is not the God of the dead but of the living.”

(:33) EPILOGUE – RESPONSE OF AMAZEMENT

“And when the multitudes heard this, they were astonished at His teaching.”

Stu Weber: As with the crowd at the end of the Sermon on the Mount (7:28-29), this crowd was also astonished at the authority with which Jesus dealt with his opponents. Not only did Jesus wield Old Testament Scripture accurately; he revealed new truth that the Old Testament had not revealed (22:30). Jesus had turned his challengers' trap into an embarrassment and an accusation against themselves.

William Barclay: The Sadducean case was shattered. Jesus had done what the wisest Rabbis had never been able to do. Out of Scripture itself, he had proved the Sadducees to be wrong and had shown them that there is a life after death which must not be thought of in earthly terms. The crowds were amazed at a man who could take command of an argument like this, and even the Pharisees must have felt like cheering.

D. A. Carson: Matthew does not tell us that the Sadducees are convinced but that the crowds are astonished at Jesus’ teaching. The cause of the astonishment is probably Jesus’ authority and incisive insight into biblical truth (cf. 7:28–29; 13:54; 22:22). Luke (20:39) remarks that some teachers of the law, almost certainly of Pharisaic persuasion, responded, “Well said, teacher!”

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How does the wisdom of Jesus allow Him to control such disputes rather than simply giving direct answers to questions that are asked from an insincere and mocking perspective?
- 2) Why is Jesus the best person to respond to such an attack on the doctrine of the resurrection?
- 3) How can we grow in our knowledge of Scripture and ability to apply God’s truth to specific issues and disputes?

4) Once we acknowledge God's power in creation, how does that fortify us to apply the sufficiency of His power in other contexts?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Richard Gardner: God of the Living

Does individual life end with death, as many OT passages seem to assume (cf. Pss. 6:5; 49:10-12; 88:4-5), or will there be a resurrection of the dead? The question aroused considerable discussion in Jewish circles (cf. Acts 23:6-8; Eccles. 3:19-21; Wisd. of Sol. 2:1ff.; 1 Enoch 102:6ff.; Sanh. 10:1), with the Sadducees arguing against belief in a resurrection. Among the arguments the Sadducees cited was that the belief is not taught in the Torah, the only Scripture which they recognized as authoritative.

In the dispute before us, however, the Sadducees come at the question from a different angle: They present Jesus with a hypothetical case that mocks belief in resurrection by making it appear ludicrous. In the humorous story they spin, based on the practice of levirate marriage taught in the Torah (cf. Deut. 25:5-6; Gen. 38:8), a woman ends up married in sequence to each of seven brothers in the course of her life. Now then, the Sadducees ask, if they all are resurrected, in whose bed will the hapless woman sleep? It is clearly a story meant to evoke laughter.

By giving Jesus an apparently unsolvable puzzle, the Sadducees hope to demonstrate their superiority as theologians. Jesus, however, is more than equal to the challenge and offers a twofold rebuttal. First, he disputes the premise on which the puzzle rests, namely, that life in the age to come is simply an extension of life as we know it now. On the contrary, Jesus says, the power of God that makes resurrection possible will fashion a new world in which marriage arrangements no longer play a part. The Sadducees have too earthbound a view of God's possibilities.

Second, Jesus cites a text from the part of the Scriptures the Sadducees accept as evidence for the resurrection (Exod. 3:6; cf. 4 Macc. 7:19; 16:25). He stresses the present tense of God's word to Moses, "I am the God of Abraham." On that basis Jesus argues that those whom God calls, he maintains in an unbroken covenant relationship that death cannot destroy, and that resurrection will fully renew.

Listening in on all this, the crowds sense the same voice of authority they heard in Jesus' Sermon on the Mount. Once again, they are astounded (v. 33; cf. 7:28-29).

Charles Swindoll: Jesus affirmed three theological truths that contrasted their heretical beliefs (22:30).

1. First, the dead will indeed rise. Jesus simply asserted this as a fundamental theological truth — "in the resurrection . . ." There will be a physical resurrection of our bodies.
2. The second truth relates to the discontinuity between our present relationships and those in the afterlife. In the new world of resurrection life, there will be no marriage —neither marriages that carry over from the present world nor marriages that take place after the resurrection.

3. The third theological truth relates to the nature of the afterlife. Those who are resurrected will be “like angels in heaven” (22:30). Note that this doesn’t say that departed saints will actually become angels. This is nowhere taught in the Bible. Rather, there will be something about us that will more closely resemble the angels in heaven than it will our present condition here on earth. The emphasis here seems to be on the idea that angelic beings do not marry. Other attributes of angels we will presumably share: They are ageless, tireless, and deathless, and they delight forever in the worship and service of their Creator.

Grant Osborne: Theology in Application

It has always been the problem that we humans think we know more than we do and have little room for truths that go beyond our experience or challenge our commonly accepted axioms. This was true with the Sadducees of Jesus’ day. They thought all truth began with their presuppositions regarding the five books of Moses, both in the extent of the canon and regarding their narrow interpretation of those books. Jesus showed them that they had little room for God’s true Scripture or for his actual power.

Little has changed today. On the one hand, arrogant modernists and postmodernists make their solemn pronouncements regarding what God can or cannot do (or even whether there is a God!) with no regard whatever to the limits of their knowledge and for what God is doing and is going to do. . . . The resurrection is a reality and an essential component of true Christian belief (1 Cor 15:12–19). . .

The problem today is that too many theologians have no room for mystery. We must not pretend to know more than we do and fight over the wrong issues. Jesus here tells us two things.

(1) There will be an entirely new set of relationships in eternity, one in which there will no longer be any need for marriage or procreation. I believe I will have a deeper love for and knowledge of my wife and children than I do now, and we will have that level of intimacy with all who are in heaven! That is true blessedness.

(2) This new relationship will remove all boundaries, creating a new union between the peoples of the world. When we combine 22:32 with 8:11 (“many from the east and the west will come sit down at the feast with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven”), we realize the barrier between Jew and Gentile, between racial and ethnic groups, will be broken once and for all. As Paul says in Eph 2:14, the present reality is that the cross has “destroyed the barrier, the dividing wall of hostility,” and the future reality is that at the resurrection, “the glory and honor of the nations will be brought into” the Holy City (Rev 21:24, 26), so that there will be one people, one united heavenly culture.

John MacArthur: The God of the Living

Now, keep in mind that there were four major sects in Judaism: Pharisees, Sadducees, Zealots, and Essenes. Essenes were sort of hermits down in the desert who spent all their time copying scrolls and most likely copied the Dead Sea Scrolls, which we have found. Then there were the Zealots who were political activists, who were very nationalistic, who were sort of the terrorists, who were giving trouble to Rome. And then there were the Pharisees, who were the religionists. And then there were the Sadducees, and I'll give you a little bit of information about them so you'll understand what's going on here.

They were not many in number. They were a very small group. They were extremely wealthy and very influential. They were the aristocratic ruling class in Judaism. They were the highest echelon. In fact, the chief priest, the high priest, the noblest of the priests were Sadducees. We do not know where that word "Sadducee" comes from. The majority of the members of the Sanhedrin, the ruling body in Israel, were also Sadducees. So they had great power, they had great influence, they had great prestige, and they also were wealthy because it was they who ran the temple concessions, the money changing, the buying and selling and all sorts of things that went on there were under their power.

They were not popular with the people. First of all, rich people who tend to do things for the expediency of their own personal gain don't tend to be very popular. Secondly, their theology was not the theology of the people for it denied the resurrection. The Pharisees were more popular with the people, and so the conflict between the Pharisees and the Sadducees even added to their unpopularity. They had structural power, they had money power, they gouged the people with the money changing, they gouged the people with the selling and the buying of the animals for the sacrifices, they were not a popular group.

Now, politically they were pro Rome, which even added to their unpopularity. They were pro Rome for this reason: they were fat cats. They sat in the place where they could really make it. They prospered in their role as priests. They prospered under the Roman tolerance. Rome let them have their way, Rome let them do what they wanted, Rome gave them the right to function and operate as they saw fit; therefore, they did everything they could to maintain Rome's presence. They did all they could to seek Rome's confidence and Rome's favor.

They knew their authority was a delegated permission from the Roman occupation, and their wealth and their position and their control and their influence and power and prestige, all that was dependent on Rome letting them stay where they were. And so they were pro Roman. Because of this, the people resented them, not only because of their wealth but because of their political alliance.

By the way, they completely went out of existence in 70 A.D. when the temple was destroyed because their power was only the power of money and the power of leadership, and once Judaism ceased to be self-governing in any sense and once the temple was destroyed and there was no more priesthood and no more power, at that point they had no more reason to exist so they completely passed from history. They were connected to that point in time as influential aristocrats who stood in the place of priests, therefore had some religious clout, but more than that, they were in the place of real rulers and those who profited off the people.

Now, religiously I want to tell you a little about them. That's sort of where they were in the political picture. Religiously, they were - they would be hyper-fundamentalists. They were very, very much literalists when it came to the Scripture. For example, Josephus tells us that in the application of the law to the people when they had to render a judgment, they were more savage than any other Jews. They were more narrow-minded, more cruel than the Pharisees. The Pharisees, says Josephus, were more lenient in the application of the law, and that's true because the Pharisees wanted to get around the law, so they invented all kinds of ways to beat the law, didn't they?

I mean if the law said don't divorce, they'd figure out a whole lot of ways to divorce. They were very lenient - very lenient. But the Sadducees were absolutists. They were fanatics for the literal Scripture. They refused the oral law, they refused the traditions, they refused the scribal law, they refused everything but the Old Testament. They were very rigid and they prided themselves on being those who preserved and guarded the pure faith - the pure faith. So they resented the looseness of the Pharisees, they resented their oral tradition, their written tradition, all the stuff that grew up around the text.

They were literally fastidious when it came to Levitical purity and followed to the very letter all of the Levitical order. Now, the key identification of their doctrine was that they denied the resurrection. You say, "Well, if they were literalists in the Old Testament, and you just read various Old Testament passages that speak of resurrection, how could they deny the resurrection?" Here's how: they gave primacy and authority to the five books of Moses. . .

So the Sadducees got in on the death plot with the Pharisees when they saw the potential for Jesus to bring about a revolution, which could mean Roman intervention, the holocaust of which could cause them to lose their careers or even their lives. And so they sought to kill Him. And then to add to that when on Tuesday He cleaned out their operation, they were only doubly angry and ready to take His life. . .

Now, here's their plan: They want to ask Jesus a question that'll make Him look like a fool, to discredit Him with the people. You see, if you can just discredit Jesus with all the people, then He's lost His influence, then it doesn't matter what He teaches anymore, and then it's no threat with the Roman situation because if nobody listens to Jesus, He's no threat anymore, right? So if they can discredit Jesus with the Jewish people, they've accomplished their goal. And they approached Him with what you could call a reductio ad absurdum in Latin, a logical absurdity. They asked Him a question that no doubt they had asked the Pharisees a myriad of times. . .

"Jesus answered and said unto them, 'You are mistaken. You do err'" - I want to stop there for a minute. I like that direct approach. "You are wrong. You have just put your ignorance on display." Lenski says, "The bubble blown by the Sadducees is punctured." He really discredits them. "You are mistaken," and He uses the word planaō. The word - we got our word planet from it. It means to cause to wander, to lead astray, and it's in the middle voice reflective. It means you are causing yourself to wander. You are leading yourself astray from the truth. You are mentally cut loose from reality. That's really what He's saying. Put in the vernacular, you are spaced out. . .

God is not worshiped by corpses. He's not the God of people who don't exist. Who wants to be the God of people who don't exist? Now, note that each is individually singled out there, I am the God of Abraham and the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob, and He's talking about personal, intimate relationship of each of them. Now, the genitive here, of, the God of, the God of, the God of, can be seen two ways. It could mean this: the God to whom Abraham belongs, the God to whom Isaac belongs, the God to whom Jacob belongs. Or it could mean the God who belongs to Abraham, the God who belongs to Isaac, the God who belongs to Jacob. And I like to see both: I am the God to whom Abraham belongs and who belongs to Abraham. I am the God to whom Isaac belongs and who belongs to Isaac. I am the God to whom Jacob belongs and who belongs to Jacob. In other words, I am the God who continues to have an intimate relationship of life and worship with these who are dead, which means they still must be, what? Alive. . .

So we start with the approach, then we see the absurdity, then comes the answer from the Scripture, and finally the astonishment in verse 33. “And when the multitude heard this, they were astonished at His doctrine.” Luke says, “Some of the rabbis, not Sadducees, said, ‘Teacher, thou hast well said.’” This new rabbi from Galilee answered the unanswerable question, gave the passage that none of the Pharisees or all of the Pharisees could discover, and it says they were astonished. It’s a very interesting word, ekplēssō. It means to strike out of one’s wits. They went out of their minds. It blew their minds. . .

For your thinking, listen, three things that I see as great confidence builders in this text:

- 1) One, I see here the majestic deity of Jesus.
- 2) Second thing I see is His commitment to Scripture.
- 3) Thirdly, I see His affirmation of resurrection.

J. Ligon Duncan: Not Knowing the Scriptures

I. (:23-28) Hardened hearts fixate on speculative questions in order to avoid gospel realities.

Hardened hearts will often fixate on speculative questions and difficulties in order to deflect the need to wrestle with the claims of Christ in the gospel. Let me put that another way. People will often grasp hold of Bible difficulty or a doctrinal difficulty in order to keep from having to deal with the clear claims and invitation of Christ in the gospel. . .

Let me just say in passing, have you ever noticed the fact that this is the only direct encounter between Jesus and the Sadducees recorded in the gospels? Could it be, could it be that Jesus had no time for skeptics? At least the Pharisees believed in the authority of the word. At least there was something that you could argue with them. But the Sadducees, this was the only time He spoke with them.

II. (:29-33) Ignorance of the Bible and doubt of God’s power are enemies of saving faith.

In other words, they have failed to comprehend and submit to the Scripture because of their moral rebellion against God in His truth. This is not an intellectual problem. It is not a lack of work and exegesis. Their problem is not intellectual. It is moral. They’re in rebellion against God and so they refuse to submit to His word. They use His word for games. They use His word to ask mocking questions but they do not submit themselves to the authority of the word. They do not bow the knee and recognize this as the word of the Lord spoken and written. . .

In His answer He shows how they don’t understand the power of God first and then He shows how they don’t understand the Scriptures. They don’t understand the power of God because they don’t believe that God is able to raise from the dead. Their god is too small, Their god is too small to transform. The saying of verse 29 indicates that God has the power to change the nature of life at resurrection so that marriage is no longer necessary. Immortality makes procreation needless. And so, He responds to them that they have not grasped that. Calvin says, “The resurrection is far beyond the grasp of human sense. We could not believe it until our minds rise to envisage the unbounded power of God by which He is able to subject all things to himself as Paul teaches.” The resurrection is a doctrine that you don’t learn from looking out in nature and seeing how things are. The resurrection is a doctrine that you learn from the lips of your lord. And it’s a promise, a covenant promise, from God. And you can’t embrace it until you understand. You look up and you see the unbounded power of God.

TEXT: Matthew 22:34-40

TITLE: CONTROVERSY REGARDING THE GREATEST COMMANDMENT

BIG IDEA:

JESUS PROVES HIS AUTHORITY BY DEFINING LOVE AS THE HEART OF SPIRITUAL ETHICS – BOTH IN RELATION TO GOD AND MAN

INTRODUCTION:

Charles Swindoll: Some questions are asked to make us think . . . not to be answered. In fact, some of life's best questions are those that leave us sitting in silence, pondering them, rather than rushing to an off-the-top-of-our-heads, quiz-show response. Some of the smartest and wisest people I know impress me not because they have all the right answers but because they know how to ask the right questions. My best mentors and teachers have been the ones who have driven me deeper into exploring the profound questions of life rather than making me jot down their bullet-point lists of answers.

Richard Gardner: According to rabbinic tradition dating from the second century, the Torah contains no fewer than 613 laws (365 prohibitions and 248 commands). Already in Jesus' day, Jewish teachers were wrestling with the question of how all these commandments relate to each other, and whether the totality of them can be derived from one or more basic commandments.

Daniel Doriani: In Matthew 22 Jesus says that love for God is the first and greatest duty of mankind. This text marks the fourth in a series of questions the Jewish leaders put to Jesus, always intent on testing or trapping him. They have asked him questions about his authority (21:23), about taxes (22:15–17), and about the resurrection (22:23–28). Jesus has answered each one, and answered well. In fact, his answer to the last question from the Sadducees was so successful that they resolved to ask him no more. When they heard "that Jesus had silenced the Sadducees, the Pharisees got together" to try one last time to test or trap Jesus (22:34).

William Barclay: To be truly religious is to love God and to love those whom God made in his own image; and to love God and other people, not with a vague sentimentality, but with that total commitment which issues in devotion to God and practical service of others.

Donald Hagner: The two love commandments belong together, covering the vertical (relationship with God) and the horizontal (relationship with others) dimensions. The first entails the second; the second presupposes and depends on the first. It is obvious, however, that the use of the verb ἀγαπήσεις, "you shall love," does not mean the same thing in both places. In neither case is love construed as an emotion. Love for one's neighbor means acting toward others with their good, their well-being, their fulfillment, as the primary motivation and goal of our deeds. Such love is constant and takes no regard of the perceived merit or worth of the other person. Love of God, on the other hand, is to be understood as a matter of reverence, commitment, and obedience. It is at once an acknowledgment of his identity as Creator and Redeemer and a reflection of that reality in the ordering of our lives. With this orientation toward God and others, the law and the prophets have reached their ultimate goal. Further concern with commandments, further elaboration of ethical stipulations—these all depend upon the real manifestation of the love commandments for their legitimacy.

Stanley Saunders: This answer allows Jesus to affirm the two commandments as “great” and “first” without suggesting that they trump or diminish the rest. There is not one great commandment, nor even two, and then many subordinate commandments, but an integral whole that encompasses the law and the prophets. The greatness of these two commandments lies not in their distinction from the others, but in their capacity to articulate the root and foundation of the whole tradition.

I. (:34-36) THE FINAL EXAM

A. (:34) Final Attempt to Discredit Jesus

“But when the Pharisees heard that He had put the Sadducees to silence, they gathered themselves together.”

Charles Swindoll: In Jesus’ muzzling of the Sadducees, the opposing party of the Pharisees saw an opportunity to kill two birds with one stone. If they could swoop in and deal a blow to Jesus, they would not only put that rabble-rousing rabbi in His place, but they would also demonstrate their intellectual superiority over the Sadducees. A. T. Robertson even suggests that the Pharisees “could not restrain their glee” at the opportunity handed to them by the circumstances, as if on a silver platter.

But the Pharisees couldn’t afford to mess this up. If they, too, were soundly defeated by Jesus’ uncanny ability to deflect His opponents’ attacks, the end would be worse than the beginning. Remember, they were still licking their wounds after the “render to Caesar the things that are Caesar’s” defeat, in which their disciples had gone away in amazement at Jesus’ teaching (22:21-22). This time they had to hit Jesus as hard as they could and make it hurt.

B. (:35) Final Confrontation Crafted by the Pharisees’ Top Legal Expert

“And one of them, a lawyer, asked Him a question, testing Him,”

Leon Morris: The restless attempts to trick Jesus into an answer that would discredit him either with the authorities or with the general public continued. His opponents never learned that they were on a futile quest.

John MacArthur: It’s unlike Matthew to use the word “lawyer.” In fact, some commentators think it shouldn’t be there because it’s so uncommon to Matthew. Well, that’s ridiculous. He can use a word he’s never used before, that isn’t any problem.

But I believe the reason it’s here is because it’s a word that may suggest that this guy was a cut above the average scribe. He was a law expert. And all scribes were, to some extent, lawyers, half attorney, half theologian because their understanding of law was that it was biblical law and traditional law, not just secular law, so they were sort of theologian attorneys and advocates and teachers. And so this may have been one who stood out from the many scribes as a real expert. And he is sent to ask the question on behalf of the rest of the Pharisees.

Charles Swindoll: The Pharisees determined to send one of their experts in the Law, whom the NASB calls “a lawyer” and the NLT calls “an expert in religious law” (22:35). The Greek word here is nomikos [3544], literally, “a man of the law.” These “lawyers” were usually scribes, men who dedicated their lives to meticulously copying the Hebrew Scriptures to preserve them from decay or corruption. Consequently, their constant contact with God's Word made them extremely knowledgeable, and they would be called upon to explain and apply the Law. We can imagine that the Pharisees, desirous of dealing Jesus a rhetorical death blow, found the best trained, most brilliant scholar they could. It wouldn't have been difficult, considering that they were in Jerusalem, the center of the study of the Torah.

R. T. France: The question is not political like the previous Pharisaic question. Like the Sadducees' question it is essentially theological, but this time with a focus on the law which gives it a more strongly ethical slant. As an issue going to the heart of the Mosaic law it is appropriately raised by a Pharisaic lawyer. . .

By bringing these two texts [Deut 6:5 and Lev 19:18] together Jesus asserts that the one principle of love applies equally to the two main aspects of religious duty, one's attitude to God and one's attitude to other people. It is these two foci which provide the framework of the Decalogue, with its two "tables" covering these two aspects in turn. If the Decalogue is itself a sort of epitome of the law, these two quotations in turn sum up the Decalogue. Commentators discuss whether Jesus was the first Jewish teacher to bring the two texts together in this paradigmatic way.

C. (:36) Final Exam Question Allows for a Wide Range of Responses

"Teacher, which is the great commandment in the Law?"

This was not a simple Yes/No Question.

Warren Wiersbe: This was not a new question, for the scribes had been debating it for centuries. They had documented 613 commandments in the law, 248 positive and 365 negative. No person could ever hope to know and fully obey all of these commandments. So, to make it easier, the experts divided the commandments into "heavy" (important) and "light" (unimportant). A person could major on the "heavy commandments" and not worry about the trivial ones.

The fallacy behind this approach is obvious: you need only break one law, heavy or light, to be guilty before God. "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all" (James 2:10).

II. (:19-24) THE FOCUS ON LOVE

A. (:37-38) Love for God

1. (:37) Comprehensive Commitment

"And He said to him, 'You shall love the LORD your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind.'"

Donald Hagner: Jesus draws his answer from the Shema, which was recited twice daily by the Jews. After the opening words, "Hear, Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord," which are included in Mark 12:29, comes the commandment quoted by Jesus. The wording of the citation itself agrees nearly verbatim with the LXX of Deut 6:5.

Daniel Doriani: This passage [Deut. 6:5] fairly shouts, "This is the climax!" Moses tells Israel they have heard God's law and must now obey him because he redeemed them and because he has the power to bless them with a good, long life. Moses says, in effect, "The one God is the Lord your God. Therefore love him.” On the basis of 6:5 and the sweep of Deuteronomy 4–7, Jesus says the first duty of mankind is to love God.

- We love God with heart and soul when we embrace him in our deepest convictions and commitments.
- We love God with the mind when we understand our past and our present as he does and dedicate our future plans and goals to him.
- We love God with our strength when we dedicate the physical body, its muscles and energy, to him. We love God with our strength if we follow him with a determined will and with moral resolve in the face of adversity.

Grant Osborne: Notice that it is not just “love God” but “love the Lord your God.” The object is Yahweh, the covenant God who never leaves or forsakes. Moreover, he is “your” God, so that one’s love for him is simply the response of one who has already been loved completely and absolutely.

2. (:38) Preeminent Priority
“This is the great and foremost commandment.”

B. (:39) Love for Your Neighbor

“The second is like it, ‘You shall love your neighbor as yourself.’”

Daniel Doriani: All duties to our neighbor depend on love. The word translated “depend” (kremannymi) literally means to hang, as in hanging a necklace around a neck or hanging an ornament on a tree. This “hanging” or “depending” means that everything the law says about our duty to our neighbor serves love and explains it. Augustine said, “All God’s commandments . . . are rightly carried out only when the motive principle of action is the love of God, and the love of our neighbor in God.” So love is the motive for all we do. It is also the organizing principle for all we do. The church father Theodoros said, “Love unites and protects the virtues.” New Testament scholar Douglas Moo put it another way: “love has primacy within the law, not over the law.” Love is the greatest command, but not the only command. He adds, “Perhaps if love were perfectly sincere, it would indeed fulfill all the particular commandments rightly.” But “in this life our love is never perfectly sincere”; therefore we still need the other commandments. God’s law teaches how to embody the love command. . .

So Jesus calls us to love the Lord and to love our neighbors. All the rest of the law is commentary on those two principles. Love is the most basic and most vital demand of the law. It is the true goal of the law. Love integrates and informs all our duties. Ideally, all that we do is for the sake of love.

C. (:40) Significance of the Combination of These Two Commands

“On these two commandments depend the whole Law and the Prophets.”

Grant Osborne: It is commonly recognized that this is fulfillment language, and that these two complete and bring into fulfillment all of Scripture, “nothing less than a ‘hermeneutic program’ for the understanding and application of the law and the prophets.” In other words, following God in every area of life flows out of love for God, and that then makes it possible to love others, which itself is the basis for all relationships and ethical living on this earth.

Robert Gundry: The whole Law, plus the Prophets, “hangs” on these two commandments in the sense that they derive from and depend on these two, so that love for God and neighbor must permeate obedience to all the other commandments. This permeation keeps careful obedience from turning into mechanical rule-keeping.

D. A. Carson: There is no question here of the priority of love over law—i.e., one system over another—but of the priority of love within the law. These two commandments are the greatest because all Scripture “hangs” on them; i.e., nothing in Scripture can cohere or be truly obeyed unless these two are observed. Love is “the primary hermeneutical principle for interpreting and applying the law” (Mohrlang, Matthew and Paul, 95). The entire biblical revelation demands heart religion marked by total allegiance to God, loving him and loving one’s neighbor. Without these two commandments, the Bible is sterile. This pericope prepares the way for the denunciations of 23:1–36 and conforms fully to Jesus’ teaching elsewhere. “Love is the greatest commandment, but it is not the only one; and the validity and applicability of other commandments cannot be decided by appeal to its paramount demand” (Moo, p. 12). The question of the continuity or discontinuity of OT law within the teaching of Jesus is determined not with reference to the love commands but by a salvation-historical perspective focusing on prophecy and fulfillment.

R. T. France: The comprehensive nature of the love which these two texts demand makes them eminently suitable for the role of summarizing the law, as the Pharisaic lawyer has asked. Together they cover both the main foci of human responsibility under God. They summarize not only the law (which was the question asked) but also the prophets, since the whole scriptural revelation is understood to witness to the same divine will. For the graphic use of “hang” as a term for dependence cf. the famous rabbinic comment that the sabbath laws “are as mountains hanging by a hair, for Scripture is scanty but the rules are many.” (m. Hag. 1:8) By contrast, the two texts chosen by Jesus are together sufficiently strong to bear the weight of the whole OT. This does not mean, as some modern ethicists have argued, that “all you need is love,” so that one can dispense with the ethical rules set out in the Torah. It is rather to say that those rules find their true role in working out the practical implications of the love for God and neighbor on which they are based. Far from making the law irrelevant, therefore, love thus becomes “the primary hermeneutical principle for interpreting and applying the law.”

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What do you think the Pharisees discussed in their scheming huddle?
- 2) How did they expect Jesus would respond to this question?
- 3) Does this command require that we first focus attention on loving ourselves?
- 4) What are some of the practical ways that you can love your neighbor as yourself?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Jeffrey Crabtree: The greatest commandments are two and are foundational to all other commands. A sermon might explain the first command's importance:

- (1) its decisive action (love),
- (2) its object (the Lord thy God), and
- (3) its extent (with one's entire being);

and then the second command's

- (1) importance,
- (2) decisive action (love),
- (3) object, and
- (4) extent (as oneself).

Charles Swindoll: The question was not only a test of Jesus' ability to skillfully nuance His answer in order to keep from sounding like a breaker of the Law (by annulling 612 commandments), but it was also a test to see if He was aware of the ongoing scholarly debates concerning the proper ranking and ordering of the commandments. D. A. Carson explains,

The Jews quite commonly drew distinctions among the laws of Scripture —great and small, light and heavy. . . . Verse 36 shows that the question of the expert was probably a hotly debated one. . . . The scene is like an ordination council, where the candidate is doing so well that some of the most learned ministers ask him questions they themselves have been unable to answer—in the hope of tripping him up or of finding answers.

How would Jesus weigh in on the scholarly discussion? Would He even have the faintest awareness that there was a debate? We should probably picture this encounter as the ivory-tower scholar with the first-century equivalent of a PhD trying to show just how ignorant the amateur from Nazareth really was. . .

Note that Jesus didn't couch His response in carefully crafted qualifications. He didn't have to deliberate, didn't have to ponder, didn't have to wrack His brain evaluating each of the 613 commandments in the Law and weighing each one. Jesus gave a straightforward, immediate, and unequivocal answer to the scholar's question. But He didn't stop there. He also added the second most important command, quoting Leviticus 19:18: "You shall love your neighbor as yourself" (Matt. 22:39). Jesus thus placed the vertical love of God and the horizontal love of fellow men and women as the foundation and structure of the entire Law (22:40).

Jesus' response left the teacher of the Law with nowhere to go. The parallel account in the Gospel of Mark records that the lawyer was forced to agree with Jesus, essentially admitting that the rabbi from Nazareth had passed the test with flying colors.

Craig Blomberg: The relationship of all the Old Testament to the double love commandment shows that there is a hierarchy of law that above all requires one's heart attitude to be correct. If this is absent, obedience to commandments degenerates into mere legalism. Combining Jesus' teaching here with his approach to the law, as, e.g., in the Sermon on the Mount, demonstrates that while the principle of love remains constant, applications vary for different circumstances. Nevertheless, Jesus' words also strongly differentiate him from situation ethicists. Love does make specific moral demands, including certain absolutes. What is more, the proper motivation for correct interpersonal relationships always remains a profound sense of gratitude for what God has done for us in Christ. Jesus' twofold answer should warn Christians against emphasizing either piety for God or social concern at the expense of the other.

Leon Morris: Anyone who loves God and people wholeheartedly is not going to come short in religious observances, nor in doing what is proper to other people. In short, when anyone loves in the way Jesus says, there is no need for a host of hair-splitting definitions of when an obligation has been discharged and when it has not. As I have written elsewhere, "Jesus swept aside all such pettifogging nonsense with his revolutionary insistence on the centrality of love and for good measure he added that the teaching of the prophets is included in this command. At one stroke he did away with any understanding of the service of God that sees it as concerned with the acquiring of merit or with an emphasis on liturgical concerns. What matters can be summed up in one word: love." This does not, of course, mean that all other commandments may be ignored and that all that one must do is love. The commandments of God are serious and must be observed. But Jesus is saying that it is only when we love that we can truly obey them and that without love we do not really understand what the commandments mean. In one way or another all the commandments are expressions of God's love. Love is the thrust of them all, and it is only as we love that we fulfil them.

John MacArthur: The Great Commandment

Alongside of these events in the life of our Lord has been the mounting, rising animosity, hatred, and venom of the religious leaders. They already resented Jesus Christ deeply. They already wanted Him dead. The Scriptures says they already were plotting His murder. You see, they resented Him for several reasons. Reason number one: He taught contrary to their teaching, and that irritated them. Perhaps reason number two: He was more popular than they were, He had a bigger following than they did, and that was hard for them to take because their egos really needed to be supreme. And thirdly, He demonstrated powers and abilities that they couldn't even conceive of. . .

They tried to test Him politically, they tried to test Him theologically with a major doctrinal issue, and now they're really probing in the spiritual dimension again, and they have one more shot that they want to give to try to discredit Him with the people. This is their last attempt. In fact, Mark 12, verse 34, paralleling this passage, says, "When this was over, no man dared ask Him any more questions." This is it. . .

But they believe that Jesus is a diminisher of Moses. They believe that Jesus comes to postulate something beyond Moses, something above Moses, something greater than Moses, and they want Him to say that. They want Jesus to affirm that He has a word that supersedes Moses so that they can accuse Him of being a heretic and an apostate, who has apostatized; that is, departed from the faith delivered through the greatest of all, the greatest authority, Moses himself. If they can just get Jesus to say that He supersedes Mosaic authority, He will become a blasphemer, He will discredit Himself, He will become unpopular with the people who revere Moses as the greatest of all. So they want to put Jesus in a situation to attack Mosaic law by superseding it, and they believe that He will do that because they saw His teaching as something beyond. . .

But their approach is this: If Jesus is who we think He is, and that is a man with a huge ego trying to establish Himself as the Messiah - because they didn't really believe He was - if He is as false as we think He is, He's going to say something that supersedes Moses. He's going to set Himself up as the authority. He's going to give some law that comes out of His mouth and thus we'll know He's apostate and He's a heretic. So what is the great law? Just give us one, the greatest law, and they figure if He's got something new to say, it can't be something old, right? If He's come with some new message, it can't be an old law. . .

But He quotes something with which they were all familiar. I'm not here to tell you anything different than what Moses told you. Same thing - same thing. The word in Deuteronomy 6:5, thou shalt love ahelv in Hebrew, the verb, refers primarily to the love of will, the love of the mind, the love of action, rather than the love of feeling, the love of emotion. It is that highest kind of love. Not - not the love that you just feel but the love of dedication, the love of commitment, the love that says this is right and this is noble, no matter what I feel. And that's the word, agapaō. . .

And so you can see here that in an overlapping sense, there are four channels for love to be perfectly balanced. It's an intelligent love, it's a feeling love, it's a willing love, and it's a serving love. It carries itself right out to how we act in our physical strength. So our intellectual part, our emotional part, our volitional part, our physical part all comes together to love God, to love God with the total being, all that we are. . .

And so we are those that love Him and keep His commandments - that love Him and keep His commandments - and that's the mark of a believer. A true believer is a lover of God, and that is made manifest because He keeps His commandments. You show me someone who doesn't have any interest in keeping His commandments, I'll show you someone who doesn't love Him, and I'll show you someone who doesn't know him - who doesn't know Him. . .

The second commandment follows the same track. It's of the same nature and the same character. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." That ties right in with it - that ties right in with it. This flows from love for God. When you love God right, you love people right. That's the idea. And the Pharisees didn't do that. They bound heavy burdens on people. They used people. They abused people. They were cruel to people. Witness their treatment of the prophets, their treatment of Christ, and we'll get into that in chapter 23 where it talks about the terrible things that they did.

They were not lovers of men. They were haters of men, users of men, abusers of men. They traded on them, they stole their money, they overcharged them, they made merchandise of them, and you can go back in the history of God's people Israel and see how they abused the poor, how they were not just, they took bribes, all kinds of things. See, people are not basically lovers of others as they ought to be, they're self-lovers. So you're to love your neighbor as yourself. What does that mean?

It means love is, again, the love of purpose, the love of intention, the love of will, the love of action. In other words, I take care of somebody else the same way I take care of me. Let's face it, we're very concerned with our own comfort, we're very concerned with meeting our own needs, we're very concerned with our own goals being met. Are we as concerned about somebody else's? I mean when I'm hungry I take care of me. When I see somebody else hungry, do I take care of them with the same alacrity, the same speed, the same concern? . . .

Christianity isn't that complicated, neither is Judaism. Just says love God, love men. If you love God, you'll do what He says. If you love men, you'll do what they need, that's all. That's life for us. That's the whole thing. Because verse 40 sums it up. "On these two commandments" - like two nails, two pegs - “hang all the law and the prophets.” Everything else God said in the Old Testament hangs on those two things. If you just love God with all your being and love everybody as you love yourself, you don’t need any more rules. That’s right. You don’t need any more - everything else is just a definition of that. Everything else is just an explanation of that.

J. Ligon Duncan: The Great Commandment

Opposition to Christ comes in spite of light because of the darkness of our own hearts. That’s a very important thing to understand. That the opposition to Christ here that we see on the Tuesday of the Passover week is not because Jesus hasn’t given enough evidence of who he is or the divine authority of His teaching. The reason that these people are conspiring against is because of the darkness of their own heart. The message is clear. The testimony is unmistakable. The light is bright. It’s blinding! But they’re blind and they can’t see it and so their opposition is not because of a lack of light, a lack of witness, a lack of evidence, a lack of testimony, it’s because their own hearts are hard.

I. The Pharisees attempt to tempt Jesus.

In spite of the fact that Jesus had just put to silence their arch rivals, the Sadducees. The Pharisees aren’t pleased by that at all. In fact, the Pharisees, immediately after Jesus is done dispensing with the Sadducees, they are immediately conspiring against the Lord Jesus Christ. They want to undermine Him. His testimony. His witness meant nothing to them. He had just upheld the precious doctrine of the resurrection of the body from the dead, and they didn’t care. All they cared about was that the people would follow after Him and they didn’t want that to happen and so they seek to undermine Him. Matthew Henry makes a very interesting comment about this. He says, “this is an instance of pharisaical envy and malice. They are displeased at the maintaining of a confessed truth because it was done by those that they did not like.” . . .

When we are praying for and witnessing to those who do not respond to the gospel, let’s remember that even Christ’s witness was rejected. But Christ’s witness was not in vain and God alone changes hearts. That’s the first thing I’d like you to see as we look at this passage together.

II. The lawyer’s question.

There’s another thing I’d like you to see if you’d look at verse 36. In verse 36 we see the testing question which this young lawyer, this expert in the Jewish religious law ask of Jesus. It’s a question of great importance. It’s a question much more significant than the silly question that the Sadducees had asked. The Sadducees had asked a question about the resurrection because they wanted to make fun of Jesus and they wanted to make fun of His belief in the resurrection and they wanted to make fun of the doctrine of the resurrection. But this was a serious question.
..

Whatever the sinful attitude of the Pharisees was, when they asked this question, this question prompts us to ask, do we reverently reflect on what our supreme duty is to God? Do we meditate on His word? Is it the authority of our lives? And when we disagree with it, we know who’s wrong. Do we delight in that word? Do we examine ourselves by that word? This question, what is the greatest commandment, presses that issue on all of us. What is our greatest duty? What is our supreme obligation to God? And it ought to have all our ears waiting to hear what Jesus thinks about that, because what He thinks about that matters a lot. And so we look at verses 37 and 40, to hear Jesus’ instructive answer to this question. . .

What is love? That is a hard question to answer in a few words. Here's my best shot at it this morning. Love to God means delighting in God. To love means to delight in God. And therefore, neighbor love means looking out for your neighbor's best interest because you delight in God. There's your definition. Love to God. Delighting in God. Love to neighbor. Looking out for your neighbor's best interest because you delight in God. And Jesus says, "Let Me tell you what, you can't love like that, unless you know God. You can't love what you don't know. You can't love who you don't know. And unless you know God, and unless you know Him savingly, unless you've experienced His grace, you cannot love as he calls Christians to love." Jesus here calls us all to wholehearted love. He calls us to love God for himself. Not for what He can give us, but for Himself. Love God for who He is. He calls us to love Him as much as we're able. With all your heart. With all your soul. With all your mind. With all your strength. He calls us to love God actively. To actively display that love of God. Not just to say that we love God, but to practically live out our love to God. . .

Isn't it brilliant how Jesus doesn't oppose love and law nor does he confuse love and law. Jesus doesn't say the law is love. And he doesn't say that love is law. They are distinct. But in the Christian, they work together. The law is the rails. It's the guideline. The pattern. The standard. Love is the energy which drives the train on the rails. Law without love cannot be kept, because the whole purpose of the law is that love might be guided in its expression. Let me put it this way: the function of law is to guide our practical expression of our love. Love to God. Love to neighbor. And so love needs law and the law needs love in the Christian.

John Piper: Love Your Neighbor as Yourself

So loving others is the outward manifestation, the visible expression, the practical demonstration, and therefore the fulfillment of what the Old Testament is about. So there is a sense in which the second commandment (to love your neighbor) is the visible goal of the whole Word of God. It's not as though loving God is not here, or that loving God is less important; rather loving God is made visible and manifest and full in our visibly, practically, sacrificially loving others. I think that is why the second commandment stands by itself when the New Testament says that love fulfills the law. . .

The Law and the Prophets are hanging on—depending on—something before them, namely, God's passion that this world, this history of humankind, be a world of love to God and radical, other-oriented love to each other. . .

Which means that love is the origin (Matthew 22:40) and the goal (Romans 13:8, 10) of the Law and the Prophets. It is the beginning and the end of why God inspired the Bible. It's the fountainhead and spring at the one end, and the shoreless ocean at the other end of the river of redemptive history—remembered and promised in the Word of God. . .

In other words make your self-seeking the measure of your self-giving. When Jesus says, "Love your neighbor as yourself," the word "as" is very radical: "Love your neighbor as yourself." That's a BIG word: "As!" It means: If you are energetic in pursuing your own happiness, be energetic in pursuing the happiness of your neighbor. If you are creative in pursuing your own happiness, be creative in pursuing the happiness of your neighbor. If you are persevering in pursuing your own happiness, be persevering in pursuing the happiness of your neighbor. In other words, Jesus is not just saying: seek for your neighbor the same things you seek for yourself, but also seek them in the same way—the same zeal and energy and creativity and perseverance. The same life and death commitment when you are in danger. Make your own self-seeking the measure of your self-giving. Measure your pursuit of the happiness of others, and what it should be, by the pursuit of your own. How do you pursue your own well-being? Pursue your neighbor's well-being that way too. . .

In other words take all your self-love—all your longing for joy and hope and love and security and fulfillment and significance—take all that, and focus it on God, until he satisfies your heart and soul and mind. What you will find is that this is not a canceling out of self-love. This is a fulfillment and transformation of self-love. Self-love is the desire for life and satisfaction rather than frustration and death. God says, Come to me, and I will give you fullness of joy. I will satisfy your heart and soul and mind with my glory. This is the first and great commandment.

And with that great discovery—that God is the never-ending fountain of our joy—the way we love others is forever changed. Now when Jesus says, "Love your neighbor as yourself," we don't respond by saying, "Oh, this is threatening. This means my love for myself is made impossible by all the claims of my neighbor. I could never do this." Instead we say, "Oh, yes, I love myself. I have longings for joy and satisfaction and fulfillment and significance and security. But God has called me—indeed he has commanded me—to come to him first for all these things. He commands that my love for him be the form of my love for me. That all my longings for me I find in him. That is what my self-love is now. It is my love for God. They have become one. My quest for happiness is now nothing other than a quest for God. And he has been found in Jesus Christ." . . .

Summary

It is a very radical command. It cuts to the root of sin, called pride. Remember, this root of pride that gives rise to all other sins, is the passion to be happy (self-love) contaminated and corrupted by two things:

- 1) the unwillingness to see God as the only fountain of true and lasting joy, and
- 2) the unwillingness to see other people as designed by God to receive our joy in him.

But that is exactly the contamination and corruption of self-love that Jesus counteracts in these two commandments. In the first commandment he focuses the passion to be happy firmly on God and God alone. In the second commandment he opens a whole world of expanding joy in God and says: people, human beings, everywhere you find them, are designed to receive and enlarge your joy in God. Love them the way you love yourself. Show them, give them—through every practical means available—what you have found for yourself in God.

TEXT: Matthew 22:41-46

TITLE: GREATEST QUESTION OF ALL: HOW CAN CHRIST BE SUPERIOR TO DAVID?

BIG IDEA:

THE SON OF DAVID MUST ALSO BE ACKNOWLEDGED AS THE AUTHORITY OF GOD

INTRODUCTION:

The greatest question each individual must answer is “Who is Jesus Christ and how will you respond to His authority in your life?” The secularists and the humanists and the self-righteous religious leaders have no problem admitting the greatness of Jesus as a teacher, as a moral example, etc. But their characterizations of the identity of Jesus are woefully inadequate. Jesus must be acknowledged as the Son of God who has ultimate authority over your life.

David Turner: In this passage Jesus turns the tables and questions the Pharisees, not to trap them or even to win a debate but to win their hearts (cf. 23:37). This is not a mere counterattack (contra Schnackenburg 2002:224). The paramount considerations at this decisive point in Israel’s history are Jesus’s identity and the source of his authority (21:23). His relationship to King David is worthy of their consideration. The Jewish leaders and Jesus agree that the Messiah is David’s son (22:42), but the real question is what it means to be David’s son in light of Ps. 110:1 (Matt. 22:43–45). . .

The questions of the religious leaders attempt to trap Jesus and to discredit his teaching. All hope of rapprochement between Jesus and the religious leaders is dashed. His final question to them is unanswerable; the only way that David can call his messianic son “Lord” is if his son is divine. The Pharisees who wished to trap Jesus are now trapped by Jesus. But all dialogue has ceased, with ominous implications. This final confrontation leaves Jesus and the Jewish leaders at a hopeless impasse and leads inevitably to the woes of Matt. 23.

Stu Weber: Jesus is indeed the Messiah-King, having absolute authority and deserving worship and submission from all his subjects.

Donald Hagner: This pericope comes as the climax to the preceding series of testings of Jesus by his opponents, each one of which Jesus has brilliantly passed, demonstrating further his authority as a teacher. Now, however, he takes the initiative against his opponents, here again the Pharisees, by putting a difficult question before them. This question is not one designed for its cleverness but one that has to do with Jesus’ own identity and calling. The Pharisees are unable to draw the required conclusion, just as they have been earlier unable to accept Jesus, his message, or his personal claims. Whereas he has passed the tests they put to him, they fail in the test he puts to them.

Grant Osborne: Jesus is the Messiah and more; he is the royal Messiah, the Son of David, but he is also the Son of God, David’s Lord. This is high Christology and climaxes the section with the nature of this Jesus who has so decimated his opponents on points of law. It constitutes the second time in which he overcomes his “messianic secret” and reveals himself to the public as “Lord” of all.

Stanley Saunders: While they are still “gathered together” (22:41)—they have not yet abandoned their attempt to oust him from the temple—Jesus turns the tables and asks them a challenging question. What about the Messiah? Whose son is he? He probes their understanding of the Messiah in order to draw them into the open. The Pharisees have heard supplicants and the crowds repeatedly hail Jesus as “Lord, Son of David” (15:22; 20:30–31; cf. 9:27; 12:23; 21:9, 15), but have rejected this designation in favor of the claim that his power is from Beelzebul (9:34; 12:24). Jesus and the Pharisees both know that the Scriptures affirm that the messiah is the Son of David. If the Pharisees confirm this, it will lead by implication to the conclusion that Jesus the Son of David is also God’s messiah. If they deny it, they risk the wrath of the crowds, whom they fear (21:46). Jesus is thus inviting his opponents either to accept publicly his authority as the Son of David and messiah, or once again to claim that his power is from Beelzebul. Either way they face dishonor. The former would require them to give account for their continuing opposition to Jesus, while the latter would be an admission that Beelzebul’s son has persistently defeated them in public debates.

I. (:41-42) INADEQUATE RESPONSE TO THE FUNDAMENTAL QUESTION REGARDING THE IDENTITY OF THE MESSIAH

A. (:41a) Target Audience

“Now while the Pharisees were gathered together,”

B. (:41b-42a) Fundamental Question

*“Jesus asked them a question, 42 saying,
‘What do you think about the Christ, whose son is He?’”*

Charles Swindoll: The Pharisees had asked Jesus about politics; the Sadducees had asked about the afterlife; the lawyer had asked about the Law. Now Jesus took a dive into the waters of deep theology. He asked the Pharisees what they believed about the identity of the Messiah: “Whose son is He?” (22:42).

Leon Morris: “What do you think about the Messiah?” is a question that might cover a very wide field, but Jesus narrows it immediately with “Whose son is he?” He is asking a question about ancestry; a query about the Messiah’s sonship might be understood in the sense that Jesus is looking for information about his father. But among the Jews son was used more widely than in many modern communities, and this question was meant in the sense, “Who is the great man from whom the Messiah is descended?”

C. (:42b) Inadequate Response

“They said to Him, ‘The son of David.’”

William Barclay: The most common title of the Messiah was Son of David. Behind it lay the expectation that there would one day come a great prince of the line of David who would shatter Israel’s enemies and lead the people to the conquest of all nations. The Messiah was most commonly thought of in nationalistic, political, military terms of power and glory. This is another attempt by Jesus to alter that conception. . .

The clear result of the argument is that it is not adequate to call the Messiah Son of David. He is not David’s son; he is David’s lord. When Jesus healed the blind men, they called him Son of David (Matthew 20:30). When he entered Jerusalem, the crowds hailed him as Son of David (Matthew 21:9). Jesus is here saying: ‘It is not enough to call the Messiah Son of David. It is not enough to think of him as a prince of David’s line and an earthly conqueror. You must go beyond that, for the Messiah is David’s lord.’

What did Jesus mean? He can have meant only one thing – that the true description of him is Son of God. Son of David is not an adequate title; only Son of God will do. And, if that is so, Messiahship is not to be thought of in terms of Davidic conquest, but in terms of divine and sacrificial love. Here, then, Jesus makes his greatest claim. In him, there came not the earthly conqueror who would repeat the military triumphs of David, but the Son of God who would demonstrate the love of God upon his cross.

Grant Osborne: It was a common rabbinic ploy to harmonize two seemingly contradictory texts; here Jesus harmonizes two seemingly contradictory messianic ideas: Given that the Messiah is David’s “son” (v. 42), how then can the great king David address him as “Lord”? In other words, how can his son at the same time be his Lord?

II. (:43-45) INSPIRED ARGUMENTATION ELEVATING THE IDENTITY OF THE MESSIAH TO THE AUTHORITATIVE SON OF GOD

A. (:43-44) Testimony of King David

“He said to them, ‘Then how does David in the Spirit call Him ‘Lord,’ saying, The Lord said to my LORD, ‘Sit at My right hand, Until I put Thine enemies beneath Thy feet?’”

Stu Weber: Jesus then asked a follow-up question. He asked them to interpret Psalm 110:1 in light of the identity of the Christ as David's son. This verse describes Christ's posture in heaven until he comes to reign on the earth (Heb. 10:12-13). In the psalm, David says, “Yahweh said to my Lord” (literal translation of the Hebrew text). In the English translations of this verse, the first usage of the word “Lord” is usually printed in capital letters, to show that it translates the Hebrew name of God, Yahweh. The second usage has only the first letter capitalized, showing that it translates the Hebrew title Adonai, meaning “Master, Lord.”

Leon Morris: He accepts the Davidic authorship of the psalm, which, of course, would not have been doubted anywhere in first-century Judaism (the psalm is headed “A Psalm of David”). And he accepts that David wrote the psalm under the leadership of the Spirit of God; the psalm is inspired Scripture. Further he regards the psalm as messianic; it teaches something about the Messiah who would come in due course and is not to be confined to statements about David. All this would have been common ground between Jesus and the Pharisees, and so far there would have been no problem. But Jesus draws attention to the fact that David calls the Messiah “Lord” (thus conceding his own inferiority to the Messiah).

B. (:45) Test Question for All Who Deny the Deity of Jesus

“If David then calls Him ‘Lord,’ how is He his son?”

R. T. France: In 21:37 Jesus has implicitly laid claim to the status of Son of God. It is that implication which he now invites his hearers to draw out, for surely one who is the lord of David, the most distinguished of all historical Israelites, must be himself more than just another human king. If David calls him “lord” he is clearly the son of someone far superior to David.

David Turner: The initial question in Matt. 22:43 seems to assume the humanity of the Messiah as David's descendant. If the Messiah is the human descendant of David, how does David call him Lord in Ps. 110:1? The follow-up question in Matt. 22:45 puts it the opposite way: if the Messiah is David's Lord, how can he be David's descendant? In Matthew's narrative Jesus's humble Davidic roots (1:1, 16–17, 20; cf. Luke 1:27, 32, 69; 2:4, 11) are not the whole story. Jesus is also the miraculously born, divinely attested Son of God (Matt. 1:23; 3:17; 16:16; 17:5; 21:37; 22:2; 26:63–64). That Jesus is greater than David is already clear (12:1–4; cf. 12:6, 8, 41), but now Matthew explains why: the Messiah is the son of David and the Son of God. But the Pharisees will not accept a Messiah who, as David's Lord, is greater than David Donald Hagner: The point of the question addressed to the Pharisees is apparently to elevate the concept of Messiah from that of a special human being to one who uniquely manifests the presence of God—and thus one whom David has also to address as his lord. This pericope serves thus in one sense as a kind of justification for the extravagant claims made by Jesus, or concerning him, earlier in the Gospel (e.g., 10:32–33, 40; 11:27; 14:33; 16:16). As in Peter's confession, so here, the Christ, the Son of David, is to be recognized as uniquely "the Son of the living God" (cf. Gibbs, 460–64). He is the living Lord of the church (Burger, 88–89) who sits at God's right hand. The Pharisees accordingly reject Jesus at their very great peril. They have rejected not merely a human messianic claimant but the unique emissary of God, whom even David had called "my lord." κύριος, "lord," in reference to Jesus here, as Fitzmyer points out, suggested to the evangelist and his community that Jesus "was somehow on a par with Yahweh of the Old Testament" . . .

So too today repeated attempts are being made to explain Jesus in strictly human categories. Yet if we limit our understanding of Jesus to analogies that from the beginning rule out the supernatural and the divine, we will never arrive at an adequate view of Jesus. This is the very point the Gospel desires to press home to its readers. Jesus' question to the Pharisees—How then does David call him "my lord"?—must also be asked of those modern scholars who allow Jesus to be no more than a human teacher. The burning question "Who do you say I am?" (16:15) has only one adequate answer.

(:46) EPILOGUE – END OF DISCUSSION

"And no one was able to answer Him a word, nor did anyone dare from that day on to ask Him another question."

David Turner: The silence of the religious leaders does not mean that they have come to agree with Jesus but that they have abandoned hope of publicly refuting him.

R. T. France: At this point there is no mention (as there is in Mark) of the reaction of the crowd to the brief and allusive argument just recorded, but Jesus will immediately go on to address the crowds in a way which assumes their sympathy with him rather than with the scribes and Pharisees, so that we must assume their continuing approval of his teaching.

Leon Morris: That finished the questioning session. The Pharisees, the Herodians, and the Sadducees had all tried to put questions to Jesus that would embarrass him and put him into disfavor with the people or the governing bodies or both, and while it could not be said that he had failed to answer, it could be said that he had produced answers that left him unscathed and caused the people to marvel at him. He was more admired when they finished than when they started on this exercise. So it is no surprise that, finding they could not answer the question he had put to them, none of them dared any more to question him. This was a game in which they thought they held all the advantages (how could a layman from rural Galilee compete with the professionals who had been through the schools in Jerusalem?). But in the end they had been defeated.

Stanley Saunders: The Pharisees are prepared to say that the messiah is David's son, but not to grant Jesus the Son of David authority as "Lord." So "none of them is able to give him an answer." They are unable to answer because they have no will to admit Jesus' authority over them. After this day no one will dare to ask him any more questions (22:46). Jesus' successful defenses of his authority in the temple in Jerusalem mean that those who challenge his God-given power must now turn to violence.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How can questions that appear simple on the surface actually expose great depths of meaning?
- 2) How do other religions and even secularists and humanists give inadequate answers to the question of the identity of Jesus?
- 3) In what sense is Psalm 110 a messianic psalm?
- 4) What encouragement can you take from seeing that the world's brightest minds have no response to the wisdom of God?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Michael Wilkins: If Jesus is truly who he declares himself to be, then we have a most unique message to proclaim. Jesus is unlike any figure ever to walk the earth, because he claims not to be simply a messenger of God, but the unique Son of God. The religious leaders' silence (22:46) is outspoken testimony that the straightforward implication of the text cannot be avoided. Their silence is also outspoken testimony of their own hypocritical avoidance of the implications for themselves. They should acknowledge Jesus as their own Lord and Messiah. But ultimately, none of us, Christian or non-Christian, can ignore the implications of Jesus for our personal lives.

Grant Osborne: This is one of the climactic points of Matthean Christology. Jesus is now uncovering the "messianic secret" in a public setting and going beyond the triumphal entry by showing that he transcends his earthly role as descendent of David and embraces his heavenly role as Son of God and "Lord," stated clearly in the early creed of Rom 1:3-4, "who as to his earthly life was a descendant of David, and who through the Spirit of holiness was appointed the Son of God in power by his resurrection from the dead." Critical scholars at times have hesitated to ascribe deity to this passage, for there is separation between Lord/Yahweh and Lord/Messiah in the Ps 110:1 passage. However, Bruner rightly quotes Luther on this:

“‘Sit,’ says God to him, not at my feet, not over my head, but next to me, as high as I sit.... [But] sitting next to God, what else is that than being also God? For God is so jealous for his honor that as He said himself, Isa 42:8, he will give it to no other.... And yet here, says the Psalmist, sits one who is like Him. From this it follows that He must be God.”

The problem today is slightly different. It is not so much in our churches that members deny the deity of Christ¹³ as that they ignore it in their lives. One of the sad results of the denigration of theology in the popular church is the tendency to lower Jesus to the status of friend and companion rather than of cosmic Lord and “very God of very God” (the Christology of the Nicene Creed). It is time to worship Jesus as Lord with a new depth.

Stanley Saunders: Matthew’s persistent warnings to religious people are audible here again. The quest to hang on to power in its human forms is a key factor in the refusal of the Jerusalem leaders to admit the divine nature of Jesus’ authority. All of the Jerusalem authorities have now seen Jesus’ power firsthand and been silenced by it. They are nonetheless unable and unwilling to grant the reality the Canaanite woman, the crowds, the blind, and the children in the temple have named. Jesus has said that it is nearly impossible for a rich person to enter the empire of heaven. Apparently it is also nearly impossible for a person who wields human power, especially religious power, to enter the heavenly empire.

John MacArthur: Whose Son Is Christ?

It is absolutely prosaic to say it, that all false systems have a problem with the unique identity of the deity of Jesus Christ. And that is where the battle lines are ultimately drawn in terms of the Christian faith. These misrepresentations and misconceptions are not new. In fact, they even existed in the time of Jesus Christ. And they are essentially behind the scenes in this text. The Jews believed in a non-deity Messiah. They believed their Messiah would be a human political military leader. And this text comes as a corrective to that very serious error. . .

He says to them you thought Messiah would be but a man, I’m telling you Messiah is also God, and your failure to understand that is an indictment, is the cause of your judgment. You asked me by what authority I did these things back when this day began, now I’m telling you the authority. The authority is that I’m more than man - I’m God. This, verse 41 to 46, is the answer to the question in chapter 21, verse 23. By what authority? It is at the end of the conversation that He gives the answer. This is the authority. And it comes in a very, very marvelous way. . .

So Jesus says if Messiah is only David’s son - human - how is it, then, that David calls Him Lord God? Deity? Divine? That’s an important issue. You say, “Maybe - maybe David made a mistake. Maybe he was - maybe he was a little, you know, out of sorts at that point. Maybe he was acting independently. Maybe that was his opinion.” No. “Well, maybe it wasn’t David at all that said that, we just think it was.” No.

Look at verse 43 again. “How then doth David?” - watch this one - “in the Spirit call the Messiah Lord?” There’s a qualifier there that’s very important, isn’t it? When David called the Messiah Lord, he was what? He was in the Spirit - he was in the Spirit. By the way, that’s the same Greek phrase used in Revelation 1:10 and Revelation 4:2. Revelation 1:10 talks about John being in the Spirit on the Lord's day. It means to be under the control of the Spirit. And if you wonder what its interpretation is, all you need to do is compare Mark 12:36, the comparative passage, because in that text, Mark gives us the whole statement. "The Savior said, 'How then doth David in the Holy Spirit call Him Lord?'" So He's not talking about the human spirit, He's talking about the Holy Spirit.

Now, we say this, then, that when David said it, he was inspired by the Holy Spirit, right? David, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, calls the Messiah Lord. And uses a term for Him that refers to God. Say, "Well, where did he do that?" So in verse 44, the Lord gives the Scripture, and He quotes directly from Psalm 110:1, "The Lord said unto my Lord." David wrote that Psalm. And David wrote, "The Lord" - Yahweh - "said unto my Lord" - Adonai - and we've got two Lords, folks. Lord number one talking to Lord number two. "The Lord said unto my Lord, 'Sit thou on my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool.'"

God is called Yahweh, God is called Elohim, God is called Adonai in the Old Testament. And here, that God, that Yahweh God says to David's Lord, "Sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool."

Now, Jesus used Psalm 110:1 for a lot of reasons but mostly because they all believed that Psalm 110 was a Messianic Psalm. They just didn't understand the implications of that first verse. The Jews believe that. They acknowledge it as a Messianic Psalm. In fact, Psalm 110 is the most often-quoted Psalm in the New Testament. It is the most frequently-quoted Psalm in the New Testament. It is quoted by Peter, quoted by Paul, quoted by the writer of Hebrews. It is quoted in Matthew, Mark, in Luke. Now listen carefully. In all three gospels, Matthew, Mark, and Luke, this Psalm is attributed to David by Jesus. In all three gospels, this Psalm is attributed to David by Jesus.

Now, what is the Lord saying? I want you to listen very carefully, this is very, very important and this verse has been attacked. Anybody who wants to knock out the deity of Christ, got to deal with this verse. And it's really suffered the arrows of the critics. But listen carefully. When the Lord says David calls the Messiah Lord in this Psalm, the Lord is therefore interpreting this Psalm for us, and He's telling us three things.

Number one, He's saying the Psalm is Messianic because David is talking about Messiah. . .

Secondly, He is affirming Davidic authorship. He is saying David said it. You don't see David's name in Psalm 110, Jesus tells you David wrote it.

And that is the tradition of the Jews. Before Jesus' time, they assigned it to David. That's why it has that little indication at the heading that it was written by David, it is a Psalm of David. But Jesus affirms it.

Thirdly - and most important of all - Jesus affirms the deity of Messiah. When Jesus quotes Psalm 110:1, He says one, it is Messianic; two, it is written by David; and three, it affirms the deity of Messiah. That's its intent. . .

Son of David is not enough, that's the point. Son of David is inadequate. Son of God must be added - Son of God must be added. Verse 45, "If David then call Him Lord, how is He his Son?'" Frankly, it's a riddle they can't answer. "And no man was able to answer Him a word." They couldn't answer it. They couldn't answer it. These were the religious leaders, folks. This is the brain trust of Judaism. And they couldn't answer Him because they would not acknowledge what was clear out of that passage and that was that He had to be God as well as man. How can He be Son of David and David's Lord at the same time? He would have to be God and man. . .

The gospel says He's born of the seed of David, that's His humanness. He's risen from the dead, that's His deity. And the God-man is the only way to perceive Jesus Christ accurately, the two natures of Christ indivisibly fused in the God-man. That is the theme of so many elements of Scripture. Read Philippians 2 again where He humbles Himself, thought it not something to hold onto to be equal with God, but abandoned that to become a man, humble Himself, obedient to death. And God highly exalted Him, giving Him a name above every name that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow. Yes, He is Son of David. Yes, He is David's Lord.

J. Ligon Duncan: How Is David's Son, David's Lord?

Jesus' question to the Pharisees is the most profound question of all. The right answer to this question is the difference between life and death, the difference between heaven and hell, the difference between hope and despair, the difference between salvation and condemnation. In comparison to the other questions, this question is far greater. They pale by comparison to this question that Jesus is asking, right here in Matthew 22, verses 41-46. . .

For hundreds of years the rabbis of Israel, the teachers, the scribes, the priests, the Pharisees had taught the people of God in Israel that the Messiah was to be the son of David. They went to passage after passage out of the Old Testament showing and demonstrating that God had predicted in His holy word, the Old Testament, that the Messiah would come from the line of David. He would be an exalted descendant of David. He would be the coming Savior of God's people, Israel. He would be an heir to David. He would be a righteous ruler, appointed by God, who would foil the enemies of God's people and He would establish justice in the land. He would drive the oppressors of Israel out. He would reestablish the law of God amongst His people. Righteousness would flourish in the land. Injustice would be banished. He would be the ruler of rulers, this descendent of David – this Messiah.

And today, Jesus is standing before these Pharisees and He is saying, 'No, He'll be much more than that. He'll be more than you have ever dreamt of.' And His words to these Pharisees are just as relevant to us today as they were when He first spoke them to the Jewish leaders. You see, we are so familiar with Jesus that we have lost the sense of His greatness and His glory and His uniqueness. And Jesus is saying to us today, 'I am greater than you ever imagined.' 'I am greater than you have ever dreamt of.' 'I am greater than you ever dared hope for.' and so, I'd like to look at this passage today where Jesus points the focus very, very pointedly on 'who is the Messiah?' 'what is His identity?' 'what is His nature?' And I'd like you to look at the three phases of this discussion.

I. There is no more important issue in life than what you think about Christ.

And why was it that they couldn't see that Jesus was the Messiah? Because they didn't understand their need. They thought that the greatest need pressing upon the people of Israel was to stop this imperialistic cultural invasion of the land and the people of Israel that had been brought about by these pagan Romans, to sweep the land clean of their filthy influence and reestablish the torah in the land. They had no idea that the greatest problem that they had was themselves. The greatest problem in Israel resided in their hearts and in the hearts of their people who were hardened against the lord and who needed a new heart and a new spirit within them.

They thought that what their land needed was a king who would lead them out of the years of oppression from invading captors. And so they didn't see the glory of the Messiah that the lord had sent to them.

II. We are not trusting in the Jesus of the Bible until we acknowledge Him as the fully divine Son of God.

Have you come to grips to the claims of the divinity of Christ? Do you realize the importance of those claims? Do you realize that apart from the deity of Christ there is no hope of salvation? Do you realize that Jesus' ability to save you from your sin is absolutely, inextricably, connected to the truth that He is the son of God and lord of David? Jesus is saying to these Pharisees, "the Messiah is so much greater than you have ever imagined Him to be". And He's saying to you, "I am so much greater than you ever thought me to be. I don't care how big you think your problems are. I am so much bigger than those problems, and I'm not just a solution to those problems out there. I am the answer to everything. I'm the answer to the center of life and all the rest of your life will be out of joint until you deal with me. You can't put me aside. I am the boulder in the road and you'll either be crushed by Me or you'll embrace Me and I'll shower blessings on you that you can never imagine."

III. Silence is the wrong answer to the deity of Christ.

Now the sad response of that message, by the Pharisees, is recorded in verse 46. There we see the mouths of these mockers stopped, but we also learn that silence is the wrong answer to the deity of Christ. Jesus silences His opponents and, by the way, this is a foretaste of just what God had promised Him in Psalms 110 verse 1. He said that He would put His enemies under His feet and notice – His enemies stand before Him mute. They have not a clue what to say to Him. This is part of the conquest that had been promised to Him by God in Psalms 110 verse 1.

But I want to remind you that Jesus' words to these Pharisees are in fact words of love and grace, because, do you realize friends that here in Matthew 22, verses 41-46 this is the last time, this is the last time, that Jesus ever had a conversation with the Pharisees? Jesus spoke about the Pharisees to His disciples and to others in the remaining days of His life, but do you realize that this is the last time Jesus ever spoke to the Pharisees and do you see what He is drawing their attention to? In His love He wants them to understand who the Christ is that they might be saved. But their response is silence. They did not know what to say. They continued to conspire against Him.

TEXT: Matthew 23:1-12

TITLE: BEWARE OF HYPOCRITICAL RELIGIOUS LEADERS (SCRIBES & PHARISEES)

BIG IDEA:

HYPOCRITICAL RELIGIOUS LEADERS ELEVATE SELF AND SEEK NOTEREITY

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: The issue as to whether ch. 23 belongs to the previous or following section has already been discussed. . . it was decided that this chapter serves as a transition, both concluding chs. 19–22 (indicting the leaders for their opposition) and introducing chs. 24–25 (providing the evidence for the verdict against the nation and its leaders in the Olivet Discourse). As such it forms the first of two parts to the discourse of chs. 23–25. There is a certain symmetry between 23:1 – 25:46 and the Sermon on the Mount. These two frame Matthew and are of similar length, with the woes of ch. 23 balancing the beatitudes of 5:3–12. . .

The major thrust in this section is the contrast between the pride (and resultant hypocrisy) of the leaders and the humility (and resultant servanthood) demanded of Jesus' followers. The key is how each group conducts itself before others, the one to be seen and glorified by all, the other to serve and leave the exaltation up to God.

R. T. France: Within ch. 23 there is an obvious division between vv. 1–12 in which Jesus speaks to the crowd about the scribes and Pharisees, and vv. 13–36 in which he speaks directly to the scribes and Pharisees. The latter section is marked by a series of seven “Woe” pronouncements, of which the last is extended into a more general charge of religious rebellion. This in turn provides the basis for the lament over Jerusalem in vv. 37–39, which stands as a coda to the rest of the chapter, and provides the bridge to the temple-prediction which follows at the beginning of ch. 24.

Stu Weber: Hypocrisy is primarily interested in elevating self. . . Theirs was a prideful, status-seeking ministry. Jesus' attitude was just the opposite. . . Not only were the hypocrites unsympathetic, but they were also insecure. They constantly advertised their “spirituality” and status in an effort to feed their weak egos through the attention of others. Their insecurity masqueraded as arrogance. They did everything in their power to cause others to think they were superior to the average Jewish citizen. They did their “good” deeds purely for applause. They even fooled themselves into believing they were righteous.

David Turner: Jesus's warning (cf. Mark 12:38–39; Luke 20:45–46) first points out the inconsistencies of the religious leaders (Matt. 23:2–7) and then enjoins his own community to be different (23:8–12). The disciples should do what the leaders say because they are Moses's proxies (23:2–3a), but the disciples should not follow the leaders' example (23:3b) because

- (1) they do not practice what they preach (23:3c),
- (2) they do not serve the people they have burdened (23:4), and
- (3) they perform their deeds to be applauded by people (23:5–7).

The disciples' countercultural community must eschew vain prestigious titles (23:8–10) and instead seek to serve others, mindful of the reckoning and reward to come (23:11–12). . .

The explicit contrast of Jesus's norms for his disciples with the ostentatious practices of the leaders in 23:2–12 provides a key for interpreting the seven woes of 23:13–36. These rebukes not only are directed to the leaders but also are meant to prevent Jesus's disciples from similar errors.

(:1) PROLOGUE – PUBLIC ADDRESS

“Then Jesus spoke to the multitudes and to His disciples, 2 saying,”

Grant Osborne: Jesus addresses the crowds (to warn them against the leaders) and his disciples (to warn them against committing similar sins).

I. (:2-7) BEWARE OF THE PHONINESS OF RELIGIOUS LEADERS

A. (:2-4) Characterized by Hypocrisy

1. (:2) Positions of Religious Influence

“The scribes and the Pharisees have seated themselves in the chair of Moses;

Grant Osborne: This could be a figurative image for the authority the Pharisees claimed as interpreters of the Torah of Moses. . . The meaning is that the Pharisees considered themselves to be the successors of Moses as official interpreters of Torah.

R. T. France: The immediate target, however, is the scribes and the Pharisees, two groups who belong naturally together and probably in fact overlapped to a large extent, most scribes being Pharisaically inclined (see on 5:20). They enjoyed popular respect and authority as the recognized experts in understanding and applying the OT law and its subsequent elaborations, and Jesus' opening words note the authority of their office, though in the light of what follows there is surely an element of irony in his endorsement. His criticism focuses, however, not on the role they purport to fulfill but on the way they fulfill it. The charge of inconsistency in their behavior (v. 3b) is not developed at this point, but much of what follows in vv. 13–36 will fill it out. But two more specific charges are developed, their lack of consideration for the problems their teaching generates for ordinary people (v. 4), and their concern for appearances and reputation (vv. 5–7). It is the latter which triggers Jesus' return to his disciples' preoccupation with status, which takes up the rest of the paragraph.

Donald Hagner: As the custodians of Moses' teaching they share in his authority and are accordingly to be respected.

2. (:3a) Practice of Religious Inconsistency –

Follow Their Legitimate Teaching but Reject Their Phoney Example –

Discrepancy between their Words and Deeds

“therefore all that they tell you, do and observe, but do not do according to their deeds;”

Grant Osborne: The purpose is to read v. 3a in light of v. 3b—the teachers talk the talk (v. 3a, so approval only in principle) but do not walk the walk (v. 3b) (McNeile, Garland, Hagner, Blomberg) . . . The Pharisees and scribes know the truth (v. 3a) but fail to live it (v. 3b).

Charles Swindoll: Addressing the crowds, Jesus attempted to inoculate them from the deadly infection of pharisaical hypocrisy. First, He urged them to follow the pure teachings of Scripture rather than the putrid examples of the Pharisees. Here Jesus acknowledged that the scribes and Pharisees did, in fact, serve an important function in reading and proclaiming the Law of Moses to the people from their seats of authority, the “chair of Moses” (23:2). R. V. G. Tasker puts it this way: “Jesus recognizes the rightful claims of the scribes, the legal experts of the Pharisaic party, to be exponents of the law; and so long as they confine themselves to that task, their words, He insists, are to be respected, even if the conduct of some of them is inconsistent with their teaching.”

Remember, the scribes and Pharisees strove for an orthodox approach to faith and practice. Their theological views tended to be much closer to Scripture than those of the Sadducees. However, for many scribes, the Bible had become just a textbook of information rather than a means of personal transformation. On one extreme, the scribes’ academic approach to Scripture could result in a head full of knowledge without a lifestyle that matched. On the other extreme, the Pharisees’ obsession with outward purity and perfection could result in an excessive number of man-made rules that nobody could live up to.

In the first century, the common people had very little access to the Word of God themselves and would have had to rely on the scribes to hear the reading of the Law and its explanation. So, Jesus affirmed, what they heard from Scripture must be obeyed (23:3). God’s pure, unadulterated Word is true and reliable. But as soon as those scribes and Pharisees began applying Scripture or going beyond what it said, their interpretations should be held in suspicion.

3. (:3b-4) Portrayal of Their Bad Behavior

a. (:3b) Hypocritical Behavior for they say things, and do not do them.”

b. (:4) Oppressive Behavior via Legalistic Burdens

“And they tie up heavy loads, and lay them on men's shoulders; but they themselves are unwilling to move them with so much as a finger.”

Grant Osborne: The image is similar to that of the “yoke” (placed on oxen) in 11:28–30, and indeed there is an implied contrast between the “easy yoke” of Jesus in 11:30 and the “heavy burden” of the Pharisees here.

This is almost certainly a reference to the oral tradition developed by the Pharisees. They tried to “build a fence around the law” and protect it by adding further rules so that people would not inadvertently break the Torah regulations (so Grundmann, Garland, Hagner, Schnackenburg; contra Gundry, who takes this of attempts to win praise from people). The Pharisees add rule after rule on purity laws or Sabbaths or holy days, and they become a real “yoke” or “burden” around the shoulders of the people who have to follow these complex rules.

Charles Swindoll: Second, the scribes and Pharisees crushed common people with unbearable demands (23:4). They lacked sympathy and modeled cruelty. As consummate taskmasters, the religious phonies established unreachable standards of manufactured “holiness” that nobody could live up to. This produced only guilt and shame among the people, who should have been able to respond to the Law with joy and peace.

B. (:5-7) Characterized by Seeking Praise from Others

1. (:5a) Motivation of Seeking Praise from Others
“But they do all their deeds to be noticed by men”

Charles Swindoll: Third, the scribes and Pharisees did everything for show (23:5). They lacked humility, and they modeled self-importance and conceit. It was all fake. When in public, they paraded their piety to be seen by the masses. They made a production of “glorifying God” when people were watching. Everything they wore, everywhere they sat, every word they uttered, every act they performed, and every title they took was actually to glorify themselves (23:5-7). In short, the religion of the scribes and Pharisees was nothing more than an outrageous display of over-the-top ostentation. They went out of their way to call attention to themselves.

William Barclay: The religion of the Pharisees became almost inevitably a religion of ostentation. If religion consists in obeying countless rules and regulations, it becomes easy for people to see to it that everyone is aware how well they fulfil the regulations, and how perfect is their piety. Jesus selects certain actions and customs in which the Pharisees showed their ostentation.

2. (:5b-7) Examples of Seeking Praise from Others

- a. (:5b) Fancy Religious Dress “for they broaden their phylacteries, and lengthen the tassels of their garments”

- b. (:6) Privileged Seats of Honor
“And they love the place of honor at banquets, and the chief seats in the synagogues,”

Grant Osborne: In the ancient world the order of seating had important social implications, as those nearer the host had greater status. The chief seats (or benches) in the synagogues are those up front near the speaker and the Torah scrolls. Again, the point is status in the community. Things are not that different in our day. Such things as power dressing, placement of furniture in the office, etc., are all designed with the same thing in mind: power and authority over others.

Stu Weber: Banquets and synagogues were only two examples from daily life where many people gathered. These places were prime opportunities for advertising false spirituality. Virtually any event was an opportunity for public honor and recognition. The place of honor and important seats were reserved for the most spiritual—those with highest authority and greatest wisdom. These people loved to be seen and to parade their spiritual accomplishments in public ways.

- c. (:7) Respectful Forms of Address
“and respectful greetings in the market places, and being called by men, Rabbi.”

II. (:8-10) AVOID TITLES OF SPIRITUAL DISTINCTION (TO EMPHASIZE BROTHERHOOD AND THE UNIQUE DIVINE ROLE)

A. (:8) Avoid Being Called Rabbi (Teacher)

But do not be called Rabbi; for One is your Teacher, and you are all brothers.

Grant Osborne: Again, this is a big problem today; witness the scramble of Christian leaders to be awarded an honorary DD (or to earn a DMin), often not to better serve the Lord but in order to be called “Doctor so and so.” Such is a sin. As France says, “It is not difficult for a modern reader to think of similar honorifics in use today, and to discern behind the titles an excessive deference to academic or ecclesiastical qualifications.”

B. (:9) Avoid Being Called Father

And do not call anyone on earth your father; for One is your Father, He who is in heaven.

Charles Swindoll: Just as we should reject being placed on a pedestal by others, we should resist placing others on a pedestal (23:9). Granting teachers and leaders the revered title “Father” can essentially cross the line from admiration and appreciation to exaltation and worship. The more we exalt a human to a position of unparalleled honor like that, the more we rob our heavenly Father of that unique position in our hearts and minds.

C. (:10) Avoid Being Called Leader

And do not be called leaders; for One is your Leader, that is, Christ.

R. T. France: The third title, “instructor,” occurs only here in the NT, nor is it found in the LXX. Its original sense was “leader” or “guide,” one who shows the way, but it came to be more commonly used for teachers, those who show the way intellectually or spiritually. It may therefore be a virtual synonym of “teacher” in v. 8; perhaps our term “mentor” might convey the same sense. As in v. 8, Jesus is the only person who truly fulfills that role for his followers.

Donald Hagner: They are to avoid titles that would set them apart from, and above, others in the community of faith, not because the particular titles are reprehensible but because of the assumption of superiority and elitism that so often goes with them. The demeanor of the disciples is to be characterized above all by the virtues of service and humility. Christians of every era and every circumstance, especially those in leadership roles, must learn again that true greatness consists in service and that self-humbling now is the path to exaltation in the eschaton. Only by such a radical departure from the values and priorities of the world will Christians in authority be the disciples of the one Teacher and Lord.

III. (:11-12) EMBRACE A SPIRITUAL LIFESTYLE OF SERVANTHOOD AND HUMILITY

A. (:11) Lifestyle of Servanthood

But the greatest among you shall be your servant.

B. (:12) Lifestyle of Humility

And whoever exalts himself shall be humbled; and whoever humbles himself shall be exalted.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How can religious leaders remain genuine and authentic in their spiritual service?
- 2) Where do you see examples of hypocrisy and elevation of self in Christian leadership?
- 3) What are the issues that need to be examined in the context of conferring honorary titles of respect upon our spiritual leaders?
- 4) What are the practical implications for you of the principle that the way up is down?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Grant Osborne: Theology in Application

1. Keeping Oneself from Hypocrisy

Make certain that you are not guilty of hypocrisy (v. 3), ostentatious parading of the self (vv. 4–6) or pride (v. 7). It is clear that such people are not serving God but their true god, self. There is a certain idolatry in exalting oneself rather than serving God and others. To want to impress those around us by your knowledge, dress, office, and degrees is the height of hubris.

To ask others to do something when we are not doing it ourselves is the height of hypocrisy. We must all recognize that no matter what our gifts or accomplishments, we are superior to no one. Rather, the one God is so superior to us all that this fact evens us out and makes us all “brothers and sisters.” It is not the privilege of others to listen to us; it is our privilege to share with them in some small way what we have been given by Christ, our one teacher.

2. Seeking Humility and Servanthood

Seek humility and servanthood, leaving the glory up to God. This is the message of the Philippians hymn (Phil 2:5–11), using the incarnation and life of Christ as a paradigm (2:5) for Christians; like Jesus we should seek a life of humility (Phil 2:6–8) and let God glorify us in his own time (2:9–11). Therefore, Jesus is saying that we must refuse to go by titles that appeal to our pride (23:8, 10) or elevate anyone else to glorified status (23:9).

These things happen all too often in successful churches and ministries. Sadly, all too many well-known Christian leaders begin to believe the plaudits of others and become virtual demigods in their own fiefdom! This is one of the most disobeyed and ignored passages of the Bible. As so often before (cf. 10:38–39; 16:25; 18:2–5; 20:26–27) true discipleship is defined not by human achievement but by service to God and his people, by taking the road of servanthood and living a life of humility. Those guilty of self-glory (Gal 5:26; Phil 2:3) can expect no reward from God.

Again, this does not mean that one must eschew a fruitful ministry that results in becoming well known (Paul was certainly famous, cf. 2 Pet 3:15–16). Rather, it means that fame and attention must never be a goal. Our goal is not to create sacred listeners or readers who cannot wait to hear what we have to say but rather to create lovers of Jesus and the Word, who enjoy our exposition of God’s truth.

Daniel Doriani: Jesus mentions a series of problems with the scribes and the Pharisees; they all have the potential to speak to other classes of false religious leaders.

They fail to live what they teach. They lay heavy legal burdens on others, but they refuse the most basic duty: “They tie up heavy loads and put them on men’s shoulders, but they themselves are not willing to lift a finger to move them” (23:4). The lesson: False leaders promulgate laws they scarcely intend to observe. If we would lead spiritually, we must live what we teach or at least seriously attempt to do so.

They seek applause. “Everything they do is done for men to see” (23:5). Honor was perhaps the blessing most sought after in Jesus’ day. Plutarch once wrote a book entitled “How to Seek Praise Inoffensively.” The scribes and Pharisees appeared to have that very goal. They certainly loved the best seats and noble greetings. “They love the place of honor at banquets”—at something like our head table—“and the most important seats in the synagogues” (23:6)—perhaps the seats closest to the scrolls of the law. The lesson: Spiritual leaders should try to block out thoughts of gaining human approval by doing things that look powerful and popular. We should seek the Lord’s approval first and last.

They display their piety. “They make their phylacteries wide and the tassels on their garments long” (23:5). A phylactery is a tiny box containing tiny copies of key passages of the law. Observant Jews of that time wore them on the arm and forehead at least part of the day. This practice literalistically followed the metaphor in Deuteronomy 6:8, which told Israelites to bind God’s laws “on your foreheads.” The Pharisees used broad boxes and long tassels (attached to garments to remind Jews to follow God’s law, cf. Num. 15:37–40), so everyone could see them.

Matthew uses a Greek word for these boxes (phylaktērion) that means an amulet or charm to ward off evil. The word hints that their display contains some superstition; the wearers think that if they dress correctly, God will bless them. If they also dress distinctively, people will know they are religious leaders. Display is the perennial temptation of religious people. Remember, Jesus warned his disciples not to pray, give gifts, or fast “to be seen.” Our good deeds should glorify God, not ourselves (Matt. 5:16; 6:1–18). The lesson: Spiritual leaders should hide their good deeds as much as possible. We should give quietly, or bring healing or comfort, and keep the results to ourselves. We should call attention to God, not to ourselves.

They love to be exalted. They love titles: “They love the place of honor at banquets and the most important seats in the synagogues; they love to be greeted in the marketplaces and to have men call them ‘Rabbi’” (23:6–7). Rabbi means “my teacher” or “my master.” The office of scribe or rabbi empowered men to tell others how to behave. They applied the law to the questions of the day and claimed so much authority that the Mishnah said the “words of the scribes” have more authority than “the words of the [written] Law.” The lesson: Even church people—who ought to know better—succumb to the human tendency to adore our heroes and identify with them. Pastors and other Christian leaders should be especially zealous to give glory to God and not to arrogate it to ourselves. If a church is prone to adulation of pastors, the pastor or pastors must be especially rigorous to spread appropriate recognition around and to praise God from whom all blessings do flow.

John MacArthur: The Characteristics of False Spiritual Leaders

And beginning then in verse 1 of chapter 23, the Lord gives His last sermon to the people of Israel. This is it. His ministry to them is over. This is the last public speech, and it is a denunciation of these false religious leaders and a warning for the people to stay away from them. It is a very severe, a very serious presentation but a very necessary one. They are false shepherds, they are wolves in sheep's clothing, they damn people, and they must be avoided, and our Lord pulls no punches in making that abundantly clear. . .

And so He warns the people about the false spiritual leaders so that their hearts will be open to the true ones. And in a sense, He's setting us His disciples for their ministry. That's why down in verses 8 to 12, He calls His disciples to be distinctly different than these false spiritual leaders are. So it isn't just a denunciation of the leaders, it isn't just a warning of the people, it is both of those with a purpose, that the people might listen to those who are true spiritual leaders, who manifest in fact the very opposite kind of characteristics to the ones that He will denounce in the false leaders.

And there are five elements that false spiritual leaders lack, and I believe the Lord gives them to us right here.

1. They lack authority, -- self-appointed seats of authority
2. they lack integrity, -- usurpers, hypocrites
3. they lack sympathy, -- loveless; bind heavy burdens . . .
4. they lack spirituality, and
5. they lack humility.

J. Ligon Duncan: The Essential Problems of Pharisaical Religion

Jesus is speaking to a very religious people. The people of Israel, at the time the Lord Jesus ministered on the earth, were not secularized; very much different situation than our current situation in America today. These were very religiously committed people. Religion was part of the warp and woof of their lives, it permeated every aspect of their experience. But, the spiritual leaders of Israel were modeling an external religion which drew attention to itself and lacked the heart of the true religion of the scriptures. They wanted people to look at them and saw, "look how holy those men are." But their lives did not reflect the holiness which they possessed with their lips. and so, Jesus speaks against this religion of ostentation. And He calls His people back to the heart religion of holy Scripture.

I. (:1-4) Jesus Diagnoses the Problem of Religious Hypocrisy

Conversely, He teaches that true religion, saving religion, requires integrity. . .

We must guard ourselves against hypocrisy and heartlessness and cultivate true integrity in religion. Jesus is calling us here not to follow the example of religious hypocrites. He is calling us to integrity. Integrity means looking on the outside like you are on the inside. Integrity means not simply looking like you have a clean heart, but your actions actually flow from a heart which has been cleansed. Integrity requires that we are on the outside like we are on the inside. That our conduct is an expression of who we really are. Integrity means that our conduct is consistent with our profession of faith. . .

II. (:5-7) Problem of Hypocrisy Derived from Being Man-Pleasers

Their problem was pride. They wanted to look good in the eyes of men. And again, in verses 5 through 7, we learn that true religion aims to please God. True religion aims for humility before men.

III. (:8-9) Warning against Seeking Exaltation

True disciples neither seek to be exalted in their teaching and in their ministry, nor do they tempt others by exalting them too highly in the way they speak.

IV. (:8-12) Cultivate Humility and Servanthood

In the end He is saying, the way up is the way down. The way to true satisfaction, the way to true harmony, is to abandon the quest to be honored by men, and seek only to please the heavenly Father. And so in the end, the way to glory is the way of servanthood. . .

Jesus' message was pertinent. His message was just as pertinent for us as it is for these to whom He first spoke it because "Church greatness," Richard Baxter once said, "Church greatness consists in being greatly serviceable." The desire of the Pharisees was to receive honor and to be called master. But the desire of the true Christian is to glorify God, to do good, and to give himself in all that he has in the service of others. That is what Jesus is telling us, too, as He is warning against the hypocrite that wants to be seen to be a follower of Christ, when in fact the heart does not belong to Him.

David Thompson: CAREFULLY GUARD YOURSELF FROM EVER BECOMING A RELIGIOUS PHARISEE OR SCRIBE.

The scribes were rigid students of the Law. They copied the Law and studied it and they came to be known as real O.T. scholars. The Pharisees were religious separatists. They were very strict in their approach to not only the Law, but also to men's traditions and Judaistic religion.

CHARACTERISTIC #1 – Scribes and Pharisees seat themselves in Moses' seat. 23:2 Moses was a God-appointed leader of the nation Israel. He did not strive to become a leader; in fact, he didn't even want to be a leader but that is what God called him to be. Notice carefully the point Jesus makes—the scribes and Pharisees have promoted themselves to His position.

CHARACTERISTIC #2 – Scribes and Pharisees say one thing and do another. 23:3 Now when it came to obeying the Law, Jesus did not admonish people not to obey it; in fact, He demanded that they do obey it. Here is a great definition of a hypocrite—they say one thing and do another. That is how they work and that is how they operate. They have their rules and their traditions and their man-made codes and they are always telling others what to do—but they don't do it themselves.

CHARACTERISTIC #3 – Scribes and Pharisees heap heavy burdens on people. 23:4 There are burdens to be borne in the work of God, but scribes and Pharisees are continually placing burdens on people that they themselves aren't willing to have.

CHARACTERISTIC #4 – Scribes and Pharisees do all things for public notoriety. 23:5-10 Now there are certain specific Pharisaical public actions that scribes and Pharisees love to do:

Public Action #1 - They broadened their phylacteries. 23:5a Phylacteries were little leather pouches which contained four main passages of Scripture— Deut. 6:4-9; 11:13-21; Ex. 13:11-16; 13:10. The phylacteries were worn on the forehead or forearm. What the Pharisees did is they made them larger so everyone could see them and then went out in public to be noticed by men. They loved to have people say these are great spiritual men who always have their Bible verses with them.

Public Action #2 - They lengthened the tassels on their garments. 23:5b The Pharisees made their religious clothing more noticeable by expanding it. They loved for people to see them wearing their religious clothing. It made them feel important. They loved to get all dressed up in religious clothing and parade in front of people so people would say, my how great and spiritual those men are. These are men who want to kill Jesus Christ and are walking around with Bibles and all dressed up in their religious suits.

Public Action #3 - They loved places of honor at banquets . 23:6a They love people to look first at them, not at God. They want the best seats at the banquets. They want to be served first.

Public Action #4 - They loved the chief seats in the synagogue . 23:6b These guys want to sit up front in front of the crowds. They want the religious attention.

Public Action #5 - They love to be respectfully greeted in public places. 23:7-10

- 1) They loved to be called rabbi . 23:7b The actual Greek word means my master teacher. Pharisees loved this title for it showed that people recognized them to be a master over them (Smith, p. 395). Jesus says all are brothers and no religious leaders should be viewed as a master over them.
- 2) They loved to be called father . 23:9 The term father means they loved to be identified as being the religious father or parent. Jesus says there is only one Father and that is the Heavenly Father.
- 3) They loved to be called leader . 23:10 The word “leader” is one that refers to being a guide or master teacher, like a professor (Smith, p. 223). Jesus never wanted His disciples to walk around with a better than thou attitude.

(Concluding Point #1) - The greatest among you shall be your servant.

(Concluding Point #2) - One who exalts himself will be humbled.

(Concluding Point #3) - One who humbles himself will be exalted.

TEXT: Matthew 23:13-36

TITLE: 7 WOES DIRECTED AGAINST THE HYPOCRISY OF THE RELIGIOUS LEADERS

BIG IDEA:

HYPOCRITICAL RELIGIOUS LEADERS DESERVE SEVERE DENUNCIATION FOR THEIR IMPACT OF DESTRUCTIVE CORRUPTION

INTRODUCTION:

Donald Hagner: The seven woes that make up the centerpiece of the denunciation of the scribes and Pharisees are constructed by Matthew for maximal impact. The fact that there are seven woes (cf. six woes in Luke 11:42–52) is itself significant symbolism, pointing to a fullness of corruption.

William Barclay: Verses 13–26 of this chapter form the most terrible and the most sustained denunciation in the New Testament. Here we hear what A. T. Robertson called ‘the rolling thunder of Christ’s wrath’. As A. Plummer has written, these woes are ‘like thunder in their unanswerable severity, and like lightning in their unsparing exposure ... They illuminate while they strike.’ . . .

To Jesus, the scribes and Pharisees were men who were acting a part. What he meant was this. Their whole idea of religion consisted in outward observances, the wearing of elaborate phylacteries and tassels, the meticulous observance of the rules and regulations of the law. But in their hearts there was bitterness and envy and pride and arrogance. To Jesus, these scribes and Pharisees were men who, under a mask of elaborate godliness, concealed hearts in which the most godless feelings and emotions held sway. And that accusation holds good in greater or lesser degree of anyone who lives life on the assumption that religion consists in external observances and external acts.

David Turner: Jesus’s denunciation of the religious leaders must be viewed against the background of the biblical prophets, who frequently cried woe against Israel’s sins. These oracles blend anger, grief, and alarm about the excruciating consequences that will come upon Israel due to its sin. The form of such oracles includes an initial pronouncement of woe followed by a description of the persons upon whom the woe will come. This description amounts to the reason the woe is merited. Thus a woe oracle states the conclusion and then the premises on which it is based. Woe oracles may have developed from covenant curses (Deut. 27:15) or even from funeral lamentations (Jer. 22:18). (See Clements, ABD 6:945–46; Westermann 1967: 192–95.)[2]

In oracles of woe, the prophet’s attitude is anger tempered at times by grief and alarm at the horrible price Israel will pay for its sin. Prophets are angry because they are speaking for God against sin. But prophets are also stricken with grief because this anger is directed toward their own people. The palpable pathos of woe oracles is due to the prophet’s dual solidarities. The prophets must speak for God, but in announcing oracles of judgment, the prophets know that they are announcing the doom of their own people.

In light of this biblical background, Jesus's pronouncements of woe upon the religious leaders were not innovative. His severe language must have had a familiar ring in the leaders' ears. In light of the woe oracles in Second Temple literature, Jesus's woes would have sounded rather contemporary. His woe oracles were not merely an exercise of spite against his opponents; as is clear in Matt. 23:37, his words come at least as much from grief as from anger.

Charles Swindoll: These outcries aimed at the religious leaders were part reproof and part lament. Jesus' seven "woes" in Matthew 23:13-36 were both cries of anguish for their stubborn, wicked hearts and cries of sorrow for the judgments they and their followers would suffer because of their rejection of the Messiah. William Barclay puts it well: "[Ouai] includes not only wrath but also sorrow. There is righteous anger here, but it is the anger of the heart of love, broken by stubborn human blindness. There is not only an air of savage denunciation; there is also an atmosphere of poignant tragedy."

R. T. France: Language: There are many places in the gospels where Jesus' language is far from "meek and mild," but nothing else at this level of invective except perhaps in the dialogue with "the Jews" in John 8.16 . . .

Structure: The first six woes may be seen as three pairs with matching themes:

1. the first pair (vv. 13–15) speak of keeping people out of the kingdom of heaven;
2. the second pair (vv. 16–24) focus on the distorted perspective which puts concern with details before the basic principles of religion and ethics;
3. the third pair (vv. 25–28) contrast outward and inward purity.

The seventh woe then brings the denunciation to its climax with the charge of complicity in the murder of God's messengers.

Warren Wiersbe: As we review these tragic woes from the lips of our Lord, we can see why the Pharisees were His enemies. He emphasized the inner man; they were concerned with externals. He taught a spiritual life based on principles, while the Pharisees majored on rules and regulations. Jesus measured spirituality in terms of character, while the Pharisees measured it in terms of religious activities and conformity to external laws. Jesus taught humility and sacrificial service, but the Pharisees were proud and used people to accomplish their own purposes. The holy life of Jesus exposed their artificial piety and shallow religion. Instead of coming out of the darkness, the Pharisees tried to put out the Light, and they failed.

David Thompson: RELIGIOUS LEADERS WHO ARE PHARISAICAL HYPOCRITES WILL SUFFER THE WORST KIND OF PUNISHMENT GOD CAN GIVE.

I. (:13) HYPOCRITES – CORRUPTING THE ENTRANCE TO HEAVEN

A. How Accessible Should Heaven Be?

"But woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, because you shut off the kingdom of heaven from men;"

Stu Weber: Here "woe" is an expression of righteous anger and a pronouncement of impending judgment. Jesus himself is the judge who will judge every person.

Donald Hagner: The woe saying is a painful statement of displeasure involving an implied judgment . . . hence it serves as the opposite of the beatitude. Woe sayings are found elsewhere in Matthew (11:21; 18:7; 24:19; 26:24), but the seven woes of the present pericope form a distinctive set (all are identical with the present formula [cf. vv 15, 23, 25, 27, 29] except for v. 16). Woe sayings are not uncommon in the OT, and a piling up of a succession of woe oracles is occasionally also found (cf. Isa 5:8–22 for a series of six; Hab 2:6–20 for five).

Grant Osborne: ἔμπροσθεν is strong here, meaning normally “in front of, before” and having the idea of slamming the door of heaven “right in the face of” their followers. The purpose of the Pharisees in “building a fence around the law” should have been to shepherd God’s flock through the gate or door to the kingdom. Their teaching should have made the reign of God . . . more apparent and meaningful in the lives of the people. Instead, they have closed the door to God.

Earlier Jesus had taught about the narrow and wide gates (7:13–14) and had given Peter (and the church) the “keys of the kingdom of heaven” (16:19), meaning the authority to open the doors of heaven. The binding/loosing metaphor that followed referred to the authority to open the kingdom truths by properly interpreting God’s Word. The Pharisees have rejected the final authority of Jesus as interpreter of Torah and so have fallen into false teaching.

B. How Inaccessible Do the Hypocrites Make It?

“for you do not enter in yourselves, nor do you allow those who are entering to go in.”

Charles Swindoll: Rather than drawing others into God’s kingdom life with the glorious message of forgiveness and hope, they intentionally resisted the truth themselves and stood in the way of others.

[Jeffrey Crabtree: Verse 14 is not in the Greek manuscripts of Matthew that the textual scholars rely on most, and so some translations do not include it or place it in brackets. However, Mark 12:40 and Luke 20:47 both record this woe, confirming that it was part of Jesus’ teaching that day.]

II. (:15) HYPOCRITES – CORRUPTING THE PROCESS OF DISCIPLESHIP

A. How Important Is the Process of Discipleship?

“Woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, because you travel about on sea and land to make one proselyte;”

Stu Weber: This pronouncement of judgment highlighted the zealous evangelistic activity of the hypocrites. They would travel the world (over land and sea) for only one convert. A convert was a Gentile who was won to faith in Yahweh, the God of Israel.

But the new convert would have been better off if he had not been found by the Jewish evangelist. By following the evangelist’s hypocritical example, the convert surpassed his teacher in hypocrisy and evil. As a result, he incurred an even harsher judgment. The new convert may have even convinced himself that he was following God, but he was actually following Satan. God intended Israel to be his ambassadors to the world to bring people to him, but these representatives of Israel were leading people into rebellion.

Charles Swindoll: They had become “missionaries of evil,” multiplying their numbers by spreading legalism like a disease. Their way included zeal without knowledge, capturing unsuspecting converts in deceptive, destructive false piety.

B. How Condemned Are the Disciples of Hypocrites

“and when he becomes one, you make him twice as much a son of hell as yourselves.”

William Barclay: It was the aim of the Pharisees to turn these God-fearers into proselytes; the word proselyte is an English transliteration of a Greek word prosēlutos, which means one who has approached or drawn near. The proselyte was the full convert who had accepted the ceremonial law and circumcision and who had become in the fullest sense a Jew. As so often happens, ‘the most converted were the most perverted’. A convert often becomes the most fanatical devotee of the new religion; and many of these proselytes were more fanatically devoted to the Jewish law than even the Jews themselves.

Jesus accused these Pharisees of being missionaries of evil. It was true that very few became proselytes, but those who did went the whole way. The sin of the Pharisees was that they were not really seeking to lead others to God, they were seeking to lead them to Pharisaism. One of the gravest dangers which any missionary runs is that of trying to convert people to a sect rather than to a religion, and of being more concerned in bringing people to a church than to Jesus Christ.

Daniel Doriani: The teachers and Pharisees are zealous, but they do more harm than good. . . The first century was the heyday of evangelism by Jews, but because the Pharisees promoted a false religion, when they made converts, they were more proud, blind, and legalistic than the Pharisees themselves.

III. (:16-22) BLIND GUIDES – CORRUPTING INTEGRITY BY EVASIVE PRIORITIES OF ALLEGIANCE

A. (:16-21) How Do Blind Guides Corrupt Integrity?

Charles Swindoll: They went to great lengths to accommodate the Scriptures to their own desires. Their self-serving interpretations led to disobedience of the clear teaching of the Law. So twisted was their thinking, though, that they were blind to their own deceptions.

Warren Wiersbe: The Pharisees were blind to the true values of life. Their priorities were confused. They would take an oath and use some sacred object to substantiate that oath – the gold in the temple, for example, or the gift on the altar. But they would not swear by the temple itself or the altar. It was the temple that sanctified the gold and the altar that sanctified the gift. They were leaving God out of their priorities.

David Turner: The biting sarcastic expression “blind guides” is repeated in 23:24 (cf. 15:14). Jesus condemns the casuistry of these oaths as an evasion of duty before God (cf. 15:4–6). Two different loopholes based on empty distinctions are exposed, one in 23:16–17 concerning the temple and the gold (Josephus, Ant. 14.34–36, 72, 106, 110; 15.395; J.W. 5.201–10, 222; Ag. Ap. 2.84) within it and another in 23:18–19 concerning the altar and what is offered on it. Although the leaders view some oaths as binding and others as nonbinding, Jesus rejects this as empty casuistry and teaches that all oaths are valid (23:20–22). Previously Jesus has flatly denied the need for any oaths (5:33–37), even though oaths and vows were very important in Second Temple Judaism (m. Ned.; CD 15; 16.6–12).

1. (:16-17) Practicing Deceit by Prioritizing Gold over the Temple
*“Woe to you, blind guides, who say, ‘Whoever swears by the temple, that is nothing; but whoever swears by the gold of the temple, he is obligated.’
17 You fools and blind men; which is more important, the gold, or the temple that sanctified the gold?”*

Grant Osborne: Only in this third of the seven woes does Jesus alter his opening formula and insert “blind guides,” undoubtedly because he calls them “blind” again in vv. 17, 19. This emphasizes they are not only “hypocrites” but also “blind” to the truth. They were also “blind guides” in 15:14.

2. (:18-19) Practicing Deceit by Prioritizing Offerings over the Altar
*“And, ‘Whoever swears by the altar, that is nothing, but whoever swears by the offering upon it, he is obligated.’
19 You blind men, which is more important, the offering or the altar that sanctifies the offering?”*
3. (:20-21) Conclusion: Validity of Oaths Based on Integrity
*“Therefore he who swears by the altar, swears both by the altar and by everything on it.
21 And he who swears by the temple, swears both by the temple and by Him who dwells within it.”*

William Barclay: We have already seen that in matters of oaths the Jewish legalists were experts in evasion (Matthew 5:33–7). The general principle of evasion was this. To the Jew, an oath was absolutely binding, as long as it was a binding oath. Broadly speaking, a binding oath was an oath which definitely and without equivocation employed the name of God; such an oath must be kept, no matter what the cost. Any other oath might be legitimately broken. The idea was that if God’s name was actually used, then God was introduced as a partner into the transaction, and to break the oath was not only to break faith with others but to insult God.

The science of evasion had been brought to a high degree. It is most probable that in this passage Jesus is presenting a caricature of Jewish legalistic methods. He is saying: ‘You have brought evasion to such a fine art that it is possible to regard an oath by the Temple as not binding, while an oath by the gold of the Temple is binding; and an oath by the altar as not binding, while an oath by the gift on the altar is binding.’ This is to be regarded as an extreme description made to bring out the absurdity of Jewish methods, rather than a literal description.

The idea behind the passage is just this. The whole idea of treating oaths in this way, the whole conception of a kind of technique of evasion, is born of a fundamental deceitfulness. Truly religious men and women will never make a promise with the deliberate intention of evading it; they will never, as they make it, provide themselves with a series of escape routes, which they may use if they find that promise hard to keep.

We need not with conscious superiority condemn the Pharisaic science of evasion. The time is not yet ended when people seek to evade some duty on a technicality or call in the strict letter of the law to avoid doing what the spirit of the law clearly means they ought to do.

For Jesus, the binding principle was twofold. God hears every word we speak, and God sees every intention of our hearts. In view of that, the fine art of evasion is one which should be foreign to every Christian. The technique of evasion may suit the sharp practice of the world, but never the open honesty of the Christian mind.

Walter Wilson: It was customary at the time to avoid the risk of profaning the divine name by employing oath formulae that were linked to God only tangentially, for example, by using the word Korban (“offering”). The prevalence of such customs obliged the rabbis to deliberate over which circumlocutions were valid and which were not, discussions preserved especially in the tractate Nedarim, for example, m. Ned. 1:2 (“He who says to his fellow, ‘Konam,’ ‘Konah,’ ‘Konas’—lo, these are substitutes for Korban”). According to the opinion taken up in 23:16 and 18, formulae that mention something that can be dedicated to God (e.g., gold, gifts) are substitutes for Korban, while an oath that mentions only items that already belong to God (e.g., the temple, the altar) is not valid. Jesus counters by arguing that the logic informing this distinction contradicts the obvious sacred hierarchy, in which the temple and the altar are “greater” (i.e., more holy) than the objects associated with them, since it is the former that sanctifies the latter (23:17, 19). This observation is then coupled to the argument in 23:20–22: just as certain objects derive their sanctity from the temple and the altar, the temple and the altar derive their sanctity from the presence of God (23:20–21), a principle that applies by extension to heaven (23:22), since it is God’s throne (cf. 5:34). Given the interconnected nature of the sacred hierarchy, in reality every oath is an appeal to God and thus runs the risk of profaning God’s name. The practice of making distinctions between binding and nonbinding oaths, then, is not only fallacious but also dangerous.

B. (:22) What Should Integrity Look Like? Heaven Deserves Highest Allegiance

“And he who swears by heaven, swears both by the throne of God and by Him who sits upon it.”

Grant Osborne: Here the point made in 23:16–22 comes full circle. Every oath, from the least to the greatest, involves God and his throne and so is binding. In this sense Jesus’ point in 5:34–37 is in full agreement. Since every oath by nature centers on God and is made in relation to God, there is no need to swear by anything, but instead a “yes” is a “yes” and a “no” is a “no” because all promises are made before the throne of God and will be judged by God (so also Davies and Allison, Morris, Nolland).

Donald Hagner: The conclusion is again clear: the implied distinctions are unjustified, and thus all oaths must be honored. Oath taking is always in effect an agreement in God’s presence.

Van Parunak: The real issue, missing in all their careful logic, is that these implements of religion are intended to focus the worshiper’s attention on God. The Lord makes this point by breaking the symmetry. The internal alternation in 20–21 would require that 21 end with the words, “by all things therein.” But the Lord shifts the reference to the Lord, and then expands it with a reference to oaths by heaven, which were also in focus in ch. 5,

Mat 5:33 Again, ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths: 34 But I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne: 35 Nor by the earth; for it is his footstool: neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of the great King.

Lies are wrong, not because they violate a reference to holy things, but because “a lying tongue” is “an abomination unto” the Lord,

Pro 6:16 These six things doth the LORD hate: yea, seven are an abomination unto him: 17 A proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood, 18 An heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, feet that be swift in running to mischief, 19 A false witness that speaketh lies, and he that soweth discord among brethren.

God commanded Abraham,

Gen 17:1 I am the Almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect.

Our integrity must be based on our walk with God, not formulas we utter over our promises.

IV. (:23-24) HYPOCRITES – CORRUPTING THE ESSENCE OF GODLINESS BY MAJORING ON THE MINORS WHEN IT COMES TO GOD’S RIGHTEOUS REQUIREMENTS

A. (:23) Majoring on the Minors

*“Woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!
For you tithe mint and dill and cummin, and have neglected the weightier provisions of the law: justice and mercy and faithfulness; but these are the things you should have done without neglecting the others.”*

B. (:24) Missing the Essence of Godliness

“You blind guides, who strain out a gnat and swallow a camel!”

Stu Weber: Jesus' hyperbole in verse 24 was humorous. His hearers would have chuckled at the picture of the Pharisees straining out a small insect (gnat) while swallowing a huge camel.

William Barclay: There is nothing more necessary than a sense of proportion to save us from confusing religious observances with real devotion.

R. T. France: The grotesque imagery of straining out the gnat (from wine or water before drinking)⁴⁰ and swallowing the camel belongs to the same class of burlesque as the splinter and the plank in 7:3–5 or the camel going through the eye of a needle in 19:24. It depends on the relative size of the smallest and largest creatures in Palestine. The gnat, as an insect, was unclean (Lev 11:20–23; cf. also the “swarming creatures” of Lev 11:41–44) and therefore must not be ingested; but then the camel was no less unclean (Lev 11:4), and a lot bigger! The joke may have been helped by an Aramaic word-play between qalmâ (gnat) and gamlâ (camel).

V. (:25-26) HYPOCRITES – CORRUPTING THE PROCESS OF SANCTIFICATION

A. (:25) Wrong Process = Only Cleansing the Externals

*“Woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!
For you clean the outside of the cup and of the dish, but inside they are full of robbery and self-indulgence.”*

Grant Osborne: The next four verses are dominated by the “outside-inside” (ἔξωθεν-ἔσωθεν) distinction, forming the perfect definition of hypocrisy as stemming from the dichotomy between “outward” appearance and “inward” reality. Jesus uses as his example the care with which the scribes wash the outside surface of cups and plates.

B. (:26) Right Process = Prioritize Cleansing the Heart

“You blind Pharisee, first clean the inside of the cup and of the dish, so that the outside of it may become clean also.”

VI. (:27-28) HYPOCRITES – CORRUPTING THE TESTIMONY OF RIGHTEOUSNESS

A. (:27) False Facade

*“Woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!
For you are like whitewashed tombs which on the outside appear beautiful, but inside they are full of dead men's bones and all uncleanness.”*

William Barclay: Here again is a picture which any Jew would understand. One of the most common places for tombs was by the wayside. We have already seen that anyone who touched a dead body became unclean (Numbers 19:16). Therefore, anyone who came into contact with a tomb automatically became unclean. At one time in particular, the roads of Palestine were crowded with pilgrims – at the time of the Passover Feast. To become unclean on the way to the Passover Feast would be a disaster, for that meant that such a person would be debarred from sharing in it. It was then Jewish practice in the month of Adar to whitewash all wayside tombs, so that no pilgrims might accidentally come into contact with one of them and be rendered unclean.

So, as people journeyed the roads of Palestine on a spring day, these tombs would glint white, and almost lovely, in the sunshine; but within they were full of bones and bodies whose touch would defile. That, said Jesus, was a precise picture of what the Pharisees were. Their outward actions were the actions of intensely religious men; their inward hearts were foul and putrid with sin.

Daniel Doriani: Tombs were whitewashed annually, during the Passover, so this whitewashing was occurring as Jesus spoke. Jews did this so no one would defile themselves by accidentally walking on a tomb. The beautification was incidental. Sadly, the Pharisees defile people as surely as tombs do. A properly marked tomb keeps people clean by telling them to stay away. But the Pharisees do just the opposite. “In their scrupulous regulations they appeared magnificently virtuous but were actually contaminating the people.” They appear to be clean—law-abiding—but they are full of wickedness. They seek disciples, then corrupt them.

B. (:28) Internal Corruption

“Even so you too outwardly appear righteous to men, but inwardly you are full of hypocrisy and lawlessness.”

Donald Hagner: The fundamental flaw of the Pharisees, their hypocrisy, was in their concerted attempt to appear to be what they unfortunately were not. While they wanted to appear righteous, in fact they were unrighteous.

Charles Swindoll: To those on the outside, they looked spotless, clean, pure, and holy. Their clothes no doubt gleamed in the light. However, like tombs painted with bright white paint, inside they were filled with the stench of death and corruption.

VII. (:29-36a) HYPOCRITES – CORRUPTING THE TREATMENT OF GOD’S PROPHETS

A. (:29-33) Indictment for Present Hypocrisy

1. (:29-30) Pretending to Revere the Prophets

“Woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! For you build the tombs of the prophets and adorn the monuments of the righteous, 30 and say, ‘If we had been living in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partners with them in shedding the blood of the prophets.’”

2. (:31-33) Participating in the Guilt of the Persecutors

“Consequently you bear witness against yourselves, that you are sons of those who murdered the prophets. 32 Fill up then the measure of the guilt of your fathers. 33 You serpents, you brood of vipers, how shall you escape the sentence of hell?”

Donald Hagner: All of this, however, was again but a facade covering an endemic lack of receptivity to the messengers sent to Israel by God. It is an irony that the very claim that they would not have participated with their (“your”) fathers (cf. τῶν πατέρων ἡμῶν, “our fathers,” in v. 30) in killing the prophets (cf. 5:12) does establish them as the υἱοί, “sons,” of τῶν φονευσάντων, “those who murdered,” the prophets. The implication is that the sons are, at least in the present instance, inescapably like their fathers. In making their disclaimer, they inadvertently also bear witness against themselves (ὥστε μαρτυρεῖτε ἑαυτοῖς, “so that you bear witness against yourselves”). For the sons, by their hostile rejection of Jesus and his disciples, are repeating what their fathers had done in rejecting the prophets. There is a certain bitter and ironic inevitability in this—hence the sharp exhortation πληρώσατε τὸ μέτρον τῶν πατέρων ὑμῶν, “Fill up the measure of your fathers.” What the fathers began will be completed by their sons (cf. v. 34; and the fulfillment in Acts 7:52; 1 Thess 2:15–16 [with ἀναπληρῶσαι αὐτῶν τὰς ἀμαρτίας, “filling up of their sins”]). And no rejection of God’s messengers is more grievous than the Pharisees’ rejection of God’s supreme messenger, Jesus.

Charles Swindoll: Characterized by Hearts of Murder -- They were poisonous and dangerous, like vipers ready to strike their unsuspecting prey. Specifically, they hypocritically praised the prophets of old, while in reality they would have been among those who persecuted and killed the prophets, just as they were plotting to murder Jesus in just a few days.

Daniel Doriani: Jerusalem at its worst represents false religion. Egypt at its worst represents oppressive government and brute force. Babylon (with Sodom) at its worst represents the seduction of wealth and sensuality. In God’s sight, all three oppose true religion. False religion, false government, and false prosperity are all one. All stand united against the Lord and his people. They would slay God himself if they could, and they do slay God's people when they can. Therefore these wicked cities are ripe for judgment. They cannot "escape being condemned to hell" (Matt. 23:33).

Jeffrey Crabtree: Jesus called them snakes and the offspring of serpents (v. 33). They were snakes in their own right and their parents had been serpents as well, thus showing that they had both the heritage and character of snakes. Jesus' use of the question form "intensified the guilt" of these men and "emphasized the inevitability of their judgment" (Gundry 469).

B. (:34-36a) Indictment for Future Persecutions

1. (:34) Litany of Future Persecutions

"Therefore, behold, I am sending you prophets and wise men and scribes; some of them you will kill and crucify, and some of them you will scourge in your synagogues, and persecute from city to city,"

Michael Wilkins: The Jewish leaders could not take on capital punishment without support from the Roman occupying forces, so with their backing they were able to unfurl their wrath first on Stephen (Acts 7:54-60). Crucifixion of Christians would have been at the hands of the Romans but likely instigated by jealous Jewish officials.

2. (:35-36) Liability and Guilt Extend to Persecutions from the Beginning of Time

"that upon you may fall the guilt of all the righteous blood shed on earth, from the blood of righteous Abel to the blood of Zechariah, the son of Berechiah, whom you murdered between the temple and the altar."

Jeffrey Crabtree: There is no biblical record of this Zechariah's martyrdom. Many commentators suggest that Zechariah, son of Jehoiada (2 Chr. 24:20), was who Jesus meant. This Zechariah was stoned in the temple court and was the last martyr listed in the Hebrew Scriptures as they were ordered at that time (Hagner 33B:677). One respected manuscript of Matthew does not have "son of Barachiah" in Matthew's Gospel adding a little weight to this possibility. However, according to Blomberg (85), "later rabbinic traditions believed that the prophet Zechariah, son of Berekiah, who is depicted in the O.T. book that bears his name, was also killed in the temple."

Regardless, both Jesus and His audience knew of whom He spoke. His point was that His generation would be judged for all of the persecutions and martyrdoms since the first murder (v. 36). In other words, not only would God judge the religious leadership, He would also judge that entire generation of Jews.

R. T. France: It is because the current generation is continuing in the same tradition of hostility to God's messengers that it now faces judgment, and that judgment results not only from their own failings but from the whole tradition from Abel to Zechariah to which they are the willing heirs.

(:36b) IMMINENCY OF CERTAIN JUDGMENT

"Truly I say to you, all these things shall come upon this generation."

Stu Weber: Jesus finished the seventh and most sobering woe with his pronouncement of judgment. I tell you the truth assured the listeners of the validity of his prediction. All this included the persecutions and the judgment for them. This generation (cf. Matt. 11:16; 13:39,45; 16:4) should be taken quite literally in this case, since judgment on Israel did come in the form of the A.D. 70 devastation. Israel had broken covenant with Yahweh as completely in the first century as in any previous century, by murdering the greatest prophet, the Messiah, God's Son. As in centuries before, punishment would certainly come. This generation of false religionists living in the time of Christ would inherit all the guilt of their forefathers (cf. Jer. 16:10-13).

Jesus had just pronounced a finality to his dealing with Israel. He had determined that judgment for all the unfaithfulness of the nation through the centuries (Abel to Zechariah) would fall upon “this generation.” He was about to announce that your house is left to you desolate—a statement that shocked the disciples. Jesus would deal with their questions and this impending future judgment in Matthew 24-25.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How strongly should we denounce hypocritical religious leaders in our day?
- 2) What can we do to maintain integrity and not resort to escaping God’s requirements by deception or some type of mental gymnastics?
- 3) When have we focused on relatively minor issues of righteousness to avoid dealing with more major responsibilities?
- 4) Where are we tempted to put on a façade and present ourselves to others as more spiritual than we really are?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Grant Osborne: The structure is . . . heavily debated, with several distinct possibilities suggested:

1. they are individual, related by code words and increasing in length and intensity (Luz)
2. the first three center on scribal teaching, the next three on Pharisaic conduct, the last on national sin (McNeile)
3. there is a 2–3–2 pattern (Nolland)
4. there is a chiasm (1 = 7, 2 = 6, 3 = 5, with the fourth the centerpiece (Carson))
5. the first two relate to 23:4, the next four to 23:5–7, and the last forms a climax (Witherington)

6. there are three pairs of judgments (1–2, 3–4, 5–6), with the seventh forming a climax (Sabourin, Davies and Allison, Hagner, Blomberg).

This final one is the simplest and fits the organization best, as this commentary will seek to demonstrate.

- I. Woes on the Negative Effect They Have on Others (23:13–15)
- II. Woes on the Misleading Effect of Their Teaching and Conduct (23:16–24)
- III. Woes on Their External Religion (23:25–28)
- IV. Woe for Participating in the Sins of Their Ancestors (23:29–32)
- V. Conclusion (23:33–36)

There are two primary aspects to these seven “woes,” the diatribe and warning to the historical generation of Jesus about the religious sins of the leaders, and the warning to Christians of every generation regarding the danger of hypocrisy.

Daniel Doriani: Let me suggest three practical questions to test for possible hypocrisy.

1. First, is your religious practice the same in public and in private?
2. Second, do you live for the divine audience or the human audience?
3. Third, are you consistent?

John MacArthur: The Condemnation of False Spiritual Leaders

So here you have a rather pitiful pronouncement of doom on spiritual phonies who masquerade as if they are spiritual leaders when, in fact, they are not at all spiritual leaders. Now I want to add another thought. When Jesus says woe, woe, woe all these times, this is not a wish, this is the statement of a fact. His condemnations here are factual, not wishful. It isn't like people today might say well damn you which seems to be a rather popular phrase. It is not just a wish that you be damned, it is a fact. It is a statement of absolute fact. Divine judgment is set in motion when Jesus says you're cursed. That's not a wish, that's a fact.

And so this is indeed a curse that worked its way out in reality and the death and eternal damnation of these false religious leaders. Now as we look at it, I want us to see not only its historic import, but I want us to see its contemporary significance, because it is equally true today that false spiritual leaders are condemned by God in the same way and we need to deal with them in the same way and we need to be warned about them in the same way with the same kind of strong language and the same kind of confrontiveness that Jesus confronted them and warned the people, so do we need to confront them and warn the people today. . .

First of all, false spiritual leaders are cursed for exclusion, for keeping people out of the Kingdom, verse 13. “For you shut up the Kingdom of heaven against men for you neither go in yourselves, neither permit them who are entering to go in.” What does He mean by the phrase “them who are entering”? It has the idea of people who are continually endeavoring to enter. . .

Secondly, verse 15, false spiritual leaders are cursed not only for exclusion - that is, excluding people from the Kingdom - but perversion. They pervert the people who come into their influence. They not only shut them out of heaven, they usher them into hell. Here come along some people seeking religion, here come people seeking some kind of moral change in their life, people with some kinds of emotional, psychological needs, some kind of spiritual desires, and they not only shut them out of heaven, but they pervert them into children of hell. . .

Thirdly, false spiritual leaders are cursed for subversion, not just exclusion and perversion, but subversion. They subvert truth. They have developed reasoning that undermines truth. It is a mark of one who is in any sense possessing the life of God that truth is important. God is a God of truth. The God who cannot - what? - lie, says Paul. God is a God of truth. God says, "I hate lying and every false way." God is a God who speaks truth. And so any false system is a lying system.

In other words, "Have you forgotten that God is everywhere, as creator of all and Lord of all? You better tell the truth." They subverted the truth. They developed reasoning that undermined truth. False spiritual leaders don't tell the truth, folks, but they parade piety. Try to cover up for their lying pretense. We need to be careful of that. They subvert whole houses. They, by their great covetousness, says Peter, use feigned words to make merchandise out of you. They lie. They say they need money when they don't need money. They say God told them something when He never told them anything. They say Jesus led them into something when He never led them into anything. They lie. Beware of those liars who are false spiritual leaders. . .

Fourthly, false spiritual leaders are cursed for inversion. Not only subversion (that is, undermining truth) but inversion (that is, reversing values, reversing divine priorities). This, in verse 23, is most fascinating. . .

False religious leaders get wrapped up in inconsequential minutia and have no capacity to deal with the weightier matters.

And they had no faith. They walked by sight. They walked by works. They walked by law. They walked by their own efforts. And so He says you're real great at counting out kitchen seeds used to flavor food, and you've missed the whole point of what is really important - justice, mercy, and faith. Spiritual matters you've lost. False religious leaders - listen - can get all wrapped up in the minutia of their system. It's just the real spiritual stuff they don't have. At the end of verse of 23, He says, "These ought you to have done and not to leave the other undone."

It's amazing how fastidious religious people can be and so far from the reality of what God seeks. So many false spiritual leaders reverse divine priorities, substitute insignificant forms and outward acts of religion for essential realities of the heart, see, that's the point. So the false spiritual leaders are condemned for exclusion, perversion, subversion, inversion. How about extortion for a fifth? Extortion.

"Woe unto you scribes and Pharisees, you clean the outside of the cup and the platter" - and platter is an interesting Greek word. It has to do with a plate used to serve delicacies. You clean the outside of the cup and the platter, and within they are full of extortion and excess. You're real big at extortion. You have a ministry that looks pious, but the whole thing is based on taking advantage of other people. You use people. You make merchandise out of people.

The idea is this: Here comes a guy with - he's going to offer you a lovely meal. He's got a plate, on it are all the lovely delicacies. He's got a cup and in it is the fruit of the vine and he offers it to you, and the plate and the cup have been cleaned ceremonial, they've been ceremonially prepared. All the ritual, all the whole deal is prepared. Only problem is the food on the plate and the wine in the cup were stolen - stolen. Very - "Oh, we've ceremoniously prepared the platter.

We've ceremoniously prepared the cup. It all is so religious, and everything in it and on it was gained by extortion. . .

So the Lord is saying they appear so scrupulous. They appear so religiously meticulous. They appear so pious in their system, and everything they serve you was gained with their filthy desires. Gained by the abusive people. They are greedy rapists and robbers who steal and plunder the souls and the money and the hearts and the minds and the goods of everybody they can touch. . .

Sixthly, false spiritual leaders are cursed for deception. This is unbelievable. Deception - and we're going to cover these very quickly as we close. Deception. "Woe unto you scribes and Pharisees," verse 27 says, "hypocrites, for you are like whited sepulchers which indeed appear beautiful outward but are within full of dead bones and all uncleanness." Now, follow this. He says you are guilty of deception. You contaminate people. You aren't what you claim. . .

Then the last one. The last one, false spiritual leaders are cursed for pretension, for pretending to be so much better than everybody else. Verse 29, "Woe unto you scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites." May I inject here? Nothing God hates worse than pride. "You build the," the memorials literally, "you build the mnēmeia, from the verb to remember. "You build the memorials of the prophets and you decorate the tombs of the righteous." You're really into memorializing the saints. You're really big on lifting up the heroes of the past. Oh, we honor Saint This Guy. Oh, we honor Saint That Guy. . .

This is the ugly pretense of spiritual pride. Great at building monuments, great at honoring men of the past and claiming to be better than their fathers. Jesus had told them in the parable earlier in chapter 21 about how they had - the people of Israel had killed all of the prophets and the messengers from God and the parable of the vineyard and the landowner and the servants and the son. But they claim, oh, we're - we would never have done that. And Jesus' answer in verse 31 is a direct hit. "Wherefore, you are witnesses" - right now on the spot - "you give testimony against yourselves that you are the sons of them that killed the prophets."

J. Ligon Duncan: Woe to the Scribes and Pharisees

In this great passage, the Lord Jesus Christ pronounces curses upon those religious leaders of His people who were hypocritical, who were outwardly holy, but who inwardly loved not God and cared not for the souls of His people. He specifically catalogues the chief sins which they had committed. And then He delivers what is simultaneously a gracious response and a terrifying warning. In verses 13-33, you will see Christ, on eight occasions, pronounce a woe, a denunciation, a curse. That curse is against hypocrisy. But you will also see eight particular sins which reflect that hypocrisy denounced by the Lord Jesus Christ. And then finally in verses 34 through 36, you'll see Jesus' response to that hypocrisy, in both a word of grace and a word of judgment. And that's what I would like to look with you about today.

I. We must appreciate that the truly loving thing is not to ignore but to confront/denounce soul-killing error.

The truly loving thing for the man of God, for the preacher of God's word to do is not to ignore soul-killing error and hypocrisy, but to confront it and to denounce it. It's always easier for the man of God to try and pretend like it is not there, because he gets less criticism. But that's not the kind thing, that's not the loving thing to do for those who are deluded by that kind of error. And the Lord Jesus Christ loved the Pharisees and scribes enough to tell it like it was, to show them their own hearts and to call them to repentance.

What in the world was Jesus doing?

- First of all, Jesus was showing God's people God's attitude towards hypocrisy.
- But secondly, the Lord Jesus Christ is offering another general warning to these scribes and Pharisees.
- And then finally He is telling these things to these scribes and Pharisees because He wants the crowd and His disciples to be warned that we too are susceptible to the same temptations to which they had fallen prey.

Let me also say that by denouncing this hypocrisy and yet affirming the reality of God, affirming the reality of the teaching of Scripture, affirming the reality of a saving relationship with God, Jesus is also not falling into that trap of making a shallow deduction that says because there are hypocrites in the church, therefore Christianity is not true.

II. We must examine our own hearts and pray for our spiritual leaders in light of Jesus' words here.

- First, in verse 13 He says, you keep people from eternal fellowship with God and you refuse it yourselves. How? By opposing the gospel message.
- Then in verse 14 we see Jesus say, you men, you practice your religion for personal gain. You look holy for the sake of gaining the confidence of God's people and then exploiting them. And so He charges them with practicing religion for personal gain.
- In verse 15 He goes on to say, you make your converts into worse hypocrites than yourselves.
- Notice again in verses 16 through 22. He says, you make subtle distinctions in your teaching to - God's people about what kind of oaths are binding and what kinds of oaths are not. And those subtle distinctions undercut the truth and they encourage God's people to be untruthful.
- Again in verses 23 and 24 He says, you have majored on questionable minutia.
- In verses 25 and 26, He says, you appear to be holy, but in your heart of hearts, you're self-indulgent. You are hard on everybody else but you are soft on yourself. You'll allow yourself all manner of flexibility and you will be harsh on others.
- Verses 27 and 28, you appear to be holy but in your heart of hearts you're hypocritical and you're lawless. You proclaim with your lips that you love the law but in your life you don't.
- Verses 29 through 33, you act as though you honor God's messengers, but in fact you hate God's messengers, because you hate God's message.

Bob Deffinbaugh: In verse 13, the “woe’s” begin. In verses 13-15, Jesus reveals the ultimate reason why men should not submit to the leadership and authority of the scribes and Pharisees. They should not follow the scribes and Pharisees because they are headed for hell, and they will lead their followers after them. The masses (who, at this moment, are the only ones who still have respect for our Lord’s authority “ see Matthew 21:45-46), who are somewhat favorable to Jesus, find the scribes and Pharisees barring the door to the kingdom by utilizing the full extent of their influence to keep people from following Jesus. And the very few whom the scribes and Pharisees invite to join their elite group become twice as much a child of hell as their mentors. . .

Verses 16-22 focus on oaths = things they not only say, but swear to; verses 23-24 focus on tithing. The scribes and Pharisees make false distinctions, thus providing a way of escape from what they have promised. If one swears by the temple, he is not obligated to keep that vow. But if one swears by the gold of the temple, he is obliged to keep his vow. Jesus shows that these distinctions are false, and that one is obliged to keep his vow, without distinction.

In verses 23 and 24, our Lord indicts the scribes and Pharisees for their hypocrisy in regard to tithing. The Law taught tithing. The scribes and Pharisees were meticulous about tithing, when it came to trivial things. They made much of tithing when it came to small things like mint, dill, and cumin. But in making much of small things, they made little of very important things like justice, mercy, and faith. In our Lord’s assessment, they “strained gnats and swallowed camels.” Their attention to little things was a pretext for ignoring the most important things of all.

Verses 25-28 have something in common -- they call attention to an undue interest in outward appearances, rather than on what is on the inside. This should come as no great surprise to us. In Matthew 6:1-18, Jesus warned about performing our righteous deeds (charitable giving, prayer, and fasting) before men, for their praise. Earlier in chapter 23, Jesus has said that “they do all their deeds to be seen by people” (Matthew 23:5). Since the scribes and Pharisees loved to be esteemed as more spiritual than others, we would expect them to be preoccupied with external appearances, rather than the heart. . .

Pharisaism assumed that if the outside looked good, everything else must be good. Hypocrisy is a concerted effort to mask our failures (otherwise known as “sin”) by making appearances look good. Jesus tells us that true cleansing begins on the inside “in the heart” and expands to the outside. . .

How can one be guilty of crimes that were committed long before you were born? First of all, they will be guilty for rejecting Jesus, and for killing Him. They will also be guilty for murdering some of the righteous of their own generation. Somehow, there must be a connection between the rejection of the prophets of their own day and the rejection of the prophets of old by their forefathers. Here is the way I understand this connection. Matthew, more than any other Gospel writer, goes to great links to prove that the events of our Lord’s birth, ministry, and death are the fulfillment of Old Testament Scriptures.

Our Lord Himself has emphasized the connection between His ministry and that of John the Baptist, who was the last and greatest of the Old Testament prophets. Since the scribes and Pharisees are aware of the connection Jesus has made between Himself and the Old Testament prophets, then the rejection and murder of Jesus is, in effect, the rejection and murder of all of our Lord’s predecessors.

TEXT: Matthew 23:37-39

TITLE: CHRIST'S LAMENT OVER JERUSALEM

BIG IDEA:

SORROW OVER JERUSALEM'S DESERVED JUDGMENT CANNOT CANCEL THE EXECUTION OF THAT JUDGMENT (DESPITE THE HOPE OF ESCHATOLOGICAL RESTORATION)

INTRODUCTION:

Craig Blomberg: The harsh tone of vv. 1-36 lessens dramatically. Verses 37-39 disclose Jesus' profound sorrow and compassion at the state of events that has brought him to this point of antagonism with the Jewish leaders. These verses play a role in the larger discourse of chaps. 23-25 somewhat comparable to the role of Rom 9:1-5 in the context of Rom 9-11. Jesus, like Paul, demonstrates the extent of his identification with his people despite the harsh words he has for them elsewhere. Jesus' outburst also reminds one of David's tragic lament for Absalom in 2 Sam 18:33 and 19:4. Jesus is a Jew, these are his people, and this is his holy city. To the extent that he is conscious of the divine presence within him, his agony is greatly multiplied. God's chosen people, specially loved and specially blessed, are now spurning and killing his true representatives. How Jesus wishes it had been otherwise!

Still, even during Jesus' ministry, this generation had more opportunity than any other to change the too frequent pattern of Israelite behavior. Even now the whole point of appealing to the crowds with such warnings is that some might still repent. "Jerusalem" is a metonymy (the use of one name or object to refer to a closely related item) for the corrupt leadership of the people. Jesus' words betray great tenderness and employ maternal imagery. . . Here Jesus wishes he could gather all the recalcitrant "children" of Israel, to love, protect, and nurture them like a mother hen does with her baby chickens. Similar imagery recurs frequently in Jewish literature (e.g., Deut 32:4; Ps 36:7; Ruth 2:12; Isa 31:5)

Jeffrey Crabtree: The scribes and Pharisees had become the enemies of Jesus set upon destroying him; nevertheless, they too were invited to the new reality of the dawning kingdom. Despite Jesus' stern criticism of them, he has longed for them to receive him and his message so that he could bring them into the fold of those who enjoy his benefits. If they had only allowed him, he would have gathered them with the tenderness of a bird gathering her young—thus his lament over Jerusalem, its inhabitants, and especially its religious leadership. But as it is, only tragedy awaits the capital city. Judgment is soon to come upon the temple, and the Jews would not again see their Messiah until the coming of the eschaton. Again all turns upon the reaction to Jesus. Acceptance means salvation; rejection of him means inevitable judgment (cf. 10:32–33, 40; 12:41).

Gaebelein: What a loving, sublime lamentation this is! The King is a King of Love and His heart yearns over His city Jerusalem. How He did long for them! The illustration He uses is one they fully understood, not alone by its simplicity, a hen gathering her chickens, but also because their elders had mentioned this very fact. The Rabbis spoke of Messiah under the name of the Shekinah and declared that Israel would be gathered under the wings of the Shekinah, where they would find rest and blessing. And now the Shekinah was with them. The promised One has come and they would not have Him. They turned away from Jehovah, their King. Their house -- no longer “the Father’s house” -- is to be left desolate. They would see Him in no wise henceforth. That this has a national significance, the rejection of them is evident. And no sooner were the words spoken than He left the temple and went away.

Grant Osborne: The lament flows right out of the preceding context. Jesus had to indict first the leaders for their hypocrisy and sin, and then in the previous verse had to extend that judgment to the whole nation. This caused Jesus deep sorrow, and he wants them to know the deep love of both God and himself for them.

By using the metaphor of a hen and her chicks, Jesus reveals his tender concern to see the people of Jerusalem get right with God. At the same time, they have already rejected his offer, and so their future is “desolate.” Yet one thing is certain: he will return as the royal Messiah.

I. (:37a) LAMENT OVER JERUSALEM’S PERSECUTION OF GOD’S PROPHETS

“O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, who kills the prophets and stones those who are sent to her!”

R. T. France: The almost wistful note of this lament over Jerusalem provides an important counterbalance to the sharpness of the preceding polemic. As Jesus contemplates what lies ahead of the people he came to save, it gives him no pleasure. He had “wanted” to gather them, not to condemn them.

Donald Hagner: Jerusalem had become heir to a tragic tradition wherein God’s messengers were persecuted and killed (cf. the ironical remark in Luke 13:33). This was true of the past, and it was to be true of the future.

David Thompson: The Greek simply repeats Jerusalem twice (Ἰερουσαλημ Ἰερουσαλημ). When this construction is used in Scripture, it is often an expression of deep sympathy. For example, David repeated Absalom’s name three times when he was grief-stricken over his death (II Sam. 18:33). Now carefully notice a very important point about God: just because Christ’s emotions are grieved by what could have been, His emotions did not prevent His judgment.

II. (:37b) LAMENT OVER JERUSALEM’S REJECTION OF LOVING PROTECTION FROM HER PROMISED MESSIAH

A. Desire of the Loving Messiah

“How often I wanted to gather your children together, the way a hen gathers her chicks under her wings,”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Even in the first century, the image of the mother hen protecting her chicks carried the same connotation as it does today. This was the kind of affection Jesus has always had for his wayward people, always wishing to gather them together in unified obedience, in covenant relationship with him, and in forgiving grace. No matter how deeply his people had sinned, the Lord wanted them back.

B. Rejection by the Rebellious Nation

“and you were unwilling.”

Grant Osborne: There is an interesting development from all the second singulars earlier in v. 37 to the second plural of “you were willing” (ἠθελήσατε), continued in vv. 38–39. As Carson says, “The effect is to move from the abstraction of the city to the concrete reality of people.” Jerusalem is made up of people who have joined her in rejecting God’s Messiah, and they personify the nation as a whole.

Matthew McCraw: However, we hear these sorrowful words concerning the people’s attitude towards Jesus’ compassion: “but you were not willing!” Unlike those baby chicks that run to their mother for protection and sustainment, the people would not come to Jesus. They rejected Jesus’ love. They rejected Jesus’ protection. They rejected Jesus’ Messiahship.

III. (:38) LAMENT OVER THE TEMPLE’S IMMINENT DESTRUCTION

“Behold, your house is being left to you desolate!”

Jeffrey Crabtree: ἰδοῦ, “look,” here introduces an emphatic statement of judgment.

Richard Gardner: The judgment to befall the temple is characterized by the twin tragedies of God’s withdrawal from the sanctuary (that is the loss of God’s protective presence) and the desolation that will come at the hands of Israel’s enemies (cf. 1 Kings 9:7-8; Jer. 12:7; 22:5; Tob. 14:4).

Grant Osborne: It is debated whether “your house” is Israel as a whole (Hill), Jerusalem (McNeile, Manson, Senior), or the temple (France, Luz, Nolland; Davies and Allison say the latter two), but it is best to see not an either-or but all three as intended (Carson, Hagner).

The idea of being left “desolate” (ἔρημος) pictures the absolute destruction of AD 70. The noun (and verb) are also used in Rev 17:16; 18:17, 19 to depict the “ruination” of the great prostitute and Babylon the Great; in Rev 18:2, 21–23 it is described as a virtual desert, a ghost town. Such is the picture of Jerusalem (and the temple) here, soon to become a wasteland, virtually uninhabitable (for OT background, see 2 Kgs 21:14; Jer 12:7; 22:5). This connotes both abandonment by God (Ezek 8:6, 11:23) and destruction.

R. T. France: Jerusalem’s failure to respond is to have drastic consequences. “Your house,” especially when spoken in the temple courtyard, naturally refers to the temple building⁶ which would be visible from there, and the more explicit prediction of 24:2 confirms this reference. In that case there is a sad irony in that what was described in 21:13 as God’s house is now “your house,” and it has been left “to you,” because God has abandoned it, as Jesus himself is about to do in 24:1; see comments there on the echo of Ezekiel’s vision of God leaving the temple. There is a special poignancy in the juxtaposition of “house” (a place meant to be lived in) and erēmos, “uninhabited,” which describes not so much its physical dissolution as its being deserted; its consequent destruction will merely complete the process. The desolation of God’s house was predicted in similar terms by Jeremiah (Jer 12:7; cf. 26:6), and erēmos here perhaps echoes the LXX erēmōsis in Jer 22:59 (cf. 24:15 with its echo of similar erēmōsis language from Daniel). See the comments on 16:14 for Jesus’ echoing of Jeremiah’s prophecies of disaster on Jerusalem. For the theological background to this theme see 1Kgs 9:6–9: when God’s people forsake God’s way, the “house” will be “cast out of my sight” and ruined.

Jeffrey Crabtree: Jerusalem's rejection of Jesus meant judgment. The temple (24:15) and the city proper ("your house") would fall (Lk. 21:20-24). Instead of life and prosperity there would be physical desolation and ruin (v. 38). The destruction of the city in A.D. 70 fulfilled this prophetic warning (Osborne 862). Jesus gave this warning during Passover week when Jerusalem was literally overflowing with people. It would have been hard to imagine that Jesus' words would be fulfilled, especially so soon.

IV. (:39) LAMENT OVER JERUSALEM'S SEPARATION FROM HER MESSIAH UNTIL THE SECOND COMING

"For I say to you, from now on you shall not see Me until you say, 'Blessed is He who comes in the name of the Lord!'"

David Turner: a bittersweet promise that the abandonment will cease only when Jerusalem genuinely understands Ps. 118:26, the text shouted by the crowd at the triumphal entry (Matt. 23:39; cf. 21:9).

Michael Wilkins: The Christological implications of Jesus' quotation of Psalm 118:26 are profound. The same words were cited in 21:9 at Jesus' entrance to Jerusalem, shouted by those identifying him as the messianic Son of David. Now as Jesus cites the same passage, he identifies himself with God, Israel's Savior, the Coming One, who will once again come to his people after a time of great judgment, when they will have no other choice but to acknowledge him as Lord, either in great joy or in great sorrow.

David Thompson: Christ's Judgmental Promise to the City

Things are dark for the nation Israel right now and it has been for a long, long time. However, there are bright, shining rays in the future for Israel. God is not through with Israel forever. There will come a day when the nation will see Jesus Christ again and she will be praising God for His appearance; in fact, they will be saying, "Blessed is He who comes in the name of the Lord." They will see the One they pierced (Zech. 12:10). Zechariah predicts the day they will see Him will be a time of great mourning, and that is so true. They will be in the Tribulation and the antichrist will be trying to exterminate every Jew and were it not for the grace of God, he would succeed. But in the darkest hour of Israel's night, Jesus will come and she will say, "Blessed is He who comes in the name of the Lord." Now it is important to see that not every Jew will be thrilled when Christ returns, but a remnant will. The Pharisees and scribes won't cry blessed is He who come; they will be burning in hell (Matt. 23:33).

Charles Swindoll: Yet even in spite of the just judgment of the people of Jerusalem, sent on account of their hardness of heart, Jesus never ceases to reach out His hands to gather them into His embrace. Matthew 23:39 looks forward to a day when the hearts of the Jewish people will be softened, and they will say, "Blessed is He who comes in the name of the LORD!" The apostle Paul echoed this same hope for the future restoration of Israel when he wrote, "A partial hardening has happened to Israel until the fullness of the Gentiles has come in; and so all Israel will be saved" (Rom. 11:25-26). This is certain because "the gifts and the calling of God are irrevocable" (Rom. 11:29).

D. A. Carson: So Jesus leaves the temple and goes away (24:1); and his words, which have dealt with judgment on Israel and with the consummation, evoke his disciples' two-pronged question (24:3) and lead to the Olivet Discourse (chs. 24-25).

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How can Jesus at the same time speak such harsh words of denunciation of the scribes and Pharisees while expressing His love and compassion and longing for their repentance?
- 2) How is the rejection, persecution and crucifixion of their Messiah the culmination of a pattern of persecuting and killing God's appointed messengers?
- 3) What is the significance of the abandonment and subsequent destruction of the temple in Jerusalem?
- 4) Does this passage support the view that God is finished dealing with Israel as a nation and has switched His focus permanently to the church?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

David Turner: This passage illustrates the mysterious relationship between divine sovereignty and human responsibility. Jesus wished (ἠθέλησα, ēthelēsa) to gather the people of Jerusalem, but they did not wish (οὐκ ἠθελήσατε, ouk ēthelēsate) to be gathered (cf. 22:3; Acts 7:51). Yet in Matt. 11:27 Jesus accomplishes his purpose in revealing the Father to whomever he wills (cf. 16:17). Despite the judgment announced in 23:38, the tension continues into the future according to the conditional prophecy in 23:39 (Allison 1983). Until the people of Jerusalem utter the words of Ps. 118:26 in faith, they will not see Jesus again. But when they do bless the one who comes in the name of the Lord, they will receive the eschatological blessings they have previously rejected.

William Barclay: This passage shows us four great truths.

- (1) It shows us the patience of God. Jerusalem had killed the prophets and stoned the messengers of God; yet God did not cast her off; and in the end he sent his Son. There is a limitless patience in the love of God which bears with human sinning and will not cast people off.
- (2) It shows us the appeal of Jesus. Jesus speaks out of love. He will not force his way in; the only weapon he can use is the appeal of love. He stands with outstretched hands of appeal, an appeal which men and women have the awful responsibility of being able to accept or to refuse.
- (3) It shows us the deliberate nature of human sin. Men and women looked on Christ in all the splendour of his appeal – and refused him. There is no handle on the outside of the door of the human heart; it must be opened from the inside; and sin is the open-eyed deliberate refusal of the appeal of God in Jesus Christ.
- (4) It shows us the consequences of rejecting Christ. Only forty years were to pass, and in AD 70 Jerusalem would be a heap of ruins. That disaster was the direct consequence of the rejection of Jesus Christ. If only the way of power politics had been abandoned in favour of the Christian way of love, Rome would never have descended on Jerusalem with its avenging might. As history has shown, rejection of God often brings with it disaster.

John MacArthur: Jesus' Last Words to Israel

For 2,000 years nearly, the nation Israel has had to live its life without God and without His protection, that's the difference. Why is it the way it is? Because God has removed His protecting hand. He has preserved them as a people. He has left them unprotected from all the holocausts that the world could bring to bear. Why? Because of what it says in verse 37. Jesus came and said, "I wanted to gather you. I wanted to protect you. I wanted to bring you under my wings and you would not." That's the issue right there. Why? Because they refused their Messiah. . .

Now, this passage closes the sermon of chapter 23. It is a sermon, its one sermon, this chapter, and it's the final sermon the Lord ever gave publicly, and it is a sermon against false spiritual leaders who have led the nation to this point of rejection. Who have led the nation in their sin. It doesn't mean that the people weren't as guilty - they were, for following - but nonetheless, the leaders led them there. And so the chapter is against those leaders. It is a furious diatribe against those leaders.

But it ends with this pathos. It ends with this grief. It ends with this lament because though God is going to judge that nation by removing protection and letting Satan go full blast at them - and may I suggest to you something very important here? You say, "God has His hand of protection off a lot of nations," that's probably right. You say, "Why is it worse with Israel?" Because Satan wants to exterminate Israel more than any other nation. Because they are the nation in the plan of God which Satan wants to thwart. Therefore, for God to remove His protection from Israel is to expose them to the worst furies that Satan could ever bring upon any nation.

Because he desires to eliminate them so that Christ can never inherit them and fulfill the promise of God to them, you see. So these false leaders have led the people in a rejection of their Messiah, and God has removed His blessing. But the heart of God is grieved as ours ought to be. We don't gloat over that. God says, "I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked." In Jeremiah chapter 13, God speaks through Jeremiah the prophet and calls for the people to glorify Him and to obey Him, and then says, "And if you don't, mine eye will run down with tears," you see. This does not make God happy, this grieves Him. . .

You have filled up the cup and now it's going to be poured out. And it started in 70 A.D. in that terrible destruction of Jerusalem, and it's still going on right now. Still going on right now. And you want to hear something else, folks? It will get worse. That's right. The persecution of Israel isn't over. The hand of God is off, and Satan's doing his thing. And you want to know something? There's a time described in the Bible as the tribulation, the great tribulation. It's also called the time of Jacob's - what? - trouble. We're going to learn more about it when we get into chapter 24, but that is going to be a holocaust like no other holocaust Israel has ever seen. The worst is yet to come. The cup is still being poured out. . .

Now, you ask the question, "Why has Israel suffered so long?" This is why. Because for so long they rejected God. For so long they killed His messengers. For so long they stoned those that were sent. Finally, they filled the cup up when they executed their own Messiah. And God says, that's it, you are desolate. I take my hand of blessing off, and all hell will break loose on you, culminating in the tribulation time when Revelation tells us the mouth of the pit is opened and the demons that for centuries have been bound are released to run rampant across the earth. .

You know what's going to happen? When they have - when the cup is empty and the wrath is fully poured out, God is going to turn the tables, and God is going to destroy the nations that come against Jerusalem. And on Jerusalem pour out the spirit of grace. And the scales are going to come off their eyes and they're going to look again at the One they pierced. Who's that? Christ. And they're going to mourn as for an only son. Is He an only son? Yes, because there was only one Messiah and they're going to say, "Oh, oh, oh, now we see. Now we understand why our history's been like this. Now we understand it all. We mourn for we have killed the only Son, the firstborn, the Messiah."

S. Lewis Johnson: Christ's Lament Over Jerusalem

The warnings to the scribes and the Pharisees and the disciples are over, and the woes are completed, and now the Son of God yearns over the ancient theocratic city with great intensity, and then he offers a solemn sentence of abandonment, "Behold your house is left unto you desolate." And concludes with the fact that Israel shall suffer discipline for an indeterminate period of time until they shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. . .

There is no vindictiveness in this prophecy of doom. And yet on the other hand, our Lord unflinchingly pronounces it. He doesn't hesitate to say, behold your temple is left unto you desolate, but at the same time there is no vindictive spirit about him. . .

So when we read here that how often would I, we are not to understand our Lord to be speaking here of the decretive will of God – that is inflexible, it is invariable, it is unchanging – and God's decretive will is always carried out. That's the error of our Arminian friends. They've failed to understand the difference between the decretive will of God and the human affection of our Lord Jesus. Or perhaps we could put it, the preceptive will of God – the things that please him but which may not necessarily be carried out according to his good pleasure.

You see, if the Arminians were really right, if their cannons and their rockets are to be really so powerful as to destroy the interpretation of the other company of people – I won't name'em – it would be essential for them to show that Jesus Christ, as God, as God, said, I would have gathered you but you prevented me. And further, it would be necessary for them to show that he said that to everybody, giving everybody the same grace and then to have the Scripture read, ye would not. This they have not done. This they cannot do—they shall never be able to do. It will be easier to nail a drop of water to a wall than for them to prove their point. So this text is all smoke.

And then it becomes a wonderful revelation of the love and affection of a great God who in the midst of his sovereign purposes loves and has genuine affection for even those who reject the gospel message. . .

And when the Lord Jesus says, "Behold your house is left unto you desolate," that's judgment. And that has come to pass. The temple in a short time, was desolated, but the passage does not close on judgment. "For I say unto you you shall not see me henceforth till ye shall say, blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." There is a time coming when Israel shall respond, when as a result of the sovereign work of the Holy Spirit in the heart of the nation, they shall be returned. He shall work in their hearts. They shall look upon him whom they have pierced by means of the spirit of grace and supplications that shall be poured out upon them, and they shall believe in this Lamb of God that they have crucified.

J. Ligon Duncan: Jesus' Prophetic Lament

Here is a picture of your God never to forget. The Lord Jesus stands in the temple precinct. He has, in no uncertain terms, just condemned the religious leaders of His people. The most highly respected religious leaders of the land, He has denounced as hypocrites, and with those denunciations still ringing in the ears of the crowd, He begins to openly express His heart, His broken heart, for the very people He has just condemned. His heart is breaking for those hypocrites and for the crowds around him who in a matter of hours will be crying, "Crucify Him, crucify Him." His heart is breaking for those whom He has labeled hypocrites and those who will soon put Him to death. . .

I. A warning against unbelief.

First of all I'd like you to look at verse 37. It's very interesting. When we see Jesus' word in verse 37, we see that God's people have rejected God's overtures of grace. It has not been that God has not been gracious to the people of Israel. He has been gracious. He has been faithful in sending them messengers to teach them the way of salvation, but they have rejected those messengers. And Jesus laments this . . .

But we note also that not only this clear testimony to Jesus' deity, we also note the very clear warning. Jesus is the one who sends the prophet, but it is very possible that many will reject their overtures of love, many who even profess to be part of the people of God. But it's very clear from this passage that those who are lost are lost through their own fault and their own choice. If a person is saved, it is wholly of God. If a person is lost, it is wholly of his own doing. Listen to what J.C. Ryle says: "Let us understand that the ruin of those who are lost is not because Christ was not willing to save them, nor yet because they wanted to be saved, but could not. But because they would not come to Christ."

This passage makes it very clear, Christ is far more willing to save than we are to be saved. Matthew Henry puts it this way: "It is wholly owing to the wicked wills of sinners that they are not gathered under the wings of the Lord Jesus. . .

II. A warning of judgment to come.

Then we look in verse 38, we not only see that the danger that many who profess the name of God and profess to be the Lord's people reject His love, but we also see that those who reject Him choose desolation. . .

III. Christ returns on clouds of glory.

Bethany Bible Church: "But You Were Not Willing"

1. WHAT THE KING LONGED TO DO FOR HIS PEOPLE.

Jesus wants to be everything to us that we need. And He can be!

As the Bible tells us, He offers to be:

- our Advocate to rely on as sinners before a holy God (1 John 2:1-2);
- our Armor to wear while in an evil world (Rom. 13:12-14);
- our Completeness to rest in for all the fullness of God (Col. 2:9-10);
- our Cornerstone to build on for assurance of salvation (1 Pet. 2:6);
- our Deliverer to turn to in order to be set free from sin (John 8:36);

our Door to go through as sheep in God's flock (John 10:9);
 our Example to follow as a pattern for serving others (John 13:15);
 our Food to eat for eternal nourishment of the soul (John 6:51);
 our Foundation to build on for a life that pleases God (1 Cor. 3:11);
 our Fountain to drink from for eternal satisfaction (John 4:13-14);
 our Head to be attached to as a member of the Body (Col. 1:18); our Hope to trust in for salvation before God (1 Tim. 1:1);
 our Horn to be defended by in preserving salvation (Luke 1:68-69); our Life to hope in for heavenly glory (Col. 3:1-4);
 our Light to look to in spiritual darkness (John 12:46);
 our Name to appeal to when asking anything of God (John 15:16);
 our Peace to rest in for reconciliation with God (Eph. 2:11-17);
 our Passover Lamb to feast on as the sacrifice for sin (1 Cor. 5:7-8);
 our Propitiation to trust for satisfaction of God's wrath (1 John 4:10); our Refreshment to rest in when weary and burdened (Matt. 11:28-30);
 our Resource to depend on for the supply of every need (Phil. 4:19);
 our Resurrection to hope in for life beyond the grave (John 11:25-26);
 our Righteousness to lay claim to for favor in God's sight (Jer. 23:6);
 our Strength to trust in for doing all things (Phil. 4:13);
 our Temple to worship God in throughout eternity (Rev. 21:22);
 our Treasure to lay hold of for all wisdom and knowledge (Col. 2:3); our Way to follow for eternal life with God (John 14:6); and our Vine to grow from for real, lasting fruitfulness (John 15:5).

2. WHY HE COULD NOT DO IT FOR THEM.

3. WHAT MUST HAPPEN TO THEM AS A RESULT.

He says, "See! Your house is left to you desolate; for I say to you, you shall see Me no more till you say, 'Blessed is He who comes in the name of the LORD!'" (vv. 38-39).

"House", as it's found here, may mean the temple. After all, the next thing we find in Matthew's Gospel is the disciples admiring the buildings of the temple—and Jesus then shocking them by telling them that "not one stone will be left here upon another, that shall not be thrown down" (Matthew 24:2). Others have said that it refers to the nation itself. In other places in this Gospel, Jesus refers to the people as "the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matthew 10:6; 15:24). Personally, I believe we're meant to understand that He is speaking of both the nation of people and the temple. The temple was the prized possession of the city of Jerusalem—and remove the temple, and the nation would lose its most distinguishing landmark.

And, in fact, that's exactly what happened. Some forty years later, the temple—and the city itself—were leveled by the Roman general Titus. The people of Israel lost their temple, their chief city, and their status as a nation. They didn't want the King; and so they lost the kingdom. And as Jesus said, "See! Your house is left to you desolate . . ."

Now; I hasten to add my conviction that their loss is not permanent. God has not revoked His promises to Israel (Romans 11:29). He still loves Israel, and it is still in His plan that "all Israel will be saved" (Romans 11:26). And I believe we can see a hint of this in Jesus' words. He quotes Psalm 118:26; saying, "I say to you, you shall see Me no more till you say, 'Blessed is He who comes in the name of the LORD!'" (v. 39).

There's a "till" in God's plan. The people of Jerusalem had already said these words about Jesus as He first rode into the city (Matthew 21:9); but because they were about to crucify Him, that wasn't the fulfillment of those words. It could only be a hint of their fulfillment, because they were about to reject Him and crucify Him. But there is still a great "till" that is told us in Zechariah 12:10; where God says,

"And I will pour on the house of David and on the inhabitants of Jerusalem the Spirit of grace and supplication; then they will look on Me whom they pierced. Yes, they will mourn for Him as one mourns for his only son, and grieve for Him as one grieves for a firstborn" (Zech. 12:10).

But in all of this, let's not miss the greater lesson of this passage. The people of Jerusalem suffered the loss of the good things that they could have received from their King—His protective care and love—because they would not receive it. I dare to say that this is why the Jewish people—the most remarkable people group on the face of the earth—has suffered more than any other people group in history. They didn't want to get under the protective wing of their King—and so, He removed His care and let them have what they wanted.

Bob Deffinbaugh: These words of Jesus in verses 37-39 speak of the destruction of Jerusalem, which will come upon that generation that rejected and crucified Him. History tells us that this judgment did come, just as Jesus said it would. If history has verified our Lord's authority and accuracy regarding that generation, it is only right that we acknowledge His authority and accuracy about the judgment which is still future, the judgment that will come upon all men who reject Him as the Messiah, and as God's only provision for eternal salvation. Do our Lord's words in Matthew 23 sound severe? They are, and they are true. His severe words should convey to us how serious the rejection of Jesus is. The rejection of Jesus by Israel's leaders, and by the people of Jerusalem, led to His crucifixion and to the destruction of Jerusalem. Rejecting Jesus as God's promised Messiah is a most serious matter. It leads to God's eternal judgment.

The good news of the gospel is that receiving Jesus as the Messiah leads to eternal blessings. Those who can say, "Blessed is He who comes in the name of the Lord" are those who will have their sins forgiven and who will spend eternity enjoying Him, and the blessings He provides. Let the severity of our Lord's words serve to indicate how serious the decision is to accept Jesus or to reject Him, as Messiah, as God's only provision for the forgiveness of sins and the gift of eternal life.

TEXT: Matthew 24:1-3

TITLE: QUESTIONS PROMPTING THE OLIVET DISCOURSE

BIG IDEA:

TEMPLE MAGNIFICENCE WOULD SOON BE REDUCED TO TEMPLE RUBBLE

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: Impending judgment has been the dominant theme since the symbolic actions of the cleansing of the temple and cursing of the fig tree in 21:12–22. This theme culminates in the Olivet Discourse (named for the place it was presented), or the Apocalyptic Discourse (named for the content), the fifth and final discourse of Jesus in Matthew. The reason for this judgment was presented in the woes and lament of the previous chapter. Now Jesus combines the imminent destruction of the temple and Jerusalem with the events of the eschaton. . .

Jesus has spent most of Passion Week in the temple, first cleansing it and then debating the leaders in it. Now he is about to cap the woes against the scribes and Pharisees by pronouncing imminent judgment on the temple. In 23:35–36 the people were guilty of “all the righteous blood” spilled, and in 23:38 her future was “desolate.” Now that desolation is spelled out. The prophecy of this section will dominate the next two chapters.

Charles Swindoll: The subject of biblical prophecy is like one magnet interacting with another. For many people, it pulls them in. For others, it drives them away. Those drawn to prophecy long to know about the future. They speculate about how current events might relate to their future and how their own lives may be affected by both. Those repelled by the subject of prophecy often fear the implications of coming judgment, find the biblical language and imagery confusing, or don’t believe the future has any practical application for their everyday lives.

Donald Hagner: It should be remembered, however, that much of the discourse refers to phenomena of the interim period preceding the parousia—if only to indicate that the sufferings of the present are not themselves the end nor even necessarily the harbingers of the end. . .

As far as the apostles were concerned, the ominous words of Jesus concerning the destruction of the temple could point in only one direction: to the experiencing of the eschatological judgment. This was a subject to which Jesus had often alluded in his teaching ministry and therefore something they may well have expected him to indicate. They were accordingly eager to know how soon this might occur and what sign they might anticipate to indicate its approach. Their concern was not one of idle curiosity, for mere information’s sake, but concern that they might be properly prepared for the time of judgment. From their perspective, the destruction of the temple must have meant the coming again of Jesus, not as he now was with them when his glory was veiled but as the clearly revealed Son of God for all to see. Jesus had now to instruct them more closely about these matters, about the future he had intimated in his dramatic oracle of judgment.

Stu Weber: Be prepared. The purpose of all Bible prophecy, such as that in Matthew 24, is to motivate us to live well today. It is not to satisfy our curiosity about the future. It is to intensify our purity in the present (see 1 John 3:3). Jesus was determined to prepare his disciples for their critical mission. And his word motivated them to live faithfully to gain future reward in the coming kingdom. In Matthew 24 he gave his followers a glimpse of the future. But he did not do it so they could get excited about future events. He did it so they would become thoroughly motivated to follow his commission in the present.

I. (:1-2) PROPHECY OF THE COMING DESTRUCTION OF THE TEMPLE

A. (:1) Enamored with Temple Magnificence

“And Jesus came out from the temple and was going away when His disciples came up to point out the temple buildings to Him.”

R. T. France: The traditional chapter division leads most commentators to treat these verses as the start of the long discourse which follows in 24:3 – 25:46, and it is true that they form the basis for the question which will launch that discourse in v. 3. But they are also in an important sense the climax to the whole section 21:23 – 23:39, which has depicted Jesus in the temple. Now, having entered the temple dramatically and controversially in 21:12–16, he leaves it with an equally emphatic and more far-reaching statement about its future. He is abandoning it, never to return, and after that it has no future except to be destroyed. What has been hitherto the earthly focus of the presence of God among his people is so no longer. There is a direct sequence from 23:38: the “house” which is now being left deserted (by God and by Jesus) is ripe for demolition, to make way for “something greater than the temple” (12:6); cf. Mark’s language, surprisingly not taken up by Matthew, of a temple not made by hands to replace the one made by hands (Mark 14:58).

John Walvoord: The temple had been under construction since 20 B.C., and, though not actually completed until A.D. 64, its main buildings apparently were largely finished. To the disciples, the temple seemed an impressive evidence of the solidarity of Israel’s religious life and of God’s blessing upon Jerusalem.

Grant Osborne: The disciples have not understood the meaning of the temple cleansing and cursing of the fig tree, nor of the woes and lament at the wickedness of the leaders and the city. They are still enamored with the wonder of the temple, which certainly deserved such exclamations on the face of it. The temple was indeed considered, even by the Romans, to be one of the most beautiful structures in the ancient world (Josephus, J.W. 6.267). The walls were made of huge stones, some up to forty feet long, and the top was adorned by pure white marble, with gold plates on the façade so numerous that people were almost blinded when the sun shone on it.

William Barclay: The summit of Mount Sion had been dug away to leave a plateau of 1,000 feet square. At the far end of it was the Temple itself (the naos, G3485) . It was built of white marble plated with gold, and it shone in the sun so that a man could scarcely bear to look at it. Between the lower city and the Temple mount lay the valley of the Tyropoeon, and across this valley stretched a colossal bridge. Its arches had a span of 41 1/2 feet, and its spring stones were 24 feet long by 6 inches thick. The Temple area was surrounded by great porches, Solomon's Porch and the Royal Porch. These porches were upheld by pillars, cut out of solid blocks of marble in one piece. They were 37 1/2 feet high, and of such a thickness that three men linked together could scarcely put their arms round them. At the corners of the Temple angle stones have been found which measure from 20 to 40 feet in length, and which weigh more than 100 tons. How they were ever cut and placed in position is one of the mysteries of ancient engineering. Little wonder that the Galilean fishermen looked and called Jesus' attention to them.

Henry Alford: From Mark we learn that it was Peter and James and John and Andrew who asked this question.

B. (:2) Enlightened Regarding Temple Destruction

“And He answered and said to them, ‘Do you not see all these things? Truly I say to you, not one stone here shall be left upon another, which will not be torn down.’”

Charles Swindoll: This unexpected response to their enthusiasm over the temple complex may have felt like a slap in the face, but it was a necessary correction to their fixation on the physical and their obsession with the opulent.

Leon Morris: The disciples were doubtless moved by admiration for the magnificent building, and they probably expected some expression of appreciation from Jesus. But (there is adversative force in the conjunction) they got nothing of the sort. Instead Jesus invited their attention to all these things and went on to prophesy solemnly the total destruction of the temple. He uses the emphatic “Truly I tell you,” goes on to employ the emphatic double negative, and supplies the detail that a stone will not be left upon a stone. Jesus is making clear that, while the temple was undoubtedly a wonderful building, the disciples should not be beguiled by its beauty. What matters is that God’s people should live godly lives. When they do not, disaster in some form is inevitable. For the Jews that was going to include the destruction of their beautiful place of worship.

G. Brooks: The Destruction of Jerusalem

- I. An illustration of the instability of all earthly grandeur.
- II. An instance of God’s punishment of sin in the present world.
- III. An example of the fulfilment of Scripture prophecy.
- IV. A proof of the abolition of the Mosaic economy.
- V. A cause of the dispersion of the Jews.

Stu Weber: In spite of the temple's outward beauty, Jesus was more concerned with the inward condition of God's people. Israel had broken its covenant with Yahweh, this time by rejecting the Messiah. Of little consequence was the time interval before his judgment broke through the dam of his forbearance. Judgment was certain to come. So Jesus did not see the beauty that should have been reflective of a submissive people and an accepting God. Rather, he saw horrible destruction wrought by the rebellious hearts he had been debating that week in the temple courts. In fact, the purpose of the Great Tribulation to come would be the purging of God's covenant people Israel in preparation for the Messiah-King's return to the throne of David.

Jeffrey Crabtree: This much is certain: the return of Christ and its accompanying judgment are at the ultimate point of this discourse. Among all the lessons these chapters teach, Barclay (2:367) rightly highlights two.

1. First, Jesus wins. There is no doubt that the one who rides the clouds is victor.
2. Second, this world is going somewhere. Life on earth is not an endless, meaningless continuum.

II. (:3) QUESTIONS REGARDING THE COMING MESSIANIC AGE

“And as He was sitting on the Mount of Olives, the disciples came to Him privately, saying,”

A. When?

“Tell us, when will these things be,”

Grant Osborne: The disciples clearly link the destruction of the temple with the arrival of the eschaton. Moreover, since Jesus in 23:36 said the judgment was to take place during “this generation,” the disciples assumed everything would happen soon. Their question is twofold, centering on the time (“when” [πότε]) of “these things,” namely, the whole complex of events the disciples associated with the OT “day of the LORD” and in their minds would be inaugurated by the destruction of the temple; and the “sign” (σημείον) they should look for to herald those events. Jesus will answer the first question negatively when he tells them, “you do not know on what day your Lord is going to come” (24:42) and “you do not know the day or the hour” (25:13). The time is not for them to know.

Thomas Constable: The disciples asked Jesus two questions. The first was, “When will these things be?” The second question had two parts as is clear from the Greek construction of the sentence. It linked two nouns, “coming” (Gr. parousias) and “end” (Gr. synteleias), with a single article, “the” (Gr. to), and the conjunction “and” (Gr. kai). The second question was, “What will be the sign of your coming and of the end of the age?” By asking the question this way we know that the disciples believed that Jesus’ coming (Matthew 23:39) would end the present age and introduce the messianic age. [Note: See Edersheim, The Life . . ., 2:434-45, for an explanation of the Jewish expectation connected with the advent of the Messiah.] The first question dealt with the time of the destruction of the temple. The second dealt with the sign that would signal Jesus’ coming and the end of the age.

B. What Will Be the Sign?

“and what will be the sign of Your coming, and of the end of the age?”

Grant Osborne: The second question is in fact addressed by Jesus. He will spend the first part of his address telling what are not the signs (vv. 4–14, 23–26), and then will elucidate what are, namely, the “abomination that causes desolation” of v. 15, the “great tribulation” of v. 21, and especially “the sign of the Son of Man” coming in v. 30. The coming and the eschaton are considered a single event by the disciples, as indicated by the article governing both. They have also connected both of these to the destruction of the temple.

Brian Bell: The signs are: Spiritual Deception. International Disruption. Physical Destruction. and, Religious Discrimination. Though these have always been with us, obviously they will accelerate.

Marvin Rosenthal: It may appear obvious, but signs are for seeing. That is, men are called upon to see, look at, behold signs. Signs are intended to be conspicuous, not hidden. . . Signs are also miraculous. . . Signs were to confirm, identify, or mark out someone as genuine, authentic, the “real McCoy.” Signs were posted to reveal truth and were authenticated by a miracle or wonder.

If God chose to authenticate truth with signs, it should not be surprising that Satan attempts to authenticate his lies with counterfeit signs or miracles (Matt. 24:24).

Signs relate primarily to the Jewish people (1 Cor. 1:22). . .

Signs are more directional in nature than chronological. They tell men which way rather than what time. When the disciples inquired of the Lord, “What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the age?” (Matt. 24:3), they were not so much asking when will the end occur, but how will men recognize it when it does? . . .

There was a sign to authenticate and substantiate when the Messiah appeared on earth – the virgin birth. There was a sign to authenticate and substantiate all that He did in life and death – His resurrection. Now the disciples inquired, “What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the age?” It was the one question, above all others, that cried out to be answered.

Van Parunak: Some people think that the second question is really two, but the disciples are asking for only one sign, not two. To see the identification of the two parts, we should understand that “world” is αἰών (Strong 165, = Hebrew עולם), and is chronological, not geographical. The Jews distinguished “the present world of toil (‘olam ha-zeh)” from “a Sabbatical millennium, ‘the world to come’ (‘olam ha-ba’...). The coming of the Messiah would be a distinctive feature of the future age. This distinction is reflected elsewhere in the NT:

Mat 12:32 And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him: but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come.

Eph 1:20 Which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, 21 Far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come:

The “world to come” is the day of the Lord, the Millennium, the Messianic age. So “thy coming” and “the end of the age,” in their minds, refer to the same point in time. They recognize that the degree of destruction the Lord has anticipated in v. 2 can only reflect the promised Day of the Lord, and want to know more about it.

Marvin Rosenthal: The phrase end of the world (Matt. 24:3) is more accurately translated end of the age and is speaking of the completion of this era in preparation for entrance into the next (the Millennium). The Day of the Lord [after the Great Tribulation, at the end of the 70th week of Daniel] will be the transition period from this age to the kingdom age.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What is the value of studying end time prophecy?
- 2) What was the reaction of the disciples upon learning that the temple was going to be left desolate?

3) What was the expectation of the disciples regarding the establishment of the Messianic age on earth?

4) Why were the disciples so eager to know the answers to these particular questions?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Grant Osborne: Another problem is the connection between the destruction of Jerusalem and the events at the parousia (e.g., the “great tribulation,” Rev 7:14). How do we explain the seeming discrepancy between the historical perspective and the apocalyptic expectation/imminence?

There are several suggested solutions:

1. Many classical dispensationalists assert that this passage is entirely future and 24:29–31 is not the rapture (before the tribulation) but the revelation (after it) as seen in the Jewish nature of the disciples; among critical scholars some also take it as entirely future (Schlatter, Zahn, Gnilka).
2. The parousia is not found here; instead the whole relates to the destruction of Jerusalem, with the shaking of the heavens symbolizing political disasters (Isa 13:10, 34:4) and with the parousia referring to Jesus coming to take his people back from exile (France, Wright, McKnight).
3. Jesus describes only the destruction in vv. 4–28, and the parousia is found in vv. 29–31 with the tribulation period in vv. 32–35 (Wenham, Gnilka, Carson).
4. This is apocalyptic language, in which the destruction of Jerusalem foreshadows the tribulation period in vv. 4–28, 32–35 (esp. vv. 8, 14, 15, 21–22, 27–28) and the parousia in vv. 29–31 (Hill, Ladd, Gundry, Turner, Davies and Allison, Wilkins).

In light of the nature of apocalyptic language, the centrality of Daniel in the discourse, and the use of similar motifs in 2 Thess 2 and the book of Revelation, the fourth view is the most probable (hinted at in the question of the disciples in v. 3).

David Turner: A crucial interpretive question concerns the relationship of the destruction of the temple in 70 CE to the ultimate eschatological judgment of God. There are three basic views, with shades of difference within each of them. The preterist (past) view holds that most or all of the predictions in the discourse were fulfilled in 70 CE, when the Romans quashed the Jewish revolt by besieging Jerusalem and destroying the temple (France 1985: 333–34; Kik 1948; R. Sproul 1998; Tasker 1961: 223–24). Partial preterists take 24:1–35 as describing the destruction of Jerusalem in 70 CE, and 24:36 – 25:46 as referring to the coming of Jesus. Full or comprehensive preterists attempt to explain the entire discourse as fulfilled in 70 CE. The opposite, futurist approach understands the discourse to speak primarily, if not solely, of events just before the second coming of Jesus to the earth (Barbieri in Walvoord and Zuck 1983: 76–77; Toussaint 1980: 266–72; Walvoord 1974: 179–82). In Walvoord’s view (1974:182), Christ does not answer the first part of the disciples’ question in 24:3, concerning the destruction of the temple. The preterist and futurist views are both reductionistic and cannot handle the complexities of the passage that stem from the disciples’ dual question about the destruction of Jerusalem and the end of the world. A valid approach to the passage must handle both of these matters.

The preterist-futurist view understands the discourse as addressing both the historical destruction of Jerusalem and the yet-future coming of Jesus. Some advocates of this view interpret certain portions of the discourse as concerning 70 CE and other portions as concerning the end times. Others interpret the events of 70 CE as an anticipatory fulfillment of events that are consummated at Christ's coming (Barnes 1868: 251; Blomberg 1992a: 352; Carson 1984: 495; Hagner 1995a: 685). This viewpoint accepts the concept of prophetic perspective or foreshortening, in which more than one event fits the typology of the prophetic prediction. At times this has been called generic, double, multiple, or near-and-far fulfillment (Blomberg 2002; Broadus 1886: 479–80; Hendriksen 1973:846–48; Ladd 1974: 310–11; D. Turner 1989).[2] The present commentary advocates this approach. Jesus answers both parts of the disciples' question. His prediction of the fall of the temple provides the reader with a picture that anticipates the eventual end of the world. (See W. Davies and Allison 1997: 328–33.)

John MacArthur: The Signs of Christ's Coming

They long also to see the coming of their Messiah because they know when Messiah comes He'll make things right. He'll throw over the oppressors. He'll settle the issues that need to be settled, and He'll establish again the kingdom in Israel and things will be the way that God promised they would be and should be. And so they're filled with eschatological anticipation. Eschatological comes from the word eschatos in Greek which means "the last thing," so it's the study of the last things, and the Jews were really into the last things. They had had enough of all the difficulty. They had experienced Assyrian oppression in the taking away of the ten tribes from the north. They had experienced the Babylonian captivity in the taking away of the southern kingdom, Judah. They had gone through the Persian rule and the Greek rule and now the Roman oppression, and they'd had enough of all of that. And in their spirits, as they articulated in John 8 to Jesus, they were never servant to any man. They were looking for the day when they would be free again and they would be ruled again by a righteous king and they would know the kingdom God had promised them with the flourishing of all of its benedictions and blessings promised in the Old Testament. . .

Let me see if I can't draw you to a source that'll outline this for you. This, to me, is a very fascinating point. A man by the name of Schurer wrote a book entitled The History of the Jewish People in the Time of Christ. This man, who has no particular eschatological view to champion, at least certainly not the view that we would hold, tells us what it was that the Jews believed in that time, and it's most fascinating, and he draws it out of their contemporary literature as to what they were writing. Let me give you the sequence. First of all, Schurer says the Jews believed that before the Messiah came, there would be a time of terrible tribulation so that before the Messiah arrives, there would be a time of birth pain. As a woman has birth pain immediately before life comes out of her womb, so before the kingdom of Messiah is established, the nation will suffer some tribulation, some pain. . .

The second thing that they had in their eschatology was that into this turmoil would come a forerunner and a herald announcing the immediate arrival of the Messiah and he would be like Elijah. As the Messiah is not David but like David, so the forerunner is not Elijah but like Elijah. As the king himself comes in the spirit, as it were, and the power of David, even to a greater extent so the forerunner comes in the spirit and power of Elijah to even a greater extent. And so they anticipated that one like Elijah would come. That's why they were so drawn initially to John the Baptist because he was so much like Elijah. And John the Baptist would have been that Elijah, fulfilling that prophecy, if they had received Jesus Christ and His kingdom. But because they rejected Him and the kingdom was postponed, therefore, there has to be another like Elijah coming prior to the second coming of the King. . .

The next thing they saw was the coming of Messiah. First a tribulation time, then a herald, and then the coming of Messiah Himself, the one who was the King. The great, divine figure who would come and end the present age and establish the age of glory, the kingdom, and vindicate God's people.

The next thing they saw in their eschatology, according to Schurer, is that the nations would ally themselves and gather to fight against the Messiah. Amazing. For example, in the Sibylline Oracles, again we read this Jewish teaching: "The kings of the nations shall throw themselves against this land, bringing retribution on themselves. They shall seek to ravage the shrine of the mighty God and of the noblest men whensoever they come to the land. In a ring round the city, the accursed king shall place each one his throne with his infidel people by him, and then with a mighty voice God shall speak unto all the undisciplined, empty-minded people and judgment shall come upon them from the mighty God and all shall perish at the hand of the eternal." . . .

Now, that takes us to the next thing that they taught in their eschatology, and that is that the result of that battle against the Messiah would be total destruction of all these nations. There would be a total devastation of the nations that oppose Messiah. . .

Then they believed the next event would be the renovation of Jerusalem. There would be a wholesale renovation of Jerusalem. This would be the purification of that city so that it would be the Jerusalem of the great Millennium, the Jerusalem of the great kingdom, and the Jerusalem of the great eternal glory of the king. In fact, in Enoch it says, the book of Enoch, "All the pillars were new and the ornaments larger than those of the first Jerusalem, as it were," it says. So they saw this renovating of the whole of Jerusalem.

The next event they saw was that the dispersed Jews who had been scattered all over the world would be collected back. They'd be re-gathered back into the city of Jerusalem. In fact, to this day, the Jewish daily prayer says this, in part: "Lift up a banner to gather our dispersed and assemble us from the four ends of the earth." That's part of the daily Jewish prayer. They look for the day when Messiah comes, defeats all these nations, renovates Jerusalem, and then re-gathers all the Jews from all over the world. . .

And then after that, they believe Palestine will become the center of the world. That was the Jewish belief. Palestine would become the center of everything. The whole world would be subject to it. All the nations would be subdued. And the nations would come to Jerusalem to worship the king. . .

So they're leaving the temple sort of scratching their heads about how it's going to become desolate. But their eschatology tells them it is. And there's going to be a temple described by Ezekiel in chapter 40 to 48, they're probably thinking about that. They just don't know how it can happen. . .

So they say: “When shall these things be? And what shall be the sign of Thy coming in the end of the age?” See, they connect these things with “Thy coming and the end of the age.” They don’t see any space. Destruction of Jerusalem is a part of the whole thing. So they’re just – this is the most excited they’ve been, I think, in the whole ministry of Christ. I mean how would you feel if you thought you were living in the eminency of the kingdom of Jesus Christ any time? And He was sitting there telling you that He was going to destroy the temple, leave the city desolate, and the next time you saw Him, He’d be in glory coming in the name of the Lord? Boy, they were excited. And so they pose the question and the question is: When and what? What’s the sign? I mean how do we know it’s going to happen? Give us the indicator. Something’s going to happen first, what is it? Darkness? A brilliant light? What is it? An angel? A trumpet? What is it? And when is it? And they were really excited and anxious. . .

So now you understand. We go into chapter 24 and what are they thinking? Right now is the kingdom, right now is the second coming, right now is the judgment, right now is the establishing of the eternal kingdom of the glory of Messiah, right now it’s going to happen. The whole point of this sermon is to tell them this: “Guys, it’s not right now.” The whole point. Now you understand Matthew 24 and 25. “It’s not right now. You’re wrong.” That is the purpose.

Now look back at verse 3, just a couple of things to draw it together. I want to draw to your attention the word “coming.” What are they asking when they say, “What should be the sign of their coming?” You say, “Well, they’re talking about the second coming.” No, they’re not. You see, they didn’t even believe in a second coming as such. They didn’t see any distinction. They didn’t see any first coming, then long period, second coming. They saw – boom! – it all happens. Why? Because that’s the way the Old Testament outlined it. I mean that’s the way it happened by the Old Testament prophet view. The Old Testament prophet looked ahead and compressed all the time factors and just saw Messiah coming, setting up His kingdom, and all that. Didn’t see the big gap. As I said, that’s why it’s called a mystery.

So they see it all at once. So they’re not talking here about a second coming. What are they talking about? Well, you look at the word “coming,” it’s the word parousia. Comes from two Greek words, para and the verb “to be.” Means to be around – to be around, to be present. The best way to translate it might be, “And what shall be the sign of Thy full presence, of Thy being here?” It isn’t so much the idea that it conveys coming as much it conveys a permanent presence. The word “parousia” is used four times in this chapter, verse 3, verse 27, 37, and 39, and then, having been used by Jesus, it becomes a key word used by the New Testament writers. It’s used by James, it’s used by Peter, and it’s used by John. It becomes a technical term for the arrival of Jesus Christ to establish His kingdom, His second coming, His coming in glory. But they’re simply saying, “When are You going to arrive in full presence? When are You going to be here in Your full Messianic revelation? When are You going to be here to be all that we anticipate You’re going to be? Your coming?” In other words, the point being it isn’t that He has to go away and come back because the issue of the word isn’t the actual coming, it’s the presence. So they’re saying, “When are You going to enter into the fullness of Your Messianic presence?” That’s the idea. . .

The Lord’s answer begins in verse 4. Okay? Now, listen very carefully. The Lord’s answer begins in verse 4, and from verse 4 on, listen carefully – He is answering their question. And their question has to do with the full coming of Christ and the end of man’s age, and that is the question He answers. He says nothing about the destruction of Jerusalem from now on. That was outside the Olivet Discourse in verse 2 before the question was even asked. That judgment on Jerusalem was for that period of history, for that time and that unregenerate, ungodly, Christ-rejecting people. And it's only a small example of the kind of judgment that God is going to bring in the end of the age when the Messiah comes in full glory and full presence.

And so what He's saying to them is, "Look, what you have seen is not the end of the age. What you have seen is not preliminary to the full coming of the Messiah in glory. Let Me show you what is the indication of His full coming. Let Me show you what are the signs of His second coming. Let Me show you what does indicate the end of the age." And that is the theme of the sermon in the Olivet Discourse. Takes them from where they are to what will be the character of the time when the Lord comes. And so He lifts them from their historical moment into the far future, a future which we have yet not entered into, and describes all the events surrounding the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Al Mohler: After a day of controversial confrontations with the religious elite, Jesus and his disciples depart from the temple in Jerusalem (21:23 – 23:39). On the road to Bethany, the neighboring town where they are staying (cf. 21:17), they pause at the Mount of Olives, which gives a spectacular view of the temple behind them. When the disciples call Jesus' attention to the magnificence of the temple buildings, he prophesies the temple's destruction (cf. Mk 13:1-2). This prophecy is fulfilled in AD 70 when the Roman army sacked Jerusalem and the temple.

Baffled, the disciples privately ask Jesus for clarification. They ask when the destruction will occur, and they ask for a sign to recognize the event of his coming and the end of the age. In reply, Jesus launches into a final discourse (chs. 24-25; see also chs. 5-7; 10; 13; 18) that warns his disciples of the crisis coming in the near and distant future. This discourse is often called the Olivet discourse because it was delivered while Jesus was sitting on the mount of Olives. It is a prophetic discourse meant to prepare his disciples both for the catastrophic events of judgment that will befall Israel with the temple's destruction and for the interval before Jesus' glorious return.

S. Lewis Johnson: Advent Questions

Now they asked him about the future, and the striking thing is that our Lord did not rebuke them. He did not say, now I don't want you to be occupied with prophecy. I want you to be occupied with spiritual life-truth, because if you study prophecy you'll be led astray into bizarre views. Or, on the other hand, you will find it a very daunting subject, and you cannot understand prophecy. He didn't say that. He didn't rebuke them. He didn't chide them because they had the desire to peer in the future. In fact, he actually acceded to their desires by giving them the longest answer to any question that he ever gave, according to the New Testament. Two long chapters are given in answer to their questions, tell us when shall these things be and what is the sign of thy coming and of the end of the age. In fact, I would think, that looking at Matthew chapter 24 and 25 is complete justification for engaging intensively in the study of the prophetic word. . . evidently in their minds they had thought that there must be a connection between the destruction of the temple of Jerusalem and the end of the age, because they remembered that when Solomon's temple was destroyed that was the sign for the great and lengthy captivity.

Great things happened in the program of God when Solomon's temple was destroyed. If this temple is going to be destroyed they couldn't help but associate with it great events in world history, and in the light of what he had said, they associated the end of the present age with it. So they asked him, when shall these things be and what is the sign of thy coming and of the end of the age? . . .

the destruction of Jerusalem is also a typical event, just like the prophecies of the Old Testament in which the local merges into the distant future. So in our Lord’s prophetic discourse – incidentally he was prophesying out of the old covenant period of time; the cross had not taken place yet – so the local event merges into the future, final destruction of the city of Jerusalem and the temple, just preceding the second advent, the consummation of the age. . .

Van Parunak: Olivet Discourse – Contributions from the Synoptic Gospels

Period	Mt 24,25	Mk 13	Lk 21	Description
1. Beginning of Sorrows (Mt 24:8)	24:3-13	5-13	8-19	The NT period, before the fall of Jerusalem. Corresponds to the first four seals of Rev 6.
2. Days of Vengeance (Lk 21:22)	(Lacking)		20-24a	Desolation of Jerusalem under Titus, AD 70.
3. Times of the Gentiles (Lk 21:24)	24:14	10	24b	Jerusalem is subdued by the Gentiles (Luke) and the gospel goes forth throughout all the world (Matthew).
4. Great Tribulation (Mt 24:21)	24:15-28	14-23	(Lacking)	"The abomination of desolation" (Dan 9:27), at the middle of Daniel's seventieth week.
5. Appearing of Son of Man (Mt 24:30)	24:29-31	24-27	25-28	Cosmic signs, return of Christ in glory, gathering of his saints
(6. Interlude)	24:32-25:30	28-37	29-36	Parables about, and exhortations to, watchfulness
7. Separation	25:31-46	(Lacking)		Final Judgment

Table 4: Synopsis of the Olivet Discourse

F. Godet: The destruction of Jerusalem was not merely a prelude to the day of judgment, nor merely a type of it, as is commonly supposed, but it was a part of it. The day of judgment, which is to come upon the whole world, began with the destruction of Jerusalem; and God having struck one blow in one place, is now waiting, with sword still uplifted, to strike again and finish His work. The corresponding account in Luke tells us that God is waiting “until the times of the Gentiles be come in.” The Jew was first in grace; he is likewise first in judgment. But the turn of the Gentiles is coming on. Judgment has begun at the House of God, but it stays not there. The awful drama of the end of the world has two acts, and the time in which we are living is due to a suspension of the judgment already begun.

Stanley Saunders: Like many present-day “apocalyptists,” the disciples may imagine that there are signs and fixed dates for the end of the age. They may also presume direct connections between the destruction of the temple, the coming of the Son of Man, and the “end of the age.” Their questions suggest that they want to be apocalyptic insider traders. Jesus responds in the language and imagery of Israel’s prophetic and apocalyptic traditions, but in ways that subvert the disciples’ expectations. He tells the disciples that

- (1) they will observe many traditional apocalyptic signs and events, most of which are not, in fact, signs of the end (24:6–8, 9–12, 15–21, 29–30);

- (2) they will encounter periods of internal conflict (24:9–12) and intense suffering (24:15–21), which also may not signal the end;
- (3) these crises will give rise to “false prophets” and messianic pretenders, who prey on the burdened and vulnerable (24:4–5; 11:23–26);
- (4) awareness of the true nature of events and of the promised presence of the Son of Humanity enables the elect to endure to the end (e.g., 24:6–8, 13);
- (5) the end is not fixed, but will follow the proclamation of the gospel to the whole world (24:14; cf. 28:18–20);
- (6) Jesus himself does not know the day or hour of the end—only God knows (24:36); and so,
- (7) as they suffer for his name, the disciples must stay awake, ready at all times for the coming of the Son of Man, whose revelation generates both dread and hope (24:42–51, esp. 24:44).

Donald Hagner: Several possibilities lie open to the interpreter. A strictly futurist interpretation denies any reference here to events of the first century, including the fall of Jerusalem (e.g., Schlatter, Schniewind, Zahn, Gnilka, Agbanou, Dupont, Harrington). Dispensationalism also takes this view, asserting that everything in the passage lies yet in the future even for us (cf. Walvoord; for a refutation, see Carson, 494–95). Diametrically opposed is the preterist view, which regards the material up to v. 35 as referring exclusively to the fall of Jerusalem (thus, e.g., Kik, Tasker, France, S. Brown, Garland). There are mediating views that find reference here both to the fall of Jerusalem and to the parousia of the Son of Man. As described in Turner’s useful discussion, the “traditional preterist-futurist” view regards vv 4–14 as referring to the present age, vv 15–28 to the fall of Jerusalem, involving a double reference also to the end of the age, vv 29–31 to the parousia, and vv 32–41 to the certainty of the fulfillment of prophecy. With a variety of mutations (but with rejection by many of the idea of double reference), the preterist-futurist view is widely held (e.g., Barclay, Lambrecht, Gundry, Beasley-Murray, Carson, Blomberg).

Stu Weber: The best solution should probably begin with the assumption that Jesus was looking ahead toward several acts of judgment, spread throughout history, and foretelling them as a conflated, composite unit. Some details of Jesus' prophecy have been and will be fulfilled at more than one point in history. This is not without precedent in biblical prophecy. For example, Daniel's prophecy of the “abomination of desolation” was fulfilled at more than one point in past and future history. . .

Jesus' central purpose in the discourse. The disciples wanted to go straight into the privileged life in the eschatological kingdom, skipping the intervening hardship. But this was not to be—and the challenge remains for us also. We are to steward our time wisely and our opportunities for kingdom advancement wisely, investing ourselves in “risky” (faith-filled) obedience, as did the first two servants in 25:19-23.

TEXT: Matthew 24:4-14

TITLE: SIGNS OF CHRIST'S COMING AND THE END OF THE AGE

BIG IDEA:
JUDGMENT ON THE JERUSALEM TEMPLE DOESN'T SIGNAL THE END OF THE AGE

INTRODUCTION:

John MacArthur: Now, you understand that the whole of the Olivet Discourse is future. Now, that is not to say that some of the things that will happen then don't happen now, but they'll happen then at a scale and on a level and on proportions that are far beyond anything we've ever known now. We have war now, we have earthquake now, we have famine now, we have trouble in our world now, we have killing now, we have persecution now, we have hatred now, we even have some things happening in the sky that disturb us now, but nothing compared to the incredible display that's going to take place in that compressed, brief period of time called the birth pains of the kingdom when God sends the earth into wracked pain as it brings forth the King in His kingdom.

Richard Gardner: Stressed repeatedly in this material is the conviction that such happenings, painful as they may be, are part of a larger plan or design by which God will fulfill the divine purpose for history. It is in this sense that these events, sometimes called the messianic woes, must take place (cf. Dan. 2:28; Rev. 1:1; Matt. 18:7).

John Walvoord: Taken as a whole, the opening section, ending with Matthew 24:14, itemizes general signs, events, and situations which mark the progress of the age, and, with growing intensity, indicate that the end of the age is approaching. These signs, however, by their very characteristics and because they have occurred throughout the present age, do not constitute a direct answer to the question of "the sign" of the coming of the Lord..

R.V.G. Tasker: It would seem that the disciples, by placing these two questions in juxtaposition, associated very closely in their minds the impending fall of Jerusalem and the coming of Jesus which would mark the end of the present age. In one sense they were right to do so, for in the fall of Jerusalem judgment would be passed upon the old Israel, so that it would no longer be exclusively the people of God; and at the Parousia the Son of man would "come again" to "judge both the quick and the dead". But Jesus seems anxious that the disciples should not suppose that these two "judgments" would of necessity follow in immediate chronological sequence. Accordingly, in the teaching recorded in verses 5-14 He warns them not to be misled by the deceptive utterances of false Messiahs who would appear from time to time, and not to imagine that events which might seem to be cataclysmic in character, such as wars between nations, earthquakes, and widespread famines, were infallible signs that the end was near. Such happenings would in fact constitute the prolonged birth-pangs of the new age. The end would only come, as He states explicitly in verse 14, after world-wide evangelism; and that evangelism would be continually hampered by persecutions, martyrdoms, the hatred of the world for those who professed the name of Jesus, loss of faith, the treachery of friends and the failure of love to endure in the face of widespread lawlessness – conditions which would call for the supreme quality of steadfastness (9-13).

I. (:4-8) FALSE INDICATORS OF THE END OF THE AGE

A. (:4-5) Deceptive False Messiahs

“And Jesus answered and said to them, ‘See to it that no one misleads you. 5 For many will come in My name, saying, ‘I am the Christ,’ and will mislead many.’”

Leon Morris: This will surely be a reference to the last days, for there is little evidence that any of the turbulent men so active preceding the fall of Jerusalem ever claimed to be the Messiah. Some claimed to be prophets, but that is not the same thing.

Warren Wiersbe: The Jews have often been led astray by false prophets and false christs. The rider on the white horse in Revelation 6:1-2 is the Antichrist, that final world dictator who will lead the nations astray. He will begin his career as a peacemaker, signing a covenant with Israel to protect her from her enemies (Dan. 9:27). Israel will welcome this man as their great benefactor (John 5:43).

Grant Osborne: Jesus calls out for unceasing vigilance (present tense “watch out” [βλέπετε], used at key points of Mark’s discourse [Mark 13:5, 9, 23, 33] to call for spiritual watchfulness) in light of the great deception to come. “Deceive” (πλανάω) is used often in this discourse (24:4, 5, 11, 24) to signify false teachers who lead others astray into apostasy.

John MacArthur: Second Thessalonians 2: “And now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ and by our gathering together unto Him that you be not soon shaken in mind or be troubled neither by spirit nor by word nor by letter as from us as that the day of the Lord is present.” Somebody was telling the Thessalonians that the day of the Lord had already started, that they were already in it. And he says, “Don’t believe it. Don’t you get disturbed by anybody, not a letter or anything, not anybody, not a spirit, not anybody. Don’t let anybody make you think we’ve entered the day of the Lord.” Why? Verse 3: “Let no one deceive you by any means for that day can’t come except there come a falling away first and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition.” And Paul is in line with Daniel. And Paul is in line with Jesus. And Paul is in line with Revelation and saying the very same thing. Before the coming of the Lord, there will be the revealing of this man of sin, the son of perdition, the willful king, the king with fierce face, the beast who deceives the world. He opposes and exalts himself above all that is called God or that is worshiped so that he, as God, sits in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God.

And it says, verse 8: “Then shall that wicked one be revealed.” Verse 9: “Even him whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders and with all deceivableness in unrighteousness in them that perish.” He comes and deceives the whole world.

You see, the Bible is tremendously consistent. The whole thing, that second half of the Tribulation, the last three and a half years, begins with the ascendency of the false Messiah. Prior to him, there will be a whole lot of them. And even perhaps during his reign, a whole lot of them, fighting against him unsuccessfully. So the first sign of the end of man’s age is deception. Deception that is so effective, it literally ultimately results in the deception of the whole wide world. And it’s no wonder that the Lord says, “You better beware.”

David Thompson: This coincides with the first seal judgment in Revelation 6:2a. There will be many who will actually claim they are coming in the name of Christ and actually claim they are Christ. There will be a major masquerading of people during the Tribulation claiming to be Jesus. There will be religious confusion.

[Note: Explanation of the Pre-Wrath Rapture position -- Many commentators use the designation "Tribulation period" to refer to the entire 70th week of Daniel. This can be confusing since believers experience tribulation on a constant basis ... just varying in degree and intensity in the end times. The specific period designated at the "Great Tribulation" starts in the middle of the 70th week and the time is cut off for the sake of the elect. The Rapture than occurs to deliver believers followed immediately by the judgments of the Day of the Lord that finish off the 70th week.]

B. (:6-7) Destructive Wars and Natural Catastrophes

1. (:6-7a) Wars and Rumors of Wars

“And you will be hearing of wars and rumors of wars; see that you are not frightened, for those things must take place, but that is not yet the end.

7 "For nation will rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom,”

Charles Swindoll: We see the ultimate expression of this in Revelation 13, where the beast from the sea exercises unchecked military power, waging war against the saints and subduing “every tribe and people and tongue and nation” under his authority (Rev. 13:3-7). Similar to how the birth pangs of a pregnant woman intensify as labor progresses and delivery approaches, warfare will increase throughout the world as the end nears, culminating in full-on global conflict.

John MacArthur: Now, you say, “Well, we’ve always had this.” You’re right. We have always had it. Oh, we’ve had time periods of brief peace in the world, and most nations themselves have had times of war and times of peace. And we’re not denying that that will be true throughout all of man’s day. There will be times of war and there will be nations fighting nations and kingdoms fighting kingdoms. But still, what our Lord is saying here is that in the end, the beginning of sorrows that bring the kingdom, there will be worldwide warfare on a scale unknown prior to that time. In massive proportions, there will be an intensification of war across the earth. And the wars will be national, nation against nation, kingdom against kingdom. There will be great groups of people, cultures against cultures. . .

The point that I want you to see is that Daniel looks to the end, and talk about a world war – he sees a world war that’s mind-boggling, where you have the whole force of Western power in Europe and perhaps even some way the United States could be linked into that, though there is nothing in Scripture to say that. You have the great force of the Russian confederacy, you have the great amalgamation of all that is in Africa, which today is agitated to the point of boiling over. And then you have the Orient, Red China and all of that, and all converging in Israel for a holocaust of war at the end time. And so, says Daniel, we anticipate this kind of battle.

Look at Zechariah chapter 14, and the prophet Zechariah sees the same thing. As Zechariah looks to the end time, in verse 1 he says, “Behold, the day of the Lord cometh and thy spoils shall be divided in the midst of thee” – listen to this – “for I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle.” The whole world is going to converge on Jerusalem in a final, incredible battle. “The city is taken, the houses are rifled, and the women are ravished. Half the city goes forth into captivity, the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city. And then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations as when he fought in the day of battle.” And that’s exactly the way Daniel ended his prophecy, that he will come to his end and he’ll not be able to find anyone to help him then. So there’s going to be a worldwide war, again converging on Jerusalem, and Zechariah points it out in the same, exact way. So this is a very consistent picture from the prophets as well as from our Lord Himself.

At the end of the prophet Haggai, verse 22 of chapter 2, “I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the nations, I will overthrow the chariots and those who ride in them and the horses and their riders shall come down, everyone by the sword of his brother. ‘In that day,’ saith the Lord of hosts, ‘will I take thee, O Zerubbabel my servant, the son of Shealtiel,’ says the Lord, ‘and make thee as a signet; for I have chosen thee,’ says the Lord of hosts.” It’s as if Zerubbabel is seen in his descendant – in that final time when God sends His own army to destroy the armies of the world and then sets up that one who comes out of the loins of David, out of the loins of Zerubbabel, to be the King, none other than Messiah. . .

So you can see that the Revelation, as well as the prophets of the Old Testament, support the words of our Lord that that will be a time of war and rumors of wars and nations rising against nation.

David Thompson: This coincides with the second seal judgment in Revelation 6:3-4. Just before Christ returns there will be worldwide unrest and lack of peace and war. Now verse 6 seems to suggest that wars will initially be civil wars and verse 7 means wars will be national. In other words, there will be war talk locally, nationally and internationally. During the Tribulation [the 70th week of Daniel], no one will be immune to threat of war no matter where one lives.

2. (:7b) Famines and Earthquakes

“and in various places there will be famines and earthquakes.”

Charles Swindoll: The third sign of the end involves the proliferation of famines, earthquakes, and other natural disasters (Matt. 24:7-8). Geological disturbances will coincide with spiritual deception and political turmoil, adding further panic and widespread desperation. Starvation and the spread of diseases will add to the misery. We can imagine that the disasters will include the decimation of crops and livestock, the drying up of streams, wells, and reservoirs, and the destruction of natural and man-made infrastructures necessary for delivering vital resources, like food, water, and electricity. Supply lines will be disrupted, and lives will be lost. Today, on a limited scale, we can already observe the effects of natural disasters on cities and nations. These things are merely a foreshadowing of the intensification of catastrophes associated with the Tribulation period [the 70th week of Daniel].

David Thompson: This coincides with the third seal judgment in Rev. 6:5-6. Famines and earthquakes will cause major worldwide social, geographical, financial, physical and medical chaos and crises. It will be these first three signs that will lead to many people dying (seal judgment four–Rev. 6:7-8). In fact, one-quarter of the world’s population will die through these first three signs. Predator animals will attack and kill and eat people for food. Now having listed three terrible signs, Jesus makes a startling statement in verse 8–this is just the beginning of trouble. The beginning of birth pangs is not the worst pain.

C. (:8) Described as the Beginning of Birth Pangs

“But all these things are merely the beginning of birth pangs.”

Warren Wiersbe: The image of a woman in travail is a picture of the tribulation period (Isa. 13:6-11; 1 Thess. 5:5).

Grant Osborne: The image of labor pains at birth was a common metaphor for calamities like death (cf. 2 Sam 22:6; Ps 18:4) or national crises (Isa 13:8; Jer 6:24), and it was a natural image for eschatological cataclysm (Isa 26:17–18; 1 En. 62:4). It normally referred to the messianic woes that would usher in the final events of history, but here it is the “beginning” of that period Jesus is referring to. His point is the same as v. 6—wars, famines, and earthquakes do herald the start of the last days, but they do not constitute the eschaton itself, nor do they signify that it is near.

Leon Morris: Jesus places the happenings of which he has been speaking in their proper place in the scheme of the last things. All these things is comprehensive; the totality of the tumults and troubles does not mean simply an especially disastrous period in the history of the race. It means the beginning of the process that will usher in the final state of affairs; it is the beginning of birth pangs (REB brings out the meaning with a little addition, “first birth-pangs of the new age”). Among the Jews there was a widespread expectation that before the Messiah came to set up the kingdom of God in a form that would last forever there would be trouble on the largest possible scale. The powers of evil will not give up without a struggle, and thus there will be disaster after disaster. Jesus is pointing to this period which was so widely expected and speaking of it in traditional language.

II. (:9-14a) FUTURE EVENTS SIGNALING THE END OF THE AGE

A. (:9-10) Great Treachery

1. (:9) Severe Persecution

“Then they will deliver you to tribulation, and will kill you, and you will be hated by all nations on account of My name.”

Charles Swindoll: The fourth sign of the end is that believers will experience severe persecution from those who hate Christ (24:9). Those who will come to faith in Christ after the rapture of the church—often referred to as “Tribulation saints”—will become the targets of persecution and execution. Because those believers will identify themselves with Jesus Christ at a time when the rest of the world worships the Antichrist, the seething hatred of the unsaved will rise up against them. Many will be hunted down, arrested, tried, and killed. Martyrdom will greatly increase, but those believers will be heirs to an eternal reward. The book of Revelation describes a great multitude of believers “from every nation and all tribes and peoples and tongues” who will “come out of the great tribulation” (Rev. 7:9-17). These are people who will have suffered martyrdom at the hands of the Antichrist and his wicked empire (Rev. 6:9-11; 13:7-10).

David Thompson: This coincides with seal judgment number five (Rev. 6:9-11). I want you to notice that before Christ comes Israel will be hated by all nations. They will be hated, hounded and killed because of Jesus Christ. During the Tribulation, this will be true for any who believe on Christ, but specifically this will be true for Israel.

2. (:10) Surprising Betrayal
“And at that time many will fall away and will deliver up one another and hate one another.”

Marvin Rosenthal: During the first three and one-half years, false Christs and false prophets will emerge; they will do false signs and wonders to seemingly authenticate their false message. Believers will be seduced, hated, and betrayed (Matt. 24:9-10). The love of many for God will grow cold (Matt. 24:12). In that environment, the faith that exhibits patience – that endures in the midst of adversity, that does not reject the true Christ for a false Christ – will be rewarded: “Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation.” . . .

The apostasy, then, to which Paul referred (2 Thess. 2:3-4), will involve Israel, not the church. It will commence when many within the nation sign a covenant with the Antichrist (unknown to them, a covenant with death) -- at the beginning of that seventieth week. The apostasy will encompass a total abandonment or falling away from renewed covenant relationship (the seventieth week) and from the God of their forefathers and the promised Messiah. They will embrace a counterfeit religion (humanism) and a counterfeit Messiah (the Antichrist) who offers a counterfeit peace and solution to the Middle East dilemma.

In the middle of that seventieth week of Jewish apostasy, the Antichrist will break the covenant with Israel. Having entered the Middle East on the pretext of protecting Israel from her enemies, he will defeat Egypt, Syria, and other nations. Then he will “plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas [the Mediterranean and Dead Seas] in the glorious holy mountain [Mount Zion]” (Dan. 11:42-45). Only then, in the middle of the seventieth week, with the setting up of his image in the temple, will the Jews realize his true character and real identity and that they have made a covenant with death.

B. (:11) Great Deception

“And many false prophets will arise, and will mislead many.”

Stu Weber: Verse 11 sounds similar to verse 5 above, describing false prophets instead of false Christs. A prophet was a spokesman for God; therefore, a false prophet was one who falsely claimed to be God's spokesman. This was a more subtle form of deception, since there was only one Christ. However, there can be many prophets from God, and it was easier to pass oneself off as a prophet. Jesus said there would be many such deceivers and that they would deceive many people. The person who attempts to remain faithful to Christ may find great difficulty in discerning between so many claimants to God's true revelation. The false prophets would be clever in their deception, winning great followings. The true disciple of Christ must always remain alert.

C. (:12-13) Great Apostasy but Deliverance of the Saints at the End

1. (:12) Great Apostasy
“And because lawlessness is increased, most people's love will grow cold.”
2. (:13) Deliverance of the Saints at the End
“But the one who endures to the end, he shall be saved.”

Warren Wiersbe: “The end” does not mean the end of this life; it refers to the end of the age (Matt. 24:14). Those believers on earth during this terrible period, who endure in their faith, will be saved when the Lord comes at the end and delivers them.

Leon Morris: The power of God is such that he can and will sustain his faithful servants through whatever trials they may be called upon to endure.

D. (:14a) Gospel Proclamation Worldwide

“And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in the whole world for a witness to all the nations,”

Charles Swindoll: The sixth sign of the end is a worldwide declaration of the gospel (24:14). Despite the global horrors growing toward an unspeakable crescendo—with false Christs, destructive warfare, natural disasters, and persecution—the message of the saving gospel of Jesus Christ will still be proclaimed. All nations will hear the gospel, giving everybody an opportunity to believe unto eternal life. How will such an ambitious worldwide mission occur during the short time of the future seven-year Tribulation period? Perhaps God will use angelic messengers to bring the good news, as He did in the very first proclamation of the Resurrection, at the empty tomb (28:5-7). The book of Revelation suggests such a future angelic proclamation:

I saw another angel flying in midheaven, having an eternal gospel to preach to those who live on the earth, and to every nation and tribe and tongue and people; and he said with a loud voice, “Fear God, and give Him glory, because the hour of His judgment has come; worship Him who made the heaven and the earth and sea and springs of waters.”
(Rev. 14:6-7)

It is also likely that God will work through the 144,000 converts from the twelve tribes of Israel described in Revelation 7:1-8. These Hebrews will serve as faithful, courageous, and diligent witnesses for Christ during the darkest period of the earth’s history. God will preserve them from harm during the Tribulation and use them to fulfill the ancient Old Testament calling of Israel to be God’s witnesses among the nations (see Isa. 43:1-13). God’s plan for Israel was always that they would serve as the light of truth for the Gentiles. During the Tribulation, they will finally fulfill this global mission.

David Thompson: The main message of the Tribulation will not be the Gospel of grace, but the Gospel of the kingdom, which specifically says the King of Kings will come back and establish a kingdom for Israel. It is during this time when God’s Word will reach the whole world. Truth is in seven years something will take place which the Church could not do in 2000 years. It is at this time when the end will come. Now “the end” refers to the end of Israel being mistreated and finally being esteemed as the nation of God. This is not the end of the Church Age, this is not the end of the universe—this is the end of the Tribulation and the end of Israel not being in her kingdom with her King.

III. (:14b) FINAL ARRIVAL OF THE END

“and then the end shall come.”

Grant Osborne: This turns around v. 6, “the end is not yet.” This does not mean that all the nations will be converted before the end can come but rather that the universal proclamation will continue until the end. Romans 11:25–26 says that at the parousia of Christ the Gentile mission will be completed and “all Israel will be saved.”

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Despite the future orientation of the Olivet Discourse, how can we glean applications to our present living in terms of endurance and watchfulness and preparedness?
- 2) Why should we be careful not to point to specific present calamities and wars as definitive indicators of the closeness of the Parousia?
- 3) How do events such as the judgment on the Jerusalem temple serve as a type or foreshadowing of end time events?
- 4) How can we warn people not to abuse the Lord’s patience and forbearance with sin during this interim period as an excuse to ignore their accountability before the return of the Judge?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Timeline reflecting the Pre-Wrath Rapture Position

John MacArthur: The Signs of Christ’s Coming

[The disciples] believed that they were on the edge of the Messianic kingdom. In fact, in Luke chapter 19 verse 11, we have a verse that really supports that idea. In Luke 19:11, listen to this:

“As they heard things, He added and spoke a parable because He was near to Jerusalem.” This is when they’re just on the way to Jerusalem on – in the beginning of this week. And it says He added this parable “because they thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear.” The disciples, from the time He approached Jerusalem, thought the kingdom should immediately appear, and so they were living in that anticipation, and when the crowd threw palm branches and clothing in front of Him as He rode “the colt the foal of an ass” and they shouted, “Hosanna, blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord, Hosanna to the Son of David,” they thought this was all a part of readying the people for the kingdom. And then as He went into the temple and cleansed the temple, they thought that was the purging of the hypocrites. And now as He says He is going to come in judgment, they feel this is going to be the purification of Jerusalem which they believed was going to happen. And then He’s going to come in the name of the Lord as their Messiah. They see all of this happening immediately.

In fact, as they leave the temple ground in chapter 24 verse 2, Jesus, looking at the temple, says, “There shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down.” And He even tells them that the temple itself will be destroyed, and that fit into their teaching, too, because they remembered that Ezekiel said in the kingdom there would be a new temple. And this temple, after all, was built not even by a Jew but by Herod, the Idumaeen. And it was a temple that was occupied presently by hypocrites and false religionists. And so it all was sort of coming together in their minds. The Messiah had reached the moment when He was going to bring His kingdom. And they disregarded His words about dying, about a seed falling into the ground to die. They ignored what He said about having to be delivered over to the chief priests and scribes and to be crucified and to rise again the third day. And all they could see was the kingdom, the kingdom, the kingdom. And sure enough, He had already begun to cleanse the temple and now He was going to destroy it. He was going to judge the ungodly and purge the nation, and then He was going to come in full glory as King of kings and Lord of lords, and they believed they were imminently at that point. This was how they interpreted the prophets. . .

Now, what makes them feel such anticipation? The fact that He promised the destruction and desolation of Jerusalem, the fact that He promised He would come in the name of the Lord, the fact that He said the temple would be devastated. They think it’s imminent. And so He has to explain to them that it isn’t, that it’s yet in the future, that it’s a great way off. And that is the purpose from verse 4 on. It is a prophetic sermon that sweeps them and us into a time not yet come. Does not describe time between then and 70 A.D., the destruction of Jerusalem. There’s no way that can be possible. The terms won’t allow us to believe that. It does not describe the church age – it can’t. It has to describe the future time, right before the coming of Christ. They want to know the signs of the coming of Christ, the signs of the end of the age, and the signs that say this is it, this is it, it’s coming. And so he sweeps them all the way to the end time.

Now, to let us know this is not the time period prior to the destruction of Jerusalem, it’s not just the church age, as many commentators have wanted to lead us to believe, but that it’s the end time, let me give you some key interpretive indicators, all right? So follow along.

- 1) First Indicator Vs. 8 -- When does birth pain occur? At conception? That’s ridiculous. During pregnancy? Equally ridiculous. Birth pain occurs when? Just prior to birth, at the very end, that’s the last thing that happens and you know you’re there. In fact, you start monitoring the frequency of birth pains until they come in a rapid succession and then it’s time for the issuing forth of life. Birth pains happen at the end. They’re not strung out all through the pregnancy. And neither are these things strung out all through the history of the church age. They are things which occur in rapid-fire succession that issue in the birth, as it were, of the Messianic kingdom.

- 2) Now, a second indicator, and one that I think is equally important, is found in verse 13. Verse 13: “But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.” What is the end? Well, the end is mentioned in verse 13 and the end is mentioned in verse 6. The end is not yet, He says. What end is He talking about? You go back to verse 3, “The end of the age.” He’s talking about the end of the age. It has to be that that is His subject. And so in verse 13 when He says, “He that shall endure to the end,” what end is He talking about? The end of the age.

Now, if this is all about people enduring till the end of the age, it’s got to people who are alive at the end of the age, right? In other words, the people who go through these events, who go through these birth pains and endure until the end of them and the end of the age, will be saved. So He has to be talking about people then.

- 3) Notice verse 14, another indicator. It says, “And the gospel of the kingdom will be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end come.” What end? The end of the age again. And prior to the end of the age, there’s going to be worldwide preaching of the gospel. Now, that couldn’t have been true before 70 A. D. – there’s no way. There was no preaching of the gospel around the world before 70 A.D., and it isn’t even true today. There are many, many places in the world where the gospel is not being preached at all and has never been preached. But before the end, it will be preached in all the world.
- 4) Now, there’s another indicator in verse 15. Notice verse 15. “When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place. Whosoever readeth, let him understand, then let them who are in Judea flee to the mountains.” In other words, it’s all going to break loose when you see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet. Now, what is that? Oh, that’s easy. All you need do is look at Daniel chapter 9 and he says in verse 27 that the antichrist is going to “cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease and for the overspreading of abominations, he will make it desolate.” What he’s going to do is, the antichrist goes into the temple in the future Tribulation time, he desecrates the temple, he commits sacrilege in the temple where the Jews have set up their worship, and it says he does it until the consummation – until the final end – and that determined or that which is determined by God to be done is poured out on the desolate. In other words, final judgment. He does it at the very end, in the final day of man when God is going to pour out judgment. He does it, Daniel says, at a time when the Prince comes to finish transgression, make an end of sin, make reconciliation for iniquity, and bring in everlasting righteousness.

In other words, in Daniel 9:24-27, the prophet says the abomination of desolation takes place right before the Prince who sets up everlasting righteousness, right before final judgment and vengeance. So it has to be at the end time. So it says here in verse 15 of Matthew 24, “When you see the abomination of desolation, then you know you’re seeing the signs of the end.” And Daniel tells us that that happens just before the Messiah sets up His kingdom and judges the ungodly. So again, another indicator that we must be looking at a future time. That’s exactly what Daniel had in mind.

- 5) Now notice verse 21. And here is another indicator that we're looking at a future time. It says, "In this time there will be great trouble, great tribulation such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time known or ever shall be." It will be the worst time in the history of the world – the worst time in the history of the world. And when is the worst time in the history of the world? It's got to be the end time, right? It has to be. It has to be the time when God's vengeance breaks out. . .
- 6) Another indicator is in verse 29. It says immediately after the tribulation of those days, immediately after this, the sun is dark and the moon doesn't give its light, the stars fall from heaven, the powers of heaven are shaken, and then appears the sign of the Son of Man in heaven. So Christ comes immediately after the Tribulation. The Tribulation of which He speaks is the Great Tribulation of verse 21. It's the time that's not like any other time; it has to be the time in the future. What time is it? According to Daniel in verse 15, it's the time of the abomination of desolation, and that is right before the second coming. So all these indicators tell us this must be future. It must be future.
- 7) Finally, look at verses 32 to 34 as another and last indicator. The Lord says – there's a parable, a branch puts forth its leaves, you know summer is near. You have a fig tree, you see leaves, and you know fruit is to follow. Fruit comes in the summer, you see the leaves, and you know the fruit's coming. In other words, it's just a signal. So likewise, when you see all these things – what things? Everything He's been talking about, a time of Tribulation like no other time in the history of the world, a time of all these other marks and signs that He's been through prior to that in chapter 24. "When you see those, know that it is near." What is near? The end of the age. The sign of the Son of Man coming. And this generation" – what generation? The generation that is alive when the signs happen, the generation that sees them all coming to pass, "will not ever pass away till all of this is fulfilled." In other words, the fulfillment of all the time of the end is going to be seen by the people who see the signs. So the signs are reserved, then, for the people who are going to be alive at the end time. That takes this whole thing and pushes it into the future. The generation alive when the signs begin to unfold will be alive when Christ comes to set up His kingdom.

S. Lewis Johnson: This discourse, incidentally, is a discourse that has been interpreted basically in three different ways. Now I'm going to, for the sake of time, say only a few words about this now, and as we go through in the remaining six messages, a few other things I will say, I hope it will not be too repetitious for you.

There are those who have believed that this discourse is basically fulfilled in the past. They are generally post-millennial interpreters. Now post-millennial interpreters believe – and I'm going to speak about the Christian postmillennialists, not the non-Christian postmillennialists. There are non-Christian postmillennialists who are simply humanists. They believe that basically man is good and that as a result of a kind of evolution in society, man shall become finally so good that there will be something like a kingdom of God upon the earth like a millennial age.

Now we will dismiss them, because obviously they do not have any real claims for correctness in biblical interpretation since their basic view of man and God and the cross of Christ is deficient. But let's think about the Christian postmillennialists, because there are Christians who believe that through the preaching of the gospel in the present age God is going to win a great victory, and we are actually by virtue of God's work in the believers to gain a victory of the world to such an extent that we will by the grace of God introduce a period of time of like a golden age upon the earth which will fulfill the prophecies concerning the millennial age. It will be done by the grace of God working through believers.

Now these are postmillennialists, because they believe at the conclusion of that period of time, that golden age wrought by God through us, and through the preaching of the word, the Lord Jesus will return to the earth. So it will be after the millennium that he returns.

Now such interpreters, such as Dr. Keck who has a book on this particular prophecy, believe that these prophecies of the Lord Jesus in Matthew 24 and 25 have already been fulfilled, and so when we read, beginning at verse 4 and following, on through the remainder of this chapter, we are dealing with things that have come to pass in the past.

Now I know immediately you think, well what about verse 30, “And then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven. Then shall the tribes of the earth mourn when they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory.” This, for such interpreters, means simply that Jesus Christ is reigning in heaven at the present time, and the other events are simply spiritual or allegorized statements of the providence of God in human history. Now that is one way to interpret these verses. I do not think that it is the correct way, and I believe that the best test of course is for us to read through the prophecy and seek to find its meaning.

There are some who interpret these chapters as having primary reference to the present. They give us general principles by which we should guide our lives. Basically, these interpret this in a nonliteral sense too.

And then there are those who feel that this discourse is fulfilled in the future. I’m telling you ahead of time that I follow this last named principle of interpretation. I do believe that the Olivet Discourse is a discourse that has to do with the future. The test of the correctness of this view will be, again, I say the study of the word of God, but I want you to know ahead of time that is my opinion. . .

the destruction of Jerusalem is also a typical event, just like the prophecies of the Old Testament in which the local merges into the distant future. . . the local event merges into the future, final destruction of the city of Jerusalem and the temple, just preceding the second advent, the consummation of the age. . .

These verses, verse 4 through verse 14, are a kind of summary of the future week, just preceding our Lord’s second advent. The week of years, characterized by a time of affliction, characterized by a time of great tribulation that shall just precede the second advent. Then I think after these verses, verses 4 through 14, which are a summary of that period of time, beginning at verse 15 and following, we look at some details that are singled out for special attention.

TEXT: Matthew 24:15-28

TITLE: GREAT TRIBULATION TRIGGER = THE ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION

BIG IDEA:

THE ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION TRIGGERS THE GREAT TRIBULATION EVENTS LEADING TO THE SPECTACULAR RETURN OF CHRIST

INTRODUCTION:

Remember the timeline of the Pre-Wrath Rapture position:

- Daniel's 70th week (a 7 year period) which will conclude this age begins with the signing of a covenant with the nation of Israel.
- The birth pangs of various trials are experienced up until the mid point of the week.
- At the mid point you have the climactic Abomination of Desolation where the AntiChrist defiles the temple and launches the persecution of the Great Tribulation period.
- Those times are cut short before the end of the 70th week and Christ returns to Rapture believers and initiate judgment.
- Immediately after that are the trumpet and bowl judgments of the Day of the Lord.
- Then you have the Battle of Armageddon and the transition to the Millennial Kingdom.

Most of the commentators quoted below do not hold to that timeline ... so you need to take that into consideration in evaluating what they say.

John MacArthur: Warning of Coming Peril

Typically, the prophet of the Word of God assigned by God to give a far-future prophecy gave also a near prophecy to establish his credentials. In other words, if he proves to be accurate in the historically verified prophecy, we can believe him for the one that's so far in the future that we can't see it. And the reason Jesus mentions the destruction of Jerusalem in verse 2 as prophecy is not to introduce the whole sermon on that same destruction, but to give you a historical point in which to verify that He speaks the truth. And so He said there shall not one stone be left upon another that shall not be thrown down. . .

Verse 4 to 14 gives these general things that are going to happen and they will be the beginning of the end, just prior to the coming of Christ.

But Jesus goes one step further in verse 15 and says there's one single event that kicks the whole thing off. "When you shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet stand in the holy place, whoever reads, let him understand." Now, when you see the abomination of desolation, you know that's the trigger that kicks the whole thing off. Verse 21 says: "For then shall be great tribulation such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." . . .

Now, as we come to verse 16 to 28, He warns us. And He warns all the readers who will read this, who will know this in the time that it happens. And He warns about four things:

1. severe calamity,
2. subtle confusion,

3. spiritual collapse,
4. and a second coming.

And these are really something to see.

Scott Harris: There should be great fear concerning the wrath of God. There should be a terror that grips the human heart when it contemplates God's judgment on sin. The apocalyptic revelations are a warning to all mankind about the end result of sin and that we had better be prepared for the Lord's return. It is a warning to the non-Christian to repent, or they will suffer God's judgment, and it is a warning to the Christian to live their lives in a worthy manner. . .

Jesus is speaking prophetically to the disciples. That is, He is talking with them, but His message is really for a generation that is yet to come, the generation that "would not pass away until all these things take place" (24:34). This was a common occurrence in Old Testament prophecies and several things in the text point out that this is what Jesus is doing here. As just mentioned the generation that saw these things would not pass away until they were completed, and neither the disciples or anyone else has seen many of the elements here come to pass yet including

- the preaching of the gospel in the whole world for a witness to all the nations (14),
- nor the "Abomination of Desolation" (15),
- nor the "great tribulation, such as has not occurred since the beginning of the world until now, nor ever shall" (20),
- nor the sun being darkened, the moon failing to give its light and the stars falling from the sky (29).

Last week we looked at what Jesus called the "beginning of birth pangs," and related these to events described in Revelation 6 & 7. That there would be wars and rumors of wars, famines, earthquakes, persecution of the righteous and apostasy. All these things have always been true, but at the beginning of the great tribulation they will increase dramatically in frequency and seriousness, just as birth pangs do. And prior to the end, the gospel will be preached to all the world, and we saw last week that during the tribulation period God will have 144,000 Jewish servants as well as the two Witnesses of Rev. 11 to accomplish this task, and then in Rev.

14 there is an angel that has "an eternal gospel to preach to those who live on the earth, and to every nation and tribe and tongue and people... 'Fear God and give Him glory, because the hour of His judgement has come; and worship Him who made the heaven and the earth and sea and springs of waters.'" . . .

The Abomination of Desolation, the abomination that causes desolation, is when the Anti-Christ ends the Temple worship and sets himself up to be worshiped instead. Many Bible scholars believe this may even occur in the form of a statute of himself that he will set up in the holy of holies in the same way that Antiochus IV had set up an idol of Zeus.

This will be very obvious to everyone who desires to understand it when it happens. Jesus goes on to express the urgent need to flee when it does happen.

Greg Allen: Now; it seems to me that the thing that makes "the great tribulation" stand out isn't so much the uniqueness of the things that happen in it. As I have studied this chapter, it appears to me that much of what will happen in that unprecedented time will be things that also characterize the times we call "the beginning of birth pains". What seems to be unique about "the great tribulation" will be that those things will become greatly expanded—so that they spread from Jerusalem to the whole world; and they become greatly intensified—so that, unless those days were mercifully shortened by God, no flesh on earth would survive.

And it's in this that I see a spiritual lesson for our everyday lives as believers. As our Lord gives a description of that future, unprecedented time of trouble on the earth, He also—at the same time—gives us hints of His sovereign rule over it. He tells His disciples when it will begin. He tells them what will happen in it. He tells them how long it will last. He tells them what to beware of during those times. And He tells them what the outcome of it all will be.

And if He demonstrates such sovereign control over even the most unprecedented outbreak of evil that this world will ever know, then you and I can be sure that He demonstrates sovereign rule over (if I may say it this way) all the far 'lessor' times of trouble that you and I—as His people—face in our daily lives right now.

I. (:15-20) THE ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION PROMPTS URGENT FLIGHT

A. (:15) Sign of the Abomination of Desolation

"Therefore when you see the abomination of desolation which was spoken of through Daniel the prophet, standing in the holy place (let the reader understand),"

B. (:16-20) Sudden Escape Will Be Difficult

1. (:16) Urgency of Flight

"then let those who are in Judea flee to the mountains;"

2. (:17-20) Understanding the Urgency of Various Circumstances

a. (:17) No Time to Pack

"let him who is on the housetop not go down to get the things out that are in his house;"

b. (:18) No Time to Retrieve Belongings

"and let him who is in the field not turn back to get his cloak."

c. (:19) No Time to Give Special Care to the Pregnant or Nursing

"But woe to those who are with child and to those who nurse babes in those days!"

Scott Harris: In verse 19 Jesus mentions personal situations that would make this very difficult. Those who are pregnant or have a young child would have a difficult time because it is hard to move quickly if either of those things are true. In verse 20 He mentions timing circumstances which would make it difficult, winter or a Sabbath. The cold, wet weather of winter makes travel and hiding in the mountains more difficult. Any hindrance could be fatal. And if it occurs on a Sabbath, those holding to the Sabbath travel restrictions would be greatly hindered and the orthodox might try to obstruct other people from breaking their Sabbath restrictions.

d. (:20) No Time to Make Allowance for Winter Weather or Sabbath Travel

"But pray that your flight may not be in the winter, or on a Sabbath;"

II. (:21-22) THE ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION TRIGGERS THE GREAT TRIBULATION

A. (:21) Severity Unparalleled

“for then there will be a great tribulation, such as has not occurred since the beginning of the world until now, nor ever shall.”

Stu Weber: This period of “tribulation” is a specific period of time beginning with the abomination and ending with the second coming of Christ (Rev. 11:2; 13:5). It is during this time that the terrible judgments of Revelation 6-19 with its seals and trumpets will destroy great portions of the earth. This time of trouble will be without precedent in world history.

[I would separate the persecution of the Great Tribulation from the outpouring of God’s wrath in the subsequent Day of the Lord which begins just after the Rapture event and contains the trumpet and bowl judgments.]

24:21-22. So the disciples might not underestimate the horror of this Great Tribulation, Jesus explained that it would be the worst suffering in all of history—unequaled from the beginning of the world until now (24:21). He added further emphasis, saying that this Tribulation would have the potential of destroying all life, leading some modern students to think of nuclear war. But whatever the means necessary to bring about such unparalleled destruction, it is evident that such a Great Tribulation is still future to us. So there is much more in mind here than the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. As bad as it was, that destruction has been multiplied in intensity on a number of occasions in the twentieth century alone.

The world has yet to see the great distress which will never be observed again (24:21). Jesus said as much when he indicated that those days would necessarily be cut short, implying divine intervention (24:22). Christ will intervene to prevent complete genocide and the wholesale destruction of the human race.

But even in judgment, the Lord will display mercy, particularly for the sake of the elect (plural of eklektos, “select, chosen ones”). These are those who have placed faith in him and followed him as his disciples. The use of the term elect also highlights the Lord's sovereign choice as to who these people will be. It is he who draws the faithful to himself; none of us come of our own will. This Tribulation will not reach its full destructive potential because of the Lord's intervention. By his hand, those days will be shortened. Because Jesus shifted into his segment answering the question regarding the timing and signs of his coming, we may infer that the Tribulation will be interrupted by Jesus' return. He will end the destruction on earth.

B. (:22) Salvation of the Elect

“And unless those days had been cut short, no life would have been saved; but for the sake of the elect those days shall be cut short.”

III. (:23-28) THE GREAT TRIBULATION ENDS WITH THE COMING OF CHRIST

A. (:23-26) False Christs and False Prophets Will Mislead Many

1. (:23-25) Misleading People about the Identity of Christ

a. (:23) Deception Must Be Rejected

“Then if anyone says to you, ‘Behold, here is the Christ,’ or ‘There He is,’ do not believe him”

- b. (:24) Deception Will Be Enticing
“For false Christs and false prophets will arise and will show great signs and wonders, so as to mislead, if possible, even the elect.”

Stu Weber: False Christs would be those claiming to be the Messiah himself, while false prophets would be those claiming to have truth revealed by God—possibly in a hoax supporting one of the false Christs.

- c. (:25) Deception Prophesied in Advance
“Behold, I have told you in advance.”

2. (:26) Misleading People about the Location of Christ

- a. Claiming He is in the Wilderness
“If therefore they say to you, ‘Behold, He is in the wilderness,’ do not go forth,”

Richard Gardner: It is in crisis times such as these that false messiahs and false prophets will arise (vv. 23ff.; cf. vv. 5, 11), with impressive credentials (cf. 7:22-23; Deut. 13:1-3; Rev. 13:11-18). What makes their appeal all the stronger is that they come in Christ’s name (v. 5), from within the church. Some may set up shop in the wilderness, the traditional site for launching liberation movements (Exod. 3:1-12; Acts 5:36-37; 21:38), while others may fit the model of a hidden Messiah (in the inner rooms; cf. John 7:27).

- b. Claiming He is in the Inner Rooms
“or, ‘Behold, He is in the inner rooms,’ do not believe them.”

B. (:27-28) The Return of Christ Will Be Sudden and Spectacular and Unmistakeable

- 1. (:27) Return Compared to Lightning
“For just as the lightning comes from the east, and flashes even to the west, so shall the coming of the Son of Man be.”

So there is no secret rapture that occurs before the beginning of the 70th week as taught by the Pre-Tribulation camp. There is only this one Parousia which includes Christ coming in glory and in judgment.

Warren Wiersbe: Matthew 24:27 indicates that the return of Jesus to the earth will be sudden, like a stroke of lightning. The event that precedes His return is the gathering of the Gentile nations at Armageddon (Rev. 16:13-16; 19:11ff.). The eagles flying around the carcass picture the awful carnage that will result from this great battle (Rev. 19:17-19).

Charles Swindoll: In other words, the real coming of Christ in glory will be unmistakable. Nobody will confuse it with even the most astonishing “signs and wonders” of the false Christs and false prophets populating the end times.

Leon Morris: The coming of the Messiah will not be some secret thing such that only those with special knowledge will be able to say where the Messiah is. Jesus likens his coming to the lightning. Nobody needs to be told where the lightning is. When it flashes, the whole sky is lit up from east to west. The coming of the lightning is a coming that thrusts itself on our notice; we cannot overlook it. The coming of the Son of man will be like that. It will be open and public; nobody will need to be told about it.

Richard Gardner: According to Jesus' words in verses 27-28, there will be no need for guesswork when the Son of Man really appears. It will be as obvious as "a horizontal lightning bolt... illuminating the whole earth, east to west, at the same moment" (Schweizer: 454). And it will be as certain as the presence of a carcass when one sees vultures circling (v. 28; cf. Luke 17:37).

2. (:28) Return Compared to Vultures Circling a Decaying Carcass
"Wherever the corpse is, there the vultures will gather."

Stanley Saunders: The sight of vultures signals from afar the presence of death. So too the coming of the Son of Humanity will make plain to all that the empire of heaven has defeated the dark forces of this world.

Charles Swindoll: In light of the menacing vision in Revelation 19:21 of birds gorging on the flesh of those slain at the return of Christ, it seems best to understand Jesus' use of these words as foretelling the certainty of the future judgment of the wicked. His cryptic statement points to the earth as the place of judgment, as evidenced by the birds feasting on carrion. Evil and death tend to be found in the same places. Those separated from the righteous will be consigned to judgment because they did not find salvation by grace alone through faith alone in Christ alone.

Marvin Rosenthal: Jesus is coming again because justice legally demands it. The Lord Himself said, "For wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together" (Matt. 24:28). This was a familiar Hebraic expression, the meaning of which would be, moral corruption requires divine judgment (cf. Job 39:27-30; Rev. 19:17-18). "Wherever the carcass is" conveys the idea of moral corruption, stench, and decay. "There will the eagles be gathered together" implies divine judgment on all corruption (sin and its progeny). If God is holy and just, then He must, of necessity, punish evil. Judgment on unrepentant, wicked men requires His return and will be on the King's agenda at His coming.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) By describing these future end-time events, what type of attitude and conduct is Jesus trying to promote for His disciples?
- 2) Why should we not be deceived by the claims of false Messiahs and false prophets?
- 3) What are the indicators that Jesus is speaking here about events that were not fulfilled in the destruction of the Jerusalem temple in AD 70 and thus refer to end time events?
- 4) How visible and obvious will be the Second Coming of Jesus Christ to bring judgment upon the world?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Warren Wiersbe: The midpoint of the tribulation period is most important, for at that time an event will take place that was prophesied centuries ago by Daniel (Dan. 9:24-27). Please note that this prophecy concerns only the Jews and the city of Jerusalem (“thy people and . . . thy holy city,” Dan. 9:24). To apply it to the church or to any other people or place is to misinterpret God’s Word.

The prophecy involves seventy weeks, and the Hebrew word week means “a week of years,” or seven years. Seventy sevens would equal 490 years. But this period of 490 years is broken up into three parts:

1. During seven weeks (forty-nine years) the city of Jerusalem would be rebuilt and the worship reestablished.
2. After sixty-three weeks (434 years) Messiah would come to Jerusalem and die for the sins of the world.
3. The prince will make an agreement with the Jews for one week (seven years) to protect them from their enemies.

The decree to rebuild Jerusalem was given in 445 BC by Cyrus (2 Chron. 36:22-23; Ezra 1). The city was rebuilt in troubled times. Sir Robert Anderson in his classic book The Coming Prince (Kregel, 1975) has proven that there were exactly 482 prophetic years (of 360 days each) between the giving of the decree and the day that Jesus rode into Jerusalem as the King.

But we must account for the remaining “week” of seven years. Where does it fit in? Note that the same city that was rebuilt will also be destroyed by “the people of the prince that shall come” (Dan. 9:26), that is, the Romans. (“The prince that shall come” is a name for the Antichrist.” This event took place in AD 70. But the Jewish nation would be spared and the city restored again. For at some future date, the prince that shall come (Antichrist) will make a covenant with the Jews for seven years. This is where the missing “week” fits in. He will agree to protect them from their enemies and permit them to rebuild their temple. (Dan. 9:27) talks about a restoration of the sacrifices, and this would demand a temple.) . . .

The readers of this prophecy in the latter days will know what to do: Get out of Judea! These instructions are similar to those given in Luke 21:20ff., but they refer to a different time period. Luke’s instructions apply to the siege of Jerusalem in AD 70, and the “sign” was the gathering of the armies around the city. Matthew’s instructions apply to Jewish believers in the middle of the tribulation, and the “sign” is the desecration of the temple by the image of the Antichrist.

Donald Hagner: Although the A.D. 70 “abomination” was almost certainly in Jesus’ mind (cf. 24:2,16-20), both he and Daniel looked ahead to another such abomination in the temple, which is yet future to us. This implied, of course, that the temple will again be rebuilt on the temple mount in Jerusalem, where the Muslim Dome of the Rock has stood for the last thirteen centuries. The warnings of 24:16-20, which related to Jewish geography and Jewish culture, prophesied most directly of the A.D. 70 destruction of Jerusalem, along with the persecution of the Jews by Rome. Jesus warned that when the “abomination” occurs (or when it seems imminent), the inhabitants of Judea (the province of Jerusalem) should flee to the mountains, where they could hide from persecutors (24:16).

The destruction would come so quickly that those on their flat housetops (often used for prayer) would need to descend immediately down the external stairway and escape without retrieving any supplies or valuables. Those working out in the fields would need to flee to a hiding place (24:17-18). Those who delayed would be caught in the destruction. We do know that in A.D. 70 many Christians did flee all the way to the “hiding place” at Petra.

The ultimate fulfillment of these prophetic elements, still future, will take place when the Antichrist occupies the most holy place. Daniel 9:27 describes these events. This evil prince will “confirm a covenant with many [Israel] for one ‘seven’” (or one period of seven years). In the “middle of the ‘seven’ he will ... set up an abomination that causes desolation.” Second Thessalonians 2:4, referring to this same event, describes this ruler setting himself up as a god in the temple.

Of course, the fact that Israel has reestablished itself as a national political entity and occupied the holy temple site again has many scholars anticipating the end times very soon. No other nation has experienced two thousand years of cultural dispersion and retained their national integrity. God is not yet finished with the Jewish people. And the Great Tribulation to come in the seventieth and final of the “seventy weeks” (periods of seven years) predicted for Israel by the prophet Daniel (Dan. 9:24-27) will see the nation purged and prepared for the return of its Messiah-King.

This period of “tribulation” is a specific period of time beginning with the abomination and ending with the second coming of Christ (Rev. 11:2; 13:5). It is during this time that the terrible judgments of Revelation 6-19 with its seals and trumpets will destroy great portions of the earth. This time of trouble will be without precedent in world history.

(24:21-22) So the disciples might not underestimate the horror of this Great Tribulation, Jesus explained that it would be the worst suffering in all of history—unequaled from the beginning of the world until now (24:21). He added further emphasis, saying that this Tribulation would have the potential of destroying all life, leading some modern students to think of nuclear war. But whatever the means necessary to bring about such unparalleled destruction, it is evident that such a Great Tribulation is still future to us. So there is much more in mind here than the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. As bad as it was, that destruction has been multiplied in intensity on a number of occasions in the twentieth century alone.

The world has yet to see the great distress which will never be observed again (24:21). Jesus said as much when he indicated that those days would necessarily be cut short, implying divine intervention (24:22). Christ will intervene to prevent complete genocide and the wholesale destruction of the human race.

But even in judgment, the Lord will display mercy, particularly for the sake of the elect (plural of eklektos, “select, chosen ones”). These are those who have placed faith in him and followed him as his disciples. The use of the term elect also highlights the Lord's sovereign choice as to who these people will be. It is he who draws the faithful to himself; none of us come of our own will. This Tribulation will not reach its full destructive potential because of the Lord's intervention. By his hand, those days will be shortened. Because Jesus shifted into his segment answering the question regarding the timing and signs of his coming, we may infer that the Tribulation will be interrupted by Jesus' return. He will end the destruction on earth.

(24:23-26) So that God's chosen followers (“the elect,” 24:24) might not be fooled by false Christs and false prophets, Jesus forewarned us about them. False Christs would be those claiming to be the Messiah himself, while false prophets would be those claiming to have truth revealed by God—possibly in a hoax supporting one of the false Christs.

At the time of the Great Tribulation, there would be reports that the Christ (the Messiah) had come. And indeed there would be imposters (the false Christs and false prophets) who would provide great signs and miracles that people will take as validation of their authenticity as God's Christ or prophet (cf. the Jewish leaders' demand of a sign from Jesus in 12:38; 16:1; see also Jesus' description of miracle-working imposters in 7:21-23). These imposters would be so convincing that they would deceive even the elect. It is important to remember that miracles themselves do not guarantee that something is of God. Jesus had already made that point clear to the disciples (Matt. 7:21-23).

The followers of the false Christs would invite people to come see the imposters in the desert, or in the inner rooms. But Jesus commanded his followers not to follow such guidance and not to believe those who invited them. Jesus the Messiah came in this manner the first time, as one group of people could find in the desert or in a house. But his second advent would be quite different.

(24:27-28) The word For tells us why we should not believe the Messiah will be seen in a single location on earth. When he comes, the whole world will know! Unlike his first advent—through natural birth into a human body and thirty-four years of life as a man—the coming of the Son of Man (here Jesus used the title with its full messianic impact) will be like lightning, which comes from the east and is visible even in the west.

The picture is that of a bolt of lightning, flashing all the way across the sky, from horizon to horizon, in an instant. Jesus was about to tell us more about his coming (24:29-31), but this alone distinguished him from all the imposters at the end of the age. They would be mere men, lingering about in one place or another, while he would come suddenly and visibly, and he would not be limited to a single location.

Coming (parousia) is a word that appears here for the first time. It becomes an important word for the apostle Paul, who used it to describe the second coming (e.g., 1 Cor. 15:23, 1 Thess. 2:19; 3:13). Other New Testament writers used it as well (e.g., Jas. 5:7-8; 2 Pet. 3:4; 1 John 2:28).

John Walvoord: The Abomination of Desolation and Warnings of Coming Peril

Jesus said there is coming in the future a time unlike any other time, a time of incredible, indescribable horror to the world but particularly focusing on the nation Israel. It is a time of which Isaiah spoke, of which Jeremiah spoke, of which Daniel spoke, and of which Zechariah spoke. So it really isn't anything new that our Lord is saying. He is reiterating what was said of old, a time like no other time. If Israel thinks it has endured unbelievable holocaust in the past, then they need to take stock of what the prophets have said and what the Lord Jesus said, that they have not yet endured what they shall in the future. For there is coming a holocaust unlike any other. And it will not only impact Israel, but it will impact the world. And things are not going to get better; they're going to get worse. In fact, they're going to get worse than they've ever been the worst of all. . .

So He's given them some general signs, the birth pains at the very end of man's day that result in the birth of the kingdom. But He gives them here the trigger that sets the whole thing off. . . "Now, when you who are alive in that day" [:15] – and He uses the prophetic "you" as we pointed out in our last study. When you who are alive in that day see this, you know you're in the Tribulation. Here is the trigger that sets the birth pains of verses 4 to 14 loose on the earth. This is the key event. . .

So what you have, then, is the coming of Christ and just before that you have a seven-year period. That seven-year period is initiated when Israel makes a covenant with this prince, this king who is the leader of the western confederacy who will be a protector for Israel. Halfway through the week, he turns on Israel, stops their sacrifices, sets up an idol in the midst of the temple, stops all of their worship, makes them worship this false god, this false idol, abominates the place so that it goes into ruination and Jews won't go near it. . .

So from the time that the daily sacrifice is taken away and the abomination that makes desolate is set up, there'll be a thousand, two hundred and 90 days. You say: "Wait a minute, from the time in the middle, 12 hundred 90 days, that's 30 days more than three and a half years. Where did the extra 30 come from? Revelation 12:6 says it will be 12 hundred and 60 days, Daniel says 12 hundred and 90 days. Why the disparity?" I think the best explanation of that is that it is in those 30 days after the Tribulation has ended that the Lord, when He comes to the Mount of Olives, as it says in Zechariah, creates a great valley into which all the nations of the world are gathered to be judged. And I believe Daniel has taken us 30 days beyond to give us that timeframe in which there will be the judging of the nations described in Matthew 25 as the judgment of the sheep and goats, in which all the living people still on the earth at the end of the Tribulation are gathered together to the Lord to be judged as to their suitability for heaven and hell. And it is that 30-day period, which we see here in Daniel, that is added to the Revelation text.

Further, look at verse 12: "Blessed is the one who waits and comes all the way to the thousand, three-hundred and thirty-five days." Now, we got 45 more days. The blessed people are going to last another 45. I mean, if you're in that – so the implication here is that a judgment occurs at the 12 hundred and 90 period and that's what I think is being described. There's a 30-day period in there in which that judgment of the nations takes place. Blessed are those who go into the next 45-day period. What's that? I believe the next 45-day period that goes to 13 hundred and 35 is a transition time for the setting up of the kingdom. The Lord establishes His throne in Jerusalem. The Lord sets us in places of rulership, in places of representation as envoys throughout the world and establishes His kingdom, begins to bring the nations to Him, starts disseminating the rules and the principles for the Messianic millennium and that is that 45-day period.

So Daniel then sees the abomination of desolation. Then Revelation takes us 12 hundred and 60 days, end of Tribulation. Thirty more days for the judgment of the nations. Forty-five more days for the establishing of the millennial kingdom and then on into the kingdom. Prophecy is so explicit. But the thing that triggers it all is the abomination of desolation, the desecration of the holy place. . .

Now, as we come to verse 16 to 28, He warns us. And He warns all the readers who will read this, who will know this in the time that it happens. And He warns about four things: severe calamity, subtle confusion, spiritual collapse, and a second coming. And these are really something to see.

Greg Allen: But that's when our Lord gives us another very specific sign in our passage this morning. He says, "Therefore when you see the 'abomination of desolation,' spoken of by Daniel the prophet, standing in the holy place . . ."

This is something that is referred to four times in the Old Testament book of Daniel (Daniel 8:13; 9:27; 11:31; 12:11). It describes a horrible event—that an ungodly ruler of world influence will make a covenant with the people of Israel, break it, and dare to set up a defiling image in the temple of God. And most Bible scholars recognize three fulfillments of it—the first two being largely symbolic of the third and final fulfillment of it.

The first occurred in 168 B.C.; when the Selucid king Antiochus Epiphanes (who deeply despised and resented the Jewish people) marched an army of Greeks and renegade Jews into Jerusalem and polluted the holy altar in the temple by offering up a sow on it, put an end to the daily sacrifices, ordered the Jews to cease the worship of God, and erected an image of Zeus in the temple. This event was past in the time that the Lord spoke the words of our passage; and so, He clearly intended to apply them to something else.

The second fulfillment of it occurred in 70 A.D.; when the Roman general Titus invaded the city of Jerusalem, and destroyed it and its temple. This was an event that was just a short time in the future when the Lord spoke these words. He clearly intended that they be applied to that future event; because the very stones He said would not be found setting one upon another (v. 2) are the stones of the temple that Titus knocked down. The result of it is what Jesus said in Luke 21:24; that "Jerusalem would be trampled by Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled". But clearly, His words have an application even further beyond 70 A.D.; because they are intended to describe the sign of His coming and the end of the age (v. 3), and because, immediately after it, the Lord would return (vv. 29-31). I believe that's why He adds "whoever reads" (with reference to the book of Daniel), "let him understand".

The third and most complete fulfillment of the prophecy about the "abomination of desolation"—for which the first two only served as symbolic pictures—will be the coming of the Antichrist—the future, satanically empowered world ruler described in dreadful detail in Revelation 13 as "the beast" who deludes the whole world into worshiping himself—the "man of sin" that Paul described in 2 Thessalonians 2:3-12; whose coming is immediately associated with the Day of the Lord. Paul writes:

. . . that Day will not come unless the falling away comes first, and the man of sin is revealed, the son of perdition, who opposes and exalts himself above all that is called God or that is worshiped, so that he sits as God in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God . . . And then the lawless one will be revealed, whom the Lord will consume with the breath of His mouth and destroy with the brightness of His coming (2 Thessalonians 2:3-4, 8-9).

Now, I'm very tempted to go into further detail; and sadly, we just don't have the time to do so. But the thing that I want you to notice the most in all this is that our Lord declares the sign to us that marks the beginning of the end of this age. It is under His control. The dreadful "great tribulation" will not come until He says it will.

David Thompson: WHEN JEWISH PEOPLE SEE THE ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION, THEY NEED TO QUICKLY GET AWAY FROM JERUSALEM BECAUSE FEROCIOUS ATTACKS WILL COME AGAINST ISRAEL.

TEXT: Matthew 24:29-31

TITLE: THE SIGN OF THE SON OF MAN

BIG IDEA:
CHRIST RETURNS IN POWER AND GREAT GLORY

INTRODUCTION:

Charles Swindoll: Teaching concerning the return of Christ never fails to create mixed feelings. For those who are ready for it, there's a mixture of comfort, relief, and eager expectation. For those not ready because of unbelief, disobedience, or rebellion, the range of emotions runs from ignorant indifference to contemptuous scorn. Yet just like it's impossible to remain neutral in our response to the gospel of the saving person and work of Jesus Christ, so it is with regard to the Second Coming. Even when we're not thinking about it, God's clock is ticking, moving toward that moment when the true believers will be snatched from this earth and the rest of the world will face the great Day of the Lord—the seven-year Tribulation (1 Thes. 4:16 – 5:3).

[That represents the Pre-Trib position. But I have switched to the Pre-Wrath position where believers enter the 70th week of Daniel but are raptured after the Great Tribulation (which does not begin until the mid point of the week) but just before the judgments of the Day of the Lord in the latter part of the week.]

Richard Gardner: Up to this point, Jesus has been clarifying the shape of things to come before the end. A shift occurs in verse 29, where Jesus at last begins talking about the final drama that will bring an end to the time of tribulation. Symbolic of the fact that God is about to refashion all creation, the heavenly bodies cease to radiate or rule life (v. 29; cf. Isa. 13:10; 34:4; Joel 2:2, 10; 2 Esd. 5:4). As their glory wanes, the glory and power of the Son of Man who comes on the clouds of heaven is all the more apparent (v. 30; cf. 16:28; 26:64; Dan. 7:13-14).

David Turner: It is argued here that 24:29–31 describes the climactic signs in heaven that immediately precede Jesus's future coming (24:29), that glorious coming itself (24:30), and the purpose of his coming: to gather God's elect for their reward (24:31). Jesus's appearance effects a reversal of business as usual. Since his death and resurrection, the disciples have mourned over their many persecutions (5:10–12; 9:15; 10:23), but when Jesus appears, their persecutors mourn (cf. 13:41–42), and the disciples with joy begin to experience the ultimate reward of their master (25:21, 23).

Grant Osborne: The cross is the central event in history, the parousia the final event in history. The entire Bible looks to both events as the heir to the exodus, effecting the salvation of God's people. We are looking at the consummation of all of history seen as salvation history. This passage extends the point of vv. 27–28: unlike the false teachers and their emphasis on a secret coming, the true Messiah will come with a public event that no one will be able to ignore. The conspicuous nature of the return is seen in the loud trumpet blast and in the arrival of the hosts of heaven to gather God's people to Christ.

The Bible Says: This concludes Jesus's answer to His disciples' second question asking Him "what will be the sign of Your coming?" (Matthew 24:3). His answer was that they would not need a sign because when He returns everyone will know (Matthew 24:27). But He gave them three precursor events to His coming so they would know that His return was near.

These events were:

- the Abomination of Desolation (Matthew 24:15);
- the Great Tribulation (Matthew 24:21);
- and the Darkening of the Sun, Moon, and Stars (Matthew 24:29).

<https://thebiblesays.com/commentary/matt/matt-24/matthew-2429-31/>

[The existence of such prophesied precursor events undermines the key tenet of the pre-trib position which is the doctrine of imminence = Christ could come at any moment.]

I. (:29) PRECURSOR TO HIS COMING = CELESTIAL UPHEAVAL

A. Timing Reference

“But immediately after the tribulation of those days”

Grant Osborne: When?

The return of the Lord is “immediately after” the tribulation period. One major doctrinal debate that centers on this passage is the so-called “rapture debate” within premillennialism. The issue is whether the Lord will return at the beginning (pretribulation position), in the middle (midtribulation), or at the end (posttribulation) of the “great tribulation” period (24:21; Rev 7:14). The pretribulation position (mostly dispensational scholars) believes that Jesus is addressing Jewish disciples rather than members of the church, and so Jesus is not addressing the “rapture” at the beginning of the period (which is only for the church) but the “revelation” of Jesus in power and glory at the end of the period.

The midtribulation position argues that this is the same event as Rev 11:11–12 (the catching up of the two witnesses, who symbolize the church) and so the middle of the period described in Rev 6–19.

The posttribulation position asserts that there is only one return, not two; and so this must be the same event as Rev 19:11–21 (cf. 1 Thess 4:13–18; 5:1–12, which they say is also a single event) and must occur “immediately after” this period. Amillennialists would tend to agree with the posttribulation position on Matt 24:29–31.

[My position is the Pre-Wrath Rapture which differs from all three defined above. The Rapture occurs at some unknown time after the Great Tribulation but before the Day of the Lord.]

B. Disruption of Celestial Powers

“the sun will be darkened, and the moon will not give its light, and the stars will fall from the sky, and the powers of the heavens will be shaken,”

Walter Wilson: With the sun and the moon inoperative, time effectively stops, the entire space-time continuum undergoing transformation. Presumably the powers (δυνάμεις) mentioned at the end of 24:29 refer to the celestial entities mentioned previously in the verse, rather than to spiritual forces located in the heavens (as, for example, in 1 Pet 3:22). In either case, the only “power” left in the universe belongs to the Son of Man, the arrival of darkness prefiguring the eschatological punishment he will mete out in 25:30.

Leon Morris: Jesus is saying that, whatever the powers of the heavens may be, they are subject to God, and that at this time, that of the return of the Son of man to this earth, their power will be disturbed. Whatever functions they may be exercising at the time will be affected by the great fact that the Son of man is coming back to this earth to bring an end to the current system and to inaugurate the reign of God over all the earth.

BethanyBible.org: Now; these words are describing something astonishing. And many Bible teachers and scholars have assumed that they must be speaking of something figurative or symbolic. But I believe they are describing something very literal.

For one thing, the description our Lord gives is of something that seems to be mentioned in many different places in prophetic Scripture concerning the coming Day of the Lord. I find it hard to believe that something mentioned so often in Scripture—and often in nearly the same terms—is meant to be taken symbolically.

II. (:30) POWER AND GLORY OF HIS COMING

A. Sign of the Son of Man

“and then the sign of the Son of Man will appear in the sky,”

Richard Gardner: In the midst of this picturesque description, Jesus speaks of the sign about which the disciples inquired, the sign of the Son of Man which will appear in heaven (v. 30a). But to what is Jesus referring? One of the earliest (though less likely) interpretations of the allusion is the sign of the cross. More recently, commentators have proposed that the sign consists of a counterpart to the blaring trumpet mentioned in verse 31, either a military standard or ensign (cf. Isa. 18:3; Jer. 4:21; 6:1; 51:27) or a great display of light. [Shekinah Glory indicating the presence of the Lord = the Parousia] Still others argue that the sign is Jesus himself, and that we should translate the words in question: The sign which is the Son of Man. One way or another, Jesus is telling his disciples: You will know it when you see it!

David Thompson: There is debate among scholars as to exactly what the sign of the Son of Man actually is. Some have speculated that it is a type of Shekinah glory. Dr. Gaebel believes it will be the Shekinah cloud which shrouded Israel in the O.T. times. The same cloud seen when Christ ascended into heaven (Acts 1:9). This will be a sign that the glory of God is coming back to Israel. However, if we look at Revelation 19:11-16, there is a graphic description of the coming of Christ. This may include all of these signs. In other words, after the world sees these things happening in the sky, they look up and see the Son of Man coming on a white horse with armies following Him. This would be quite an amazing sign.

Ray Stedman: Let us not miss the fact that he links this sign with the statement, “then all the tribes of the earth will mourn.” We shall examine that more fully a bit later, but from other Scripture it appears that he means the tribes of Israel. Since this sign is thus linked with Israel it strongly suggests that the sign will consist of the reappearance of the cloud of glory which accompanied the nation Israel as they journeyed through the wilderness for forty years. It was called the Shekinah, and was the sign of God's presence with his people. Much later, when the Temple was built and Solomon dedicated it to God, the Shekinah glory came down and took rest in the holy of holies upon the Ark of the Covenant as the sign that God was dwelling with His people.

This shining cloud may well be what Jesus himself is referring to when he says, "They will see the Son of man coming on the clouds of heaven." There is an obvious reference to this same event in Revelation 1:7. There John says: "Behold, he is coming with the clouds, and every eye will see him, every one who pierced him; and all tribes of the earth will wail on account of him." Of course it can simply refer to the atmospheric clouds, but the repeated emphasis seems suggestive of more. When Jesus thus appears it will mark the close of the age, but it will also be the opening event of a new age, and the supreme characteristic of that new age will be that God dwells with His people. In Revelation 21:3, John describes it, "Behold, the dwelling of God is with men. He will dwell with them." Since the Shekinah is the sign of God's presence with man, it is fitting that it should reappear as the sign that explains, clarifies, and reveals the meaning of Christ's coming. He comes that he may be, as the Old Testament prophets whispered, "Immanuel-God with us."

Marvin Rosenthal: The sign of the appearing of the Son of man in heaven will be manifested following the opening of the sixth seal (Matt. 24:30; Mark 13:26; Luke 21:27). This occurs after the Great Tribulation but long before the end of the seventieth week. The seven trumpet judgments must be poured out before the seventieth week ends (Rev. 11:15). The fifth trumpet judgment alone is said to last five months (Rev. 9:1, 5). This appearance of the Son of man in heaven before the opening of the seventh seal is related to the rapturing of the church before the Day of the Lord's wrath begins. God does not exempt his people from man's wrath; He does exempt them from His wrath (Lot was told to flee Sodom and Noah to get into the ark before God's wrath fell.). God's wrath begins with the opening of the seventh seal, for out of the seventh seal the seven trumpet judgments will emerge.

The cosmic disturbance introduced with the opening of the sixth seal is the prelude of the Rapture of the church and the Day of the Lord wrath.

B. Sorrow of the Tribes of Israel

"and then all the tribes of the earth will mourn,"

S. Lewis Johnson: And he adds, "And then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn." Now that's a very interesting statement. I wish it were possible for me to talk about the Old Testament significance of the term, earth, and also the New Testament significance of the term, earth. The word ge in Greek, which is often rendered "earth" is a word that also means "land." Now if it means, earth, if it means earth, we normally think about the whole of this globe, but if it should mean, land, then of course, we would think about the land; that is, the land of Palestine. And in the light of the fact that he says, then all the tribes of the earth shall mourn, lends some credence to the interpretation that what he is saying is that when the Son of man appears in heaven, then the tribes for Israel, and its tribe shall be back in the land, the tribes of the land shall mourn. In other words, Israel shall come to the realization that it is the Messiah that they crucified when the Lord Jesus Christ was hanged upon the cross.

Now that interpretation gains also some support from the passage in the Old Testament in the book of Zechariah, which seems to be the passage that our Lord was thinking about. Zechariah chapter 12 verse 10 in which we read these words, "And I will pour upon the house of David and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem the spirit of grace and supplications and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced.” Isn’t that a striking passage? Here the Lord, here the prophet speaking for the Lord, Yahweh it says, I will pour upon the house of David and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem the spirit of grace and supplications. What is that? Why that’s Old Testament effectual grace which shall be poured out in the future. It is exactly what the Bible teaches when it speaks about God opening the hearts of people to believe. He will pour out upon these tribes, specifically here the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, such a ministry of the Holy Spirit that they shall look unto—isn’t it startling that Jehovah should say—they will look upon me whom they have pierced? . . .

C. Sight of the Returning Son of Man

“and they will see the Son of Man coming on the clouds of the sky with power and great glory.”

Ray Stedman: The reference of Jesus to his coming "with power and great glory" reminds us immediately of the closing words of the Lord's Prayer. How many times have you prayed, "For Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory?" That prayer reflects the anticipation of God's people, through all the dark centuries, of the eventual coming of that flaming hope when the power and the glory of the universe will be in the hands of the One to whom it rightfully belongs.

III. (:31) PURPOSE OF HIS COMING = TO GATHER HIS ELECT

A. Galvanizing of the Angels

“And He will send forth His angels with a great trumpet”

B. Gathering of the Elect

“and they will gather together His elect from the four winds, from one end of the sky to the other.”

D.A. Carson: The “four winds” represent the four points of the compass (Eze 37:9; Da 8:8; 11:4)—the elect are gathered from all over (cf. 8:11), “from one end of the heavens to the other” (from every place under the sky), since that is how far the gospel of the kingdom will have been preached (v.14). Although all nations of the earth will mourn, nevertheless the elect are drawn from them.

Leon Morris: The angels will be sent to gather his elect; the messengers of heaven will gather up the saints of earth. Jesus brings out the truth that not one of them will be overlooked; the angels will gather them from the four winds, which is expressive enough as a reference to the whole earth, but here it is reinforced with from one end of the heavens to the other. Jesus’ followers are encouraged by the certainty that on the last day not one of God’s people will be missing.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Do you believe the Second Coming of Christ occurs in two stages (including a Rapture) or is just a single event?
- 2) What type of cosmic chaos will result from the disruption of celestial powers described here?

- 3) What will be the significance of the return of Christ encased in Shekinah Glory?
- 4) Who are the “elect” that will be gathered at this end time point?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Dr. S. Lewis Johnson: The Second Advent, The Hope of the World

It is perhaps, possible, too in the light of the statement, they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, that there will be around him some form of glory, like the shekinah glory of the Old Testament. Remember, God led Israel through the wilderness by the pillar of cloud in the day and pillar of fire at night. The pillar of fire was the sign of the divine presence and that shekinah glory hovered over the Holy of Holies in the Tabernacle, and over the temple for a while, until ultimately the glory of God departed from the temple because of their unbelief. So it is possible, perhaps probable, that when our Lord Jesus does come in his Second Advent there will be a blast of glory, that in the skies, that all shall recognize as the glory that comes from the one who is very God of very God. So he then says, immediately after those days, there will be cosmic agitation and then there will be the kingly advent in glory. . .

Now we began by saying our society is suffering from absence of hope and presence of fear. I think the second coming is the ultimate solution, because it illuminates the ultimate triumph of the Lord Jesus over the forces of evil. He will come again as the governor of this creation, and we are not, therefore, without hope. If we look round about us at the problems of life, the problems of population and pollution, and all of the other kinds of disturbances that lie about us, and if our eyes are so earthbound that we look only at them, we do have reason for fear. But if our eyes look off to the Second Advent of the Lord Jesus, there is tremendous hope. . .

The second coming is also our ultimate hope because it underscores the fact that history is going somewhere. It's moving to a goal. Tennyson was not far wrong, even though he didn't have the true faith: "One God one law one element and one far off divine event to which the whole creation move." Therefore we look into the future in the midst of the absence of hope with the presence of fear with confidence and a surging hope. And we reply and we pray, even so come come quickly Lord Jesus.

David Turner: Biblical Allusions

Biblical imagery permeates Matt. 24:29–31. The table presents the most significant citations and allusions. The crucial text is Dan. 7, where God is pictured as an awesome judge, "the Ancient of Days" (Dan. 7:9), who passes sentence in favor of the son of man, giving universal dominion to him and his people (7:14, 22, 27). The context is eschatological reversal, in which the "little horn" (7:8, 20, 24–25), the archenemy of God and Israel, is judged and defeated. In both Dan. 7 and Matt. 24, the coming of the Son of Man ends the persecution of God's saints and begins their glorious rule with Jesus.

Biblical Allusions in Matt. 24:29–31

Matthew	Topic	Hebrew Bible
24:29a	Tribulation	Dan. 12:1
24:29b	Sun and moon darkened	Isa. 13:10; 24:23; Ezek. 32:7; Joel 2:10, 31; 3:15; Amos 5:20; 8:9; Zeph. 1:15
24:29c	Stars fallen, shaken	Isa. 34:4; Hag. 2:6
24:30a, 30c	Son of Man coming on the clouds in glory and power	Jer. 4:13; Dan. 7:13–14
24:30b	Tribes mourn	Zech. 12:10, 12
24:31a	Trumpet	Isa. 27:13
24:31b	Elect gathered	Deut. 30:4
24:31b	Four winds	Dan. 7:2; Zech. 2:6
24:31b	Ends of the sky	Deut. 4:32

Grant Osborne: The combination of the coming of the Son of Man and the trumpet blast plus angels and the resurrection of the saints links this with 1 Cor 15:52 and 1 Thess 4:15–16. The trumpet blast announcing the coming of the king (1 Kgs 1:34), a sacred event (Lev 25:9), a theophany (Exod 20:18; Heb 12:19), a call to war (Judg 6:34, 7:20; Isa 18:3), or the day of the Lord (Isa 27:13; Joel 2:1; Zech 9:14) was a royal call either from the ruler or from God himself. For the place of the angels in the gathering of the saints and final judgment, see also 13:41, 49; 16:27; 25:31–32.

John MacArthur: The Sign of the Son of Man

1) Sequence – When will the Lord return?

Now, remember that the disciples feel it must be very near because they know the Lord is the Messiah, because He has cleansed the temple, you remember, threw out the moneychangers and the buyers and the sellers. Because He has promised that the whole temple will be torn down and not one stone will be left upon another. They believe, then, that He is going to come and wipe out hypocritical, false Judaism. He is going to wipe out the false religious leaders. He is going to purge the nation. And because they've already seen Him cleanse the inside by throwing everybody out and He has just predicted that the stones are going to be torn down, they believe His coming is very, very near. And with very anxious hearts, they have sat down with Him on the Mount of Olives and they have said: "Lord, how near is it? And what is the sign we look for that You're going to come into Your full parousia, Your full presence and be King?" And they must believe it's only a matter of days now before this is all going to happen. And the Lord says I'll answer your question, it can't happen until immediately after this time period. And they don't realize that this time period is thousands of years into the future from where they are. But our Lord makes it very clear that it isn't until that time period after which the second coming occurs. . .

2) Setup – How does the Lord set up this event?

The earth is held together by the power of the heavens, and when that power is not there, the chaos is going to be indescribable. And how God can even preserve life for a few moments, or days, a few weeks, so that the kingdom can be established, is only by His supernatural overruling of the chaos of those natural forces disintegrating. It's something we can only imagine. . .

3) Sign of His coming

It is a subjective genitive, the sign by which He reveals Himself. Not the sign, objective genitive, to which it points. The sign is the Son of man in heaven, in other words. Then shall appear the sign. What is it? It's the Son of man in heaven. That's the sign. It isn't a cross and it isn't a light detached from the Son of man, it is the Son of man in heaven. In the midst of this blackness will appear in blazing, infinite, unveiled glory, the Son of man. In fact, at the end of verse 30, it says He will come not just with glory but with what? Great glory. Glory like the world has never seen. The unveiled Shekinah. So much so that Revelation 6 says people scream for the rocks and the mountains to cover them up and hide them from the face of the One who sits on the throne, the One who comes in blazing glory. And I believe it's none other than the Lord Himself. . .

4) Strength – He comes with power

I mean can you imagine the power to just set the whole universe reeling, to set the whole earth rocking on its axis. He has power over the whole created universe. He has power over Satan. He has power over demons. He has power to slaughter all the ungodly Christ-rejecting unbelievers worldwide. He has power to establish His kingdom. He has power to redeem His elect. This is power without equal. Great power, great power. No power like it. He comes with the holy angels, comes to sit on the throne of His glory, chapter 25 verse 31 says. Great power. In fact, Isaiah calls it in chapter 63 the day of vengeance of our God when He treads out the winepress of His wrath.

5) Sorrow – Unsaved Gentiles will mourn; Jews will mourn -- but with godly sorrow leading to repentance of all Israel

6) Select – Collecting His select elect for His eternal kingdom

TEXT: Matthew 24:32-35

TITLE: LEARN FROM THE FIG TREE – END TIME EVENTS QUICKLY LEAD TO FINAL FULFILMENT

BIG IDEA:

THERE IS A CLOSE TEMPORAL RELATIONSHIP TO END TIME SIGNS AND THE RETURN OF CHRIST TO ESTABLISH HIS KINGDOM ON EARTH

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: Jesus has finished responding to the disciples' question of v. 3 and now is giving the implications of the whole chapter. When the signs of vv. 15–28 appear, they will know the end is near (vv. 4–14; note those signs that do not herald the end). This is then followed by a series of parables on imminence and readiness.

David Turner: This passage parabolically expresses the nearness of Jesus's coming (24:32–33) and solemnly affirms its certainty (24:34–35). Jesus's contemporaries are familiar with the fig tree's budding and blossoming in the spring and in the summer bearing fruit (24:32), and so he compares his coming to this process (24:33). In terms of the disciples' question in 24:3, the "sign" is the tree's spring budding and blossoming, and Jesus's "coming" is the summer bearing of fruit. When the disciples see the spring signs, they know that summer's coming is near. The affirmation of 24:34 depends on the eternal trustworthiness of Jesus's words (24:35).

Marvin Rosenthal: The Lord's teaching is unmistakably clear. The fig tree was a time indicator. When its branches became soft and it put forth leaves, the Jewish people knew that summer was near (getting close), but they did not know the exact time. The fig tree was a sign of approximation. Likewise, when the events described in Matthew 24:4-28 occur, men will know that Christ's coming (parousia) is near. Like the fig tree, those events will be a sign of approximation. Men of faith will know the general period of Christ's coming (parousia), but they will not know the hour or the day; therefore, the admonition to watchfulness (Matt. 24:42).

The Lord's coming (parousia) is a comprehensive whole. There is only one Second Coming. It includes the Rapture of the church [pre-wrath timeframe], the outpouring of God's wrath during the Day of the lord, and Christ's physical return in glory. The meaning of the word coming (parousia) demonstrates that fact. It means a coming and continuing presence. That would be contradicted by the concept of a coming at the beginning of the seventieth week and another at its end, as pretribulationism has often taught.

[Study the usage of parousia in the NT: Matt. 24:3, 27, 37, 39; 1 Cor. 15:23; 1 Thess. 2:1, 19; 3:13; 4:15; 5:23; 2 Thess. 2:8; James 5:7, 8; 2 Pet. 1:16; 3:4, 12; 1 John 2:28]

In each and every instance, the word coming (parousia) is either modified by the personal pronoun his or thy or, most frequently, with the definite article the. And in every case, his return is in the singular; not comings but coming. There is not even a hint – anywhere – of two separate comings. That is simple, unadorned, biblical fact. The often-heard suggestion that Christ will come first for His church and then return to the earth a second time seven years later with His church is an assumption with no biblical evidence to substantiate it. The argument that verses which speak of the coming sometimes refer to the Rapture and other times to Christ's return in glory, and therefore, that there must be two comings, is without basis. This argument total ignores the fact that Christ's coming (parousia) includes both His coming and consequent presence to accomplish His purposes. Some texts which speak of Christ's coming are emphasizing the Rapture and the Day of the Lord; others His return in power and glory. But these events are part of one composite whole – the Second Coming.

(:32a) PROLOGUE – GROWTH CYCLE OF THE FIG TREE TEACHES US

“Now learn the parable from the fig tree:”

I. (:32-33) END TIME SIGNS POINT TO SOON ULTIMATE FULFILMENT

A. (:32b) Lesson from Nature – Correlation between Fig Tree Sprouting Leaves and Soon Arrival of Summer

“when its branch has already become tender, and puts forth its leaves, you know that summer is near;”

Grant Osborne: The fig tree was the harbinger of summer. It was somewhat unusual among trees of Palestine in that it lost its leaves when winter hit. That makes it easier to note the change in spring when the sap begins to flow and the branches become “soft” or “tender” and ready to sprout leaves. Since this is easy to see with the absence of leaves, fig trees were one of the primary signs of the approach of summer. As the leaves began to unfurl, people's hearts surged with joy because the warm days of summer were around the corner.

The Bible Says: The changing of a tree's leaves is nature's way to indicate a change in season is approaching. Jesus used the fig tree as His example. He possibly used the fig tree because He was sitting on the Mount of Olives (Mark 13:3) where fig trees were present. Jesus cursed a fig tree near this very spot a few days earlier on His way into Jerusalem for not having any fruit despite being in leaf (Matthew 21:19). And the nearby village of Bethphage means “house of the unripe fig” indicating that fig trees were abundant in this area. The fig tree also undergoes several obvious leaf cycles throughout the year.

Because it was Passover (early/mid spring), a fig tree's branches were either already tender and putting forth its leaves or about to do so. Tender branches mean new growth. This takes place during the increasing warmth of spring. Everyone who saw tender branches in the fig tree would instantly recognize and know that summer, though not yet here, is near.

Using this visible and simple example of approaching change from nature, Jesus told His disciples, so, you too, when you see all these things, recognize that He is near. . .

Jesus wanted to His disciples to know that the Messiah's coming was near when they saw these events just as easily as they knew summer was near when they noticed the tender branches and new leaves on a fig tree.

For emphasis, Jesus added the expression, right at the door. This indicated that all these things would practically occur the instant before He appeared.

Assuring the disciples with His personal divine authority, Jesus said, Truly I say to you, this generation will not pass away until all these things take place.

<https://thebiblesays.com/commentary/matt/matt-24/matthew-2432-35/>

Leon Morris: Jesus turns from the signs that will precede his coming to the kind of conduct that is appropriate in his servants as they await him. As he has so often done throughout his ministry, he proceeds to teach by means of a parable, this one not so much a story (as many of them were) as a command to pay attention to the significance of the way the fig tree grows (REB, “Learn a lesson from the fig tree”). Most trees in first-century Palestine, we are told, kept their leaves throughout the year, but not the fig tree. This tree sheds its leaves in winter, but year by year the miracle takes place in spring. The branch becomes tender (the reference will be to the change that takes place when the sap rises in the spring) and puts forth leaves. There are other ways of knowing that the winter has come to an end, but anyone who has grown trees knows how satisfying it is to see the new leaves make their appearance. There is then no doubt that the harsh days of winter are gone and that summer is near. The fig tree does not bring the summer, but the appearance of its new leaves is a sure and certain indication that summer is now at hand.

B. (:33) Application to End Time Events – Correlation to End Time Signs and Soon Return of Christ

“even so you too, when you see all these things, recognize that He is near, right at the door.”

Leon Morris: The followers of Jesus are to be no less discerning than the orchardist. When the tokens of which he has spoken make their appearance, they are commanded, “know that it is near” (it is also possible to take the Greek in the sense “you know”); the imminence is underlined with right at the doors. It is also possible to understand the meaning as “he is near” (so NRSV), but this does not seem nearly as probable as “it”; the reference is to the whole series of events, not simply to the central person.

II. (:34) TARGET AUDIENCE = GENERATION VIEWING THE SIGNS

“Truly I say to you, this generation will not pass away until all these things take place.”

Warren Wiersbe: The generation alive on earth at that time will see these events take place.

Opposing View: Donald Hagner: The attempt to explain ἡ γενεὰ αὐτή, “this generation,” as the generation alive at the time of the parousia or more generally as the human race or people of God goes against the natural meaning of the phrase and makes the words irrelevant both to Jesus’ listeners and to Matthew’s readers. The fact that, as Lövestam has shown, the expression clearly alludes to a sinful generation, one ripe for judgment, fits the fall of Jerusalem (and not merely the end of the age, which is Lövestam’s conclusion).

III. (:35) CERTAINTY OF FULFILMENT GUARANTEED

“Heaven and earth will pass away, but My words shall not pass away.”

David Thompson: Jesus makes a promise that everything He has said will take place. He will not return until every one of these signs has been fulfilled—the world will experience God’s wrath. Heaven and earth will pass away, but His words will not pass away. What is interesting about this statement is that heaven and earth will not pass away until after Jesus Christ has come back and reigned for 1000 years (Rev. 21:1ff). However, His words will not pass away. The Word of God will be in existence forever. Now the generation that Jesus refers to – “this generation” – is a reference to Jewish people, who will be in existence when the signs take place. Keep in mind that one of the signs will be an extermination plot of the antichrist to destroy the Jews (Rev. 12:13, 17). If you are a Jewish person and you actually see these signs occurring, you will think the entire nation of Israel will be destroyed. However, Jesus makes it clear that Israel will not pass away. She will survive and He will return.

Donald Hagner: Heaven and earth, seemingly so permanent, are transitory and are destined to pass away in their present form with the dawning of the eschaton (cf. Isa 51:6; 2 Peter 3:7, 11–12). By contrast, the words of Jesus (οἱ δὲ λόγοι μου, “but my words”) will endure forever. They are thereby made the equivalent of the word of God, which is the usual contrasting element in such statements (e.g., Isa 40:8). In the present context, the emphasis falls not on the teaching of Jesus generally (as, e.g., in 7:24, 26) but on the authority and reliability of his words concerning the future. Though all else of the present order will pass away, the words of Jesus will not fail.

Stanley Saunders: In Isaiah 65:17, from which Matthew draws this image, and Revelation 21:1, the vision of heaven and earth passing away also reveals the glory of the new creation that follows God’s judgment of the world’s empires.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Since these signs have not yet occurred, how can one hold to the doctrine of imminency?
- 2) Why can’t the reference to “this generation” be to the disciples listening to the words of Jesus?
- 3) How does Jesus’ promise that “heaven and earth will pass away” inform our approach to those whose agenda demands that we preserve the environment at all costs?
- 4) Shouldn’t the reliability of Jesus’ prophecies regarding future events motivate us to study end time prophecies more diligently with the enthusiasm of expectation rather than avoiding the subject because of “controversy”?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Grant Osborne: As was said at 10:23, Jesus expected a lengthy period before the end (13:24–33; 19:28; 21:43; 23:32; 24:14; 28:19) and so cast his soon return in the light of the interim period between his advents. So “nearness” means it can occur in the near future, but God is the one who decides how near (see v. 36). The believer is to be ready at all times in light of the near and sudden (v. 27) return of Christ.

This will be the theme of the parables that will follow this. The signs will herald the end, but we must differentiate those that are not signs (vv. 4–14) from those that are (vv. 25–26). Moreover, we must realize that with our finite perspective we may not be reading the signs correctly. This is the problem with many who label themselves “prophecy preachers.” We dare not apply certitude to our reading of current events; the only certain thing is the appearance of Antichrist (2 Thess 2:3), whom the church has often prematurely identified as the popes (Reformation period) or Mussolini or Hitler, etc. Still, Jesus encourages us to note the signs.

John MacArthur: Could Jesus Come Today?

The theme of the second coming fills the New Testament. It is the great anticipatory reality of Christian living. We look back to the cross where our souls were redeemed. We look forward to the second coming where our bodies will be redeemed and we will enter into the fullness of our salvation. And we as Christians long for the day when Jesus comes because it is in that day that Satan will be defeated. It is in that day that the curse will be lifted. It is in that day that saints will be glorified, that Christ will be worshiped, that creation will be liberated, and that sin and death will be eliminated. And so with great anticipation do we look for the second coming of Jesus Christ. And we believe it is a real event that will happen as historically as did His first coming with just as far-reaching and glorious impact. . .

Having given them those things as indicators, He knows in their mind they still have a question. When all those signs begin, how long will it be? How long does it last until the kingdom is established? How long until the Son of God reigns as King of kings and Lord of lords? How long do the birth pains last? How long is it from the sign in heaven to the kingdom on earth? And so to summarize and act as a transition into the “when” question, He gives this parable and its explanation in verses 32 to 35. And I want you to look at it – it’s marvelous – and I want you to see four elements as it unfolds.

1) An uncomplicated analogy (:32)

Parables, then, had a twofold purpose: Parables unexplained hid the truth; parables explained made the truth clear. That was the twofold purpose of a parable. When Jesus gave a parable to the multitude or to the religious leaders and never explained it, it was a riddle to them. When He gave it to the disciples and explained it, it was an illustration that made things all that much more clear. So He says the reason I speak in parables is to hide things from the quote/unquote wise and prudent of this world and to reveal them unto babes. Parables explained become illustrations by which things are made clear. Parables unexplained are riddles by which things are made unclear. And so Jesus now speaks to the disciples and explains what He means exactly so that for them the parable becomes a living illustration making the truth very, very clear. It is an uncomplicated analogy.

2) An unmistakable application (:33)

What are all those things? The birth pains of verses 4 to 14, the abomination of desolation of verse 15, the need to flee because of great tribulation in verses 16 to 28. So the birth pains, the signal for the beginning of the birth pains, the calamities that come upon the earth, the subtle confusion of those who cry out, “The Messiah is here,” “The Messiah is there,” the sinful corruption like a dead carcass to be eaten by birds, and then the sign of the Son of Man in heaven as the sky goes black and the Son of Man appears in all His glory. All these things, He says, when you see all these things, it’s like the tree putting forth leaves, and you know that it is near. . .

That is the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. It is the end of man's day, it is the beginning of God's day. "Know that the kingdom is near," the Millennial kingdom of Revelation chapter 20 verse 4 and 5 is in view here, when Jesus Christ reigns with His redeemed saints for a thousand years upon the earth and Satan is bound. The glorious kingdom promised to Israel when Israel will be back in its land and will be preserved from all its enemies and become the servants of the Most High God, the time when Gentiles ten at a time will grab on to the skirt of a Jew and the Jew will take them to God that they may know the true God. It is the time promised by all the prophets of old, that great kingdom.

3) An unmistakable application (:34)

What generation will not pass away? [various views explained]

You cannot confuse the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans in 70 A.D. with the second coming of Jesus Christ. And they're not asking Him about the coming of Romans, they're asking about the coming of Christ. When they said in verse 3, "What shall be the sign of Thy coming?" they didn't ask, "What's the sign of the Romans coming?" and when He answered them, He answered their question. And their question had to do with His coming. Plus, there is no way under the sun that you can fit all of these events into 70 A.D. . .

This [next view] is probably the one you've been exposed to, that is this, that the fig tree is Israel. And when – and by the way, that doesn't say that, either, in the Scripture; it just says here's an illustration of a fig tree. Somebody along the line says the fig tree is Israel. Jesus didn't say that. So now you have stopped the analogy and you've got an allegory. And you have to tell us what the elements of the allegory refer to. So we say then that the fig tree is Israel and when it puts forth its leaves, I've heard, that is the statehood of Israel in 1948. Now, have you heard that view? Okay, that's sort of a popular view. That when Israel becomes a state – well, in the first place, Jesus didn't say that, and how in the world the disciples would have ever perceived the statehood of Israel in 1948 is pretty far-fetched.

And you have to remember this: Jesus is illustrating for them the things He's teaching them. He is trying to make clear what He has taught them. He is not trying to say something to them that is so infinitely obscure that it could never be perceived by anybody who lived before 1948. Plus, how can we conclude that the life pulsing through the fig tree and pushing out leaves is the statehood of Israel? Certainly if we're thinking – if we would use it that way, it would have to be if the tree was Israel and it started to put forth leaves, we would assume that it was life coming into Israel, right? And life coming into Israel would be spiritual, not physical, and Israel, though alive today, is one of the most secular nations on the face of the earth. So it doesn't make a good allegory of the spiritual revival of Israel.

And why would the Lord talk about only the statehood of Israel as if it were spiritual life pulsing through the nation and who is to say that the fig tree refers to them anyway when the context has nothing to do with the survival or restoration of the nation Israel but has to do with the second coming of Jesus Christ? So I think that also is an unacceptable, though imaginative, view.

What's left? My view. Now, my view is – you know, and I went into this pretty open-minded because, you know, I've thought about a lot of these things, and I was just reading, and it's so clear to me what He's saying. When the branch is tender and puts forth leaves, you know that judgment is near. So when you see all these things – all what things? The leaves. And what are the leaves? The birth pains, right? The sign in heaven. The attendant signs. All the things He's been describing through the whole chapter. When you see all those things, you know that judgment is near. And this generation – what generation? The “this” has to modify the people who see all those things. This generation that sees all those things will not end until the rest is fulfilled. . .

An unprecedented alteration (:35)

And the sum of it is in verse 35: “Heaven and earth shall come to an end.” As we know it, heaven and earth will end. The earth that we know, the heaven that we know, will cease.

Now, just exactly all that that embodies is very, very difficult for us to perceive. We've read much of Revelation and many things written by Isaiah the prophet and others, so we know that heaven and earth are going to pass away as we know them, and in their place is going to come a new creation – a new creation.

Finally, Jesus said this: “Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My words” – what? – “shall not pass away.” That is an unchanging authority. And He closes the parable with an unchanging authority. “My Word shall not pass away.” In Luke 16:17, He said heaven and earth will pass away and it's easier for them to do that than for one tittle out of the law to pass away. He said not one jot or one tittle in Matthew 5:18 will pass away until all is fulfilled. In John 10:35, He said Scripture cannot be broken. And so if we believe the Word of God, we believe this is going to happen – it's going to happen.

Matthew McCraw: His return gives us hope that all of His promises will be fulfilled. His return causes us to be careful in our conduct. His return reminds us of the necessity to share the Gospel with others. His return encourages us to remember that this world will pass away and everything will be made new. His return confirms that we will be able to see our friends and family who trusted Jesus as Lord. His return guarantees an end to sin and its terrible effects. His return brings answers to so many questions. His return settles the end times debates (which I so look forward to). His return wipes away every tear. His return settles every debt. His return heals every disease. His return starts the perfect rest for all of us. And so much more!

He will soon be at the door! He will return!

TEXT: Matthew 24:36-44

TITLE: BE DISCERNING . . . BE ALERT . . . BE PREPARED -- FOR THE RETURN OF CHRIST IN JUDGMENT

BIG IDEA:

SPIRITUAL VIGILANCE NEEDED SINCE THE EXACT TIMING OF CHRIST'S RETURN IN JUDGMENT IS UNKNOWN

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: This begins the next major section of the Olivet Discourse, the parables on watchfulness (24:36 – 25:30). This passage provides the thesis for the section, alert vigilance as we await the end, and leads into the parables that follow.

God has not seen fit to reveal the time of the eschaton; not even Christ knows the date. As a result, people will be living lives unaware and unprepared; many of them will be left for judgment when the Lord comes. There is only one conclusion: be continually vigilant and live lives of readiness for the Master's return.

Donald Hagner: Eschatology is never presented for the sake of mere information but always and consistently as the motivation for ethical living. Again, the fact of the parousia, not the time of the parousia, is what matters. The evangelist stresses the need to be prepared for that coming reality.

Richard Gardner: The sayings that follow in verses 37-44 all depict situations in which a lack of readiness or vigilance spells disaster for persons when an unexpected trauma befalls them. Such was the case with the carefree contemporaries of Noah, engrossed in the pursuit of everyday life when the flood literally took them by storm! (vv. 37-39; cf. Gen. 6—8; 2 Pet. 2:5). Such is the case with a homeowner who is asleep at night, blissfully unaware that a thief has entered unannounced and is burglarizing his belongings (vv. 43-44; cf. 1 Thess. 5:2-4; Rev. 3:3; 16:15).

And such will be the case at the end as pairs of men and women labor at their customary tasks of farming and milling, when God's own harvest operation suddenly commences and separates the prepared from the unprepared (vv. 40-42; cf. 13:36-43).

These assorted pictures and comparisons support the summons to vigilance in verses 42 and 44. Only if suitably prepared will Jesus' followers be able to welcome his sudden coming and the judgment it brings.

David Turner: At this point Jesus moves from speaking predictively to speaking paraenetically. From now on, his goal is not to provide additional information to answer the disciples' question (24:3) but to exhort them on the proper response to that information. This may not be what the disciples want to know, but it is what they need to know. This material is mainly parabolic. The first (24:36–42) and last (25:31–46) sections are not parables, but both utilize quasi-parabolic comparisons (24:37–39; 25:32). W. Davies and Allison (1997: 374) point out that 24:36 sets the tone for the rest of the discourse: ignorance of the time of Jesus's coming should result in constant alertness.

Jesus begins by drawing a lesson on alertness from history (24:36–42). The next three segments underline the lesson on alertness by drawing from scenes from everyday life:

- (1) an owner of a house and a thief (24:43–44),
- (2) a faithful and an evil slave (24:45–51), and
- (3) thoughtful and foolish bridesmaids (25:1–13).

Constant alertness (24:42–44, 46, 50; 25:13) is mandatory, since the time of Jesus’s coming is unknowable. Alertness must be accompanied by dependable stewardship (25:14–30) and compassion toward needy disciples (25:31–46).

William Hendriksen: Spiritual and moral circumspection and forethought are required; preparedness is necessary. The watchful person has his loins girded and his lamps burning (Luke 12:35). It is in that condition that he looks forward to the coming of the Bridegroom.

I. (:36) MYSTERY REGARDING THE EXACT TIMING OF THE RETURN OF CHRIST IN JUDGMENT

“But of that day and hour no one knows, not even the angels of heaven, nor the Son, but the Father alone.”

John MacArthur: In other words, Jesus’ knowledge in His incarnation was qualified by what the Father had revealed to Him. And the Father revealed things to Him through Scripture; that is, the Old Testament, as He studied the Scripture, through experience as He walked in the world and saw the moving of the power of God, and through direct revelation. But Jesus limited His knowledge to what the Father chose to reveal to Him. He didn’t have to do that but He chose to do that to play the role of a servant to accomplish the redemption of mankind. It’s a very important concept so that when it says He humbled Himself and took upon Him the form of a servant, was made in fashion as a man, and so forth, it means that He limited the use of those attributes. And if you studied, for example, in the passages that deal with His early life, you will remember that it says Jesus grew in wisdom and stature, you remember, and favor with God and man. He grew in wisdom. . .

Now, it is my own personal feeling that after the resurrection, this was revealed to Him. That when He came out of the grave in the glory of His resurrection life, it says in Matthew 28:18, He said to His disciples, “All authority is given unto Me in heaven and earth.” And I think what that’s saying is nothing is missing; I have authority over all things. And then in Acts 1:7, He said this: “But unto you it is not given to know the times and the seasons which My Father has put in His own power;” and He doesn’t include Himself anymore. He says “unto you it isn’t given.” So it may well be that after the resurrection, His knowledge was complete. It’s as if the Father only revealed to Him the next great event, and He never revealed to Him the full moment of His second coming until He had already come out of the grave and accomplished the resurrection, and then the Father opened to Him the next event in His marvelous, marvelous work. . .

And so we don’t know. That moment, we don’t know. And that’s – there’s a reason for that. Because the Lord wants every generation to live in expectancy, every generation to live – are you ready for this word? – in preparedness. We don’t know what generation it’s going to come upon. But when it comes, it’s going to come in a holocaust and it’s going to come rapid-fire. And we don’t know what generation that will be, and even the generation that comes on isn't going to know the exact moment. So Christians ever since the New Testament have always lived in the eagerness of the coming of Christ.

Stu Weber: This teaching is also a warning to those who claim to know the time of Christ's return. Such claims have been made for centuries, and, as each one passes, the Messiah has still not come. One would think that people would learn from experience, if not from Jesus' own teaching. These speculations are foolish and disobedient. They ignore Jesus' teaching to believers to be obedient and ready at all times.

Craig Blomberg: Verse 36 proves equally significant for Christology. Christ's words disclose his voluntary limitation of the independent exercise of his divine attributes (cf. Phil 2:6-8). Jesus was obviously not bodily omnipresent while he walked on earth. Mark 6:5 describes some restrictions on his omnipotence. Here we have a limitation on his omniscience. Christians who balk at the implications of this verse reflect their own docetism (the early Christian heresy of not accepting the full humanity of Jesus) and lack a full appreciation for the extent of God's condescension in the incarnation and in the various human limitations he took upon himself.

D. A. Carson: The gist of v.36 is clear enough. Jesus' disciples are morally bound to repress all desires to know what no one knows but the Father—not even angels (cf. 18:10; Ezra 4:52) or the Son. If the Son himself does not know the time of the Parousia, “how cheerfully should we his followers rest in ignorance that cannot be removed, trusting in all things to our heavenly Father’s wisdom and goodness, striving to obey his clearly revealed will, and leaning on his goodness for support” (Broadus).

II. (:37-39) BE DISCERNING REGARDING THE RETURN OF CHRIST IN JUDGMENT

A. (:37) Analogy to the Days of Noah

“For the coming of the Son of Man will be just like the days of Noah.”

Leon Morris: There is a resemblance of the coming of the Son of man to the coming of the Flood. The time until then is likened to the days of Noah. . . when Noah and his family and the animals entered the ark, the Flood came very swiftly. The emphasis is on the suddenness of the deluge. “So,” Jesus says, “will be the coming of the Son of man.” We get the picture of a long time of waiting and of a sudden act at the conclusion.

Craig Blomberg: Jesus now illustrates the unexpectedness and unpredictability of his return by comparing it with the arrival of the flood in Noah's day (vv. 37-39). At that time the world's wicked were caught totally by surprise as they went about the ordinary activities of daily life, including festive events, oblivious to their impending destruction. Noah and his seven faithful family members were prepared but still did not know the specific timing of the cataclysm until the last moment (Gen 6-7). Compare the repetition of these two points in 1 Thess 5:1-3 and 4-6, respectively. So also Christ's return will interrupt people in the ordinary activities of life.

R. T. France: If the time of the parousia is unknown, it follows that people will be caught unawares. The previous mention of the parousia in v. 27 has used the image of lightning to portray both its unmistakable nature and also its suddenness. It is a universal event, not a hole-and-corner occurrence (in the wilderness or the store-rooms, v. 26) which most of the world would be able to ignore. Everyone will be affected by it. In all these ways the sudden and universal onset of the flood as described in Gen 7:6–24 provides a powerful analogy; people were caught unawares, no one could evade it, and only those who had made advance preparation escaped—a point which will be picked up especially in the parables of 25:1–30. The description of normal life in v. 38 underlines the lack of any prior warning: things were carrying on just as they had always done (as the “scoffers” observe in 2 Peter 3:4). But the time of normal banality is potentially also the time of danger.

Homer Kent: In an age of great wickedness (Gen 6), men went about their daily living undisturbed by impending doom. . . . But the flood took away all the wicked, so that only the righteous were left to inherit the earth. Likewise the coming of the Son of man, following the Great Tribulation (vv. 29-31) will remove the wicked, in order that the faithful remnant who have come out of the Tribulation may participate in the Millennial blessings (cf. 25:31-46; 13:30, 41-43, 49, 50).

B. (:38-39) Ignore God’s Warnings of Sudden Judgment at Your Own Peril

1. (:38-39a) Worldly Self Indulgent Lifestyle Lacks Spiritual Discernment

“For as in those days which were before the flood they were eating and drinking, they were marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered the ark, 39 and they did not understand until the flood came and took them all away;”

John MacArthur: It’s almost unbelievable that they knew not, that the people in the time of Noah didn’t know it was going to rain because they had had somebody telling them that for 120 years. Noah was a preacher of righteousness. And he preached righteousness and judgment. And he gave them a very large sign of coming judgment by building a massive boat, an ark. Literally the word means “wooden chest.” This was the symbol and the sign, 120 years in building, that God was going to bring a devastation to drown the world. And it says until the Flood came and engulfed them, they didn’t realize it. They just went on eating, drinking, marrying, and giving in marriage. In other words, they went on with the routines of life, literally ignoring the preaching of judgment, literally ignoring the sign and the symbol of the coming Flood. And so it will be in the day of the second coming of Christ.

Grant Osborne: The picture here is of normal life, eating and drinking at meals and parties, getting married and giving their children in marriage (with present participles stressing the continuous nature of the activity). In itself it is not a negative picture, but these were a people obsessed with their daily lives, giving no thought whatsoever to their obligations to God. All this was to change when “Noah entered the ark,” but then it would be too late.

Donald Hagner: The people of Noah’s day were oblivious to all else than their own pleasurable living. And they had no inkling of the judgment that was to come upon them until it was too late: “they did not know [οὐκ ἔγνωσαν (i.e., the imminent danger)] until the flood [κατακλυσμός] came and swept them away.” The reference to Noah entering the ark in v. 38 is very close to the language of the LXX of Gen 7:7. The parousia of the Son of Man will in a similar way come suddenly upon an unsuspecting generation that is carrying on its ordinary activities. This fact leads to the main exhortation of the passage in v. 42.

2. (:39b) Judgment Will Be Sudden and Unpredictable

“so shall the coming of the Son of Man be.”

Grant Osborne: The danger of becoming lackadaisical is simply too great, for judgment will be swift, sudden, and irrevocable.

III. (:40-42) BE ALERT FOR THE RETURN OF CHRIST IN JUDGMENT

A. (:40-41) Two Examples of Sudden and Surprising Return of Christ in Judgment

1. (:40) Men Working in the Field

“Then there shall be two men in the field; one will be taken, and one will be left.”

Your view of the timing of the Rapture tends to dictate which category you place these two groups of people into. Since I hold to the pre-wrath Rapture position, I would interpret the ones “taken” as raptured and the ones “left” – then left for judgment. Those who hold to the pre-trib position would take the opposite view – cf. Robert Gundry:

Robert Gundry: The taking away of people by the flood favors that being taken along has to do with judgment at the Son of Man’s coming (compare the separation of the wicked out from among the righteous in the parables of the tares and foul fish [13:30, 40–42, 49–50]). Then being left means being spared from judgment. The accent doesn’t rest on the separation of people in proximity so much as on the occurrence of this separation during the round of daily activities and therefore unexpectedly—unless you’re watching.

2. (:41) Women Grinding at the Mill

“Two women will be grinding at the mill; one will be taken, and one will be left.”

John MacArthur: And then He gets very specific in verse 40 and 41. “Then shall two be in the field, one shall be taken, the other left. Two grinding at the mill, the one shall be taken, and the other left.” The word “one” in verse 40 is masculine in gender. The “one” in verse 41 is feminine in gender. That means verse 40 speaks of a man in the field, two men in the field, one taken, one left. Verse 41 of women, two women grinding at the mill, one taken and the other left. The man’s task in that particular agricultural part of the world in that time was to be in the field and the women were there with the stone, the mill, grinding that which was harvested by the men. And so it’s just life as usual, and in the midst of the routine of life, one shall be taken.

What do we mean, “taken”? I’ve heard people say this means the Rapture. You can’t bring the Rapture in here. This is long after that. [Unless you hold to the pre-wrath view.] This is talking about taken in judgment. Go back to verse 39. “Till the cataclysm came and took them away.” It’s based on that imagery. It’s based on that picture of the flood sweeping men away into death. Two are going to be in the field when that final devastating flood of fire comes. And one is taken in judgment. Two at the mill and one is taken in judgment. And the other left – the other left – what are they left for? They’re left to go into what? Into the kingdom. And they become those who populate the Millennial kingdom. They are the redeemed. So you’ll have people on the job. Some will be believers and some will be unbelievers. The unbelievers will be swept away and the believers will be preserved.

By the way, that separation process is described in detail in the judgment of the sheep and goats in Matthew 25:31 to 46, where He takes the goats on the one hand and sends them into everlasting punishment, His sheep on the other hand and gives them the kingdom. So they are left. Very important. They are left for the kingdom. So it is this that we have to keep in mind. When the Millennial kingdom comes and begins, the people who will be left to go into it will be believers who were not swept away in the judgment of all the ungodly. So the kingdom on earth, the Millennial kingdom, will be populated by those believers who have lived through the reign of terror of the antichrist and he has not destroyed them. They're still alive when Christ comes. Christ sweeps away in a holocaust of judgment all the ungodly, but the godly that still remain and are alive will go into His eternal – rather, into His Millennial kingdom to populate that kingdom. So that kingdom is populated, then, by physical beings, real people like we are, who've lived through antichrist's reign of terror, who believed in the truth of the gospel and were not destroyed. Maybe some of them even believed at the last moment.

Stu Weber: By way of specific illustration and application, Jesus gave two examples from the contemporary lifestyle of his day. The two men working in the field and the two women grinding grain at the mill represented the average citizen. The message of this was, "Everyone needs to heed these warnings." One of each pair was prepared because he or she knew Jesus' teachings, had watched for the signs, and had remained obedient.

The other in each pair was unprepared, because he or she had either been ignorant of Jesus' teaching or else simply ignored them and not lived according to the righteous standards of the king and his kingdom. Such people were taken from the scene when the king returned to rule. Jesus' point was: be prepared. His arrival will be sudden and unpredictable.

Leon Morris: Here, too, there is separation: one is taken and one is left. In both the field and the mill the emphasis is on division. The coming of Jesus marks a complete and permanent division. Jesus makes clear that the coming of the Son of man does not mean that all indiscriminately will enter into the joys of that day. Those who have chosen to live without God will find their choice respected when the great day comes. It will be the portion of the godless to be without God.

B. (:42) Exhortation: Be Alert for the Lord's Coming in Judgment

"Therefore be on the alert, for you do not know which day your Lord is coming."

John MacArthur: But the word here is – verse 42 – be alert. It's a present imperative, be continually alert. Every generation, every person, be alert, "For you know not what hour your Lord does come." It's a cry for constant vigilance, constant alertness. He will come and men who recognize that He is coming will be alert to that coming, spiritually aware.

Robert Gundry: To stay awake means to keep watching for the events that will signal the nearness of the Son of Man's coming. "Therefore" bases the command to stay awake on the already stated impossibility of knowing the day and hour of the Son of Man's coming. The consequent redundancy of "because you don't know at what particular day your Lord is coming" adds further emphasis on that impossibility.

IV. (:43-44) BE PREPARED FOR THE RETURN OF CHRIST IN JUDGMENT

A. (:43) Parable of the Householder and Thief

"But be sure of this, that if the head of the house had known at what time of the night the thief was coming, he would have been on the alert and would not have allowed his house to be broken into."

Michael Wilkins: The responsibility for the safety of each home lay on the master of the house, since modern conceptions of police force were nonexistent. Some protection was provided by military forces for rulers and for the upper classes, but not for individual homes. If a homeowner knew that a thief was coming, he would do whatever was necessary to be prepared, whether that meant staying up all night, or patrolling each opening, or even enlisting the help of neighbors.

Homer Kent: If the household master had been watchful, he could have prevented damage and loss.

“Broken up” – Literally, dug through, a reference to houses of sun-dried brick in Palestine, comparatively easy to enter. Believers have less excuse for carelessness than this master, who had not been forewarned that a thief was coming.

B. (:44) Exhortation: Be Prepared

“For this reason you be ready too; for the Son of Man is coming at an hour when you do not think He will.”

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How do you stay alert and prepared for the Lord’s return?
- 2) How can normal, everyday living contribute to the neglect of greater spiritual and eternal realities?
- 3) In light of Christ’s admission that not even He knows the date and time of His return, how can any credence be given to those who speculate and try to guess the date or timeframe?
- 4) How can people be so unprepared for an event which is preceded by such dramatic signs as those detailed in the preceding paragraphs?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

John MacArthur: Ready or Not – Here I Come!

It is a text that deals with the suddenness and the unexpectedness of the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. . .

Look at verse 36. Here’s the key to the rest of that section. “But of that day and hour knoweth no one. No, not the angels of heaven nor the Son but My Father only.” And with that statement, He directs their thinking to the issue of when and tells them the when is an unknown. The signs that precede the second coming have been clearly given. They are unmistakably detailed here in Matthew 24 and also in Revelation chapters 6 through 18. You can’t miss those. And the generation that is alive during that period will see those signs. They will be observable signs. They will be worldwide signs. They will be unmistakable indications of the collapse of the world and its systems as well as the universe. But the specific moment, that is – notice it in verse 36 – the day and hour are not known. They’re not known. And we must remind ourselves that He is speaking of a day and an hour. . .

Now, listen. The time period of the second coming will be known, it has to be known. It has to be known because of all the sequence of events. The abomination of desolation will be an historical event. The tremendous worldwide conflicts, the wars, the rumors of wars, the nation rising against nation, kingdom against kingdom, the famines, the pestilences, the descriptions of Revelation 6 to 18 where the fresh water is devastated and the salt water is devastated and the sea is turned to blood and where the day is set off its normal cycle and daylight is shortened and there’s a greater amount of darkness, and all of those events that are very observable will indicate that it is the general period and the general time of the second coming. But the day and the hour will not be known. That will come with suddenness in an unexpected way. The period of the Tribulation, very clearly indicated, and we know the coming of the Son of Man, verse 29 says, is immediately after the Tribulation. But how immediately, we don’t know.

Grant Osborne: All three images used here center on the unexpected nature of Jesus’ soon return and the necessity of being ready at all times for his parousia. The implication is that the consequences of being unprepared are far too serious to ignore. The only possible response is to maintain constant vigilance, to make certain that we are always “ready.” Bruner says it well: “Our not knowing is necessary (v. 36) but dangerous (vv. 37ff.) because we might use not knowing as an excuse for not acting.... But disciples’ not knowing when should make them alert lest they be unprepared for the knowable that of his coming.”

This theme of ethical responsibility stemming from the imminent return of Christ governs the ensuing parables and becomes a major theme in the rest of the NT. Every major passage on the Lord’s return emphasizes right conduct on our part (cf. 1 Cor 15:58; 2 Cor 5:9–10; 1 Thess 5:8–11; 2 Thess 2:13–15; the perseverance theme in Revelation). In addition, in several places a statement that “the end is near” or some such saying is used to anchor ongoing ethical responsibility (cf. Rom 13:11; 1 Cor 7:29–31, 10:11–13; Jas 5:7–9; 1 Pet 4:7–11).

William Barclay: Here is the practical outcome of all that has gone before. If the day and the hour of the coming of Christ are known to none save God, then all life must be a constant preparation for that coming. And, if that is so, there are certain basic sins.

(1) To live without watchfulness invites disaster. Thieves do not send a letter saying when they are going to burgle a house; the principal weapon in their wicked undertakings is surprise; therefore a householder who has valuables in the house must maintain a constant guard. But to get this picture right, we must remember that the watching of the Christian for the coming of Christ is not that of terror-stricken fear and shivering apprehension; it is the watching of eager expectation for the coming of glory and joy.

(2) The spirit which leads to disaster is the spirit which says there is plenty of time. It is the comfortable delusion of the servant that he will have plenty of time to put things to rights before his master returns.

J. Ligon Duncan: Jesus’ Prophecy of Consummation of the Kingdom: Just Like the Days of Noah

There are two or three mistakes that we could make approaching the issue of the end time. One mistake is to think that all such discussion of the end times is speculative and impractical. I think it has already become apparent to us as we have looked through Jesus' instructions that they are anything but impractical. Every one of Jesus' instructions in Matthew 24 as we have studied so far, is something that we can put into practice today. Yes, it is true that we can say with one of the great divines, that it is possible to think more about the events surrounding His coming, than to think about the one who is coming. Yes, that can happen. That would be improper for us, would it not, to care more about the time table, and the accompaniment than it would be to think about the one who we long to come. That would be inappropriate. But the teaching of the New Testament on the end times, the teachings on Eschatology is eminently practical. And we have seen example after example of that so far.

Another mistake that we could make, and there are many who make it, is simply do not believe that Jesus is coming at all. Perhaps you have had friends who have made jokes about the delay of the coming of our Lord Jesus. They say, it has been two thousand years, are you seriously still waiting for this occur. And they mock. And they make fun. And Jesus in this very passage today, makes it clear that on that day, unless their hearts are changed, they will be just like those who lived in the days of Noah. Mocking and laughing and going on with life and surprised with His coming.

There is a last mistake that we could make however, and that is to be unprepared for His coming. Note, Jesus' coming is something that often times terrifies sincere believers. They have grown up on the horror tales of the end times and they are actually frightened of the thought of the Lord Jesus coming. And though it is appropriate that we would have a godly fear at the thought of the great judgment of the Lord. Ultimately the New Testament wants Christians to be excited about the second coming of the Lord. And so the issue of how to be prepared is a very practical issue. And it is in fact something that Jesus is going to spend much time on through chapter 25. But I would like to look with you today and see some of the answers to these very kinds of concerns that we find in the passage that we are going to study.

I. The uncertainty of the exact time of the return of Christ – Christians must be watchful.

Jesus first of all, tells us that His coming, the time of His coming is unknown. Because He wants to exhort us against the tendency of our nature to be sleepy. To be idle, to be lazy in preparation for His coming, so He tells us this in order to exhort us, to encourage us to be faithful in watching. But He also tells us this in order to encourage us in light of the very sober note that He is going to strike in verses 37-41 which we are going to look at in just a minute. Jesus makes it very clear that the second coming is not going to a happy day for those who are unprepared. But precisely because He wants it to be a glorious day for us. He tells us that He wants us to be prepared. And as we are prepared, it will be a glorious day of triumph for us. Not something that we look forward to with dread, but something with which we join our prayers in with the saints of all ages, come Lord Jesus, come quickly. Amen, becomes our prayer.

II. Unbelievers will not look for the second coming of Christ.

Unbelievers aren't going to be expecting this. They are not going to be looking out for this. Christ's coming is going to be surprising to those who are unprepared by faith. And again, we learn another lesson by this. If it is going to be surprising for those who are unprepared by faith, then we must be prepared for that coming by faith. That is how you prepare for the coming of the Lord, in a faith relationship with Jesus Christ. That is how you prepare. In this passage, Jesus explains Himself further by a comparison. He compares the days of His coming, to the days of Noah. And this is to highlight the sudden and unexpected nature of His second coming. People, He says are going to be wrapped up in their own affairs. They are going to be eating and drinking. Business as usual. Marrying and giving in marriage, business as usual. They are going to be wrapped up in their own affairs, to the extent that they are blind to the greater realities all around them.

III. The second coming will bring about a final and eternal distinction between believers and unbelievers.

It is clear that the distinction is in a moment in the twinkling of an eye, there is going to be this separation between those who have embraced Christ and those who reject Him. Christ's coming is going to bring about a final division, just like He promised. J. C. Ryle catches the meaning of this passage perfectly. He says there shall be no time for parting words or a change of mind, when the Lord appears. No second chance. No time for parting words. It will be like one person working in the field, and judgment has come. It will be like two women working together and judgment has come. Blessing on one and judgment on the other. Blessing on one, and judgment on the other. Have you taken account of your own soul today?

TEXT: Matthew 24:45-51

TITLE: CONTRAST BETWEEN FAITHFUL AND WICKED SLAVES

BIG IDEA:

THE FAITHFUL SLAVE FEEDS THE HOUSEHOLD WHILE AWAITING THE RETURN OF THE MASTER

INTRODUCTION:

These exhortations to spiritual vigilance and alertness and faithful stewardship in anticipation of the return of Christ have application not only to the time of the Tribulation but also to those of us ministering now in the church age in anticipation of the imminent Rapture at an unknown point in time. The importance of taking seriously the responsibility of feeding the flock of God with the nourishment of the Word of God is clearly in view and the promised reward should be an encouragement to all engaged in such activity.

Ray Stedman: This parable is clearly for the instruction of those who are awaiting the Lord's return. The master of the household is gone but he has entrusted certain work to his steward until he returns. That work is primarily a ministry to the rest of the household, and notably, "to give them their food at the proper time." It is clearly addressed to the disciples and to those who will follow in their steps in the ministry of feeding and shepherding the church of Jesus Christ. Doubtless it includes any who have a ministry of teaching: pastors, evangelists, prophets, elders, Sunday School teachers, children's workers and Bible class leaders. It takes in any who have gifts of teaching, whether exercised in a church building or in homes. It includes theological professors, editors of magazines, radio teachers, missionaries, youth workers, and many others.

Give Them Food!

Since this is the first parable in the series it probably points up the most essential element in the matter of watching. The wise servant is given one major and primary responsibility: to feed the household at the proper time. If this is rightly done, the household will keep watching; if it is neglected, the household will languish and starve, and will not be ready when the Lord returns.

The task, therefore, of any leader within the church is to unfold the message of the Bible. Every pastor should set a loaded table before his congregation, not only that they might eat and grow, but also that they might learn from him how to draw from the Scriptures for themselves the spiritual nourishment they need. The Bible is wonderfully adapted to this purpose: there is milk for the beginner, bread for the more advanced, and strong meat to challenge and feed the mature. It is so designed that when books of the Bible are taught through consecutively they will cover a wide variety of subjects and yet keep truth marvelously in balance.

<https://www.raystedman.org/new-testament/matthew/in-the-mean-time>

Grant Osborne: The primary theme is the necessity of proper conduct insofar as no one knows when Christ will return. A secondary theme is the certainty of judgment for those who are not ready. When Christ appears, everyone will be accountable for how they are living at that time.

R. T. France: The readiness of the good slave consists not in sitting by the window watching for his master, but in getting on with the job he has been given, while the fault of the bad slave is in his assumption that the master will not be back soon and that therefore he will not be held to account. The eschatological themes of delay and imminence are thus interwoven, and applied to the question of the disciple's responsibility during the time of waiting.

David Turner: The vivid imagery in 24:36–51 warns against such a preoccupation with the tasks and pleasures of daily life that it does not take into account the possibility of imminent divine judgment. Jesus's disciples must be constantly aware that life as they know it could suddenly be terminated by Jesus's coming. They must be like the dependable slave, not like Noah's oblivious generation, the homeowner who does not expect a burglar, or the wicked slave. Disciples must not take up a nonchalant lifestyle that is inconsistent with Jesus's unexpected coming.

Robert Gundry: In charge of the household, this slave could abuse his authority by beating his fellow slaves, who make up the rest of his master's domestic help, and also by carousing with drunkards, who represent other false disciples. Together, they waste their resources on partying instead of sharing them with fellow slaves, who represent true disciples proclaiming the gospel, living openly according to Jesus' teachings, and fleeing resultant persecution. The abuse and the carousing breed carelessness, so that the master's coming—though delayed, and precisely because delayed—takes the slave in charge by surprise. “On a day” and “at an hour” denote the next shortest and very shortest units of time used by people then and therefore stress again the impossibility of knowing beforehand the exact time of the Son of Man's coming. “Slice him in two” warns of horrible judgment for unbrotherly behavior, and “put his portion with the hypocrites” means that Jesus will judge as false those professing disciples who engage in such behavior. As false, their portion—that is, their inheritance—will be to spend eternity with the hypocrites, namely, the scholars and Pharisees of chapter 23, who are destined for “the judgment [consisting] of gehenna” (23:33). “Weeping” arises out of sorrow over this fate, and “gritting of teeth” arises out of the pain associated with it (compare the figures of being sliced in two and elsewhere of hellfire). “There” refers to gehenna, hell, as the place of punishment..

William Barclay: Rejection is based on failure in duty, and reward is based on fidelity. The servant who fulfilled his duty faithfully was given a still greater place; and the servant who failed was severely dealt with. The inevitable conclusion is that, when he comes, Jesus Christ can find us employed in no better and greater task than in doing our duty.

Stu Weber: In light of the future reality of hardship and ultimate salvation, we must stay ready for Christ's return (and his rewards) at all times by loving obedience.

Jeffrey Crabtree: The household, then, belongs to the Lord. Jesus is the master. He assigns ministry responsibilities to His servants. He expects effective time management. He rewards long-term faithfulness and He punishes hypocrisy and laziness. Each of His servants must keep serving Him the whole time He is away and be serving Him when He returns (Tit. 2:11-14; Lk. 21:34-36). Jesus spoke this parable not to the ungodly but to His disciples about their responsibility to faithful service. He expected them to stay busy doing the task He assigned them until He comes for them (Lk. 12:47-48; Nolland 1000). He also expected them to teach this obligation to all disciples (28:20).

William Hendriksen: The lesson of the parable, therefore, is this “Be and remain actively loyal to the Master, sensibly and joyfully carrying out the task assigned by him, in the interest of those who are precious to him.”

I. (:45) CHARACTERIZATION OF A MODEL SLAVE

A. Two Primary Attributes

1. Faithfulness

“Who then is the faithful”

2. Wisdom

“and sensible slave”

R C Sproul: We are either slaves of God or slaves of sin. Nobody is autonomous. We are not our own. We have been bought with a price. Jesus raises the question of fidelity – one who can be trusted; one who is consistent in allegiance to his owner. The wise slave works with insight. Responsible to provide the food and provide it on time.

Bibleone.net: The word translated faithful is the Greek word pistos and comes from the root Greek word peitho, which means “worthy of belief, trust, or confidence.” It speaks of a person who is trustworthy and consistent in the performance of his duty to God and to others. . .

The word “wise” here is the Greek word phronimos, which comes from the Greek root word phroneo meaning “to think or have a mindset.” The activity represented by this word involves the “soul” (a person’s will, affections, and conscience); a word that always refers to a person’s “life.”

Wisdom from God is to be prized above all earthly gain (Proverbs 3:13, 14; 8:11) and can only be appropriated by the study and comprehension of God’s Word.

http://bibleone.net/print_tbs100.html

Grant Osborne: The number of slaves a person owned was a sign of status in the ancient world. Slaves were often highly educated and were doctors, teachers, accountants, and workers for every function in a home. Wealthy homes would have dozens of slaves, some whose job was little more than doing the mistress’s hair or folding napkins for dinner parties. Slaves were allowed to own property, earn wages, and even purchase their freedom.

The theme of this parable is the search for a “faithful and wise” leader who can be trusted as a head slave. Both are discipleship terms, with “faithful” (πιστός) found again in 25:21, 23 of the “good and faithful slaves” who used their “talents” for the benefit of their master, and “wise” (φρόνιμος, meaning “prudent, discerning”) used in 7:24; 10:16 as a wisdom term for understanding the situation and doing what the master commands (cf. 25:2, 4, 8, 9).

B. Primary Responsibility of Stewardship and Governance

“whom his master put in charge of his household”

Leon Morris: He does not owe his position to his own deliberate choice: his master has appointed him over his household. But being there, he is responsible. It is his task to be sure that the members get their food, and get it at the proper time.

C. Primary Function of Providing Proper and Timely Nourishment

“to give them their food at the proper time?”

II. (:46-47) CASE OF THE FAITHFUL SLAVE

A. (:46) His Actions

“Blessed is that slave whom his master finds so doing when he comes.”

B. (:47) His Reward

“Truly I say to you, that he will put him in charge of all his possessions.”

Warren Wiersbe: Jesus did not amplify the truth here, but from other Scriptures we learn that one reward for obedient service will be ministry in the kingdom that He will establish on earth (Luke 19:11ff.). The reward for obedient service is the capacity for greater service. Not to have a place of ministry in His kingdom would, to me, be a tremendous loss.

The Bible Says: One of the primary rewards Jesus seeks to give those who are faithful in this life and with this creation is to reign with Him over the earth in the next life and in the new creation, in love, service, and harmony (Romans 8:17; 2 Timothy 2:11). The servant kings of the new creation will bring their glory into the New Jerusalem (Revelation 21:24).

Jesus promised, “He who overcomes, I will grant to him to sit down with Me on My throne, as I also overcame and sat down with My Father on His throne” (Revelation 3:21). The word for “overcome” in that verse is the Greek word, “nikao.” It means “to conquer” or “to win the victory.”

Jesus won victory over temptation and death through learning obedience, even to death on a cross (Philippians 2:8-9; Hebrews 5:8). As the master of the house asks, who then is the faithful and sensible slave whom his master put in charge of his household, so too does Jesus ask Himself who should share His throne, and rule over His kingdom. Answer: The one who is serving Jesus faithfully when He returns.

What is it that those who rule over His household will be doing in His kingdom? To give them their food at the proper time. And what is Jesus looking for to judge whether a servant is faithful and sensible? It is a slave or servant who is already feeding His people. One who is investing in His flock. Those whom the master finds so doing when he comes will be the one who is blessed by the master. It is likely here that Jesus’s reference to feeding His people is a corollary to His instruction in the Great Commission, “teaching them to observe all that I commanded you” (Matthew 28:20a). As Jesus made clear, spiritual food is of greater value than physical food (John 4:32-34, 6:27, 6:55).

The servants who are faithfully feeding the flock on the earth will be blessed with an incredible reward. Jesus will put him in charge of all his possessions, to reign with Him in His kingdom. This metaphor is parallel with Revelation 3:21, where Jesus promised He would share His throne with those who overcome. It makes sense. Jesus wants rulers of the New Earth who have proven they are willing to serve. There will be no tyrants in the Kingdom that is to come. Only kings who, like Jesus, learned to serve (Matthew 20:28).

<https://thebiblesays.com/commentary/matt/matt-24/matthew-2445-51/>

III. (:48-51) CASE OF THE WICKED SLAVE

A. (:48-49) His Actions

1. (:48) Wicked Mindset (Carelessness)

“But if that evil slave says in his heart, ‘My master is not coming for a long time,’”

How do you work when no supervisor is watching you?

Grant Osborne: The key to the use of the parable here is χρονίζεις, which means to “delay, stay away a long time,” or even “fail to come” (BAGD, 887; EDNT, 3:487). This is why Jesus tells this parable, for it speaks to the issue of the “delay of the parousia” (1 Thess 4:15–16; 2 Pet 3:4), vastly overstated by many critical scholars but still a problem for the early church.

All the apostles (Paul included) expected Jesus to return soon, and when he did not, it certainly caused consternation. If anyone had told Matthew or Paul that Jesus would not return for at least two thousand years, they might well have called that person a false prophet! Knowing this, Jesus is warning the church about false reactions to that delay.

R. T. France: The point within the story is that the period of absence provides the second slave with an opportunity to indulge his selfish irresponsibility at the expense of his fellow-slaves.³⁹ He can think only of the present, not of the inevitable end of that opportunity when his master returns.

Homer Kent: His defection is both doctrinal (my lord delayeth his coming) and ethical (smite his fellowservants, eat and drink with the drunken). He mistakes the uncertainty of the time of coming for a certainty that it will not be soon.

2. (:49a) Wicked Mistreatment of Others (Cruelty)

“and shall begin to beat his fellow slaves”

Donald Hagner: Since the master is delayed, the wicked servant takes advantage of his absence, violates the commands of his master, and acts irresponsibly. . . That the time remains unknown should have motivational power for ethical living in the present.

3. (:49b) Wicked Indulgent Lifestyle (Carousing)

“and eat and drink with drunkards;”

B. (:50-51) His Retribution

1. (:50) Unexpected Accountability

“the master of that slave will come on a day when he does not expect him and at an hour which he does not know,”

Leon Morris: Jesus is underlining the truth that delay does not mean cancellation. The master may have been away for longer than this particular servant expected, but that did not mean that he would never come back. The application to the coming of the Son of man is obvious.

2. (:51) Unrelenting Punishment

a. Physical Dismemberment

“and shall cut him in pieces”

b. Placement with Hypocritical Jewish Religious Leaders

“and assign him a place with the hypocrites;”

R. T. France: “Hypocrites” is surprising in this context, since the slave’s action was blatant rather than hypocritical, but after the repeated use of the word in ch. 23 we may perhaps understand it here as a general term for those who place themselves outside the will of God (the Lucan parallel is “the unbelievers”). If the same term can be used for the unfaithful disciple as for the failed Jewish leadership, the Christian reader is warned that merely belonging to the disciple community is not in itself a guarantee of ultimate salvation.

Leon Morris: This man who pretended to be a capable overseer of a whole household and who proved to be inefficient and interested only in his own self-indulgence belongs with them.

c. Painful Suffering in Hell

“weeping shall be there and the gnashing of teeth.”

John MacArthur: weeping and gnashing of teeth is mentioned five times at least in the book of Matthew, and each time is a way to describe the terrible, unrelieved, unconsolable pain of eternal hell.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Slaves can be tasked with a great variety of functions. Why is the emphasis here put on providing proper food?
- 2) Do you view your spiritual giftedness as a stewardship from God for which you will one day give an account?
- 3) Does your reliability as a worker vary depending on the amount of supervision and who is watching you work?
- 4) Why are the wicked slaves treated the same as the hypocritical Jewish religious leaders?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

John MacArthur: William Barclay records the interesting story of three apprentice demons who came before Satan. And he sent them to the earth to do their apprenticeship. And the first apprentice demon said, “I will tell people there is no God.” And Satan said, “It won’t work; they know better.” And the second apprentice demon said, “I will tell people there is no hell.” And Satan said, “It won’t work; they know better.” And the third demon said, “I will tell people there is no hurry – there is no hurry.” And Satan said, “You will gain many souls.”

Grant Osborne: There are three messages here.

- (1) Jesus is going to return, and that return will be unexpected.
- (2) Every believer is responsible to be ready at all times, for we will all be held accountable for the way we live.

(3) There will be severe judgment for those who live for themselves and refuse to serve others.

The abuse of others and hedonism are more a part of the parable than intended to be singled out, but both are viable illustrations of the self-centered living that is condemned here.

Craig Blomberg: The three main points of the parable thus follow:

- (1) God rewards and punishes people at the final judgment on the basis of their stewardship of the tasks assigned to them.
- (2) Faithful stewardship requires perseverance and consistency, for the end could come at any time.
- (3) Those who postpone their responsibilities and do evil in the meantime may sadly discover that it is too late for them to make amends for their errors.

Michael Wilkins: Actions reveal our nature. In the parable of the two servants, Jesus indicates that a person's faithfulness is the external evidence of whether or not he or she is truly one of Jesus' own. We should therefore examine ourselves to determine whether we are true believers, which will be evidenced by the way we think, the way we treat others, and our righteousness or unrighteousness. We must be careful not to imply that one can earn one's salvation by watchfulness or preparedness, but rather that a person who truly is a disciple of Jesus will watch and be prepared, because it is their good new nature to do so. The point for non-disciples is that they should not delay repenting too long, thinking they will have time. Rather, their own death or Jesus' return may find them to be unrepentant sinners.

J. Ligon Duncan: The Faithful Slave

Notice their function at the end of verse 45. What are they to do? What is the service that they are to render to the household? They are to feed the household, to give them their food at the proper time. The main point there is their job is to serve not their own interests, but the interests of the master's household. They are to look after, yes they are to be responsible for good order, but primarily they are to provide for the needs of the household while the master is away. We are already seeing that Jesus is describing a good master here. He is someone who, when he goes away, really cares about his household and he leaves people behind to take care of them.

And then if you will look at verse 46, you will see a fourth thing. The actions of this blessed slave are described. The slave who Jesus says is blessed, is the one who the master finds doing what he told him to do when he went away. The slave who is blessed is actively obedient. He is marching to the beat of his master's drum. The master told him to do something. This slave who is blessed, is doing what his master told him to do. . .

Now Jesus tells the flip side of the story in verses 48-51. Here He gives us the characteristics of the rewards of the evil servant. And the evil servant here is a nominal Christian. This is somebody who claims to be a Christian, with their lips, but they are not there in their heart. They are not there in their lives. They give lip service. Matthew is responding to the issue of hypocrisy in this passage. Like he so often does in his Gospel. And he shows us through Jesus' words, what a person looks like who is not ready for Jesus' coming. In fact, we learn that the nominal Christian is threatened with judgment not only here, but here after, because of his evil thoughts and ways. Jesus tells this story of an evil servant and He describes him and he tells us his characteristics in this passage. Look at verses 48-51. The description of this evil servant. Well, that is exactly what he is. He is an evil slave. Notice the bluntness of this assessment. You know normally we don't talk about our friends as evil people. I mean if you are non-Christian here today, you will be happy to know that we Christians normally don't sit around describing you as evil people. In fact, we kind of like some of you. But here is an ultimate assessment about a person. Here is a person who doesn't trust in the Lord Jesus Christ and is not faithful in his way. And you know what they are called at the end? Evil. That is blunt, but it is reality.

And Jesus goes on in verse 48 to explore the thoughts that are going on in that person's heart. My master is not coming for a long time. You see carelessness and spiritual laziness, and spiritual presumption. This person doesn't care about ultimate spiritual realities, like the second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. What a man says to himself is often more important than what he says openly. Because it is within the secret precincts of his own being that a particular man converses wickedly and irresponsibly. Nobody else sees it, but it is true.

Then again in verse 49, he tells us the actions of this slave. He beats his fellow slaves, he eats and drinks with drunkards. Two parts to that. He abuses his position. Instead of being a help to the household, he is a hurt to the household. He doesn't help the household of faith, he hurts them. Furthermore, he associates himself with those who indulge in fleshly desires. He clearly doesn't have spiritual desires, he would rather indulge in the desires of the flesh.

Verse 50. What is going to happen on the coming of his master? He is going to be taken by surprise. Why? Because the natural will always be taken by surprise by the second coming. He will be taken by surprise because he doesn't really believe. It will be unexpected to him, because he is not prepared. He is not expectant. And so, the Christian must live expectantly. In contrast with the natural man who will be unprepared and unexpecting of the second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Notice in verse 51, the brutality of the judgment. The slave's judgment. He will be cut to pieces. That is an immediate judgment. He will be assigned the place with the hypocrites. Notice in contrast, if you will look at Luke 12:46, when Jesus preached this sermon the first time, he said that the wicked slave would be assigned in the place of unbelievers or in the place of the unfaithful people. But here, Jesus says, he will be assigned to the place with the hypocrites. Why? Because He is speaking especially about professing believers who aren't ready for His coming. They are hypocritical. And then we are told in verse 51, that in that place there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Even when the judgment comes, as horrific it will be, there will be no repentance. They will gnash their teeth at Christ. They will grind their teeth in defiance against Him. They will hate Him, more than they have ever hated Him before. Jesus is especially warning us here against the parallels against religious hypocrisy and nominalism.

Albert Mohler: Jesus stresses the deep division between those who are ready and those who are not; they will receive blessing or judgment, respectively, when the Son of Man comes. In this parable, the true nature of the servants is revealed by their actions – their faithfulness or unfaithfulness during their master's absence. The parable serves to contrast true and false believers and addresses the consequences of those who show by their lives that they are deserving of hell. The way one thinks about the Lord's return will eventually influence what one says and how one acts. The period of time before Jesus' return serves as a test to the heart of each person who professes to believe.

Keith Throop: Parable of the Two Servants

In contemplation of this parable, Klyne Snodgrass rightly speaks of both the patience and the impatience a believer must possess:

How can the church acknowledge both its own long history and its lively hope without looking silly? Both patience and impatience are legitimate and necessary responses. Given the NT emphasis that no one knows the time and the length of time that has passed, patience is required, for God's timing and purposes never fit our agenda. Patience undergirds the faithful living which is the primary concern of this parable. The wise and faithful Christian is the one who understands the significance of the end and actively serves, whether the time is long or short. Impatience is called for as well. We should be impatient with those who assert they do know the time and draw eschatological charts. We should be as impatient with those who deny the importance of Jesus' future vindication. Further, we should be impatient for the End to come, weary of evil and longing for the time when evil will be set aside and righteousness is established. Christian faith is always faith on tiptoe, looking to that day, and because of that day, living in accord with such anticipation. (Stories with Intent: A Comprehensive Guide to the Parables of Jesus, p. 504)
<https://reformedbaptistblog.com/2014/03/20/parable-of-the-two-servants-matthew-2445-51-teaching-outline/>

TEXT: Matthew 25:1-13

TITLE: PARABLE OF THE TEN BRIDESMAIDS

BIG IDEA:

ONLY GENUINE TRIBULATION SAINTS IN POSSESSION OF THE HOLY SPIRIT WILL BE PREPARED FOR THE RETURN OF JESUS (DESPITE UNKNOWN DELAY)

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: This is the next in the set of parables that center on readiness for the Lord's return. All have the same basic themes—ignorance of the time of the coming, importance of vigilance, being prepared for the sudden return, and accountability.

Donald Hagner: In this second consecutive parable of the apocalyptic discourse (cf. τότε, “then”) Matthew continues to address the importance of readiness for the coming of the bridegroom. The coming of the bridegroom and the wedding banquet have messianic associations (cf. 22:1–14), which make the parable particularly effective. This is the final pericope that stresses the need for constant preparedness, particularly because the time of the return of the remains unknown and may involve a longer-than-expected delay. . .

This parable makes yet once again, and in a most sobering way, the point that preparedness for the unexpected time of the coming of the Messiah is of the utmost importance. That is, how one lives in the lengthening interim period between the first and second appearances of the Messiah must be consistent with one's claim to be a disciple. What matters is that one not be embarrassed by an “inopportune” coming of the Messiah. The difference between the foolish and the wise is that the latter do all within their power to be ready for the parousia. They will join in the eschatological reward of the messianic banquet while the foolish will find themselves excluded and without recourse. The bottom line of the eschatological discourse is the importance of preparedness, which looms larger and larger toward the end of the discourse.

David Turner: This parable stresses, for the last time in the discourse, that the time of Jesus's coming (24:3) is unknowable. This point has been stated (24:36) and then illustrated both historically from Noah's time (24:37–42) and parabolically from a burglary (24:43) and from good and wicked slaves (24:45–51). The present parable illustrates the point from another familiar scene, a wedding. Five foolish virgins do not prepare for nightfall by bringing extra oil for their lamps, because they expect the bridegroom to arrive immediately. But five others wisely prepare for a delay. The foolish virgins miss the bridegroom and are banned from the wedding feast, but the wise virgins share in the joy of the wedding (cf. 9:15). . .

Comparing 25:5 to 24:48 links the lesson of this parable to that of the evil slave. In both cases there is delay in the return of Jesus. But the two reactions to this delay are opposites, and these opposite reactions teach a crucial lesson. The evil slave is irresponsible because he overestimates the delay of the master's return. He is unpleasantly surprised by the master's seemingly early arrival. On the other hand, the foolish virgins are careless and underestimate the delay in the groom's arrival. The evil slave's lackadaisical approach to the master's return is similar to the generation of Noah and the homeowner, neither of whom expected an imminent event (24:36–44). But the foolish virgins took readiness to the extreme and did not plan for any delay. From these opposite errors, the church learns that it cannot know the time of Jesus's coming. It can assume neither an immediate nor an eventual return. Christians must constantly expect Jesus while they persevere in obedience and mission (cf. 10:22; 13:20–21; 24:13). The duties of constant readiness and future preparedness must be held in dynamic tension if the church is to be faithful to the teaching of its master (cf. Luke 12:35–40; Meier 1980b: 294–95). Those who do not exhibit constant alertness jeopardize not only their present opportunities for effective service to Jesus but also their eternal destiny.

D. A. Carson: In a real sense, it is the bridegroom's delay that distinguishes the wise from the foolish virgins. Any interpretation that ignores this central element in the story is bound to go astray (cf. G. Bornkamm, Geschichte, 49–50). The context similarly shows that the overriding theme is preparedness for the coming of the Son of Man. Even when this involves certain forms of behavior (24:45–51; 25:14–30), that behavior is called forth by the unexpectedness of the master's return.

From this perspective, vv.1–13 fit well into this sequence of parables and agree with what we know Jesus taught. There is no good reason for doubting their authenticity or retreating to one of several reconstructed cores.

- The first parable (24:42–44) warns of the unexpectedness of Messiah's coming.
- The second (24:45–51) shows that more than passive watchfulness is required: there must be behavior acceptable to the master, the discharge of allotted responsibilities.
- This third parable (25:1–13) stresses the need for preparedness in the face of an unexpectedly long delay.

William Hendriksen: Preparedness is essential, for the time is coming when getting ready will no longer be possible; the door will be shut.

(:1) PROLOGUE – INTRODUCING THE PARABLE OF THE TEN BRIDESMAIDS

“Then the kingdom of heaven will be comparable to ten virgins, who took their lamps, and went out to meet the bridegroom.”

R.V. Tasker: Although the first word in verse 1 Then (tote) is often in this Gospel merely a transitional particle with no chronological significance, it would seem that it should here be construed in a temporal sense, the reference being to the day that has played such a large part in the previous section. So Knox rightly renders, “When that day comes, the kingdom of heaven will be like . . .”

Finally, after the lapse of about a year [after the engagement and betrothal] there was the marriage, when the bridegroom accompanied by his friends went to fetch the bride from her father's house and brought her back in procession to his own home where the marriage feast was held. It is most probably that it is this procession that the ten girls in the story are pictured as going to meet.

Stu Weber: This parable, like most of Jesus' other parables, taught another aspect of reality in the kingdom of heaven. The virgins were the bridesmaids invited to be a part of the wedding ceremony. This was a great honor. They represent all who have been invited to be citizens of God's kingdom—some of whom, as we shall see, will indeed enter the kingdom and some of whom will not. The bridegroom is the Messiah, and the wedding celebration pictures the eschatological wedding feast of Christ.

Jeffrey Crabtree: The future tense refers to that time when the kingdom will be consummated, when it will enter its final stage, whereas the present tense in Matthew 13:24, 44-45, 47 speaks of the early days of the kingdom during Jesus' ministry.

Grant Osborne: The emphasis in “young women” (παρθενοί) is not on the fact of their virginity (that is assumed) but on the fact that they were unmarried young women, probably between twelve and eighteen years old (by then most young women were married). Here they are obviously friends of the bride (like modern bridesmaids) sent out to meet her groom.

D. A. Carson: Normally the bridegroom with some close friends left his home to go to the bride's home, where there were various ceremonies, followed by a procession through the streets—after nightfall—to his home. The ten virgins may be bridesmaids who have been assisting the bride; they expect to meet the groom as he comes from the bride's house (cf. Kistemaker, Parables of Jesus, 130), though this is uncertain. Everyone in the procession was expected to carry his or her own torch. Those without a torch would be assumed to be party crashers or even brigands. The festivities, which might last several days, would formally get under way at the groom's house. . .

The “lamps” (not the same word as in 5:15) are here either small oil-fed lamps or, more plausibly, torches whose rags would need periodic dowsing with oil to keep them burning. In either case, the prudent would bring along a flask with an additional oil supply.

Michael Wilkins: It was a larger dome-shaped container with rags soaked in the oil to light the way while a person was walking outside.³⁸⁴ These outdoor torches could last for several hours when extra containers of oil were brought for replenishing the lamp (25:2), as the wise virgins had done.

I. (:2-4) POSSESSION OF THE HOLY SPIRIT (OIL) DISTINGUISHES GENUINE PREPARED DISCIPLES (PRUDENT VIRGINS) FROM FOOLISH FALSE PROFESSORS

A. (:2) Two Contrasting Groups of Professing Tribulation Believers

“And five of them were foolish, and five were prudent.”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Jesus described two opposite groups of these women. Five He called wise because they took extra oil for their lamps in case there was a long waiting period. Their wisdom showed in their preparation for a possible lengthy delay of the bridegroom. The other five He called foolish because they took lamps with oil in them but no extra oil. They did not prepare for a delay. They expected the groom to come soon.

B. (:3-4) Distinguishing Feature = Possession of Oil (Symbol of the Holy Spirit)

1. (:3) Foolish Possess No Oil so They Are Unprepared

“For when the foolish took their lamps, they took no oil with them,”

Stu Weber: The five foolish (the Gr. word moros from which we derive our word “moron” for dull, inattentive, unthinking) bridesmaids were introduced first. They took insufficient oil with them to keep their lamps burning for the wedding procession.

Craig Blomberg: Jesus apparently wants to teach that spiritual preparedness may not be transferred from one individual to another. All people are responsible for themselves. But the oil should probably not be allegorized despite frequent and conflicting suggestions that take it to refer to such things as good works, faith, grace, or the Holy Spirit, because none of these can be bought.

Van Parunak: Outwardly, all the virgins look the same. They all have torches; they all come to the bridal house; they all claim to look forward to the coming of the bridegroom. But in fact, five of them have only the form of godliness, and not the true power (2 Tim 3:5). They are like the religious leaders whom the Lord has so vigorously condemned (ch. 15; ch. 23), appearing to be the Lord's people, but actually defective. They think that the preparation of others in the company will suffice for them. And in the end they are cast out.

Homer Kent: To insist that they had some oil but not enough contradicts 25:3. The failure to provide any oil at all displays their stupidity.

2. (:4) Prudent Took Sufficient Oil so They Are Prepared

“but the prudent took oil in flasks along with their lamps.”

II. (:5) PREPAREDNESS WILL BE KEY DUE TO THE UNEXPECTED DELAY

“Now while the bridegroom was delaying, they all got drowsy and began to sleep.”

Stu Weber: The bridegroom's delay represents the stretch of history between the Messiah's first coming and his return. Jesus acknowledged that the length of time before his return would be difficult to endure. All ten of the bridesmaids—both the wise and the foolish—fell asleep while waiting for the bridegroom. This is understandable for anyone under those circumstances.

Walter Wilson: Sleep in this content (25:5) is not a metaphor for death (cf. 9:24) or for negligence (cf. 26:40, 43, 45)—after all, even the prudent girls doze—but a narrative device for indicating how eschatological events will catch people unawares (cf. 13:25), a theme augmented by the depiction of the parousia occurring in the middle of the night (25:6; cf. 24:43).

III. (:6-9) PAROUSIA (BRIDEGROOM) ARRIVES SUDDENLY WITH URGENT DIFFERENTIATION

A. (:6-7) Sudden Arrival

1. (:6) Announcement with a Call to Action

*“But at midnight there was a shout,
'Behold, the bridegroom! Come out to meet him.'”*

2. (:7) Attempt by All to Walk in the Light

“Then all those virgins rose, and trimmed their lamps.”

Grant Osborne: Excitement reigns as the bridesmaids awake, jump off the ground, grab their torches, and start to get them ready for going out in the dark to meet the procession. This makes the rest of the story all the more poignant, for we know that half of them will not make it. “Began to trim” (ἐκόσμησαν) is another ingressive aorist and means to “adorn, decorate”—in this case, to get the torches ready by either putting on extra oil or replacing the burnt-out rags with new oil-soaked rags, then lighting them.

B. (:8-9) Urgent Differentiation

1. (:8) Foolish Lack Oil and Plead for Assistance

*“And the foolish said to the prudent,
'Give us some of your oil, for our lamps are going out.’”*

2. (:9) Prudent Have Sufficient Oil But Cannot Supply for Those Who Lack

*“But the prudent answered, saying,
'No, there will not be enough for us and you too;
go instead to the dealers and buy some for yourselves.’”*

IV. (:10-12) PARTICIPATION IN THE MILLENNIAL KINGDOM (WEDDING FEAST) WILL BE LIMITED TO THOSE WHO ARE PREPARED

A. (:10) Opportunity to Participate is Only on God’s Terms

“And while they were going away to make the purchase, the bridegroom came, and those who were ready went in with him to the wedding feast; and the door was shut.”

B. (:11-12) No Second Chances for the Unprepared

1. (:11) Request

“And later the other virgins also came, saying, 'Lord, lord, open up for us.’”

2. (:12) Rejection

“But he answered and said, 'Truly I say to you, I do not know you.’”

Grant Osborne: People do not enter the kingdom on their own terms but on God’s terms, and it is clear from the whole of 24:36 – 25:30 that one of those terms is readiness for the parousia, i.e., a life of obedience to God.

Stu Weber: The bridegroom's delay represents the stretch of history between the Messiah's first coming and his return. Jesus acknowledged that the length of time before his return would be difficult to endure. All ten of the bridesmaids—both the wise and the foolish—fell asleep while waiting for the bridegroom. This is understandable for anyone under those circumstances.

(:13) EPILOGUE – MORAL OF THE PARABLE = BE PREPARED

“Be on the alert then, for you do not know the day nor the hour.”

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

1) What are the millennial implications of this motif of bridegroom and wedding feast?

- 2) Why will there be need for preparedness if the Great Tribulation contains so many cosmic signs?
- 3) What other OT passages support the symbolic connection between oil and the Holy Spirit?
- 4) Why is it so dangerous to put off making a commitment to follow Jesus?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Jeffrey Crabtree: Jesus told the parable in the context of His return. He directed it to His followers but it applies to everyone. The main lesson is to be ready when He comes. Jesus made this point with these supporting truths:

- (1) Individual, advanced preparation is essential to readiness.
- (2) Readiness includes preparing for a lengthy delay and staying prepared until He comes. Those who do not prepare for the long delay will be caught unprepared as in a trap (Lk. 21:34) when Jesus finally arrives.
- (3) It will be too late to prepare once He arrives.
- (4) No one joins the wedding party unless he or she is ready at the time the groom arrives.
- (5) One can be “too late”: either be ready when Jesus comes or be forever outside.
- (6) “Check your ‘equipment’ now because [no one] knows how much longer it will be before [he has] to be sure that [he is] ready” (Nolland 1010).

Both this parable and the previous one teach long-term faithfulness. The wicked servant stopped serving his master and so was unprepared when the master returned (24:50-51). The foolish virgins failed to make adequate preparations for a long-term delay and consequently were not prepared to join the wedding procession and celebration when the groom came. People who are not following the Lord faithfully when He comes will find themselves unprepared for His arrival and denied entrance into the kingdom celebrations.

Charette: (Theme of Recompense) Presumption in the face of God’s goodness, indifference to his call and unfaithfulness in his service place one in a position of danger. A terrible judgment had come upon Israel because of its failure to conform to the will of God ... the covenant relationship had been revoked and they had been cut off from the blessing of God. The church is warned that it too is not exempt from judgment, but must face a day of reckoning when it will be called upon to present fruit befitting the call and advantage it has received.

William Barclay: In its immediate significance, it was directed against the Jews. They were the chosen people; their whole history should have been a preparation for the coming of the Son of God; they ought to have been prepared for him when he came. Instead, they were quite unprepared and therefore were shut out. Here in dramatic form is the tragedy of the unpreparedness of the Jews.

But the parable has at least two universal warnings.

- (1) It warns us that there are certain things which cannot be obtained at the last minute. It is far too late for a student to be preparing when the day of the examination has come. It is too late to acquire a skill, or a character, if we do not already possess it, when some task offers itself to us. Similarly, it is easy to leave things so late that we can no longer prepare ourselves to meet with God. When the Queen of England, Mary of Orange, was dying, her chaplain sought to tell her of the way of salvation. Her answer was: 'I have not left this matter to this hour.' To be too late is always tragedy.

(2) It warns us that there are certain things which cannot be borrowed. The foolish virgins found it impossible to borrow oil when they discovered they needed it. We cannot borrow a relationship with God; we must possess it for ourselves. We cannot borrow a character; we must be clothed with it. We cannot always be living on the spiritual capital which others have amassed. There are certain things we must win or acquire for ourselves, for we cannot borrow them from others.

Craig Blomberg: The distinctive warning of this parable cautions would-be disciples against refusing to count the cost of persevering in discipleship. The foolish young women resemble the seeds that fell in the shallow soil of 13:5-6,20-21. The language of v. 12, though not as emphatic as that of 7:23, again suggests that this is not a case of true Christians losing their salvation (Jesus does not say "I no longer know you") but of people whom he simply does not recognize because they have never been his. But they may well have professed intimacy with him, just as members of the bridal party usually appear to be close friends of the couple who are marrying. God is frequently pictured as a bridegroom in the Old Testament (e.g., Isa 54:4-6; Ezek 16:7-34; Hos 2:19); Jesus is in some way equating himself with God. On the messianic banquet imagery, cf. under 22:11-14. The three points of the passage may now be summarized:

- (1) Like the bridegroom, God may delay his coming longer than people expect.
- (2) Like the wise bridesmaids, his followers must be prepared for such a delay—discipleship may be more arduous than the novice suspects.
- (3) Like the foolish bridesmaids, those who do not prepare adequately may discover a point beyond which there is no return—when the end comes it will be too late to undo the damage of neglect.

Walter Wilson: The continuity of 25:1-13 with 24:45-51 (as well as the allegorical features of the parable itself) encourages the reader to see the two groups as representing faithful and unfaithful ways in which disciples prepare for the arrival of their "lord" (24:45, 46, 48, 50; 25:11). Besides the element of contrast and the use of the keyword φρόνιμος (24:45; 25:2, 4, 8, 9), this passage is connected to the one that precedes it by the theme of delay (24:48; 25:5) and by the motif of not knowing (24:50; 25:13; cf. 24:42), though the manner in which the motif is used to conclude the parable itself (25:12) introduces a surprising twist (cf. 7:23). The use of φρόνιμος, particularly in contrast to μωρός ("foolish"), also recalls the conclusion to the Sermon on the Mount (7:24-27). As comparison with both that passage and 24:45-51 suggests, prudence for our author refers in the first instance not to intellectual aptitude but to decision-making that results in proper action, which in this context can be understood as a kind of eschatological wisdom. Such an interpretation accords with the central position occupied in the parable by the symbol of the torch, which is appropriately interpreted in conjunction with light imagery found elsewhere in the gospel, especially 5:14-16. The symbolic potential of the torch or lamp is exploited by various Old Testament authors as well, for example, Isa 62:1, which likens righteousness to a light, and salvation to a torch (λαμπάς). For a contrastive formulation, we can turn to Prov 13:9, which uses the same verb found in Matt 25:8: "The light of the righteous is forever, but the light of the ungodly goes out [σβέννυται]."

Daniel Doriani: [Argues against the pre-trib view of the Rapture – raises some relevant issues] Certain forms of Christian eschatology seem to place their hope in escape from this world. Some specifically anticipate a rapture from it. The New Testament, by contrast, teaches us to hope in the day of the Lord, when he restores creation, when heaven and earth are one. At that time, there will be no sin and no rebels on earth because Jesus will have sent them away from him into darkness outside this world (Matt. 7:23; 8:12; 22:13; 25:30). If they are sent away, who is “left behind”? We are left on earth, with the Lord.

As for the rapture, we can only say that the Bible teaches no secret return of Christ. Christians will not be “raptured” or snatched from this world before a period of great tribulation. The return of Jesus, we have seen, is loud, public, and visible. After Jesus ascended to heaven, the angel promised Jesus would come again, a second time, not a second and a third time. (The term “rapture” does not appear in any major Bible translation nor is there a comparable term in the original Hebrew or Greek. “Rapture” is from Medieval Latin terms. Raptura means “seizure” and raptus means “seized” or “kidnapped.”)

The theory of the “rapture” first appeared in 1827. Following a serious accident, John Darby, a British preacher, meditated on the need to be prepared daily for the Lord’s return. Although evangelical, Darby had novel ideas. Above all, he promoted a secret return of Christ, a rapture of Jesus’ disciples, prior to his return to judge the world and prior to a period of wickedness known as “the great tribulation.”

Paul does say we will meet the Lord in the air, but that is not the same concept as the rapture. The New Testament teaches that (1) Jesus returns one more time; (2) his return is public and visible to all, and (3) the dead rise at that time. Rapture theory asserts the opposite at each point. What then shall we make of Paul’s statement that we meet the Lord in the air? Many have been taught to take it as a prediction of a secret rapture. But 1 Thessalonians 4:16 can speak for itself: “The Lord himself will come down from heaven, with a loud command, with the voice of the archangel and with the trumpet call of God, and the dead in Christ will rise first.” These loud sounds hardly indicate a secret return. Paul continues, “After that, we who are still alive and are left will be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air” (4:17).

This midair meeting sounds baffling. As so often, the answer to a riddle lies in the language and customs of the times. It was customary for the residents of a city to go out to meet a king, emperor, or victorious general and escort him into the city. In the New Testament, the verb “meet” and the noun “meeting” both have that usage. People go out to meet Jesus when seeking his aid (Matt. 8:34; Luke 17:12). The Christians in Rome go out to meet Paul before he enters the city (Acts 28:15). In Jesus’ parable, the virgins go out to meet (same word) the bridegroom and escort him to the wedding feast (Matt. 25:6). Since Jesus comes to earth from heaven, if we are to escort him, we must meet him in the air. Therefore, our meeting in the air is brief, some moments before “the great day” of judgment and restoration begins.

John MacArthur: The Fate of the Unprepared

This parable is a parable with the intent of teaching us the suddenness and the unexpectedness of the coming of the Lord which, therefore, should call us to preparedness so that we are not caught in that unexpected moment unprepared for His coming. . .

Goes without saying, I guess, that we're aware of the fact that the first time Jesus came, the world was not ready. They should have been. The prophets had marked out very clearly the signs to look for. They said there would be a forerunner. There was. They identified him as a voice crying in the wilderness. That's exactly what John did. They said the Messiah would be born in Bethlehem, He was; born of a virgin, He was; of the line of David, He was. They said He would come to Galilee, He did. They said He would have great power, He had it. But the world still was not prepared and not ready.

And so He came unto His own, says John, and His own received Him not. He was in the world and the world was made by Him, but the world knew Him not. "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem," He said, "how oft I would have gathered thee as a hen gathereth her brood but you would not." And in Luke chapter 19 and verses 41 and following, we read, "And when He was come near, He beheld the city and wept over it, saying, 'If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day the things which belong unto thy peace, but now they are hidden from thine eyes.'" If you had only known what time it was, if you had only known that I was here, and now it's too late. And this parable warns the world not to let that happen again. For there will be no recourse in the future. . .

Now the parable is very simple. It's rich. It's exciting. And I think its marvel is in its - it's in its simplicity. As you read the many, many writings that have been written around this parable, it can get very confusing. There are the allegorists who want to turn it into an allegory and give every single thing in it a mystical meaning so that you get lost in a mass of verbiage of hidden secret spiritual ideas. That is not the intent of a parable. And then there are the devotionalists who want to see in every single thing something applicable to the Christian life. And that's wrong as well. . .

There was a long wooden pole. On the top of the wooden pole would be some kind of a wire mesh apparatus attached, filled with cloth. That cloth would be soaked in oil and then lit to give a flaming torch. They would carry on their person somewhere a little flask of oil so that they could keep that lit for as long as was necessary. . .

Their presence symbolizes their interest, and their torch symbolizes their profession of faith in Christ. They show outward marks of watching for the coming of the bridegroom. They show outward marks of readiness. They show outward marks of commitment to Jesus Christ. They're part of the believing community. They're gathered as bridesmaids, as it were, ready to be received into this glorious marriage celebration. They profess to love Christ's appearing. They profess to hear the gospel and believe. They profess to be disciples to wait for the Son, to desire the Kingdom. . .

I get the feeling in the context of Matthew 24 and 25 that the Lord is saying even when you've seen the signs given in 24:4 to 31, even when you've seen all those signs that'll happen in the time of the Tribulation, even when you've seen the sign of the Son of man in heaven, it's still going to be a time before He finally comes. There's a gap of time in there, and people are seen waiting and waiting and waiting and then sort of just going back to the normal things of life, they doze off and go to sleep. . .

People, I tell you, this is the most fearful teaching the Bible gives. And Jesus gave it over and over and over again, that there are in the church myriads of people who are unprepared to face

God. And they are deceived about that. And in the moment when they face the reality of their unpreparedness, it will be in that moment that it's too late.

S. Lewis Johnson: The Ten Virgins, or the Qualifications for the Kingdom

What is preparedness? What does it mean, objectively, to be prepared. What does it mean, subjectively, to be prepared? Why should we be prepared? Well perhaps we can answer that very easily. What lies before those who are prepared? If we were to try to sum up what is said in this parable using something of the terms of the parable, it would be something like this. We would say objectively, preparedness is having one's lamp burning. That seems to be the point to have the oil – to have the lamp burning. And further, that qualifies us for an entrance into the Messianic blessing. That seems to be that which lies back of the marriage feast.

Subjectively, looking particularly at the foolish virgins, subjectively, readiness is having one's vessel full of oil. And since oil is a standard symbol in Scripture for the Holy Spirit, then the point would be that subjectively, readiness consists in a vital relation to the life-giver. That is the having of reality in one's life not simply the form of godliness but having the power of it. . .

You'll notice he talks about wise virgins and foolish virgins and just above he has said in verse 45, who then is a faithful and wise servant? So now he illustrates what it is to be a wise servant, and in the parable of the talents that follows, he will illustrate what it is to be a faithful servant. So these two parables illustrate the two sides of that statement, who then is a faithful and wise servant. A servant is to be both faithful, and he is to be wise. So we are going to talk about wisdom. . .

There were three stages in an ancient marriage. There was the stage of engagement. Now the engagement was made by the parents of the young man and the young lady. They concluded the arrangements, and certain promises were made, and the engagement took place arranged totally by the parents. . .

The second stage was the stage of betrothal. This was a ceremony a brief ceremony that was held at the bride's house and there mutual promises were exchanged by the contracting parties before witnesses. This was regarded as very significant. It was very binding. In fact it was so binding that if the bridegroom died before the marriage feast, held later, the bride was regarded as a widow even though the marriage had not been consummated.

Then finally about a year after the betrothal, the bridegroom would go to the bride's house, and he would take the bride, and they would have a marriage procession back to his own house which was to be their house. I think it is then that the virgins would come out to meet the procession. They would enter into the bridegroom's home, the doors would be shut, and the marriage feast would be celebrated. And this marriage feast frequently lasted for about a week and everybody rejoiced over the wedding. . .

With reference to the virgins the context suggests it seems to me very strongly the future generation of Israel that shall be upon the earth at the time of our Lord's Advent. One thing that makes me think that is because verse 51 of chapter 24 ends with, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Now we don't have time to look at the passages that we have had this expression previously in the Gospel of Matthew, but there are a number of them. Chapter 8 verse 12 for example, and chapter 13 and verse 42, and then verses 49 and 50 of chapter 13, and verse 13 of chapter 22. In each one of these occurrences of the expression, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, the reference is to the sons of the kingdom or the generation of Israelites that shall be upon the earth at the time of the Second Advent. And since chapter 25 begins with, then at that time, I think that's the preferable rendering here. Then we are to look forward to that generation that shall be on the earth when our Lord returns to the earth. . .

The significance of the lamps is rather obvious. This has to do with testimony. You see, a true believer does give a definite testimony that persists, and I guess if a man wanted to impinge a doctrine of the Bible on one of the figures found in a parable, he might talk on the perseverance of the saints, here, but it would be much better to settle that doctrine on Scripture texts that teach it plainly than upon this.

What is the oil? Well oil in the Bible is clearly a figure of the Holy Spirit. I don't think that there should be much objection to that. Even liberal and conservative scholars can agree that that is the biblical sense of the figure of oil. One thing that I think probably should be commented upon is that the Lord says that five were wise and five were foolish, and the foolish took no oil in their lamps. . .

Let me conclude by making just these comments. This parable teaches, then, that qualification for entrance into the kingdom is the possession of the oil of the Holy Spirit. He that hath not the spirit of Christ is none of his, the apostle says later in Romans chapter 8. It is the possession of the Holy Spirit that marks out the true believer from the world. He has sent forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts whereby we testify, Abba Father. If we do not have the spirit of Christ dwelling within us, we do not belong to him. The test of Christianity is the possession of the personal third person of the Trinity, the Holy Spirit. We may have a great regard for religion, we may have a great regard for objective truth, but if we do not have the person of the Holy Spirit we do not belong to him.

Religion is not enough. One must have reality. And there are some things we cannot obtain at the last minute. There are some things that cannot be borrowed. Eternal life cannot be borrowed from our friends. It cannot be borrowed from our father. It cannot be borrowed from our children. It is something we must have for ourselves, and the shutting of the door, while it means acceptance and while it means blessedness and bliss for five of the virgins who are wise, it means exclusion from the other, so that the wedding bells become the funeral knell for the five lost virgins, reminding us of a stanza that we sometimes sing,

“Almost persuaded harvest is past, almost persuaded doom comes at last / almost cannot avail, almost is but to fail / sad, sad that bitter wail, almost but lost.”

Alternative View:

Dr. Jerry Harmon: (Grace Bible Baptist Church – 6/2/24) Are You Ready for His Coming?

Introduction:

I have officiated at many weddings. Nothing ever goes off completely as planned. Almost always the wedding starts later than the scheduled time. At this wedding in the parable, a lot of things go wrong. The point is to wake the disciples up = BE READY!

Context: “Then” – refers back to Chap. 24 = the Olivet Discourse where Jesus is speaking about the prophetic events associated with His Second Coming.

I. THE PARABLE

A. The Distinction of the Ten Virgins

What a privilege to be invited to participate as bridesmaids.

The bridegroom (representing Jesus) is coming to receive his bride.

Cf. the other references to salvation in Scripture in the context of marriage – e.g. the Marriage Supper of the Lamb – Rev. 19:7

Need to understand the 3 different stages of a Jewish wedding in that culture:

- Covenant Stage – the espousal; picture of salvation
- Claiming Stage – Bridegroom coming back to receive the bride and then the procession to his father's house
- Celebration Stage – 7 day banquet

This parable deals with the lengthy Procession back to the father's house; usually they would take the longest possible route; you needed lamps to be out on the street and to light the way for the bridal party.

B. The Description of the Ten Virgins

5 wise and 5 foolish who didn't take enough oil for their lamps;

Once the door to the marriage banquet is shut and locked, it would be impossible to get in.

These ten virgins were alike in almost every way – all were invited to participate; all took lamps with at least some oil; all fell asleep; etc.

One major difference = 5 forgot to bring enough oil with them; describing professing believers in the church.

Lamps without oil are useless.

Long unexpected delay before the bridegroom returned

C. The Discussion of the Ten Virgins – “Give us your oil”

Responsibility to light the way for the bridal procession.

How could they have been instructed to go into the marketplace at midnight to buy more oil?

Merchants kept their stalls open during the wedding time since there were many guests around.

Does the oil represent the Holy Spirit as many commentators claim? NO – because:

- All 10 have oil in the beginning; you can't run out of having the Holy Spirit; He never departs from believers
- You can't try to buy the Holy Spirit

D. The Division of the Ten Virgins –

The 5 foolish virgins were shut out and could not enter in.

Significance of repeating a name twice in Scripture – “Lord, Lord” – [other examples cited –

“Samuel, Samuel”, etc.] – expresses personal intimacy; but here Jesus testifies that He does not have a saving personal relationship with these 5 foolish virgins

Matt. 7:21 – many false professors of faith

What was missing? The oil represents persevering saving faith.

E. The Declaration about the Ten Virgins – Be Ready = the main point of the parable

II. THE PRINCIPLES WE CAN LEARN

A. (v. 5) The Coming of the Lord May be Delayed

We know for certain He is coming back; but we don't know when;

Cf. what happened in days of Noah; Name Methuselah means "when he dies it will come" – lived for 969 years; speaks to the longsuffering of God; He is delaying because he wants sinners to come to repentance; cf. 2 Peter passage;

B. Being Prepared Is Not Transferable

It was not selfish for the wise virgins to refuse to share their oil; they would not have had enough for themselves; impossible to share genuine faith; you can't get into heaven on the coattails of someone else; you can't transfer your oil

C. True Saving Faith Is Demonstrated in Continual Obedience and Good Works for Your Entire Life = the Oil

Not the root of your salvation, but the fruit of it;

True faith will not fizzle out. Cf. Matt. 5:15

D. The Lord's Coming Will Bring a Separation Forever

E. Many Will Find the Value of Salvation too Late

Once the door has been shut, there is no more opportunity.

Cf. Noah's Ark

TEXT: Matthew 25:14-30

TITLE: THE PARABLE OF THE TALENTS (OR BAGS OF MONEY) – THE TRAGEDY OF WASTED OPPORTUNITY

BIG IDEA:

STEWARDSHIP OF GOD’S GIFTS DEMANDS ACCOUNTABILITY -- MAKE THE MOST OF YOUR OPPORTUNITIES TO SERVE CHRIST

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: The connection of this parable to the others is the delay of the master’s return, but the emphasis here is on the responsibility to serve the master with all one’s worldly resources and abilities (here in terms of money but symbolizing every aspect of life). The theme of judgment continues. Each one is accountable, and those who serve the Master well will have an abundant reward, while those who do not will be condemned.

Craig Blomberg: In 24:45 the slave was faithful and prudent (“wise”). The ten bridesmaids (25:1-13) illustrated prudence in more detail; the parable of the talents will illustrate faithfulness in more detail. In the parable of the ten bridesmaids, the foolish young women thought the task was easier than it turned out to be; in the parable of the talents, the wicked servant thinks it is harder than it turns out to be. In addition, this passage expands on the nature of the preparedness to which the previous parables were pointing, defining the task with which believers are to be occupied until Christ returns, namely, good stewardship for his benefit of all that he has loaned us.

Ray Stedman: Living Dangerously

There is a common, but quite shallow, understanding of this parable that it teaches the need for us to put our natural gifts to work for God. . .

Another easy pitfall we must avoid is to interpret this parable as though it dealt only with the matter of ultimate rewards for service. . .

Now, having gotten our perspective straight, we turn to the inevitable question, "What are the talents, in our experience?" There are several clues given to us in the account which will guide us in this search. We shall discover and assess them one by one.

The first clue is found in the opening verse, "For it will be as when a man going on a journey called his servants and entrusted to them his property." The last two words are the key: "his property." That is another term for the talents which are distributed. They are the Lord's property, God's property. They are then, not something which man can give, but something which God alone controls. The talents are not distributed, like natural gifts, to all men freely, but are given only to those who in some fashion have the relationship of a servant to the Lord. To them he is willing to distribute his property.

The second clue is found in the next verse, "to one he gave five talents, to another two, to another one, to each according to his ability." Again, the last phrase is extremely helpful. Here we learn that the talents are clearly not natural abilities but are actually distributed on the basis of natural ability. To one man the Lord gave five talents because he was a man of great natural ability, he had many gifts. To another he gave two talents because he was not as gifted as the first, and to the third man he only gave one talent because he had few natural abilities. Whatever the talents may be, one thing is certainly clear: they are not natural abilities. Rather, the number of talents given is determined by the number of natural gifts possessed.

The third clue is not stated in the text but is clearly implied. It is the unspoken implication that the Lord expected these servants to invest the talents he distributed in such a way as to produce gain. The talent, then, is something that can be invested, be risked, with the possibility of producing gain or loss. The decision to risk is wholly the servant's. He can choose to take this risk, as the first two servants did, or he can utterly refuse to do so, as the third one did.

The fourth clue is likewise implied. It is that the investment must be made wholly for the benefit of the absent Lord. The talent is not given to the servant for his own use. It remains the property of his absent Lord and if it is risked it must be on the Lord's behalf. There is no promise made to the servants that they will share in any way in whatever profits may be made. They have no right to deduct a broker's percentage. As far as the servant could see, all the loss would be his, all the profit would be the Lord's. The Lord alone would benefit by this transaction, if any would.

The Riddle Solved

Let us now sum up these four clues and ask ourselves a question. What do we professed Christians have which is God's peculiar property, which comes to us on the basis of natural ability, which requires a risk on our part, and that risk appears to benefit only the Lord and not ourselves? Can you answer that?

Well, look at it this way. Having certain natural abilities, what do you then look for? Recognizing that you have a particular gift, what do you then seek? Is it not an opportunity to use that gift? Do we not all look for such opportunities, young and old alike? As we grow up and feel our powers developing, do we not then look for some opportunities to use them? And the more talents we feel we have the more we look for occasions for expression.

So the talents of the parables are to us golden moments of opportunity. . .

What is the final message of Jesus in telling this story? It is: Step out! Risk! Live dangerously! Take constant chances with your life and goods for his name's sake. Don't try to bottle up your life so as to hang on to it at all costs. If you do that you will surely lose it. But surrender yourself to his cause, again and again. That is the way to find life. That is the way to watch for his coming. Having risked yourself to become a Christian, now risk yourself again and again as opportunities arise. Live dangerously! Or that also could be written, love dangerously! To live for Christ is to love men with his love. And that is always a risk.

Walter Wilson: Structurally, the parable falls into three sections, corresponding to three successive time frames: the time before the master's departure (25:14–15a), the time of his absence (25:15b–18), and the time of reckoning (25:19–30), the greatest attention being paid to the concluding scene and, within that scene, to the exchange between the master and the third slave (25:24–30).

Stu Weber: SUPPORTING IDEA: Believers must live continually on the edge of faith-filled obedience, investing everything they have and are for the kingdom.

The preceding parable emphasized that we must always be ready, but it did not reveal anything about the specific ways to live. In this parable, and in the final account of the judgment (25:31-46), Jesus gave his disciples some practical direction about how to live in readiness for his return.

This parable demonstrates how saving faith in the Messiah will manifest itself in practical terms. This parable seems to go beyond the first three in that it takes the watchfulness to new levels of practical obedience and, therefore, to reward. The true disciples' readiness will involve careful stewardship of assets during the king's absence in anticipation of reward. . .

Every Christian is entrusted with some responsibility for the kingdom. Some will take this seriously and invest their lives wisely, and others will squander this responsibility. The part of the kingdom entrusted to each of us is precious to the Lord. He is hurt by the mishandling of a lifetime of opportunity; but he rejoices over a lifetime well spent. He has placed in our hands what is his own. This is a sobering thought—to be stewards of kingdom resources.

David Turner: To be alert is to actively exercise one's gifts and opportunities for service to Jesus and his kingdom. A familiar saying is appropriate here: "Attempt great things for God, expect great things from God." Disciples must not make shaky investments with their Lord's resources, but they cannot excuse their laziness by claiming that they have incurred no losses. "When Christ returns, he will not ask if one had the date right but 'What have you been doing?'" (Garland 1993: 241).

I. (:14-18) STEWARDSHIP DEMANDS ACCOUNTABILITY

A. (:14-15) Stewardship Assigned According to Ability

1. (:14) Privilege of Stewardship

"For it is just like a man about to go on a journey, who called his own slaves, and entrusted his possessions to them."

D. A. Carson: The introduction to this parable in the Greek is somewhat abrupt.

Robert Gundry: "For" makes the following parable a further basis for the exhortation to stay awake in 25:13.

Daniel Doriani: The scope of his resources shows that he was wealthy. He had servants and funds and he "entrusted his property to them" (25:14). He commissioned his servants to put his money to good use while he was away. While the servants wait for the master, they must work to improve his kingdom. The master knows his three servants are not identical triplets: "To one he gave five talents of money, to another two talents, and to another one talent, each according to his ability" (25:15). Then he departed.

Today a "talent" means a skill or ability, but in New Testament times a talent was a unit of money, or to be precise, a weight of a precious metal, typically silver, but sometimes gold or copper. A talent was, therefore, most often an amount of money. The weight of a talent varied over the years, but it was typically seventy-five pounds of silver. The basic unit of money at that time was a denarius, which was a good day's wage for a laborer. One silver talent equaled six thousand denarii. A talent equaled six thousand days' wages, that is, twenty years' wages.

Thus the master entrusted great resources to his servants—funds worth one hundred, forty, and twenty years’ wages respectively.

2. (:15) Proportional Responsibility Delegated in Stewardship

“And to one he gave five talents, to another, two, and to another, one, each according to his own ability; and he went on his journey.”

Homer Kent: A talent was a unit of coinage of comparatively high value. Here the talents were silver (v. 18, argurion, “silver money”). Depending upon who issued them, talents ranged in value from $1,625 (Aegina) to $1,080 (Attic). A talent was worth much more than a pound (mina).

William Barclay: It is always known as the parable of the talents. The talent was not a coin, it was a weight; and therefore its value obviously depended on whether the coinage involved was copper, gold or silver. The most common metal involved was silver; and the value of a talent of silver was considerable. It was worth about fifteen years’ wages for a working man.

B. (:16-18) Stewardship Executed with Varying Degrees of Faithfulness and Wisdom

1. (:16) Enthusiastic and Aggressive Investment

“Immediately the one who had received the five talents went and traded with them, and gained five more talents.”

R. T. France: The first slave’s eagerness—he “went straight off and ...”—is a model for enthusiastic discipleship.

2. (:17) Example Repeated But with Fewer Resources

“In the same manner the one who had received the two talents gained two more.”

3. (:18) Evil Avoidance of Obeying the Stewardship Mandate

“But he who received the one talent went away and dug in the ground, and hid his master's money.”

Grant Osborne: The lazy servant decides to hide his money in the ground. This was considered a valid practice for safeguarding valuables (cf. 13:44; in Luke 19:20, where the servant hid the money “in a piece of cloth,” the action was more disgraceful), but it was deliberate disobedience and an insult to the master, since he was supposed to use it to make a profit. He played it safe to avoid taking a loss, but that was distinctly against the master’s wishes.

II. (:19) LONG DELAY DOES NOT ELIMINATE OR MINIMIZE ACCOUNTABILITY

“Now after a long time the master of those slaves came and settled accounts with them.”

Grant Osborne: The emphasis here is not on the unexpected nature of the return but on both the length of the time away (further evidence Jesus was preparing them for the church age) and the accountability it entails.

III. (:20-30) FAITHFULNESS WILL BE REWARDED AND WICKEDNESS CONDEMNED

A. (:20-28) Assignment of Appropriate Rewards

1. (:20-23) Commendation of Faithful Stewards

a. (:20-21) Wise Investment of Five Talents

1) (:20) Report

“And the one who had received the five talents came up and brought five more talents, saying, ‘Master, you entrusted five talents to me; see, I have gained five more talents.’”

2) (:21) Reward

“His master said to him, ‘Well done, good and faithful slave; you were faithful with a few things, I will put you in charge of many things, enter into the joy of your master.’”

Walter Wilson: Faithfulness, then, results not only in rewards but also in opportunities for demonstrating greater faithfulness.

Grant Osborne: It is possible that “of your master” (τοῦ κυρίου σου) is a subjective genitive and means “the joy your master will give you,” or it could be a simple possessive, meaning, “share in your master’s joy” (in a job well done). Either way the concept is that of eschatological reward. Many see a link with the parable of the bridesmaids, and this is God’s invitation for his faithful people into the messianic banquet, with eternal reward the prospect.

D. A. Carson: The eschatological setting, coupled with the promise of joy that bursts the natural limits of the story, guarantees that the consummated kingdom provides glorious new responsibilities and holy delight (cf. Ro 8:17).

b. (:22-23) Wise Investment of Two Talents

1) (:22) Report

“The one also who had received the two talents came up and said, ‘Master, you entrusted to me two talents; see, I have gained two more talents.’”

2) (:23) Reward

“His master said to him, ‘Well done, good and faithful slave; you were faithful with a few things, I will put you in charge of many things; enter into the joy of your master.’”

Warren Wiersbe: The two men who put their money to work each received the same commendation (Matt. 25:21, 23). It was not the portion but the proportion that made the difference. They started as servants, but their Lord promoted them to rulers. They were faithful with a few things, so the Lord trusted them with many things. They had worked and toiled, and now they entered into joy. Their faithfulness gave each of them a capacity for greater service and responsibility.

2. (:24-28) Condemnation of Wicked Steward

a. (:24-25) Excuses and Blame Shifting by the Wicked Steward

“And the one also who had received the one talent came up and said,

'Master, I knew you to be a hard man, reaping where you did not sow, and gathering where you scattered no seed. 25 'And I was afraid, and went away and hid your talent in the ground; see, you have what is yours.'"

Daniel Doriani: As the servant saw it, he stood in a no-win situation. If he toiled and gained, the master would seize the proceeds. That, the servant thought, was his custom. But if he toiled and lost, he would be punished. Either way, he saw nothing positive. The root of his sin was his bitter judgment that his master was harsh and grasping. We see how mistrust paralyzes people.

Brian Evans: This wicked and lazy servant is so utterly evil that he is trying to blame his laziness on his Master. Master, I knew you to be a hard man. This is not at all true. The Master is not hard but very caring and compassionate.

b. (:26-27) Exposure of Wicked Character and Irresponsible Conduct

"But his master answered and said to him, 'You wicked, lazy slave, you knew that I reap where I did not sow, and gather where I scattered no seed. Then you ought to have put my money in the bank, and on my arrival I would have received my money back with interest.'"

Michael Wilkins: The servant's misperception of the master produces alienation, mistrust, fear, and then personal sloth. Had he truly loved his master, he would not have attempted to place the blame on the master, but would have operated out of love.

D. A. Carson: Grace never condones irresponsibility; even those given less are obligated to use and develop what they have.

Craig Blomberg: "Lazy" (okn ros) more literally means shrinking or hesitating. The master does not dispute the servant's characterization of him, but neither need v. 26 be read as agreeing with it. The master's words sound like biting sarcasm. He points out that, even if the servant were right, he should have realized that his inaction proved all the more inconsistent with his premise. Disobedience would surely elicit a severe master's wrath. He should have invested the money as his fellow servants did. His tragic error lay in allowing himself to be paralyzed by his fear.

Stu Weber: You wicked, lazy servant stands in dramatic contrast to "good and faithful servant" (25:21,23), implying that the servant's laziness was not because of a lack of ability or opportunity. The servant's "safe" behavior and apparent desire not to displease the master were smokescreens for his self-serving and disobedient heart. In reality, he refused to take any risks or do any work. He did not spend himself in the kingdom's interest. He was selfish, lazy, and arrogant.

The master used this servant's own words against him. He explained that his demanding character should have challenged the servant all the more to invest the talent. This was obviously the master's will—to gain some return. Even a small return from interest would show some degree of loyal obedience.

c. (:28) Executing an Exchange of Future Opportunity

"Therefore take away the talent from him, and give it to the one who has the ten talents."

B. (:29-30) Accountability Principles Explained

1. (:29) Faithfulness Rewarded with More Opportunity

“For to everyone who has shall more be given, and he shall have an abundance; but from the one who does not have, even what he does have shall be taken away.”

2. (:30) Disobedience Judged with Eternal Damnation

“And cast out the worthless slave into the outer darkness; in that place there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.”

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How is our view of the goodness of God reflected in what type of service we render?
- 2) Why do the Scriptures consistently connect the concepts of laziness and wickedness? What are some other cross references?
- 3) How can a preoccupation with the details of end time prophecy distract us from proactively taking advantage of our present ministry opportunities?
- 4) What type of differentiation in roles and service opportunities can we expect to see in the Millennial Kingdom (and possibly even in eternity)?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

David Thompson: The difference between the parable of the talents and the parable of the virgins is the emphasis. The emphasis of the parable of the virgins is that of watching for the King to return. The emphasis of the parable of the talents is that of serving until the King does return. W. H. Griffith Thomas said the first parable is about watching, the second is about working.

THOSE WHO MAKE USE OF GOD’S ENTRUSTMENTS, TO THEM WILL BE HIGHLY REWARDED WHEN THEY FACE JESUS CHRIST; BUT THOSE WHO DO NOT WILL LOSE WHEN THEY FACE HIM.

God entrusts different things to different people. One may use those entrustments for God’s glory or one may waste those entrustments on self and do nothing for God. There will come a day in which full, accurate compensation will be given.

Daniel Doriani: Factors in Service

To serve well, we should know ourselves well. Many factors affect our ability to serve: our schedule and energy level, our age and health, our education and experience, our self-discipline and motivation, our marital and family status. But three factors have a pivotal role.

Capabilities and Limitations

God gives everyone abilities; the Bible calls them “gifts” (Eph. 4:7–8) and “graces” (e.g. Rom. 12:6). These terms remind us that the Lord bestows abilities so we may extend his grace to his people (1 Cor. 12:7–11; 14:12).

We might call a gift a raw ability. At the physical level, some people can run faster, jump higher, or lift more weight than their peers. Yet the capacity must be honed and developed to be truly useful. . .

Desire

Desire is passion for our work and pleasure in it. Desire is the thrill an engineer feels as he solves a problem, the satisfaction a diagnostician knows as she labels a disease and prescribes the remedy, the rush an actor feels when he delivers lines perfectly for an enthralled audience.

Paul says those who show mercy must “do it cheerfully” and that givers should “give generously” (Rom. 12:8). The phrase “let him give generously” literally reads “let him give with simplicity.” That is, if someone has the gift of giving, he needs no return, but simply gives. Giving itself is the reward. Givers say, “Please borrow our car. We will be pleased if you do.” Mature disciples take pleasure in using their gifts to help others. We feel alive when we exercise our talents, even if it brings certain hardships. Prophets may need to deliver bitter words of woe, but they still want to speak God’s truth.

I once had a professor who said, “I teach for free; they pay me to grade papers.” Although he was certainly glad to earn a living, he found joy in teaching, not in money. When God moves someone to “be happy in his work—this is a gift of God” (Ecccl. 5:19).

Fruit

Where there are capacity and desire, there should be fruit or results. “Fruit” means the engineer’s solution works and the doctor’s patient improves. Gifted people actually advance God’s kingdom, strengthen the church (1 Cor. 14:3), and lead God’s people to maturity (Eph. 4:12–13). Gifted leaders mobilize God’s people for worthy causes. Encouragers listen and then speak or act to lift spirits (1 Cor. 14:3–5; Rom. 12:8).

The Bible encourages us to seek fruit. God’s work as Creator and Redeemer is fruitful (Pss. 102:25; 104:13); therefore men and women, created in his image, should try to be fruitful. Moses prayed, “May the favor of the Lord our God rest upon us; establish the work of our hands for us—yes, establish the work of our hands” (Ps. 90:17).

Ordinarily, when there is fruit, someone asks the worker to perform his service again, either as a volunteer or in a paying job. Proverbs says, “Do you see a man skilled in his work? He will serve before kings; he will not serve before obscure men” (Prov. 22:29).

Let me offer a test if you are unsure of your gifts. If you do something once and if wise people observe and invite you to do it again, you may have a gift. If wise heads insist that you do it again, you probably have a gift. If they never invite you to do it again, you probably do not. Of course, anyone can make a mistake in judging talent, but the unanimous judgment of a group of seasoned observers is almost always close to the mark. . .

Your experience can corroborate the judgment of others. If you do something once and want to do it again soon, you may have a gift. If you never want to do it again, you probably do not. These are not absolutes and there are gray areas. Some people appear to have more ability than they actually do. Further many men and women have abilities that leave them cold. For example, pastors who excel at preaching and teaching commonly possess more ability as a counselor than they might wish. They can help people, but find it draining. Conversely, some counselors are capable teachers, but find that daunting and draining. Many people have skill in administration but yearn for more ability to lead. If some people have a capacity they neither enjoy nor wish for, we may call it an ability but probably not a gift, since gifts (so we ordinarily think) bring delight to those who receive them.

R. T. France: It is then more about responsibility than about natural endowment, though the degree of responsibility given to each depends on their individual ability (v. 15). The “talents,” however, do not represent that individual ability but are allocated on the basis of it. They represent not the natural gifts and aptitudes which everyone has, but the specific privileges and opportunities of the kingdom of heaven and the responsibilities they entail. The parable thus teaches that each disciple has God-given gifts and opportunities to be of service to their Lord, and that these are not the same for everyone, but it is left to the reader to discern just what those gifts and opportunities are. This is appropriate to the open-ended nature of parables, and different readers may rightly place the emphasis on different aspects of their discipleship. What matters is that, however precisely the “talents” are interpreted, each disciple should live and work in such a boldly enterprising way that the returning master will say “Well done, you good, trustworthy slave.” That is what it means to “be ready” for the parousia, just as in the earlier parable it was the slave who was found hard at work who was rewarded (24:46–47). . .

It will be the slaves’ responsibility not to look with envy at the different hand which has been dealt to their colleagues, but to make the most of what they have, and it will be important to note that the first two slaves will receive identical commendations in vv. 21 and 23 even though the sums they have gained differ, since each has succeeded in proportion to his initial endowment.

Craig Blomberg: The three points of the passage thus approximate to the following:

- (1) Like the master, God entrusts all people with a portion of his resources, expecting them to act as good stewards of it.
- (2) Like the two good servants, God's people will be commended and rewarded when they have faithfully discharged that commission.
- (3) Like the wicked servant, those who fail to use the gifts God has given them for His service will be punished by separation from God and all things good.

This final point seems appropriate both for those who are overtly hostile to God and his revelation and for those who profess commitment to him but show no evidence in their lives of the reality of their profession.

John MacArthur: The Tragedy of Wasted Opportunity

Now the parable of the virgins and the parable of the talents differ in a sense. They are both parables about readiness. You remember the last one, there were ten virgins; five were ready when the Bridegroom came because they had oil in their lamps. Five were not because they didn't. everyone was waiting but only five of the ten were ready to go into the wedding feast. The whole point of that parable was to talk about readiness, preparedness. And it emphasized waiting, waiting for the coming king, looking for the coming of the Lord, anticipating his return.

The emphasis was on waiting. It was on that internal heart attitude that longs for the coming of the Lord. The parable of the talents is not an emphasis on waiting; it's an emphasis on working, on working. While we are waiting and while we are looking and while we are watching, we are to be serving, and that's what the parable of the talents emphasizes. And together they provide for us a masterful balance of living in anticipation of the Second Coming. . .

It's a picture of spiritual capacity and spiritual privilege and spiritual responsibility and spiritual opportunity. And in the story, you know the servant who really loves his master is going to say, "Boy, here's my opinion to show him how much I love him. Here's my opportunity to really invest my time and my energy and my thought and my work to bring him back a return on what he's given me. Here's my opportunity to show him that he was right in trusting me to sort of return his confidence in me. I want to live up to what he thinks. This would appeal to the noblest motive in the heart of a loving servant. This would really be something he would want to fulfill for the sake of the master to whom he owed so very, very much. And that's the whole point, the Lord gives people within the framework of his kingdom, in the framework of his church all different levels of capacities and opportunities. And the issue is what they do with those opportunities. Talents in our bag, the talent that we carry, the bag of coins that we carry would include teaching, how much teaching have we received, how much opportunity to hear, mixed with our God-given and God-created intellectual capacities, emotional capacities and gifts and skills. And how much opportunity for fellowship and how much opportunity for spiritual advantage and insight, and how much opportunity for blessing and how much have we received of all that the kingdom offers, that's our bag, mixed with our God-given capabilities. . .

The responsibility and the reaction then leads to the reckoning, and I just want to introduce this to you and we'll take it up next time. But notice the reckoning in verse 19. After a long time, the Lord of those servants comes and reckons with them. The word reckon is a commercial term meaning to compare accounts; he comes back to look at his books. He comes back to see how they've done in terms of stewardship in regard to their opportunity, and that's the way it's going to be when the Lord returns. He's going to come back and look at the books and see what men have done with their opportunity, with their opportunity to serve the King, with their opportunity to serve the Lord, with their opportunity to serve the Master. What have they done with their spiritual privileges? And I say it is a strong message to a congregation like this where spiritual privilege is so high, where spiritual graces have been so super-abounding. What do you do with the privilege you have? Have you really given the Lord a whole life of service in return for that? . . .

So we want to keep in mind that as God has designed things sovereignly, even though eternity and the kingdom provide a certain amount of equality, there will also be a certain amount of absolute inequality in the sense that we will all be distinct serving and ruling and honoring the Lord in ways unique to us as to our privilege, capability, and service rendered to the Lord. Okay? And we must keep all those things in mind. And God has sovereignly designed it so that ultimately when he's redeemed all of us, we'll all fit perfectly into the plan of giving him glory forever and ever and ever, and ruling and leading at whatever level he has designed and we have proven faithful to that design. . .

And so from the responsibility to the reaction to the reckoning. And then finally to the reward. . .

So, people, let me just sum it up very simply. In the kingdom, in the church, in the assembly of the redeemed, there are going to be those who are prepared and serving the Lord. There are going to be those who are unprepared and who outwardly may be active but are not ready for his coming. And when the Lord comes, there will be a separation and a delineation based upon their service rendered to him. All excuses set aside. False service will be ended and that which they appear to be doing will be given to some others to do for throughout the kingdom and throughout eternity.

Matthew McCraw: Examples of Profitable Investments

- John Gray invested $10,500 in the stock of Ford Motor Company in 1903. When Ford bought the stock back in 1919, the stock was worth a whopping $26.25 million.
- Asa Candler bought the recipe for Coca-Cola from John Pemberton for $2,300 in 1891. Candler then sold the same recipe in 1923 for $25 million!
- Peter Thiel, one of the original investors for Facebook, invested $500,000 in the company in 2005. His return was 800 times the initial investment, as he sold all 25 million shares of Facebook for $400 million in 2012.

You see, history is full of people who made both profitable and devastating investments. The truth is, money can be managed well and it can be managed poorly. A faithful Christian will be a good steward of the money that God has given him or her. However, there are things in life that are much more important than money, and we are to be good stewards of those things as well. . .

Bottom Line: The Lord blesses us with all that we need to faithfully follow Him until He returns.

The time and resources God has given us are grace-filled gifts. Let us be faithful.

We have no excuses to not be fully living the life that God has called us to live in Jesus, equipped by His Holy Spirit: a life of faithfulness, a life of generosity, a life of love, and a life of holiness.

Jeremy Myers: It is very difficult to know who is a five talent servant, and who is a one talent servant. We can probably all agree that someone like Billy Graham is a five talent servant. But there was once a Christian man by the name of Edward Kimball. He was a lowly shoe salesman. He didn't have any education to speak of. He wasn't famous or rich. But he did have a friendship with a young man, and Kimball eventually led that young man to Christ. The young man was D.L. Moody, who became a great evangelist and whose work is still having effects today through Moody Bible Institute, Moody Broadcasting, Moody Publishing, Moody Memorial Church, Moody Missionary Aviation and so on.

But the story doesn't stop there. During Moody's life, his preaching ministry took him to England. At first, he was not warmly received by all the pastors. One of the pastors, the Reverend F. B. Meyer, resisted the unschooled and blunt American evangelist. However, Moody's influence on Meyer's parishioners inspired a change of heart in Meyer. Thus, Meyer joined Moody's evangelistic meetings with wholehearted enthusiasm.

Kimball's influence continued through Meyer when Meyer received an invitation from Moody to come to the United States. While in the states, Meyer's Bible teaching ministry reached a struggling young preacher named J. Wilber Chapman, whose approach was so transformed that he, too, went into evangelistic ministry.

It was Chapman's own crusade advance man, a former clerk in the YMCA, who was to carry on Kimball's chain of multiplication. His name was Billy Sunday.

Sunday preached across North America with spectacular results. His crusades in Charlotte, North Carolina, produced some converts who organized a prayer group that met for years, praying that God would continue the ministry of evangelism through the people of Charlotte.

This group of praying men was led by the Holy Spirit to plan a city-wide crusade. They invited Mordecai Ham, the cowboy evangelist, to speak. During one meeting, some teenagers were among those reached for Christ. They included a young man named Billy Graham.

It all began with one lowly shoe salesman. Maybe we would consider him a one talent servant. But in reality, he had the five talent responsibility of teaching Sunday school to some unruly boys, one of whom was D.L. Moody. D.L. Moody's conversion eventually led to the conversion of Billy Graham, whom all of us consider to be a five talent servant.

So nobody can really know how many talents they have been given. And of course, the one who had two multiplied his to four, and maybe if given a little more time, could have multiplied it to eight.

I don't know what talents God has given to you. I don't know what responsibilities He has assigned to you. But I do know this – they are not insignificant. Even if it is only one talent, that is still $750,000 which can be turned into $1.5 million.

When it comes to investing your time and money in the Kingdom of God, there is no limit to what you can do. But we must be about our Master's business, because the day is coming when He will return. In our parable, that day comes in Matthew 25:19.

https://redeeminggod.com/sermons/matthew/matt_25_14-30/

TEXT: Matthew 25:31-46

TITLE: JUDGMENT OF THE SHEEP AND THE GOATS AT THE RETURN OF CHRIST

BIG IDEA:

SON OF MAN WILL RETURN IN GLORY TO SIT IN JUDGMENT ON THE GENTILES TO DETERMINE ENTRANCE INTO THE MILLENNIAL KINGDOM

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: Here it is the nations who are to be judged, and the basis of that judgment is how they treat God's people. There is no atmosphere of delay or the unexpected timing of the parousia. Yet, similar to the parables of the wheat and the weeds or the good and bad fish of 13:24–30, 47–52, this final part of the discourse centers on the glorious appearing of the Son of Man and the judgment of the nations that will ensue.

The righteous will be rewarded because in showing mercy and taking care of Jesus' messengers they have cared for him. The wicked will be punished because they did not show mercy to Jesus' messengers (note the contrasts—come/depart, blessed/cursed, inherit the kingdom/eternal punishment/eternal life). The theme is first the unity of Jesus with his people and then the responsibility of the world to accept and minister to his followers in mission.

Homer Kent: This judgment scene must be distinguished from that of Revelation 20 (Great White Throne), for that follows the resurrection of the wicked at the close of the Millennium. Here the nations must mean the persons living on earth when Christ returns. They will be judged as individuals, not as groups (them, v. 32, is masculine gender, whereas nations is neuter). Such a judgment of living men at the time of Christ's glorious coming is foretold in Joel 3:1, 2 . . .

It seems clear that the sheep and the goats are distinct from my brethren. Hence the interpretation of the nations as Gentiles and my brethren as the faithful Jewish remnant who will proclaim the gospel of the Kingdom in all the world (24:14; Rev 7:1-8) meets the exigencies of the passage. . . These Jewish believers will bring about the conversion of an unnumbered multitude of Gentiles (Rev 7:9-14), who will evidence their faith by their deeds.

David Thompson: WHEN JESUS CHRIST COMES IN ALL OF HIS GLORY, HE WILL JUDGE EVERY INDIVIDUAL FROM THE GENTILE NATIONS WHO SURVIVED THE TRIBULATION TO DETERMINE WHO GETS TO GO INTO HIS KINGDOM AND THIS DETERMINATION WILL BE MADE ON THE BASIS OF HOW THE GENTILE TREATED THE JEW DURING THE TRIBULATION.

The kingdom will feature O.T. resurrected saints, the Church, faithful Jews and faithful Gentiles who survived the Tribulation. All ungodly Jews will be judged and removed from the earth at the end of the Tribulation (Zech. 13:8-9). This will amount to about 2/3rds of all Jews. Then Gentiles will be judged. In order for the Gentiles to be deemed faithful, they must face judgment. The prophet Joel clearly predicted this judgment (Joel 3:2, 12).

Ray Stedman: The Unconscious Test

[Look at how] how Jesus ends this tremendous talk with his disciples on the Mount of Olives. He suddenly drops the use of parables and returns to a simple narrative. Unlike the household, the ten maidens, and the talents, the judgment of the sheep and goats with which he ends is not parable but fact.

It is hard for us to remember that these words were uttered by a Man standing in the gathering dusk on the Mount of Olives, in the midst of a tiny band of forsaken men, and looking out over a city where even at that moment his enemies were completing the plans for his arrest and execution. When Jesus uttered these words, by every human appearance he was defeated. The powers of darkness were triumphant, the shadow of the cross was falling across his path way, the crowds that once had followed him had long since gone, his friends were fearful and powerless, and one of them was even then set to betray him. Yet as he surveyed the centuries he saw the light that was yet to come, and without uncertainty in his words, in that hour of triumphant evil and seeming human defeat, he declared, "When the Son of man comes in his glory...he will sit on his glorious throne. [And] before him will be gathered the nations." . . .

The purpose of the judgment is obviously to determine who shall enter the kingdom of God which the Son has come to establish. Through all the great discourses of Jesus in the gospels the evident passion of his heart is to see the will of God done on earth as it is in heaven. He will manifest himself in power for the very purpose of fulfilling those ancient dreams of the prophets—an earth that will be filled with the righteousness of God as the waters cover the sea. But only the righteous will be allowed to enter. . .

Some commentators have felt there are three groups in this judgment scene: the sheep, the goats, and another group whom Jesus terms "my brethren" who are the point of testing at the judgment. These "brethren" would likely be the 144,000 Jewish believers who are closely identified with the Lord during the whole period of his presence behind the scenes. The Lord Jesus says to both the sheep and the goats, "...as you did it [or did it not] to one of the least of these my brethren, you did it [or did it not] to me." It seems highly likely that there is this third group involved. Certainly, during the Tribulation each of these 144,000 will be, as Jesus himself was in the days of his flesh, "despised and rejected of men." It will be a severe test of true love to show kindness toward them for they will be an object of furious hatred by the Lawless One and the authorities of earth in that day. . .

The arresting thing about this is that Jesus is clearly saying that the ultimate mark of an authentic Christian is not his creed, or his faith, or his Bible knowledge, but the concern which he shows to those who are in need. The practical demonstration of love is the final proof.

I. (:31-33) PREPARATION FOR JUDGMENT

A. (:31) Seating of the Son of Man on His Throne of Judgment at His Coming in Glory

"But when the Son of Man comes in His glory, and all the angels with Him, then He will sit on His glorious throne."

Van Parunak: This verse forms an external inclusio with 24:30-31. At that point the Lord suspended the chronological presentation for the six parables about readiness for his return. Now he picks up the narrative once more.

Grant Osborne: The glorious appearing of the Son of Man is also found in 13:41, 49; 16:27; 24:30, building on Dan 7:14 (“given authority, glory and sovereign power”) and Zech 14:5 (“Then the LORD my God will come, and all the holy ones with him”). What is spoken of Yahweh in the OT belongs to Christ; his “glory” (δόξα) is clearly emphasized in this verse. In the other Matthean passages, the term connotes both God’s (and thus Christ’s) Shekinah “glory” (the divine glory “dwelling” among his people) and the ineffable glory, majesty, and splendor of the enthroned God of Isa 6 and Ezek 1.

Jesus’ coming “with the angels” refers to the hosts of heaven who at the eschaton will be the eschatological agents of resurrection and judgment (cf. Zech 14:5; Matt 13:41, 49; 16:27; 24:31; 1 Thess 4:15; 2 Thess 1:7; Jude 14).

R. T. France: The sovereign authority displayed in the judgment on the temple (24:30) now finds its eschatological counterpart in the judgment of all nations (v. 32).

B. (32-33) Separation of the People into Sheep and Goats

*“And all the nations will be gathered before Him; and He will separate them from one another, as the shepherd separates the sheep from the goats;
and He will put the sheep on His right, and the goats on the left.”*

Grant Osborne: Sheep had a relative worth much higher than goats, because of their wool (goat hair made a coarse cloth) and the fact that they were easier to care for.

II. (:34-40) PROCLAMATION OF BLESSING AND REWARD ON THE SHEEP

A. (:34-36) Judgment of the Sheep

1. (:34) Blessed People Rewarded

*“Then the King will say to those on His right,
'Come, you who are blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.’”*

John MacArthur: Are people going to go into the kingdom because of their social orientation? There’s far more to it than that, beloved, far more to it. And that’s all bound up in verse 34. People who get confused here somehow miss verse 34, because verse 34 makes it very clear the basis of their entrance into the kingdom. It’s extremely clear.

First of all, “Come” – here comes number one point – “ye blessed of My Father.” That emphasizes the source of their salvation. You are blessed of My Father. You are entering into the kingdom because My Father has determined to bless you. Here you have sovereign grace beautifully expressed. By the way, the phrase in the Authorized, “You blessed of My Father,” in the Greek literally says, “My Father’s blessed ones.” You are coming into My kingdom because God predetermined sovereignly to bless you. He redeemed you out of His sovereign love. So verse 34 expresses the innate reality of redemption and salvation and justification.

And then it says, “Come you who are the blessed who belong to My Father, inherit” – inherit, which implies something very important. You inherit something because you are born into a family. Right? It implies again that they belong to the family of God, to which you belong by faith. You inherit what is yours because by faith you have become a joint heir with Christ, if we can sort of borrow Paul's thought in Romans 8. So you are the elect by sovereign grace, the chosen to be blessed by the Father. And you are those who inherit because you belong to the family by faith, you are sons of God. And so you see the source of salvation and you see the gift of salvation given to those who are the children of God.

Further it says, "Inherit the kingdom prepared for you." And that again emphasizes the selectivity of salvation. When God prepared the kingdom it was for you that He prepared it. You were chosen; you were ordained to this; you are those whom the Father designed to love. So you have the source of salvation in the Father's blessing, desire to bless, you have the reception of salvation in the faith that brings you into the inheritance, you have the selectivity of salvation in the fact that the kingdom was prepared for those people. Let me tell you something, whoever it was prepared for are going into it. God isn't going to lose any and He knows who He prepared it for.

And then a further thought. It was prepared from the foundation of the world. Now that emphasizes the eternal covenant that God made with Himself to redeem a people selected before the foundation of the world. Who are these people going in? They're not just people who got involved in social action. They're not just people who did good deeds on the earth. These are those chosen from the foundation of the world by sovereign God to receive His grace and be blessed and who responded by faith and became His heirs in the family. And all of that soteriological richness is compacted in verse 34. And that can't be missed, that can't be missed. The good deeds mentioned in 35 and 36 are not the primary emphasis. The primary emphasis in identifying these people is in verse 34. The good deeds are the fruit of the redemption defined for us in such simple yet profound terms in verse 34. And the people who get confused by this passage get confused because they perhaps haven't looked as closely as they ought to look at verse 34. And looking at verses 35 and 36 alone might provide some difficulty. . .

These people who are standing there at that moment when Jesus comes will have survived the tribulation and the tribulation will have generated some dire need – some dire need. There will be hungry, thirsty people. There will be homeless people. There will be shattered and devastated families and lives. There will be desperate people. There will be imprisoned people. There will be deathly sick people. All of those things will come out of the tribulation in very clear and bold relief. And when that happens to the family of God, it will be the believers that come to their rescue and they don't care whether they're identified with the family of God, they don't fear the consequence of that. They'll pay the price.

2. (:35-36) Basis for the Reward = Practical Love Giving Evidence of Regeneration

*"For I was hungry, and you gave Me something to eat;
I was thirsty, and you gave Me drink;
I was a stranger, and you invited Me in;
36 naked, and you clothed Me;
I was sick, and you visited Me;
I was in prison, and you came to Me."*

John Walvoord: Those described here are people who have lived through the great tribulation, a time of unparalleled anti-Semitism, when the majority of Jews in the land will be killed. Under these circumstances, if a Gentile befriends a Jew to the extent of feeding and clothing and visiting him, it could only mean that he is a believer in Jesus Christ and recognizes the Jews as the chosen people. Accordingly, in this context, such works become a distinctive evidence that the Gentiles described as the sheep are those who are children of God by faith in Jesus Christ.

David Thompson: The basis for determining whether or not an individual Gentile gets into the kingdom will be the treatment of the Jews during the Tribulation.

B. (:37-40) Justification for the Judgment

1. (:37-39) Question of Clarification

*“Then the righteous will answer Him, saying,
‘Lord, when did we see You hungry, and feed You, or thirsty, and give You drink?
38 And when did we see You a stranger, and invite You in, or naked, and clothe You?
39 And when did we see You sick, or in prison, and come to You?’”*

Warren Wiersbe: The interesting thing about this judgment is that the sheep individuals are surprised at what they hear. They will not remember having seen the Lord Jesus Christ and ministering to His needs. But just as they lovingly ministered to the believing Jews [in the tribulation period], they did it to Christ. Their motive was not reward, but sacrificial love.

2. (:40) Answer of Clarity Based on Solidarity of God and His People

“And the King will answer and say to them, ‘Truly I say to you, to the extent that you did it to one of these brothers of Mine, even the least of them, you did it to Me.’”

Grant Osborne: This is the heart of this section, the “moral of the story.” The king on his glorious throne responds to their incredulous query with another “amen” (ἀμήν) saying that highlights the importance of it. Jesus and his followers are one (John 6:56; 15:4–7; 1 John 2:24, 3:24, 4:15), so what people do to one of his disciples they do to him (Matt 10:40–42). Some see this as an extension of 10:40–42. This union between Jesus and his kingdom community is a family union; they are “brothers and sisters.” In 12:48–50 (another important parallel) Jesus’ true family is identified as “whoever does the will of my Father in heaven.” That is also the definition of “the righteous” in 25:37, so this is a further extension of the true ethical conduct required of kingdom people.

R. T. France: Whether they knew it or not, the people they helped were associated with Jesus, to such an extent that they could be said to be Jesus. The more general principle of Prov 19:17 that “the person who is kind to the poor lends to the Lord” is thus here more specifically applied to Jesus and his people. As we have noted in the introductory comments above the terms used in this verse strongly reflect language used earlier in this gospel to describe Jesus’ disciples as “these little ones” (10:42; 18:6, 10, 14) and as Jesus’ “brothers and sisters” (12:50; cf. also 28:10). Jesus has spoken in 18:20 of being present where his people have come together in his name. Here his identification with his people goes further: their experiences are his experiences, and what is done to them is done to him. Cf. 10:40, “Anyone who welcomes you welcomes me,” and 18:5, “Anyone who welcomes one such child in my name welcomes me.” This passage thus expands on the message of 10:40–42: how people respond to Jesus’ representatives is both a sign of their attitude to him and the basis for their reward. This sense of solidarity between Jesus and his people will be creatively developed by the author of Hebrews when he explains how it was necessary for the Savior to share the experiences of those he saves, so that he rightly calls them his brothers and sisters (Heb 2:10–18).

III. (:41-45) PROCLAMATION OF CURSING AND PUNISHMENT ON THE GOATS

A. (:41-43) Judgment of the Goats

1. (:41) Cursed People Punished

*“Then He will also say to those on His left,
'Depart from Me, accursed ones, into the eternal fire which has been prepared for the devil and his angels;”*

2. (:42-43) Basis for the Punishment = Lack of Love = No Evidence of Regeneration

*“for I was hungry, and you gave Me nothing to eat;
I was thirsty, and you gave Me nothing to drink; 43 I was a stranger, and you did not invite Me in;
naked, and you did not clothe Me;
sick, and in prison, and you did not visit Me.”*

Grant Osborne: detailing what the nations refused to do for Jesus’ followers. One could break these into two categories:

1. acts of mercy for physical needs (hungry, thirsty, ill), and
2. acts of charity toward social deprivation (stranger, naked, in prison).

The unrighteous are unwilling to help in any way and so are condemned for this.

B. (:44-45) Justification for the Judgment

1. (:44) Question of Clarification

*“Then they themselves also will answer, saying,
'Lord, when did we see You hungry, or thirsty, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not take care of You?”*

2. (:45) Answer of Clarity Based on Solidarity of God and His People

*“Then He will answer them, saying,
'Truly I say to you, to the extent that you did not do it to one of the least of these,
you did not do it to Me.”*

David Turner: Chiastic structure:

Judgment of the sheep (25:34–40)

Judgment of the goats (25:41–45)

Destiny of goats: Eternal punishment (25:46a)

Destiny of sheep: Eternal life (25:46b)

(:46) CONCLUSION – SUMMARY JUDGMENT

A. Eternal Punishment

“And these will go away into eternal punishment,”

B. Eternal Life

“but the righteous into eternal life.”

Grant Osborne: The emphasis is on the eternal nature of the two opposite destinies. “Eternal life” (19:16, 29) throughout the NT is the motivation for a life of sacrificial service to God, the church, and the very world that rejects and persecutes God’s people. It is clear here that there are no second chances after death. The decisions made by “the sheep and the goats” have eternal ramifications. . .

There is no middle ground. Every person on earth is going either to heaven or to hell. Moreover, the decision will be made in this life, so it is essential that every person be confronted by the gospel and challenged to make a decision. There is no neutrality, and nothing in life is as important as this question, because it determines every person’s eternal destiny!

Stu Weber: Jesus completed the judgment scene and the discourse by summarizing the eternal destinies of the two categories of people. The unrighteous would go away (a permanent departure) into eternal punishment, but the righteous would enter eternal life. The use of “eternal” to modify both “punishment” and “life” contrasts the two destinies and emphasizes their permanence. By the time each person stands before the king, his or her eternity is established and cannot be changed.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Do the Scriptures teach only one final eschatological judgment event that happens at a point in time or a variety of different judgments happening at different points in time?
- 2) How do you defend Pauline soteriology of justification by faith alone in the light of the emphasis in this passage of practical love being the basis for judgment?
- 3) Why do both groups (the sheep and the goats) have questions for the Judge regarding His explanation of their conduct as directly impacting the person of Christ?
- 4) Do the Scriptures teach annihilation of the wicked at the final judgment (“eternal” punishment in the sense that it relates to eternity) or the unending punishment of the wicked in hell?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

S. Lewis Johnson: The Judgment of the Living Gentiles

Now it is my opinion that in this passage we have the judgment of the living Gentiles. But before we look at it let me remind you of the different judgments that are set forth in the word of God. There is first of all, our Lord’s suffering on Calvary’s cross. That is called a judgment. On the cross, Jesus Christ was judged for sin, and therefore those who have come to believe our Lord Jesus Christ do not have any judgment, because we have borne our judgment in our substitute. We do not bear the penalty of sin because we have already borne it in our substitute the Lord Jesus Christ. We do not have to bear the condemnation for sin, because we have already borne it in our substitute the Lord Jesus, and we shall not be asked to bear again the penalty which has already been borne by us in our substitute. It would be unjust of God to have two payments for the judgment of our sin.

There is also the believer's self-judgment according to the Apostle Paul in 1 Corinthians chapter 11. That has to do with our daily sins, and it is our responsibility to examine ourselves, to judge ourselves as we live our Christian lives, confessing the sin that the Holy Spirit brings to our remembrance in order that we may have restoration with the Father. The believer's self-judgment.

We read in the Scriptures, too, that we shall all – that is, all believers, the context makes plain – appear before the judgment seat of Jesus Christ, and there we are to receive rewards, so there is a judgment that believers look forward to, which is called the judgment of believers for rewards.

The Bible also speaks of the judgment of living Israelites with a reference to the Messianic kingdom. It speaks of the judgment of living Gentiles here in Matthew chapter 25. It also speaks of the judgment of the fallen angels; their judgment is still future. And finally, it speaks of the judgment of the unbelieving dead in Revelation chapter 20 verse 11 through verse 15, that very familiar passage in which we have the Great White Throne Judgment. So it is my belief that we have, in Matthew chapter 25, the judgment of living Gentiles, and the goal of this judgment is entrance into the Messianic kingdom. . .

The implication of this, it seems to me, is that this is a judgment that takes place on the earth immediately after his Second Advent. The most startling thing about this to me, however, is not that the subjects of this judgment are the living Gentiles or that it is the time of the Second Advent and that the place is the earth. The most remarkable thing about it is what might seem to be a very obvious thing; is that our Lord Jesus is the judge, the Son of man is the judge. . .

When we get to heaven, we shall not find people up there who will be saying, I do praise the Lord that I have been the recipient salvation since I have believed of my own free will. It is remarkable when you read the Book of Revelation through you do not read any such sentiment. You do not read anything other than that they who are in heaven are praising the Lord and the Lamb. They attribute all of their salvation to the things that the Lamb has done as a result of the Father's purpose and will. It is the biblical teaching that we are blessed of our Father who has brought it to pass, that there is a redemptive work by the Son and who, through the Holy Spirit, works on the hearts of men whose wills are in bondage to sin, to bring them to a decision that is favorable for themselves and towards God.

We do not deny volition; we deny free volition. There is a world of difference between denial of volition and denial of free volition. We do say, men must make a decision, but we say that men cannot make a decision acceptable to God apart from the work of the Holy Spirit. It is the work of the Holy Spirit that makes the unwilling willing. It is the work of the Holy Spirit that brings us from darkness and bondage to sin to light and to freedom of the salvation of Jesus Christ. This is what we say. This is what we affirm. This is what we say, the Bible affirms, and incidentally, it affirms it of us after we have become Christians, too, for we read, “Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure.”

John Walvoord: A strict exegesis of this passage, however, does not support the conclusion that this is a general judgment. There is no mention of resurrection of either the righteous or the wicked, and “all nations” seems to exclude Israel. The conclusion that this is a final judgment is necessary to the amillenarians’ point of view, but it is not taught in this passage. Accordingly, if the view that there is a kingdom of Christ on earth for a thousand years after His second advent is supported by other Scriptures, this passage fits naturally in such a prophetic framework, and, as such, constitutes the judgment of the living who are on earth at the time of the second coming of Christ in respect to their entrance into the millennial kingdom. This judgment therefore should be contrasted to the judgment of Israel (Eze 20:34-38) and the judgment of the wicked (Rev 20:11-15) which comes after the millennium has concluded. This passage, more precisely than any other, describes the judgment of the world at the beginning of Christ’s millennial kingdom. . .

This passage, while not dealing specifically with amillennialism or postmillennialism, clearly gives these views no support whatever. The postmillennial dream of a gradually improving world is not revealed here. Instead, Christ comes to a world that is basically anti-Christ and worshipping a man satanically empowered. A judgment like this does not fit into the amillennial interpretation either, because there is no basis here for concluding this to be a judgment of all men living and dead. It is quite different than the judgment of the great white throne (Rev 20:11-15), which takes place in space, whereas this judgment takes place on earth. . .

Furthermore, when these saints are judged, they are not given new bodies, but enter the millennium in their natural bodies, in keeping with the millennial predictions of Scripture which describe the saints as bearing children, building houses, and otherwise having a natural life (Is 65:18-25).

John MacArthur: The Judgment of the Nations

In Revelation it tells us that the Lord Jesus will come to establish an earthly kingdom of a thousand years’ duration. In chapter 20, it says Satan will be bound for a thousand years, verse 3. And verse 4, the saints will reign with Christ a thousand years. The Lord Jesus is going to come back. He came the first time in humiliation. He comes the second time in glory. Many of you are familiar with that. The second time He comes, He comes to set up His kingdom. But before the kingdom can begin, it must be determined who can go into the kingdom and who must be kept out. So all the people are then gathered together and the Lord puts those in the kingdom who belong and out of the kingdom who do not belong. That is the judgment we see here. So we’re looking to the second coming of Jesus Christ and a time of judgment – commonly known, because of the analogy that’s used, as the judgment of the sheep and the goats. . .

Matthew presents Him not only as the revealed King and the rejected King but as the returning King. And in chapter 24 and 25, there is this great sweeping sermon of our Lord about His second coming. And it is not the first time it is mentioned in the gospel of Matthew. It is mentioned previous to this on several occasions in our Lord’s conversations with His disciples. It was of major importance to the Lord and of major importance to Matthew as well. In Matthew 16:28, “Verily I say unto you, there are some standing here who shall not taste death till they see the Son of Man coming in His kingdom.” Verse 27, “The Son of Man shall come in the glory of His Father with His angels and reward every man according to His works.” Matthew 19:28 similarly says that He will come in the regeneration and the Son of Man will sit on the throne of His glory and that the disciples will sit on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel and so forth. So He has spoken about it before to the disciples, but now in a great sermon embracing two chapters, the Lord speaks of His second coming and Matthew records it as the completion of His presentation of the royal character of Jesus Christ. He is coming as regal reigning sovereign King – that’s the message. . .

Now the Son of Man, we said, is the judge. He comes as King but not only as King. He comes also as judge. Because He comes as King to establish His kingdom, He must make a decision and a determination as to who goes into His kingdom. It’s His kingdom; He is sovereign; He is King, but He also has to make judgments about who enters in. And as John 5:22 says, “All judgment is committed to the Son.” So as well as being King, He is judge, and He will come to determine who goes into the kingdom and who does not. He is the judge. . .

We don’t know the exact moment. We know the period of time just following the tribulation. The great tribulation will be triggered by the abomination of desolations. And then will break loose all the events described in Matthew 24 and in Revelation 6 to 18. As all of those things break loose in that period of time, you get closer and closer to the coming of Christ. Then the sky goes black and the sign appears. And some day and some hour around that time, the Son of Man will come. The exact day, the exact hour we don’t know. But it’ll be at the second coming that the judgment takes place. . .

The place of judgment, notice it in verse 31, “When He comes in His glory with His angels, He will sit upon His glory throne.” Where, by the promise of the prophets, is the throne of the Messiah’s glory to be? In Jerusalem on Mount Zion in the holy city, for it is the throne of David. And the prophets said He will sit on the throne of His father David. And so He will come to Jerusalem. . .

Now who are the subjects of judgment? . . .

So the kingdom then will be populated by the glorified redeemed of the Old Testament, the New Testament, and the tribulation period. They’re already there.

Now that leaves us with those people who are alive on the earth. Anybody who’s already died as a believer, they’re going to receive a glorified form to go in. But those that are still alive and are to be brought in, those who are true believers, have survived the Tribulation, they will be brought in in their physical form only. In other words, they’ll just go right into the kingdom living in their physical form. There’s no reason to believe anything else other than that. It is an earthly kingdom. And one of the proofs of that is that the prophets tell us there will be reproduction in the kingdom. We know that. The Bible says that at the end of the thousand-year kingdom, there will be a rebellion take place and multitudes all over the earth will come to fight against Christ. Well this couldn’t be the glorified redeemed and it couldn’t be the unglorified redeemed, it’s got to be the children of the unglorified redeemed who didn’t believe. . .

You say, well, how could people be born in that kingdom with Christ ruling in that perfect time of the world with all the glory that’s there, how could they be born and reject Jesus Christ when He’s right there and they can see Him and they can touch Him and they can watch His power? How could they reject? Well ask yourself the question: How did they do it the first time? Then you’ll have your own answer. It’s the sinfulness of sin. And if you don’t think men are depraved, then you haven’t looked at the fact that they will reject even when Jesus Christ rules the whole world with perfect wisdom, perfect love, perfect power. . .

Listen to Jeremiah 31:35 and 36, “Thus says Jehovah, who gives the sun for a light by day and the ordinance of the moon and the stars for a light by night. 'If these ordinances depart from before Me,' says Jehovah, 'then the seed of Israel also will cease from being a nation before Me forever.'” Listen to what it says in Isaiah 66:22, “For as the new heaven and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before Me,' says Jehovah, 'so shall your seed and your name remain.'” In other words, God says I will not change My promise to Israel. And spiritualizing these things, wishing them away, it can only be done if you make the church Israel, if you make the future the present, and if you spiritualize the prophecies. And then you have disallowed God’s single greatest way to prove His faithfulness and His promises. . .

Now who has the right to come back to all the prophecies regarding Christ’s second coming and spiritualize them all? And when it says He’s going to come down and touch the Mount of Olives? No, no, no, not the real Mount of Olives. And He’s going to make a valley there and He’s going to reign a thousand years on the earth. No, no, no, not a real valley. No, no, no, not the earth, not a real kingdom, not a thousand years. You see what we’ve just done, we’ve created a monster. Because who’s going to tell us, if these don’t mean what they say, what in the world they do mean? And why is it that all the prophecies we’ve learned to bank on as being literal are no use to us in understanding how we’re supposed to bank on future prophecies?

The whole idea is ludicrous. Who gave us the right to turn Christians into Jews? To turn Jerusalem into the church? And to make Canaan in heaven? Who gave us the right to spiritualize all of this? Who gave us the right to put the throne of David in heaven? It’s always been on earth – always. Who told us that the land which Israel will inherit is up there not down here? The only land they ever knew about was down here. And when it says He’ll reestablish and replant His people, who told us that the land in which He’s going to replant His people is a heavenly land when it tells us it’s here? It’s literal. We are literally at sea if we spiritualize Scripture. There’s just no way to know what we’re talking about except in vagueries.

Another thought. This is so important. I think you’ll understand this one if you’ve missed any of the others. The earthly visible kingdom of Christ is the best possible way for Jesus Christ to demonstrate that He is the supreme ruler over His creation. Did you get that? It’s the best possible way for Him to demonstrate that He’s a supreme ruler over His creation. Now how can Jesus prove that He can supremely rule this world? How can He prove that He can supremely rule man? How can He prove that He can control the earth if He’s not given the opportunity to do that? If history just ends, He comes, wipes out the earth, and everything is a glorious eternity from then but there’s no restored earth, there’s no kingdom of Christ on the earth, when does He prove that He truly was the ruler of this world? When does He show what could have been done with creation? When does He demonstrate how happy men could have been under His rule? When does He demonstrate that the world could have been a place of peace and a place of joy and a place where righteousness reigned – reigned and ruled, a place where evil was instantly punished? When is that going to be proven? When does Christ get His moment in the sun? Does the whole thing end with the devil having run the whole thing right out of gas and it stops and we go into eternity, and we never have a display in the universe of what it would have been if Jesus Christ had been in control of it? I think not. I think not. . .

Now we’ve looked at the judge in this judgment, the Son of Man, verse 31. We’ve looked at the time of the judgment, after the close of the tribulation when He comes in glory to set up His kingdom. We’ve looked at the place of judgment where His glory throne is, that’s in Jerusalem.

We’ve looked at the subjects of judgment, verse 32, all the peoples, all the ethnē, all the ethnic groups, everybody all around the world that's still alive.

And now we want to look this morning at the process of judgment, how does this judgment occur? . . .

Van Parunak: Judgment is a major theme at the Lord's return. With some caution, we can distinguish three phases:

	Anti-christ	Second Coming			Judgment of Nations	Millennium	Satan's Rebellion	Judgment of Wicked Dead
		Rapture	Judgment of Saints	Descent to Earth
Rev 13-20	13-18			19:6-21	20:4-5	20:6	20:7-10	20:11-15
Matthew	24:15-28	24:29-31	7:21-23 24:45-25:30		19:28; 25:31-46
Other		1 Thes 4:13-17	Psa 50:1-6 Rom 14:10 2 Cor 5:10		Joel 3:1; Zeph 3:8; Dan 7:22; 1 Cor 6:2; Ezek 20:33	Isaiah 60

Table 19: End-Time Judgments

So the overall picture is that the kingdom will begin with a judgment on those who live on the earth, to determine who shall be allowed to enter it. The church is not part of that judgment. She has already been received to the Lord, to be part of his triumphal entourage described in Revelation 19, and in fact other scriptures make clear that the saints will be helping to execute this judgment.

It is sometimes claimed that the objects of judgments are nations as units, not individual people, but it is important to note that the pronoun “them” is masculine, while “nation” is neuter. The word “nation” is used as a collective to refer to the people that make it up.

Ray Stedman: Now the discourse is ended. We have heard the greatest prophet who ever lived outline for us the history of the future. It has been a fascinating experience, containing many surprising and unexpected revelations. If we had never read this discourse before we could not possibly have guessed what the outcome of history will be. But now that we know, what shall we do about it?

There can be only one answer to that. We must do what our Lord says. We must obey the command he repeats again and again. Watch! Keep alert! Watch! We have learned now what that means. It means three specific and definite things: It means we are to help one another feed upon the living Lord Jesus, as revealed in the written Word of God. We must study the Book. It means we must walk in the Spirit, depending not upon our human resources and weapons, but upon the power of an indwelling Spirit who is God himself, at work in us. It means we must live dangerously, venturing ourselves for Christ's sake. We must keep thrusting out in his name, buying up every opportunity to meet those around us at the point of their need.

This, and this alone, is watching. Nothing can take its place.

TEXT: Matthew 26:1-5

TITLE: THE PREDICTION OF JESUS AND THE PLOT TO KILL HIM

BIG IDEA:

THE PASSOVER LAMB PREPARES HIS DISCIPLES FOR HIS CRUCIFIXION AS THE WICKED DESIGNS OF THE JEWISH CONSPIRATORS MESH WITH GOD'S SOVEREIGN CONTROL AND REDEMPTIVE PLAN

INTRODUCTION:

R. T. France: The beginning of the passion narrative in Matthew, as in Mark, consists of a “concentric” drawing out of three aspects of the setting. The outer layer, in vv. 1–2 and 17–19, is the approach of the Passover festival, which provides both the historical and the theological context for what is to follow. Within that broader context we hear of the plotting of the priestly authorities against Jesus, and their recruiting of Judas, vv. 3–5 and 14–16. And set within that framework is the symbolic incident of the anointing of Jesus by a woman at Bethany (vv. 6–13). The devotion of this unnamed woman contrasts with the hostility of the priests and the treachery of Judas, while Jesus’ interpretation of her act (v. 12) prepares the reader for the success of their plot. But all this is to be understood in the context of the Passover, the festival of God’s redemption of his people and the occasion of the covenant which constituted Israel as the people of God.

Donald Hagner: In the story of the passion and resurrection of Jesus we come to the climax of the Gospel and by far the longest consecutive narrative in Matthew. Here the goal of Jesus’ mission is realized. The death of Jesus on the cross is no surprise, nor does it indicate the failure of Jesus’ mission. From the evangelist’s point of view, it is the fulfillment of scripture (26:54, 56), the fixed will of God, and the deliberate choice of the obedient Son of God. This, indeed, is the unique time (kairos) of Jesus (26:18). Therefore, the tone of the narrative is not one of tragedy or defeat but one of accomplishment and victory even before we reach the triumph of the resurrection in chap. 28. There remains, to be sure, the deep mystery of the abandonment experienced by Jesus on the cross. Although we cannot penetrate that mystery, its meaning is surely to be related to the procuring of the forgiveness of sins through the redemptive death of the Son spoken of earlier in the narrative (1:21; 20:28; cf. 26:28). Jesus in this narrative accomplishes the purpose for which he came into this world. . .

In this brief transition passage we are at a turning point, being set in motion toward the goal of the cross. The teaching and healing ministry of Jesus is essentially at an end, and we proceed now into the final and climactic stage of the Gospel narrative. Jesus calmly and confidently predicts what is to happen to him. This is indeed why he has come, and it is his primary work. There is a touch of irony in that directly after this prediction the Jewish authorities are recorded as busy in their deliberations concerning the need to be rid of this troublemaker. Thus unknowingly they industriously set about to accomplish the very purpose of God in Jesus. They cannot thwart God’s plan; in their evil opposition to Jesus they become the very instruments of the fulfillment of that plan.

Grant Osborne: There are only two more days remaining in Jesus’ life, and God is handing Jesus over to become the paschal sacrifice. Jesus is in control and tells his followers what must soon take place. We then see the part the leaders will play in this central drama of history as they plot Jesus' death; they only think they are in control!

Charles Swindoll: While Jesus tried to mentally prepare His closest followers for what was coming, His archenemies were on the move in the shadows and behind closed doors, plotting a seek-and-destroy mission against the Messiah (26:4). He had ruffled their feathers of self-righteousness and riled them up by His bold proclamation of truth against their hypocritical falsehoods. Now they wanted to put an end to Him once and for all.

I. (:1-2) PREDICTION OF HIS PASSOVER CRUCIFIXION – JESUS CONTROLS HIS OWN DESTINY

A. (:1) Transition from a Ministry of Public Teaching

*“And it came about that when Jesus had finished all these words,
He said to His disciples,”*

Donald Hagner: Here πάντα, “all,” occurs for the first time, probably however referring only to the sayings in chaps. 24–25. On the other hand, very likely it includes a hint that this is formally the end of Jesus' teaching, the last of the great public discourses (cf. Deut 31:1 LXX, where almost the same formula is used of the formal end of Moses' teaching).

B. (:2) Timing of the Crucifixion of the Son of Man

“You know that after two days the Passover is coming, and the Son of Man is to be delivered up for crucifixion.”

R. T. France: Before we hear of the priests' plot against Jesus, we hear Jesus himself foretelling what is to come. The order of these verses thus tells us that Jesus will not be taken by surprise, but willingly accepts his fate. The apparently free initiative of the priests (vv. 3–5) is to be understood within the context of an already determined divine plan.

Donald Hagner: The note about the Passover is more than simply a note of the time. When it is connected, as here, with a reference to the death of Jesus, it gives the latter a sacrificial significance; implicitly Jesus is the paschal lamb (brought out clearly in vv 26–28; πάσχα, “Passover,” is mentioned only in this chapter of Matthew; cf. vv 17–19; for explicit comparison of the Passover lamb and the death of Christ, see 1 Cor 5:7).

Leon Morris: Jesus uses his favorite title for himself, the Son of man, and says that he will be handed over (for this verb see on 4:12) to be crucified. The verb indicates two things: the initiative will be taken by the Jews, who will do the handing over, but the death sentence will be carried out by the Romans, who in any case were the only people who could perform a crucifixion in Judea at that time. The expression indicates that Jesus was well aware of the schemes of his enemies and of the inevitable outcome. This prediction of the passion is found only in Matthew. It is not without its interest that Jesus accurately fixes the time of his death as after two days, while his enemies say that it will be after the feast, that is, more than a week away (v. 5).

S. Lewis Johnson: Now we must not think, however, that because the death of our Lord Jesus was something that took place by the determinant counsel and foreknowledge of God that men are not responsible, for as Peter said, “Him being delivered by the determinant counsel and fore knowledge of God, ye have with wicked hands taken and crucified.” And in verse 3 through verse 5 we have the wicked hands of the chief priests and the scribes and the elders, together with Judas and they consult together in order to bring about the crucifixion of the Lord Jesus. So grace and sin are moving toward the same end, and God makes the wrath of men to praise him. He is in control of these circumstances. We shall see this over and over again as we study the passion of our Lord, so we’ll drop it at this point.

II. (:3-5) PLOT TO KILL JESUS – GOD CONTROLS THE TIMETABLE

A. (:3) The Gathering of Jewish Conspirators

“Then the chief priests and the elders of the people were gathered together in the court of the high priest, named Caiaphas;”

William Barclay: At the same time, the Jewish authorities were laying their plots and stratagems. Joseph Caiaphas, to give him his full name, was high priest. We know very little about him, but we do know one most suggestive fact. In the old days, the office of high priest had been hereditary and had been for life; but when the Romans took over in Palestine, high priests came and went in rapid series, for the Romans appointed and deposed high priests to suit their own purposes. Between 37 BC and AD 67, when the last was appointed before the destruction of the Temple, there were no fewer than twenty-eight high priests. The suggestive thing is that Caiaphas was high priest from AD 18–36. This was an extraordinarily long time for a high priest to last, and Caiaphas must have brought the technique of co-operating with the Romans to a fine art. And therein precisely lay his problem.

The one thing the Romans would not stand was civil disorder. Let there be any rioting, and certainly Caiaphas would lose his position. At the Passover time, the atmosphere in Jerusalem was always explosive. The city was packed tightly with people. . .

It is little wonder that Caiaphas sought some stratagem to take Jesus secretly and quietly, for many of the pilgrims were Galilaeans, and to them Jesus was a prophet. It was in fact his plan to leave the whole thing until after the Passover Feast had ended, and the city was quieter; but Judas was to provide him with a solution to his problem.

Charles Swindoll: Caiaphas, the high priest, becomes the leading antagonist, embodying all the forces of the religious elites bent on protecting their power and promoting their personal interests. Caiaphas may have been behind many of the previous attempts to hinder or trap Jesus, to question His integrity, and to weaken His influence. Now, after the numerous, multipronged efforts to foil Christ’s mission and resist His message have come up empty, the high priest and his wicked cabal have murder on their minds: “They plotted together to seize Jesus by stealth and kill Him” (26:4). . .

At the time of Christ, the office of high priest in Jerusalem carried a lot of clout. Not only was the high priest the head of the temple proceedings, but he was also the ruler over many civil, social, and political affairs. Those of the priestly class “were the real rulers of the nation, although they did not claim for themselves the title of king.” Since the Jews were under the thumb of the Roman Empire, the appointment of the high priest had to be undertaken by Rome, and the high priest operated under the authority of the Roman procurator.

At the time of Jesus' trial, Caiaphas officially held the office (26:3), having been appointed by the Romans, but many recognized Caiaphas's father-in-law, Annas, as the real power behind the throne. Annas had been appointed high priest in AD 6, but he was deposed nine years later. However, he remained the powerful head of an elite family, not unlike figures we see in modern organized crime syndicates. After his removal from office, he continued to wield power behind the scenes, first through his son Eleazar and then through his son-in-law Caiaphas, which explains his presence in the trials of Jesus. . .

So, as we visualize the plot to kill Jesus, we should not imagine an aboveboard deliberation among otherwise law-abiding rulers who simply made mistakes because of a lack of spiritual insight. Rather, we should picture the kind of backroom scheming we might see in a movie about the Mafia, in which unscrupulous thugs plot how to take out an adversary who is treading on their territory. Members of the high priestly family were in many respects the gangsters of Jerusalem who felt their unchallenged power squeezed by Jesus' words and deeds. And in order to maintain the status quo of deep corruption, they were willing to commit murder.

B. (:4) The Goal to Seize and Kill Jesus

“and they plotted together to seize Jesus by stealth, and kill Him.”

Donald Hagner: The plotting against Jesus is described as δόλω, “by deceit” (only occurrence in Matthew). Implied by this are both the innocence of Jesus and the unrighteousness of his opponents. The word is commonly used in the LXX to describe those who oppress the righteous (e.g., LXX Pss 9:28; 34:20; 51:2; 54:11; Prov 12:20; Jer 5:27).

D. A. Carson: The use of both assembled and plotted is deliberately suggestive of Psalm 31:13: “For I am the slander of many; fear is on every side; while they take counsel together against me, they scheme to take away my life.”

C. (:5) The Game Plan

“But they were saying, ‘Not during the festival, lest a riot occur among the people.’”

R. T. France: The need for “stealth” (more literally “deceit”) is explained by v. 5. The manner of Jesus' arrival at the city in 21:1–11 had been enough to alert them to his potential as a popular leader, and his robust performance in debate with Pharisaic and other leaders during the following days in the temple courtyard would be likely to have won further support. Note his popular reputation as a prophet (21:11, 46) like John (21:26). Given the volatile mood of the crowded city during the festival, a public arrest of Jesus would be very risky; the reaction of the Galileans among the pilgrims would be particularly likely to erupt into violence. Yet they could hardly have intended to wait until after the full eight-day festival period, as Jesus would be likely to have left Jerusalem by then. J. Jeremias has therefore argued that the Greek phrase here means “not in the presence of the festival crowd,” and perhaps that represents the gist of their thinking, even though it is not a natural sense of εν τῷ ἑορτῇ. It certainly represents what in fact happened, a secret arrest at night away from the crowds, especially Jesus' Galilean supporters; vv. 14–16 will explain how this proved to be possible, more quickly than they may have expected.

Richard Gardner: According to the text, the session ends on a note of unrelieved tension: The conspirators want to arrest Jesus while he is in town for Passover. But how can they do so without inciting a riot among Jesus' supporters? Not until verses 14-16 will a solution present itself.

D. A. Carson: The leaders were right in fearing the people. Jerusalem's population swelled perhaps fivefold during the feast; with religious fervor and national messianism at a high pitch, a spark might set off an explosion. They decided to suspend action, but Judas's offer to hand Jesus over at a time and place when the crowds were not present was too good an opportunity to pass up (vv.14–16). Thus in God's providence, the connection between Passover and Jesus' death that he had just predicted (vv.1–2) came about.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What was different about this prediction of Jesus' death?
- 2) Why is the connection to Passover so important?
- 3) Why did God frustrate other earlier attempts to kill Jesus while allowing these wicked conspirators to carry out their plans?
- 4) What is the significance of the role of Caiaphas in this conspiracy?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Richard Gardner: Prelude to Passion (26:1-16)

- Consigned to Death, 26:1-5
- Anointed for Burial, 26:6-13
- Marked for Betrayal, 26:14-16

R. T. France: The one who has just been portrayed in 25:31–46 as the king on his glorious throne will undergo this rejection and suffering not because he has no choice but because it is his Father's paradoxical purpose which he has freely chosen to fulfill (26:39, 42, 52–54). Even as the court condemns him he is entering into his sovereignty (26:64). When the Roman soldiers mock him as King of the Jews (27:27–31) and the Jewish crowds mock him as temple-builder, savior, king of Israel and Son of God (27:39–43) they speak truer than they know. The supernatural events accompanying his death on the cross (27:51–54) reveal in vivid symbolism that this is not the end but the beginning, and the supreme title "Son of God" is declared even by neutral observers. The resurrection reverses the human verdict of Jerusalem (28:1–15) and in the concluding scene of the gospel the resultant sovereignty of the enthroned Son of Man will be triumphantly declared (28:18–20).

John MacArthur: Preparing for Christ's Death

Everything to this point is only prologue. Everything to this point is only introduction. This is the main theme. This is the main event. This is the issue in the revelation of God – the cross of Jesus Christ.

And so we come to the climax of Matthew's gospel, the climax of redemptive history, and the greatest event in the history of the world, the greatest source of hope in the heart of any man or woman who ever lived – the cross of Jesus Christ. No wonder the hymn writer said, “In the cross of Christ I glory, towering o’er the wrecks of time.” And then he said, “All the light of sacred story gathers round its head sublime.” Everything in the sacred story gathers around the cross. You cannot have Christianity without the cross of Jesus Christ. It’s the focal point. And thus the apostle Paul said, “I am determined to know nothing among you except Jesus Christ, and Him crucified.”

The cross is the epitome of redemptive truth, foreshadowed in the acceptable sacrifice of Abel, foreshadowed in the ark of safety that saved Noah, foreshadowed in the sacrifice provided on Mount Moriah – a ram in the place of Isaac, prefigured in the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, where Moses said, “The Lord is my strength, and my song, and He is become my salvation.” We see the cross foreshadowed in the smitten rock in the wilderness that brought forth water to quench the thirsty people. We see the cross foreshadowed in the Levitical ceremonies, sacrifices, and offerings. We see it foreshadowed in the serpent lifted up in the desert for healing. We see it even in Boaz, the kinsman redeemer. We see the cross detailed in Psalm 22 and Isaiah 53. We see the pierced and wounded Savior in Zechariah, chapter 12. All the way through Scripture. And then we hear John, the last of the Old Testament prophets, pointing to Jesus and saying, “Behold the Lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world.” All of Old Testament Scripture, all of the prophetic ministry of John the Baptist points to the cross.

And then comes the cross and all the gospel writers and the epistle writers write of the cross, for it is the focal point of everything. Christianity is, more than anything else, a belief in the death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ. That is the salient truth of the Christian faith. And so we come now to the greatest truth, the greatest portion of this gospel of Matthew. And Matthew deals with the cross in very concise, straight-forward, simple, clear terms. This is the narrative of the cross. This is the history of it. . .

And in these final three chapters, Matthew breaks up the picture of the cross into some very clear, distinct elements.

- In chapter 26 we’ll see the preparation for the cross.
- At the end of chapter 26, the arrest of Jesus Christ.
- And then as we move in to chapter 27, the trials of Christ.
- Then in chapter 27, His execution.
- And then in chapter 27, His burial.
- And then finally in chapter 28 comes the resurrection and His final instructions to His disciples.

So we move through the preparation, the arrest, the trial, the execution, the burial, the resurrection and the final instructions. Very simple, very concise, to the point, as Matthew describes the greatest event ever happened in the history of the world. . .

So we see sovereignty, the sovereign grace of God that brings Christ to the cross to die for the sins of men. Two days from Wednesday is Friday when all the Jews would be celebrating their Passover, when lambs were being slain all over every place. He would be offered as the Lamb of God. What a fitting moment, right? What a perfect timing. The sovereign One has planned that the Lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world will be sacrificed on the Passover, when the lambs that couldn't take away sin were being sacrificed. This was the unchangeable plan of God. . .

So [Caiaphas] was the epitome of symbolism in the religious system of Israel, decadent as it was. And yet he carried out all the priestly function. He alone could go into the Holy of Holies on the Day of Atonement. He had to carry out all the leadership and ceremonies and sacrifices and rituals. He was in charge of everything. And along with him at this meeting were the chief priests. Those were the leading priests. That meant the guy who was second in command, called the captain of the temple, who was also in charge of the temple police. Under him there was the priest over the daily course and the priest over the weekly course. And then there was the temple treasurer and the temple overseer. That little group made the chief priests. The scribes were those who worked with the Law. And the elders were those who were the nobility out of the laity, having no priestly office but being the leaders of the people that were sent to sort of rule and govern on behalf of the people. And so the envious hypocrite Caiaphas gets his group together and they've got to do something with Jesus. I mean, chapter 23 alone would have been enough to bring this about, where Jesus blisters them up one side and down the other side with the fire of His wrath and pronounces their condemnation and that was the last straw. . .

So we see then in verses 3 to 5 the hateful rejection is part of the preparation. You understand that in order for the Savior to be crucified, it had to be done by hating men. So God brings that to a fever pitch – the resurrection of Lazarus, the hosannas that threatened their positions of power. If this was the Messiah, they knew they were all going to be deposed. Jesus' threat to destroy their whole system and smash it and crush it and leave it desolate. His pronouncement on them as whited sepulchers, all of these things came to a culmination and their hatred had reached such a fever pitch that they were moving right in line with the sovereign plan of God to pull it all together. They could stand more of this holy perfection from Jesus Christ, and so grace and sin are moving toward the same end. Grace in the person of God's King planning for the cross; sin in the person of the ruler's plotting for the cross.

J. Ligon Duncan: The Son of Man Will Be Delivered Up

This brief passage serves as an introduction to everything which is going to follow in Matthew 26, 27 and 28. It's almost like the opening ceremony of the Olympic games ceremony. Let the games begin. For thousands of years the Lord had been planning and predicting through his prophets of the day when the Messiah would arise, and not only when the Messiah would arrive, but when the Messiah would give himself for the sins of his people. Daniel, the prophet, had spoken of this. Jesus' words now when He speaks to His disciples, He says, "Yet two days hence and the Son of man will be delivered over, or as it were in word and instruction, 'Now My friends the three or four years of ministry which I have been involved in, My days of training you, my days of preaching and proclamation. Those days have come to an end. And now the time has come where I will lay down My life for the sins of the world. And so our feet are on holy ground as we come to the final chapters of the gospel of Matthew. . .

Now understand that Jesus is doing some beautiful things when He predicts His coming death. First of all, He's telling His disciples over and over, "I know what's coming. What is going to happen is not an accident." Secondly, He is preparing them for the day when that comes, so that they will not say, "Jesus didn't tell us that this was going to happen. We're totally unprepared for this unexpected event which has occurred." He is preparing them to be able to persevere in this tremendous event which is going to occur. But at the same time He is also explaining to them what His death means. Why it is that He has to die. Even in the process of predicting to them.

And now when you get to Matthew, chapter 26, verse 2, He is more explicit than ever. Now, He not only tells them that He's going to be handed over to the leaders of His people to die, He tells them it's going to happen in two days. This is Tuesday of Passover week. He's saying on Thursday night I'm going to be handed over to my enemies. And on the next day I'm going to die for the sins of the world.

The connection between Jesus' death and the Passover is not only significant for Jewish history, but is also significant for explaining the meaning of the death of the Lord Jesus Christ. Why did Jesus die? Most of us who have grown up in the evangelical tradition, know instinctively the answer is that He died for our sins. But what does that mean? What does it mean that He died for our sins. And the gospel is helping us in these words of prediction understand what it means that He died for our sins. When we say that He was the Passover lamb, the Lamb of God who came to take away the sins of the world, we are saying something which is at the very heart of the Scripture teaching about the death of Christ. Because understanding Jesus' death as the fulfillment of the Passover lamb, is at the very core of the Christian understanding of the death of Christ: The atoning work of Christ. Think of the shock. Think of the impact on the disciples. They just heard Jesus describing His glory as He comes in clouds to judge the world, and before those words have left their ears, He's now telling them that in two days he is going to be killed. J.C. Ryle puts it this way: "The connection of these words with the proceeding chapter is exceedingly striking. Our Lord has just been dwelling on His second coming, and He has been describing the last judgment and all it's awful accompaniments. He has been speaking of Himself as the Judge before whom all the nations will be gathered and then at once without a pause, without an interval, He tells them once and again of His coming sufferings. He reminds them that He must die as a sin offering before He reigned as a king. That He must make atonement on the cross before He took the crown. The gospel over and over emphasized this aspect of the Lord's ministry."

Bob Deffinbaugh: The Passover Plan: Man Proposes, God Disposes (26:1-29)

The possibility of our Lord's death had probably haunted His disciples for some time. Think of all the attempts on His life.

- For example, Herod sought to kill Him while just an infant (Matthew 2).
- After Jesus healed the man with the withered hand, the Pharisees plotted to kill Him (Matthew 12:14).
- When Jesus introduced Himself as the Messiah in the synagogue at Nazareth, He then spoke of His bringing salvation to the Gentiles, as well as to Jews. Hearing this, the crowd sought to throw Jesus over a cliff (Luke 4:28-29).
- Jesus spent a good bit of His time in Galilee because the Jews in Judea were seeking to kill Him (John 7:1).
- When Jesus determined to go to Bethany, where Lazarus already had died, His disciples realized the danger that this posed:

So Thomas (called Didymus) said to his fellow disciples, "Let us go too, so that we may die with him" (John 11:16).

Jesus was referring to more than just these attempts when He told His disciples that they knew He was to die. On several earlier occasions in Matthew, Jesus specifically foretold His coming death:

- From that time on Jesus began to show his disciples that he must go to Jerusalem and suffer many things at the hands of the elders, chief priests, and experts in the law, and be killed, and on the third day be raised (Matthew 16:21).
- When they gathered together in Galilee, Jesus told them, “The Son of Man is going to be betrayed into the hands of men” (Matthew 17:22).
- “Look, we are going up to Jerusalem, and the Son of Man will be handed over to the chief priests and the experts in the law. They will condemn him to death, and will turn him over to the Gentiles to be mocked and flogged severely and crucified. Yet on the third day, he will be raised” (Matthew 20:18-19).
- In Matthew 16:21, our Lord informed His disciples that He would suffer and die in Jerusalem, and then be raised from the dead on the third day. He also indicated that He would suffer at the hands of the elders, chief priests and scribes.
- In Matthew 17:22, Jesus added that He would be betrayed.
- In Matthew 20:18-19, our Lord added that He would be handed over to the Gentiles, and that He would be crucified. All these things the disciples “knew,” or should have known, because Jesus told them so.

Now, in Matthew 26:1-2, Jesus underscores two very important details regarding His death. The first is not new – He will be crucified. The second detail is new – He will be crucified during Passover. The death of our Lord will be soon, just a couple of days away. And His death will be by crucifixion, a very public death. . .

And so here is the dilemma. Jesus told His disciples He would die during Passover, in just two days. The Jewish leaders agreed that He must not be killed for nearly two weeks. Jesus said that He would die by crucifixion, and (earlier) that the Romans would be involved. In other words, Jesus indicated that His death would be brought about in a very public matter, and it would involve much suffering and persecution. The Jewish leaders purposed to wait until after the feast; Jesus said He must die during the feast, as the Passover Lamb.

No two plans for His death could be more diametrically opposed. What Jesus told His disciples would happen was exactly what the Jewish leaders determined would not happen. Somebody is not going to get their way. Someone is going to have to give way to the other. This is the tension Matthew sets up at the beginning of the events leading to the cross. It is a tension Matthew wants us to feel. Matthew wants his readers to pay attention to whose plans are fulfilled, and whose plans are not. If Jesus is to die as He has said (and as prophecy has required), He must do so against the plans and efforts of the most powerful Jewish leaders in Jerusalem. I am reminded here of the contest between Elijah and the prophets of Baal on Mount Carmel, or of the “battle of the gods” at the exodus.

TEXT: Matthew 26:6-13

TITLE: WASTE OR WORTHY OF WORSHIP? ANOINTING OF JESUS FOR BURIAL

BIG IDEA:

EXTRAVAGANT WORSHIP LAVISHED ON THE MESSIAH AS HE IS ANOINTED FOR BURIAL

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: Jesus is here presented as the suffering Messiah, “anointed” for his messianic destiny as the one who will die for our sins. The woman’s worshipful act of anointing stands in contrast with both the leaders’ decision to kill Jesus and Judas’s decision to betray him. So her act has a twofold significance—a messianic anointing and a washing of his body beforehand for burial.

Leon Morris: Having made it clear that Jesus’ enemies were plotting his death, Matthew gives us a little glimpse of the Master’s last activities among his followers. There is the anointing at Bethany, expressing love and devotion right at the time when the religious leaders of the people were giving vent to hatred and planning murder; the contrast is striking.

Richard Gardner: The point Jesus makes is not that poverty is predestined, nor that his community should ignore the poor. Instead, he argues that this particular act of extravagant love is proper at this particular point in the story in light of what lies ahead.

Stu Weber: Loyalty to the Messiah requires extravagant worship, as we give unreservedly of ourselves. . . . Jesus referred to the short time of his stay on earth. The Messiah should have been the guest of honor, welcomed and respected not only by Israel but by the entire world. He had been on earth a few short years, and he would die in a matter of days. There would always be opportunity to minister to the poor, but the opportunities to minister to the Messiah in the flesh were limited. Timing is always an issue in the spending of kingdom resources.

I. (:6-7) REMARKABLE DISPLAY OF EXTRAVAGANT WORSHIP

A. (:6) Context -- Flashback

“Now when Jesus was in Bethany, at the home of Simon the leper,”

Leon Morris: Matthew locates the incident in Bethany but says nothing of precisely when it took place or why Jesus was there. John dates his incident of anointing six days before the Passover and says that the triumphal entry took place the next day (John 12:1, 12); neither Matthew nor Mark mentions when the incident took place. John tells us that the home of Martha and Mary was in Bethany (John 11:1); presumably it was the house where they lived that was called the house of Simon the leper. Since people were very fearful of leprosy and had no way of curing it, quarantine was the normal requirement: those with this disease must stay away from other people. Therefore Simon could not have had the disease at this time; he may have been cured of it (as we saw in the earlier note, some of the diseases included under the general name “leprosy” were curable; or Jesus may have healed him). Even after his cure he would have still been known as the leper. Alternatively he may have been dead at this time, but the house was still known by his name. None of the Evangelists tells us why Jesus was in this home, only that he was there. In John's account we find that Lazarus and his two sisters were there, so it is possible that Simon was their father. Jesus was there for a meal, for Matthew speaks of him as reclining at table (v. 7). John tells us that Martha was serving at the meal and that Lazarus was there (John 12:2).

B. (:7) Costly Anointing

“a woman came to Him with an alabaster vial of very costly perfume, and she poured it upon His head as He reclined at the table.”

Grant Osborne: From John 12:3 the woman is Mary, sister of Lazarus and Martha, but Matthew leaves her unnamed to center on her worshipful act. An alabaster flask was itself expensive, made of a soft stone that looked like marble and imported from Egypt. The stone was shaped into a small flask with a lengthy thin neck and was thought to preserve the perfume better.

D. A. Carson: The evangelists stress the cost of the “perfume” (v.7, most likely a fairly viscous fluid, possibly from the nard plant native to India), which was extracted from the thin-necked alabaster flask by snapping off the neck. According to John 12:3, the nard was worth about three hundred denarii—approximately a year's salary for a working man.

Leon Morris: Mary did not regard Jesus as a casual, run-of-the-mill guest but as a very special person; for him a very costly offering was just right. Kings were anointed (e.g., 2 Kings 9:6), and it may be that this was in the woman's mind. We should also remember that “Messiah” means “anointed one,” and that she may have been giving symbolic expression to her conviction that Jesus was indeed the Messiah.

Warren Wiersbe: When we combine the gospel records, we learn that she anointed both His head and His feet, and wiped His feet with her hair. A woman's hair is her glory (1 Cor. 11:15). She surrendered her glory to the Lord and worshipped Him with the precious gift that she brought. It was an act of love and devotion that brought fragrance to the whole house.

Homer Kent: It is unwarranted to suggest that Jesus was inventing motives for Mary. He had previously announced his approaching death (Jn 10:11, 17, 18; Mt 16:21; 17:22; 20:18). Instead of closing her mind to the prediction, as the disciples seemed to do (cf. Mt 16:22), Mary believed it. She apparently realized that when the tragedy struck, there would be no time for customary courtesies. Only if Mary's act is seen as born of her spiritual comprehension can the tremendous praise from Jesus be properly understood. As it happened, this was the only anointing his body received. The women who later came to perform this task found only the empty tomb.

II. (:8-9) REACTION OF THE DISCIPLES AGAINST EXTRAVAGANT WORSHIP

A. (:8) Indignation of the Disciples

“But the disciples were indignant when they saw this, and said, ‘Why this waste?’”

B. (:9) Idealistic Justification for Their Indignation

“For this perfume might have been sold for a high price and the money given to the poor.”

Charles Swindoll: Why would Matthew push the pause button on the story line to provide this flashback here in the midst of the narrative? The answer is simple: The scene provides the motivation for Judas Iscariot's betrayal, which would give the Jewish leaders an opportunity to apprehend Jesus during the festival rather than having to wait until its conclusion. . .

John's Gospel gives us an illuminating detail about the disciples' complaint. It originated from Judas Iscariot: "Judas Iscariot, one of His disciples, who was intending to betray Him, said, 'Why was this perfume not sold for three hundred denarii and given to poor people?' Now he said this, not because he was concerned about the poor, but because he was a thief, and as he had the money box, he used to pilfer what was put into it" (John 12:4-6).

III. (:10-11) REBUKE OF THE DISCIPLES AND REJECTION OF THEIR REASONING

A. (:10) Rebuke of the Disciples for Their Indignation

"But Jesus, aware of this, said to them, 'Why do you bother the woman? For she has done a good deed to Me.'"

Jeffrey Crabtree: Jesus knew what they were saying (v. 10). In contrast to their condemnation, He judged her actions "a good work," a good work done to Him. The Twelve scolded Mary for extravagant giving (Mk. 14:5) but Jesus scolded them. He accepted her offering. It was expensive. It was from the heart. It was something for which there was only a small window of opportunity to give and she was wise to do what she could while she could (v. 11). It had greater meaning than even she knew (v. 12).

B. (:11) Rejection of Their Idealistic Justification

"For the poor you have with you always; but you do not always have Me."

Beare: The beauty of uncalculating generosity is not to be measured by the yardstick of utility.

IV. (:12-13) RECEPTION OF EXTRAVAGANT WORSHIP AND REMEMBRANCE MEMORIALIZED

A. (:12) Reception of Extravagant Worship and Explanation of Its Significance

"For when she poured this perfume upon My body, she did it to prepare Me for burial."

Grant Osborne: It was common at burials to spread aromatic oil over the body to hide the smell because the Jews did not embalm corpses. John 19:39 tells us that Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus used seventy-five pounds of myrrh and aloes on Jesus' body, turning their act virtually into a royal burial. Jesus is saying that the woman's anointing is a precursor of that. Matthew omits Jesus' burial anointing as well as Mark 16:1 (the women going to the tomb "to anoint Jesus' body") and so suggests that this is his official burial preparation.

Charles Swindoll: Mary likely intended the anointing of Jesus' head and feet to be an act of worship and a confession that He was the true Messiah ("anointed one"). Yet Jesus provided a more profound interpretation of her act: "When she poured this perfume on My body, she did it to prepare Me for burial" (Matt. 26:12).

B. (:13) Remembrance of Remarkable Display of Extravagant Worship Memorialized

“Truly I say to you, wherever this gospel is preached in the whole world, what this woman has done shall also be spoken of in memory of her.”

Leon Morris: Gospel is a significant word here. Jesus knew that his death would not mean the end of the movement he had started, but in a very meaningful sense its beginning. The “good news” that he had come to bring involved his death, and the dark days that lay immediately ahead for the disciples did not alter that basic fact. So Jesus now looks through the atoning work he would accomplish on the cross to the proclamation that would follow and that would go right through the world.

Robert Gundry: Her anonymity and “the whole world” make a fulfillment of these predictions unlikely and therefore the fulfillment more impressive when it actually happens (as it has!). “Amen I tell you” gives Jesus’ disciples assurance of the unlikely fulfillment.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why does Matthew present this event out of chronological sequence?
- 2) How is this event differentiated from the anointing of Jesus described in Luke 7?
- 3) Do you think Mary was aware that Jesus was going to be put to death shortly?
- 4) What is the significance of this anointing from a Messianic standpoint and from a burial standpoint?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Grant Osborne: The death of Christ is the central moment of history. Past and future meet at this event, the culmination of God’s salvific plan to bring his creation back to himself. It is this act of atoning sacrifice that has made the second coming and the last judgment (25:31–46) possible, an event that will allow any of us to enter eternity as the children of God. Here divine love has its defining moment, and the triune Godhead has acted with finality to bring humankind and creation (Rom 8:19–22) back to themselves. It is fitting that the moment of love and self-sacrifice on the part of the woman bridge from the Olivet Discourse to the events of Jesus’ passion, and her love in contrast to the evil plots of the leaders and the betrayal of Judas sets in motion this final act in the life of the incarnate God-man.

Warren Wiersbe: Notice that every time Mary sought to do something for Jesus, she was misunderstood. Her sister Martha misunderstood her when Mary sat at Jesus’ feet to hear Him teach the Word. Judas and the other disciples misunderstood her when she anointed Jesus. Her friends and neighbors misunderstood her when she came out of the house to meet Jesus after Lazarus had been buried (John 11:28-31). When we give Jesus Christ first place in our lives, we can expect to be misunderstood and criticized by those who claim to follow Him.

John MacArthur: Preparing for Christ's Death

Now we have taken a flashback. We have moved from Wednesday back to Saturday. Now Matthew says, "When Jesus was in Bethany." You say, well why does He jump back? Because what He pulls in here is part of the preparation. And so He goes out of the chronological sequence and He pulls in a very special incident that also fits the preparation for the cross. And it happened on Saturday when Jesus arrived. Why? Because John records the same event in chapter 12 and in verse 1 he says it was six days before the Passover, that's Saturday.

On Saturday, when Jesus came to Bethany, that first day as He came up from Jericho and came to the city to stay with Mary, Martha, and Lazarus to be a part of all these events, Simon the leper invited him as a guest for a great supper. Now Simon was no longer a leper. We know that because if he was still a leper, nobody would be going to his house. He was a healed leper. Leprosy in that day was incurable. The only cure for leprosy was Jesus Christ. So it's pretty obvious that Simon was a recipient of the healing power of Christ. And one way he could show his loving gratitude to Christ was to offer Him a supper. Oh, the excitement would be unspeakable. You wouldn't even believe it. Simon a former leper, outcast of outcasts, now having the Healer, God in human flesh, in his own home and hosting Him and inviting Mary, Martha, and Lazarus to be a part and all twelve of the disciples. This is a good group for supper, approaching twenty people. And there may have been others, we don't know. But Mark writes of it, and Matthew writes of it, and so does John, because it is a very important occasion.

There is another anointing like the anointing here that Luke records in chapter 7 but it's a completely different incident. Even though the man Simon – the name is the same, it's Simon the Pharisee, not Simon the leper. And Simon was a name as common as Joe or John, so we're not surprised there are ten Simons in the New Testament. But it's a different incident in chapter 7. And the woman who does the anointing is different. It isn't Mary; it's a wicked, sinful woman, in that case. But Matthew, Mark, and John record this incident. . .

I mean, in those days, let's face it, they didn't have deodorant. Right Guard was a long way off. And if you'd been out all day tramping around in the dirt and your robes were, you know, a little sweaty, and you came at the end of the day there – and they didn't have the means for cleanliness, of course, that we have nowadays – and you came in there, you would hope that somebody would anoint you with something. It reminds me of the story of the guys who were all packed into the car driving, and somebody said, "Well one of you hasn't used your deodorant," to which one fellow replied, "Well, it isn't me. I never use any." But in this case, nobody ever used any. And so it was a common thing to do in a home, to anoint the guest with a strong perfume which made it a lot nicer, a lot more enjoyable during the time of the meal. . .

Have you ever worshiped the Lord in such way that you lost all sense of restraint and economy? Most of us worship – let's see, what can I afford this week? I'll give that. That won't affect me. We know very little about this, this unrestrained adoration, where you just crush the narrow neck of that alabaster bottle and pour its contents all over Jesus effusively, profusely. She was pouring out her love, her heart of compassion, her devotion. She was honoring the One that was going to die and rise again for her salvation, to bear her sin. She did it for you, for me; we all should have done it. We all – if we'd have been there, knowing what we now know, would have poured out everything on Him, too. She understood what the disciples didn't want to understand. She wasn't bound up in wanting to get right into the kingdom and have the glory. She apparently understood more of Jesus' teaching than they did. She symbolizes the effusive, profuse, magnanimous outpouring of love that God desires. . .

The Lord makes a memorial out of this act because it's such a beautiful, such a necessary testimony. Here we are two thousand years later, seeing the loveliness, the sacrificial selfless worship of this very dear lady who loved Jesus Christ. That's part of His preparation, too. Those who loved Him were ready for the death to come, a death for them. And so we see the preparation of sovereign grace, hateful rejection, and loving worship.

S. Lewis Johnson: The Order of the Alabaster Box

Mary had learned the meaning of what William Cooper wrote about many years later: "Tis joy enough my all in all at Thy dear feet to lie / Thou wilt not let me lower fall and none can higher fly." It is true there is no higher place for a Christian to ever be than at the feet of our Lord Jesus listening and learning and loving and weeping. . .

He was conscious of his royal position and office. He recognized that he was a king. He recognized that it was perfectly all right for Mary to come with this expensive ointment and pour it out over him, because the principle that governs all of his actions when his office is in view is, I first then Thou. He is the king. . .

And finally will you notice how in his answer he commends Mary for her foreknowledge, for her presence, for in that she hath poured this ointment on my body, she has done it for my burial. John said she has kept it she has preserved it she knew that this was coming and she was preparing for it. It was customary, I said, to anoint dead bodies with perfume, and so in the anointing there is recognized by Mary the fact that he is going to die.

J. Ligon Duncan: Christ Anointed with Oil (For Burial)

In this passage before us, we see a strange extravagance in this woman pouring this expensive perfume on the Lord Jesus Christ. And we see a vocal indignation in response to this by the disciples. And then we see a wonderful pronouncement by Jesus about what this woman had done. And even as we see these things, we learn something of what our God is like, we are reminded of the priority of Christ. And we are prompted to reflect upon the uniqueness of the person of Christ, the meaning of His death, and the benefits which flow from His work and the promises that God has given to us. . .

He receives Her worship, and her extravagant act of devotion to Him, because He is worthy to be praised. . .

Mary understood the priority of Christ in a way that the disciples themselves were struggling to grasp. The disciples were outraged when they saw this woman take this alabaster vial filled with perfume that John tells us was worth over a year's wages. This had perhaps been a family heirloom. Who knows for how many generations this perfume had been sealed. As long as the seal of that alabaster bottle was shut, that perfume could last a long, long time. And she takes it, and she breaks it open, and she pours the whole thing out the Lord Jesus Christ. And the disciples are outraged, they are shocked. This is over a year's wages. Think how many poor people could have been helped if we only could have taken that and taken the money and distributed it to the poor. And so the disciples are absolutely outraged. They think that the proper use of that perfume is not to waste it on anointing Jesus, but to give it to the poor. . .

You'll never waste anything on Jesus Christ. Waste your time, waste your strength, waste your life, it'll never be wasted on the Lord Jesus Christ. And Mary understood that in a way that Jesus' disciples had yet to grasp. And it's a beautiful thing to see her pour out her heart and her light, even as she pours out this vial of perfume. No gift is too great in such in response to such a love as His. Divine love which not only gives everything, but is content to be unrequited. You'll never outgive His love. Can't you hear David's words? "I will not give a sacrifice that cost me nothing. Who knows how long that heirloom had been in the family? But Jesus was worth it, and so she worshipped Him with what was perhaps what was the most valuable thing that her family owned. The disciples are shocked, but God is pleased, and Jesus is pleased.

And then we see Jesus' response in verses 10 through 13, He gives us another foretelling of His impending death, and He gives us a wonderful announcement about Mary. And Jesus' response simultaneously testifies to His uniqueness, it testifies to His death. It forces us to reflect on His coming death, and it includes a blessing. And again we learn that true faith in Christ apprehends who He is. It understands His uniqueness. If you truly believe in Christ, you understand and you embrace him as the Messiah, the Son of the Living God. And, true faith in Christ also embraces Him in what He's done. He understands the meaning and significance of His death. And the benefits which flow from that death for all those believe in Him. True faith apprehends Christ in who He is, and what He has done and His benefits.

TEXT: Matthew 26:14-16

TITLE: BETRAYAL OF JESUS ARRANGED BY JUDAS

BIG IDEA:
THE TREACHEROUS BETRAYAL OF JESUS EXPOSES THE DEPTHS OF DEPRAVITY

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: Without Judas, the arrest and crucifixion would not have occurred during the Passover. Judas serves God's purpose as well as that of the chief priests when his willingness to betray Jesus for money sets in motion the passion events so that Jesus will die as the paschal lamb for our sins.

R. T. France: The devotion of the unnamed woman is sharply contrasted with the treachery of one of Jesus' inner circle, and her uncalculating generosity with his sordid bargaining. The reader has been prepared for this development not only by the repeated use of the verb paradidōmi ("hand over," "betray") in Jesus' predictions of what is to come (17:22; 20:18; 26:2) but also by the specific identification of Judas Iscariot in 10:4 as the one "who also betrayed him."

Donald Hagner: It must be disconcerting to every disciple of Jesus that one of the twelve, that group so uniquely intimate with Jesus, became the betrayer of his master. It came as no surprise to Jesus, however, who knew the human heart so well. But it was a surprise to the disciples, who could not bring themselves to believe that one of their company would betray Jesus. We can only speculate regarding Judas' motives, though it seems unlikely that the motive was money alone. Perhaps he was disappointed in the direction of Jesus' ministry and wished to force his hand by having him arrested. Perhaps with the Zealots he shared the ardent expectation of a national-political kingdom that would end the Roman domination of Israel.

Warren Wiersbe: Why did Judas follow Jesus for three years, listen to His Word, share His ministry, and then turn traitor? One thing is certain: Judas was not the victim of circumstances or the passive tool of providence. It was prophesied that one of Messiah's close associates would betray Him, (Ps. 41:9; 55:12-14), but this fact does not relieve Judas of responsibility. We must not make him a martyr because he fulfilled this prophecy. . .

Judas's life is a warning to those who pretend to serve Christ but whose hearts are far from God. He is also a warning to those who waste their opportunities and their lives. "Why this waste?" asked Judas when he saw that expensive ointment poured out on Jesus. Yet Judas wasted his opportunities, his life, and his soul! Jesus called him "son of perdition" (John 17:12), which literally means "son of waste."

Matthew McCraw: Well, we see in this passage, the unfolding of the conspiracy against the divine. In Matthew 26, plans are being made to kill the Son of God. As with some other famous conspiracies to commit murder, this plan did not pan out exactly how the conspirators planned it. However, it did happen exactly as God planned it.

Ray Pritchard: There are two things that perplex us about Judas. First, why did he do what he did? Second, after he had done it, why did he feel so guilty? He was so evil that he sold the Lord Jesus for thirty pieces of silver. Yet afterwards, he felt such remorse that he committed suicide. .

The most we can say is this. Judas was a potential traitor from the beginning. Circumstances eventually converted him into an actual traitor. That he never intended things to end like they did does not lessen his guilt. It only highlights the tragedy of his life.

I. (:14) BETRAYAL INITIATION – SWITCHING SIDES

“Then one of the twelve, named Judas Iscariot, went to the chief priests,”

Grant Osborne: It is common today to say we cannot know Judas’s true motivation (e.g., Hill, Hagner, Davies and Allison), yet Matthew and John make it quite clear—it was an act of avarice. True, it was more complex than that and probably greed mixed with disappointment that Jesus was not the nationalistic hero Judas expected, yet clearly Mammon was the primary reason. Note that Judas is willing to take whatever the leaders offer and settles for what is a decent amount of money though not a lot.

II. (:15) BETRAYAL CONTRACT – SATISFYING GREED

*“and said, ‘What are you willing to give me to deliver Him up to you?’
And they weighed out to him thirty pieces of silver.”*

III. (:16) BETRAYAL LOGISTICS – SEEKING OPPORTUNITY

“And from then on he began looking for a good opportunity to betray Him.”

Donald Hagner: Matthew’s ἀπὸ τότε, “from that time,” is characteristic, indicating a clear turning point in the narrative, though not so important as those of 4:17 and 16:21.

R. T. France: The importance to the priests of an inside informer has already been indicated in vv. 4–5, and is underlined by the phrase “looking for a good opportunity to hand him over.” It was a matter of letting the authorities know of Jesus’ likely movements so that he could be arrested away from the crowds. The secluded hillside of Gethsemane would offer the ideal answer. There Judas will act as guide to the arresting party, as well as identifying Jesus to them in the dark. We shall note too that at the trial the high priest seems remarkably well informed about Jesus’ alleged claims, more so than Jesus’ recorded public statements would easily explain, and it may be that Judas’ role as informer included passing on aspects of Jesus’ private teaching as well.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How much do we value Jesus?
- 2) Why didn’t Judas ask for a larger amount of money?

- 3) What are the differences between Judas' betrayal of Jesus and Peter's?
- 4) What type of contrast is Matthew making between Mary's devotion and Judas' betrayal?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Daniel Doriani: We wonder what motivated Judas to betray Jesus. Some say Judas was a revolutionary. The name Iscariot might be derived from the Latin term sicarii, which means "dagger-men," that is, insurrectionists. Had Judas expected Jesus to lead an armed revolt against Rome? Had he become disillusioned with Jesus' lack of action? Sickened by his talk of death? Did he believe Jesus was a failed leader who had to be removed so someone else could lead Israel against Rome? No one knows.

But Judas was not merely misguided. We cannot neglect old-fashioned greed. John says Judas stole from his fellow disciples (John 12:6) and hoped to get more money for betraying Jesus. He sought out the priests and bargained for thirty pieces of silver. After that "Judas watched for an opportunity"—literally, a good time!—"to hand him over" (26:16). Thirty pieces is an interesting sum:

- In Exodus 21:32, thirty pieces of silver is the fine a man must pay if his ox accidentally gores a slave to death.
- In Zechariah 11:12–13, God's faithful shepherd rescued Israel from evil shepherds and they paid him thirty pieces of silver—the price of a slave. So Judas sold Jesus for the price of a slave.

It is ironic. Judas bristled that Mary spent 300 denarii to anoint Jesus, then he betrayed Jesus for 120 denarii. Mary showed "uncalculating generosity" while Judas drove a "calculated bargain."

The Bible says Judas was led by Satan and destined for judgment (John 13:27; 17:12; Acts 1:15–20). Still, we wonder how a disciple—one who witnessed everything Jesus did—could turn and betray him. This invokes a broader question: how can any creature turn against the Creator? Ultimately all sin and rebellion are mysterious, yet God uses even dark mysteries to accomplish his purposes. Wicked men betrayed Jesus to death, but "God intended it for good"; it fulfilled his "set purpose" (Gen. 50:20; Acts 2:23).

We thank God for his ability to bring good out of evil. We also hear the warning in this story. It is possible for us, as for Judas, to see all the evidence for Jesus and still turn away. Even something as banal as greed can blind us. May the Lord have mercy on us!

Jeffrey Crabtree: The N.T. writers do not reveal what Judas thought would happen to Jesus. He might not have expected Jesus to be killed (27:3–5). His actions fulfilled prophesy (Ps. 41:9) and according to Jesus were reprehensible. Judas was guilty of a horrendous sin, a sin so great that no mortal can imagine the torments of hell that are his (Mt. 26:24; Mk. 14:21; Lk. 22:22). Even though Jesus knew perfectly Judas' scheme, yet five days after Judas decided to betray Jesus, he was still numbered with the Twelve. Jesus even washed his feet (Jn. 13:1-30). Oh, the vileness of the sinner! Oh, the grace of the Savior!

Richard Gardner: In recent times, interpreters have asked whether Judas might have acted out of more complex motives. Might Judas have been trying to force Jesus' hand, to get him to raise an army or call on legions of angels (26:53) to free Israel from Roman rule? Was Judas disillusioned, betraying Jesus because he believed that Jesus had betrayed the hopes people had placed in him? Did Judas perhaps come to share the view of the chief priests that Jesus was a false prophet?

Whether one or another of these explanations is historically correct, we cannot say. What is clear is that the figure of Judas presented in the text represents a tragic possibility for disciples in every age, the possibility of betrayal. To be close to Jesus is to have the perilous opportunity either to further Jesus' mission or to subvert it.

Leon Morris: But such views are mere speculation. There is no indication in any of our sources of any motive other than that of money. That seems clear enough in Matthew; while Mark and Luke speak of money only after Judas has made it clear that he wants to hand Jesus over to his enemies, it is mentioned immediately after that; and there is no real doubt in any of our sources that money mattered to Judas. The sequence of stories may be significant. Matthew has just told the story of the pouring out of the costly perfume, and John tells us in connection with this that Judas was the treasurer of the little band and that he had wanted to get control of the money that might have been theirs had the perfume been sold (John 12:4-6).

Bob Deffinbaugh: The Biography of the Betrayer

As we look into the betrayal of the Savior by Judas Iscariot, it is my intention to define his act as the logical outcome of several basic flaws in his character, and to defend my contention that the Scriptures describe his traitorous intentions as premeditated and carefully deliberated.

The Biblical Necessity of the Betrayal

We must begin by stating unequivocally that the betrayal of Jesus by Judas was no accident, no unplanned event. It was an event decreed from the beginning of time. In fact, to be correct we should say before time began. “For indeed, the Son of Man is going as it has been determined; but woe to that man through whom He is betrayed!” (Luke 22:22; cf. Acts 2:23, emphasis mine).

Not only was the death of the Lord Jesus decreed in eternity past, it was declared by the Old Testament prophets as well: “The Son of Man is to go, just as it is written of Him; but woe to that man through whom the Son of Man is betrayed! It would have been good for that man if he had not been born” (Matthew 26:24). “I do not speak of all of you. I know the ones I have chosen; but it is that the Scripture may be fulfilled, ‘He who eats My bread has lifted up his heel against me’” (John 13:18; cf. Acts 1:16-20).

I find it significant that in each gospel (Matthew 10:4; Mark 3:19; Luke 6:16; John 6:70-71) Judas is introduced for the first time by the author as the betrayer of Jesus. His character and ultimate destiny were known by our Lord from the start and revealed in the gospels at the very outset of his appearance.

The Biblical Reasons for the Betrayal

Some biblical scholars seem strangely reluctant to pursue the reasons for Judas' betrayal of our Lord. On the other hand, some theories have little or no biblical support and must definitely be questioned. The Scriptures do suggest several reasons why Judas betrayed the Master, and these I believe to be sufficient.

First of all, we must grasp the fact that Judas, distinct from the eleven, was never a true believer. We know that the 'Bread of Life' discourse' (John 6:22-71) caused many 'followers' of Jesus to turn aside, refusing His teaching of a Savior Who was a suffering substitute for men (John 6:60ff.). As an explanation for the turning away of the crowds, Jesus told His disciples that these unbelievers were not unknown or unexpected. One of them, known to Jesus, but not yet comprehended by the eleven, was Judas, the betrayer: "But there are some of you who do not believe.' For Jesus knew from the beginning who they were who did not believe, and who it was that would betray Him" (John 6:64).

Moments later Jesus said, "Did I Myself not choose you, the twelve, and yet one of you is a devil?' Now He meant Judas the son of Simon Iscariot, for he, one of the twelve, was going to betray Him" (John 6:70-71).

In the upper room, when Jesus washed the feet of the twelve, He distinguished between the need for what might be called daily cleansing and the once for all washing of regeneration. In addition, Jesus also differentiated between the eleven who were 'clean,' that is saved, and Judas, who was not:

"Jesus said to him (Peter), 'He who has bathed (louo) needs only to wash (nipto) his feet, but is completely clean; and you are clean, but not all of you.' For He knew the one who was betraying Him; for this reason He said, 'Not all of you are clean'" (John 13:10-11).

From these Scriptures we conclude that Judas was an unbeliever, a son of perdition (John 17:12). As an unbeliever, Judas failed to grasp who Jesus really was. Like Satan, who progressively came to control Judas, there was a stubborn refusal to submit to Jesus as Lord of all. This insubordination may have been carefully concealed, but Judas' own words betrayed his condition. When Jesus announced during the Passover meal that one of the twelve would betray him, the eleven all responded, "Surely not I, Lord?" (Matthew 26:22). But when Judas spoke to the Savior, he said, "Surely it is not I, Rabbi?" (Matthew 26:25). Granted, this is a subtle slip of the tongue, but nonetheless an indication of the condition of the heart of Judas.

The second reason given for the betrayal of Jesus is that of greed. This condition is most obvious from several evidences. John is careful to inform us that Judas functioned as the treasurer of this little band (John 12:6). Judas was especially irritated by Mary's seemingly wasteful use of her expensive perfume¹⁰² to anoint Jesus. While the formal reason for his protest was that this could have been sold and the proceeds distributed to the poor, the truth was that he resented not being able to steal from the proceeds which he would have had in his keeping.

Another evidence of Judas' greed is to be found in his dealings with the religious leaders. His first recorded words with them were, "What are you willing to give me to deliver Him up to you?" (Matthew 26:15).

Many scholars find it difficult to believe that a desire for money, especially a sum as insignificant as thirty pieces of silver, could compel him to sell out the Savior. But Jesus was not the master of Judas; money was. It is amazing what men will do, even for a small amount of money.

The third reason for Judas' ignominious act was that of ambition and self-seeking. This I arrive at by inference and thus some may not consider the evidence compelling. Several things suggest ambition to me. Judas was, in the final analysis, possessed by Satan to do this dastardly deed (John 6:70; 13:2,27). We should expect Judas to manifest the character traits of Satan, one of which was ambition and self-seeking (cf. Isaiah 14:13-15; 1 Timothy 3:7). I would expect that Judas initially joined this intimate group that followed the Savior expecting to further his own position (not unlike the ambitions of some of the other disciples, cf. Luke 22:24).

Some Bible students have determined by careful study that Judas was sitting in the place of honor, second only to Jesus, during the last supper. Many have gone on to suggest from this that Jesus placed Judas here as a kind of last appeal to him to change his mind. But the text gives us nothing to support this conjecture. Indeed, the text (John 13) implies that when the disciples entered the banquet room, they jockeyed for the best positions and the seat of honor. They ignored the basin placed by the door which would have been used by the most humble servant to wash the feet of those entering. This is what Jesus did as an example of humility. So it would seem that Judas had the seat of honor because he asserted himself most to get it.

The fourth and perhaps final reason for the betrayal of Jesus by Judas was that he had long contemplated it, and for some time, intended to do it. I must confess that I was not prepared for this reason as I began my study.

Then I came across this verse in John: "But Judas Iscariot, one of His disciples, who was intending to betray Him, said, 'Why was this ointment not sold for three hundred denarii, and given to the poor people?'" (John 12:4-5). This passage seems to indicate that Judas' act was the result of considerable deliberation and a rather long-standing decision. Then, as I began to investigate the Greek term used here (mello) I found it was often employed by John, and sometimes with the sense of intention or volition. "And this He was saying to test him; for He Himself knew what He was intending to do" (John 6:6; cf. 7:35; Acts 20:7,13; 27:30).

Finally, I discovered this marginal rendering for John 6:71: "Now He meant Judas the son of Simon Iscariot, for he, one of the twelve, was intending to betray Him" (John 6:71 NASV, marginal rendering). Judas' actions were no impulse, no quick decision. I believe that he had at least toyed with the idea of a betrayal for months.

TEXT: Matthew 26:17-30

TITLE: OUT WITH THE OLD AND IN WITH THE NEW -- CELEBRATION OF PASSOVER AND INSTITUTION OF THE LORD'S SUPPER

BIG IDEA:

JESUS MARKS THE TRANSITION FROM THE OLD COVENANT TO THE NEW BY CELEBRATING THE LAST PASSOVER AND INSTITUTING A NEW MEMORIAL

INTRODUCTION:

These verses are packed with rich theology:

- Establishing the chronology of the final week leading up the Crucifixion to establish that Jesus offered Himself as the perfect Passover Lamb at the precise time of fulfillment of OT sacrificial typology.
- Demonstrating the divine sovereignty over all of the events of history – with God even controlling the events for which evil men like Judas must bear personal responsibility and judgment.
- Demonstrating the ways in which Jesus precisely fulfilled the OT sacrificial system and orchestrated the transition from the Old Covenant to the New Covenant.
- Exegeting the doctrines of redemption, substitutionary atonement and particular atonement.
- Explaining the ordinance of the Lord's Supper and its memorial significance while refuting the errors of transubstantiation and consubstantiation.

Grant Osborne: In this rich pericope, Jesus' preparations (vv. 17–19) show his control over the situation and perhaps supernatural knowledge of what is about to transpire. His prophecy of the betrayal (vv. 20–25) distinctly shows supernatural awareness not only of Judas's betrayal but also its fulfillment of Scripture, and the words of institution (vv. 26–30) show his sovereignty and also interpret his coming death in its redemptive significance and in establishing a new covenant.

Walter Wilson: The meal scene is divided into two units, each of which concerns Jesus's death: the prediction of betrayal (26:20–25) and the interpretation of the bread and cup (26:26–29). Thematically, the juxtaposition of units corresponds to the logic of the woe pronounced by Jesus in 26:24. Both the Son of Man and his betrayer have destinies to fulfill, and these destinies are intertwined. The body of the first unit consists of two parallel exchanges, 26:21b–23 and 26:24–25. Thus a general prediction of betrayal (26:21b) provokes a general response (26:22), to which Jesus responds with a word of confirmation (26:23). This word then segues to a specific prediction of betrayal (26:24) that provokes a specific response (26:25a), to which Jesus responds with a further word of confirmation (26:25b). Supporting the balance of this structure is the similarity of the questions posed in 26:22 (“Surely it is not I, Lord?”) and 26:25a (“Surely it is not I, Rabbi?”). . . The narrative progression in our text, then, has the effect of singling out Judas, making it clear to the reader that Jesus knows not only that there is a traitor in their midst but also which one of them it is (cf. John 13:21–30).

Charles Swindoll: At this point in Matthew’s account, everything is moving inexorably toward Christ’s crucifixion. The Last Supper is the calm before the storm. Within a matter of hours, He would be betrayed by Judas, arrested at Gethsemane, pushed through a series of unjust trials by both Jews and Romans, scourged severely, mocked, and nailed to a cross by heartless soldiers, where He would die a slow, excruciating death. But before all this, He and His twelve disciples gathered around a common table for the Passover meal—their last supper together.

R. T. France: It is the group’s last meal together, but already the presence of the traitor casts a cloud over the Passover celebration, and when Jesus goes on to explain the meaning of his own approaching death, by means of a creative reinterpretation of the traditional Passover ceremonial, the atmosphere of foreboding is deepened.

J. Ligon Duncan: He is pre-explaining the meaning and significance of His death tomorrow. It is important that His disciples realize that the death that He is going to die is not an accident. It is something which He is embracing which is part of the plan of God, and so He is pre-explaining what is going to happen to them tomorrow for their spiritual ratification. And, of course, He is instituting a new ordinance which all Christians are to observe in all ages until He comes again. And that ordinance itself is designed to strengthen our faith and give us assurance of His love and of the certainty of His benefits.

Stu Weber: This portion of the narrative includes three brief paragraphs revolving around the Passover meal:

- Jesus' careful preparation for the meal (26:17-19),
- his revelation that a betrayer was in their midst (26:20-25),
- and the institution of the Lord's Supper (26:26-29).

This emphasis on the Passover strengthened the symbolism of Jesus as the Passover lamb (cf. 26:2).

I. (:17-19) PASSOVER PREPARATION

A. (:17) Secret Itinerary for Passover Celebration

“Now on the first day of Unleavened Bread the disciples came to Jesus, saying, ‘Where do You want us to prepare for You to eat the Passover?’”

Charles Swindoll: The Jewish observance of the Feast of Unleavened Bread recalled the unleavened cakes baked prior to the exodus from Egypt (Exod. 12:39). The festival began with the offering of the Passover lamb. Preparations for the special meal “came during the daylight hours on Thursday, the fourteenth of Nisan” when lambs were offered in the afternoon and prepared to be eaten in the evening—Thursday night. That meal was called the Passover. The rest of the Feast of Unleavened Bread then extended for seven more days.

As the day of Passover dawned, the disciples were naturally becoming concerned about where they would observe the annual meal. To forsake the meal would have been a violation of the Law, which required particular feasts to be observed annually (Lev. 23). Undoubtedly, they assumed that their rabbi had arranged for the meal somewhere in Jerusalem, since they were from Galilee. The disciples were more than willing to make the necessary preparations for the meal; they just needed to know the venue (Matt. 26:17). . .

If the Passover meal was to be observed at the home of somebody known by the disciples, why didn't Jesus simply tell the disciples outright? Some have suggested that because Jesus knew Judas had set in motion a plot to betray Him (Matt. 26:16), He had to make the arrangements for the Passover meal behind the traitor's back. This could be the reason He didn't observe the feast at the home in Bethany where He was staying. That would have been an obvious place for an arrest, and the meal would have provided a great opportunity for Judas, as the streets of the city would have been mostly empty while families remained indoors to observe the Passover. But Jesus wasn't about to let Himself be caught in Judas's diabolical web until it was time. Though His time was "near" (26:18), the moment for His arrest had not yet come.

Once Peter and John completed the preparations (see Luke 22:8) and the time for the Passover meal arrived, Jesus and the disciples assembled at the planned location. I can just imagine Judas following Jesus and the other disciples as they wound through the crowded Jerusalem streets, unsure of where they were going, his eyes shifting back and forth as his brain went into overdrive searching for the best moment to report Jesus' secret itinerary to the Jewish authorities. Yet by the time they arrived at the prearranged room, any opportunity for immediate betrayal had slipped away. He would have to wait for the right moment.

B. (:18-19) Sovereign Control of the Messiah over Passover Plans

"And He said, 'Go into the city to a certain man, and say to him, The Teacher says, My time is at hand; I am to keep the Passover at your house with My disciples.' 19 And the disciples did as Jesus had directed them; and they prepared the Passover."

Daniel Doriani: Jesus told two disciples to enter Jerusalem and find "a certain man" (26:18). That man, Mark says, will be carrying a jar of water. By tradition, men carried water in skins and women carried it in jars—to direct the disciples to a man carrying a water jar is like telling them to go to the mall and look for a man carrying a red purse. When the disciples see the jar-carrying man, they must follow him to a house. The owner of that house will have an upper-story guest room, large and well furnished (Mark 14:12–15).

Van Parunak: -Luke 22:20 tells us that the identification was not by name or address, but by the unusual circumstance of a man (rather than a woman) carrying water from the well. Note his authority over this otherwise unknown man.

Robert Gundry: This paragraph ends with emphasis on the disciples' exemplary obedience to his ordering them to prepare for his adherence to the law of Passover along with them.

"my time is at hand" – Contrast John 2:4 – "My hour is not yet come"

II. (:20-25) PREDICTION OF BETRAYAL

A. (:20-21) Bombshell Prediction

"Now when evening had come, He was reclining at the table with the twelve disciples. 21 And as they were eating, He said, 'Truly I say to you that one of you will betray Me.'"

Craig Blomberg: Jesus interrupts the festivities with the horrible prediction of v. 21. He has never previously mentioned betrayal in his passion predictions, and the topic introduces a painfully dissonant note into the conversation, breaking the intimacy of table fellowship and marring the joy of the Passover festivity (though see Matt 20:18). The rest of the Twelve apparently know nothing of the events of vv. 14-16. By speaking to the issue, Jesus makes it clear that he knows full well what Judas is up to. When the events unfold, he will be giving in to them willingly, not tricked by any ruse.

Leon Morris: by New Testament times they had adopted the Greco-Roman habit of reclining. They would lean on the left elbow with the head toward the table and the feet away from it; the right hand was free to take the food. They used triclinia, couches for three. The tables were arranged in a U shape, with the principal couch at the junction of the two arms. In this case Jesus was in the place of the host, namely in the center of the triclinium at the head.

Van Parunak: Each of the last three parables describing the delay in the Lord's return distinguishes true from false disciples. Judas is an instance of the evil steward, the five foolish bridesmaids, the servant with one talent.

B. (:22-23) Pinpointing One of His Intimate Companions as the Betrayer

*“And being deeply grieved, they each one began to say to Him, ‘Surely not I, Lord?’ 23 And He answered and said,
‘He who dipped his hand with Me in the bowl is the one who will betray Me.’”*

D. A. Carson: Jesus' point is that the betrayer is a friend, someone close, someone sharing the common dish, thus heightening the enormity of the betrayal.

J. Ligon Duncan: It's interesting, isn't it, that Jesus with this word in verse 23 calls the disciples to examine their hearts because in verse 26, they are going to begin taking the Lord's Supper together. Isn't that interesting? In I Corinthians 11, the apostle will tell us, before we come to the Lord's Supper, we are to examine ourselves to see if we have discerned the body. And the Lord Jesus right here is calling on His disciples to examine their hearts. They are going to be taking the Lord's Supper in a few moments.

C. (:24) Prophetic Fulfilment but Personal Condemnation

1. Prophetic Fulfilment

“The Son of Man is to go, just as it is written of Him;”

2. Personal Condemnation

*“but woe to that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed!
It would have been good for that man if he had not been born.”*

Leon Morris: Jesus proceeds to make two things clear: one is that his death has its place in the will of God and thus nothing has been done to him outside the divine purpose, the other that this does not palliate the guilt that rests on the person who is to be his betrayer.

Van Parunak: The Lord anticipates no restoration for Judas, and Matthew later (27:3-10), alone among the gospels, records his tragic end. The difference between his sin and that of Peter illustrates an important spiritual principle. The Lord instructed Moses to distinguish two classes of sins (Num 15:22-31). For sins of ignorance (15:24-29), specific sacrifices could be offered. But for presumptuous sins (literally sins “with a high hand,” 15:30-31), no sacrifice was available, and the offender was cut off from his people, a principle echoed in Heb 10:26.

Peter did not purpose or plan his failure. In fact, when the Lord announces it, Peter protests vigorously that it will not happen (26:33). He finds himself in a situation beyond his strength, and succumbs in the weakness of the moment, and (John 21) the Lord restores him to fellowship. But Judas sins deliberately, with premeditation and preparation. For him there is no restoration.

S. Lewis Johnson: Now we must not think that this doctrine of the sovereignty of God means that men are not responsible. Notice the next statement that our Lord makes. He said, the Son of man goeth as it is written of him, but woe unto that man through whom the Son of man is betrayed. So he expresses the viewpoint that Judas is liable to terrible judgment even though he is part of the plan of God in the betrayal and death of our Lord Jesus Christ. We cannot flee behind the sovereignty of God and say that because God is sovereign, we, therefore, are not responsible. The Son of man goeth, as it is written, but woe unto that man through whom the Son of man is betrayed. And incidentally, that word, woe, expresses terrible judgment – not light judgment – terrible judgment.

And then to enforce it, he adds, it had been good for that man if he had not been born. Now that statement is a statement that thoroughly and completely refutes the doctrine of universalism and establishes also the doctrine of the eternal punishment of the finally impenitent. I know that that doctrine has fallen upon very evil times, and it is not popular to speak about hellfire and damnation. In fact, it is generally thought that if a man preaches hellfire and damnation, he's old fashioned, out-of-date, and thoroughly irrelevant. But let me assure you, again, if you read the Bible and pay particular attention to what it says, you will not have any difficulty with the doctrine of eternal punishment.

D. (:25) Focus on Judas as the Betrayer

“And Judas, who was betraying Him, answered and said, ‘Surely it is not I, Rabbi?’ He said to him, ‘You have said it yourself.’”

D. A. Carson: it is enough of an affirmative to give Judas a jolt without removing all ambiguity from the ears of the other disciples.

III. (:26-29) PRESENTATION OF THE BREAD AND WINE IN THE INSTITUTION OF THE LORD'S SUPPER

A. (:26) Presentation of the Bread – New Covenant Significance of the Bread

“And while they were eating, Jesus took some bread, and after a blessing, He broke it and gave it to the disciples, and said, ‘Take, eat; this is My body.’”

Robert Gundry: The terse commands, “Take,” “Eat,” and “Drink . . .” make the taking, eating, and drinking matters of obedience. “All of you” commands drinking from the one cup that represents Jesus' covenant-blood. There's only one source of atonement, to which all must repair if their sins are to be forgiven. So the taking, eating, and drinking represent appropriation by faith of the benefits of Jesus' sacrificial death. “For many” enlarges the number of beneficiaries beyond the Twelve to include those to be disciplined among all nations (28:18–20). Matthew never gets around to saying that the Twelve did take, eat, and drink. So the accent stays on Jesus' authoritative commands, which thereby become part of his updating the Old Testament law through escalating the Passover Supper into the Lord's Supper. “For” introduces the outpouring of his covenant-blood as the reason for drinking. Not to drink would represent failure to appropriate the benefits of that outpouring. Since the forgiveness of sins depends on the outpouring, obedience to Jesus' commands is evidential of true discipleship, not meritorious of forgiveness (compare Isaiah 53:12; Jeremiah 31:34).

S. Lewis Johnson: Incidentally, he took bread because bread referred to his body, and the body was a necessary means to the incarnation, and so he begins with the incarnation but our Lord took the bread and he blessed it and he broke it. Bread was ordinarily broken, and so it beautifully symbolized not only the incarnation but also the fact of his death. So Jesus took the bread.

Incidentally, when he says this bread is my body, he means this broken bread is my body. We do not feed on a Christ who has not been sacrificed. We feed upon a Christ who has been sacrificed in our Lord's Supper. And when we take the bread, we do not think simply of the fact that he became a man we think also of broken bread. He is food for us only insofar as he has been sacrificed for us. There is no real spiritual food derived from just feeding on an incarnate Savior who did not die. He only becomes food for us because he dies and delivers us from judgment. So Jesus took bread and he broke it and he gave it to the disciples.

Craig Blomberg: Jesus now invests the bread with new meaning. It foreshadows his body figuratively broken and literally killed in his upcoming death. Jesus' words here have led to massive debates, intra-Christian persecution, and huge theological edifices, the weight of which they cannot bear. The doctrines of transubstantiation (the bread and wine become Christ's actual body and blood) or consubstantiation (Christ is really present "in, with, and under" the elements) make no sense of Jesus' words in their historical context. As Jesus holds up a loaf and declares, "This is my body," no one listening will ever imagine that he is claiming the bread to be the literal extension of his flesh. Moreover, in Aramaic these sentences would have been spoken without a linking verb ("is"), as simply, this, my body and this, my blood. As frequently elsewhere, Jesus is creating a vivid object lesson. The bread symbolizes (represents, stands for, or points to) his crucifixion in some otherwise unspecified sense.

B. (:27-28) Presentation of the Wine -- New Covenant Significance of the Wine

"And when He had taken a cup and given thanks, He gave it to them, saying, 'Drink from it, all of you; 28 for this is My blood of the covenant, which is poured out for many for forgiveness of sins.'"

D. A. Carson: This means that Jesus understands the violent and sacrificial death he is about to undergo (i.e., his "blood"; cf. Morris, Apostolic Preaching, 112–28; A. M. Stibbs, The Meaning of the Word 'Blood' in Scripture [London: Tyndale, 1954]) as the ratification of the covenant he is inaugurating with his people, even as Moses in Exodus 24:8 ratified the covenant of Sinai by the shedding of blood. "Covenant" is thus a crucial category (cf. NIDNTT, 1:365–72; Ridderbos, Coming of the Kingdom, 200–201; Morris, Apostolic Preaching, 65–111; John J. Hughes, "Hebrews ix 15ff. and Galatians iii 15ff.; a Study in Covenant Practice and Procedure," NovT 21 [1979]: 27–96; cf. Heb 8:1–13; 9:11–10:18, 29; 13:20). The event through which Messiah saves his people from their sins (1:21) is his sacrificial death, and the resulting relation between God and the messianic community is definable in terms of covenant, an agreement with stipulations—promises of blessing and sustenance and threats of cursing, all brought here into legal force by the shedding of blood. . .

It appears, then, that Jesus understands the covenant he is introducing to be the fulfillment of Jeremiah's prophecies and the antitype of the Sinai covenant. His sacrifice is thus foretold both in redemption history and in the prophetic word. The exodus becomes a "type" of a new and greater deliverance; and as the people of God in the OT prospectively celebrated in the first Passover their escape from Egypt, anticipating their arrival in the Promised Land, so the people of God here prospectively celebrate their deliverance from sin and bondage, anticipating the coming kingdom.

Leon Morris: When Jesus spoke of his blood as blood "of the covenant," he was surely claiming that, at the cost of his death, he was about to inaugurate the new covenant of which the prophet had spoken. This was a big claim. Jesus was saying that his death would be central to the relationship between God and the people of God. It would be the means of cleansing from past sins and consecrating to a new life of service to God. It would be the establishing of the covenant that was based not on people's keeping it (Exod. 24:3, 7), but on God's forgiveness (Jer. 31:34).

Jesus goes on to speak of his blood as poured out, which is a vivid way of referring to his death. His time on earth is drawing to a close, and he is facing a violent death. But this death, he says, is for many, which means that it is a vicarious death. It is also for the forgiveness of sins (cf. 1:21; 20:28). This is central to the covenant he was about to inaugurate. Jesus had taught people a good deal about the way they should live their lives in the service of God, but he had also spoken of their need for divine help and forgiveness. Now he makes it clear that that forgiveness would be brought about by his death.

S. Lewis Johnson: Now if we believe that he died as a substitute, then, for individuals, we must hold to some form of particularism. That is, that he came to die for his own. He came to give his life for his people, as is taught in the first chapter of the Gospel of Matthew. Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins. And Toplady is right when he says, "Payment God cannot twice demand first from my bleeding surety's hand and then again at mine." If it is taught that Jesus Christ died simply to make all men savable, then Christ has died for the sins of all, and those who refuse shall also die for them, too, and that of course is contrary to the justice of God. Payment God cannot twice demand, first from my bleeding surety's hand and then again at mine. So the doctrine of the atonement taught by the Lord Jesus demands a particularism: a definite atonement, a particular redemption. . .

So we should never say that blood means simply death. It means violent death. If you'll look at passages like Numbers chapter 35 and verse 33 and then the context of it through the Old Testament you'll see that our Lord was speaking here in sacrificial language. This is my blood, so he means this represents the violent death by sacrifice which I shall die. In fact, the bread and the wine are a kind of two-fold parable. In the case of the bread, it is broken, suggesting death and also suggesting violent death. And then in the case of the wine, which is red like blood – remember in the Old Testament even wine is called the blood of grapes. It was God's way of trying to teach Israel ahead of time what was going to happen. So the bread, the broken body, the wine, the outpoured blood of sacrifice, animal sacrifice, was the figure, but here is the reality. So what he is saying then simply is this blood is that by which a new covenant is ratified. It is based on this new blood sacrifice that I will accomplish, and it is made with the true seed of Abraham. It is for many.

Van Parunak: Vs. 28 -- This verse highlights two great differences between the blood of Christ and the OT sin offering.

1. First, it is drunk by the people. The Old Covenant absolutely forbade the drinking of blood -- Lev 17:10
2. The second difference between the OT sin offering and the blood of Christ is what it accomplishes.

In the OT, the effect of the blood is universally described as “atonement” for sin (Lev 17:11). . . . These sacrifices did not remove sin. They simply put them on hold, just as a credit card doesn’t really pay for a purchase, but simply acknowledges the indebtedness. The promise of the new covenant is that God would completely remove the sin: Jer 31:33ff -- Thus our Lord describes his blood as “the blood of the new testament, . . . for the remission of sins.” In terms of the credit card analogy, he pays off the bill.

C. (:29) Physical Absence of Jesus Anticipates Future Kingdom Consummation

“But I say to you, I will not drink of this fruit of the vine from now on until that day when I drink it new with you in My Father's kingdom.”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Verse 29 speaks of the kingdom as if it is still future. Some aspects of the kingdom are future, while others are present.

David Turner: The institution of the Lord’s Supper is closely tied to the Passover as well as the new covenant (Jer. 31:31–34). It also anticipates the ultimate eschatological feast that inaugurates the future kingdom (Matt. 26:29; cf. 8:11; 22:2; 25:10; Rev. 19:7–9).

Robert Gundry: The passage ends with Jesus’ saying he’ll abstain from wine till he drinks it in his Father’s kingdom. “And I tell you,” “by no means,” and “from now on” stress the abstinence. “With you” implies that Jesus’ physical absence from the disciples in the coming church age—a time of persecution for them, as he has repeatedly predicted—would make wine-drinking, a celebratory sort of drinking, inappropriate for him. He’ll hardly be able to celebrate while his disciples are suffering. But a physical “with you” in the future kingdom will consummate his being physically “Immanuel . . . God [is] with us” (1:23) until his death, burial, resurrection, and implied departure to heaven, whence he’ll come back. “Anew” implies that Jesus has drunk with his disciples in the past and perhaps on this occasion—though probably not the wine of the Eucharist, for he gave the cup to them for the drinking of that wine. And since drinking that wine represented appropriating forgiveness of sins by faith in his atoning blood, it would have spoiled the symbolism for him to drink it. His blood was shed for others’ sins, not for any sin of his own. “In my Father’s kingdom” means “when my Father fully establishes his reign on earth.” The use of “my Father’s kingdom” rather than “God’s kingdom” or “the kingdom of heaven” calls attention to Jesus’ divine sonship. One of the Twelve will betray him, but his heavenly Father will vindicate him.

Craig Blomberg: From Matthew's account emerge two key reasons for celebrating the Lord's Supper. One looks backward; the other, forward. First, we commemorate Jesus' redemptive death. Second, we anticipate his return in company with all the redeemed. These two points remain central to all three Synoptic accounts and should form the heart of any theology of this ordinance.

Stu Weber: We feel this same sense of anticipation as we wait for our adult children to arrive “home for the holidays.” We can imagine the heart of the king waiting for the ingathering of his entire family before participating again in the meal himself. It has been anticipated nearly two thousand years now by our reckoning. Imagine how long it has been in the reckoning of the Father's heart! What a grand family meal it will be!

(:30) EPILOGUE – FINAL HYMN AND DEPARTURE TO THE MOUNT OF OLIVES

“And after singing a hymn, they went out to the Mount of Olives.”

Daniel Doriani: So whenever we partake of the Lord’s Supper, we share in the benefits of the new covenant: substitutionary atonement leading to the forgiveness of sins, particular redemption granting security to believers. With sins covered, with freedom from guilt, with no need to make amends for sin, we can rest in Christ. If the disciples left the final meal singing a hymn of joy (26:30), how much more should we.

D. A. Carson: The “hymn” normally sung was the last part of the Hallel (Pss 114–18 or 115–18). It was sung antiphonally. Jesus as the leader would sing the lines, and his followers would respond with “Hallelujah!” Parts of it must have been deeply moving to the disciples when after the resurrection they remembered that Jesus sang words pledging that he would keep his vows (Ps 116:12–13), ultimately triumph despite rejection (Ps 118), and call all nations to praise Yahweh and his covenant love (Ps 117). It may be that Jewish exegesis had already interpreted Psalm 118:25–26 as a reference to Messiah’s parousia (Jeremias, Eucharistic Words, 255–62).

Charles Swindoll: Whatever song they sang, the disciples’ supper had concluded, and they began the short trip through the city, across the Kidron Valley, to the Mount of Olives (Matt. 26:30). As they did, they stepped into the same dark night that Judas had slithered into earlier. And while they ascended the hill to continue fellowshiping with the King, Israel’s long-awaited Messiah, Judas descended into the depths of treachery, seeking to betray the King for a paltry reward.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why did Jesus wait until the last minute to reveal His plans for the important observance of the Passover meal?
- 2) How was Judas able to disguise his treacherous intentions and pass himself off as just one of the disciples without them looking at him with suspicion?
- 3) How does the death of Jesus accomplish the reality of which the Passover Lamb was only the type? In what ways did Jesus fulfil all of the foreshadowings of the OT sacrificial system?
- 4) What are the eschatological implications of Jesus viewing His Father’s kingdom as not yet fully consummated and awaiting His Second Coming?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Jeffrey Crabtree: The old and new covenants have similarities.

(1) In both covenants, shed blood, i.e., lifeblood poured out, meant death of the sacrifice (Newman and Stine 830) as the basis for a covenant relationship. Moses stated (Ex. 24:8) after he sprinkled the blood on the people: “Behold the blood of the covenant, which the LORD hath made with you concerning all these words.” In other words, “the blood by which the covenant was ratified and sealed was the basis for the union between Yahweh and the people” in the O.T. (Kaiser, Exodus 449; emphasis mine). In the same way, Jesus’ shed blood, which He offered on the cross for mankind’s atonement (Heb. 9:12-14) and symbolized by the “fruit of the vine” at the Lord’s Table, is the basis of the union between the Lord and His people under the new covenant (Forlines 191-194). In both covenants, blood was the basis for a union between sinful mankind and God.

(2) In both covenants, faith was the condition for having the benefits of the blood atonement applied and the union effected (Rom. 3:28; 4:13-14; Gal. 2:15-16; 3:1-18, esp. v. 7; Picirilli, Romans 79).

Donald Hagner: Amidst the rich symbolism of the Passover meal, Jesus creates a new complex of symbols relating directly to his sacrificial death. It is not an accident of history but the working of divine sovereignty that Jesus was crucified at the Passover season. For Jesus was the new, eschatological Passover lamb (cf. 1 Cor 5:7), whose sacrificial death was the atonement for the sins of the world. The bread and wine, the commonest of elements, come in the institution of the Eucharist to bear sublime meaning as the expression of the very center of the Christian faith, the mystery of the death of God’s own Son. For this reason the celebration of the Lord’s Supper is at the center of Christian worship. The Eucharist becomes a Christian Passover.

R. T. France: [Regarding harmony between chronology presented in Gospel of John vs. in the Synoptics] I believe that [the supposed contradiction] is based on a Western cultural misunderstanding: in the Jewish day, which begins at sunset, the evening is the beginning of the day, not its ending as it is for us. So the Synoptic statement that the meal (which was eaten at night, see below) was prepared on Nisan 14 may be understood to mean that it was prepared and eaten during the evening and night which began Nisan 14, rather than that it was prepared late on Nisan 14 (before sunset) and eaten the next (Jewish) day, at the official time for the Passover meal on Nisan 15. This would be an equally natural way for a Jewish reader to understand their words; it is our unfamiliarity with the Jewish method of reckoning days which prevents Western readers recognizing that the evening preceding the killing of the lambs is already the same day, Nisan 14. In that case they are describing the same day as the Fourth Gospel. The last supper and the subsequent trial and death of Jesus all take place on the same (Jewish) day as the killing of the lambs in the afternoon which concludes Nisan 14 and thus on the (Jewish) day before the date for the official Passover meal. The last supper is, then, an anticipated Passover meal, in the Synoptics no less than in John.

John MacArthur: The Last Passover

So, they would celebrate the Passover meal on the 14th of Nisan and then for seven days, the Feast of Unleavened Bread. And, of course, we remember what it was for. The Passover celebrated God’s delivering Israel out of bondage in Egypt where they’d been for over 400 years. And you remember, God began to send plagues on the Egyptians, and the last plague was the death of all the firstborn in every family in Egypt. And God said to them, “If you will kill a lamb and a spotless lamb, and put the blood of that lamb on the doorposts and the crosspiece, when the angel of death comes to slay all the firstborn of Egypt, if he sees the blood on your door, he will pass over.” And that’s the Passover. He will pass over your house, pass beyond your house and spare your life. And as a result of that, Pharaoh said, “Get out, I’ve had it. That’s all I can take.” And he sent the Jews out and God ultimately delivered them.

So, the Passover was commemorating the sacrificial lamb whose blood caused them to escape the judgment of God. And it was a symbol of God’s ultimate Passover Lamb, whose blood would cause them eternally to escape the judgment of God. And so, God instituted in Exodus 12 the continual feast of the Passover. It was a meal, and it was held the night before the beginning of the Feast of Unleavened Bread. Ancient times, it came in the first month of the year called Abib. But after the exile it was celebrated in the month of Nisan and Passover was the 14th day of Nisan and on the 15th day, they began the Feast of Unleavened Bread.

By the way, you might be interested to note that the lamb, according to Exodus chapter 12, was to be selected on the tenth of Nisan. And I have been telling you as we’ve been studying the book of Matthew that I believe Jesus entered the city of Jerusalem on Monday. His triumphal entry was Monday. There’s several reasons for that. One, it fits the chronology of events better than a Sunday entrance. Two, it eliminates the problem of what has been called through the years “a silent Wednesday.” If you have Christ entering on Sunday, then there’s nothing happening on Wednesday of the Passion Week; it’s a vacuum that’s hard to fill. But thirdly, and perhaps very significantly, Monday was the tenth of Nisan in the year 33 AD in which our Lord died. And that means that the Monday on the tenth was the day in which everyone in the city of Jerusalem was selecting their Passover lamb. . .

Now, it’s Thursday morning and it’s time to prepare the Passover meal. They already have their lamb. No doubt they got it on Monday when they arrived in the city. They already have that. But there are many things to prepare for Passover. Do you know what they had to prepare? They had to prepare by the slaying of the lamb which could only be done in the temple court, nowhere else. And could only be done at a two-hour period of time, from three in the afternoon to five, no other time. They had to prepare their unleavened bread. They had to get a bowl of saltwater because at the Passover they set a bowl of saltwater on the table to remind them of their tears shed in slavery, and to remind them of the Red Sea which parted when the Lord delivered them. They had to get bitter herbs like horseradish, and chicory, and horehound, and endive, and other things that they put together in a mix with hyssop to remind them of the bitterness of Egypt and the hyssop with which they spread blood on their doors. . .

Now, you say, “What in the world is all the secrecy about? Why the clandestine approach? Why doesn’t He just say, you remember so-and-so, our friend, and follower and disciple? You know where his house is over there on such-and-such a street? That’s where we’re going to do it.” No, He doesn’t say that. Why the secrecy? I’ll tell you one very simple reason: Judas Iscariot. Look at verse 16, “From that time he sought opportunity to do,” what? Well, the Greek word is “to deliver Him over.” Judas was looking for a quiet place, a secluded place, a private place away from the mob where he could turn Jesus over to the religious authorities to be executed. And Jesus knew that if Judas knew where the meal was going to be, that would be the perfect place, and so He wouldn’t say. . .

. . . Galileans, which would be Jesus and His disciples and the Pharisees, could have their Passover on the evening of Thursday because they already began to count the day from morning to morning and it would end on Friday morning. And the others who were from Judea and who were Sadducees, which made up the rulers, wouldn't start their day festivities until late on Thursday and wouldn't kill their lamb until the end of the day on Friday. . .

So, we looked at setting the time. Let's go then, this morning, to verse 20. And the second element of this final Passover, after setting the time, is "sharing the table." And very briefly does Matthew treat this Passover. In verse 20 it says, "And when evening was come, He reclined with the 12 and as they did eat." . . .

And as they move into the meal, we come from the setting of the time, and the sharing of the table to what I call the "shocking of the 12." Look at verse 21 again. "And as they did eat, He said, 'Truly I say unto you that one of you shall deliver Me up, or hand Me over, or deliver Me over, or give Me over.'" It is not really the word "betray." The translators have done that because Judas was a betrayer. But the word simply means, "one of you will deliver Me up." Mark adds the statement in Mark 14:18 in a parallel account, "One of you who is eating with Me will deliver Me over." Now, this is a shocking thing. One of you who is eating with Me will deliver Me over. And, of course, in that part of the world at that time in history, when you ate a meal with a person, you were identifying yourself as a friend. And the idea of eating a meal with someone and then turning them over to their executioners was just unthinkable, because a meal was a symbol of friendship. . .

So, they didn't identify Judas as the one. Rather, you'll notice verse 22, "Every one of them began to say to Him, 'It is not I, is it, Lord?'" Every one of them. Now, why would they be so quick to imagine that they themselves might be the traitor? Very easy to understand and it's what I set up a moment ago. The fact that they had just been rebuked for the ugliness of their pride, for their sin, and ambition, and self-will, and self-design, they were whipped. I mean, they had their tails between their legs. They were shamed by their rebuke of Jesus. And then, they were doubly shamed by the washing of their feet. You remember, Peter said, "You'll never wash my feet. It is not to be that You will wash my feet." And then, Jesus rebuked Peter and said, "If I don't wash your feet, you have no part with Me." And so, they were rebuked and they were shamed. And now, in that condition where their sin has been exposed, and they can't hide it, and they're very much aware of their weakness, they don't even trust themselves in this regard and they begin to say, every one of them, "It's not I, is it? It's not I, is it?" now that they have been made very much aware of the capability of their evil. . .

That takes us to the last thought, "signifying the traitor," signifying the traitor. Verse 25, and this is specific. "Then, Judas, who delivered Him up, answered and said, 'Master, surely not I.'" And he had to say that. If he said nothing, he would have been unmasked. He had to play the game. Everybody was saying it so he had to say it. So, he considers himself a part of the group and the group is saying, surely not I, and so he just chimes in, surely not I, masquerading his hypocrisy as if he could hide anything, calling Jesus ho didaskalos, the master, the rabbi, the teacher which he no more was committed to than any other element of Jesus, truthfully. All he wanted was money and glory. . .

Now, why this final Passover? Now, listen very carefully to what I say, it's essentially important in your understanding of Scripture. This was a very, very momentous time in history. Passover was the oldest Jewish institution, older than any other Jewish institution except the Sabbath itself. For 1,500 years they had celebrated Passover, even before the Aaronic priesthood was instituted, even before all of the Levitical ritual and the giving of the Mosaic Law. The Passover was very old, very ancient. And it was ordained by God to be held every year and every devout Jew did it every year. But now, listen, this Passover, after 1,500-plus years of Passovers, was the last divinely sanctioned and authorized Passover ever held. Any Passover ever celebrated after this one is not authorized by God. It is a remnant of a bygone economy, of an extinct dispensation, of a covenant no longer in vogue. It is vestigial. It serves no significant purpose. Jesus here celebrated the Passover as a way to bring it to its end.

The bell tolled in the upper room for the old economy. Christ ended the long years of Passover and began a new memorial feast which He begins to institute in verse 26. And this new feast is the feast not of the old economy but the new economy, not the old covenant but the new covenant, not the Old Testament but the New Testament, not looking to a lamb in Egypt but a Lamb of God on a hill of Calvary. So, Jesus ends the old before He begins the new. And after having drawn the curtain on the Passover of the old economy, He institutes the feast of the new. And we come to that in verse 26. . .

That's why Jesus came. And He instituted the memorial to that the night before His death. So, our Lord headed for the cross to pour out His blood as a sacrifice for sin. And He instituted the bread and the cup as a memorial for all time that we might remember the self-sacrificing, blood-spilling death of Christ for us. The old covenant had all those animals, none of which could take away sin. The blood of Christ alone could do it. And so, the feast that we celebrate is here at this table with the bread and the cup.

Van Parunak: There were four main categories of sacrifices in the system God gave to Moses. In the order presented in Leviticus, they are

1. the whole burnt offering (Lev 1),
2. the peace offering (Lev 3),
3. the sin offering (Lev 4-5),
4. and the trespass offering (Lev 5:14ff).

The parenthesis after each offering indicates who ate it in the OT. Nobody ate the whole burnt offering, though the priest got the skin, and ate part of the meal offering that accompanied it. The people could only eat of the peace offering.

These four sacrifices embody two contrasts: their purpose and when they are offered.

In terms of purpose, the sin and trespass offerings restore a sinner to fellowship with God, while the burnt and peace offerings symbolize the committed service of a worshipper who is in fellowship with God. The sin and trespass offerings focus on the blood as the means of cleansing away sin; the burnt and peace offerings represents the believer's person by the body of the animal that is offered.

In terms of occasion, the sin and burnt offerings are general offerings, part of the ongoing liturgy in the tabernacle and temple. The trespass and peace offerings are offered to deal with specific offenses and to give thanks for specific blessings, respectively.

The passover sacrifice was instituted in Exodus 12, before the children of Israel came under the covenant at Sinai, so it doesn't fit this scheme exactly. But it does share features of them. Like the peace offering, it is eaten by the people. And like the sin offering, at least in the original setting in Exodus 12, the blood is the center of a special ceremony that protects the people from the angel of death, by marking the lintel and posts of the door.

The two elements of the Lord's memorial fit perfectly with this OT system. His body corresponds to the burnt and peace offerings. The offering of his body shows his complete commitment to the Father in obedience and service. His blood corresponds to the sin and trespass offerings, providing the means to take away sin. We sometimes speak of the imputation of our sin to Christ, and the imputation of his righteousness to him, as summarized in 2 Cor 5:21 For he [God] hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

This correspondence shows how the death of our Lord fulfills the OT sacrificial system. He both takes away our sin, and provides us with his own righteousness so that we are "accepted in the beloved" (Eph 1:6). Throughout the OT period, the Mosaic sacrifices enabled God's people to look forward to this twofold transaction on the cross. Now, after the cross, the elements of the remembrance take our minds back to this same twofold transactions.

One further detail requires comment. Throughout the OT, when more than one sacrifice is offered on an occasion, the sin offering always comes first, followed by the whole burnt offering, and that in turn followed by the peace offering. . .

The order makes sense. The sin offering must come before the offerings of worship because we cannot offer ourselves in service to God until we have first dealt with the sin that separates us from him. But in every record of the Lord's memorial, he offers the bread before he offers the cup. . . In the OT type, the sin offering came first. Now he starts with the worship offering, and ends with the sin offering.

The change is significant. In the OT, the sacrifices reflected the need of those who brought them. They had to bring the sin offering first, in order for the burnt offering to be accepted. But our Lord had no sin of his own. His whole ministry is based on the fact that he can begin by offering himself in perfect service to God, and then provide a sin offering for those who draw near to God by him. . .

TEXT: Matthew 26:31-35

TITLE: JESUS PREDICTS THE FAILURE AND RESTORATION OF HIS DISCIPLES

BIG IDEA:

THE PRIDE BUBBLE OF SELF-SUFFICIENCY COLLAPSES WHEN THE FEAR OF MAN LEADS TO DENIAL AND ABANDONMENT

INTRODUCTION:

R. T. France: The sense of foreboding which has resulted from Jesus' words at the supper about betrayal and death is now underlined as the group makes its way out of the city. But the focus is now not so much on what is to happen to Jesus but on the effect it will have on his disciples. The scriptural pattern which is to be fulfilled includes not only his own death but also their failure, and the imagery of shepherd and flock shows how closely the two are related. Their inability to grasp the seriousness of the situation shows up by contrast Jesus' own awareness and acceptance of his messianic destiny.

Donald Hagner: With the arrest of Jesus and the prospect of his death, his disciples—the ones closest to him—will scatter. Despite their protestations of loyalty, their courage will fail them and they will desert their Lord. The imminent failure of Peter, the first of the apostles, is focused upon, finding its corresponding fulfillment at the end of the chapter. The humanity of Peter and the disciples together with the very real frailty of every profession of commitment will be revealed. Despite the best of intentions, the disciples will not be able to be true to their deepest convictions (cf. v. 56). They, like Peter, will have disappointed themselves as much as Jesus. But in the same breath Jesus gives notice that they will yet have a future with Jesus (v. 32). All is not lost; the setback is only a temporary one though nonetheless serious for that. There is a way back from this failure. God's faithfulness to these vexed disciples remains unshakable just as his forgiveness and restoration are available to every follower of Jesus.

Stu Weber: We must not underestimate our own ability to betray Jesus. Judas's treachery had already been revealed. But Jesus then told the remaining eleven disciples that they would also become disloyal, though not to the point of betraying him to his enemies. Jesus' careful delineation of these events was one more indication that he was not a blind victim. His was a sovereign and voluntary sacrifice.

Van Parunak: He will show them that at this stage in their growth, they still love their own lives more than they love him. Judas actively opposed him, but all of them abandoned him.

I. (:31-32) LEADERSHIP OF THE GOOD SHEPHERD OVERCOMES OUR FAILURE

A. (:31) Prophecy of Imminent Failure by the Fearful Disciples

1. Imminent Failure of All the Disciples Prophesied

“Then Jesus said to them, ‘You will all fall away because of Me this night,’”

Grant Osborne: It will not be just Judas who fails; Jesus now expands his prediction to “you all,” a revelation that must have shocked them to the core.

“Fall away” (σκανδαλίζω) has been used several times with respect to leading one to sin (5:29, 30; 18:6, 8, 9), being offended (13:57; 15:12; 17:27), and falling away from one’s faith (11:6; 24:10). Here the first and third are intended, especially the “falling away.” The disciples are going to desert Jesus completely (v. 56); and even when Jesus appears to them on the first night of his resurrection, they will still be cowering behind closed doors “for fear of the Jewish leaders” (John 20:19). That very night they will fail “on account of me” (causal ἐν [“because”], see BAGD, 261, 3). They will perceive that following Jesus is dangerous and run for their lives, leaving Jesus to face the fury of the Jewish leaders and of Rome.

D. A. Carson: The intimacy of the Last Supper is shortly to be replaced by disloyalty and cowardice. The disciples will all “fall away” on account of Jesus. They will find him an obstacle to devotion and will forsake him. As the quotation from Zechariah makes clear, their falling away is related to the “striking” of the Shepherd. Jesus has repeatedly predicted his death and resurrection, but his disciples are still unable to grasp how such things could happen to the Messiah to whom they have been looking (16:21–23; 17:22–23).

2. Importance of the Leadership of the Good Shepherd

“for it is written,

I will strike down the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered.”

R. T. France: The shepherd in Zech 13:7 is described as God’s shepherd, the man who is God’s “associate” (“who is close to me,” NJB, TNIV). That so exalted a figure should nonetheless be struck down, and indeed by the sword of God himself, expresses in a remarkable way the paradox of a Messiah who is to be killed in accordance with the will of God declared in the scriptures. The sheep in the prophecy are the people of God (as in Ezekiel 34), scattered when they lose their leader, but destined to be refined and restored, even if only one third of them (Zech 13:8–9). So for Jesus his disciples form the nucleus of the new people of God under the leadership of the Messiah. The fact that the following clause in Zech 13:7 refers to them as “the little ones” may have appealed especially to Matthew (cf. 10:42; 18:6–14).

B. (:32) Promise of Future Restoration by the Risen Savior = the Good Shepherd

“But after I have been raised, I will go before you to Galilee.”

R. T. France: Galilee, the place of Jesus’ first preaching (4:17) is also to be the place for a new beginning which will spread out to “all the nations.” And in that process the disciples, restored after their imminent disgrace, are to have the leading role.

Donald Hagner: This parenthetical statement provides the consoling thought that the smitten shepherd and the scattered sheep will be reunited. After his death, a theme that still dominates, Jesus is to “be raised” to new life (other occurrences of ἐγείρειν in reference to the future resurrection of Jesus are in 16:21; 17:9, 23; 20:19; cf. 27:63). And then like a shepherd leading his sheep, he will go before them into Galilee (cf. 28:7, 10; for the imagery of shepherd going ahead of the sheep, cf. John 10:4). Authoritative leadership may be alluded to here (see Evans). The meeting in Galilee after the death and the resurrection of Jesus is recorded in the last pericope of the Gospel (28:16–20; cf. 28:7).

Stu Weber: Of course, the disciples did not know enough at the time of Jesus’ death to go on to Galilee. In fact, the Lord did not want them to go before they had proof of his resurrection—the empty tomb. At that time he would remind them of his instructions (28:7, 10).

William Barclay: We see the sympathy of Jesus. He knew that his disciples were going to flee for their lives and abandon him in the moment of his deepest need; but he does not rebuke them, he does not condemn them, he does not heap reproaches on them or call them useless creatures and broken reeds. Far from that, he tells them that when that terrible time is past, he will meet them again. It is the greatness of Jesus that he knew human beings at their worst and still loved them. He knows our human weakness; he knows how certain we are to make mistakes and to fail in loyalty; but that knowledge does not turn his love to bitterness or contempt. Jesus has nothing but sympathy for those who in their weakness are driven to sin.

II. (:33-35) FALSE BRAVADO CANNOT DELIVER VICTORY FOR SELF-SUFFICIENCY

A. (:33) Big Words from Self Confident Peter

“But Peter answered and said to Him,

‘Even though all may fall away because of You, I will never fall away.’”

Grant Osborne: Peter displays his typical false bravado once again (see 14:28–31; 16:22, 23; 17:4; 19:27) and impulsively declares an absolute confidence in himself that he will never join the others in apostasy; there is one exception to the prediction, and he is it!

Jeffrey Crabtree: Peter adamantly rejected the idea that Jesus’ words included him (v. 33). So confident was he of his own stability and loyalty that he assured Jesus he would be true to Jesus even if he had to stand alone. He would accompany Jesus to prison or even to death if necessary (Lk. 22:33). Peter’s attitude toward Jesus’ death was different from what he voiced in 16:22 where he rebuked Jesus.

Warren Wiersbe: Peter thought he was better than the other men, and Jesus told him he would be even more cowardly than the others.

D. A. Carson: On the one hand, he has learned more about Jesus than he knew at Caesarea Philippi (16:21–28); as a result he is able to accept the idea of suffering for both Jesus and himself. On the other hand, his notion of suffering is bound up with the heroism of men like the Maccabean martyrs, not with voluntary sacrifice—hence v.51 (cf. Jn 18:10). He is prepared for suffering but is not yet ready for what he thinks of as defeat. More important, he reacts on a primal level to Jesus’ prediction in v.31a: “It would be natural for him to be too taken up with the implied slur on his loyalty to pay much attention to anything else” (Cranfield, Mark, 429).

Van Parunak: Peter is the most prominent of the disciples, but with this position comes temptation. Note the pride in his response. He does not humbly pray that the Lord would protect him in his weakness, but asserts that he is superior to the other disciples.

Let’s set Peter in perspective. He is an example of fleshly confidence that crashes and burns. At the other extreme, we have Moses, who was so aware of his weakness that even when the Lord promised to help him, he still was unwilling, and incurred the Lord’s anger:

Exo 4:10 And Moses said unto the LORD, O my Lord, I am not eloquent, neither heretofore, nor since thou hast spoken unto thy servant: but I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue. 11 And the LORD said unto him, Who hath made man's mouth? or who maketh the dumb, or deaf, or the seeing, or the blind? have not I the LORD? 12 Now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say. 13 And he said, O my Lord, send, I pray thee, by the hand of him whom thou wilt send. 14 And the anger of the LORD was kindled against Moses, and he said, Is not Aaron the Levite thy brother? I know that he can speak well. And also, behold, he cometh forth to meet thee: and when he seeth thee, he will be glad in his heart. 15 And thou shalt speak unto him, and put words in his mouth: and I will be with thy mouth, and with his mouth, and will teach you what ye shall do. 16 And he shall be thy spokesman unto the people: and he shall be, even he shall be to thee instead of a mouth, and thou shalt be to him instead of God.

Isaiah got it right. He recognized his unworthiness for the burden laid on him, but accepted the Lord's provision.

Isa 6:5 Then said I, Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the LORD of hosts. 6 Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar: 7 And he laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged. 8 Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me.

David Thompson: Peter's problem is twofold:

- 1) He is not honest with himself;
- 2) He has self-confidence in himself.

These are two things that will ruin any person. Be delusional with yourself and have strong self-confidence in your own abilities and strength and you will go down in a hurry.

B. (:34) Epic Failure Will Be Peter's Reality

"Jesus said to him, 'Truly I say to you that this very night, before a cock crows, you shall deny Me three times.'"

William Barclay: The Romans and the Jews divided the night into four watches – 6 pm to 9 pm; 9 pm to midnight; midnight to 3 am; 3 am to 6 am. It was between the third and the fourth watch that the cock was supposed to crow. What Jesus is saying is that before the dawn comes, Peter will deny him three times.

J. Ligon Duncan: You know the early church fathers said that Peter, for the rest of his life, could not hear a cock crow without his tears welling in his eyes.

Charles Swindoll: Two wills collided that night: the sovereign will of the God-man who knew the future even more clearly than we know the past and the impetuous and presumptuous will of Peter, who didn't grasp his own weakness. Jesus refused to let Peter get away with that unchallenged statement, so He drove home the ugly truth with a very specific prophecy directed toward Peter himself: Before the rooster crowed at dawn, Peter would deny Him not once, not twice, but three times (26:34). In response to this embarrassing prediction, Peter doubled down, going all in with a promise that, even if it came to dying with Jesus, he would stay true to his Master (26:35). Then, not wanting to be outbid by Peter, the ten other disciples chimed in and made the same bold promise to stay at Jesus' side till the very end.

C. (:35) Self Confidence Ignores All Warnings of Inherent Weakness

1. Doubling Down by Peter

“Peter said to Him, ‘Even if I have to die with You, I will not deny You.’”

D. A. Carson: The language of Peter’s protest (the rare subjunctive of dei) shows that he does not really think that Jesus’ death is likely; he still has his visions of heroism. Nor is he alone in his brash protestations of loyalty—only quicker and more vehement than his peers.

2. Disciples Concur with Similar False Bravado

“All the disciples said the same thing too.”

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How quickly does our pride assert its self confidence and self-sufficiency?
- 2) What encouragement can we take from the mercy of Jesus to promise restoration in such a context of denial and abandonment?
- 3) In what circumstances do we imagine that we are superior in strength to others whom we have seen fail?
- 4) Why do you think Jesus picked the visual symbol of the rooster crowing to be the trigger to remind Peter of his failure?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Charles Swindoll: At some point in every person’s educational program, the teaching time is over and the time of testing begins. At the end of a college school year, it’s final exam week. A doctoral program is punctuated with comprehensive exams and a dissertation defense. Law school culminates in the grueling state bar exam. Pastoral training usually concludes with a grilling before an ordination council. And let’s not even talk about medical school!

Like a long period of intense training coming to its conclusion, the earthly ministry of Jesus was wrapping up. From this point on, there would be no more extensive teaching sessions, no more discourses, no more lectures or sermons, no more practice runs at preaching, no more question-and-answer exercises. The crowds would no longer gather to hear the Master’s words or witness His magnificent miracles. There would be no more debates with the religious left or right, and no more challenges to the political zealots. All those events were over. The Messiah’s hour had finally come, and there was no turning back.

In only a brief period, Jesus would experience trials and tribulations of heart and mind. He would spend hours in anguished prayer followed by hours of brutal beatings. Then His foes would serve up the ultimate injustice, finding Him guilty in spite of His purity, and executing Him for nothing. Parallel to this, His once faithful disciples would disappoint Him, betray Him, deny Him, and desert Him. Not a single one of them would make it unscathed through the time of testing.

Daniel Doriani: Within hours, the band disintegrated at the sight of the arresting soldiers. Courage shattered, they abandoned their promises. That very night, a rooster's crow punctuated Peter's failure. All did fall away. Overwhelmed by fear, they stumbled. When they boasted that they would never fail Jesus, they were foolish, but sincere. They intended to be loyal. But it is easy to make vows when conflict, danger, and temptation are invisible. We should watch ourselves. We should be "slow to speak" (James 1:19). When we do speak, we should add, "If it is the Lord's will" (James 4:15).

But we should watch Jesus even more than we watch ourselves. The disciples will fail, but Jesus will not. He says he will rise and he does. He says he will go before them into Galilee. They will not return, downcast, to their homes, while Jesus remains in the grave. He will rise from the dead and precede them.³ Then they will follow, for even if they abandon him, he will not abandon them. This is an immense comfort. We all make rash promises and empty boasts. We all become frightened and fail. But the Lord does not fail those who have a fundamental allegiance to him. As Paul says in 2 Timothy 2:12–13:

*If we endure,
we will also reign with him.
If we disown him,
he will also disown us;
If we are faithless,
he will remain faithful,
for he cannot disown himself.*

The apparent paradox is resolved by distinguishing the act of disowning, denying, or repudiating Christ, which leads him to disown us, from the act of "merely" being unfaithful—that is, failing to hold fully to our resolve to follow Christ (see Matt. 10:33). Jesus links the disciples' collapse to his arrest: "I will strike the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock will be scattered" (26:31). Sheep do scatter when the shepherd falls. The need for leaders can be overstated. The need is not simply for leaders, but for the right sort of leader.

John MacArthur: Restoring Deserting Disciples

They defected in this passage. They deserted Christ. He predicts that, and it came to pass exactly as He had predicted it. But it was a profound and unforgettable lesson to them; a lesson which I believe changed the course of their lives. Of all the things that Jesus could have said to them, of all the things that He could have warned them about, of all of the issues that could have been brought up about the future, He chooses to bring up the fact that they will all desert Him and defect. And Matthew, by the Holy Spirit, chooses to place that story right in the midst of this chapter on preparation for the cross, because it is such a monumental lesson to learn. And if, as our Lord has planned, the disciples are to carry the message to the world, they have to be strong. And the first step in strength is to learn how really weak you are, right? So the lesson of weakness is the first thing to be learned. And that is the lesson He teaches them here. . .

First of all, there is a contrast between knowledge and ignorance – between knowledge and ignorance. The disciples, frankly, are woefully ignorant. We find Peter saying, "Though all men," verse 33, "will be offended because of You, yet will I never be offended." Such ignorance. I mean it was only a matter of a few hours before he would be offended. In verse 35, "Though I should die with You, yet will I not deny You." He didn't know that. He couldn't affirm that. And as it turned out, that was ignorant. And then all the disciples said the same thing in verse 35. They were ignorant. They were ignorant of their own weaknesses. They were ignorant of the strength of Satan. They were ignorant of the test and its great power that they were going to be facing in a matter of a few hours. They were ignorant of so very many things – to say nothing of their ignorance of the Old Testament, of their ignorance of the prophecy mentioned in verse 31 about the shepherd having to be smitten and the sheep of the flock being scattered. They were ignorant about many things. And their ignorance is obvious.

But over against their ignorance is the marvelous knowledge of Jesus Christ. Notice verse 31. “Then” – and the ‘then’ is indefinite, some way up the Mount of Olives that night – “Jesus said to them” – it’s another time for teaching, another time for instruction. And this is a lesson about the stupidity of self-sufficiency. He says, “All you shall be offended because of Me this night, for it is written ‘I will smite the shepherd and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad,’ but after I am raised up again, I’ll go before you into Galilee.” And then in verse 34 He says to Peter, “Verily I say unto you, this night before the cock crows you’ll deny Me on three occasions.” Now that’s knowledge. Listen, He knew they would be offended. He knew that. He knew it would happen this night. He knew it would be because of Him. He knew He would be raised from the dead. He knew He would meet them again in Galilee. He knew they would be offended to the point where, that very night before the cock crowed, Peter himself, the leader, would deny Jesus Christ. He knew they would never pass that trial that night in their own strength. He knew everything. . .

Secondly, we see a contrast in courage and cowardice – in courage and cowardice. In verse 31, that phrase, “All ye,” or “You all shall be offended.” The word is trapped. You’ll get trapped. You’re going to get caught in a trap, and it’s going to be more than you can get out of. The trap will catch you. You’re going to hit a trial that is too much for you to bear, and you’re going to get trapped – all of you are. And what was the trap? Proverbs 29:25 says it: “The fear of man brings a trap.” They were afraid. They were afraid of what the Romans would do to them, or what the Jews would do to them. And when they saw, it says back in verse 55 of this chapter, when they saw those soldiers coming with the clubs, and the staves, and the swords, and the torches, and they saw the leaders come, they fled. They were afraid. “You’re all going to be offended. You’re all going to get in a trap because of Me” – because of Me. “You’re going to leave Me,” He says. “You’re going to defect. You’re going to forsake Me. You’re going to desert. You’re going AWOL at the heat of the battle.” And it was exactly as He said. When the pressure was on, they were gone – they were gone. . .

And so you see the cowardice of the disciples, but you see Jesus in perfect courage, just moving to the cross, committing Himself to the Father, unwaveringly. “Not My will but Yours be done, whatever it is that You will Me to do, Father, I will do it, I trust You, I put My life in Your hands.” And they can’t do that. They’re cowards. . .

The third element of the contrast that I see here is a contrast between power and weakness. The disciples were afraid to face the moment, because they were weak and they couldn’t handle death; that’s what scared them. In verse 32, the Lord says, “After I am raised up again, I’ll go before you into Galilee.” The Lord faced death with tremendous courage, because He knew He had the power over death, right? The disciples knew they didn’t. They were looking at themselves and saying, “We can’t handle death. They’re going to kill us and that’s it. We have no power over death.” And they wouldn’t commit themselves to the one who did have that power. They lacked faith. Jesus, Romans 6:4 says, was raised from the dead by the power of the Father. Which means that when Jesus went to the grave, here He says, “I will be raised up,” and He said it over and over again, Matthew 16, Matthew 17, Matthew 20, “I must go and be crucified, and three days later I’ll rise from the dead.” But He committed Himself to the power of God, to divine power over death. He, it says in Hebrews, came to conquer death which had held men in bondage all their life long. He came to destroy Him who had the power of death, Satan. Christ’s power was so great that He faced the cross, because He knew there was power to conquer death. And He took on death as an enemy to be defeated. The disciples paled in the face of death and ran, and so you see their weakness as over against His power. . .

And then there is a marvelous contrast between pride and humility here. . . The stupid pride of men, and the majestic humility of Jesus Christ, who resolutely willingly goes to the cross to die and shed His blood for the stupid, cowardly, weak, proud, disciples who are going to desert Him. Amazing – what condescension, what humility. How dare these men be ashamed of the living God who is not ashamed of them? I mean it would be understandable if God was ashamed to associate with sinners, but for sinners to be ashamed to associate with God? It shows you how twisted they were. . .

I believe these guys learned an absolutely powerful lesson about their own weakness. And I believe that when Jesus came back from the grave, and put His loving arms around those guys, and pulled them back to Himself, and restored them into the community of disciples that they originally designed to be, and recommissioned them and sent them out, they had so profoundly seen His mercy, they had seen His power in the resurrection, they were now not afraid of death because they knew they would rise from the dead like He did. They had seen the glory of Christ and the grace of Christ in their behalf, and I think they went out with a whole new approach. And so it may be in our lives that it isn’t until we’ve been restored from a defection by the sweet and tender grace of the Lord that we’ll go out to conquer uncompromisingly in the future when we face those kinds of difficulties. I thank God for the times that I failed, and the Lord taught me the frailty of my own strength. Aren’t you? And I’m glad for the times when He taught me His own power, and I rest in Him.

S. Lewis Johnson: Peter Learning Romans Seven

Peter, the Bible tells us, was a man of like passions with us, and his denials of the Lord Jesus make up his theological lecture on Romans chapter 7 verse 13 through verse 25. Personally, I do not think there is anyone who understands human nature apart from our Lord any better than the Apostle Paul, and in the 7th chapter of the Epistle to the Romans in the last half of that chapter, he gives us an insight into the psychology of a Christian and his struggle with sin that we do not have anywhere. And we have it in a section that most beautifully reveals the fact that the sin principle still dwells in our members and there is no victory for a Christian believer in independence of the indwelling Spirit.

Paul’s point in those verses it seems to me is simply this. Because of the fact that the sin principle still dwells within us, even though we have new life by virtue of faith in Christ, we cannot expect to please him, apart from a conscious real dependence upon the Holy Spirit for power in our Christian life. And furthermore, he lets us know that there is always a struggle going on. We never reach the state where, in the Christian life, we do not have any struggle any longer. That’s the point of Romans chapter 7, and it seems to me that this is the truth that Peter was exposed to and which he had to learn the hard way. Most of us have to learn these truths the hard way, unfortunately. We do not really take the Bible as seriously as we ought, and so we are forced to learn them the hard way. And Peter had to learn that truth the hard way. Wouldn’t it be wonderful if we would just read the Scriptures and respond to them and not have to pass through these experiences which are so trying and involve so much suffering and disappointment – sometimes tragedy – simply because we don't pay attention to the things that we read in God's word. We really have forgotten that it is God's word. . .

The day we fall is the day when we cease to fear that we shall fall. The self-confidence of the apostle so characteristic of every one of us.

J. Ligon Duncan: The Disciples Will Flee

God teaches us at least three things in this passage.

1. He teaches us something about Himself.
2. And He teaches us something about the Lord Jesus Christ,
3. and He teaches us something about ourselves.

Jesus and His disciples had just finished the Lord's Supper, and they were making their way to the Mount of Olives. The Mount of Olives was about fifteen minutes away from where they were, and it was about eleven o'clock at night. And as they walked, Jesus had a word of warning and a word of comfort that He gave to His disciples. Had they listened to that word of warning and had they listened and understood that word of comfort, it would have helped them much in the event that we're going to unfold that night and on the next day and on the next day and on the next day. They would have been greatly helped had they taken to heart these words of the Lord Jesus. In fact, the Lord Jesus spoke these words with the precise intent of strengthening His disciples' weak faith.

I. God's warnings ought always to drive us to a greater realization of His and the Son's love and our weakness.

It is so important for you to understand that when Jesus is on the cross, He's not trying to get the Father to love you. When Jesus is on the cross, His death is the expression of the Father's prior love for you. It is the genius, it is the strategy of God the Father's love for you, and that's the first thing that God teaches us in this passage. He teaches us something about Himself. He teaches us that His love is the source of our salvation, and His love is the source of Jesus' provision on the cross for our sins. And if we don't understand that, we'll never understand and apprehend and be persuaded of the Fatherly love of God about which we heard from Calvin in the beginning of the service. If you don't understand that the cross is the expression of the Father's love, you'll never understand the cross. But that's not the only thing that Jesus teaches in this passage. . .

Jesus emphasizes His own willingness to die by saying to the disciples again. This is not the only time, Jesus has said that over and over. In fact if you're remembering what we've already covered in Matthew, chapter 26, you're saying well Jesus has said this before. You're right. He has emphasized the Father's control, the Father's sovereignty, the Father's involvement, the Father's plan, and He has emphasized His own willingness to accept that, to embrace that, to eagerly embrace it on our behalf. And I believe that the reason that Jesus emphasizes that, the reason that God causes Matthew under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit to continually repeat these themes is not just because we have bad memories. It's because He has a very important point for us to understand – that Jesus is not the victim in the sense that He is out of control, and He is unwilling in what is about to happen. He willingly embraces this for you. And so He says to these disciples who He has also said are going to desert them. He says to you my Father is going to strike me down. And I embrace that for You, because I love you. The Lord Jesus is saying to these disciples whom He knows are going to desert Him, that even they are going to desert Him, He loves them enough that He's going to die for them. And He willingly embraces the will of the Father for Him.

And then He teaches them one more thing. He teaches them about themselves. He teaches them that they are all too self-confident, that they are all too self-trusting, that they've made idols of their own commitment and of their own faithfulness to Christ. They need to understand that apart from Him they are nothing, and that they need to depend completely upon Him because the things that they are going to face in the next hours are literally going to unman them, and they are going to flee. Jesus is issuing a warning here. It's a warning designed to help His struggling disciples in a time of need. If they would only listen. It's a warning that would help them in time of need. Jesus knows them better than they know themselves, and He knows their faith is weak. And so He warns them about their impending failure. We as Jesus' disciples are weak, and we are susceptible to sin; and we ought never to reject His rebuke. We ought never to reject the warnings of scriptures. Jesus' words should have awed His disciples. It should have led them on the one hand to say you have got to be kidding. God the Father loves us so much that in order to forgive our sins, He's going to give you on the tree. You're out of your mind. This is beyond our grasp. This is the most glorious thing we've ever – they should have been awed by that declaration, but they missed it. And they should have been awed by that fact that Jesus was willing to lay His life down for them, but they missed it. And they should have been humbled by the fact that they themselves were going to desert Him. By stressing in just a few moments that Peter was going to deny Him before the rooster crowed, Jesus was just simply saying this. You're not only going to deny Me, you're going to deny Me quickly. I'm going to warn you about this. You're going to deny it, and then you're going to turn right around and do it in a matter of an hour or so. The disciples should have been humble. . .

II. We are always unwise to reject the warnings of God's Word and to trust in our own strength.

Now verses 33 through 35 are a living illustration of how not to respond to the word of God. And the fact that this living illustration of how not to respond to the word of God comes from the disciples themselves upon whom the Lord Jesus has built the church ought to send out a very loud message to us. Look at Peter's response. Peter protests in verse 33 that he will be uniquely faithful to Christ even if all the other disciples desert. Peter is going to remain faithful. And we see in this passage that we are unwise to reject the warnings of God and to trust in our own strength. God is teaching us in this passage to trust in His word despite the evidences to the contrary and to distrust the fickleness of our own hearts; to trust in Him alone, to be humbled and to flee to Him.

I want you to see three things that Peter did wrong.

1. First of all, he disbelieved. The Lord Jesus Christ did not only say you are going to flee, but He had quoted Scripture, and Peter still says no, I'm not. You're wrong. He disbelieved the word of God. Mistake one.
2. Two, he disdained his brethren. He said look, Lord, these guys may desert You. I'm never deserting You. These men they may not be men of substantial character. They may not have obtained the spiritual maturity that I have. They may desert You, but never me. He disdained his brethren and preferred himself over them.
3. And thirdly, he was overconfident in himself. Oh no, Lord, I will never desert You. I know myself. I'm not a one to go back on my promises. I'm committed. I'm committed to this thing to the end. He disbelieved the word of God. He disdained his brethren, and he was overconfident.

My friends, when we are in that position, we are set up for a fall. Jesus then kindly, but firmly, reiterates what he had just said. He said Peter, my disciples, listen to me. Verily, truly, it is an absolute certainty that before the rooster crows, you're going to deny me three times. . .

Matthew goes out of the way, however, to indicate that it was not Peter alone who was at fault here. All the disciples, Matthew says, all the disciples shared the same attitude. We must never underestimate the power of the evil one or the strength of temptation, and we must certainly never overestimate our own ability to resist it. You notice here a twin mistake on the part of the disciples, and it's a twin proneness that we all have. We have a twin proneness to overestimate our own strength and our own ability, and we have along with it a proneness to underestimate the strength of temptation. We think that temptation is weak, and we are strong. Rather than recognizing in humility our own weakness, apart from the Lord Jesus Christ and from His grace, and the power of the evil one. That's why the Lord Jesus, in His prayer, tells us to pray. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from the evil one.

Albert Mohler: On the way to the Mount of Olives, Jesus gives an ominous prediction to his disciples: that very night their loyalty to him will falter. When their courage is put to the test, they will run, fulfilling Zechariah's prophecy (Zec 13:7). Jesus prophesied judgment for Judas's betrayal (Mt 26:24), but the promise to the other disciples is that after they fall away (which indicates that they do not abandon their faith), they will be restored to fellowship with him. Peter, the leader and spokesperson among the Twelve, brashly insists he will never desert Jesus. In reply, Jesus warns Peter that he will fail even more than the others. Before dawn arrives, Peter does not listen to Jesus' warning or heed its caution, and his false bravado leads the rest of the disciples to join his insistent vow of loyalty.

TEXT: Matthew 26:36-46

TITLE: THREE CYCLES OF AGONIZING PRAYER IN GETHSEMANE -- "YOUR WILL BE DONE"

BIG IDEA:

WATCH AND PRAY TO GUARD AGAINST TEMPTATION AND TO SUBMIT YOUR WILL TO GOD'S WILL IN TIMES OF CRISIS

INTRODUCTION:

David Thompson: Verse 37 says that Jesus began to be "grieved" and "distressed." Those two words mean that Jesus was at a terrible emotional low. In verse 38, Jesus asks the disciples to do two things in view of His pending death:

- 1) Stay put;
- 2) Keep watch with Him.

That word "watch" means to be awake, be alert, and stay alive to the things of God (Smith, p. 96). Now verse 39 says Jesus went a little beyond them and prayed "If possible let this cup pass from Me, but nevertheless, not My will but Your will be done." Now the cup Jesus is referring to is the cup of His suffering and what is in the cup is our sin. He is facing the divine reality that the time had come for Him to endure the wrath of God for our sin. This would mean that our sin would be imputed to Him. He who knew no sin would become sin for us. This would also mean that His own Father would have to turn His back on His own Son. After this first session of prayer, Jesus went back to His disciples and notice verse 40—they were sleeping. These men could not spare one hour of their lives for Him, when He was about to die for them. These who said they would stay with Him to the end could not watch with Him the moment He needed them the most. So verse 41 says He told them to keep watching and praying so that they would not enter into temptation because the spirit is willing but the flesh is weak. Now let us clearly understand this point—staying awake and alert and being a person of prayer is a key to victory over temptation. Also notice that Jesus says the flesh is weak. There are many believers who see themselves as strong in their flesh, contrary to what God says about it—our flesh is weak. It will fail us. The key to victory is staying awake and alert to the things of God and being a person of prayer.

Stu Weber: The only way we can remain loyal in spite of our weakness is to stay alert to danger and to depend continually on God through prayer.

Stanley Saunders: Jesus, who has been "with" the disciples (26:18, 20; cf. 1:23; 18:20; 26:29; 28:20), now asks them to be with him in preparation for the completion of his mission. But despite their bluster about not stumbling, deserting, or denying Jesus (26:31–35), the disciples will lose energy and then take flight. Jesus spends the last hours before his arrest in prayer, distress, and lament.

Grant Osborne: The apostolic band crosses the Kidron Valley and ascends the western slope of the mountain to an olive grove ("Gethsemane" means "oil press," so this was an olive orchard possibly owned by a wealthy supporter who allowed Jesus to use it). John 18:2 says that Judas knew the place "because Jesus had often met there with his disciples." So it was a common hideaway for Jesus and his followers, perhaps for R and R away from people. Luke 21:37 says that Jesus and the others spent the nights there during Passion Week (probably along with Bethany, see on Matt 21:17).

Jesus asks eight of the eleven (Judas has already departed on his nefarious task) to sit at the entrance to the grove while he goes into the garden. The wording here may be “a subtle allusion to Gen 22:5, where Abraham instructs his servants to stay back while he and Isaac go a distance away to pray.” Jesus becomes the embodiment of Abraham’s faith and Isaac’s sacrifice.

David Turner: The narrative of Jesus’s agony in Gethsemane (cf. Mark 14:32–42; Luke 22:40–46) underlines the themes of Jesus’s dedication to the Father’s will and the disciples’ inability to grasp the gravity of the hour. Upon arrival in Gethsemane, Jesus tells his disciples that he will go aside to pray (Matt. 26:36). This distance between Jesus and the disciples, both the larger group and the three who fail to stay alert with him, is significant. The narrative presents three cycles that contrast Jesus’s prayerful obedience to the disciples’ drowsy oblivion.

Richard Gardner: In between the three petitions Jesus makes, there are interludes in which he returns to his three companions and finds them sleeping (vv. 40, 43). They have proved unable to fulfill Jesus’ request to keep watch with him in an hour of crisis (v. 38b). The language of watching or keeping awake is highly metaphorical, suggesting the need for God’s servants to be prepared for the traumatic events by which the kingdom comes (cf. 24:42–43; 25:13; 1 Thess. 5:1–11; 1 Pet. 5:8). To put it another way: The ordeal of impending suffering that Jesus confronts at Gethsemane is but the first of a series of eschatological crises calling for readiness on the part of his community.

Craig Blomberg: The key themes Matthew underlines throughout his passion narrative converge in this conclusion to the account of Gethsemane:

- God is in control of all these events, however tragic they may seem to others.
- Jesus is the Son of God who is suffering and dying.
- His death is humiliating but voluntary, an act of obedience fulfilling God's will.

Bob Deffinbaugh: What I see emphasized in this scene in Gethsemane is the frailty and failures of the disciples, as a backdrop to the faithfulness of the Lord Jesus. They assured Jesus that they would not forsake Him, but they couldn’t even stay awake with Him in His most difficult hour yet. Jesus assured them that He would die as the Passover Lamb, bringing about the New Covenant. He remained faithful to His calling, even when His disciples were weak and failing.

Leon Morris: Matthew brings out something of the poignancy of what was happening in a little passage that brings out clearly both the fact that Jesus knew what was about to happen and the incomprehension of the apostles. At this time they were sure they would never fail Jesus, and they affirmed this in strong terms. But in Gethsemane immediately afterward they failed him. Clearly in this trying hour Jesus looked for his closest followers to support him in their prayers, but found them wanting. Instead of watching with him and praying, they fell asleep. Jesus was left to bear the strain and the suspense alone.

R. T. France: The last scene in which we find Jesus alone with his disciples (until after the resurrection in 28:16–20) has a dual focus. Its primary subject is Jesus’ own prayer as he faces up to the reality of his approaching death, and the reader witnesses the extraordinary emotional turmoil which this situation now evokes in one who up to this point has spoken of it with a sense of purpose and settled resolve. But the spotlight falls also on his disciples, or more particularly on the inner circle of Peter, James and John, in their human weakness and their inability to play even a supporting role when Jesus most needs them. The contrast is profound, and the reader is thus prepared for the different responses of Jesus and his disciples when the crisis comes: his prayer will have restored his sense of purpose and his authority, while the disciples, after an initial futile attempt at resistance, will simply give up and abandon him.

(:36-38) PROLOGUE – SETTING THE SCENE IN GETHSEMANE – CONCLUDING THE TRAINING OF THE DISCIPLES BY SHOWING THEM HOW TO HANDLE TIMES OF CRISIS:

- HOW TO GUARD AGAINST TEMPTATION
- HOW TO SUBMIT ONE’S WILL TO GOD’S WILL

A. (:36) Prayer Must Be Our #1 Strategy in Times of Crisis

“Then Jesus came with them to a place called Gethsemane, and said to His disciples, ‘Sit here while I go over there and pray.’”

Peter and the disciples had just boasted of their strength while Jesus told them they were weak (Matthew 26:31-35). In contrast, Jesus sensed His weakness and so made plans to gain strength from His Father.

Does Prayer matter? John 18:1 – follows high priestly prayer of Chap. 17 – now we have more prayer – last moments of freedom before Jesus is arrested – How does He spend His time? Prayer is our #1 strategy –

William Barclay: It is a strange and a lovely thing to think of the nameless friends who rallied round Jesus in the last days. There was the man who gave him the donkey on which he rode into Jerusalem; there was the man who gave him the upper room where the Last Supper was eaten; and now there is the man who gave him the right of entry to the garden on the Mount of Olives. In a desert of hatred, there were still oases of love.

B. (:37) Mentoring Close Disciples Requires Transparency in Times of Crisis

“And He took with Him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and began to be grieved and distressed.”

John MacArthur: The truth of the matter is He took them because they were the three leaders. He took them because there was a lesson that had to be taught to the rest, and He couldn’t take them all or there wouldn’t be anybody left there to watch. But He took the significant leaders, because whatever it was He wanted them to learn, He wanted them to be able to communicate it to the rest, and these were the ones the rest looked to. They were the ones who would be the teachers. . .

He wasn’t looking for their help. That would be incongruous. I mean there’s a Gethsemane in all of our lives. There may be many of them. There may be many agonizing experiences, agonizing trials and temptations. There seems a deep sorrow and trial through which we all must pass sooner or later. The dark hour of death lurks around all of us, and the bitter cup we drink at some time or another, and maybe often we drink it. And our social nature sort of pushes us manward, to reach out to men for our strength, and we expect too much from them. Even our dearest and holiest friends, however willing their spirit may be, will find their flesh is feeble, and we need to learn to turn to God. He wasn't taking them for support. He wasn't taking them for sympathy. He found support in God, and He asked no sympathy. And He wasn't taking them to patrol them, because He wouldn't have left them alone, and He had done His work for three years, and He was ready to leave, and the Spirit would take over where He finished. No, He took them for instruction's sake, that they might learn how He faced a trial. What a lesson they needed to learn.

Van Parunak: These three were the disciples closest to the Lord.

- They were the first called, along with Andrew, in (Matt 4:18-21).
- They alone went with him to Jairus' house for the raising of his daughter (Mark 5:37).
- He chose them to accompany him into the mount of transfiguration (Matt 17:1).
- These were the first three mentioned when the disciples gathered after the ascension (Acts 1:13).
- When Paul came from Antioch to Jerusalem with Barnabas at the time of the famine (Acts 11:27-30), he mentions the three as pillars of the church.

3 groupings – Do we have circles of support relationships / of mentoring relationships ... or are we a Lone Ranger? All about relationships

William Barclay: We see the loneliness of Jesus. He took with him his three chosen disciples; but they were so exhausted with the drama of these last days and hours that they could not stay awake. And Jesus had to fight his battle all alone. That also is true for us all. There are certain things we must face and certain decisions we must make in the awful loneliness of our own souls; there are times when other helpers fail and comforts flee; but in that loneliness there is for us the presence of one who, in Gethsemane, experienced it and came through it.

Grant Osborne: We now see the depth of Jesus' emotions that he has kept under control until now. He knows this is his destiny and he has come for this purpose. But as the God-man, he still feels human emotions, and now dread overwhelms him. As many have noted, the anguish is not due so much to his approaching death as to the fact that he will bear the sins of all humanity and thereby be separated from God. The two infinitives show the horror he feels, with "to be sorrowful" (λυπεῖσθαι) pointing to sorrow and grief (see also 17:23; 26:22) and "[to be] distressed" (ἀδημονεῖν) pointing to his deep distress (only here in Matthew).

Charles Swindoll: In this alarming scene, the true humanity of Jesus is on full display. A surprisingly powerful but understandable desire for preservation —compounded by satanic attack —took hold of Jesus' very human heart and mind, urging His human will to seek some way of escaping the pain. Just as he had done to Adam in the first garden, the serpent offered the second Adam, Jesus, an alleged alternative to obedience and a feigned fast track to glory. As always, Satan made self-preservation more appealing than self-sacrifice. Yet unlike Adam, Jesus cried out to the Father and submitted His human will to the divine will through agonizing hours of extreme spiritual warfare (26:39). So distressed was Jesus that His sweat fell to the ground like drops of blood (Luke 22:44). . .

In the midst of all this anguish, the divine will prevailed when Jesus, the God-man, surrendered unconditionally to the good and perfect plan of God the Father: "Not as I will, but as You will. . . . Your will be done" (26:39, 42). His divine will and human will perfectly aligned, and Jesus resolved to face the journey to the Cross. He was ready. But the disciples were not. He warned them, “Keep watching and praying that you may not enter into temptation; the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak” (26:41). Their eagerness to stay faithful would be no match for their flesh. Within minutes they would become the very deserters and traitors they had vowed never to become.

R. T. France: Only as we are allowed to share Jesus’ deep distress are we enabled to grasp the seriousness of the settled purpose of God which calls for his Son to be rejected and killed in Jerusalem. But even so, the will of God is not imposed on an unwitting victim, but is deliberately faced and shared by the Son himself. The relationship of trust and loyalty between Father and Son which was put under scrutiny at the outset of Jesus’ ministry (4:1–11) proves able to survive even this ultimate test. Only in the terrible cry from the cross in 27:46 will we be given a similar insight into Jesus’ emotional turmoil, when for a moment even the hard-won harmony of will achieved in Gethsemane will appear to be disrupted.

C. (:38) Spiritual Vigilance is Key in Times of Crisis

“Then He said to them, ‘My soul is deeply grieved, to the point of death; remain here and keep watch with Me.’”

J. Ligon Duncan:

- You will never understand Jesus’ agony until you realize that His distress is not over death but judgment.
- You will never understand Jesus’ agony until you understand His aloneness.

David Turner: Perhaps the stress on watchfulness is meant to reenact the vigil of Passover night (Exod. 12:42).

I. (:39-41) FIRST CYCLE OF PRAYER – YOUR WILL BE DONE

A. (:39) Model for Victory

“And He went a little beyond them, and fell on His face and prayed, saying, ‘My Father, if it is possible, let this cup pass from Me; yet not as I will, but as Thou wilt.’”

Jesus had set His face to go to Jerusalem; He knew what lay ahead for Him there – complete commitment to the will of His Father and to His mission of Redemption – the ultimate Sacrificial Lamb offering Himself up on our behalf.

How difficult for us sometimes to be sincere in saying not my will but God’s will be done – and embracing that will no matter how difficult it proves to be.

Grant Osborne: “Cup” (ποτήριον), as in 20:22–23, is the cup of suffering due to God’s wrath (e.g., Ps 75:8; Isa 51:17, 22; Jer 51:7), further evidence that Jesus is conscious of the vicarious nature of his death. Jesus’ deep personal desire is for God to take away the necessity of this vicarious sacrifice. However, his greater desire is to see God’s will accomplished, and this is where Jesus’ victory over himself occurs. Jesus is aware of the significance of his death for God’s plan of salvation and for the salvation of humankind, so he surrenders himself to the greater will of the Father.

B. (:40-41) Model for Defeat

“And He came to the disciples and found them sleeping, and said to Peter, ‘So, you men could not keep watch with Me for one hour? 41 Keep watching and praying, that you may not enter into temptation; the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak.’”

Grant Osborne: “Flesh” (σάρξ) is not satanic powers (as at Qumran) but represents “people in their tangible, perishable, and earthly aspect,” yet still “the means through which Satan moves to distract people from God’s plan; it represents the vulnerability of the human being.” Finally, πρόθυμον means to be “ready, eager, or desirous” to do something. It connotes goodwill and the willingness to do what God wants. So Jesus is saying that the disciples desire to stay awake and do what he is asking but lack the personal strength to do so.

Thomas Constable: The contrast between the flesh and the spirit is not between the sinful human nature and the Holy Spirit (as in Galatians 5:17) but between man’s volitional strength and his physical weakness (cf. Matthew 26:35). We often want to do the right thing but find that we need supernatural assistance to accomplish it (cf. Romans 7:15-25).

Van Parunak: This instruction helps us understand the purpose of his request to them that they “watch with me” (v. 38). The purpose of their watching is not just to uphold him, but to gain strength for their own test. In v. 31, he foretold two things: his own suffering (the smiting of the shepherd), and their offense at him. Now he withdraws with the closest three disciples, to pray in preparation for this coming trial. His own prayer focuses on his coming suffering. He expects them to pray, not just for him, but for the trial that he has warned them they will face, the pressure to be offended at him and to desert him. They need to come before the Father for his help in this struggle. Their sleep shows their lack of emotional engagement with either part of this crisis—the Lord’s suffering, and their incipient failure.

II. (:42-43) SECOND CYCLE OF PRAYER -- YOUR WILL BE DONE

A. (:42) Model for Victory

*“He went away again a second time and prayed, saying,
‘My Father, if this cannot pass away unless I drink it, Thy will be done.’”*

B. (:43) Model for Defeat

“And again He came and found them sleeping, for their eyes were heavy.”

III. (:44-45) THIRD CYCLE OF PRAYER -- YOUR WILL BE DONE

A. (:44) Model for Victory

“And He left them again, and went away and prayed a third time, saying the same thing once more.”

Grant Osborne: In the ancient world, doing something a second time (e.g., John’s double “amen” structure for Jesus’ teaching, cf. John 5:19, 24, 25; 6:26; et al.) emphasizes it greatly, while a third time makes it superlative or ultimate (e.g., “holy, holy, holy” in Isa 6:3 and Rev 4:8 means ultimate holiness, and “666” in Rev 13:18 means ultimate finiteness or sinfulness). So Jesus becomes the ultimate model of intense, persevering prayer.

David Turner: This cycle of three lost opportunities to stay alert anticipates the cycle of Peter's three lost opportunities to confess Jesus in Matt. 26:69–75.

Thomas Constable: Jesus' repetition of His request illustrates persistence in prayer, not vain repetition. Persistence expresses the intensity with which we feel the need for our petition and our faith in God's ability to meet our need. Vain repetition relies on the simple repetition of words to wear God down.

D. A. Carson: Some interpreters have seen a certain progression in Jesus' three prayers, but Matthew says that Jesus said "the same thing" (v.44). The variations between v.39 and v.42 must therefore be incidental. "May your will be done" mirrors one of the petitions of the prayer Jesus taught his disciples (6:10). As Jesus learned obedience (Heb 5:7–9), so he became the supreme model for his own teaching. In the first garden, "Not your will but mine" changed paradise to desert and brought man from Eden to Gethsemane. Now "Not my will but yours" brings anguish to the man who prays it but transforms the desert into the kingdom and brings man from Gethsemane to the gates of glory.

B. (:45) Model for Defeat

*"Then He came to the disciples, and said to them,
'Are you still sleeping and taking your rest? Behold, the hour is at hand and the Son of Man is being betrayed into the hands of sinners.'"*

Robert Gundry: "Are you sleeping for the remainder [of the time till the betrayer arrives] and resting?" Jesus' question arises out of disgust at the disciples' sleepy prayerlessness. Or we could translate with a disgusted exclamation: "You're sleeping for the remainder of the time and resting!" Under either translation, the present tense of "comes" and "says" highlights the disgust.

R. T. France: Jesus' words on his final return to the sleeping disciples are hard to interpret as a whole; they seem to pull in opposite directions. The opening words, taken at their face value, give permission to the disciples to go on sleeping, while v. 46 tells them to wake up. Two kinds of solution have been pursued: either there is a significant time-lag incorporated within what appears to be a continuous speech, with something occurring in the middle which changes Jesus' attitude, or the opening words are not to be taken at their face value. The first type of solution may be supported by v. 45b, the announcement of Judas' imminent arrival. So perhaps after saying "Sleep on and rest" Jesus heard or saw the approach of the arresting party and so concluded that after all there was no more time for sleep. But if that is what Matthew intended, the lack of any narrative indication of an interruption between vv. 45a and 45b is at best clumsy. Most interpreters therefore look for an alternative way of understanding Jesus' opening words. They have been taken as an ironical question ("Are you still sleeping and resting?"), an indignant observation ("You are still sleeping and resting!"), or an ironical command ("Sleep on and rest!") intending that they should in fact do just the opposite. All these suggestions come to much the same conclusion, that Jesus did not in fact want the disciples to go on sleeping at this point any more than he did before, and in that case vv. 45b-46 follow more naturally. Appeals to a supposed ironic intention are of course always suspect as an easy way to avoid an exegetical embarrassment, but in this case, by giving no indication of a time-lag or change of situation between vv. 45a and 45b, Matthew seems to have left us little choice.

Jeffrey Crabtree: Jesus spoke of those coming to get Him as "sinners." Though He came to die, He condemned those who took part in His death. He was innocent of any wrongdoing. They were guilty of wrongdoing. They might have had the title of religious leaders or were representing the religious leaders, but to Jesus they were sinners. This included Judas, His former, trusted disciple.

(;46) EPILOGUE – COURAGOUSLY FACING HIS CRISIS

“Arise, let us be going; behold, the one who betrays Me is at hand!”

William Barclay: We see the courage of Jesus. ‘Rise,’ said Jesus, ‘let us be going. He who betrays me is near.’ Celsus, the pagan philosopher who attacked Christianity, used that sentence as an argument that Jesus tried to run away. It is the very opposite. ‘Rise,’ he said. ‘The time for prayer and the time for the garden is past. Now is the time for action. Let us face life at its grimmest and human beings at their worst.’ Jesus rose from his knees to go out to the battle of life. That is what prayer is for. In prayer, we kneel before God that we may stand erect before the world. In prayer, we enter heaven that we may face the battles of earth.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How are we demonstrating that prayer is our #1 strategy?
- 2) Are we always supposed to be giddy and happy and excited about God’s will?
- 3) What are the ways in which we keep watch; what is the opposite of keeping watch?
- 4) Where have we found it to be true in our life that our spirit is willing but our flesh is weak?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Walter Wilson: What the episode illustrates, however, is not merely the idea that expressions of grief and supplication have an appropriate place in Christian spirituality. More critically, the experiences imputed to Jesus in this story illustrate the real challenge of the Lord’s Prayer, that is, of aligning one’s own will with the will of God. The fact that Jesus himself struggles in this regard—that he is a savior who can “sympathize with our weaknesses” (Heb 4:15–16)—and yet ultimately retains his resolve makes him a model for how the readers can be strengthened through prayer in their time of need. As his example shows, very often people must face such times alone. The prayer further illustrates the appropriateness of expressing one’s own will in prayer even (or especially) when it differs from God’s will.

David Turner: Gethsemane also reminds disciples of their weakness (cf., e.g., 6:30; 8:26; 14:31; 16:8, 22; 17:20; 18:21; 19:13). Their lack of perception at Jesus’s anointing in Bethany (26:10) has already shown that they were not focused on his reminder that his death was near (26:2). Their unanimous denial that they would desert Jesus when he predicted they would shows their unbelief and sinful self-confidence (26:31–35). Such apparently brave disciples should be able to watch with Jesus through the night, but even their inner circle fails him at the moment of deepest need. Zebedee's sons wanted the highest honors in the kingdom and promised they could drink his cup (20:22), but now they do not even stay awake to share Jesus's burden over the cup he alone will drink. After their performance in Gethsemane, the disciples' desertion when Jesus is arrested (26:56) does not surprise. Their sleep reminds disciples of the necessity of spiritual alertness during moral testing (cf. 1 Cor. 16:13; Eph. 5:14; Col. 4:2; 1 Thess. 5:6–8; 1 Pet. 5:8). Jesus's promises can sustain alert disciples (e.g., Matt. 16:18; 19:28–29; 28:18, 20).

Leon Morris: Jesus' deep anguish comes out in the further words spoken to Peter and the sons of Zebedee. In words reminiscent of Psalm 42:6, 11; 43:5 Jesus speaks of his soul as very sorrowful; the addition to the point of death indicates that this is no normal perturbation, but something that goes very deep (cf. Jonah 4:9; Rieu, "My heart is heavy to the point of death"; REB, "my heart is ready to break with grief"). It is "anguish that threatens life itself" (Hill). Matthew does not leave his readers to think that Jesus was troubled in the same way as we all are from time to time. In Gethsemane he underwent a most unusual sense of being troubled that we must feel is connected not only with the fact that he would die, but that he would die the kind of death he faced, a death for sinners. Jesus was a brave man, and lesser people by far, including many who have owed their inspiration to him, have faced death calmly. It is impossible to hold that it was the fact of death that moved Jesus so deeply. Rather, it was the kind of death that he would die that brought the anguish. In due course Matthew will record the cry from the cross that says the Father had forsaken Jesus at the point of death (27:46; Paul says, "him who knew no sin he made sin for us," 2 Cor. 5:21). Jesus would be one with sinners in his death, he would experience the death that is due to sinners, and it seems that it was this that brought about the tremendous disturbance of spirit that Matthew records. . .

The question at issue was not whether Jesus should do the Father's will, but whether that necessarily included the way of the cross. The kind of death he faced was the kind of ordeal from which human nature naturally shrinks; thus we discern here the natural human desire to avoid it. But we discern also Jesus' firm determination that the Father's will be done. So he prays for the avoidance of the death he faced, but only if that accorded with the divine plan.

John MacArthur: The Son in Sorrow

Now, I think most of us who have been in the church for any time are somewhat familiar with a hymn about our Lord, a very beautiful hymn written by a man named Philip Bliss many years ago. The hymn says, "Man of sorrows, what a name for the Son of God who came, ruined sinners to reclaim, hallelujah, what a Savior." The hymn writer says, "Man of sorrows, what a name" and he borrowed that from Isaiah chapter 53, where Jesus is said to be a man of sorrows, acquainted with grief. When you study the life of the Lord, you realize that indeed He was a man of sorrows. There is no record in Scripture that Jesus ever laughed. There are statements about His grief. There are statements about His sighing out loud, about His being grieved, about His feeling sad. . .

Well remember, this is midnight Thursday of the last week of our Lord's life. The years of ministry are over. The Galilean ministry, the Judean ministry, the Perea ministry east of the Jordan, it's all over, the miracles, the healings. He is now come to Jerusalem at the Passover, in the year 33 A.D., most likely, perhaps 30 A.D., one of those two years. And He has come not only to attend the Passover but to be the Passover. And Thursday was the day to get ready, because that evening they ate the Passover, and so the disciples made ready the Passover, and Thursday evening they ate the Passover. The meal is over, the final hymn has been sung, they have left the upper room, gone through the city of Jerusalem with the bustling crowds, near midnight because of the holiday, because of the festival, because of the Passover season, out the gate north of the temple, which would be the eastern gate, down the slope of the temple mount, across the Kidron, up the Mount of Olives. And after the little interlude on the Mount of Olives where the Lord warned them about their defection, they now come to the garden of Gethsemane.

Now, with that as a background, let's look at the first word, key words that help us unfold the text. The first word is the word "sorrow" – the word "sorrow." I only wish to God that I were a person of eloquent words and could express what I feel in my heart about this. I'll do the best I can. In verse 37, after having gone on with Peter, James and John, some distance further from the other eight, it says, "He began to be sorrowful and very depressed" – very depressed. Now here our Lord is entering into deep anguish. If you think for a minute that Jesus just lived His life, and went to the cross and died, ho-hum, and rose again, and said, "There, it's done," you're wrong. Every single thought of anticipation of that cross that dwelt in His omniscience repulsed everything about Him. He agonized every conscious moment of His incarnation over the reality of the cross, because everything in it He despised – the guilt, the sin, the death, the isolation, the loneliness, the estrangement from God. This is not something He coolly and calmly engaged in, as if it were turning the page of a book on redemptive history, but something which brought Him to an indescribable agony. His whole soul is so repulsed with everything that has to do with the cross, the horror of it is so large, that it's beyond our description. And in that I think lies a new understanding of the love and the sacrifice of Jesus Christ. . .

The word here for being sorrowful means deep sadness – not superficial, but deep. And it says He was very depressed – that is a very interesting word. . . The word literally means, in a sort of a wooden sense, to be away from home, so it's a beautiful concept. Home is where comfortable things are. Home is where you belong. Home is where your family is. Home is where love is. Home is where you're at ease. Home is where you're accepted. Jesus was away from home. He was isolated in conflict with hell. This was depressing, so that the word "to be away from home" ultimately came to mean "depressed." It says in Psalm 42, and I think in a Messianic way describing Christ's experience, that wave upon wave rolled over Him, waves of grief, deep called unto deep. There is a desolate, profound kind of loneliness and sorrow here that causes Him to be depressed, deeply depressed. . .

The second word we see, not only sorrow, but the second word we see is supplication – supplication. In the midst of His sorrow, He cried out to God. In verse 39, 42, and 44, we have the three different periods of prayer in which He cried out to God. Now, what was going on here? I believe without a question this was a temptation. There are some people who have suggested to me personally that this was not a temptation. I feel it was a temptation. I feel Satan was there in full force, trying to keep Christ from going to the cross, preventing the cross, preventing the resurrection. You say, "What makes you think that? Satan isn't mentioned in this passage." That's right, Matthew gives no dignity to Satan. He gives no place to Satan here. But Satan is behind the scenes, and that's very obvious. If you go back into the upper room, you will remember that Satan appeared there and filled Judas, right? Filled Judas to do what he was going to do. And I don't know if you recall that most provocative verse in John's gospel, chapter 14, verse 30, where Jesus is in the upper room just before they left, and He said, "Hereafter, I will not talk with you much." We're not going to talk much more. Why? "For the prince of this world comes." I'm going now, is what He's saying, into conflict with Satan. I believe He knew that. . .

His supplication was so intense, verse 38 says, that it was unto death. And as I suggested to you last time, it may well have been that Jesus might have died in the garden, except for an angel from heaven that strengthened Him. The angel came and strengthened Him in the midst of this excruciating agony, which caused blood to appear on His flesh. The sorrow is just amazing. The solitariness of His lonely prayer adds to the intensity. To be so sorrowful as to be nigh unto death intensifies it. To cry out to God asking if there's another way, then to sweat, and then to sweat, as it were, great clots of blood – unimaginable. The phenomenon of sweating blood is very, very rare – very rare. It can be best explained in simplicity in this way: when a person enters into extreme anguish and sensitivity, such as our Lord here, the resulting strain could go so far as to finally cause the dilation of the subcutaneous capillaries, the capillaries just under the tissue. And as those begin to dilate under this kind of intensity, they could burst. And then the blood flowing out of those burst capillaries has to find its way out, and it does so through the sweat glands. . .

But there's a third word here that we have to consider. It's the word "sleep," because that tells us something about this scene as well. Verse 39, Jesus went away to pray the first time. He told the disciples to stay there – to stay there. He came back, verse 40, "And He found them asleep – found them asleep." Foolish – I mean they were sleeping at the moment of greatest spiritual conflict in the history of the world. They were sleeping when they should have been praying. I mean, it was obvious that when He left them and went forward to pray that He intended for them to pray where they were. He even says in verse 41, "Watch and pray." The idea was that they had much to pray about, were they so absolutely indifferent to the agonizings of Jesus Christ that they slept? That they couldn't even stay awake to pray for their own Master? Hadn't they just been told in verse 31 that they were going to be offended, and they were going to be trapped, and they were going to be scattered, and they were going to run like scared sheep? Hadn't Peter just been told that he was actually going to deny Jesus Christ three times before the cock crow? Didn't they have something to pray about when Jesus had said He was going to die, and be offered as a sacrifice, and rise again, and that it was going to happen this night? How could they possibly sleep? . . .

Oh, what weak men; indifferent to the needs of Christ, indifferent to the power of the enemy, who is going to tempt them. They are about to be utterly overwhelmed with sin. Verse 56 says they're all going to forsake Christ and flee. They'll never pass the temptation. They'll fall into sin and denial and rejection of Christ. They don't want to be associated with Him. They run. They weren't ready. And what our Lord is communicating here in this is that in all spiritual battles, the victory goes to those who are alert, because they know their weakness. They're not fools like the disciples, who said, "Oh, we would never be offended. Oh, we would never deny You. Why we would go to prison and die before we would ever do that." They put too much stock in their good intentions, and they didn't realize their weakness. The battle doesn't go to the sleepers, it goes to the vigilant. It's a tragedy to see spiritual self-confidence, which is unpreparedness.

There's a fourth word. Key word, it's the word "strength – strength." Notice verse 45; oh, this is so magnificent. After coming back the third time and saying, Are you still sleeping? He says, "Behold, look," the word means look. Did He see something? I think so. I think He saw something. What did He see? I think He saw torches. I think He saw men with swords. I think He saw Roman soldiers from Fort Antonius. I think He saw the Jewish leaders. I think He saw Judas. Down the slope of the Mount of Olives, He could see the moving of this crowd of people coming to Him. "Look, the hour is at hand, and the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinner.” What a contradiction; oh, what a humiliation, the sinless one given to sinners. “Look, look, they’re coming – you’re sleeping – they’re coming.” He had won the victory. He had won the victory – defeated the fleeing hosts of hell. He stood, covered with bloody sweat, victorious; the victor, courageously ready to face the cross. And He said, “You sleep. You’ll never survive this, you’re not ready.” He was ready. He had conquered the enemy in the strength of His Father. They had slept. . .

That brings us to the last word, and it’s the word “sequence.” . . .

Now, to conclude: what is the sequence, then, that we see in this lesson? It’s a great one. Let me give you the sequence for disaster, all right, in temptation. Here it comes. The disciples lived it out. Here’s the sequence I want you to see. It goes like this: Confidence, sleep, temptation, sin, disaster – confidence, sleep, temptation, sin, disaster. Confidence: I can handle it, I don’t need to pray. I’ll never deny the Lord. I’ll be faithful. I’m never going to get beyond the possibility where I’m strong enough to be victorious. I’m all right – confidence. Sleep follows confidence. What do you have to be vigilant about? Why bother to be alert? Why bother to watch what you see, and what you read, and what you hear, and where you go, and what you think? Just sleep. Sleep leads then to temptation, and to sin, and disaster. The disciples lived it that way.

But what about the sequence of victory? Listen to this one. Here’s the pattern we see in the Lord. It’s very different. Instead of confidence, you have humility. Amazing – Jesus humbled Himself and became dependent on God. And while the disciples were confidently saying, “We will never ever fail You,” Jesus, knowing the weakness of human existence, and knowing He was a man, even if a sinless man, knew He needed to go to God to be strengthened, and was strengthened by an angel. So where you have confidence on the disciples’ part, you have humility on His. Confidence led to sleep, humility led to what? What did Jesus do while they were asleep? Prayed – He prayed. Then came temptation, and in the temptation, obedience to the will of God, and victory. You see the sequence? And you make a choice. You make a choice in your life, either to be self- confident, sleep, end up in disaster, or in humility, fall on your knees before God in prayer for strength, and in the temptation comes obedience, and out of the obedience, victory. That’s the lesson our Lord would have us learn.

S. Lewis Johnson: The Agony in Gethsemane

The church, in its study and in its discussion of the passion of our Lord has acknowledged that there was a progress in the sufferings of our Lord. We know that the latter part of his suffering is so great that it was given a special name. In the Heidelberg catechism, it is said that he suffered all the time that he lived on earth, but especially at the end of his life. And the Christian church came to call that the paseo magna or the Great Suffering. In fact, the Lord Jesus seems to specifically support that, for he says, “With desire have I desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer.” So he himself thought of his cross as the climax of the suffering, the paseo magna, the great passion, Though the passion itself comprehends in measure all of his previous lifetime. . .

The sufferings of our Lord were the work of the Son. They were the work of the world. They were the work of Satan. But ultimately and primarily they were the work of God. And it was he who was accomplishing the redemptive sacrifice that would inaugurate the new covenant by which all who are saved have salvation. . .

Why the agony of Gethsemane? . . . You see, I don't think there is any way to explain this other than to say it was the agony of the anticipation of the divine condemnation upon sin. It was the agony of the curse of the broken law. It was the agony of becoming the sin offering. It was the agony of the contemplation of the experiencing of eternal death for us. That's the only thing that can explain this. . . He began to be sorrowful and very heavy. That word in the Greek text is a word which in its derivation means "away from home." He began to feel away from home. He began to feel something of the separation that would ultimately manifest itself fully and completely when he cried out, "My God, my God why hast Thou forsaken me?" It is the agony of being forsaken because he has become the skin offering for sinners. That's the only thing that can explain our Lord wallowing and groveling in the ground, crying out, O my Father if it be possible let this cup pass from me; nevertheless not my will but Thine be done. And if this is the only way he says in a moment, Thy will be done.

J. Ligon Duncan: The Grieved and Distressed Savior

But let me suggest to you today as we think on these verses together that Matthew is showing us this for at least three reasons. Matthew wants to show us first of all the weakness of the disciples. These disciples had just hours before, minutes before, professed that they would stay with the Lord Jesus Christ to the very end, and if necessary, would die for Him. And Matthew is going to show that not only would they not be prepared to die for Him, but they wouldn't even be able to stay awake while He prayed. The Lord Jesus is showing us the weakness of the disciples, and he's showing us the weakness of the disciples because he wants us to be mindful of our own weakness. We can be very blustery in our profession or devotion to the Lord Jesus Christ. And He wants us to be in a posture of humble dependence upon Him. So He shows us the weakness of the disciples. But that's not all. Matthew also shows us this because he wants us to see the strength and resolution of the Savior. This agony is literally incomprehensible to us. There are aspects to it which we will never understand. And yet the Lord shows us that even in the midst of this agony which Christ felt, not because He was confused about the will of God, but because He knew exactly what the will of the Father was. Even in the midst of this agony He remained entirely committed, resolute to bring about our salvation. And Matthew wants us to see that. But Matthew also wants us to see something of the agony and the isolation that Jesus was to face as He rendered satisfaction for our sins. We're seeing as it were a foretaste of Christ's cry of abandonment. His cry of dereliction on the cross when we see Him on His face before His heavenly Father in Gethsemane.

I. You will never understand Jesus' agony until you realize that His distress is not over death but judgment.

II. You will never understand Jesus' agony until you understand His aloneness.

III. You will never understand the commitment of Jesus' love unless you realize that He embraced His betrayal.

TEXT: Matthew 26:47-56

TITLE: SHOCKING BETRAYAL, SWORD-WIELDING RESISTANCE AND SHAMEFUL ARREST

BIG IDEA:

OUR RESPONSE TO UNFAIR ATTACKS SHOULD NOT BE VIOLENT OPPOSITION BUT CALM TRUST IN GOD'S SOVEREIGN PLAN

INTRODUCTION:

Richard Gardner: The spectacle that unfolds in verses 47-56 is both ludicrous and tragic.

- It is ludicrous in that the arrest party descends on Jesus like a group of commandos on a search-and-destroy mission (cf. v. 55).
- It is tragic in that this militant crowd is led by one of the twelve, namely Judas.

R. T. France: But while Jesus now has no chance of escape, the narrative nonetheless reads as if he is in charge of the situation. The contrast with his emotional prayer in the preceding pericope is striking. The Jesus whom Judas and his posse meet is now resolute, calm and authoritative. He himself makes no attempt to resist arrest, and when one of his disciples tries to defend him it is Jesus himself, not the arresting party, who puts an end to the attempt. He speaks of the supernatural resources available to him, and declares that it is his choice not to call on them, because his purpose is that the scriptures should be fulfilled. He even reprimands those who have come to arrest him for supposing that he would need to be overcome by armed force, and his challenge remains unanswered. While Matthew does not go so far as John in depicting the arresting party as recoiling in fear from Jesus' supernatural authority (John 18:5-6), his Jesus seems able to lecture them from a superior height even while he is being led away. Jesus is taken into the power of the Jerusalem authorities not because he had no choice but because this is the will of his Father, declared in the scriptures, which he has accepted as his messianic calling.

Donald Hagner: The preliminaries are over, and now the narrative moves into the sequence of events that culminates in the crucifixion of Jesus. The betrayer does his despicable deed; there is a brief attempt at resistance on the part of the disciples. But the central motif from the beginning of the final sequence, when Jesus is taken into custody by the Jewish authorities, is the fulfillment of the scriptures. From the arrest of Jesus the narrative moves immediately into his so-called trial and thence to his death. From this point on, the narrative takes on an inexorability that reflects a mysterious conjunction of human determination and divine superintendence.

David Thompson: The betrayal of Jesus Christ, which led to His crucifixion, was all part of the plan of God to fulfill prophetic scriptures that predicted that Jesus would die for the sins of Israel, and for the sins of the whole world.

David Turner: The bravery of Jesus, the treachery of Judas, the cowardice of the disciples, and the aggression of the arrest party are all in character with the respective figures. Yet the strong emphasis on God's predetermined plan balances these sinful human acts (26:2, 18, 24, 31, 39, 42, 54, 56) and provides yet another example of the scriptural pattern of the compatibility of divine sovereignty and human responsibility.

I. (:47-50) SHOCKING BETRAYAL BY JUDAS WHO ABUSED THE MESSIAH'S LOVE

A. (:47) Judas Directs the Armed Arresting Force Executing the Jewish Conspiracy

“And while He was still speaking, behold, Judas, one of the twelve, came up, accompanied by a great multitude with swords and clubs, from the chief priests and elders of the people.”

R. T. France: To describe Judas as “one of the Twelve” is hardly necessary after 10:4 and 26:14, but underlines the shocking fulfillment of Jesus’ prediction in v. 21.

Van Parunak: This is the last reference to “the twelve” in Matthew. Judas is still considered a part of it. He has not yet taken the final step of delivering the Lord to his enemies. The expression suggests that even at this point, there is still the possibility of repentance, but it is not to be.

Michael Wilkins: The most heavily armed would have been a contingent of Roman soldiers assigned by governor Pilate to the temple for security, who were authorized to carry swords (machaira), the short double-edged sword preferred in hand-to-hand combat (cf. 26:51; Eph. 6:17). Levitical temple police and personal security of the chief priests and Sanhedrin carrying clubs would have made up another large detachment in the arresting crowd.

B. (:48-49) Judas Identifies Jesus for Capture with the Kiss of Betrayal

1. (:48) Defining the Sign

“Now he who was betraying Him gave them a sign, saying, ‘Whomever I shall kiss, He is the one; seize Him.’”

D. A. Carson: The need for pointing out the right man was especially acute, not only because it was dark, but because, in a time long before photography, the faces of even great celebrities would not be nearly as widely known as today.

2. (:49) Doing the Deed

“And immediately he went to Jesus and said, ‘Hail, Rabbi!’ and kissed Him.”

Jeffrey Crabtree: With premeditated calculation (v. 48), Judas greeted Jesus with “Hail, Master” or “Greetings, Rabbi,” normally a greeting of respect, and stepped up to kiss Jesus. This was the prearranged sign between Judas and the arresting officers. Judas’ positive identification of Jesus assured that the right person would be arrested even in the darkness.

Judas, however, did not merely give the kiss of normal greeting. He kissed Jesus with a great show of affection (Greek kataphileō; Grimm’s) making the identification unmistakable. This is the word Luke used to describe the sinner woman’s kissing of Jesus’ feet (7:38, 45) in comparison to the kiss (Greek philēma) the Pharisee did not give. The affectionate kiss is what the father gave the returning prodigal (Lk. 15:20) and the Ephesian elders gave Paul when he told them they would never see him again (Acts 20:37). Judas was a hypocrite. His kiss showed how low he had sunk (Bruner 2:669).

Warren Wiersbe: It is tragic to see how Judas cheapened everything that he touched. His name means praise (Gen. 29:35), yet who would name a son “Judas” today? He used the kiss as a weapon, not as a sign of affection. In that day, it was customary for disciples to kiss their teacher. But in this case, it was not a mark of submission or respect. The Greek verbs indicate that Judas kissed Jesus repeatedly.

C. (:50a) Jesus Surrenders Voluntarily to Judas' Betrayal

“And Jesus said to him, ‘Friend, do what you have come for.’”

Albert Mohler: Jesus addresses Judas as “friend,” a title previously applied to those who abuse a privileged relationship (20:13; 22:12). Judas is violating his privileged relationship with Jesus the Messiah, abusing the love and friendship extended to him.

Leon Morris: There is a problem relating to Jesus’ next words. They may be a question or a statement, but in view of Matthew’s picture of Jesus as master of the situation it seems more likely that Jesus is telling Judas to get on with the job of betrayal and arrest, rather than inquiring why he is there (cf. Moffatt, “My man, do your errand”).

Donald Hagner: Another possible understanding, however, is to take the words quite literally as a comment of resigned disappointment in Judas: “for this you come!” (cf. the irony of Luke 22:48). It reflects at once disappointment in Judas, a further stage of resignation to the will of God that will take him to his death, and a yielding to the final act of the story (cf. R. E. Brown, “Appendix III, C” [Death of the Messiah, 1385–88] and his conclusion that the phrase is a way of indicating Jesus’ knowledge of what Judas is doing). (cf. Wilson: “Companion, the thing you are here for!” Thus too Spiegelberg: “It is this for which you are here!”; cf. Rehkopf; Eltester.)

D. (:50b) Jesus is Forcibly Taken into Custody by the Hands of Sinful Men

“Then they came and laid hands on Jesus and seized Him.”

R. T. France: The account of the actual arrest emphasizes its physical nature; the Hebraic expression “to lay hands on” is perhaps intended to echo Jesus’ words about the “hands” of people/sinners (17:22; 26:45). We are thus prepared for Jesus’ protest about the unnecessary use of force (v. 55).

II. (:51-54) SWORD-WIELDING RESISTANCE DOES NOT PROMOTE GOD’S KINGDOM AGENDA

A. (:51) Impulsive Use of the Sword to Resist Arrest

“And behold, one of those who were with Jesus reached and drew out his sword, and struck the slave of the high priest, and cut off his ear.”

Why was Peter even carrying a sword?

David Thompson: Now we may immediately notice that when some grabbed Jesus, Peter drew a sword (Christ’s disciples were armed, at least two of them—Luke 22:36-38) and Peter pulled out his sword and swung it at a man’s head, whose name was Malchus (John 18:10), and he missed and cut off his ear. I am fully convinced Peter intended to kill Malchus for laying his hand on Jesus. We may notice that the only Gospel writer who tells us which disciple this was is John. One reason for this is that John was written after Peter had already been killed. The other disciples told the story, but they protected the identity of Peter so more hostility would not be aimed at Him. Say what you want about Peter (emotional, irrational, explosive, fickle), but he was a loyal friend of Jesus Christ who, on the spur of the moment, would fight to the death for Jesus Christ.

Michael Wilkins: It is likely that Judas brought such a heavily armed contingent because they expected Jesus' disciples to resist arrest, which indeed was the reaction of at least one, whom John tells us was Simon Peter (John 18:10–11). Peter tries to defend Jesus by taking the sword he is carrying and striking Malchus, the high priest's servant. At least some of the disciples regularly carried swords, most likely for self-defense from robbers as they traveled (cf. Luke 22:36). Essenes were known to carry arms as protection against thieves.

D. A. Carson: Peter's response is psychologically convincing. After repeated warnings of defection, Peter may have felt that the crucial test of loyalty had arrived. He is magnificent and pathetic—magnificent because he rushes in to defend Jesus with characteristic courage and impetuosity, pathetic because his courage evaporates when Jesus undoes Peter's damage, forbids violence, and faces the passion without resisting.

B. (:52-54) Criticism of the Impulsive Use of the Sword

1. (:52) Unwise Approach

“Then Jesus said to him, ‘Put your sword back into its place; for all those who take up the sword shall perish by the sword.’”

Jesus seems to be commanding the situation.

Jesus is clearly not leading a political and military rebellion

The disciples were to “take up their cross” and not their swords.

Secondly, Peter's hasty use of the sword betrayed a lack of faith in the Messiah's ability to defend Himself, and in God's ability to come to His defense, should He wish to do so.

Jeffrey Crabtree: God does not rely on the sword or human might to advance His kingdom (Wilkins 858). Rather than urging resistance and before the crowd could understand and react to what Peter had just done, Jesus healed the man with the severed ear (Lk. 22:51)—His final miracle before the cross. He told Peter to sheathe his sword and warned him that such actions would bring swift death, a reference either to death in battle or to death by execution (v. 52; Blomberg 93; Gen. 9:6). He reminded Peter of His relationship to God the Father. Jesus did not need human weapons. A simple request to the Father would bring thousands of angels (v. 53).

R. T. France: But as a proverbial observation (cf. Rev 13:10) on the tendency of violence to recoil on those who perpetrate it Jesus' aphorism reflects common experience, even though not every historical example conforms to this pattern.

Physical resistance was not only wrong in principle but also unnecessary, since Jesus had far more force at his disposal, if he chose to summon it, than a few human supporters could offer.

Donald Hagner: It would be a mistake to take the saying that all who take the sword will die by the sword as a proof text for an absolute pacifism. The proverb, to be sure, discourages violence in general as an unproductive path. Peacefulness is surely a clear mark of those who belong to the kingdom of God (cf. 5:9). Violence only begets more violence. It may, however, at times be unavoidable (cf. Luke 22:36) and the lesser of two evils. In the present instance it was clearly out of place. Jesus had incalculable resources available to him if resistance had been an appropriate action. In this instance passive submission alone was consonant with the will of God.

Albert Mohler: Jesus' saying indicates that the way of the world is to assert its will on others through human power, even through violence; likewise, the way of the world is to retaliate against violence with violence. The inevitable consequence of championing violence is often a violent end. Jesus is not giving a blanket endorsement of pacifism, but he does reject the notion that God's will is advanced or should be imposed on others through violent means.

Van Parunak: He goes on to give three specific reasons not to respond to violence with violence (so Matthew Henry).

- The first is that it leads to a never-ending cycle of violence. There is no winner:
- The second motive for non-violence is that the believer's defense lies not in his own weapons, but in the Father's care, which is more than sufficient.
- [The third] -- The humbling of the Messiah was not an accident, but required by the plan of God as revealed in the OT.

2. (:53) Unnecessary Approach

“Or do you think that I cannot appeal to My Father, and He will at once put at My disposal more than twelve legions of angels?”

A full Roman legion had 6,100 foot and 726 horse soldiers in the time of Augustus. If we take Jesus literally, He's saying that at just a word, more than 81,912 angels would show up to defend Him.

Michael Wilkins: This is similar to the angelic host that surrounded Elisha, ready to come to his aide, even though his servant could not see them until his eyes were opened (1 Kings 6:17).

Donald Hagner: “Twelve” legions may be intended to correspond to the twelve tribes of Israel or to a full complement of twelve disciples.

3. (:54) Unenlightened Approach

“How then shall the Scriptures be fulfilled, that it must happen this way?”

Jeffrey Crabtree: A second reason Peter's sword was wrong was because Jesus' arrest without any resistance was part of the plan of God (vv. 54, 56; Is. 53:7; Jn. 18:11). Jesus offered Himself willingly. This seems to have been His point in verse 55 as well. He was no threat, yet His enemies treated Him as one. They arrested Him as if He were a violent criminal, a threat to society. Events moved quickly as the Jewish leaders unknowingly (Lk. 23:34; Jn. 11:51, 52; Acts 3:17, 18; 1 Cor. 2:8) fulfilled prophecy by taking steps to put to death their own Messiah (Ps. 22; Is. 52:13-53:12; Zech. 12:10; 13:7). Even the disciples fulfilled prophecy when they all ran (v. 56; vv. 31-35; Zech. 13:7).

Grant Osborne: The language of divine necessity (“it must happen”) is found in the passion predictions (16:21) and related passages (17:10; 24:6) and governs all the passion events, with fulfillment passages frequently quoted. In this passage there is no specific OT text intended but all those related to the suffering Messiah (such as Ps 22; 69; Isa 52–53; Zech 13:7).

III. (:55-56a) SHAMEFUL ARREST UNDER CLOAK OF DARKNESS BY THE ARMED ENFORCERS OF JEWISH CONSPIRATORS

A. (:55) Shameful Arresting Tactics

1. Treating Jesus Like a Dangerous Insurrectionist

*“At that time Jesus said to the multitudes,
‘Have you come out with swords and clubs to arrest Me as against a robber?’”*

Stu Weber: Turning from his confused disciples, Jesus addressed his captors, shaming those who had come in treachery and deceit to arrest an innocent man. They had had many opportunities to arrest him in the temple. He had been there teaching regularly. Jesus confronted their true motives by demonstrating that it was these hypocrites who had much to hide, coming out to this lonely place to capture him in the middle of the night, with swords and clubs. This was inappropriate and unnecessary. It was by his design that they were here to arrest him, and it was his plan to go with them to trial and to the cross.

2. Taking Him into Custody in Secretive Hypocrisy

“Every day I used to sit in the temple teaching and you did not seize Me.”

Leon Morris: Those in whose hands he now was were not interested in justice. They wanted simply to get him out of the way and were prepared to stoop to any means to bring that about. “You did not take hold of me,” he says. If they had been honest in what they were doing, they would have proceeded against him publicly. Since a criminal would hide away out of the public gaze, it was fair to arrest such an offender wherever he might be found. But there was something wrong with authorities who treated an honest religious man as though he were nothing more than a brigand.

R. T. France: Jesus’ protest over the manner of his arrest serves to underline the contrast between the Jerusalem establishment, which depends on stealth and physical force, and Jesus’ open and non-violent presentation of his claims in the temple courtyard. They have failed to silence him in public debate, so instead they have resorted to coercion, avoiding a public arrest because of their fear of crowd reaction (26:5). So they are treating him like a “bandit,” probably meaning simply a common thief (cf. its use in 21:13), though this is the term Josephus would regularly use for the violent supporters of Jewish nationalism, more generally known as the Zealots. If Matthew has the latter usage in view, its modern equivalent might be “terrorist.” In view of Jesus’ clear repudiation of the bandit image here it is ironical that he would eventually finish up crucified along with two such bandits (27:38, 44).

B. (:56a) Submission to the Fulfillment of Messianic Prophecy

“But all this has taken place that the Scriptures of the prophets may be fulfilled.”

Robert Gundry: “This whole thing” refers to Judas’s having given Jesus over to his enemies. “Has happened” indicates a past event that has a continuing effect. The rest of the statement tells the purpose of this betrayal, the purpose of fulfilling prophetic scriptures concerning Jesus’ sacrificial death. But little did Judas and those who seized Jesus know they were contributing toward that purpose. Those scriptures include at least Zechariah 13:7, quoted by Jesus in 26:31.

(:56b) – EPILOGUE – ABANDONMENT BY THE FEARFUL DISCIPLES

“Then all the disciples left Him and fled.”

Donald Hagner: This brief note about their flight poignantly recalls the disciples’ empty promise that if necessary they would die with Jesus (v. 35) and simultaneously fulfills Jesus’ prediction that they would fall away and be scattered (v. 31; cf. John 16:32).

Stu Weber: In their perplexity and confusion, the disciples deserted him and fled. In fulfillment of Jesus’ prediction (26:31-32), these men lost their nerve. They relied on human courage rather than spiritual preparation. Their downfall was their failure to follow Jesus’ advice to keep watch and remain dependent on God in prayer (26:41; cf. 24:42). They had been so distracted by their own preconceived ideas that they did not recognize Jesus’ exercise of authentic authority when they saw it. Neither did they recognize that the path to victory was through the valley of sacrifice (16:24-28).

Leon Morris: This was the last straw for the disciples. They must have been staggered by all that was going on. They had evidently had no inkling of the plot that had been laid, they were surprised that Judas led the arresting posse to Jesus, they saw Peter’s unsuccessful attempt at resistance by violence and heard Jesus’ repudiation of it, and now Jesus, instead of doing something miraculous, was reasoning calmly with the people who held him. This was no place for the followers of Jesus, and there appeared to be nothing more they could do, so they all left him and ran away. All is significant; there was not one of his intimate followers who was prepared to suffer alongside his leader. At this time of crisis they simply ran off. They left Jesus to suffer alone.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How has Jesus manifested His control in difficult times of crisis in your life when it looked like circumstances were out of control?
- 2) Does the bible teach pacificism as the best approach in all circumstances?
- 3) How important is it to study and understand Messianic prophecy?
- 4) What motivated Peter to first fight and then flee?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Richard Gardner: As illustrated below, these episodes evolve in a chiastic pattern:

- a. Judas betrays Jesus’ life
- b. Jesus accused by his enemies

c. Peter denies Jesus

b1. Jesus condemned by his enemies

a1. Judas takes his own life

Outline:

Betrayed with a Kiss, 26:47-56

Faithful Under Fire, 26:57-68

Denial Under Duress, 26:69-75

Decision for Death, 27:1-2

Consequences of Betrayal, 27:3-10

Michael Wilkins: Jesus, the “Prince of Peace.”

Matthew has demonstrated that Jesus’ life is the fulfillment of the prophecies of Isaiah concerning a messianic deliverer. But what about the “peace” that was prophesied to come when the “Prince of Peace” established his kingdom (Isa. 9:6–7)? Many Jews today disregard Jesus as the true Messiah, because he did not destroy the enemies of Israel and establish a time of worldwide peace and prosperity. Shalom is integral to the anticipated eschatological time (cf. Ps. 85:8–10; Isa. 55:12), and Ezekiel speaks of the Davidic messianic shepherd, who will make a covenant of peace, shalom, that will usher in a time of blessing and security (Ezek. 34:23–30).

Christians also live in the anticipation of the establishment of the kingdom, when Jesus will return to bring worldwide peace. But Christians also live in the reality of the new covenant peace that Jesus, the Passover lamb (1 Cor. 5:7), has brought through his work on the cross. The new covenant brings personal peace as a disciple’s alienation from God is solved through the forgiveness of sin (Rom. 5:1; Col. 1:20), but it also brought, and brings, peace between Jew and Gentile as the two become one new person in the church of Jesus Christ (Eph. 2:11–18). The new covenant enables Jesus’ disciples to be instruments of peace in this world through their message (Acts 10:36) and their lives (Rom. 12:17–21; 14:19) and enables them to have personal inward peace regardless of the circumstances of this world (Phil. 4:7).

Grant Osborne: We should learn to pray in the midst of trials as Jesus did. Jesus asks God to “remove” his cup of suffering, and it is not wrong to desire that God will refrain from taking us through certain trials and afflictions. Yet also Jesus surrenders himself to his Father’s will (vv. 39, 42) even though he knows that will mean his life. That level of faith is the model for each of us. None of us will have to go through what Jesus did, yet we can entrust ourselves to God’s sovereign will in the same way as Jesus did. The key to victorious prayer is “not as I will, but as you will.” We must maintain spiritual vigilance and remain alert lest we “enter into temptation” (v. 41). We have all felt a sadness so deep we felt we were going to die (v. 38) and asked close friends to stand by us in our time of need. Many of us have also, like Jesus, been failed by those friends. Yet he models for us a God-centered trust that can help us to rise above our problems (“on wings like eagles,” Isa 40:31) and the failures of our friends.

John MacArthur: The Traitor’s Kiss

It’s a shocking scene. It’s absolutely a shocking scene. Instead of welcoming the Son of God, instead of embracing the long-awaited Messiah, instead of falling at the feet of one who was to be worshipped as the living Christ of God, they sent a group of vigilantes, a group of soldiers, to beat Him into submission, to stab Him if need be, to take His life. And as I looked at that scene and meditated on it, thought it over in my mind, I saw in it such a vivid illustration of the wickedness of the world. The wickedness of the world is never made more manifest than it is in the world's treatment of Jesus Christ, never. If you don't think the world is wicked, then ask yourself how it can reject the most spotless, pure, and wonderful, and lovely person that ever walked on the earth? If this is not a wicked world, then tell me why it rejects the perfect one? There's never a greater illustration of the world's wickedness than this – Jew and Gentile alike, who reject Christ. Think of their wickedness. First of all, their wickedness is manifest in the fact that they are unjust – they are unjust. The world is unjust. Did they have a right to take Jesus Christ and kill Him? What crime had He done? And Pilate even later on says, “I find” – what – “no fault in this man. I wash my hands of this affair.” And Pilate was a man educated in jurisprudence and law. Christ had done nothing wrong. There was no crime. They are utterly unjust.

They are utterly unfair. They are of their father who is a murderer, John 8:44 says, the devil. Their deeds against Jesus Christ have no relationship to truth, no relationship to equity, no relationship to fairness, to rightness, to goodness, to justice. They have no ability to recognize the one who is true and right and good, and that is what marks the Christ-rejecting world in every generation. Their rejection of Jesus Christ is unjust. And listen, when the world can reject the spotless, pure, and lovely Son of God, it tells us they are wicked; because righteousness and goodness would embrace righteousness and goodness, would it not? And not only is the world unjust, but the world is mindless – the world is mindless. What did the soldiers in Rome have against Jesus Christ? What did they have against Him? Nothing, absolutely nothing. What did the priests, who were being led by the nose under the direction of the high priest and chief priests who were intimidated by Christ, what did they have against Jesus? Nothing. Do you remember that it says in John's gospel, “Many of the priests believed on Him?” What did they have against Him? Absolutely nothing. The Roman soldiers had nothing against Him. He had not done anything to offend them.

The priests, what did they have against Him? Nothing. Were they to be the ones who cared for the people of Israel? Yes. Did Jesus assist them? Yes. Did He heal the diseases of their people? Yes. Did He restore their people to spiritual life? Yes. Did He teach their people divine truth? Yes. What did they have against Him? Nothing. But they are mindless, absolutely mindless. They are caught up in the mood of the mob. It just takes one aberrational, perverted leader or two, to decide there ought to be a plot against somebody, to stir up an entire populous. They are as mindless as the people who followed Hitler, or anybody else who leads them into some kind of evil act or acts. It is the mood of the mob. They sell themselves to emotion. They hate one they do not even know. They despise what they cannot even understand. They are hirelings of the high priest. They are bribed for the sake of acceptance, for the sake of saving their reputation, for the sake of preserving the peace they imagine cannot exist unless this is done. . .

Thirdly, as I look at the wickedness of the world in coming to Christ, I have to affirm that they are cowardly – they are cowardly; a thousand men to take one Galilean – a thousand – swords, clubs, torches in the dark of night?

J. Ligon Duncan: Jesus Betrayed

William Hendriksen says that in this present paragraph we are told about three things.

1. The onslaught of the treacherous. That is, Judas the betrayer and the multitude that comes with him.
2. We're also taught about the defeat of the defenders. We see Peter and the disciples fail to restrain Jesus' arrest and eventually flee, just as He predicted.

3. And we also see the triumph of the captain. Jesus willingly embraces this betrayal. He willingly embraces this arrest that He might sacrifice Himself on our behalf.

I. The character and calmness of Jesus stand out in this sad event.

One of the things that strikes you about this passage is that Jesus is always on the high moral ground. Throughout this whole process where He is not only being betrayed, but is being dealt with illegally and unethically, He is consistently never on the same level as His wrongful persecutors. He is consistently on the high moral ground. And so His character shows through. His character was shaped by the word of God and shaped by his awareness of the providence of God. He knew that God's plan was going to be worked out. He knew that God moves in mysterious ways and that this was the plan of God, and therefore He was confident. And His calmness in the Garden of Gethsemane, in the midst of His arrest, certainly is related to those things as well. He knew the Scriptures. In fact, twice in this passage He will say, look, friend, everything that is happening right now is in fulfillment of the Scriptures. Because He knew it was in accord with the Scriptures, He was calm. He was at peace with it. He was ready to trust in God. And He was able to trust and be calm because of His trust in God's providence.

His calmness, too, was based on God's word and providence. You know, crises have a way of revealing our character. In the midst of a trial, we sometimes learn things about ourselves that we would rather not know.

II. Peter's action reveals a fundamental misunderstanding of Jesus ministry.

What's Jesus' point of saying this? To stress that it is not because God lacks the power to stop it that He is going to the cross. And it is not because Jesus lacks the ability to ask of God to spare Him that He is going to the cross. He is going to the cross because He has chosen to go to the cross. He is not a passive victim. He is the prime actor, and He has chosen to go to the cross. Jesus goes to the cross not because the Father can't stop it, not because He can't ask the Father to stop it, but because of His desire to fulfill the word of God. J.C. Ryle explains this beautifully. He says, "We see in these words" and he's talking about the words how then will the Scripture be fulfilled which says it must happen this way "the secret of His voluntary submission to His foes. He came on purpose to fulfill the types and promises of the Old Testament Scriptures, and by fulfilling them to provide salvation for the world. He came intentionally to be the true Lamb of God, the Passover lamb. He came voluntarily to be the scapegoat on whom the iniquities of the people were to be laid. His heart was set on accomplishing this great work. It could not be done without the hiding of His power for a time. To do it He became a willing sufferer. He was taken, tried, condemned and crucified entirely of His own free will."

III. Jesus proclaims the sovereignty of God and His word to His captors.

And then He goes on to announce to these same people why it is that He is going to be taken captive. Their actions, He says, are in accordance with His predictions, and they have been taken in order to fulfill the scriptures. Think of that. Jesus is saying, Judas, all my captors, temple guards, servants of the Chief Priest, Scribes and Elders of the People, Roman soldiers from the cohort of Jerusalem, you are doing just what I predicted because God decreed it before the foundation of the world. He told His prophets, His prophets wrote it in the Scripture, and I came into the world in order to fulfill that Scripture, and you are merely instruments in the hands of God. I am not being taken today against My will, He is saying. I am being taken today in accordance with the will of God which I have freely embraced.

TEXT: Matthew 26:57-68

TITLE: JESUS TAKEN BEFORE CAIAPHAS THE HIGH PRIEST

BIG IDEA:

THE UNJUST TRIAL BEFORE CAIAPHAS PROVIDES JESUS THE OPPORTUNITY TO CLEARLY AFFIRM HIS MESSIANIC IDENTITY

INTRODUCTION:

Daniel Doriani: The Jewish leaders sought Jesus' death, nothing less. To reach this goal, they needed to convict him of a capital offense. More to the point, since the Roman governor reserved the right of execution to himself, at least in Judea, they had to find Jesus guilty of a capital crime in both Jewish and Roman law. But what was Jesus' offense against Jewish law? And since he paid taxes and lived peacefully, how could the Romans condemn him? But the authorities did have Jesus in custody, so "those who had arrested Jesus took him to Caiaphas, the high priest, where the teachers of the law and the elders had assembled" (26:57). Peter, meanwhile, "followed him at a distance, right up to the courtyard of the high priest" and "sat down with the guards" (26:58).

William Barclay: The process of the trial of Jesus is not altogether easy to follow. It seems to have fallen into three parts.

1. The first part took place after the arrest in the Garden, during the night and in the high priest's house, and is described in this section.
2. The second part took place first thing in the morning, and is briefly described in Matthew 27:1-2.
3. The third part took place before Pilate, and is described in Matthew 27:11-26.

The salient question is this – was the meeting during the night an official meeting of the Sanhedrin, hastily summoned, or was it merely a preliminary examination, in order to formulate a charge, and was the meeting in the morning the official meeting of the Sanhedrin? However that question is answered, in the trial of Jesus, the Jews violated their own laws; but if the meeting in the night was a meeting of the Sanhedrin, the violation was even more extreme. On the whole, it seems that Matthew took the night meeting to be a meeting of the Sanhedrin, for in verse 59 he says that the whole Sanhedrin sought for false witness to put Jesus to death.

Craig Blomberg: There are numerous apparent illegalities in the officials' procedures. For example, Jews were not to hold trials at night or during festivals. No capital verdict could be reached in one day, and the accused should have been permitted counsel for the defense. The testimony against Jesus was too flimsy to hold up, and the procedure for calling witnesses made a shambles of the law (see esp. the Mishnaic tractate Sanhedrin).

Leon Morris: When the Romans conquered a country they normally allowed much of the local administration to continue. It obviously made things easier all around if people could continue to a large extent with the judicial institutions with which they were familiar. But the Romans had to exercise a certain caution lest their supporters in the conquered nation be removed by a judicious use of the local courts on the part of those opposed to Rome. So, while the Romans allowed the conquered peoples a good deal of latitude, the conquerors kept the death penalty in their own hands and reserved the right to take over any case at any stage they chose.

In the case of Jesus the situation was complicated by the fact that the Jews saw him as guilty of a religious crime (claiming to be the Messiah, the Son of God, and thus being a blasphemer), but the Romans, who alone had the power to impose the death sentence, would not recognize this as a crime. They could be induced to execute Jesus only by a demonstration that he had committed what they recognized as a serious offense — for example, setting himself up as a King in opposition to Caesar. In what follows Matthew shows us how the Jewish authorities came to condemn Jesus according to their own law and then how they brought a charge before the Roman governor that was not their real grievance but that would induce Pilate to crucify Jesus.

I. (:57-58) PREDETERMINED OUTCOME

A. (:57) Jesus Led to Caiaphas the High Priest Who Had Sanctioned His Seizure

“And those who had seized Jesus led Him away to Caiaphas, the high priest, where the scribes and the elders were gathered together.”

Craig Blomberg: Jesus returns with his captors to Caiaphas's house. John adds that the group first paid a courtesy call to the ex-high priest Annas (John 18:13).

Warren Wiersbe: According to Old Testament law, the high priest was to serve until death. But when the Romans took over the nation of Israel, they made the high priesthood an appointed office. This way they could be certain of having a religious leader who would cooperate with their policies. Annas served as high priest from AD 6-15, and five of his sons, as well as Caiaphas his on-in-law, succeeded him. Caiaphas was high priest from AD 18-36, but Annas was still a power behind the throne.

Grant Osborne: It is clear that Caiaphas and leaders in the Sanhedrin had sent out the temple guards and police to arrest Jesus. When he was in custody, they delivered him directly to Caiaphas

B. (:58) Peter Observing in the Courtyard of the High Priest to See the Outcome

“But Peter also was following Him at a distance as far as the courtyard of the high priest, and entered in, and sat down with the officers to see the outcome.”

II. (:59-63a) PREJUDICIAL INQUIRY

A. (:59-60a) Failed Attempts to Find Incriminating Evidence

1. (:59) Dogged Pursuit of Their Wicked Agenda

“Now the chief priests and the whole Council kept trying to obtain false testimony against Jesus, in order that they might put Him to death;”

Grant Osborne: Of the seventy members of the Sanhedrin, twenty-three were required present for a capital trial (m. Sanh. 7:1). There may have been two, an unofficial interrogation here, and an official verdict later at dawn (27:1, with the two conflated in Luke 22:66–71).

D. A. Carson: Matthew says the Sanhedrin was looking “for false evidence” (pseudomartyria, v.59, GK 6019) and obtained it from “false witnesses” (pseudomartyres, v.60). It is unlikely this means that the Sanhedrin sought liars only; if so, why not simply fabricate the evidence? Rather, the Sanhedrin, already convinced of Jesus’ guilt, went through the motions of securing evidence against him. When people hate, they readily accept false witness; and the Sanhedrin eventually heard and believed just about what it wanted. Matthew knew that Jesus was not guilty and could not be, so he describes the evidence as “false.”

2. (:60a) Denied Their Goal of Finding Anything of Substance

“and they did not find any, even though many false witnesses came forward.”

B. (:60b-63) Final Fabricated Misquoted Testimony

1. (:60b-61) Confusion Over Jesus Referring to the Temple Structure of His Body

“But later on two came forward, and said, ‘This man stated, I am able to destroy the temple of God and to rebuild it in three days.’”

Here's what He really said:

John 2:19-21 AV Jesus answered and said unto them, Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up. 20 Then said the Jews, Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days? 21 But he spake of the temple of his body.

2. (:62) Call for Jesus to Respond to This Fabricated Testimony

“And the high priest stood up and said to Him, ‘Do You make no answer? What is it that these men are testifying against You?’”

3. (:63) Calm Silence of Jesus

“But Jesus kept silent.”

III. (:63b-64) PROCLAMATION OF MESSIANIC IDENTITY

A. (:63b) Accusing Question Leveled by the High Priest

“And the high priest said to Him, ‘I adjure You by the living God, that You tell us whether You are the Christ, the Son of God.’”

Daniel Doriani: The question is not “Are you the Messiah?” The Messiah is the deliverer of Israel, but most thought the Messiah would be a talented but ordinary man—a charismatic or military leader—who would liberate Israel from Rome. To claim to be the Messiah is bold, but not blasphemous. The question is, “Do you claim to be the unique Son of God, partaking in the Lord’s deity?”

David Turner: This question and Jesus’s answer raise the key Matthean motif of Jesus’s divine sonship (Matt. 1:1, 23; 2:15; 3:17; 4:3, 6; 17:5; 28:19). Jesus first ambiguously affirms the high priest’s words (“You said it”; cf. 26:25). He continues with an unambiguous biblical citation that combines Ps. 110:1 and Dan. 7:13 to the effect that he is indeed the glorious Son of Man who will come from the right hand of Power (cf. Matt. 19:28; 24:30; 25:31; John 1:51; 1 En. 62.5). “Power” is an attribute uniquely associated with God, and it stands for God by metonymy. Blomberg (1992a: 403) points out that Matt. 26:64 is “the Christological climax of the Gospel thus far.”

B. (:64) Affirmation of His Messianic Identity by Jesus

“Jesus said to him, ‘You have said it yourself; nevertheless I tell you, hereafter you shall see the Son of Man sitting at the right hand of Power, and coming on the clouds of heaven.’”

Grant Osborne: There is an imminent and yet inaugurated (speaking of what will continue in the future) thrust, as it means Jesus will take his seat with God immediately at his death and resurrection, and in his resurrection his vindication will be immediately visible to all; yet at the same time he will be in the seat of “power” from his resurrection to the parousia and beyond (so Gundry, Brown, Hagner). Senior summarizes it well: “Jesus’ messianic identity which is recognized now (although only implicitly in the wording of his question) by the high priest will become awesomely transparent in the future.” . . .

Yet how will the leaders “see” (ὄψεσθε) all this? They will not see the parousia, but it is proleptically present in the resurrection. . . Brown makes three observations.

- (1) There is both a present and a future eschatology in Jesus and the NT on this issue (often called “inaugurated eschatology”); both his glory and his judgment are an already/not yet in force.
- (2) Jesus does not say he will glorify himself but that God will vindicate him over the leaders; they will see the beginning of this.
- (3) There is a supreme irony in their condemnation of Jesus; everything they accuse him of doing and being is actually true, and the Sanhedrin will see one thing and not realize they are seeing another. On these things Matthew is even more vivid and intense than is Mark.

Van Parunak: The Lord may mean his words not to describe what the high priest will personally recognize, but a statement about how anybody must view him from this point on. It will no longer be possible to view him as an insignificant Galilean pretender. Luz: “the only perspective remaining is the future of the judgment of the world.” Carson: “From then on they would not see him as he now stands before them but only in his capacity as undisputed King Messiah and sovereign Judge.”

Craig Blomberg: Jesus owns none of the nationalistic, anti-Roman associations which the Sanhedrin no doubt still links with “Messiah.” So he qualifies his affirmative with a strong adversative (plen) “but” and goes on to quote Dan 7:13 and Ps 110:1. He is the Christ, the Son of God, when those titles are rightly interpreted. But correct interpretation must allow for him also to be the heavenly Son of Man who occupied the most honored position in the universe, next to the very throne of God, second only to his Heavenly Father, and who will return to earth as judge of the cosmos. Jesus then will judge those who now judge him. Obviously, this kind of Messiah is far more than a human revolutionary.

Leon Morris: It was a difficult question to answer because his understanding of Messiah and that of the high priest were so different. To say either “Yes” or “No” could be misleading. So he says in effect, “That is your word, not mine” (Melinsky, “Yes, but not in the way you mean”). But the effect is, “I would not have put it that way, but since you do I cannot deny it” (cf. Rieu, “The words are yours. This much I add to them . . .”).

Stu Weber: Jesus affirmed his identity with authority—both in the boldness with which he spoke and with the authority of the Scriptures to back up his claim.

Richard Gardner: Jesus goes on then to make his own statement about his relationship to his accusers (v. 64b), a statement resembling other Son of Man sayings in the Gospel (cf. 16:27-28; 19:28; 24:29-31) drawing on imagery from Psalm 110:1 and Daniel 7:13-14. A paraphrase of Jesus' words might read: The one you are judging now will meet you later as your exalted judge from heaven! It is this claim that evokes the outburst described in verses 65-66, in which Jesus is charged with the capital offense of blasphemy (cf. Lev. 24:16). This the high priest certifies by the symbolic gesture of tearing his robes (cf. Sanh. 7:5). Following is a scene of mockery (vv. 67-68), a counterpart to the later mocking of Jesus by Roman soldiers (27:27-31). A final decision on Jesus' fate is not yet reached, however. It is suspended while the spotlight shifts to another scene to one side of the center stage.

Donald Hagner: Jesus' affirmation of being the Messiah, the Son of God (the background for the two combined titles may have been Ps 2; see Lövestam), may not yet in itself have been sufficient grounds for the high priest to regard him as blaspheming. But when Jesus adds to his answer the quoted material from Dan 7:13 and the allusion to Ps 110:2, identifying himself as that triumphant figure—and thus more than the Messiah as a merely human agent—as the one who is “given dominion and glory and kingship” whom all will serve and whose kingdom will see no end (Dan 7:13–14), the one who sits at the right hand of God (Ps 110:1), the high priest reacts to what he regards as horrifying blasphemy (cf. v. 65).

Bob Deffinbaugh: This is an incredibly powerful statement. Jesus affirms His identity. He is the Messiah. He is the Son of God. He is also the Son of Man, which means that He will return to the earth in power, to deal with His enemies and to establish justice.

These words, if believed, should have struck terror into the hearts of the Jewish religious leaders. Instead, they were taken as blasphemy, a capital offense by Jewish law (see Leviticus 24:10-16; Numbers 15:30). No one in that group paused to reflect on the implications of Jesus' claim. No one gave serious thought as to whether this claim might be true. In their minds, this was all they needed to condemn Jesus to death. And so the high priest musters all the righteous indignation he can produce, and calls for the death of Jesus.

IV. (:65-68) PERVERSION OF JUSTICE

A. (:65-66a) Vehement Charge of Blasphemy by the High Priest

“Then the high priest tore his robes, saying, ‘He has blasphemed! What further need do we have of witnesses? Behold, you have now heard the blasphemy; what do you think?’”

B. (:66b) Verdict of Death by the Sanhedrin

“They answered and said, ‘He is deserving of death!’”

C. (:67-68) Verbal and Physical Abuse of Jesus by His Captors

1. (:67) Mistreatment

“Then they spat in His face and beat Him with their fists;”

2. (:68) Mocking

“and others slapped Him, and said, ‘Prophecy to us, You Christ; who is the one who hit You?’”

Mark and Luke recorded that they blindfolded Jesus (Mark 14:65; Luke 22:64).

Grant Osborne: You can almost hear the dripping sarcasm as they contemptuously utter, “Messiah” (χριστέ). In the blindfolding (assumed by Matthew) and the call to “prophecy,” they may have been playing a cruel version of a “blind man’s bluff”-type child’s game. Three types have been noted:

- a game of tag where one shuts his eyes and the others cry “prophesy” as he gropes for them;
- a game where a player covers the eyes and then others slap as he guesses where they are;
- and one in which a blindfolded player is hit with papyrus fragments and tries to find the others.

The first and third are close to the one here.

D. A. Carson: “Prophesy” (v.68) does not here imply foretelling the future but revealing hidden knowledge (cf. 11:13): Messiah should be able to tell who hit him, even when blindfolded.

William Barclay: Even the externals of justice were forgotten, and the hostility of the Jewish authorities broke through. That meeting in the night began as a court of justice and ended in a frenzied display of hatred, in which there was no attempt to maintain even the superficialities of impartial justice.

Cf. “Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God” (a sermon written by British Colonial Christian theologian Jonathan Edwards, preached to his own congregation in Northampton, Massachusetts, to unknown effect, and again on July 8, 1741 in Enfield, Connecticut.) – here you have “God in the Hands of Angry Sinners”

Forbearance of Jesus (in not immediately striking sinners down in judgment) should lead people to repentance – but also can increase their sense of false security and their arrogance and manifestation of hatred and violence.

Donald Hagner: The mistreatment and mocking of Jesus reflect the hateful animosity of the Jewish leaders toward him. Spitting upon and striking a person (cf. the parallel 27:30 for the same deeds from the Romans) involve insult and pain. The early church soon found this treatment of Jesus to be the fulfillment of scripture (e.g., esp. the servant of Isa 50:6; 53:3, 5; cf. too Mic 5:1). The mocking includes the blindfolding of Jesus (assumed but not mentioned by Matthew; cf. Mark 14:65) and the request for him to “prophesy” (προφήτευσον), i.e., tell supernaturally, who was striking him. The address “Messiah” or “Christ,” which perhaps alludes to the confession in the trial, is, of course, used mockingly. The Messiah would be able to identify his mockers. But not for a minute did they suppose he could be what he claimed. He was for them at that moment a charlatan who deserved no respect.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What was the role of Caiaphas and the Sanhedrin in the seizure of Jesus?
- 2) What were some of the illegal and unjust procedures involved in this inquiry in the middle of the night at the house of Caiaphas?
- 3) Why was Jesus silent initially and then responded with the affirmation of His identity?

4) How could religious leaders respond with such abuse and mistreatment of Jesus?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

William Barclay: The Sanhedrin was the supreme court of the Jews. It was composed of scribes, Pharisees, Sadducees and elders of the people; it numbered seventy-one members; and it was presided over by the high priest. For a trial such as this, a quorum was twenty-three. It had certain regulations. All criminal cases must be tried during the daytime and must be completed during the daytime. Criminal cases could not be transacted during the Passover season at all. Only if the verdict was ‘not guilty’ could a case be finished on the day it was begun; otherwise a night must elapse before the pronouncement of the verdict, so that feelings of mercy might have time to arise. Further, no decision of the Sanhedrin was valid unless it met in its own meeting place, the Hall of Hewn Stone in the Temple precincts. All evidence had to be guaranteed by two witnesses separately examined and having no contact with each other. And false witness was punishable by death. The seriousness of the occasion was impressed upon any witness in a case where life was at stake.

David Turner: From Matthew’s theological standpoint, it is not ultimately the corrupt Jewish leaders or the weak Roman governor who are responsible for killing Jesus. Rather, it is God’s plan being accomplished through the sinful deeds of Jews and Gentiles alike, so that sinners from every people group might believe in Jesus the Messiah and be forgiven by the shedding of his blood (1:21; 20:28; 26:28).

Charles Swindoll: From the perspective of the Jewish authorities, the foxhunt was over. They had finally apprehended the rabble-raising rabbi of Nazareth, thanks to the cunning and conniving of one of His close associates, Judas Iscariot. But there was no time for celebrating. They had apprehended Jesus behind closed doors in the garden of Gethsemane under the cover of deep darkness. The crowds of Passover pilgrims in Jerusalem had all been asleep after the feast, so there had been no throng of curious onlookers to worry about. With the exception of Peter’s striking Malchus, the servant of the high priest (John 18:10), none of the disciples put up a fight. Instead, they all fled. And as it turned out, even malchus didn’t end up with permanent damage after all. Jesus healed him (Luke 22:51). Thanks to Judas, Jesus had been identified, confronted, and captured, essentially without incident.

All that was needed now was a swift and silent legal proceeding to make official what was obvious to the Jewish authorities: Jesus of Nazareth was a false messiah, a charlatan whose words and actions were leading many people astray. If He wasn’t dealt with expeditiously, He would rile up the common folk and likely cause a revolt, bringing Roman wrath upon the land, upon the people, and – God forbid – upon the cozy, established leadership of the priests and elders of Israel.

To prevent this worst-case scenario, then, everything had to be done quickly and quietly. The Sanhedrin needed to find Jesus guilty of blasphemy according to the Jewish Law. Then the Roman authorities would have to approve a sentence of death in order for the flame of that false prophet and false messiah to be extinguished once and for all. Sure, some corners would need to be cut and some charges trumped up. But weighing the needs of the many against the needs of the few, the end justified the means.

The result of this reasoning was a series of unjust and illegal trials intended only to bump off the falsely accused. Though Jesus was innocent from start to finish – never once proven guilty of anything punishable by even a slap on the hand – the rush to judgment couldn't be stopped. Diabolical forces rather than power-hungry priests and a corrupt council were at work behind the scenes. . .

The trial was a travesty of justice from beginning to end. And Peter observed the whole thing from outside, unwilling to stick his neck out to come to his Master's aid as a witness for the defense.

Donald Hagner: They got more than they expected from Jesus: not only his admission that he was the Messiah but the unbelievable statement, his self-confession, that he would sit at God's right hand and that they would eventually see him in his glorious parousia, coming with divine glory. From their point of view, he suffered from a severe case of megalomania. He had gone too far in associating himself with God—which no doubt also accounted for his irresponsible behavior with regard to the law and the Pharisaic tradition. The impudent man and his movement had to be stopped. And thus in their zeal to be rid of Jesus, they unknowingly set in motion events that would forever and unshakably establish that movement. For the death of Jesus—the fate they deemed he deserved—is what fundamentally establishes the church. The one they now mock in their mistaken confidence is the one before whom they will some day stand as their judge.

R. T. France: Here then is the climax of the tussle over authority which has been developing ever since Jesus arrived in Jerusalem, and it ends in a remarkable paradox, with Jesus asserting his superior God-given authority in ringing tones, but the Jerusalem leaders in fact having the upper hand in terms of the legal process and its outcome. The reader is left feeling that this is not a proper resolution of the conflict, and Jesus' words themselves direct our attention beyond the earthly judgment scene to one of heavenly authority, where those who are now his judges "will see" him as the heavenly judge. Nor is this a vision for the distant future. It will be true "from now on." So the reader is prepared for the climax when, only a few days later, the vindicated Messiah can declare that he now has "all power in heaven and on earth" (28:18); his reign at the right hand of power has begun. . .

Yet it is, paradoxically, in this setting of the apparent helplessness and defeat of Jesus that we reach the climactic statement of who he is. The setting could not be more dramatically effective. Jesus has spoken frequently of his coming confrontation with the chief priests, the elders and the scribes, those who represent the official leadership of the people of God. Now he stands before them, not in the relatively neutral territory of a crowded Court of the Gentiles but on their own ground, with no one to take his side. And here, in response to the high priest's challenge the element of secrecy concerning Jesus' messianic claim is finally discarded, and the three titles "Messiah," "Son of God" and "Son of Man" are brought together in an open self-disclosure, which then goes beyond any mere title to assert Jesus' unique place at the right hand of God.

John MacArthur: The Illegal, Unjust Trials of Jesus

The Jewish system of jurisprudence and law and judgment was predicated on one Old Testament passage, primarily, and that is Deuteronomy 16, verses 18 to 20. This is what it says: "You shall appoint for yourself judges and officers in all your towns which the Lord your God is giving you, according to your tribes, and they shall judge the people with righteous judgment. You shall not distort justice, you shall not be partial, you shall not take a bribe, for a bribe blinds the eyes of the wise and perverts the words of the righteous. Justice and only justice you shall pursue, that you may live and possess the land which the Lord your God is giving you.”

Now, the Sanhedrin in terms of criminal procedure, guaranteed to a person who was under prosecution several things. There were three primary things in relation to criminal procedure that the laws of jurisprudence upheld in the Sanhedrin guaranteed to a person. Number one: public trial – public trial. In other words, there was to be no hidden, secret, clandestine trials. Everything was to be open and exposed, so that no one could be framed and railroaded into some kind of execution or some kind of penalty without just trial taking place. The judges were always, then, under the scrutiny of the populace, who were able to see and attend and, to some extent at least, know what was going on. And courts today have maintained the same thing. Secondly, the Sanhedrin guaranteed for anyone brought in on a criminal procedure the right of self-defense. That is, there was to be a defender. There was to be someone who provided a defense for the accused. He had the right to bring in defense of himself in the mouth of other witnesses who could participate in the trial. Thirdly, no one could be convicted of anything unless convicted or proven to be guilty by two or three witnesses. . .

In the Jewish trial of Jesus Christ, and here’s the key point, they violated every single law of justice and jurisprudence known to them. They violated every single one of them willfully, so that the trial of Jesus Christ is the most unjust trial in human history. It has to be, for this court condemned to death the only truly innocent person who ever lived. . .

No public trial here, no defense, nobody to give testimony for Christ, nothing. And here they are in Caiaphas’ house, absolutely illegal. Luke 22:54 says they met in Caiaphas’ house in a large room. When He went to Annas’ house, He was in a courtyard. Those houses were large because they were very wealthy men. They would have a wall outside, you go into the wall, and there’s a courtyard there. In the case of Annas, He remained in the courtyard, but now He goes into the courtyard, and is taken into a large room adjacent to the courtyard. Out in the courtyard is a fire and some soldiers, verse 58. And Peter, who is following Him afar off, goes into the high priest’s courtyard and sits down with the guards to see the end. He wanted to see what was going to happen. He’s caught between cowardice and curiosity. He’s not brave enough to step out for Christ, but he’s concerned enough to sort of stand in the wings, and it’s in that setting that he winds up denying Jesus Christ on three occasions. . .

And since the session with Annas failed to bring a charge, they had nothing to deal with, so they had to become prosecutors. They had to invent a crime and then try it. The only thing they had was a sentence. They had to make up a crime to go with it. So everything was illegal and unjust. The time, it was night: that’s illegal. The place, the house of the high priest: illegal. The procedure: no crime. The function: prosecutor rather than judge and jury. The season: they were doing this on a feast day at the feast time, when no such thing could take place. The means: the bribery of a traitor named Judas, and no bribery was tolerated, of course, as we read in the passage in Deuteronomy 16 – and so all the illegalities of the trial before Annas are compounded, in that convening of the Sanhedrin and Caiaphas in his house. . .

He stands silent in majesty, looking into the eyes of Caiaphas, and no doubt gazing at the other men who are around Him. No need for retaliation. No need for vindication. No need for self-defense. No need to deny anything. He stands there resolutely headed for the cross, knowing this is His hour to die for the sins of the world. There's nothing for Him to defend Himself against, because there's no accusation that's been made legitimately, and so He stands there silently. And verse 63 says, "Jesus held His peace." The Greek text, "Continued silent." Which means they continued haranguing Him – Caiaphas must have continued badgering Him to say something, and He continued silent. The prophet Isaiah said when He was led to His trial, "Like a lamb before her shearers is dumb, so He opened not His mouth." He opened not His mouth. And Caiaphas knew it wasn't the silence of guilt. It was the silence of innocence. It was the silence of dignity. It was the silence of majesty. It was the silence of integrity. It was the silence of trust. . .

We have seen the illegal and unjust confrontation, convening, conspiracy, condemnation, and the conclusion. I want to show you one more thing, and this will really tell you where their hearts were – the illegal and unjust conduct. Look how they respond. This is the supreme court of Israel. Listen, people, this is the religious aristocracy of Judaism. Verse 67, "Then they spit in His face and punched Him, and others slapped Him with the palms of their hands, saying, 'Prophesy unto us, Thou Christ. Who smote You?'" This is the Jewish aristocracy. This is the high priest and the elders and the chief priests and the scribes. This is supposedly the best of all the leaders, come together to constitute the supreme court. Unbelievable. To show you how utterly possessed they were by the demons of hell, and in Luke 22:65, it says "they did many other things to blaspheme Him." Mark that. They did many other things to blaspheme Him. Listen, the blasphemer here is not Jesus. The blasphemers are all the rest of these people. Jesus claimed to be God. That's not blasphemy, that's true; spitting in the face of God, that's blasphemy – that is blasphemy of an absolutely inconceivable type. . .

And the irony of the situation is that those who misjudge Jesus will be judged rightly by Him some day. The tables will be turned. Here we find judges who are nothing but criminals, and they are and will be justly condemned. And here we find one who is said to be a criminal, who is really the innocent who becomes the judge. If you wrongly judge Jesus Christ, He won't wrongly judge you. He'll rightly judge you. Here is the damning sin, it is the sin of unbelief, it is the sin of proud, impenitent, independent, self-sufficient unbelief. It is the sin of standing apart from Christ, and thinking you can be right with God without Him; of attempting to maintain a relationship to God of my own, of by passing the mediator. I look at this scene and I'm overwhelmed at the grace of Christ. My deserved trial is enacted in His undeserved trial. My deserved sentence is enacted in His undeserved sentence. My deserved execution is carried out in His undeserved execution. My deserved condemnation is carried out in His undeserved condemnation.

S. Lewis Johnson: Christ Before Caiaphas, the Cynical Timeserver

The dictionaries define a timeserver as a person who for his own advantage deliberately surrenders his principles. That definition fits Caiaphas the Timeserver to a tee. He was the high priest of the Nation Israel, the supreme pontiff of the Nation Israel, the ruler of the nation spiritually whose duty according to the Scriptures was to keep knowledge, spiritual knowledge. He was the messenger of the Lord of hosts, the angel of the Lord of hosts, and men, if they wished to seek the law of God according to Malachi were to seek the law of God from the mouth of the high priest.

And yet Caiaphas in spite of all of his great privileges and in spite of his place of authority in the nation was a man who was as resolute and defiant and as merciless a man as existed in the nation that day. What kind of man was Caiaphas? Someone has said he was astute and unscrupulous diplomat, a wily manager of men, a master of assemblies with a fitting gift of speech; a conceiver of bold and daring policies in the hour when others waiver; a man of unflinching will in carrying them out.

If we were to try to put the character of Caiaphas into a sentence or perhaps even a word or two we would say that he was an ecclesiastic. He was the type of all of that long succession of men who have laid heavy burdens upon people interested in spiritual things and often thwarted the purpose of God by expediency. . .

The trial of the Lord Jesus falls into two parts. It is an ecclesiastical trial, and it is a civil trial. And there are three parts of each of these two trials: the ecclesiastical trial and the civil trial. In the ecclesiastical trial he appears informally before Annas. That incident is only recorded in the Gospel of John. Then there is this illegal midnight meeting before Caiaphas which is recorded here in the passage that we have read for our Scripture reading this morning, and then again the council met early in the morning after the sun came up in order to confirm the judgment that was made in the illegal midnight meeting. . .

Now I am sure that as we think about these things, it is obvious to us that one of the most important things is that we truly respond to the decision that faces us between Caiaphas and Christ. Was he a blasphemer or was he the Messiah? Caiaphas said he was a blasphemer because he claimed to be the Son of God. He said he was the Messiah. There is no halfway house between these two positions. You cannot say he was a good man.

J. Ligon Duncan: Jesus Before Caiaphas

I. Jesus' silence in the trial is a witness to its immorality and to His submission to the will of God.

II. Jesus' answer under oath is a clear and unmistakable claim to Messiahship, Lordship, and Deity

III. The Sanhedrin got the message but they chose the wrong response.

TEXT: Matthew 26:69 – 27:2

TITLE: THREE DENIALS OF PETER – ESCALATING IN INTENSITY

BIG IDEA:

DENYING ALLEGIANCE TO CHRIST BRINGS BITTER REMORSE

INTRODUCTION:

William Hendriksen: The theme “Peter’s experiences, words, and deeds during the night of Christ’s betrayal and shortly afterward” would provide material for several sermons. The “points” might be: Peter’s boast, Christ’s prediction concerning him, his boast repeated and strengthened, his failure in Gethsemane, his three denials, his bitter tears, and his restoration.

Homer Kent: The three denials occurred throughout the stages of the Jewish trials and are variously grouped by the Evangelists. The differences among the narratives argue strongly for independence of composition. Yet essential agreement can be found, and the details admit various ways of harmonization.

J. Ligon Duncan: Progression of sin:

- So first he’s overconfident.
- and then he’s underprepared.
 - He’s underprepared by watchfulness.
 - he’s underprepared in prayer.
- And then he’s compromised.

Suddenly, he’s in the company of unbelievers, and they begin challenging him on his relationship to Christ. And in the context of his overconfidence and his underpreparedness, what happens? He falls.

R. T. France: The story is told with a vivid simplicity, in three escalating scenes. The pressure builds as the first challenge comes from a single servant girl, the second from another girl now appealing to the bystanders, and the third from a group of those bystanders coming at him together. And Peter’s response escalates accordingly: first comes an evasive denial, then a direct denial on oath, and finally a much stronger response which (see below) is probably to be understood as actually uttering a curse against Jesus. There is also physical movement “further and further away from Jesus” (Davies & Allison, 3.542), in that Peter is at first in the courtyard, then moves out to its gateway, and finally (v. 75) escapes right outside. So Peter has comprehensively failed the test of loyalty, and Jesus’ prediction has been exactly fulfilled.

Richard Gardner: The scene with Peter in Caiaphas’ courtyard is presented as a subplot that unfolds during the same time that Jesus’ hearing is going on. Such a juxtaposition of scenes invites the reader to contrast the calm and courageous witness Jesus bears with the sorry way Peter conducts himself. The form of the episode is a series of three statements to Peter by others in the courtyard tying him to Jesus and the disciples. Each challenge evokes a protest from Peter denying any connection.

Grant Osborne: The Sanhedrin trial has three foci—the splendid isolation and majestic demeanor of Jesus, the opposition of the leaders to the extent that they are willing to forego legal procedure in order to condemn Jesus, and the absolute failure of Peter. Both the leaders and Peter are set in contrast to Jesus, the suffering Servant of Yahweh. The great irony is that the very reasons for which they sought to kill Jesus are the greatest truths of history; by putting Jesus to trial and death they were fulfilling God’s plan of salvation and establishing the very church they wished to eradicate from this earth.

David Turner: In many cases Scripture presents the weaker moments of its heroes (e.g., Noah, Abraham, Moses, David, Solomon). Likewise, Matthew’s narrative does not omit the inconsistencies and failures of Jesus’s disciples. Jesus’s subsequent rehabilitation of Peter (cf. John 21:15–22) is not narrated by Matthew, and so the reader is left with yet another blunt testimony to the weakness of the disciples. This is tempered somewhat by the teaching on God’s forgiveness (Matt. 12:32) and the promise that Jesus will later meet the disciples in Galilee (26:32; 28:7, 10, 16). Peter’s denial typifies the weakness of all the disciples (26:35), yet their mission will go on if they are true to the resurrected Messiah and live by his power and presence (28:18–20).

Stanley Saunders: At the palace of Caiaphas, both Jesus and Peter face trials in which oaths play a central role. Soon after this, Judas will announce to the chief priests and elders his guilt for “betraying innocent blood” (27:4) and then proceed to hang himself. The trials of Jesus and Judas end effectively in death sentences; Peter’s trial will leave him physically unscathed, but scarred with the guilt of also having betrayed Jesus. These stories also put on trial the Jewish justice system, which is more concerned with power and appearances than with people or truth. These stories portray the diverse ways the various characters—Judas, Peter, the religious authorities—deal with their guilt for betraying, deserting, and condemning Jesus to death.

I. (:69-70) FIRST DENIAL – SIMPLE DENIAL

A. (:69) Challenge

*“Now Peter was sitting outside in the courtyard, and a certain servant-girl came to him and said,
‘You too were with Jesus the Galilean.’”*

B. (:70) Denial

“But he denied it before them all, saying, ‘I do not know what you are talking about.’”

II. (:71-72) SECOND DENIAL – SWEARS AN OATH

A. (:71) Challenge

*“And when he had gone out to the gateway, another servant-girl saw him and said to those who were there,
‘This man was with Jesus of Nazareth.’”*

Donald Hagner: Peter, apparently sensing imminent personal threat and wishing to avoid any further questioning, begins to leave the courtyard (ἐξελθόντα εἰς τὸν πυλῶνα, “having gone into the entrance”) only to be encountered by another servant girl who, recognizing him, makes the same charge, which is now, however, addressed to those standing there.

Grant Osborne: Another servant woman spies him, and the pressure intensifies. The first girl's question was directed only to him, though his answer was to everyone around. This one tells all "those" in the vicinity that he is definitely one of Jesus' followers. "Of Nazareth" intensifies the slight tone of contempt in "of Galilee" in v. 69. As exemplified in John 1:46 ("Can anything good come from [Nazareth]?") it was a little-known backwater town in Galilee, and something of that is likely in her comment. In light of 2:23 ("he will be called a Nazarene"), there may also be for Matthew's readers a note of messianic identity that further defines vv. 62, 64 (see Nolland).

B. (:72) Denial

"And again he denied it with an oath, 'I do not know the man.'"

Stu Weber: An oath in Jewish culture made God a party to the assertion, calling down the judgment of God if the words spoken were false. This was an ultimate oath of denial. Peter invited God's curse on himself if he was not telling the truth when he said, I don't know the man!

Leon Morris: Now he says not only that he does not know what the girl is talking about, but that he does not know Jesus. Embarked on this course of denial he is led further into evil; the first denial involved a lie, the second time Peter perjured himself. The first was no more than a declaration that he did not know what the girl was talking about; the second was a clear repudiation of Jesus.

III. (:73-74a) THIRD DENIAL – SWEARS AND CURSES

A. (:73) Challenge

*"And a little later the bystanders came up and said to Peter,
'Surely you too are one of them; for the way you talk gives you away.'"*

B. (:74a) Denial

"Then he began to curse and swear, 'I do not know the man!'"

R. T. France: Again Peter denies, and again he uses an oath. But this time Matthew's wording goes further, and the verb "began" indicates a new element in this third denial. The verb "swear" alone would have indicated merely another oath as in v. 72, but it is preceded by katathematizō, a verb which occurs only here but is generally agreed to be synonymous with the verb used in the Marcan parallel, anathematizō, "to curse, anathematize" (and in the LXX "to devote," especially to destruction). Anathematizō elsewhere is always a transitive verb requiring a direct object to denote the person cursed; cf. Paul's use of anathema as a curse formula in 1 Cor 12:3; 16:22; Gal 1:8, 9, in each case applied to a person other than the speaker. If the verb here meant, as some versions have suggested, that Peter is putting himself under a curse if he is lying, it would require "himself" as object, as it has in Acts 21:12, 14, 21. Here, where the object is not expressed, it means that Peter is cursing someone other than himself, and the most natural sense in this context would be that he now began to curse Jesus, as a way of dissociating himself from him; this was precisely what Pliny later required those accused of being Christians to do, in order to prove their innocence (Pliny, Ep. 10.96.5; cf. also Justin, Apol. 1.31.6). Matthew and Mark, by leaving the object unexpressed, refrain from stating in so many words that Peter cursed Jesus, but it is hard to see what else the choice of these transitive verbs could be meant to convey.

Van Parunak: Whom is he cursing? We might think he's invoking a curse on himself, but that's already implied in taking an oath. Perhaps he is cursing those who are questioning him. More ominous is the suggestion that he directs his malicious speech against the Lord himself. Early in the second century, when it was a crime in the Roman empire to be a Christian, civil authorities would test a suspected believer by asking them to pray to the Roman gods, offer incense and wine to an image of the emperor, and declare a curse on Christ. Roman persecution began under Nero after the great fire of Rome in AD 64, perhaps earlier, and may have exploited such tactics. In addition, even during the life of our Lord, the Jews sought to elicit condemnation of Christ from his followers:

Joh 9:24 Then again called they the man that was blind, and said unto him, Give God the praise: we know that this man is a sinner.

Sadly, it is likely that Peter's cursing was directed at least in part against the Lord whom he had previously promised to defend.

IV. (:74b-75) COCK CROWS IN FULFILLMENT OF PROPHECY

A. (:74b) Peter's Memory Triggered

"And immediately a cock crowed."

B. (:75a) Peter's Memory Refreshed

"And Peter remembered the word which Jesus had said, 'Before a cock crows, you will deny Me three times.'"

Just as Peter would deny the Lord three times, Jesus asked Peter three times if he loved Him. John 21:17-19 AV He saith unto him the third time, Simon, [son] of Jonas, lovest thou me? Peter was grieved because he said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me? And he said unto him, Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep. 18 Verily, verily, I say unto thee, When thou wast young, thou girdedst thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest: but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry [thee] whither thou wouldest not. 19 This spake he, signifying by what death he should glorify God. And when he had spoken this, he saith unto him, Follow me.

David Turner: The rooster's crow (Derrett 1983b) after this third denial immediately and excruciatingly reminds Peter of Jesus's prediction (26:34). Peter boasted he would die before he denied Jesus, but he does not even respond truthfully to a query from a powerless servant girl. His bitter weeping as he departs may reflect not only his sorrow but also his belief that his curses will come upon him. (See Lampe 1972–73.)

C. (:75b) Peter's Remorse

"And he went out and wept bitterly."

Bitter weeping of Peter – how different from the intense distress Jesus suffered? Once again, the spirit is willing but the flesh is weak; easy to fail at moment of temptation.

Leon Morris: Matthew does not have Luke's statement that Jesus looked at Peter at this moment (Luke 22:61), but he makes it clear that the crowing of the rooster brought home to Peter the fact that what Jesus prophesied had indeed taken place. He had been so confident that he would never deny his Lord, and now he had done so three times. Matthew joins Luke in saying that Peter went outside (the courtyard was no longer a place for the heart-broken apostle) and wept bitterly. But we should understand Peter's tears as an expression of grief and repentance; by the following Sunday he was back with the followers of Jesus. It was his loyalty to Jesus, not his temporary repudiation of his leader, that showed the real Peter.

R.V.G. Tasker: At that moment a cock crowed, and the prophecy of Jesus, so lightly dismissed by Peter but a few hours before as something that could never happen, surged back to his memory to torture him with what was in truth a self-inflicted pain. He staggered out into the night and wept bitterly.

(27:1-2) POSTSCRIPT -- JESUS LED AWAY TO PILATE

A. (:1) Rubber Stamp Morning Council

“Now when morning had come, all the chief priests and the elders of the people took counsel against Jesus to put Him to death;”

Craig Blomberg: It is important to see these two verses as separate from vv. 3-10, contra the NIV section headings. Matthew 27:1-2 is actually linked more closely with the end of chap. 26 than with 27:3, but the verses can stand alone as a short passage reflecting a brief daytime reenactment by the Sanhedrin of the nighttime proceedings (cf. Luke 22:66-71). This hearing may have functioned like a “rubber stamp,” but at least it would have brought the proceedings more into conformity with the letter of the law.

B. (:2) Referring Jesus to Pilate

1. Bound Him

“and they bound Him,”

2. Led Him Away

“and led Him away,”

3. Delivered Him Up

“and delivered Him up to Pilate the governor.”

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Are we undergirding our loyalty to Jesus by remaining steadfast in spiritual vigilance and in prayer, recognizing the weakness of the flesh?
- 2) Why is there a temptation to think that we can get away with lying by denying the truth more loudly and more adamantly?
- 3) What are some key elements of the story that are omitted by Matthew but mentioned by one of the other evangelists?

4) How is Peter's remorse different from the despair of Judas?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

R. T. France: The three challenges all in different ways point out the “foreignness” of Jesus and his group in Jerusalem. The two epithets for Jesus, “the Galilean” and “the Nazorean,” mark him as a visitor from the north, and pick up the terms used by the pilgrim crowd when they introduced Jesus to the sceptical people of Jerusalem in 21:11, and Peter himself is marked out as a foreigner by the way he speaks (see on v. 73): he has got to be “one of them,” not one of us. There is, probably, an element of xenophobia in the way these Jerusalem servants react to the presence of this provincial group of troublemakers.

Albert Mohler: As Peter waits in the courtyard through the trial proceedings, his association with Jesus becomes increasingly obvious to those around him. Though Peter had courageously stayed through the early morning hours in that hostile environment, his courage deserts him when he is personally targeted. Each time he is accused of being with Jesus, his denial becomes more emphatic.

Donald Hagner: Peter's guilt is not greater than that of the other disciples who abandoned Jesus and who thus in effect also denied him. It is, of course, far more conspicuous because of the present passage. Peter is singled out, however, not merely because of his boastful claim that he would never deny Jesus even if it meant death (all the disciples spoke similarly according to v. 35) but more particularly because of his central importance in Matthew. Peter, even when he was first designated “the rock,” had been unable to face the prospect of a suffering Messiah (16:21–23), nor, we may be sure, did he relish the words then spoken by Jesus about the need for his disciples to take up their cross and to be willing to lose their lives for his sake (16:24–25). Now he had faced precisely that challenge and had failed miserably. We cannot be surprised at the bitterness of his soul at that moment. The fact that Peter, the prime apostle, the “rock” upon which Jesus promised to build his church, could exhibit this human weakness and failure should provide both a warning (cf. esp. 10:33) and encouragement to disciples of Jesus who read the Gospel of Matthew. Obviously it can never be appropriate for disciples to become overconfident in their own strength. The problem of human weakness must always be realistically faced, especially in cases when it is magnified by fear. . . . But if failure occurs, there is also the prospect of forgiveness and restoration.

Charles Swindoll: Like Peter, all of us are, in a sense, on trial. We can see ourselves intertwined in this story of pride and self-assurance, of boasting and self-confidence, of comparison with others and zealous ambition to show ourselves to be better than the rest. Let's be honest: Left to ourselves, every one of us would follow Peter in his denials. In fact, many of us have already done so numerous times in our lives. Just linger in that thought for a moment. Admit your own weakness. Weep if you must. This is the first, essential step to full recovery and restoration. Without it, we're just one more denial away from rock bottom.

J. Ligon Duncan: Peter's Denial

I. We must never forget our weakness apart from the grace of God nor the exceeding sinfulness of sin.

Then in verse 71, we see Peter, now nervous. He's been spotted once, he's very self-conscious, he's frightened about what's happening to Jesus, and he's probably frightened that some of the friends or colleagues of Malchus, the high priest's servant whose ear he had cut off, might spot him and inflict bodily harm on him. And so he begins to make his way out to the gate, and a second servant girl spots him. Maybe she's the second portress, that is, she's the one who's going to keep the gate after the first servant girl is off duty. And the first servant girl has said to her, you know, there's this man in there that looks an awful lot like one of the disciples. Take a look at him. And sure enough, she walks up to Peter in the presence of others, and she says to them, isn't this one one of the followers of Jesus of Nazareth? . . .

But this passage is also a picture of sin. It shows us what sin is. Sin is betrayal. To sin is to rebel and to betray God Himself. Yes, I know this is a peculiarly acute sin, but in the end this is a picture of all sin because God has created us all. We are all his creations, and when we sin we betray Him, the one who loves us and who made us. And that's exactly what Peter does here. He betrays his Lord. And it's a truly humbling picture to think of this disciple, who had been given so much by our Savior, turning on Him in this way. J.C. Ryle describes it. "It was a great sin. We see a man who had followed Christ for three years who had been forward in professing faith and love towards him, a man who had received boundless mercies and loving-kindnesses and had been treated by Christ as a familiar friend. We see this man denying three times in a row that he knows Jesus. It was a sin committed under circumstances of great aggravation. Peter had been warned plainly of his danger, and he had heard the warning. He had just been receiving the bread and the wine of the Lord's Supper from Jesus himself. And he had just been loudly declaring that though he died with Jesus, he would not deny him. And it was a sin committed under apparently small provocation. Two women make the remark that he was with Jesus, and then those who stood by say surely you are one of them. No threat seems to have been used, no violence to have been done. But it was enough to overthrow Peter's faith. He denies Him before them all. It's a truly humbling sight to see an apostle of Christ crumble like that." . . .

Now this passage shows us our weakness, it shows the sinfulness of sin, it shows us the pathway to sin, it shows us the unhappiness of sin, but let me say this passage also is a glorious proof of the inspiration of scripture. Now you say what in the world are you talking about now? Well, let me tell you what I'm talking about. If you were making up the key story for the foundation of a religion, you would never tell a story about how the key spokesman for that religion was a miserable failure and betrayed his master in the hour of his need. You would never make that up. And you would never record it not once, not twice, not three times, but four times in every main witness to the life of Christ. And that's what we find here. This is a full-wart's biography of Peter. God's going to show you the weakness of Christ's disciples, and in the end you're going to see the glory and the strength of Christ because of it. Because this religion is not about them, it's about Him, and what He does for them and in them. And so we must never forget our weakness apart from the grace of God or the sinfulness of sin.

II. We must never forget the pain that we have cause/cause Christ, nor the greatness and constancy of His love.

First, let's look at the suffering which Christ endured. Do you realize how Peter's denials wounded the heart of the Savior? Luke tells us explicitly what Matthew hints at. Matthew not only tells us that Jesus predicted that Peter would deny Him, Luke tells us that Jesus knew that Peter was denying Him. He was conscious in this process of what Peter was doing. The wounds that Peter inflicted by that betrayal on Jesus at that moment, I propose to you were harder wounds than the wounds that the enemies of Jesus had inflicted. I say that because the Psalmist in Psalm 55, verses 12 through 14, a thousand years before this night said some very interesting words. Look what he says. The Psalmist says “For it is not an enemy who reproaches me, then I could bear it. Nor is it one who hates me who has exalted himself against Me. Then I could hide myself from him. But it is you, a man my equal, my companion, and my familiar friend, we who had sweet fellowship together and walked in the house of God in the throng.” And can you imagine the sense of isolation which must have flooded our Lord’s soul as He saw His disciple whom He had loved and had ministered to for three years, denying that he even knew Him while He was suffering for his sins.

And it’s not just the wounds to the heart of our Savior. You see, Peter’s denial wounds the reputation of Jesus, and it exposes Him to derision. And it gives an opportunity for His enemies to be cynical about Him. Can you imagine the hay that Jesus’ enemies could have made from this cowardly act of Peter’s denial. This irreverent and cowardly behavior of Peter gives an opportunity for the enemies of Jesus to reject and discount Him. They can say, well He must not have been much of a Messiah. Look at how His disciples crumbled in the face of a couple of servant girls asking Him questions. Some Messiah He is. All His disciples abandon Him. In the hour of His need, where were they? They were protecting their own hides. Jesus, in all of His ministry, was subjected to derision because of what Peter had done. And this adds to the agony of Christ in the hour of His death.

But that’s not the last word. No, the glorious love of Christ is displayed here in contrast to Peter’s failure in the midst of this sad scene. And I’d like to point you to one thing.

Remember how Christ displayed His love to Peter. First of all, He told him ahead of time that He was going to do this. And He did it because He loved Peter, and because He had plans for Peter, and because He was not going to let go of Peter even when Peter let go of Him. Jesus told Peter twice ahead of time that he would deny Him.

Secondly, Jesus did something extremely helpful, in fact, necessary for Peter. He told Peter something which indelibly linked the crowing of the rooster with the word of Jesus. Do you remember that Jesus told Peter that before the night was out, he would deny Him three times. Before the cock crew, he would deny Him three times. So that when that cock crowed, we read in Matthew, that Peter remembered the words of Jesus. Now why did He do that? Because Jesus had already implanted in his mind the connection between the crowing of that cock and His words. You know the early church fathers said that Peter, for the rest of his life, could not hear a cock crow without his tears welling in his eyes. Jesus had implanted the link of that illustration, and it was that which reminded Peter of the thing that he needed to remember, and that was the words of Jesus Christ. But that’s not all.

Jesus’ matchless love was displayed yet again. Turn in your Bibles to Luke 22, verse 61. And as you turn there listen to this quote from William Hendriksen: “From Luke 22:61, we gather that at the very moment when the rooster crowed, someone is looking into Peter’s eyes. Jesus. Jesus is looking at Peter. When the third denial rolls off of his lips, the Savior is looking at Peter. It’s Jesus. His face likely still covered with spittle and black and blue because of the blows He has received. It seems that the Master, His trial ended, is being led across the court to His prison cell from which in a few hours He will emerge to face the Sanhedrin at daybreak.”

TEXT: Matthew 27:3-10

TITLE: AFTERMATH OF BETRAYAL – DEMISE OF JUDAS AND DISPOSITION OF BLOOD MONEY

BIG IDEA:
BETRAYAL OF JESUS PROVES TO BE A BAD DEAL FOR JUDAS

INTRODUCTION:

Leon Morris: Before moving on to the treatment of Jesus at the hands of the Romans Matthew finishes the story of Judas. He tells of that man's remorse and suicide and of the curious mental processes of the hierarchy who had not scrupled to use the money at their disposal to procure the arrest of Jesus so that he could be killed, but who did scruple to put this same money back into the temple treasury. Characteristically Matthew sees a fulfilment of prophecy in their ultimate use of the funds. The incident is found in this Gospel and in Acts 1 only. Stendahl thinks that Matthew's placing of the death of Judas at this point "indicates that he understands the decision of the Sanhedrin as the crucial one" (in v. 3 Jesus is already spoken of as "condemned").

Charles Swindoll: As Matthew's camera zooms in on the traitor, we find him in a no-man's-land. Having betrayed Jesus, he could never return to that familiar circle of disciples that had been his family for the past three years. And since he had fulfilled his usefulness to the Jewish leaders by leading the soldiers to Jesus, they wanted nothing more to do with him. Judas stood in the place of an outcast. To make matters worse, as the sun rose over Jerusalem, it suddenly dawned on him what he had done: He had betrayed the Messiah into the hands of sinners. One expositor envisions that the sight of Jesus being brutalized and hauled away "was devastating to Judas, more than even his money-hungry mind, his sordid soul, and his seared conscience could deal with. He felt remorse as he began to experience the intense, excruciating pain that is unique to profound guilt."

Donald Hagner: Did it simply dawn upon Judas that he had been responsible for the great injustice of the condemnation of a truly righteous and good man? At the same time, the narrative has an unmistakable inevitability about it. We can pity Judas, but we cannot make a hero out of him, nor alas even a believer. As the Son of Man fulfills the prophecies, so too do Judas and the Jewish priests, as they act freely out of their own unfortunate motives, unwittingly acting as instruments for the accomplishment of God's purposes and the fulfillment of scripture. In no sense are we allowed to take Judas or the Jewish authorities as representing Jews or Judaism in general, let alone "the essence of Jewishness." In such thinking lies the evil root of anti-Semitism.

R. T. France: There are perhaps three main purposes in inserting this strange pericope here.

- (a) It sets the treachery of Judas alongside the failure of Peter, and allows the reader to compare and contrast their faults and their different fates.
- (b) It narrates the fulfillment of Jesus' dire prediction about the fate of his betrayer (26:24), just as his prediction of Peter's failure (26:34) has also been precisely fulfilled.

(c) It allows Matthew to introduce the most complex and creative of his formula-quotations, to show that even in the betrayal of the Messiah and in the fate of his betrayer Scripture continues to provide the pattern, even to the most incidental details.

I. (:3-5) FINAL DEMISE OF JUDAS

A. (:3-4a) Remorse of Judas

1. (:3) Canceling the Contract

“Then when Judas, who had betrayed Him, saw that He had been condemned, he felt remorse and returned the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders,”

Jeffrey Crabtree: That he “repented” means he regretted (Greek metamelomai, to feel regret as the result of what one had done; Louw and Nida I:318) his action of handing Jesus over to the leaders. He returned the money (v. 3; 26:15). This is not the usual word for repentance (Greek metanoeō), which adds credibility to the position that Judas stopped short of real repentance.

2. (:4a) Confession of Personal Guilt and Innocence of Jesus

“saying, ‘I have sinned by betraying innocent blood.’”

Leon Morris: Judas’ remorse leads him to try to undo his pact with the chief priests. It is a futile course, however, for the cynical authorities have no interest in either Judas’ guilt (cf. Deut. 27:25) or in Jesus’ innocence. And so, with no apparent way out, Judas succumbs to despair and hangs himself (cf. 2 Sam. 17:23 for an OT incident that parallels the story of Judas).

B. (:4b) Rebuff of Judas

“But they said, ‘What is that to us? See to that yourself!’”

D. A. Carson: But their own words condemn them, for it should have been something to them. Judas has betrayed innocent blood; they have condemned innocent blood.

C. (:5) Response of Judas in Anger and Despair

1. Responding in Anger

“And he threw the pieces of silver into the sanctuary and departed;”

2. Responding in Despair

“and he went away and hanged himself.”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Peter further described Judas’ death (Acts 1:18-19) as being gruesome and stated that everyone in Jerusalem became aware of his death and the horrific details. Some interpreters assume the structure (a tree limb growing out over a precipice?) from which Judas hung himself gave way and he fell as described by Peter (Wilkins 879; Hendriksen 945).

Craig Blomberg: Judas responds in anger and despair. He hurls the money to the floor, probably in the temple treasury room (korbanas, v. 6), and goes out and kills himself. Was he inspired by the gruesome model of Ahithophel (2 Sam 17:23)? It is not possible to conclude from Judas’s actions that suicide automatically damns a person. There may be reasons why believers would take their lives when they are not fully in control of their senses (e.g., when there is a chemical imbalance in the body), but the Scriptures never commend suicide as do certain non-Christian religions. Suicide is always sinful, in violation of the Sixth Commandment (Exod 20:13), even if it can be forgiven. In Judas's case, however, there is no scriptural warrant for the sentimental notion that he was actually saved. For the Jews, a hanging would have confirmed God's curse (Deut 21:23). By emphasizing Judas's fate, Matthew provides a dire warning to his community about the possible result of apostasy.

Charles Swindoll: In his fit of remorse, Judas cast the thirty pieces of silver onto the temple floor and then hanged himself in a remote field (27:3-8). There his body remained, dangling between tree limb and ground until it decayed, became bloated, and eventually fell from the noose. Having landed on the rocky ground, it burst open, and his organs spilled out onto the earth (Acts 1:18-19). Ancient people would have considered this gruesome event as the most shameful way to die and an unthinkable way for a body to decay. In the Jewish mind, a hanged man was “accursed of God,” and if the corpse was not buried the same day, the land was considered defiled (Deut. 21:22-23). Moreover, Jews avoided cadavers at all costs. This was cursed ground. . .

In a twist of irony, the money that had been paid to Judas became the money used to buy the land where he hanged himself. What a tragic legacy for a tragic life!

Daniel Doriani: Judas has blood guilt on his mind. The law said, “Cursed is the man who accepts a bribe to kill an innocent person” (Deut. 27:25). Judas believes he is under this curse. The priests will not help him. Therefore, another law applies: to remove such blood guilt, the guilty party must pay for his crime by his own death (Num. 35:33-34). Judas took his life “in an anguished attempt to atone for his guilt.”

II. (:6-10) FINAL DISPOSITION OF BLOOD MONEY

A. (:6) Tainted Money

*“And the chief priests took the pieces of silver and said,
‘It is not lawful to put them into the temple treasury, since it is the price of blood.’”*

Jeffrey Crabtree: The chief priests concluded because the silver had been used to buy the death of a man (Jesus), it could not be placed into the temple treasury (v. 6). They thus confessed they had paid money for Jesus’ death and this was therefore tainted money (Keener, Matthew 661). The hypocrisy of the Jewish leadership is clear (v. 6). They would not break the law with improper use of blood money but they were more than willing to break the law to put Jesus to death (Keener, Background 125). The fact they spoke of its going into the treasury suggests that they might have used temple money to pay Judas.

Craig Blomberg: The chief priests remain preoccupied with the letter of the law while oblivious to its spirit. They prove totally insensitive to Judas's desperate state of mind, while still concerned with the finer points of their oral traditions about the use of his money.

B. (:7-8) Transaction for the Potter’s Field

1. (:7) Location Function

“And they counseled together and with the money bought the Potter's Field as a burial place for strangers.”

Leon Morris: The result of their deliberations was that the money was used to buy some land that they call the potter's field and that was thenceforth to be used as a cemetery for foreigners, perhaps people who were not numbered among the people of God and who made no attempt to live according to the law, more probably Jews from other lands who died while in Judea. We have no way of knowing which field was the potter's field or why it was given this name, apart, of course, from the obvious connection of some kind with a particular potter.

D. A. Carson: The potter's field, used for the burial of foreigners, probably did not belong to "the potter" (surely there was more than one potter in Jerusalem) but was a well-known place, perhaps the place where potters had long obtained their clay. If depleted, it might have been offered for sale. There are no reliable early traditions of its location, though Matthew's "to this day" shows it was well-known when he wrote. The best assumption is that it lay in the valley of Hinnom near the juncture with the Kidron.

2. (:8) Location Label

"For this reason that field has been called the Field of Blood to this day."

C. (:9-10) Tied to OT Prophecy

"Then that which was spoken through Jeremiah the prophet was fulfilled, saying, 'And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of the one whose price had been set by the sons of Israel; 10 and they gave them for the Potter's Field, as the Lord directed me.'"

Daniel Doriani: Once again, Matthew reminds us that no element of Jesus' final hours was accidental. Even minor details such as the use of the blood money find their place in God's plan to redeem his people. Matthew will never let us forget that all things happen according to the Lord's plan of redemption.

Jeffrey Crabtree: Matthew again turned to the O.T. where he found some prophetic experiences that paralleled that of Judas and Jesus (vv. 9-10). Jeremiah visited a potter (Jer. 18:3), prophesied of a future burial site in the valley of Topheth, and purchased a potter's flask (Jer. 19:1-13). Zechariah prophesied that he would be sold for thirty pieces of silver (Zech. 11:11-13). The exegetical problems are that Matthew credits Jeremiah with the prophecy that is only in Zechariah and Zechariah does not mention purchasing property with the thirty pieces of silver. The solution appears to be that Matthew quoted Zechariah but merged subject matter from both Jeremiah and Zechariah (Keener, Background 125; Evans, Matthew 501), a common way of handling multiple Scripture texts in Matthew's day (Blomberg 95). Though Matthew referred to two prophets, he only mentioned the most prominent of the two (Hendriksen 948). Mark does the same thing in his Gospel (Archer and Chirichingo 163). See Mark 1:2-3 where Mark credits Isaiah with both prophecies.

Matthew referenced Zechariah in order to parallel the corrupt leadership of Zechariah's day with the corrupt leadership of Jesus' day. In both instances, the good Shepherd was rejected by His own and sold for a pitifully cheap price; then the thirty pieces of silver were thrown back into the temple. While Jeremiah and Zechariah were neither one foretelling a future Messianic event, there were points of contact in their experiences that Matthew understood as paralleling the circumstances involving Judas, Jesus, and Jewish leadership.

Warren Wiersbe: But, why did Matthew relate this event to a prophecy in Jeremiah, when the prophecy is found in Zechariah 11:11-12? One possible solution is that his prophecy was spoken by Jeremiah (note Matt. 27:9) and became a part of the Jewish oral tradition. It was later written by Zechariah. The prophet Jeremiah definitely was involved in the purchase of a field (Jer. 32:6ff.), and also with a potter's house (Jer. 18:1ff.), and a burial ground (Jer. 19:1-12). Matthew may have been referring to these general facts as background for the specific prophecy written by Zechariah.

Leon Morris: But for our present purpose the important thing is not the precise source from which Matthew derived the words, but the fact that for this Evangelist God was causing prophecy to be fulfilled even in such a detail as the disposal of the money the Jewish leaders paid Judas to betray his Master.

David Turner: Matthew sees correspondence between the shepherd doomed to slaughter (Zech. 11:7) and Jesus. The thirty silver coins thrown to the potter in the Lord's house (Zech. 11:13) correspond to Judas's coins thrown into the temple and used to buy the potter's field. Matthew does not make up a story to fit Zechariah but reads Zechariah in light of his conviction that Jesus's passion is anticipated in biblical pattern and prediction. This concept of typological fulfillment is based on a providential view of history.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why did Judas change his mind?
- 2) How did his remorse fall short of genuine repentance?
- 3) How would you describe the hypocrisy and callousness of the religious leaders?
- 4) What is the point of the OT prophetic reference?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Donald Hagner: Matthew at this point inserts the story of Judas' remorse and suicide together with the account of the purchase of the potter's field with his thirty pieces of silver. Matthew, the only Gospel with this story, has probably included it because of the correspondence between certain elements of historical tradition concerning the end of Judas and material in Zechariah, which leads him to the last of his special formula quotations stressing fulfillment. Thus, although this story interrupts the narrative of the condemnation of Jesus, it has the desirable effect of further indicating God's sovereign control over the events having to do with the betrayal and death of Jesus (cf. 26:54, 56).

D. A. Carson: How did Matthew understand the OT texts he was quoting? The question is not easy, because the two dominant OT passages themselves can be variously explained. It appears that in Zechariah 11, the "buyers" (v.5) and the three shepherds (vv.5, 8, 17) represent Israel's leaders, who are slaughtering the sheep. God commands Zechariah to shepherd the "flock marked for slaughter" (v.7), and he tries to clean up the leadership by sacking the false shepherds. But he discovers that not only is the leadership corrupt, but the flock detests him (v.8). Thus Zechariah comes to understand the Lord's decision to have no more pity on the people of the land (v.6).

Zechariah decides to resign (11:9–10), exposing the flock to ravages. Because he has broken the contract, Zechariah cannot claim his pay (presumably from the “buyers”); but they pay him off with thirty pieces of silver (v.12). But now Yahweh tells Zechariah to throw this “handsome price at which they priced me” (probably ironical; see Notes) to the potter in the “house of the LORD,” i.e., the temple (v.13). Temple ritual required a constant supply of new vessels (cf. Lev 6:28); so a guild of potters worked somewhere in the temple precincts. Certainly Jeremiah could point to a potter as he preached and could purchase pottery somewhere near the temple (Jer 18:6; 19:1).

The purpose of Zechariah's action is uncertain. Because a yōšēr (lit., “shaper”) was both a potter and a metal worker, it may be that the money in Zechariah 11:12–13 was thrown to the yōšēr so that it would be melted down and turned into a figurine, a little “god.” The people did not want the Lord's shepherd, and so they will be saddled with a silver figurine (cf. Eze 16:17; Hos 2:8)—betrayal money, in effect, since it pays off the good shepherd, who would have kept the people true to the Lord's covenant and who has been rejected by the people. The result can only be catastrophic judgment (Zec 11:14–17).

The parallel between Zechariah 11 and Matthew 26–27 is not exact. In Zechariah, the money is paid to the good shepherd; in Matthew, it is paid to Judas and returned to the Jewish leaders. In Zechariah, the money goes directly to the “potter” in the temple; in Matthew, after being thrown into the temple, it purchases “the potter's field”—though at this point the influence of Jeremiah 19 has been introduced. Nevertheless, the central parallel is stunning: in both instances, Yahweh's shepherd is rejected by the people of Israel and valued at the price of a slave. And in both instances, the money is flung into the temple and ends up purchasing something that pollutes.

The reference to Jeremiah 19 provides equally telling parallels. The rulers have forsaken Yahweh and made Jerusalem a place of foreign gods (v.4); so the day is coming when this valley, where the prophecy is given and the potter's jar smashed, will be called the Valley of Slaughter, symbolic of the ruin of Judah and Jerusalem (vv.6–7). Similarly in Matthew, the rejection of Jesus (Yahweh) leads to a polluted field, a symbol of death and the destruction of the nation about to be buried as “foreigners.”

John MacArthur: The Traitor's Suicide

Far and away the most dominant reason [for suicide] is what we could call retribution. People take their lives to inflict upon themselves a severe punishment which they believe they should receive. They have sinned. They imagine their guilt to be irremedial. There's no remedy for it. They imagine that there's no way they can come out from under the anxiety and the pressure of their own conscience. And because they feel themselves so guilty and so wrong and they lose all sense of self-value and self-worth, their self-image is devastated, they are total failures overwhelmed by guilt, they kill themselves as a ultimate punishment, seeing death self-inflicted as a way to deal with their own guilt. A guilt-ridden conscience then probably is a dominant factor in many, many suicides. It may not be the only factor but it is a dominant factor in many suicides. The guilt that a person feels may be real guilt as a result of real sin and real wrong and real evil, or it may be artificial. It may be unreal. It may be inflicted upon them by unrealistic standards established on them by their parents or peers or even by their own desires. . .

Now Scripture obviously would infer in the case of Judas and in the case of Ahithophel, of course, that suicide was an act of an evil and deranged mind and is not a viable solution. It is a crime against God. It is a crime against self. Suicide is unacceptable. It is to rebelliously usurp sovereignty. It is to take a prerogative on oneself that belongs only to God who gives life and takes life. It is an act of sin. It is an act of unbelief. It is an act of lack of trust – lack of trust in the wisdom and purpose and plan of God. Even though it is a sin and a violation of the sixth commandment, “Thou shalt not murder,” and even though it is a violation of the sovereignty of God and a rebellious act against Him and an evidence of a lack of faith and trust, frankly in the case of Judas it seems to me to have been inevitable. It does seem to have been inevitable. . .

There’s no sense of seeking God. There’s no sense of seeking the Lord. It’s as if he sought not righteousness but relief. He sought not holiness but health. He sought not a Savior but a salve. He had feelings but there was no change in his heart about sin; there was no change in his mind about who Christ was; there was no desire for the truth; there was no belief in Jesus Christ as the Son of God and the Savior. He just wanted to get rid of his pain. He wanted to unload his guilt because he knew that he had betrayed an innocent man. And the essential wrongness of that went off in him like an explosion and created pain in every part of his being. And the blood money which he wanted so badly, the very same thing he longed for so greatly, when he finally got it, burned holes in his hands like hot lead. . .

When he went back, he didn’t just throw the silver into the hieron. He didn’t just throw it into the whole place, into the courtyard where anybody could pick it up and put it in the receptacles and use it for whatever they wanted. He didn’t just throw it in there for poor people to put in their pockets. He threw it in the naos, he went right inside to the courtyard, right inside to the court of the women where the offerings were given, he went beyond that to the door of the holy place and the Holy of Holies, and he took that money and he threw it inside the holy place, the naos. Every time that word is used in the gospels it has reference to the sanctuary itself, the inner place, the holy place. He threw it in there. Why? Charity? No. Spite. There was only group of people who could go in there. Who was it? Priests. And he was saying to them, “If you won’t take it willingly and do something with it, I’ll force you to take it and do something with it.” And he threw it into a place where only the priests could go and therefore they had to deal with it. It was an act of spite. . .

The testimony of the Sanhedrin, they can’t find anything against Him. The testimony of Judas, he can’t find anything against Him. The testimony of Pilate, He is an innocent man. The testimony of the Sanhedrin, this is blood money, the whole thing is illegal. We’ve said it; we’ve admitted it. The testimony of the whole population of Jerusalem 30 years later, it is the field of blood. Jesus died because of bribery. The whole testimony comes together. . .

You have the law, the prophets, and the Psalms. It’s the Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes all the wisdom literature, Song of Solomon, but its heading is the Psalms. The category of the prophets in rabbinic tradition, in rabbinic manuscripts, and in the Talmud is always headed by the book of Jeremiah. So to a Jew the three sections of the Old Testament would be the law, Jeremiah and the Psalms. So when the writer refers to Jeremiah, he is simply taking the name that was at the top of the prophetic roll which was Jeremiah, because his prophecy was listed first, then came the major prophets and then the minor prophets. And it’s no different than what Jesus did when He referred to a whole category of wisdom literature as the Psalms, because that is the heading on that scroll as well. So there's no contradiction. Prophecy was fulfilled.

J. Ligon Duncan: Judas' Remorse and Suicide

And what is Matthew doing? And once again he's fingering the culprits. This is where this plot started. Judas didn't think this up on his own. He had some promotion, he had some encouragement, he had some financial encouragement in this plot. And here comes the money right back to the ones who are in fact culpable in their complicity in this plot. And Judas' anguished words of confession in verse 4 serve to accent Jesus' innocence, his guiltlessness, his integrity, his impeccability. They show the perfect innocence of Christ. . .

What is Matthew showing you here? He's showing you the wickedness of the hearts of the religious leaders of the people of God. They're only concerned about carrying out their own plot. Even as Jesus' court trial highlights the judicial nature of Jesus' death. So Judas' confession highlights His innocence, and the attitude of the chief priest and elders shows their wickedness. They are the wicked ones in this circumstance. They ought to be undergoing the death penalty. You remember in Jewish law if you brought a false charge in a capital crime, you were liable to the penalty of that crime. They themselves should have been being led to the Roman cross. . .

And so what is Matthew showing you? Not only the judicial nature of Jesus death, but His perfect innocence. Everything was turned upside down. This was a kangaroo court. It was a mock trial. It was something that was a mockery of judgment, and Matthew knows that you need to know that if you're going to understand what happens to Jesus at the end of the passage. He's an innocent man.

David Thompson: There are several things we want to observe here:

- 1) There may be serious consequences to what we make a decision to do, therefore, we had better think very carefully about those consequences before we act (i.e. sell out Jesus).
- 2) Judas had money and he had his sin; but what he did not have was happiness and fulfillment.
- 3) The wages for doing that which is satanic will always be death, not life.
- 4) Remorse and regret are not the same as real repentance.
- 5) The One a sinful person needs to run to is Jesus Christ, not religious leaders.
- 6) Suicide was not the solution to Judas' problem; real repentance was the solution.

TEXT: Matthew 27:11-14

TITLE: ROMAN TRIAL -- SURPRISING SILENCE OF THE KING OF THE JEWS BEFORE PILATE

BIG IDEA:

JESUS REMAINS SILENT IN HIS TRIAL BEFORE PILATE DESPITE THE TRUMPED UP CHARGES BROUGHT BY THE SANHEDRIN

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: When we combine all four accounts of the trial, John 18:28 – 19:16 gives us the details of the dialogue between Jesus and Pilate inside the praetorium and of Pilate and the people outside, and Luke 23:6–12 tells of the interview with Herod (perhaps in the same palace, with the incident coming after Matt 27:14), while Matt 27:19 tells us of Pilate’s wife’s dream and 27:24–25 of Pilate’s claim to innocence and the people’s willingness to have Jesus’ blood on their heads. . .

At the outset, the charges are laid before Pilate by the prosecutors (here the Sanhedrin), and the leaders have by necessity twisted their own verdict from blasphemy to high treason by centering on the royal aspects of the messianic claim, thereby making Jesus “King of the Jews” (for this title see also the Magi in 2:2) to make it sound as if Jesus is plotting sedition against Rome (ironically, the very aspect he had denied). Their charge of blasphemy would satisfy a Jewish court but not a Roman court, since it would be considered a Jewish problem and of no concern to Rome.

R. T. France: While the hearing before the Sanhedrin established Jesus’ guilt in Jewish eyes and called for the death penalty, it is the Roman prefect who must actually implement that verdict, and this scene relates the formal trial and pronouncement of sentence. Yet that formal business takes up only a small part of the pericope, an apparently perfunctory examination by Pilate in vv. 11–14 and the sentencing in v. 26. The intervening verses focus not on the trial of Jesus as such but on Pilate’s abortive attempt to find a convenient way to avoid pronouncing the sentence demanded on a man he has apparently concluded is not guilty from a Roman point of view but who is clearly anathema to the Jewish establishment. The narrative will focus on the primary responsibility of the Jewish leaders and people for Jesus’ death, but Pilate does not come out of it well; first he tries to evade his official responsibility, then, despite his wife’s warning, he cynically gives orders for an admittedly guiltless man to be executed. His theatrical abdication of responsibility (v. 24) is not likely to convince anyone but himself. . .

Matthew notes three reasons for this reluctance to convict.

1. First, Pilate is apparently impressed by Jesus’ silence under interrogation: his “surprise” probably indicates a favorable impression (see below).
2. Second, he has correctly assessed that the Jewish leaders’ desire to eliminate Jesus stems not from concern for Roman law and order but from their own religio-political self-interest (v. 18).
3. And third, his wife’s dream provides a supposedly supernatural attestation to Jesus’ innocence (v. 19).

Ray Fowler: And so today we come to Jesus on trial – part two. We saw that the first trial was marked by illegal proceedings, false witnesses and distorted testimony. Sadly, the second trial doesn't fare much better. There was actually a third trial before Herod as well that we read about in the gospel of Luke (Luke 23:6-12), but Matthew doesn't even bother recording that one. The focus here is on Jesus before Pilate.

And if you were hoping that Jesus would receive justice at this second trial, you will be sorely disappointed. The whole purpose of a trial is to clear the innocent and condemn the guilty. But in this particular trial, the innocent party is condemned while the guilty person is set free.

We saw at the beginning of this chapter how the Jewish leaders bound Jesus, led him away and handed him over to Pilate, the governor. Although they proclaimed Jesus worthy of death at his first trial, they have no authority under Roman law to put him to death, so they bring him to Pilate. Remember, the first trial had a predetermined outcome because they were the ones in charge. But now Pilate's in charge, so this trial will require a little more finesse.

Albert Mohler: Pilate's suggestion that Jesus is the "king of the Jews" is an attempt to determine if Jesus is plotting treason and insurrection. Pilate asks Jesus to confirm the charge, but while Jesus' answer affirms the question, it places the responsibility back on Pilate to discern properly what the question implies. The chief priests and elders continue to accuse Jesus, but Jesus has answered Pilate's question. He recognizes that the trial is a sham, so he does not grace the charade with a reply. There is nothing more to say. Pilate has certainly heard of Jesus beforehand, but he is not prepared for the resolute silence Jesus maintains.

David Guzik: History shows us Pontius Pilate was a cruel and ruthless man, unkind to the Jews and contemptuous of almost everything but raw power. Here, he seems out of character in the way he treated Jesus. Jesus seems to have profoundly affected him.

I. (:11) GENERAL CHARGE – QUALIFIED ADMISSION

A. General Charge

“Now Jesus stood before the governor, and the governor questioned Him, saying, ‘Are You the King of the Jews?’”

B. Qualified Admission

“And Jesus said to him, ‘It is as you say.’”

Donald Hagner: The issue that concerns Pilate is whether Jesus was an insurrectionist who constituted a political threat to the Roman rule of Judea.

R. T. France: From the involvement of the crowd in most of this scene, it seems that the hearing took place in public; the bēma (see p. 1046, n. 5) was probably a raised platform in front of the governor's residence. There Jesus stands before the seated governor (v. 19), an ironic reversal of the destined position of Jesus as the seated judge of the world (25:31). . .

Jesus' reply (which, like the question, is the same in all four gospels, though John 18:37 adds "that I am a king") is affirmative but qualified, as in 26:64. Jesus would not wish to deny his kingly role as Messiah of Israel; his arrival at the city had been designed to assert it. But what Pilate would naturally construe as a political claim is for Jesus a truth at a different level. When he used the same formula, “You have said it,” in response to Caiaphas, he went on to explain how his messianic vision differed from that of the Sanhedrin (26:64). This time, however, “You say it” is not followed by any explanation of why his “kingship” is no threat to Rome (for this see John 18:33–38). To try to explain the finer points of messianic theology to a pagan administrator would no doubt have been futile (as Paul found later with Festus, Acts 25:17–20; 26:24). At any rate, Jesus has clearly decided to let matters take their course; his enigmatic “You say it” is the last word Pilate will hear him utter.

Ray Fowler: The “you” in Pilate’s question is emphatic, perhaps even a little derisive. Pilate looks at this beat-up, bound prisoner before him and asks him, “Are you the king of the Jews?” It’s an interesting question that seems to come out of nowhere for us. But obviously it was preceded by the Jewish leaders bringing their accusations against Jesus. You couldn’t bring someone to trial without an accusation.

The gospel of Luke tells us they brought three charges against Jesus. They accused him of subverting the nation, opposing payment of taxes to Caesar and claiming to be Christ, a king (Luke 23:2). Notice these are all new charges! At his first trial they accused him of blasphemy, but they know that Pilate won’t be interested in religious charges, so they bring these more politically oriented charges against him instead. Pilate focuses on the third charge, and so he asks Jesus, “Are you the king of the Jews?”

Daniel Doriani: All four Gospels record Pilate’s question and Jesus’ response: “You say [it]” (Matt. 27:11). “You” is emphatic; Pilate is the one who says this. Further, “you say [it]” implies that Jesus is not a king in the sense that Pilate thinks. In John, Jesus clarifies, “My kingdom is not of this world. If it were, my servants would fight to prevent my arrest” (John 18:36).

D. A. Carson: Matthew’s report, in which Pilate asks, “Are you the king of the Jews?” presupposes the background of Luke 23:2 and John 18:28–33. The Sanhedrin’s concern with Jesus’ “blasphemy” becomes his claim to kingship, a charge of treason with overtones of Zealot sedition, capped with a claim that Jesus refuses to pay taxes. In Roman trials, the magistrate normally heard the charges first, questioned the defendant and listened to his defense, sometimes permitted several such exchanges, and then retired with his advisers to decide on a verdict, which was then promptly carried out. The first step, the charge by the Jewish leaders, led to this particular formulation of Pilate’s question to Jesus. . .

Verse 11 is important theologically as well as historically. It stands behind the inscription on the cross (v.37) and prepares the way for Christianity, which rests on the conviction that Jesus of Nazareth, who rose from the dead, is indeed the promised Messiah, the King of the Jews—basic themes in Matthew even in the prologue. In other words, the vindicated Lord is the crucified Messiah.

II. (:12) SPECIFIC ACCUSATIONS – SURPRISING SILENCE

A. Specific Accusations

“And while He was being accused by the chief priests and elders,”

B. Surprising Silence

“He made no answer.”

Leon Morris: Now we come to the accusation that we would expect. The Jewish leaders kept accusing him (the present infinitive points to a continuous process); they could not, of course, hand a man over to the Romans without laying charges against him. Matthew does not bother to say what these charges were; he leaves his readers to reason from such facts as Jesus' admission that he was the Messiah (26:63-64) and Pilate's question whether he was a king. There is not much doubt about the nature of the Jewish accusations, and Matthew does not stay to spell them out. All the more so in that Jesus answered nothing. In all the accounts of his trial he remained silent at some stage. Matthew lets us see that he was not in the slightest concerned about the matters the members of the Sanhedrin raised. The specific allegations did not matter; they were determined to have him executed, and to refute their accusations was irrelevant. If those charges were shown to be false, they would raise others. They were not concerned with justice but with an execution. In the trial before the Sanhedrin Jesus was silent when a variety of allegations were made, but he spoke when the high priest put to him a question he was perfectly entitled to put by virtue of his office. Similarly, he responded to Pilate when the governor asked the question he was bound to ask because of his office. But when Pilate drew attention to the accusations of these Jewish officials it was another matter; he did not reply to Pilate then.

III. (:13-14) INTENSIFIED INTERROGATION – AMAZING SILENCE

A. (:13) Intensified Interrogation

“Then Pilate said to Him,

‘Do You not hear how many things they testify against You?’”

Homer Kent: Yet this silence was not taken by Pilate as admission of guilt, but as a most unusual composure, causing him to begin a series of attempts to release Jesus without antagonizing the Sanhedrin.

B. (:14) Amazing Silence

“And He did not answer him with regard to even a single charge, so that the governor was quite amazed.”

Daniel Doriani: A typical Roman hearing before a procurator included charges, the governor's questions, the prisoner's self-defense, then a verdict. But Jesus did not defend himself. He knew he had come to the time appointed for his sacrifice. Besides, it was pointless: his accusers had no interest in the truth in his case. Therefore, “when he was accused by the chief priests and the elders, he gave no answer” (Matt. 27:12). Pilate was astonished; did Jesus not hear the charges? They threatened a death sentence (27:13). Still, “Jesus made no reply, not even to a single charge—to the great amazement of the governor” (27:14). Somehow, Jesus' silence convinced Pilate that he was innocent, not guilty. Pilate saw no fault when Jesus said nothing. Perhaps we should conclude that a vigorous self-defense is not always necessary. Some accusations are simply absurd.

R. T. France: Jesus was not like other defendants, and Pilate was impressed.

David Thompson: What amazed Pilate was that Jesus did not answer one of their charges. The word “amaze” is one that means Pilate marveled, that is he considered it an amazing wonder that Jesus would listen to all of their charges and not respond. Now of course the real question is why didn't Jesus respond? Why didn't He offer a defense to Pilate? It would seem that Pilate was looking for any way to get out of condemning Christ. The reason is because Jesus had to die. He was allowing Himself to be led to the cross like a lamb to the slaughter.

Donald Hagner: The process whereby Jesus is “tried” continues toward its inexorable conclusion. Jesus now courageously faces the Roman interrogator who has the power of life or death (cf. John 19:10) in the settlement of the case. He quietly gives assent to the question whether he is the Jewish king but does not flinch in the face of his accusers’ charges. He keeps silent now, just as he did before the Jewish authorities. The dignity of that silence impresses even Pilate, who could not, however, have known that he was participating in a divine drama of such historical consequences that his own name would thereby be immortalized. Jesus’ commitment to the cross—the will of his Father—is firmly fixed. Nothing, no one, can turn Jesus away from that goal.

Ray Fowler: Pilate is stunned by Jesus’ silence. Pilate has presided over many trials. Most prisoners loudly protest their innocence, but Jesus doesn’t say a word. Charles Spurgeon comments: “He might have cleared himself of every accusation that was brought against him, but that would have left the load of guilt upon those whose place he came to take; so he answered never a word. Such silence was sublime.” (Charles Spurgeon; The Gospel of the Kingdom: An Exposition of the Gospel of Matthew)

Jesus stood silent before his accusers at his first trial, and now he does so again. He was innocent of all charges, yet he refused to defend himself. Jesus was willing to stand condemned so that you and I could be set free.

Charles Spurgeon: [Regarding what so amazed Pilate] He had seen in captured Jews the fierce courage of fanaticism; but there was no fanaticism in Christ. He had also seen in many prisoners the meanness which will do or say anything to escape from death; but he saw nothing of that about our Lord. He saw in him unusual gentleness and humility combined with majestic dignity. He beheld submission blended with innocence.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How did the Sanhedrin manifest their lack of interest in seeking justice in this case against Jesus?
- 2) What lessons do you learn as you trace the theme of the Kingship of Jesus throughout the book of Matthew?
- 3) What impressed Pilate about the demeanor and response of Jesus to these serious charges?
- 4) Why is the way Jesus remained silent before these sham accusations not necessarily a model for how we should respond if unjustly charged?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Stu Weber: Jesus the Messiah submitted to unjust conviction because of his love for us. . .

These are the last words of Jesus that Matthew recorded before Jesus' "My God, My God, why have you forsaken me?" (27:46) and his loud cry as he yielded up his spirit (27:50). We know from the other three Gospels that Jesus said more to Pilate and to those who witnessed his suffering. Matthew's purpose was to record the essential facts with little embellishment. Perhaps Matthew was also emphasizing Jesus as the silent Suffering Servant of Isaiah 53:7.

David Lose: After the narrative detour regarding Judas' tragic end, we are back to the primary story of Jesus' journey to the cross. He is now before Pilate, arguably the most powerful man in all of Palestine, for trial.

Pilate begins with what may seem a straightforward question, but one that has far reaching implications: "Are you the King of the Jews?" Jesus' answer will help Pilate discern whether this is primarily a religious squabble or one that has more political overtones. But Jesus refuses to satisfy Pilate's curiosity, employing the same strategy he had earlier: "You say so." At this non-answer, his accusers jump into the fray, but as before Jesus refuses to answer any of them. Pilate, then, prods him further, inviting him to address the charges spoken against him. And Jesus remains silent.

All of this may not seem that surprising, as Jesus has retained his rather stoic sense of self and mission ever since his anguish and resolve in Gethsemane. What strikes me, though, is that Pilate is "amazed." Why?

Perhaps because most of those who have been brought before Pilate came as terrified and beaten opponents of the empire, yet this man is unafraid. Or perhaps those Pilate usually speaks to are out for their own political gain, always seeking an advantage, and yet this one seems to desire no favor. Or maybe it's that the normal human reaction when accused of something is to defend oneself vigorously and level counter-charges at one's opponents, and yet this rabbi speaks not a word either in his defense or against his accusers.

Pilate, based on his experience with power and influence and violence, has a whole set of expectations about how Jesus should respond. Yet Jesus, acquainted instead with grace, faith, and trust, defies those expectations, remains silent in the face of his accusers, and entrusts himself to the mercy of God.

Yes, Pilate is amazed. For Jesus abides by the rules of another kingdom altogether, one Pilate cannot image but only wonder at.

J. Ligon Duncan: Jesus Before Pilate

As you look at the trial of Jesus' proceeding in verse 11 through 14, you see something of the dignity of the Lord Jesus Christ before His accusers and His judges, and you see something of the commitment of Christ to die for our sins. . .

They bring a charge that he's some short of a political revolutionary. They call Him the King of the Jews. They know that Pilate isn't going to be in the least interested in Jewish doctrinal disputes and against the God of Israel. They know that Pilate would want a political charge before he is interested in acting on this particular criminal. . .

We notice in verse 13 the calmness of Jesus. The quietness of Jesus. Pilate is stunned by the way this man reacts. He is amazed by his calmness and quietness. Pilate is used to prisoners who come into his courtroom frothing at the mouth for excuses of what they have done, with assertions that they are innocent, with a begging that they are only a part of a greater conspiracy. They were only accomplices and someone else was the chief criminal. Pilate is used to people begging for mercy and making a case for themselves, and this man stands quietly. He will not answer any of the charges that are being brought against Him by the accusers. And in fact, the only people who are frothing at the mouth are His accusers. It is a striking thing to Pilate. Have you ever been to prison before? Have you ever met a guilty man in prison before? I haven't. Everybody's innocent who's in prison. And Pilate is used to that. He's used to every criminal that comes before him has an excuse for why he's done what he's done, or he's pleading that he didn't do what he did. And so Pilate is used to this, and yet Jesus is quiet. That is very significant. . .

Again, we see a glimpse of the dignity of our Savior, in His manhood, and His complete and unequivocal commitment to die for us. Jesus' silence in His trial is not a model for how we as Christians ought to respond in a trial when we are unjustly accused. Jesus is not saying, "Now all you Christians, if you are every unjustly accused and you're in a court of criminal law, make sure and not respond to the prosecutors' accusations. Make sure and not have legal counsel. Jesus is not giving us that. Jesus is not showing how we ought to respond in the face of an unjust accusation in criminal court.

Jesus' actions are unique because He is unique. His silence is reflective of His commitment to die for you because of His love for you and His love for the Father. The Lord Jesus Christ who does not open His mouth is sending a thunderous message to you that He wanted to bear your sin. And He is sending a thunderous message that there is nothing more in the world that delights Him than doing the will of His Heavenly Father even if it means being condemned unjustly. He loved to do the will of His Heavenly Father, and it was the Father's will that He should die for the sins of His people. And, therefore, the Lord Jesus Christ was not willing to do anything that would spare Him from the torture and death which He would have to endure in order to release you from the bondage of the condemnation of sin.

John MacArthur: What Shall I Do with Jesus?

Where is the troublesome revolutionary who is a threat to Rome? Where is the tax-dodging protester who's leading the nation in an insurrection? Where is the king who is a rival to Caesar? Here is a calm serene peaceful man who is literally offering Himself without reason. Pilate knows He's innocent. And Jesus confirms it by saying nothing – absolutely nothing. He is resolute, like a sheep before her shearers, Isaiah said, is dumb. So He opened not His mouth. He would willingly go to the cross.

But what would Pilate do now? He knows He doesn't deserve to die and yet he doesn't want to irritate the crowd and create another incident. His life is on the line. His career is on the line. He's got some real problems. You see, Pilate was in a very dangerous position. Let me tell you why. When he originally came to power, he made some big mistakes. The first thing he did to make a show of power when he was appointed governor was to ride into Jerusalem with a whole entourage of soldiers to show his power. And in came the soldiers and they had these banners, these flags. And on top of the flags in brass or some kind of metal was an eagle and on top of the eagle was a molded image of Caesar. Prior governors had had the sense to remove those kinds of things because the Jews believed them to be idols – any graven image. And the Jews had left idolatry since the Babylonian captivity, they didn't tolerate it. And the other governors had been careful about that, but Pilate, wanting to show his power, came in with his whole group of soldiers, all with the image of Caesar, which of course the Romans believed to be a god. And so here was an idol in the city of Jerusalem, the holy city. The Jews rioted and protested and demanded that he take those off his banners. In a power play, he refused to do it.

After accomplishing what he wanted to in his splendorous appearance in Jerusalem, he turned to return the 60 miles to the seacoast in Caesarea where his basic operation was headquartered, and they followed him for five days, screaming and rioting and demanding – sometimes patiently, sometimes impatiently – that he remove those graven images. He refused to do it. He called a meeting of all these rioting Jews. He put them in the amphitheater, surrounded them with his soldiers and said if they didn't stop the demands, he would cut off their heads. At which point they bared their necks, pulled their heads to one side and told his soldiers to go ahead and cut off all their heads. And they called his bluff. There was no way he could do it. There was no way he could report back to Rome that he had massacred a whole bunch of defenseless Jews in an amphitheater with their necks bared.

Furthermore, it could have led to a wholesale national revolution. He couldn't have survived that situation because he was sent to keep the peace, not start a war. They called his bluff. He removed all of those images. And they were one up on him. They had him where they wanted him. A little later, he realized the need for a better water supply in Jerusalem. So he decided to build an aqueduct to bring water into the city of Jerusalem. And to do it, he took the money out of the temple treasury, money which was devoted to God. This so greatly irritated the Jews that it fomented another riot which he had to deal with by sending his soldiers into a huge crowd of people with clubs and spears and swords and at a given signal they clubbed and stabbed people to death to break up the riot.

The third and really most devastating thing that happened to Pilate was when he established a residence in the city of Jerusalem and made some shields for his soldiers, and on the shields he had engraved "Tiberius, The Emperor." Which to the Jewish people again was an emblem of a false god and they demanded that the shields be changed. And he refused to do that. And so they sent word to Tiberius. They reported him actually to Caesar that he was doing this. Caesar sent word down to get those shields changed immediately. So they have him right where they want him.

He cannot afford another message sent to Tiberius. He cannot afford another riot. He cannot afford any kind of revolution. He is really in a difficult place. He has enough of a sense of justice as a Roman and as a judge, a governor, to do what's right. But he's a coward because if he does what's right and releases Christ, he's going to have a riot on his hands. And something's going to happen and he knows that it could end up in his losing his job. And it wouldn't be unlike Tiberius to remove a governor and then execute him for his unfaithfulness.

TEXT: Matthew 27:15-26

TITLE: CRAZY CHOICE OF BARABBAS OVER JESUS – PICTURE OF SUBSTITUTIONARY ATONEMENT

BIG IDEA:

SPINELESS PILATE YIELDS TO THE DEMANDS OF THE MOB TO RELEASE BARABBAS AND DELIVER JESUS TO BE CRUCIFIED (DESPITE FINDING HIM INNOCENT)

INTRODUCTION:

Charles Swindoll: Finding himself in a precarious political situation, Pilate was seeking some way to free Jesus from the trumped-up charges of the Jewish leaders without breaking either their laws or those of Rome. He knew Jesus was innocent of everything except, perhaps, religious lunacy. Yet his experience with the stubborn rulers of the Jews in Jerusalem told Pilate that they would not be satisfied with a simple dismissal of all charges against Jesus. That could cause a riot or, worse, a report sent to Caesar saying that Pilate was providing a safe haven for treasonous claimants to the throne of Israel.

In the midst of his personal turmoil, Pilate recalled an annual custom that might just provide a way of escape from that political quagmire. Each year at Passover, the governor of Judea would release one convicted prisoner back to the people – an act of unconditional clemency as a sign of benevolence and mercy (27:15). One of the men awaiting execution that morning was a man named Barabbas, described as a “notorious prisoner” (27:16), guilty of insurrection and murder (Luke 23:25). Surely, Pilate reasoned, if the crowd was presented with a choice between freeing Barabbas or freeing Jesus, their sense of justice would prevail and Jesus would go free. Pilate also seemed to be aware of Jesus’ popularity with the people, for “he knew that because of envy [the Jewish leaders] had handed Him over” (Matt. 27:17-18).

S. Lewis Johnson: Barabbas is the only man in the Bible who could ever say in the physical sense alone, Christ died for me. He thus becomes a rather eloquent illustration of the story of the cross. . .

We know from all of the accounts of the Bible that it was the multitude, probably of the supporters of Barabbas, who was a very popular insurgent, evidently, asked Pilate for the freedom for one of the prisoners. They of course hoped that he would opt for the freedom of Barabbas—Pilate was hoping of course that the people would decide for the freedom of Jesus, and thus get him off the horns of a dilemma, because he did not really believe that Jesus was guilty. But he had on the one hand the appeal of his conscience and on the other the political appeal of expediency. And so the multitude asked him that he give them as the custom was a freeing of a prisoner. . .

Rome was very ruthless in persecuting people who sought to rebel against the establishment and in the light of the fact that they were hunted all over the land by men with superior forces, to survive it was necessary for them to do brutal things, and so Barabbas had become a hardened, brutal criminal. The Apostle Peter, preaching in Acts chapter 3 after the resurrection described or says to Israel that they chose a murderer over our Lord Jesus Christ. So we know that it was the common knowledge of the people at the time that Barabbas was not only a robber he was also a murderer. Death was his only future.

But the most striking thing about him when you put it all together is the fact that Israel preferred him to the Lord Jesus. Now it might seem hard to understand why Israel the nation would prefer a robber – an insurrectionist, a murderer, a notorious criminal – to our Lord Jesus Christ. But I don't think it's really too hard to understand. He was a daring, dashing, captivating, fierce, soul patriot. True he was a criminal, but we tend to glamorize people like that, and we glamorize them in the 20th Century as well. And while they did not have the skills of our present media, the tendency still is to glamorize the man who is the revolutionary and he was that. . .

Now Barabbas was thinking about the Roman judgment of crucifixion, and no doubt his thoughts were concentrated upon that. He was a man who was a sinner. He was guilty, and he stood condemned. A beautiful picture of course of all of us for that is what we are we are sinners. We are guilty before God, and we are therefore condemned. But Barabbas had a release. Now we read in the New Testament in the epistle that Paul wrote to the Galatians, "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law being made a curse for us." I'm sure that it did not take a great deal of thought for Barabbas to have a pretty good theory of the atonement. C. I. Scofield once said, "It's easy to see Barabbas need not have been a theologian to form a good working theory of the atonement. He knew from experience what it was to be delivered and to have someone else take his place. For you see, ultimately, the Lord Jesus is the one who hangs upon that middle cross in the place of what Barabbas thought would be his cross." . . .

Now one of the things that we stress in the atonement that our Lord Jesus has accomplished is that in our substitute in the Lord Jesus we have borne our penalty. That's why we shall not have to bear the penalty again. He has borne the penalty for sinners, and in the case of those who have believed in him, they have a substitute in whom they have borne the penalty. That's why we cannot bear the penalty. That's why the divine law has no case whatsoever against us, because our penalty has been paid in our substitute. So Barabbas beautifully illustrates that. I don't guess there's anybody who could sing with more gusto, "He breaks the power of canceled sin; he sets the prisoner free."

Now transferring that from the physical to the spiritual sense we have an illustration of the atoning work of our Lord Jesus. He was our penal substitute. And then if I may just emphasize one more thing. Barabbas, by virtue of the fact that he had been freed by the authorities and by virtue of the fact that Jesus had died under the judgment of Rome, Barabbas is a man who now stands righteous before the Roman government. "O mysterious, wonderful exchange," the ancient fathers used to say, "by which my unrighteousness becomes the unrighteousness of the Savior and the righteousness of the Savior becomes my righteousness. O mysterious, wonderful exchange." He hath made him to be sin for us him who knew no sin that we might become the righteousness of God in him, and Barabbas, as he stood looking at the cross, stood looking as a free man – one who had been delivered by the authorities and now stood right before them.

Now the second thing I think that is so important is to notice the perennial madness of the multitude's choice. Which of the two will ye that I release unto you? They said, Barabbas. And to make it even worse, in a moment after Pilate has sought to free himself from guilt, they've answered and said to Pilate, His blood be on us and on our children. Oh, the madness of the choice of the multitude that selects a Barabbas instead of a Jesus.

I. (:15-18) EXPEDIENT ATTEMPT BY PILATE TO ESCAPE CRUCIFYING JESUS

A. (:15-16) Creative Opportunity to Release a Prisoner

1. (:15) The People Get to Decide

“Now at the feast the governor was accustomed to release for the multitude any one prisoner whom they wanted.”

2. (:16) The Prisoner Who Was Obviously Guilty and Dangerous = Barabbas

“And they were holding at that time a notorious prisoner, called Barabbas.”

Daniel Doriani: Barabbas was well known because he “had committed murder” during an insurrection in the city of Jerusalem (Mark 15:7; Luke 23:19). He and at least two others had been captured. That is probably why three crosses were ready for crucifixions. By tradition, translations typically say Jesus was crucified between two thieves (KJV) or robbers (NIV, ESV), but the Greek term, plus the fact that they were executed, almost certainly means rebels or insurrectionists. The crosses were thus intended for Barabbas and his two cohorts in rebellion (Jesus ultimately took Barabbas’s place). The name Barabbas is also interesting: it means “son of the father.” Since “father” was a title given to prominent teachers, he may have been the son of a “father,” that is, a renowned teacher. This fact, taken with the murder, would account for his prominence.

Jeffrey Crabtree: Pilate picked a prisoner who was the extreme opposite of Jesus. His name was Barabbas (v. 16), which means “son of (his) father.” Some older Greek and Syriac manuscripts have “Jesus” Barabbas or “Jesus bar Abba” and some scholarship supports this reading (Metzger 68). This would mean that “Jesus” the murderer was set free while Jesus the Messiah was condemned (Hill 350). It also helps one understand why Pilate identified Jesus as “Jesus, which is called Christ” (vv. 17, 22) and not just “Jesus.”

B. (:17-18) Choice Between Barabbas and Jesus

1. (:17) The Presentation of the Choice

“When therefore they were gathered together, Pilate said to them, ‘Whom do you want me to release for you? Barabbas, or Jesus who is called Christ?’”

Leon Morris: We may conjecture that Barabbas would have had popular appeal, for Mark tells us that this man had been involved in a rebellion in which he had committed murder. It is possible that the reason why the crowd was there was that supporters of Barabbas had come together to ask for Barabbas to be the man released at the customary amnesty at Passover. For whatever reason, a crowd was assembled, and Pilate put to them the choice of Barabbas or Jesus. He may have thought that since Jesus had committed no crime and since he was said by some at least to be the Messiah, the people would want to have him set free. But perhaps he did not give sufficient consideration to the fact that a Jerusalem crowd was unlikely to call for a Galilean to be released when some of their own people were in custody. And it may well be that the Jewish leaders had made sure that some of their supporters were in the crowd urging the people to call for Barabbas. By adding that Jesus was “called Messiah,” Pilate was quietly urging a consideration that he might well have thought would weigh heavily with many in the crowd. No answer from the crowd is recorded at this point; it may be that Pilate put the alternatives before the people and allowed them time to think about it.

Bevans Welder: Now before the decision was announced, two things happened that elevate Pilate's apprehension about the people's pick.

1. First, Pilate's wife had a bad dream and sent to Pilate saying, "Have thou nothing to do with that JUST man," (Matt 27:19) [compare the dream of Abimelech in Gen 20:3, as an example].
2. Second, the chief priests and the elders stirred up the crowd to vote for Barabbas (Matt 27:20). This is a typical operation for the Jews (Acts 17:5, 13). And as is often the case, the majority was wrong and they paid the price for their error (Prov 11:21).

<https://www.my3bc.com/matthew-27-15-26-the-release-of-barabbas/>

2. (:18) The Plan Behind the Choice

Banking on the Popularity of Jesus vs. the Envy of the Religious Leaders

"For he knew that because of envy they had delivered Him up."

Leon Morris: Matthew adds that Pilate was not taken in by what the Jewish leaders were saying. He knew that it was not consideration for the security of Roman rule that had motivated them, but envy. Their envy at the success of Jesus in Jerusalem during the past few days would have reinforced their long-standing hatred of him. It may well be that Pilate knew of this and reasoned that since the leaders were jealous of Jesus' popularity with the crowd, he must have sufficient support among the people for them to ask for his release. Ordinary people would surely side with Jesus rather than with a criminal like Barabbas. So he put the choice before them, thinking that in this way he would be able to release Jesus. If the leaders were jealous of Jesus' popularity with the crowd, then the "Messiah" must have sufficient support in the crowd for them to ask for him to be set free.

D. A. Carson: What is certain is that Pilate sized up the real motivation of the Jewish leaders (v.18). They had no special loyalty to Rome; so if they were accusing Jesus of being a traitor to Rome, he must have been disturbing them for other reasons, and they were simply using Pilate to eliminate Jesus' challenge to them. Pilate, with his network of spies and informers, would be aware of how much popularity Jesus Christ enjoyed among the people at large. He could hardly have been unaware of the upsurge of acclaim the previous Sunday (21:1-16). He thought to administer a reversal to Sanhedrin policy by using the paschal amnesty to encourage the crowd to free Jesus; therefore he offered them a choice: Barabbas or Jesus "who is called Christ." The last clause may be contemptuous.

R. T. France: Pilate's perception is valid: the purpose of Jesus' trial was not to punish a breach of the law but to get rid of a man whose claims threatened the status and authority of the current Jewish leaders.

II. (:19) EXCULPATORY INPUT FROM HIS WIFE

*"And while he was sitting on the judgment seat, his wife sent to him, saying,
'Have nothing to do with that righteous Man;
for last night I suffered greatly in a dream because of Him.'"*

S. Lewis Johnson: Now there is a sudden interruption. You know, men, there are times when we should listen to our wives. Now I know what you are thinking, is there any time when we do not have to listen to them? [Laughter] But there are times when we should pay attention to them, and this is one time when Pilate should have paid attention to his wife.

Leon Morris: She gives as the reason that she had suffered many things in a dream because of him, but she gives no indication of the nature of her sufferings nor of why she felt that her husband should have no dealings with the man. But since people in antiquity took a good deal of notice of dreams, it is not surprising that Pilate's wife felt that her dream was of some importance. And if it was important, she would believe that she should lose no time in communicating the fact to her husband. She would not have been able to enter the court, but she was able to send a message to the judge. We may well feel that it is astonishing that an aristocratic Roman lady should intercede on behalf of a Galilean peasant. She had clearly been deeply impressed by her dream, and she did what she could.

R. T. France: The intervention of Pilate's wife serves only to deepen the guilt of the Jewish leaders: even a Gentile woman can see that Jesus is innocent. But of course she knew this only because God had told her, in the dream. It is God, rather than just Pilate's wife, who thus testifies to Jesus' righteousness, over against the accusations of the Jewish leaders.

Donald Hagner: The dream serves as a divine vindication of Jesus.

Grant Osborne: "With a dream" (κατ' ὄναρ) in the Passion Narrative is found only in Matthew in the NT and elsewhere the expression refers to a divine revelation to Joseph about Mary's pregnancy (1:20), to the Magi about Herod (2:12), or to Joseph about going down to Egypt (2:12–13) and returning (2:19). We are certainly to take the dream as a message from God.

Robert Gundry: the accent falls on her description of Jesus as "righteous"—not just innocent (guiltless), but righteous (positively good as well as guiltless [compare 23:35]). So Jesus appears as the example par excellence of the righteousness which surpasses that of the scholars and Pharisees and without which no one will enter the kingdom of heaven (5:20).

William Hendriksen: Did this woman become a Jewish proselyte and afterward a Christian? The Coptic church honors her memory; the Greek church includes her name in the calendar of saints. But such honors prove nothing.

III. (:20-23) EXCHANGE WITH THE MULTITUDE REGARDING THEIR DECISION

A. (:20) Persuasive Efforts of the Religious Leaders

"But the chief priests and the elders persuaded the multitudes to ask for Barabbas, and to put Jesus to death."

Leon Morris: The crowd was not left to make up its mind by itself. The crowd never is. There are always people who try to manipulate public opinion, and in this case they were the chief priests and the elders, the Jewish leaders who had brought the accusation against Jesus. There was no doubt which answer they wanted. Matthew gives no indication as to the methods employed to convince the crowds, but tells his readers that they were successful. The crowds were persuaded.

B. (:21) Persistent Response of the Multitude

"But the governor answered and said to them, 'Which of the two do you want me to release for you?'"

And they said, 'Barabbas.'"

Charles Swindoll: Talk about being impaled on the horns of a dilemma! In one ear he started to hear murmurs of “Crucify Him” from the crowd as the religious leaders stirred them up, while in the other his wife was imploring him to show mercy. Like the corrupt politician he was, Pilate chose neutrality when he should have followed his conscience, the laws of justice, and the advice of his wife by letting Jesus free. Instead, he turned to the riled-up crowd and asked them to answer his question: “Which of the two do you want me to release for you?” (27:21).

C. (:22) Punishment of Jesus Unanimously Affirmed

*“Pilate said to them, ‘Then what shall I do with Jesus who is called Christ?’
They all said, ‘Let Him be crucified!’”*

Daniel Doriani: The call for crucifixion fit the godless goal of the priests. They wanted to kill Jesus, but a crucifixion would also discredit him. The law says “anyone who is hung on a tree is under God’s curse” (Deut. 21:23). The priests will be pleased because such a death implies that Jesus is under God’s curse. More important, the Father will be pleased, because by this dreadful death Jesus fulfilled his purpose and bore sin’s curse for us.

David Turner: Jesus’s popularity with the crowd has evaporated (21:9, 11, 26; 26:5), probably because the crowd’s hope that Jesus was a political-military Messiah was dashed by his arrest. Jesus’s messianic credentials have now been discredited. This crowd may be composed of Jerusalem residents instead of the Passover pilgrims who had praised Jesus when he entered Jerusalem (Blomberg 1992a: 412).

D. (:23) Perplexity of Pilate in Light of Jesus’ Innocence

*“And he said, ‘Why, what evil has He done?’
But they kept shouting all the more, saying, ‘Let Him be crucified!’”*

Stu Weber: Pilate attempted to reason with the crowd. Matthew’s choice of the Greek word phemi (“declare, say”) implied that Pilate’s questions were more like assertions, defending Jesus’ innocence, than attempts to draw answers from the people: What crime has he committed? But Pilate’s persistent pleas for reason were drowned out by the crowd’s louder and more persistent cries: Crucify him! The governor had lost control of the situation. His weakness and the mob tendencies of the crowd were playing into the hands of the Jewish leaders.

Robert Gundry: Asking what crime Jesus had committed shows that the governor has accepted his wife’s description of Jesus as “righteous.” The crowds’ repeating “He’s to be crucified” rather than answering with the citation of a crime confirms that description. “Were yelling vehemently” substitutes decibels and repetition for evidence.

D. Marion Clark: What happened? It seems a stretch that the religious leaders in a short period of time could persuade the crowd to turn against a man that many believed to be a prophet of God. How could these leaders who had tried to keep the crowd from knowing what they were doing, suddenly turn into persuasive salesmen? To ask the question yet another way, how could the crowd go from shouting, “Hosanna to the Son of David! Blessed is he who comes in the name of the Lord!” a few days earlier, to shouting, “Let him be crucified!”?

It is not the same crowd. During Passover, Jerusalem's population grows from a few thousand to two or three hundred thousand. As Jesus entered into Jerusalem, he would have been part of a stream of thousands entering into the city. And though he did receive attention by many people, nevertheless, it would be a small number in comparison to the mass of humanity crowded in and about Jerusalem.

This crowd before Pilate is not likely to be large. It would be made up most of the following. There would be those who have business with Pilate. They have favors to ask, complaints to make, business to transact. It is likely that a number of them are seeking release of family members and friends who are prisoners. Perhaps they hope to take advantage of the governor's custom of releasing a prisoner. Maybe even Barabbas has his advocates. He most likely was part of a rebel movement. And then there were those whom the religious leaders had gathered. Remember, during their trial, they had gathered false witnesses. These same people very well could have joined the procession, especially if the leaders needed to call on them for testimony before Pilate.

The result is that the majority of the crowd present are as likely to be against or indifferent to Jesus as being for him. At least his strongest advocates would not be there. Where would they be? Most would be at the temple. That is the focal point of the pilgrims. Others would be at market or in their residences. Few respected Jews would be hanging out in the Roman governor's courtyard. The point of all this is to say that the leaders did not have much persuading to do. What they really needed to do was to coach the crowd, which they do well.

https://thirdmill.org/articles/dm_clark/dm_clark.mat27.15_26.html

IV. (:24-25) ESCAPE FROM ACCOUNTABILITY SOUGHT BY PILATE

A. (:24) Washing His Hands of Personal Accountability

“And when Pilate saw that he was accomplishing nothing, but rather that a riot was starting, he took water and washed his hands in front of the multitude, saying, ‘I am innocent of this Man's blood; see to that yourselves.’”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Pilate could see that a “tumult” or uprising or riot was beginning. In order to keep peace he acquiesced and tried to pass off the responsibility for shedding innocent blood. He publicly washed his hands to demonstrate that he wanted no part in Jesus’ death (v. 24). Clearly, he believed Jesus should not be killed, but it is also clear he did not have the courage his position as governor and judge needed. He was responsible to protect the innocent. Instead, he gave official approval of Jesus’ death and then denied responsibility. Pilate’s statement, “See to it yourselves” reminds the reader of the chief priests and elders’ words to Judas (v. 4; Carson, Matthew 571).

Leon Morris: He clearly regarded Jesus’ death as the crime of murder, and equally clearly he did not wish to be held responsible for it. In this, of course, he was mistaken. He did not have the primary responsibility (that lay with the Jewish leaders). But in the last resort it was Pilate who said “Crucify” or “Release,” and there was no way he could avoid responsibility for that. The picture we get is that of a mob out of control and baying for blood, and in that emotional atmosphere a governor who was not thinking clearly and who was ready to take the easy way out. He tried to evade accountability for a decision that in the last resort was his and his alone. “You see to it,” like the hand-washing, is an attempt to evade a responsibility that could not be shrugged off. The very similar words the Jewish leaders spoke to Judas (v. 4) did not exonerate the chief priests, and these words do not exonerate Pilate.

Richard Gardner: Concluding the trial scene is Pilate's gesture of washing his hands to absolve himself of responsibility for killing the innocent. It is a strange twist to the story, since the rite described is based on an OT practice rather than Roman judicial custom (cf. Deut. 21:1-9). What is strange from a historical perspective, however, creates rich irony from a literary and religious standpoint. The pagan Pilate acts like a good Israelite to separate himself from a deed that violates covenant justice, while the people of the covenant eagerly embrace responsibility for this deed: His blood be on us and on our children (v. 25).

B. (:25) Transferring Accountability to the Jewish People

*“And all the people answered and said,
‘His blood be on us and on our children!’”*

Donald Hagner: As for the responsibility for the death of Jesus, theologically there is only one possible answer: it is sin, the universal malady of all human beings, that drives Jesus to the cross. The crucifixion is in this sense a piece of the autobiography of every man and woman ever to walk this earth. It is “I” who am guilty of crucifying Jesus.

Leon Morris: This verse has been greatly misused throughout the centuries, being made a proof text to justify all manner of horrific practices against the Jews. But we should bear in mind that this was no more than a thoughtless assumption of responsibility by an unruly mob. They had no authority to commit their nation for the evil thing that they were doing. And even if they could do this, they could not bind God to punish subsequent generations of the chosen people. Evils have been perpetrated against the Jews through the centuries, and in some places they still are. But Scripture gives us no justification for any such thing. It is relevant that all the first Christians were Jews; the writer of this Gospel cannot possibly have meant that punishment for this mob's outrageous behavior would fall on every Jew in every place at every time.

Albert Mohler: The people ignorantly place the responsibility for their own Messiah's crucifixion directly on themselves, but Pilate is just as guilty as they are.

(:26) EPILOGUE – FINAL DISPOSITION OF BARABBAS AND JESUS

A. Final Disposition of Barabbas

“Then he released Barabbas for them;”

B. Final Disposition of Jesus

1. Scourged in Preparation for Crucifixion

“but after having Jesus scourged,”

2. Delivered Up to Be Crucified

“he delivered Him to be crucified.”

D. A. Carson: Among the Jews, scourging was limited to forty lashes (Dt 25:3; cf. 2Co 11:24), but the Romans were restricted by nothing but their strength and whim. The whip was the dreaded flagellum, made by plaiting pieces of bone or lead into leather thongs. The victim was stripped and tied to a post. Severe flogging not only reduced the flesh to bloody pulp but could open up the body until the bones were visible and the entrails exposed (cf. TDNT, 4:510–12; Josephus, J.W. 2.612 [21.5]; 6.304 [5.3]). Flogging as an independent punishment not infrequently ended in death. It was also used to weaken the prisoner before crucifixion. Jesus' flogging took place before the verdict (cf. Lk 23:16, 22; Jn 19:1–5; cf. Blinzler, Trial of Jesus, 222ff.) and so was not repeated after the verdict. Repetition would doubtless have killed him.

Grant Osborne: When Pilate delivered Jesus up to be scourged, he was following the legal code, which demanded that scourging precede capital punishment. The purpose in the case of crucifixion was actually humane, for it weakened the prisoner and helped him die more quickly, lessening the terrible agonies of the cross.

Scourging, however, was a terrible punishment in itself; in fact, as with crucifixion, it could only be inflicted on a Roman citizen by direct edict of Caesar. There were three kinds of beatings: the fustigatio, a less severe form for light offenses; the flagellatio, a severe beating for hardened criminals; and the verberatio, the most severe of them, in which the victim was beaten by a succession of soldiers, often with a scourge, a whip made up of strips of leather onto which were tied pieces of metal or bone. After only a few strokes the person's back was torn apart; and a hard blow could tear out a person's internal organs. With Jesus it was most likely the verberatio and thus undoubtedly terrible, but controlled sufficiently that he could go to the cross. He was indeed the suffering Servant of Isa 53:10–12. The phrase “handed him over to be crucified” is a further allusion to the righteous suffering Servant, recalling Isa 53:6, 12 LXX (cf. 26:28, 62; 27:12).

Albert Mohler: With the Sabbath approaching, the Romans flog Jesus nearly to death so that he will die quickly and will not be left on the cross after sundown.

Van Parunak: Pilate becomes the third, after Judas and the Jewish leaders, to “betray” the Lord.

1. Judas violated his obligation to the Lord as a disciple.
2. The leaders violated their obligation as the shepherds of Israel to recognize the Messiah.
3. Pilate violates his obligation as a magistrate to offer true judgment (Deut 25:1). Though he is not a Jew, according to Daniel 4, he holds his office as a trust from God, and is accountable to him for it.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What are the specific points of evidence that support the innocence and righteousness of Jesus?
- 2) Do we have the fortitude to stand by our convictions when pressured by the multitude?
- 3) In what ways does Barabbas serve as an illustration of substitutionary atonement?
- 4) What type of tension and emotions did Pilate experience as he grappled with the decision of how to handle the case of Jesus?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Scott LaPierre: Jesus took our place on the cross and this is demonstrated beautifully when He died in the place of Barabbas, a notorious sinner (Matthew 27:15-26). Matthew 27:26, says, “Then Pilate released Barabbas to them; and when he had scourged Jesus, he delivered Him to be crucified.” Put yourself in Barabbas’s place. When the guards came to get him, what do you think he thought...and didn’t think? He thought, “This is the time for me to be punished.” He didn’t, “This is the time for me to be released.” What do you think the guards said to him? Maybe something like, “Barabbas, you’re a guilty, evil man. You deserve to be punished, but you’re going to be released b/c Jesus of Nazareth is going to die in your place and receive the punishment you deserve.” The cross Jesus died on was probably the cross intended for Barabbas. <https://www.scottlapierre.org/jesus-took-our-place-on-the-cross/>

Allen Browne: Which Jesus Do You Want?

“Jesus Barabbas? Or Jesus called Christ?” What’s your response to Pilate’s question?

Which Jesus would you follow? The freedom-fighter, or the love-teacher?

The trouble with the one called Christ is that he doesn’t match our expectations of saving us. The Christ standing before the governor does not look like a saviour, handed over by his own people (27:2, 18), handed over by his own disciple (27:3-4), about to be handed over to be crucified (27:26). Love is a lovely ideal, but Jesus Barabbas makes more sense to the crowd.

That’s still the case for many today. For many Jews, Jesus was not a messiah because he failed to save his people . . .

Jesus’ approach to saving his people looks hopeless. Barabbas wins. The crowd get their hero, while God’s anointed is handed over to be crucified (27:26). Barabbas walks away, a kind of anti-Christ — a killer in Christ’s place. He cannot save his people, of course. Now they have more blood on their hands (27:25).

<https://allenbrowne.blog/2022/01/21/which-jesus-do-you-want/>

Matthew McCraw: Pilate was rattled and didn’t know what to do. He knew Jesus wasn’t guilty and he even ceremonially washed his hands to signify that he was innocent of Jesus’ blood. Pilate was conflicted yet he lacked the conviction to do the right thing. That ceremonial washing couldn’t help him, but Jesus could have.

Barabbas was released, but he wasn’t released to true freedom. He was still in chains to his sin. Barabbas was gone but still guilty. Pilate couldn’t really help Barabbas, but Jesus could have.

The people were being led astray by their leaders. They thought putting Jesus to death would help them. They were so convinced that the leaders were right in having Jesus killed that they said in verse 25, “His blood be on us and on our children!” The irony is, the blood of Jesus was what they really needed for the cleansing of their sins. Instead, many of the Jewish people of that time would suffer judgment for putting God’s Son and their Messiah to death. The Jewish leaders couldn’t help the people, but Jesus could have.

That takes us to our bottom line:

Bottom Line: The only true innocent One provides the only true escape for the guilty one.
<https://fbcbartow.org/sermons/the-betrayer-the-governor-and-the-criminal-matthew-271-26/>

John MacArthur: What Shall I Do with Jesus?

Pilate asks the most important question that could ever be asked. . .

Realizing then that Jesus was from the jurisdiction of Herod Antipas in Galilee, and that Herod was in Jerusalem for the Passover, Pilate sent Jesus bound to Herod. And all the Jews went along with Him and they brought Him before Herod hoping -from Pilate's viewpoint – that Herod would take this thing over, condemn Jesus to death or deal with the Jewish people, or do something that he couldn't accomplish. And you remember Herod's response. He thought the idea was ludicrous. This man a king? He laughed. He mocked. He put a robe on Jesus and made a joke out of the whole thing. It was not only ridiculous, it was even funny. And Jesus became a laughing stock, the butt of the jokes of Herod.

And Herod sent Him back – and it's still not even 6:00 in the morning – back to Pilate again robed in this robe supposedly representing a king. And Pilate has Jesus back again. And through it all, it says, when He was in front of Herod, He said nothing – never a word. There was nothing to say. The verdict had been rendered. In fact, you might be interested to know that before this trial before Pilate and Herod is over, the innocence of Jesus will be stated five separate times. The religious world, the pagan world, the demons of hell cannot come up with one accusation that stands. And so, Jesus is silent. . .

Now you remember what I just pointed out in Luke's gospel, that he called together the chief priests and the leaders and the people. Do you remember that? We just read that. Why? Initially, in the first two phases, it was only the chief priests and leaders. Now he calls the people, because he has a plan. He knows that Jesus is popular with the people. It's now 6:00 a.m.; the city is moving about; it is the day of the Passover for the residents of Judea, Jerusalem. And so things are moving very fast early in the morning. And he calls the people because his plan is this: Jesus is popular with the people, Jesus is hated by the leaders. What I will do is offer them the alternative of Barabbas or Jesus and pit the people against the leaders. That was his plan, feeling that the people who were attracted to Jesus, who – by the way, and surely he was well aware of it – had hailed Jesus as their Messiah King and so forth on Monday when He rode in triumphally to the city. He knew of the popularity of Jesus. He was well aware of that. He also knew that the leaders wanted Jesus dead out of jealousy, verse 18. He knew it was a matter of envy. So he knew that this was a plot against Jesus by the leaders and thought he could pit the leaders against the people who felt Jesus to be very popular. . .

Pilate later on was taken out of Palestine, sent to Gaul and there he committed suicide. He committed suicide for the same reason that Judas did, because both of them couldn't deal with the tremendous guilt of having betrayed and dealt unjustly with the only perfectly righteous person that ever lived. As I told you before, the primary cause of suicide psychologically is retribution. It's self-inflicted punishment. And the ultimate crime demands the ultimate punishment. And we have little to wonder about in the suicide of Pilate as in the suicide of Judas. It really was inescapable. . .

What are you going to do with Jesus Christ? That's the question. Hate Him? Mindlessly reject Him because everybody around you does? Or maybe you just laugh at the whole thing. Or maybe you just say, "Well, look, I'm not interested in it. I really don't want to have anything to do with this." Or maybe you just choose what is and sacrifice eternity like Pilate did, and put Jesus away – get rid of Him. You will make a choice and it will be one of those. And it will be an eternal thing.

J. Ligon Duncan: Jesus Before Pilate

The first thing I want you to see is the weakness of Pilate in the face of injustice. That's a negative of justice. That's a negative example for us as Christians if we have an position of influence, whether it be in the legal system or in our society. Pilate was a man of influence and position and status and power who could have done something about this, and he refuses to do it. He acted pragmatically because of his own interests and not on the basis of principle. And I think there is a negative message in that for us in that. As Christians, whenever we have influence in society, God intends for us to act on principle and not merely on expedience.

But more than that, Matthew is showing us here the innocence of Christ in this section. He is showing us that Jesus' betrayer has pronounced Him as innocent. Jesus' judge pronounces Him as innocent. Jesus is utterly innocent of what He is being accused of. He is the righteous Lamb of God being led away to slaughter for sins that He has not committed. What is Matthew doing? He is building for you a theology of the death of Christ. He's telling why the death of Christ occurred. Was it an accident? No. Was it out of control of the plan of God? No. Was it something whereby Jesus did something wrong, and He accidentally fell into this situation? No. Matthew is saying over and over this is an innocent man who is going to die. He is preparing you to understand the meaning of the death of Christ. And Matthew is showing you in that very difficult phrase in verse 25, he is showing you here that any Jew, or anyone for that matter, but any Jew especially he is speaking of – remember, he's speaking in the context of Jews and Jewish Christians – any Jew who rejects the Lord Jesus Christ is calling down on his own head the curses of God. That's Matthew's point.

But my friends, finally in this passage Matthew is showing us the wounds which He bore for our transgressions. You remember Isaiah 53, verse 5? He was wounded for our transgressions; and the torture and the beating and the flogging which the Lord Jesus Christ received here, He received because He chose to receive them for you.

Let me just remind you again that if there's ever an indication that Pilate wanted Jesus to talk Himself out of the charges, when Jesus refuses to talk Himself out of these charges, Jesus is as much saying, "I choose to be beaten, I choose to be scourged, I choose to be crucified for that man's bitterness, for that woman's anger, for that man's rebellion against God, for that man's estrangement from his wife and for that child's disobedience. I choose to be scourged, beaten, flogged, crucified, dead and buried, because I wish to stand in the place of all who trust in Me so that they might never receive the just sentence of God. I receive this unjust sentence so that you might receive the sentence of grace.

Ray Pritchard: Barabbas or Jesus?

[Barabbas] was a cold-blood killer. As with many terrorists in our day, he may not have looked dangerous. But he was a menace to decent society. When you add the word "notorious," it means that everyone knew about Barabbas.

Prison was where he belonged. He was there because of heinous crimes. Why would anyone want him to be set free? . . .

Pilate's problem can be stated this way. He knew who Jesus was not, but he didn't know who he was. He wasn't a criminal, a crook, a thief, a bandit, a revolutionary, a murderer, or a lawbreaker. As far as Pilate was concerned, Jesus had done nothing wrong at all, certainly nothing deserving of death. But he didn't know who he was. Was he a mystic, a visionary dreamer, an idealistic teacher, or was he something more? Under pressure from the Jews, Pilate had to make a fast decision. . .

When Thomas Whitelaw wrote about the crowd's choice of Barabbas over Jesus, he mentioned seven words that summarize that momentous event:

1. It was popular but the popular choice is often wrong.
2. It was frenzied. "When passion rules, judgment dies."
3. It was criminal to prefer a murderer over the Prince of Life.
4. It was foolish to choose an enemy and reject a friend like Jesus.
5. It was fatal in that it guaranteed judgment to the nation.
6. It was predicted in Isaiah 53:3.
7. It was overruled by God to bring salvation to the world.

In that final point we see the wisdom and greatness of God who could use the evil choice of a foolish mob to bring salvation to the world. It is the ultimate irony that those who so disrespected Jesus could be saved by the death they chose for him.

TEXT: Matthew 27:27-31

TITLE: HAIL KING OF THE JEWS

BIG IDEA:

JESUS SUBMITTED TO HIS HUMILIATING MOCKING CORONATION AS THE KING OF THE JEWS BY HIS ROMAN CAPTORS

INTRODUCTION:

R. T. France: After Jesus was condemned by the Jewish leaders, they abused and mocked him (26:67–68). Now that the Roman trial is finished the governor’s soldiers do the same, but in a suitably cruder and more violent way. To have a supposedly self-proclaimed king in their power offered unusually good sport, and for non-Jewish soldiers to have such an opportunity of abusing a Jewish dignitary with impunity was a chance not to be missed. The whole scene is a mock enthronement, with improvised cheap substitutes doing duty for the royal robe, crown and scepter, and physical abuse substituted for loyal homage. After the brutal torture of the Roman flogging Jesus would be in no state to resist even if he had wished, and his already battered physical condition would only add to the pathetic appearance of this Jewish “king.” All this takes place out of the public domain, where there are no Jewish onlookers to take racial offense. By the time Jesus emerges into the open on the way to the cross, the instruments of mockery have been removed and Jesus is back in his normal clothes.

Leon Morris: It is possible that Matthew is mocking these mockers. Patte reminds us that “Mockeries, like caricatures, involve portraying a person by selecting a few actual characteristics of that person and excluding his or her other characteristics.” He sees mockery in Matthew’s reference to “soldiers of the governor.” “Matthew expects his readers to perceive not only that the soldiers are insensitive and cruel in their treatment of Jesus but also that the soldiers are ridiculous and thus wrong in their assessment of Jesus.... The soldiers, apparently under the political authority of the Roman governor, are actually under the authority of the Jewish people whose orders they will carry out by crucifying Jesus” (Patte, pp. 381, 382).

Daniel Doriani: The goal was to mock and to degrade Jesus, and in a way the soldiers succeeded. But they surely degraded themselves even more. It reminds us that whenever we attack someone, we hurt ourselves, not just the target of our wrath.

Warren Wiersbe: Jesus took all of this humiliation and pain without speaking or fighting back (1 Peter 2:18ff.). His submission was not a sign of weakness; it was a sign of strength.

David Turner: The Roman soldiers’ mockery at Pilate’s residence fulfills Jesus’s prophecy (20:19; cf. Ps. 22:7; Isa. 50:6). The religious leaders have already mocked Jesus (Matt. 26:67–68), and worse taunting is to come (26:68; 27:39–44). The scarlet robe, crown of thorns, and reed (Pss. 2:9; 110:2; Jer. 48:17) are intended as a cruel parody of royalty. The Romans’ derision is probably fueled by the fact that Jesus is purported to be king of a people conquered and ruled by Rome. The profound irony is that one day these soldiers will join all humanity, including the Jews, in homage to the conquering Son of Man (Dan. 7:13–14; Phil. 2:9–11). Those of the cohort who crucify Jesus will soon rethink their mockery (Matt. 27:54). After the mocking charade, Jesus is led away to be crucified.

Matthew McCraw: Understanding this experience that Jesus endured should cause us to reflect upon the great love that Jesus demonstrated towards us and to revere the great majesty of our King. Let this moment cause you to reflect and revere. He who suffered great humiliation is worthy of great exaltation.

<https://fbcbartow.org/sermons/the-crucifixion-of-the-christ-matthew-2727-44/>

(:27) PROLOGUE

“Then the soldiers of the governor took Jesus into the Praetorium and gathered the whole Roman cohort around Him.”

Craig Blomberg: “The Praetorium” in v. 27 refers to the official residence of the Roman ruler, which also sometimes housed the soldiers' barracks. This could have been located at the Antonium fortress (Pilate's center of activity when in Jerusalem) or Herod's palace (where Antipas of Galilee stayed when visiting). Gathering the whole “company” (literally cohort) would involve six hundred men, one tenth of a legion, if the troops were at complete strength.

Leon Morris: The word referred to the official residence of the governor, but it is not known where Pilate resided when he came to Jerusalem. He lived in Caesarea, where his real praetorium was, but the name was given to whatever residence he used while he was in Jerusalem. Some commentators hold that this would have been Herod's palace, others that it would have been the tower of Antonia. Whichever it was, it would seem that there was attached to it a place where soldiers could be garrisoned, and it was to this part of the palace that Jesus was taken.

Donald Hagner: The statement that ὅλην τὴν σπεῖραν, “the whole cohort,” gathered together around Jesus is probably hyperbolic. Technically a “cohort” consisted of 600 soldiers, although the number varied. It was, however, apparently a fairly large number of rough men who mocked Jesus with their crass humor.

I. (:28-29) PARODY OF JESUS' ALLEGED KINGSHIP

Craig Blomberg: The scarlet robe they place on him was likely a red soldier's tunic. Together with the crown of thorns (as royal diadem) and reed (as royal scepter), the robe adorns Jesus as a vassal king. Likewise, when the soldiers pay mock homage and utter Hail, King of the Jews, their words mimic “Ave Caesar,” used to hail the emperor.

D. A. Carson: Here we have humanity at its worst—a scene of vicious mockery. The Jews have mocked Jesus as Messiah (26:67–68); here the Roman soldiers ridicule him as king. Matthew's readers recognize that the soldiers speak more truly than they know, for Jesus is both King and Suffering Servant.

A. (:28) Pseudo Kingly Garments

“And they stripped Him, and put a scarlet robe on Him.”

Leon Morris: Their horseplay centered around the fact that Jesus had been convicted of being a king. Matthew is describing a highly ironical situation; the soldiers went out of their way to produce trappings of royalty as a means of ridiculing one who was to be crucified as a King, whereas he really was King in a fuller and wider sense than they had any idea of. They decided that his clothing was not suitable for royalty, so they took it off and replaced it with a scarlet cloak (only Matthew has this detail; Mark speaks of their clothing Jesus with purple, the color of royalty, but he does not mention the cloak). Since this kind of cloak was used by military officers, there would have been no great difficulty in getting one, perhaps an old one, discarded by an officer. The point of it was apparently that the color was somewhere near purple, the color of royalty. By getting a cloak of a color not quite that of royalty the soldiers were mocking Jesus' claim to be a king.

B. (:29a) Pseudo Kingly Crown and Scepter

“And after weaving a crown of thorns, they put it on His head, and a reed in His right hand;”

Leon Morris: A crown was needed for a king, so these funny fellows got some thorny material and plaited a crown out of it. They pressed this on Jesus' head, which would have both mocked his kingship and increased his sufferings. For a scepter they put a reed in his right hand. So they had all the outward trappings of royalty, but every one a piece of cruel mockery.

William Hendriksen: Somewhere in the vicinity of the praetorium the soldiers find some thorny twigs. Whether the plant from which they obtained these twigs was the Spina Christi or Palinrus Shrub, as some think, is not known. It has been pointed out by botanists that few countries of the size of Palestine have so many varieties of prickly plants. The identity of the species is of little importance. Far more significant is the fact that thorns and thistles are mentioned in Gen. 3:18 in connection with Adam's fall. Here in Matt. 27:29a and its parallels Jesus is pictured as bearing the curse that lies upon nature, in order to deliver nature and us from it.

Jerry Crabtree: The reed (Greek kalamos) was the heavy, rigid stalk of a reed plant (Louw and Nida I:35).

C. (:29b) Pseudo Acclamation

“and they kneeled down before Him and mocked Him, saying, ‘Hail, King of the Jews!’”

II. (:30) PHYSICAL MOCKERY OF JESUS

“And they spat on Him, and took the reed and began to beat Him on the head.”

Leon Morris: There would have been no serious physical violence about this part of the incident, but there was contemptuous mockery of all that Jesus stood for. The soldiers make it clear that nobody should take seriously the bedraggled figure in their charge (cf. Isa. 50:6).

Grant Osborne: The spitting and beating may have started with mock kisses (oriental custom) and salutes of homage but degenerated into pure cruelty. The imperfect in “[they] hit” (ἔτυπτον) could be durative (kept on striking Jesus) or ingressive (began to hit him). The former seems more in keeping with the imagery. It may also be that this imagery favors a stick or cane rather than a fragile reed (which would break with repeated hitting).

III. (:31) PREPARATION FOR CRUCIFIXION

“And after they had mocked Him, they took His robe off and put His garments on Him, and led Him away to crucify Him.”

Donald Hagner: When they were finished with their cruel play (for ἐνέπαιξαν αὐτῷ, “they mocked him,” cf. v. 29), the soldiers took off the cloak, clothed Jesus with his own garments (an exception to normal practice, probably for the sake of the sensitivities of the Jewish crowds in the city for the Feast of Passover), and they led him off to be crucified.

Craig Blomberg: At last the soldiers tire of their game, reclothe Jesus in his own garments, and lead him away to his death.

Charles Swindoll: After they had had enough “fun” with their condemned but innocent victim, they removed the robe and returned His garments. The time had come. The preparations had been completed. During the seemingly endless ordeal of mocking and beating, two more criminals condemned to die had been retrieved from their cells and given crossbeams to carry. Taking the place of the freed Barabbas, the bloodied Jesus of Nazareth was led into the parade heading to the place of crucifixion (27:31).

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How could professional soldiers be allowed to act so unprofessionally?
- 2) What do we learn about our own depravity from the wicked conduct of these soldiers?
- 3) How does this passage provide more insight into the earlier texts in Matthew where Jesus set His face in firm resolve to go to Jerusalem to accomplish the work of redemption?
- 4) How will these voices of mockery be reduced to mockery when these soldiers find themselves without excuse at the final judgment before the majestic King of Kings and Lord of Lords/

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

D. A. Carson: vv.28-31 -- Here we have humanity at its worst—a scene of vicious mockery. The Jews have mocked Jesus as Messiah (26:67–68); here the Roman soldiers ridicule him as king. Matthew’s readers recognize that the soldiers speak more truly than they know, for Jesus is both King and Suffering Servant. The “robe” (chlamys, in the NT only here and in v.31) is probably the short red cloak worn by Roman military and civilian officials (v.28). Mark and John describe it as “purple,” Matthew as “scarlet.” . . .

For a crown (v.29) the soldiers plaited a wreath of thorns from palm spines or acanthus (Brown, Death of the Messiah, 866–67, lists other possible plants) and crushed it down on Jesus’ head in imitation of the circlet on the coins of Tiberius Caesar (cf. TDNT, 7:619–24, 632–33). Whether this “crown” was left on Jesus’ head after this mockery, the text does not say . . . The staff they put in his hand stood for a royal scepter, and the mocking “Hail, King of the Jews!” corresponded to the Roman acclamation “Ave, Caesar!” and capped the flamboyant kneeling. Not content with the ridicule and the torture of the thorns, they spat on him (v.30) and used the staff, the symbol of his kingly authority, to hit him on the head “again and again” (not required by the imperfect tense of the verb but perhaps hinted at).

“After they had mocked him” (v.31; the time is established by the flow of the narrative, not by the [aorist] tense . . . they dressed him again in his own clothes and led him off to be crucified. Normally a prisoner went naked to his place of execution and was scourged along the route. That this custom was not followed with Jesus may be because he had already been flogged and more flogging might have killed him. Or it may reflect an attempt not to offend too many Jewish sensibilities during a feast time. Jesus was led away by the execution squad of four soldiers, dragging the crosspiece to which his hands would be nailed (Jn 19:17, 23).

One cannot help but observe that the mocking soldiers meant their cry, “Hail, king of the Jews!” to be mockingly ironic; the words meant the opposite of what they formally say. But Matthew sees a deeper irony: Jesus is the king of the Jews, a theme the evangelist has emphasized since first introducing it in 1:1.

Robert Gundry: These details of the Gentiles’ mockery of Jesus add thoroughness of fulfillment to its large scale. Here are the indignities done to him:

- (1) his being disrobed;
- (2) his being dressed up in a scarlet cloak, an ordinary soldier’s mantle, as though it were a kingly robe;
- (3) his being crowned with braided thorns, as though they were a woven wreath like Caesar’s;
- (4) his having a reed put in his right hand, as though the reed were a king’s scepter;
- (5) his being knelt before and mockingly greeted as the king of the Jews;
- (6) his being spat on in mockery of his subroyal cloak; and
- (7) his having the reed taken from him and used to beat him on the head in mockery of his subroyal crown. Crowning Jesus with thorns had the purpose of mockery, not of inflicting pain, though presumably it did inflict pain.

Ironically, what the soldiers intended as mockery in kneeling before him is exactly what they should have done seriously. For Jesus is “God with us” (1:23). See the comments on 26:49 for irony in the greeting, “Hail!” And there’s even further irony in the soldiers’ greeting Jesus as “the king of the Jews” (compare 27:11). For though they don’t think so, Jesus really is the king of the Jews (2:2; 21:5). See the comments on 26:67 for his being spat on. A reed would be too flimsy to hurt him; so beating him on the head with it has to do again with mockery more than with inflicting pain. Putting his own clothes back on him prepares for the next episode, which will include soldiers’ dividing the clothes among themselves.

Timothy Shrimpton -- Gloria Dei Lutheran Church: The soldiers found this whole scene hilarious. They had no respect for the Jewish people. In fact, many of them probably resented being stationed in an outpost so far away from the sights and sounds of Rome. And so if here they had a chance to mock the Jewish people even more by ridiculing the one that was supposedly claiming to be their king, well they took full advantage of the opportunity.

They harshly removed his clothing, which would've been suffering in itself. Jesus has been beaten severely earlier at Pilate's command, likely with a whip of many cords that each had little bit of metal on the end. His back would have been raw and bloody, and as the blood began to clot, his clothing would have gotten stuck in there. Just removing his clothes would have reopened fresh and already searing wounds.

That would have been enough, but then there's insult to this injury. After all, even as our chapel conversation bore out, what is a king without his crown and sign of his ruling authority? So a crown made out of harsh thorns is placed on his head and a staff made out of a reed placed in his hand. Hardly the marks of royalty; this is nothing but a grim, disturbing farce. And just in case the crown wasn't uncomfortable enough, and just in case anyone got the wrong idea that the staff this man carried was a sign of any real power and authority, the King's crown is beat into his head as he's struck repeatedly on the head with the staff that had just been given to him. The "homage" paid to him continues with shouts of false praise, "Hail, King of the Jews!" after falling before him. Yet the accolades are accompanied by spit in his face.

This whole scene, difficult as it is to stomach, is eventually brought to an end, but only because it's time to go to the cross. The time for mocking and humiliating Jesus while beating him is over; the time for mocking and humiliating Jesus while killing him has come.

What are we supposed to take away from all of this? What are we to make of a king who suffers such horrendous abuse? What are we to make of a king who makes no effort to rescue himself, that calls on no army to save him, that doesn't even lift a finger to make an attempt to stop any of this? Consider what Jesus had said just a few hours before this, while still in the Garden of Gethsemane the previous night: One of those who were with Jesus stretched out his hand and drew his sword and struck the servant of the high priest and cut off his ear. Then Jesus said to him, "Put your sword back into its place. For all who take the sword will perish by the sword. Do you think that I cannot appeal to my Father, and he will at once send me more than twelve legions of angels? But how then should the Scriptures be fulfilled, that it must be so?" (Matthew 26:51-54). Let those words echo in your mind for a moment, "it must be so."

Why? Why did this king, our King, have to endure this? Because this is not a show of weakness or lack of power—he makes clear that he could in an instant have twelve legions, more than 61,000 angels at his disposal, more than enough to stop his arrest or certainly halt this humiliation he's enduring. No, this is not weakness, but mercy. Our King is on a mission to save. A king's primary responsibility is to protect his people. But, it's not often that a leader sacrificing himself to an enemy will result in anything good for those he's trying to protect.

Maybe you've wondered at Jesus' comment that he is the Good Shepherd who lays down his life for the sheep (John 10:11). What good is it to the flock if the shepherd lets himself be killed by the wolves? Won't the wolves then just move onto the defenseless flock? And what good would it be for a nation whose leader allows himself to be killed by the enemy? The people left would be without leadership and utterly defenseless. Our nation's regulations protect the President and those who would follow him in the event of a tragedy for just this reason, so that the nation is never left without a leader.

But this King and this battle is different. God had said that the job of the Savior would be miserable. Right from the first promise of a Messiah, God had said that Satan would "bruise his heel” (Genesis 3:15). That heel striking is what is going on here, that heel striking is what will happen when the hammer blows ring out at the crucifixion. The Messiah’s job was to suffer, was to die. But what did God say the Messiah would do to Satan? “He will crush your head.”

Jesus is going in our place. He would suffer this physical torment—and so much more the spiritual disaster of hell itself—because of us. His mission of mercy isn’t so much falling down on the field of battle as he is exchanging his life for the lives of millions of his own people held hostage. We were shackled by our sin to death. There was no escape from it. Hell, for disobeying our God, was our only future, unless someone came in and made an exchange. And that’s what our King did. He took our place and endured the punishment of hell that you and I deserved and now we are free. There is no punishment for sins left because Jesus took it all on himself.

<https://www.gdluth.org/blogs/sermon-archive/2014/11/23/sermon-our-king-is-an-unlikely-ruler-matthew-27:27-31-end-times-4-2014>

Steve Schamber: Hands of Brutality

Christ was brutalized for you as your perfect substitute. If Jesus hadn't endured this shame, if he had avoided the indignity, if he had retreated from the cross or refused to drink even a drop of the suffering -- then there is no forgiveness of sins, and God's wrath toward you is still undiminished. God's wrath is far more severe than any Roman soldier's.

<https://sermons.logos.com/sermons/719125-matthew-27:27-31-hands-of-brutality>

John MacArthur: The Wickedness of the Crucifixion

They see Jesus, no doubt, as a strange and pathetic figure. By the time He gets to this moment, He is a tragedy to look at. His face has been slapped repeatedly. It has been punched until it is swollen and bruised. It has been spit on till His face is covered with spit. His body now is lacerated and He bleeds profusely from the shoulders down. They know that He is supposedly a king, because the people are screaming about His claim to be that. They know the people want Him dead. They see Him as a rather pathetic fake and fraud, perhaps mentally deranged and worthy only of their mockery. And when all through this entire encounter with them, He never says a single thing, they no doubt questioned His intelligence and perhaps even His sanity. They play Him like a clown as they would with an idiot boy in the street. They are cold. They are they indifferent. And they are ignorant. And this mentally deficient faker is nothing more than the butt of their jokes.

And so, under the tutelage of Pilate, they mock Jesus’ claim to be a king, because that is part of Pilate’s plan. Now the soldiers, I do not believe, did this independent of Pilate. I think they did it under his watchful eye. For when John’s gospel tells us that Jesus later was brought out to the crowd, after scourging and in this garb of the king with which they dress Him, it says that when they brought Jesus out, Pilate came out also. So Pilate must have been back in the praetorium aware at least of what was going on and looking on it with some favor and wanting Jesus under the conditions of appearing as mock king to be brought before the Jews so that they would see how foolish, how stupid, how silly their claim was that this man was a threat either to Rome or Israel.

Already bleeding from the scourging which opened up His flesh, blood flowing out all over His body, agony in every nerve, His whole body quivering in tortuous pain, He becomes the object of the soldiers ridicule as they all gather around Him and begin their little game. The first thing they did was strip Him, they stripped Him. They loved to do this. They don’t do this reluctantly. They don’t like the Jews. In fact they hate the Jews. They’ve had a lot of problems with them.

And any way they can mock them, they can enjoy thoroughly. And so there's a certain kind of glee in what they do. And there are, by the way, no Jews in the praetorium. The Bible tells us they wouldn't come in there lest they would be defiled and thus be unable to celebrate the Passover by entering into a defiling Gentile place. . .

But all of this makes Jesus look ridiculous. He is a joke. He is bloody from head to foot. His face is now unrecognizable. He is hardly human. His face is distorted by the pain of emotion. It is distorted by spiritual anguish. It is distorted by the feeling of sin bearing and the very bearing of sin. It is distorted by bruises and swollenness and spittle mixed with blood and the dust and dirt of the day. And He is a scene of ugliness of which the prophet Isaiah says there is no beauty that we should desire Him. . .

And so, they carried on their little game further in verse 30 by taking the reed out of His right hand and – the Greek text says – repeatedly struck Him on the head. More blows, slaps already, punches with the fist already, spit, and now hitting Him repeatedly in the head with this reed. Why were they doing that? Not particularly to crush the thorns deeper into His brow, although it certainly had that effect. They did this primarily to show what a joke His authority was. What kind of a king are you? We can rip the very scepter out of your hand and beat on your head with it. Your sovereignty is a laugh. Your kingliness is a joke. Anybody who can spit on a king and hit him in the head with his own scepter and have nothing happen in retaliation is some kind of king. You're a farce. In John chapter 19 verse 3, John adds in the same scene, "They kept punching Him." It's an unbelievable scene of human evil. And it isn't that they have anything against Him. They don't even know Him. It is the depravity of the human heart. Given the opportunity to do whatever it wants, it does this. Inconceivable. It is a brutal amusement.

And though He endures it all, He says nothing. He offers no resistance. He says nothing. He is willing to suffer for sinners, to suffer not only the death on the cross but everything that came along with it. He will fulfill His calling. He endured such contradiction of sinners, it says in Hebrews 12:3. He endured it all, and He knew it was going to come. In chapter 20, do you remember what He said? In chapter 20 He told His disciples in verse 18, we go to Jerusalem, the Son of Man will be betrayed. The chief priests and the scribes, and they'll condemn Him to death. And in verse 19, "And they'll deliver Him to the Gentiles to mock and to scourge and to crucify, and the third day He'll rise again." He was right on schedule. He had been to the Jews, now He was with the Gentiles, and they would mock Him, and then they would crucify Him. He was right on schedule. Silently He endured it all – humiliation, agony, pain beyond belief.

TEXT: Matthew 27:32-37

TITLE: THE CRUCIFIXION OF THE KING

BIG IDEA:

THE KING OF THE JEWS SUBMITTED TO HUMILIATING INDIGNITIES AND PAINFUL SUFFERING IN HIS UNJUST CRUCIFIXION TO ACCOMPLISH OUR REDEMPTION

INTRODUCTION:

D. A. Carson: Crucifixion was unspeakably painful and degrading. Whether tied or nailed to the cross, the victim endured countless paroxysms as he pulled with his arms and pushed with his legs to keep his chest cavity open for breathing and then collapsed in exhaustion until the demand for oxygen demanded renewed paroxysms. The scourging, the loss of blood, the shock from the pain all produced agony that could go on for days, ending at last by suffocation, cardiac arrest, or loss of blood. When there was reason to hasten death, the execution squad would smash the victim's legs. Death followed almost immediately, either from shock or from collapse that cut off breathing.

R. T. France: the narrative focus in these verses is rather on the surrounding events and the people involved (Simon, the soldiers, the bandits), together with the ironical placard over Jesus' head which sums up the Roman dismissal of his claims.

John MacArthur: The Bible is not preoccupied with the physical events of the cross. It is preoccupied with the wickedness of men. It never describes the agony of Jesus. Do you know that? It never does. It only describes what men did to Him. It doesn't describe His own feeling. Outside the garden, we know nothing of the agony, and outside the sayings on the cross, which themselves do not express His agony, except in separation from God. The physical agony of Jesus is not the issue.

David Thompson: JESUS CHRIST WENT THROUGH ALL OF THE RIDICULE, HUMILIATION, AND PAIN OF THE CRUCIFIXION BECAUSE THIS IS THE ONLY WAY SINNERS COULD BE SAVED FROM THEIR SIN.

Allen Browne: The Meaning of the Cross

Matthew focuses on four groups who all scorn Jesus for his kingship claims:

1. Soldiers: King of the Jews (v. 37)
2. Compatriots passing by: Temple demolisher/builder. Son of God (v. 40).
3. Jerusalem authorities: King of Israel, son of God (vv. 42-43)
4. Crucified criminals: same ridicule (v.44).

Two phrases are repeated: king of Jews/Israel, son of God. As we've explained, these two phrases meant the same thing to the Jewish people. Neither the passers-by nor the Jerusalem authorities understood the doctrine of the trinity (Father, Son, and Spirit): that is not what son of God meant on their lips.

Son of God was a kingship term. The Davidic king was the prince (son of the heavenly sovereign) reigning on earth with the authority of his Father in heaven. That's how God established David's kingship: I will be his father, and he will be my son (2 Samuel 7:14). As each Davidic king was crowned, God made this decree: You are my son; today I have become your father (Psalms 2:7).

So, all four groups Matthew describes are focused on Jesus' kingship:

1. The soldiers have already been mocking Jesus' kingship (27:27-31). Now they commit it to writing (v. 37).
2. One week earlier, his compatriots lauded the Davidic king who would save them (21:9). Now they mock the king who cannot even save himself (v. 40).
3. The Jerusalem authorities condemned him for his claim to be God's anointed king (the Christ, the son), a claim they considered blasphemous (26:59-66). Now they deride him for his belief that God would raise him up as king (vv. 42-43).
4. The criminals were positioned beside him, possibly as mock attendants of the king (v. 38). They find his royal status as ludicrous as everyone else (v. 44).

Jesus' kingship is the single motif in Matthew's description of the cross. That's the meaning of the cross: the world disposing of its king. United in their rejection of God's anointed ruler are: the Empire's military forces (soldiers), the people of God's nation (his compatriots), the leaders called to represent God (high priests), and the condemned criminals. The cross is the rejection of divine kingship in his anointed.

There are many ways to talk about the cross, many theories of the atonement. The New Testament uses a range of these. We can view the cross through the framework of Old Testament sacrifices and ceremonies (as Hebrews does). We can view it as a place of judgement (justification). We can view it as a penalty Jesus bore on our behalf (penal substitution). We can view it as God making peace between heaven and earth (reconciliation). We can view it as the ultimate expression of sin and rebellion against God (assassinating his Son).

But perhaps we miss the main point if we don't see it as an expression of divine kingship.

The kingdom of God was at the heart of everything for Jesus, the core of his theology. Heaven's reign over the earth was his message, his gospel (Matthew 4:17; 9:35; 24:14). It was when the disciples recognized him as God's anointed ruler that Jesus began to explain that those in power would put him to death (16:21; 17:22; 20:18).

According to Matthew, the cross is the rejection of God's kingship in God's anointed. The entire Gospel is the story of how the anointed son of David (1:1) receives all authority (28:18-20).

So, is this crucial perspective for understanding the cross? Is it primarily the human rejection of the divinely appointed king? Is that what Matthew is telling us?

If so, the cross is the most astounding revelation of the character of God, of how he exercises his sovereign kingship. It might be enough to make us rethink our theology of God and his sovereignty.

<https://allenbrowne.blog/2022/02/10/the-meaning-of-the-cross/>

I. (:32) INSIGNIFICANT JEW FORCED TO CARRY CHRIST'S CROSS

“And as they were coming out, they found a man of Cyrene named Simon, whom they pressed into service to bear His cross.”

Grant Osborne: Normally a prisoner carried his own crosspiece (at times being scourged on the way) to the execution site, where it was fixed to the vertical beam kept there for crucifixions (Keener). But Christ's loss of blood made it obvious that he could not bear his cross far, so they requisitioned a civilian (a legal prerogative of the Romans); Simon likely bore it himself rather than helped Jesus, as many old inscriptions hint (Simon with the cross and Jesus holding the bottom end).

Leon Morris: In all three Synoptic accounts it appears that this was a chance meeting; Simon just happened to be there at the time. Mark tells us that this man was “the father of Alexander and Rufus,” evidently people known in the church of his day, and probably Christians (would the Evangelists bother naming people like this unless they were Christians? Did what he heard and saw that day lead Simon to become a follower of Jesus?). He and Luke add the information that Simon was coming from the country (or possibly from the field). That he was a man of Cyrene may mean that he was a Gentile, but more probably that he was a Jew of the diaspora, now in Jerusalem for the Passover festival. He may, of course, have been resident in Jerusalem at this time; we have no way of knowing.

Charles Swindoll: The traditional route from the Antonia Fortress to Golgotha is known today as the Via Dolorosa. It winds through a noisy, bustling public marketplace along narrow stone streets sometimes barely wide enough for a donkey pulling a cart. If men and women lined the path two or three deep on both sides, it would be just possible for a person to slip through the center. It's quite likely that in the first century this road was similarly congested and chaotic, especially during the busy time of the Feast of Unleavened Bread.

II. (:33-34) INDIGNITIES HEAPED ON THE SUFFERING MESSIAH

A. (:33) Delivering Him to Golgotha for Crucifixion

“And when they had come to a place called Golgotha, which means Place of a Skull,”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Golgotha is the Aramaic word for “skull.” If the name describes the appearance of the hill then what is today known as Gordon's Calvary may be the place where Jesus was crucified. The “Church of the Holy Sepulchre” built by the Roman Emperor Constantine marks the traditional spot and is believed by many scholars to be the more probable spot (Wilkins 897-898; Hagner 33B:834; Carson, Matthew 574).

Donald Hagner: It refers obviously to a place where executions were carried out, perhaps a skull-shaped knoll, although its exact location just outside the city wall has long been debated. It is much more probable, however, that it was located where the present Church of the Holy Sepulcher is located (see Riesner) than in the area where the so-called Garden (Gordon's) Tomb is located. Although inside the city wall (the so-called third wall) since the time of Herod Agrippa I, the former location was outside the wall at the time of the crucifixion.

R. T. France: The traditional identification of Golgotha as a rocky mound just outside the then city wall and now enclosed within the Church of the Holy Sepulchre is unlikely to be provable, but matches adequately with the biblical data for the place of Jesus' death and burial. If the Roman trial took place at Herod's palace, the route to this site would be a short one, less than half a mile out through the city gate beside the palace and north along the western wall, rather than the longer Via Dolorosa which tradition has based on the assumption that the trial took place at the Antonia fortress.

Stu Weber: This was beside a well-traveled road where the passersby in and out of Jerusalem could see the execution of criminals.

David Lose: And after the gruesome parade through the city to the execution grounds comes the crucifixion proper. Crucifixion was a horrible way to die. The victim, first impaled upon the wood and then hung up as a spectacle, most often died not of the wounds themselves but from asphyxiation or dehydration, possibly several days later. Horrible...by design. This was Rome's way, you see, of making a statement, of warning all who might journey near the condemned of the fate of those who oppose the Empire.

<https://www.davidlose.net/2014/04/matthew-27-32-37/>

B. (:34) Mocking Him with Deceptive Drink

*“they gave Him wine to drink mingled with gall;
and after tasting it, He was unwilling to drink.”*

Leon Morris: When they reached the place of execution, they offered Jesus wine mixed with gall. This appears to be a reference to a custom mentioned in the Talmud: “When one is led out to execution, he is given a goblet of wine containing a grain of frankincense, in order to benumb his senses, for it is written, Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto the bitter in soul. And it has also been taught: The noble women in Jerusalem used to donate and bring it” (Sanh. 43a; the passage quoted is in Prov. 31:6). The alternative is a reference to the ordinary sour wine used by the soldiers, and Carson suggests that this wine had been made so bitter that Jesus refused to drink it; it would then have been part of the soldiers' mockery of their prisoner (so also Gundry, “the offer of the bitter drink is not an act of mercy, but an act of mockery” (Use of the OT, p. 202). That Jesus tasted it but then refused to drink it seems to mean that he preferred to keep his senses undulled as he came to the supreme moment when he would give his life as a ransom for the many (cf. 20:28).

Albert Mohler: Feigning that they are offering Jesus a cup of refreshment, the soldiers offer Jesus wine mixed with a bitter herb, a drink that could intensify his parched thirst. After tasting it, Jesus refuses to drink the rest.

R. T. France: Jesus' refusal of the laced wine might be simply because it was, as in the psalm, an unpleasant drink offered in spite. But if, as is more likely, it was intended to dull the pain, Matthew may have mentioned Jesus' refusal in order to show his determination to go through the ordeal in full consciousness. He has chosen to drink the cup which his Father has given him (26:39–42), and not be deflected by any human potion, however well-meaning.

Robert Gundry: they gave him wine to drink mixed with gall [a bitter, yellow-brown or greenish fluid, also called bile and secreted by the liver of an animal and stored in the gall bladder]. The mixture adds insult to injury. And on tasting [it], he didn't want to drink [it]. Nor did he, not just because it tasted bitter, but because he'd said he would no more “drink from this produce of the vine [that is, wine]” till he drank it “anew” with his disciples “in [his] Father's kingdom” (26:29). Saying that Jesus “didn't want to drink” rather than saying that he didn't drink stresses his determination to keep the vow of abstinence. “Wine . . . mixed with gall” alludes to Psalm 69:21a, fulfilled here, and adds to the indignities already done to Jesus.

John Schultz: Matthew reports that the potion Jesus was offered to drink consisted of wine mixed with gall. Mark mentions myrrh, which would work as an anesthetic, somewhat dulling the pain of the crucifixion. The drug was probably not meant to ease the suffering of hanging on the cross but more to help the soldiers drive in the nails without the victim struggling too much. Jesus refused the drug and submitted to being nailed to the cross without struggle.

III. (:35-36) IMAGINED DOMINION EXERCISED BY PAGAN SOLDIERS

A. (:35) Possessing His Garments

“And when they had crucified Him, they divided up His garments among themselves, casting lots;”

William Hendriksen: Having crucified him, the legionaries divided his garments by casting lots. In all probability by means of the throwing of dice the four pieces – headgear, sandals, belt, and outer garment – are divided among the four (John 19:23) soldiers. The seamless tunic, all of one piece, woven all the way from top to bottom, is also put into the lottery, all of this in accordance with the prophecy of Ps. 22:18 (LXX Ps. 21:19), though this reference to fulfillment is not found in Matthew but in John 19:23, 24.

Scott Harris: The clothing of the condemned would become the property of the soldiers assigned to perform the crucifixion. It was extra pay for them, but it also fulfilled another prophecy. Psalm 22:18 said that they would “divide My outer garments among them, and for My clothing they cast lots.” John tells us that Jesus’ outer garments were divided into four parts, but that they did not want to destroy Jesus’ tunic since it was seamless, so they cast lots for it. After this the soldiers sat down to watch and wait.

Crucifixion was designed to be a cruel method of death. It would bring its victims to the edge of maximum endurance of physical pain, but short of the point that would bring unconsciousness, and it was extended over a long period of time. It usually took a day or two for the condemned to die, but on occasion there would be those who might last three days, and there would be much physical agony the whole time.

There would be the pain from where the spikes had been driven through the feet and hands, actually the wrist area where the bone structure would support the weight. There would be pain from the scourging and the raw flesh from the scraping against the rough wood as well as the splinters that would work their way deeper into the flesh. But there was also pain from thirst, hunger, cramping, dizziness, fever, and sleeplessness.

Crucifixion brings death through suffocation. Breathing is difficult and accomplished by raising oneself up. Soon, the muscles begin to cramp, but as the carbon dioxide builds up the cramps partially subside. A few breaths are taken and the cramping returns. Cycles of partial suffocation and cramping continues until exhaustion takes over and the person can no longer lift himself to breathe. Such is a brief description of the agony of the cross. But Matthew does not dwell on the physical suffering. He concentrates on how the people responded to Jesus.

https://www.gracebible.org/crucifixion_jesus_matthew_273256

B. (:36) Preventing Any Rescue of His Body

“and sitting down, they began to keep watch over Him there.”

Grant Osborne: Some say Matthew added this to counter the later charge that Jesus was taken from the cross before he was actually dead (Hill, Carson), but this could also mean they already sensed something unusual and were enthralled, preparing for the centurion’s cry in v. 54 (France, Hagner).

IV. (:37) IDENTITY OF JESUS MOCKED AS THE KING OF THE JEWS

“And they put up above His head the charge against Him which read, ‘THIS IS JESUS THE KING OF THE JEWS.’”

D. A. Carson: The statement of the crime was often written on a white tablet in red or black letters and displayed on the cross. The charge against Jesus, written in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin (Jn 19:20), is highly ironic. Pilate, though desiring to offend the Jews (Jn 19:19–22), wrote more of the truth than he knew. Pilate rubs the noses of the Jews in their vassal status. To a Jew, “king of the Jews” meant “Messiah”; so the charge on which Jesus was executed was, according to Pilate, that he was a messianic pretender. Matthew’s Christian reader will remember the intertwining strands of royal Son and Suffering Servant and see their climax here.

Charles Swindoll: In crucifixion, a sign called a titulus indicating the name of the criminal and the crime was hung above the victim’s head so everybody passing by on the road below could see the price that was paid for serious infractions of Roman law. Signs such as MURDER, PIRACY, INSURRECTION, TREASON, and ROBBERY would have been common. But when passersby saw the sign hanging above Jesus’ head, written in Hebrew, Latin, and Greek, it undoubtedly would have caught their attention. Combining the information from all four Gospel accounts, Jesus’ sign read: THIS IS JESUS THE NAZAREWNE, THE KING OF THE JEWS (27:37; Mark 15:26; Luke 23:38; John 19:19). The chief priests were so troubled by this public statement labeling Jesus as King of the Jews that they asked Pilate to clarify that Jesus had claimed that He was King of the Jews. To this request, Pilate simply responded, “What I have written I have written” (John 19:21-22).

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What type of indignities were heaped upon Jesus?
- 2) How fortunate was Simon to have this divine encounter and be conscripted to carry the cross of Jesus?
- 3) Why would the soldiers have even wanted the garments of Christ after they were so torn and bloodstained?
- 4) What is the connection between the motif of the cross and the theme of kingship?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

William Hendriksen: [Regarding Simon] The following reconstruction, though not certain, is however probable. Simon, a Jew, has come to Jerusalem to attend one of the great festivals (in this case Passover), as was the custom of many Jews, including those from Cyrene (Acts 2:10). There was even a Cyrenian synagogue in Jerusalem (Acts 6:9).

Now on this particular Friday, returning to the city from a visit to the country, Simon is pressed into service by the soldiers who are leading Jesus to Calvary, perhaps (but this is by no means certain) along the Via Dolorosa (Sorrowful Way), and are just now coming through the gate out of the city. So – reluctantly at first? – Simon carries Christ's cross, arrives at Calvary, and witnesses what happens there. The behavior of Jesus and his words from the cross leave such an impression on Simon that he becomes a Christian. Subsequently he and his family are living in Rome. He may have been living there before, but in any event he was a Cyrenian by birth. (Among the early Christians there were many Cyrenians, Acts 11:19; 13:1.)

Mark, writing to the Romans, mentions "Simon, the father of Alexander and Rufus," as if to say, "people with whom you, in Rome, are well acquainted." Paul, in his letter to Romans (16:13), writes, "Greet Rufus, outstanding in the Lord, and his mother and mine." Evidently the mother of Rufus – hence, the wife of Simon – had rendered some motherly service to Paul.

If this reconstruction is factual, then the service which Simon rendered, through initially "forced," turned out to be a genuine blessing for himself, his family, and many others.,

S. Lewis Johnson: The King Crucified

Our Lord was crucified on a hill north of the city of Jerusalem. That in itself incidentally was probably not without purpose, because in the first of the offerings of the Old Testament, in the burnt offering, it was said that the animal should be sacrificed on the altar northward, and so probably even the direction from the center of the city at which our Lord was crucified is according to Scripture.

The topography of Golgotha may also have some significance, because two roads left from Golgotha. One of them led to Mount Zion, and the other lead to Gehenna. It's almost as if to say, from the place where our Lord was crucified there are two objectives. There are two places to which one may go. One may go to Zion, the place of communion, or one may go to Gehenna, the place of everlasting fire.

Most of the studies of our Lord's sufferings lay great stress upon the human side of his pains. They stress the shame: the spitting, the scourging, all of the physical sufferings that he underwent. There is reason for stressing that, of course, but we have been trying in the exposition in Matthew to stress the hand of God in his sufferings. We've been laying stress upon the statements of the Old Testament: It pleased the Lord to bruise him; Thou has brought me into the dust of death.

And we've been trying to point out the striking irony in the events of our Lord's passion, pointing out that often words had double meanings and in fact, the more important meaning is that second meaning, and that's what we want to try to stress again today as we come to the subject, the King Crucified, and deal really with a number of things that have to do with those sufferings.

J. Ligon Duncan: Then in verse 37 he's going to point us to something else. He points us to the title, the charge, the criminal charge that is placed above Jesus' head. Jesus is mockingly charged with being a claimant to the Jewish throne. When Pilate first ordered that this be written I have no doubt that part of it was Pilate's own despising of the Jews. He hated the Jewish people. And he thought what better way to mock the Jewish people than to charge this man as being the King of the Jews. That will offend them. And indeed we are told in one of the other gospels that the people came to Pilate, and they said don't say He is the King of the Jews, say He says that He is the King of the Jews. And Pilate says look, I've written what I've written. And so the charge, which hangs above Jesus' head, is that 'This is the King of the Jews.'

And you see what Matthew is doing there. Matthew is saying that Jesus' mockers have unwittingly but rightly identified Him. He's saying look, even as they mock Him, they are identifying Him as who He is. He is the King of the Jews. As that charge is fastened above His head, the irony of ironies hits you. You suddenly realize that He is paying the penalty on the cross for the crime of being who He is. What's the charge against Him? You're the King of the Jews. Well, you see what's implied is that He claims to be the King of the Jews, but He isn't. But the charge reads this is the King of the Jews, and you suddenly realize, well its true. He's dying because of who He really is. He is the King of the Jews. He is the Messiah.

What is Matthew doing? Matthew is pointing us to the glory of Christ even in the midst of all this gore. Men see a condemned criminal hanging between two condemned criminals. Matthew and the angels and God see the King of Israel. The King of the people of God. The Messiah of God, the Lord of glory.

David Guzik: In 1986, Dr. William Edwards wrote a remarkable article in the prestigious Journal of the American Medical Association titled "On the Physical Death of Jesus Christ." Following are some of the observations of Dr. Edwards and his associates. The quotations belong to the article, and much of the other text is paraphrased from the article.

iv. "Although the Romans did not invent crucifixion, they perfected it as a form of torture and capital punishment that was designed to produce a slow death with maximum pain and suffering."

v. The victim's back was first torn open by the scourging, then opened again as the congealing, clotting blood came off with the clothing that was removed at the place of crucifixion. When thrown on the ground to nail the hands to the crossbeam, the wounds were again opened, deepened, and contaminated with dirt. While attached to the upright cross, each breath would cause the painful wounds on the back to scrape against the rough wood of the upright beam and were further aggravated.

vi. Driving the nail through the wrist severed the large median nerve. This stimulated nerve caused bolts of fiery pain in both arms, and often resulted in a claw-like grip in the victim's hands.

vii. Beyond the severe pain, the major effect of crucifixion inhibited normal breathing. The weight of the body, pulling down on the arms and shoulders, tended to lock the respiratory muscles in an inhalation state, thus hindering exhalation. The lack of adequate respiration resulted in severe muscle cramps, which hindered breathing even further. To get a good breath, one had to push against the feet and flex the elbows, pulling from the shoulders. Putting the weight of the body on the feet produced more pain, and flexing the elbows twisted the hands hanging on the nails. Lifting the body for a breath also painfully scraped the back against the rough wooden post. Each effort to get a proper breath was agonizing, exhausting, and led to a sooner death.

viii. “Not uncommonly, insects would light upon or burrow into the open wounds or the eyes, ears, and nose of the dying and helpless victim, and birds of prey would tear at these sites. Moreover, it was customary to leave the corpse on the cross to be devoured by predatory animals.”

ix. Death from crucifixion could come from many sources: acute shock from blood loss; being too exhausted to breathe any longer; dehydration; stress-induced heart attack; or congestive heart failure leading to a cardiac rupture. If the victim did not die quickly enough, the legs were broken, and the victim was soon unable to breathe.

x. A Roman citizen could not be crucified except by direct order of Caesar; it was reserved for the worst criminals and lowest classes. No wonder that the Roman statesman Cicero said of crucifixion: “It is a crime to bind a Roman citizen; to scourge him is an act of wickedness; to execute him is almost murder: What shall I say of crucifying him? An act so abominable it is impossible to find any word adequately to express.” The Roman historian Tacitus called crucifixion “A torture fit only for slaves” – fit only for them because they were seen as sub-human.

xi. How bad was crucifixion? We get our English word excruciating from the Roman word “out of the cross.” “Consider how heinous sin must be in the sight of God, when it requires such a sacrifice!” (Commentator Adam Clarke)

TEXT: Matthew 27:38-44

TITLE: THE SHAME OF THE CROSS -- JESUS MOCKED BY ALL PARTIES AS HE IS CRUCIFIED

BIG IDEA:

PARADE OF MOCKERS CAST TAUNTS AND SCORN AT THE CRUCIFIED CHRIST

INTRODUCTION:

David Turner: The focus turns from the soldiers' actions (27:27–37) to the mockery by other observers of the crucifixion. This section is an inclusio framed by references to the two revolutionaries crucified with Jesus (27:38, 44). Jesus is successively mocked by people passing by (27:39–40), by the religious leaders (27:41–43), and by the two revolutionaries (27:44). The taunting drips with sarcasm that leverages the incongruity between Jesus's present plight and his lofty claims into a satirical slander of Jesus that emphatically denies his claims. A paraphrase would go something like this: "Surely someone who could destroy and rebuild the temple, someone who was the Son of God, could come down from the cross and save himself! How sad the one who would save others cannot save himself! If only he would come down from the cross, we would believe in him! Wouldn't God come down now and save his own Son who trusts in him?" . . .

The taunts emphasize the incompatibility between Jesus's purported power and his actual weakness (cf. Matt. 4:3, 6). Someone of his supposed stature could surely save his own life. The taunt to demonstrate divine sonship by coming down from the cross (27:40, 42, 44) is especially perverse, since Jesus endures the cross as the obedient Son of God (cf. 26:39, 42, 44). If Jesus comes down from the cross to save himself, he will not save his people from their sins (1:21; 10:38–39; 16:24–26; 20:28; 26:28).

R. T. France: We have already seen Jesus mocked by the Sanhedrin members immediately after they have convicted him of blasphemy (26:67–68). Now, with Jesus duly secured on the cross, they return to the attack, but this time supported by other Jews, the general public (v. 39) and the men on the other crosses. This is then a Jewish counterpart to the mockery by the Gentile soldiers in vv. 27–31; each ethnic group makes fun of Jesus' alleged claims, focusing on the terms to which they more naturally relate, the soldiers on the political claim to kingship, the Jews on the religious issues of temple-building and of being God's son. This combination of representatives of the Jewish people at several different levels (Sanhedrin members, ordinary passers-by and failed insurrectionists) provides a poignant picture of the rejection of Jesus by his own people.

Donald Hagner: The taunting of Jesus on the cross is the last human indignity he must face. In this pericope the motif of sarcastic unbelief continues. Perhaps the taunts and challenges also presented Jesus with his last hour of testing. A line of continuity runs from the testing of Jesus in the wilderness (4:1–11) through the rebuke of Peter (16:22–23) and the experience in Gethsemane (26:36–56) to the present narrative. Jesus could at any moment have refused to go on the path God had predetermined for him. He could have come down from the cross and thus at the last instant avoided his fate. Still, ironically, his opponents have no idea who he really is and that he could have come down from the cross. . .

Throughout this pericope, as in the preceding pericopes, the underlying paradox cannot be missed. What these mockers scornfully ridicule, what they regard as impossible, what they look upon as the wild claim of a charlatan is paradoxically the truth. The words with which they so confidently taunt Jesus, “Son of God,” “king of Israel,” are fully true, as the original readers of Matthew knew well. The key piece of information unknown to the mockers is that Jesus undergoes in his humiliation and crucifixion nothing other than the intended will of God. Their notion of the Son of God, the messianic king of Israel, as a triumphant, self-assertive, and powerful figure was mistaken—or at least partially so since he will ultimately appear as such in his future parousia. They cannot guess that they are speaking the truth about Jesus. In their blind opposition to the truth, they but accomplish the will of God.

Walter Wilson: The three segments of the unit (27:39–40, 41–43, 44) are distinguished by three different groups (those passing by, the chief priests and elders, and the two brigands), to which are assigned three different verbs of insult: βλασφημέω (“to blaspheme”), ἐμπαίζω (“to mock”), and ὀνειδίζω (“to taunt”).

Stu Weber: In the midst of this physical torture, the king was immersed in the emotional strain of incessant verbal abuse. Only the sovereign king of the universe could have kept himself on the cross. Truly, he was the Almighty.

(:38) PROLOGUE -- JESUS CRUCIFIED BETWEEN TWO INSURRECTIONISTS

“At that time two robbers were crucified with Him, one on the right and one on the left.”

Robert Gundry: The crucifixion of two bandits with Jesus heaps a further indignity on him (compare 26:55), and the present tense of “crucify” underscores this indignity. But “one on [his] right and one on [his] left” echoes 20:21, where the expression was associated with Jesus’ kingdom, so that the present echo may imply that despite appearances to the contrary, the crucifixion of two unnamed bandits on either side of Jesus previews the sitting of two unnamed disciples on either side of him when he comes in glory.

Grant Osborne: Ironically, the right and the left of Jesus is where James and John wished to be (20:20–23), but there is no glory or authority in those positions now (Davies and Allison).

Donald Hagner: The incongruity of this righteous man crucified between two nefarious criminals is striking.

I. (:39-40) JESUS MOCKED BY JEWS PASSING BY

“And those passing by were hurling abuse at Him, wagging their heads, 40 and saying, ‘You who are going to destroy the temple and rebuild it in three days, save Yourself! If You are the Son of God, come down from the cross.’”

Grant Osborne: especially those coming by the major road into Jerusalem (see on v. 33).

R. T. France: “If you are the Son of God” echoes the preamble to two of the devil’s temptations in 4:3, 6; here again Jesus must have felt the force of the temptation to exploit his special relationship with God in order to escape physical suffering. But that temptation had already been faced and overcome in Gethsemane (and cf. 26:53–54). Indeed it is that very relationship as “Son of God” which paradoxically requires Jesus to go through with his Father’s purpose on the cross. In some sense even the Gentile soldiers will see the truth of this in v. 54.

Leon Morris: The passersby were people who had no business at the place of the crucifixion but who saw what was going on and joined in the general abuse of the man on the central cross. It is possible that Matthew’s choice of the term is reminiscent of Lamentations 1:12: “Is it nothing to you, all you who pass by? Look and see if there is any sorrow like my sorrow....” Probably many of these people had been in the crowds that clamored for Jesus’ death; having done what they could to bring about his crucifixion, it is not likely that they would pass by the spectacle of the execution. . .

It is indeed blasphemy when mortals in this way dictate to the Son of God how he should exercise his divine sonship.

II. (:41-43) JESUS MOCKED BY THE JEWISH RELIGIOUS LEADERS

“In the same way the chief priests also, along with the scribes and elders, were mocking Him, and saying, 42 ‘He saved others; He cannot save Himself. He is the King of Israel; let Him now come down from the cross, and we shall believe in Him. 43 He trusts in God; let Him deliver Him now, if He takes pleasure in Him; for He said, ‘I am the Son of God.’”

D. A. Carson: Matthew understands that, morally speaking, he can’t save himself precisely because he came to do his Father’s will, not because the nails hold him in place—and the Father’s will is that by Jesus’ not saving himself he will save others.

J. Ligon Duncan: Jesus Mocked (By Gentiles, Jews and Thieves)

They are saying that Jesus’ Father does not delight in Him. Now our Lord Jesus had suffered many things. A disciple had betrayed him. His best friends had deserted him. Roman soldiers had scourged him. He had been unjustly treated by a Roman court and by a Jewish court. He had been led to the cross with hurling of abuse. He had faced the mocking of the multitude. But I want to suggest to you that hearing from the leaders, the spiritual leaders of His own people, the people who were vested with the responsibility to teach the people of God, the way of God, and to teach them the law of God, to hear from their lips the charge that His Father doesn’t delight in Him, you and I have no idea how that impacted the Lord Jesus Christ. We were told by the Lord Jesus Himself that His delight was to do the will of God. That it was His meat to do the will of God. And now He is on a cross dying in excruciating pain, and He hears the religious leaders of His people say, “God does not delight in Him. The Father does not delight in Him.” You and I will never know, even in glory, we’ll never know what that did to our Lord.

Matthew is saying, but look even as these men insult Him and question who He is, they’re actually proving who He is. Because as they question whether He is the Messiah, they are actually proving that He is the Messiah by fulfilling Scripture. Because in Psalm 22, verse 8, God said that the enemies of His Messiah would mock Him and would question whether He delighted in Him. And so by their very taunting, they are proving that He is who they say He is not. And so Matthew is saying, oh yes, He is the Messiah and the Savior. And even though these religious men don’t think they need grace, He is the King of grace and the Savior.

David Thompson: The religious leadership of Israel was all there at Calvary—the chief priest, the scribes and the elders were all there and they, too, were mocking Him.

- 1) They mocked Him as our Savior. 27:42a They challenge His ability to save others by His apparent inability to save Himself. Truth is had He saved Himself, He could not have saved others.
- 2) They mocked Him as Israel's King. 27:42b Their thinking was Israel's King could not be put to death by Roman power. The leaders say if He will come down off that cross and save Himself, they would believe in Him.
- 3) They mocked Him as God's Son. 27:43 You are always saying you are the Son of God. Let's see God your Father get you out of this dilemma. The truth is it was God the Father who orchestrated this dilemma. In all reality, the fact that He stayed on that cross proves His Sonship.

III. (:44) JESUS MOCKED BY THE TWO REVOLUTIONARIES ON EITHER SIDE

“And the robbers also who had been crucified with Him were casting the same insult at Him.”

David Thompson: Why did Jesus allow these terrible things happen to Him?

- I Pet. 2:24 says this: “and He Himself bore our sins in His body on the cross so that we might die to sin and live to righteousness for by His wounds you were healed.”
- John said, “He laid down His life for us” (I John 3:16).
- Paul said, “He was made sin for us” (II Cor. 5:21)
- and “He was made a curse for us” (Gal. 3:13).

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How painful must it have been for a person of perfect integrity and sinless perfection to be associated with vile sinners in His death?
- 2) How was Christ able to focus on completing His work of redemption rather than responding to these wicked taunts?
- 3) How do we respond when people revile us and insult us for our allegiance to Jesus Christ?
- 4) Do we respond with contempt towards these mockers or with a heart of compassion that desires they would come to experience the same grace of God that has granted us forgiveness of our sins and spiritual illumination?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Daniel Doriani: The soldiers may be indifferent, but most Jewish witnesses mock Jesus as they watch or pass by. There is a certain logic to their position. If Jesus were the Messiah, he would hardly be on a cross between two criminals (27:38). No Messiah, no true king, could die this way! As they see it, Jesus' crucifixion proves he is an imposter. Therefore, "those who passed by hurled insults at him, shaking their heads and saying, 'You who are going to destroy the temple and build it in three days, save yourself! Come down from the cross, if you are the Son of God'" (27:39–40). . .

This mockery he heard was a fist in God's face. His honor was at stake and Jesus had a perfect answer. Yet with perfect self-mastery, Jesus remained silent. He refused to trade insult for insult: "When they hurled their insults at him, he did not retaliate; when he suffered, he made no threats. Instead, he entrusted himself to him who judges justly" (1 Peter 2:23). Jesus' silence announced his reply: "I will not come down from the cross!" He chose to save others, so he did not save himself. Jesus loved his people too much to defend himself. So he did nothing to vindicate himself. When he finally spoke, he called out to God.

Stanley Saunders: Now that Jesus is crucified, the parade of mockers comes to him. They "shake their heads" (Ps. 22:7) and resume their lampoons based on the themes of his trials. The new element in their taunts is a persistent invitation to Jesus to "save himself" and "come down from the cross" (27:40, 42). They presume that salvation lies in escape from the cross. If Jesus has the power to destroy and rebuild the temple (cf. 26:61), why can he not save himself? If he is God's Son (echoing the temptation, 4:6), why not come down from the cross? The chief priests, scribes, and elders also reappear to mock Jesus' saving power (27:41–42): "If he is the King of Israel, let him come down from the cross." They claim that if he did so, they would then believe him. They misunderstand his mission and the meaning of the cross. Twice in the Gospel Jesus has offered the Jewish authorities the sign of Jonah (12:38–42; 16:1–4), but they have not understood it. The real king of Israel will not flee death, but defeat it. The cross and resurrection are the sign of power the authorities seek, but not in the terms they would accept. They also taunt Jesus, who has claimed to be God's Son, for "trusting God." They invite God to "deliver him now" (i.e., from the cross), if God wants to. But Jesus' identity as Israel's king and God's Son is expressed perfectly in the conquest of death, not in escape from it, which would leave its power intact. The leaders of Israel, it turns out, trust the power of death more than they trust God. Finally, the bandit terrorists being crucified to his right and left add their taunts (27:44). They join the disciples, the leaders, and the crowds in stumbling over the cross. . .

The chief priests' and elders' string of taunts places in ironic relief Matthew's understanding of the cross and salvation:

- (1) the destruction and rebuilding of the temple concerns his death and resurrection (and, secondarily, the destruction of the temple a generation later);
- (2) Jesus has not come to save himself, but to save others;
- (3) Jesus displays the divine character of his power as King and Son of God, especially in the defeat of death; and
- (4) the cross makes a public display of the conquest of death. There is truly no salvation outside the cross, and no transformation of the world that leaves death's power still intact.

The mocking and torture of Jesus shows humanity at its worst, but also reveals that the promise of God's salvation is drawing near.

John MacArthur: The Wickedness of the Crucifixion

To help us see the wickedness of the scene, I want to draw to your attention four different groups that appear in the scene. Let's call them the ignorant wicked, the knowing wicked, the fickle wicked, and the religious wicked. And I want to suggest to you that every person in the world who does not come to faith in Jesus Christ, every Christ-rejecting person fits into these groups. They are constant. They were there at the cross. They're around today. And everybody fits somewhere in these four groups.

Now last time we looked at the ignorant wicked who were illustrated to us by the callous soldiers in verse 27 through 37. . .

But there's a more wicked group than that group and that's the one we come to in verse 38. Let's call these the knowing wicked. They're not ignorant. They know. Now they don't know everything but they do know something. "Then were there two robbers crucified with Him, one on the right hand and another on the left." Now of course, this is another way to dishonor Christ, to defame Him, to put Him in the middle of a couple of robbers, a couple of, as Luke calls them, malefactors, which means evil doers, criminals. Put Him up there and thus dishonor Him and shame Him by His association with them. So He is with the wicked in His death. . .

But even they are not the severest of rejecters because there's another group. We see them in verses 39 and 40. I like to call those the fickle wicked. I suppose there are a lot of different terms we could use, but they are illustrated by the careless passersby. The ignorant wicked – the callous soldiers. The knowing wicked are illustrated by what we saw in verse 38, the thieves who I guess we could say are the crass thieves. They're just into the world and that's the sphere of their concern. And now we find the careless crowd who represent to us the people who for a while hear about Christ, understand about Christ, and even make some kind of overture to Christ, even invite Christ to be a part of their life to some extent, but eventually turn apostate or turn away from Him. . .

They are reminiscent of evil people today – the fickle people. So many people that you know have been to church, they've attended the church, maybe they've been raised in the church, they know the message. Maybe they had Christian parents. Maybe they've had Christian training. They maybe have made a profession of faith at some point along the line. They've been baptized. They've gone to the church. But that's all in the past. They're not interested in that anymore. They've gone on to other things. Jesus didn't fulfill their expectation. In fact, when Jesus rode in, they thought He would attack the Romans. He came back into town and attacked the Jews by wiping out the temple buying and selling. And that was not in His favor. They thought He ought to attack Rome, not them. And now how could this be the Messiah? All week long and He's done nothing. He's been here all week and now look at Him, He's hanging on a cross, put there by the Romans. He is a victim. This is not our Messiah. . .

The world is full of people like that even today. People whose only interest in Jesus is an immediate satisfaction, and an immediate self-indulgence. And if He doesn't deliver what they want when they want it, it's over with. . .

But they're not the worse group. The worse group is yet to come in verses 41 to 43, the religious wicked. They are illustrated to us by the canting – and that word basically means insincere and hypocritical – the canting leaders, insincere, hypocritical, the lowest level of blasphemers, religious hypocrites who parade their piosity, who want to appear to represent God and know the truth and be pure and godly and virtuous and represent the Word of God. And the truth of it is, they're filled with hate and vilification toward the very Christ of God Himself. In verse 41 we meet them. It wasn't just a fickle crowd, likewise also the chief priests. All those various orders of priests that operated within the temple ministries were mocking Him along with the scribes, who were the authorities on the law, and the elders, who were supposed to be the revered and renowned men of maturity and wisdom in the land. They constitute the Sanhedrin, the ruling body of Israel.

So all of these leaders who are supposedly the religious elite, are supposed to know everything there is to know about the truth of God and the Word of God and the mind of God and the heart of God, who pretend to love God and revere His Word and hold up His name, they come along and what did they say? And notice, please, that the crowd talked to Jesus. The leaders don't talk to Christ. They hate Him. He is so despised by them they will not talk to Him, they only talk about Him. So they talk to each other about Him. Verse 42, "He saved others." And they mean by that His healing ministry, His deliverance from demons. "He did it for others. Himself He cannot save." They never denied, ever in the New Testament, the miracles of Jesus – never. It was impossible to do that. There is never an indication that the religious leaders of Israel denied His miracles. They said they were by Satan done, by Satan accomplished, but they never denied them. They said He does what He does by the power of Beelzebub, but they never denied them.

Steve Brandon: The Crucifixion of Christ – The Shame of the Cross

Hebrews 12:2 tells us to fix "our eyes on Jesus, the author and perfecter of faith, who for the joy set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame, and has sat down at the right hand of the throne of God" (Heb. 12:2). As terrible as the sufferings were, I remember coming to realize that the Bible speaks of the shame hurled at Jesus as being the most hurtful part of the crucifixion. Jesus Christ endured the pain of the cross, all the while knowing the shame of the cross. There is more to the cross than the mere physical sufferings of Jesus. While Jesus was upon the cross, He was shamed by many. In fact, in verses 35-44, we see one person after another ridiculing and hurling verbal abuses at Jesus. Psalm 22:7 says, "All who see me sneer at me. They separate with the lip. They wag the head."

When the day comes that you are dying, I guarantee you that you don't want to hear a bunch of different people coming to your bedside telling you of what a fool you have been. You don't want to hear of all of your past failures. You don't want to be reminded of the promises that you never kept. No, when you come to die, you will want to be encouraged by the truth of God's word. When you can no longer open your eyes, and when you struggle to breathe, you want people reading Scripture in your ear. You want people singing the hymns of the faith around you. You want people encouraging you to continue on believing in Jesus.

[Illustration: Cf. the way people gathered around the bedside of Mr. Nic as he was passing away to thank him for his faithful youth sports ministry in Catonsville.] . . .

Never underestimate how difficult this was for Christ to accept. We have this saying, "Sticks and stones break my bones, but names will never hurt me." It may be a nice saying, but it isn't true. Words can do much harm. . .

All of this sort of mocking was intended to bring shame upon Jesus Christ. Lest you think that such mocking only took place in the days of Jesus, please realize that such mockings are a bit similar to the one who tries to prove that God doesn't exist by making some preposterous claim. I've heard a few people in my lifetime mock God by saying, "If God is really God, let Him strike me dead with lightening in the next five seconds." And five seconds later they proclaim, "See! He didn't strike me dead. He surely is not real." Certainly, Jesus could have come down from the cross. Jesus had said that He had the authority to summon twelve legions of angels (Matt. 26:53) to help Him. Certainly, God, the Father, could have delivered Him. Certainly, God can strike people dead in the next five seconds (and He has done it before!). But, in His mercy, God remains silently patient.

But, for the greater good, God refused to allow any of these things to happen. Should Jesus have saved Himself, we could not be saved. There would be no atonement for our sin! And yet, Jesus was mocked upon the cross as if He was a weak and impotent impostor. This was the shame of the cross.

<https://sermons.rvbc.cc/sermons/2005-036>

J. Ligon Duncan: What's Matthew telling you there? He's saying that everybody needs a Savior. Religious men need a Savior. Passersby need a Savior. Condemned criminals, of course they need a Savior. We all need a Savior. We all need grace. But you know the sad thing is that people who don't have grace don't think they need it. And so they sit there, and they revile the Lord Jesus Christ. And its only when God in His mercy shows you that you need grace, that you suddenly realize that everything you need is already there in Christ. May God show you your need of grace, because the minute you see your need of grace, He will show you who provides it.

TEXT: Matthew 27:45-56

TITLE: COSMIC TESTIMONY TO JESUS' IDENTITY AT HIS DEATH

BIG IDEA:

THE CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS WAS AN EARTH-SHAKING EVENT

INTRODUCTION:

Walter Wilson: In keeping with the magnitude of the event, Jesus's final moments of life are depicted in a manner that is both solemn and dramatic. The scene opens with the supernatural onset of darkness over the land, the absence of light corresponding to the sense of abandonment conveyed by Jesus's final words. Continuing their derision of Jesus, some of the bystanders misinterpret his prayer as a call for Elijah to rescue him. At the moment of his death, the sense of abandonment gives way to a sense of vindication, as the veil of the temple is split in two and many holy ones are raised from their tombs, signifying how Jesus's death brings life to many. These extraordinary events prompt the soldiers to acclaim Jesus as God's Son, while the scene concludes with a note about the witnessing presence of many women who had followed Jesus from Galilee.

Stanley Saunders: Matthew's story of Jesus' death is riddled with apocalyptic images and references. This moment marks the decisive turn of the ages. Jesus has been announcing and embodying the empire of God, but now, with his death, the good news is realized with definitive power and clarity. Matthew fuses the death of Jesus with the release of the Spirit and other apocalyptic signs. All that is solid now shakes. Even death itself, the primary power by which Rome and the Jerusalem elites have sought to suppress the power of God revealed in Jesus, is swept aside. The eschatological floodgates now open wide.

David Turner: The narrative can be analyzed as containing two similar cycles that bracket Jesus's death:

Cosmic sign: Darkness at noon (27:45; cf. Amos 8:9)
Jesus's cry of abandonment (27:46; cf. Ps. 22:1)
Observers (27:47-49)
Jesus dies (27:50)
Cosmic signs (27:51-53; cf. Ezek. 37:12)
Soldiers' cry of amazement (27:54)
Observers (27:55-56)

Jesus's death is bracketed by darkness (27:45) and an earthquake (27:51), showing that nature itself testifies to the epochal significance of the event.

Donald Hagner: The death of Jesus is not only the climax of the passion narrative but also the climax of Jesus' earthly work. The Gospels are books of "good news" primarily because of what is accomplished through the death of Jesus. Here we come to the gospel. At the heart of the story is Jesus' death in fulfillment of God's will and for the salvation of the world. But the death of God's Son involves impenetrable mystery. It is attended by a supernatural darkness and followed by remarkable events. Matthew's account of the death itself is nevertheless simple, sober, and restrained in character.

R. T. France: But alongside the human drama at the cross Matthew records a series of physical events, the darkness, the tearing of the temple curtain, the earthquake and the resurrection of dead people, which add a powerful sense of the far-reaching significance of the death of Jesus, and contribute to the climactic exclamation of the soldiers in v. 54. The last of these events, the raising of the dead, is described at some length; the problems which arise in understanding its status as literal history must not be allowed to distract attention from its clear symbolic significance for Matthew, who is the only evangelist to record this particular phenomenon. J. P. Meier summarizes the impact of these verses as follows: "Here, with the full panoply of apocalyptic imagery, Mt portrays the death of Christ as the end of the Old Testament cult, as the earth-shaking beginning of the new aeon (bringing about the resurrection of the dead), and as the moment when the Gentiles first come to full faith in the Son of God."

(:45) PROLOGUE – DARKNESS ON THE LAND

"Now from the sixth hour darkness fell upon all the land until the ninth hour."

Walter Wilson: As elsewhere in Scripture, the phenomenon of total darkness is presented as a form of divine intervention in human affairs. The intertextual connections suggest that in 27:45 it functions both as a portent of divine judgment and as an expression of the Father's mourning for his "beloved" (cf. 3:17; 12:18; 17:5). Darkness reigns over the earth from the sixth hour (noon) until the ninth, the three hours of gloom corresponding to the three days Jesus remains in the grave (cf. 12:40; 26:61; 27:40, 63). Alternatively, perhaps we are supposed to see the event as an inversion of Exod 10:21–23, in which darkness covers the land of Egypt for three days while the Israelites have light. The sign of judgment that fell on the land of Israel's enemies now falls on the land of Israel itself.

In Exod 10:23, divine darkness imposes a cessation of normal activities ("they did not see one another, nor did anyone rise from his place"), a scenario that may apply to our story as well, since nothing else is reported as taking place during the three-hour span. In any event, 27:45 creates a dramatic prelude to 27:46, the cry of dereliction.

Michael Wilkins: This was not an eclipse, for the Passover was at the full moon, but was some unknown act of God indicating his judgment on the sins of the world.

Grant Osborne: This darkness is a harbinger of the coming final judgment (as in Amos, Joel, Zephaniah), and the judgment is vicariously on Jesus as the atoning sacrifice for sin. This will be reflected next in his cry of agony on the cross.

Robert Gundry: The phraseology concerning the onset of darkness echoes Exodus 10:22 and Amos 8:9–10. In both of those passages supernatural darkness expresses God's displeasure, so that here too the darkness expresses God's displeasure at the killing of his Son. (Astronomically, a natural eclipse of the sun wouldn't have occurred during the Passover, a time of full moon, or lasted for three hours.) Emphasizing this displeasure are the onset of darkness at noon, when the sun is at its zenith, its covering "all the land," and its lasting till midafternoon. Since the passion of Jesus previews the persecution of his disciples, God's displeasure at Jesus' crucifixion carries over to their persecution and thus provides them encouragement.

I. (:46-50) CRY OF THE LAMB OF GOD

A. (:46) Cry of Dereliction

“And about the ninth hour Jesus cried out with a loud voice, saying, ‘Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani?’ that is, ‘My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?’”

Walter Wilson: It is significant that Jesus’s first and only words from the cross are addressed not to any human characters in the story but to God, thus taking the form of a prayer. It is probably also significant that the time at which he “cried with a loud voice” is given as the ninth hour, that is, the ritual time of Jews for the afternoon prayer (Acts 3:1; cf. 10:3). Even in his final moments, abandoned and rejected by all, Jesus joins his people in prayer. . . The darkness that can be heard in Jesus’s words corresponds to the darkness that can be seen encompassing the land. As Brown observes, the portrayal of Jesus “resorting to his mother tongue” at this point adds further to the pathos of the scene.

Michael Wilkins: Once again the crucifixion scene is reminiscent of Psalm 22. Jesus is experiencing the separation from the Father that must accompany bearing the sin of his people (1:21; 20:28; 26:28). He now bears the divine retribution and punishment for sin, as the Father’s cup of wrath is poured out on him in divine judgment of sin. In the apostle Paul’s words, “God made him who had no sin to be sin for us, so that in him we might become the righteousness of God” (2 Cor. 5:21), and, “Christ redeemed us from the curse of the law by becoming a curse for us, for it is written: ‘Cursed is everyone who is hung on a tree’” (Gal. 3:13).

Grant Osborne: most theological reflections center on Jesus’ realization of his vicarious sacrifice. He has become the sin offering, and at this dark moment God must turn away from sin. As in Gethsemane Jesus is experiencing the depths of pain in his very soul, but this in no way mitigates his victory there, and Ps 22 is a perfect source for his expression of agony. Beneath his real pain there is still a trust in God, and he knows his deliverance is coming.

D. A. Carson: Many suggest that Jesus quoted Psalm 22:1 in Hebrew, reverting to the ancient language of Scripture in his hour of utmost agony. Only this, it is argued, accounts for the confusion with “Elijah” in v.47 and provides a plausible explanation for the rendering “my power” (hē dynamis mou, presupposing Semitic hēlî) in the apocryphal Gospel of Peter. In this view Mark, or an early copyist of Mark, has turned Jesus’ words into Aramaic, recognizing that Jesus more commonly spoke Aramaic than Hebrew.

However, though Jesus was probably at least trilingual (Hebrew, Aramaic, Greek—with perhaps some Latin), the overwhelming textual evidence for the rest of the cry supports an Aramaic original. Even Matthew’s Hebraic-sounding Eli may in fact support an Aramaic original, because the Targum (written in Aramaic) to Psalm 22:1 has ’ēlî. Apparently some Aramaic speakers preserved the Hebrew name for God in the same way some English speakers sometimes refer to him as Yahweh.

Leon Morris: Abandonment is not the whole story. We must bear in mind that Jesus cried out, “My God, my God.” The human Jesus felt and gave expression to the abandonment, but he also retained his trust. “My” points to a continuing relationship; according to Bengel, he “adds ‘My’ with confidence, patience, and self-resignation.” E. Stauffer has further pointed out that there can be a crying out after God as well as a crying to God for help. In the anguish of godforsakenness Jesus still cries out in trust. The human Jesus might still be puzzled (“Why...?”). But he trusts, and we should not miss this aspect of the cry of dereliction.

B. (:47-49) Cry Misinterpreted as Directed to Elijah

1. (:47) Misunderstanding of Jesus’ Cry

“And some of those who were standing there, when they heard it, began saying, ‘This man is calling for Elijah.’”

Grant Osborne: Many bystanders standing some distance away heard his cry of “Eli” and thought he was calling for “Elijah,” who was taken up to heaven in a whirlwind and a chariot of fire in 2 Kgs 2:1–12 and became a messianic figure (Mal 4:5–6). Here this reflects the belief by many Jews that Elijah was ready to appear from heaven in time of need.

Leon Morris: This does not mean that any of the bystanders held that Elijah would come to help Jesus, but only that they thought that Jesus might have hoped for help from the prophet. They were convinced that Jesus was in a situation from which he could not have escaped and could not escape; therefore it was only logical that he should appeal to some heavenly being to help him. So far were they still from understanding what was happening before their very eyes.

2. (:48) Ministry of Drink

“And immediately one of them ran, and taking a sponge, he filled it with sour wine, and put it on a reed, and gave Him a drink.”

3. (:49) Mystery Regarding Role of Elijah

“But the rest of them said, ‘Let us see whether Elijah will come to save Him.’”

C. (:50) Cry of Yielding Up His Life

“And Jesus cried out again with a loud voice, and yielded up His spirit.”

D. A. Carson: This loud cry reminds us once more of Jesus’ hideous agony. Matthew’s “he gave up his spirit” (“spirit” here is equivalent to “life”) suggests Jesus’ sovereignty over the exact time of his own death. It was at this moment, when he was experiencing the abyss of his alienation from the Father and was being cruelly mocked by those he came to serve, that he chose to yield his life as a “ransom for many”.

R. T. France: The verb used here for “cry” is not the same as the “shout” of v. 46; it is used three times in the LXX of Ps 22 (vv. 2, 5, 24) for the sufferer’s appeals to God, and its use here might be a further echo of that psalm. Matthew does not tell us the nature of this second loud cry. It is tempting to identify it as the triumphant “It is finished” which Jesus utters at this point in John 19:30, or with Luke’s “Father, into your hands I entrust my spirit,” and thus to find here the reversal of the sense of desolation in v. 46; the conviction of the watching soldiers that Jesus really was God’s son (v. 54) would also follow more naturally from a noble or peaceful death than from one of despair. But Matthew does not tell us its content, and he links this cry with that of v. 46 by using the same phrase, “with a loud voice.” The loudness of the cry at the time of death again indicates that Jesus is not just fading away, but dying while in full possession of his senses.

“He let go his spirit/breath” (aphēken to pneuma) is an unusual way to describe death. The ambiguity of the Greek pneuma, “breath” or “spirit,” leaves some uncertainty as to why

Matthew chose this phrase. At least it means, like the verb exepneusen used by Mark and Luke, that he “stopped breathing” (so Hagner here), and perhaps that is all it means, but the unexpected phrase with its active verb may suggest a sense of Jesus voluntarily relinquishing his life (for the idea cf. John 10:17–18). Cf. John’s phrase paredōken to pneuma, which perhaps means he handed his spirit over to God (and cf. Acts 7:59); this would agree with the last words of Jesus in Luke, “Father, into your hands I entrust my spirit,” quoting Ps 31:6. “Spirit” here means “that which animates or gives life to the body;” there is no reason to see any reference to the Holy Spirit.

II. (:51-53) COSMIC IMPACT OF THE DEATH OF CHRIST – 3 DRAMATIC EVENTS

David Thompson: JESUS CHRIST WAS THE DIVINE KING IN HIS DEATH ON THE CROSS AND THE SPECIFIC EVENTS THAT OCCURRED AT HIS DEATH PROVE IT.

A. (:51a) Temple Veil Event – New Access to God

“And behold, the veil of the temple was torn in two from top to bottom,”

Walter Wilson: The fact that the curtain is rent “in two” suggests an act of violence, while the fact that it is split from the “top” suggests an act of heavenly origin. In light of Jesus’s prediction in 24:2 (“not one stone will be left upon another”) as well as the temple logion in 26:61 (“I am able to destroy the temple”), of which we have just had a reminder (27:40), the act is best understood as a portent of the temple’s destruction.

Michael Wilkins: The word for curtain (katapetasma) is used in the LXX sometimes of the curtain between the Holy Place and the Most Holy Place, and sometimes of the curtain over the entrance to the Holy Place. The former is more likely meant here. The curtain was an elaborately woven fabric of seventy-two twisted plaits of twenty-four threads each and the veil was sixty feet long and thirty wide (cf. m. Seqal. 8:5). Being split from top to bottom is a sign that God has done this, signifying that the new and living way is now open into the presence of God through the sacrifice of Christ.

Stanley Saunders: The torn veil marks the effective end of the sacrificial system and the temple, as well as the movement of God’s presence and power into the world. The turn of the ages has begun.

Grant Osborne: There are two interpretations (both are probably in Matthew—so Carson, France, Hagner, Nolland):

- (1) a new access to God, signifying the end of the sacrificial system and a direct relationship with God—connected with the Isaianic Servant imagery;
- (2) a portent of the coming destruction of the temple (so interpreted by the early church fathers)—connected with the Olivet Discourse.

The imagery of the “splitting” of the veil suggests violence and fits the developing theme of divine judgment on temple and people. At the same time, it brings about the results of Jesus’ death, namely, a new openness of relationship with God, signifying direct access as a result of the once-for-all sacrifice of Christ on our behalf. As France says, “access to God will no longer be through the old, discredited cultic system but through Jesus himself, and more specifically through his death as a ransom for many.”

D. A. Carson: If the death of Jesus opened up a fresh access to God that made the OT sacrificial system and the Levitical high priesthood obsolete, then an entire change in the Mosaic covenant must follow. It is impossible to grapple with Matthew's fulfillment themes and see how even the law points prophetically to Messiah and hear Jesus' promise of a new covenant grounded in his death (26:26–29) without seeing that the tearing of the veil signifies the obsolescence of the temple ritual and the law governing it. Jesus himself is the New Temple, the meeting place of God and man; the old is obsolete. The rent veil does indeed serve as a sign of the temple's impending destruction—a destruction conceived not as a brute fact but as a theological necessity.

B. (:51b) Earthquake Event – Fierce Judgment

“and the earth shook; and the rocks were split,”

Stanley Saunders: The shaking of the earth and the splitting of rocks (27:51b; cf. 24:7, 29; again, the passive voice suggests divine agency) are classic images associated with judgment (cf. 1 Kgs. 19:11–12; Isa. 2:19; 29:6; Ezek. 38:19; Pss. 68:8; 104:32; 114:7) and, in apocalyptic literature, with the end of one age and the beginning of another (cf. 4 Ezra 6:13–16; 9:2–3; 2 Bar. 27:7; 70:8; Zech. 14:4–5; Ezek. 37:1–14, esp. 37:12). Again the transformation is spatial: what was solid is no longer so. God is shaking the whole creation (cf. Heb. 12:26; Hag. 2:6, 21–22, where the shaking of earth and heaven accompanies the overthrow of earthly empires).

Van Parunak: Usually the opening of the veil is understood as enabling us to come into the presence of God. This is a valid image, developed extensively in Hebrews (e.g., 4:16), but the association with an earthquake suggests another twist to the imagery. The veil was torn, not only to let us in, but to show that God was coming out.

and the earth did quake,--This association calls to mind a passage in the Psalms that envisions God being aroused in wrath by the sufferings of his saint David. Note the reference to God in his temple, and his exit from it.

Ps 18:4 The sorrows of death compassed me, and the floods of ungodly men made me afraid. 5 The sorrows of hell compassed me about: the snares of death prevented me. 6 In my distress I called upon the LORD, and cried unto my God: he heard my voice out of his temple, and my cry came before him, even into his ears. 7 Then the earth shook and trembled; the foundations also of the hills moved and were shaken, because he was wrath. 8 There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled by it. 9 He bowed the heavens also, and came down: and darkness was under his feet.

Note the conjunction of God coming out of his temple with the earthquake (Matt 27:51) and darkness (27:45). Not only did the torn veil let us come into the presence of God, but perhaps more importantly, it marks God's coming forth in wrath against his enemies. The first effect of the death of Christ is to set loose the wrath of God against those who slew him.

and the rocks rent;--Only one other passage talks about rocks πετραί being torn σχιζω, and it refers to the rock that the Lord opened in the wilderness to give water to the people of God.

Isa 48:21 And they thirsted not when he led them through the deserts: he caused the waters to flow out of the rock for them: he clave the rock also, and the waters gushed out.

Paul later identifies the rock with Christ

1Co 10:4 And did all drink the same spiritual drink: for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ.

So the second effect of the death of Christ is to make provision for his people.

C. (:52-53) Resurrection Event – Eschatological Hope

“and the tombs were opened; and many bodies of the saints who had fallen asleep were raised; 53 and coming out of the tombs after His resurrection they entered the holy city and appeared to many.”

D. A. Carson: The resurrection of the hagioi (“saints,” i.e., “holy people,” v.52) remains extraordinarily difficult for two reasons. First, its extreme brevity and lack of parallels raise many unanswered questions: What kind of bodies do these “holy people” have? Do they die again? How many people saw them? How public were these appearances? Second, a quick reading of the text gives the impression that though the holy people were raised when Jesus died, they did not leave the tombs and appear to the citizens of the “holy city” until after Jesus’ resurrection (v.53). What were they doing in between?

Stanley Saunders: The resurrection of the dead, the restoration of Israel, the pouring out of the Spirit, and the expectation of divine judgment were pillars in popular Jewish eschatological expectation. By recording the resurrection of the saints here, Matthew links the resurrection integrally with the death of Jesus. He also effectively democratizes the resurrection: not only will Jesus be raised, but the more general resurrection has begun. But Matthew also creates a problem, which must be resolved by literary/temporal sleight of hand. Jesus himself has not yet been raised, so the resurrection of the saints is out of sequence. Matthew addresses the problem with the clarification in 27:53 that the saints really didn’t appear until after Jesus was raised, even though the account suggests that their resurrection coincides with his death. Neither God nor the evangelist is bound to our modern, linear conceptions of time. Matthew’s literary tactic serves to indicate the true nature and significance of Jesus’ death.

Grant Osborne: There are many questions about this; for example, how many were raised (probably just a few)? And was this a resuscitation like Lazarus, so that they lived out a life on earth and died, or a resurrection into their glorified bodies, so that they were taken up with Christ to heaven (most prefer the latter)?

Charles Swindoll: One plausible interpretation pertaining to who was raised suggests that it was not all the dead saints who were raised, but just some who had died recently. The text implies that these “saints” were recognizable to many in Jerusalem, which suggests that they were not ancient ancestors whose identities were long forgotten. In line with this understanding, they may have been followers of Jesus who had died during His earthly ministry. Presumably, they would have been raised in restored mortal bodies, like Lazarus (John 11:43-44). As such, they would have eventually died again, with hopes of their future, glorious resurrection.

Another possible view is that with Jesus’ resurrection, some (or all) of the Old Testament saints (perhaps along with those people who had recently died during Jesus’ ministry) were raised in glorious resurrection bodies just like Jesus’. Jesus was, indeed, the “first fruits” (1 Cor. 15:23), meaning that He was the first to be raised in such a glorified body – immortal, incorruptible, and fit for eternal, heavenly existence. If this is the case, then Christ brought with Him to heaven a select group of saints in their glorious bodies to be the first to participate in the resurrection harvest that will occur for others at the Second Coming. A few of these were permitted to appear to people in Jerusalem as a sign of Jesus' resurrection power.

R. T. France: His word order allows us to understand either that they did not come out of the opened tombs until after Jesus' resurrection, or (rather less naturally) that they emerged immediately but remained outside the city until then. Either way there is some narrative awkwardness, but this makes it the more likely that we are meant to notice the sequence, "after Jesus' resurrection." His resurrection is the first, theirs the consequence (cf. 1 Cor 15:20–23; 1 Thes 4:14). In order to make this point, however, Matthew might more appropriately have linked this occurrence with the second earthquake which will reveal Jesus' empty tomb in 28:2. That he nonetheless records it here, despite the difficulty of postponing their resurrection and/or appearance for two days after the earthquake, suggests that he sees Jesus' death, not just his resurrection, as the key to the new life which is now made available to God's people.

III. (:54-56) CRUCIFIXION WITNESSES

John MacArthur: As we examine these three verses, I want you to see in them and in corollary verses to them, four responses to the death of Christ that are here given to us. They demonstrate for us the kind of responses we can see even today. There is the response, first of all, of saving faith; the response of shallow conviction; the response of sympathetic loyalty; and the response of selfish fear. And each of those four responses, two of them responses of unbelievers, two of them responses of believers, are parallel to responses today that men and women have to the cross of Christ. So it is not just an historical narrative. It is an historical narrative with strong and practical application to our own time. And I believe that becomes manifest as we examine the text.

First of all, let's look at the best response that an unbeliever could ever have and that's the response of saving faith. We find that illustrated to us by the centurion and certain of the soldiers mentioned in verse 54. . .

There's a second response. That's the response I like to think of as shallow conviction – the response of shallow conviction. And would you indulge me for a moment to draw you over to the twenty-third chapter of Luke? We have to look there to see this. Matthew doesn't comment on it. Luke does. Luke, looking at the very same scene, reporting the very same attitude of the centurion, in verse 47 the centurion saw what was done, glorified God, said certainly this was a righteous man – just after he heard, "Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit." And then verse 48 – and the shallow conviction is illustrated by the crowd – "And all the people that came together to that sight," in other words, all the mob and the crowd that were there, "beholding the things which were done," they saw the same things, the darkness, the earthquake, the rocks splitting, the graves opening, the veil of the temple ripped. I mean, they knew things were happening there that couldn't be explained humanly. They knew something very wrong was going on and they knew it was them. Believe me. I mean, they would see that phenomena and they would hear the words of Christ and see the marvel of His personhood as He's on the cross, and they would begin to remember that He raised Lazarus from the dead, and they would remember that He banished disease from Palestine during His ministry, and they would remember His powerful cleansing of the temple and His profound teaching while He was there.

They would remember all there was about Jesus that led them on Monday to hail Him as Messiah. It would all come back and they would see all of this going around, and their understanding of the Old Testament would tell them that God was judging, and they would feel guilt and they would feel sin, and they know something is wrong. We know that because it says, “Beholding the things which were done, they beat on their chests.”

Now what is this? This is a sign combining terror, remorse, and guilt. They begin to pound on their chests uncontrollably. “Oh, woe is us.” I mean, they are overwhelmed with a sense of guilt and responsibility. The conduct of Jesus, His obvious innocence, the fact that they could never pin anything on Him, that He did claim to be the Son of God; but after all, He raised the dead and healed the sick, His cries on the cross, all of it along with the phenomena drew them to a place of absolutely overwhelming guilt. And they pounded on their breasts. That was a sign of their grief, a sign of their guilt and remorse and self-accusation and despair. And it still goes on today. There are people who see the cross and they understand that Jesus is there because of their sins, He’s bearing their sins. They feel bad about that. They feel sad about that. The cross can be overwhelmingly penetrating, even to an unbelieving heart. . .

Now the first of the second two, or the third response, is called sympathetic loyalty. We’ll just call that sympathetic loyalty because it’s really a good descriptive phrase of what we see. And it is characteristic of these women. They are the illustration. Verse 55, “Many women were there” .

Now here are these women, loving, sympathetic, though their hopes are crushed and their dreams are dead, and they can’t see beyond tomorrow and Jesus is gone. And they have been watching their Master die. Their loyalties are so deep. Their hearts are so filled with love and sympathy that they are not all led to leave, to flee, to run. They have no fear of the Jews. They have no fear of the Romans. Nothing can overpower their love and their sympathy for Christ. May I be so bold as to suggest to you that this is one of the most beautiful characteristics of a godly women, sympathetic loyalty? You show me a virtuous godly woman and I’ll show you in that woman’s life a sympathy and a loyalty that extends beyond that which can be produced in the life of a man, in most cases. Women have a capacity for incredible loyalty and sympathy that men don’t have. And we see this in the beauty of these women. They’re fearless. They don’t even mind the identification with the crucified Christ who has been mocked and scorned and ridiculed. And this by their own people in the society in which they must exist. They are lovely. Their sympathy is magnificent. Their courage is beautiful. . .

There is, though, and that’s the final point – selfish fear. You say, well you’ve exhausted all the verses, what verse is this in?” It isn’t in any verse. But you want to know something? It speaks so loudly I have to include it.

You say, but it doesn’t say anything about selfish fear. Who’s the illustration? The disciples. But it doesn’t say anything about them. I know, that’s what’s so amazing. It doesn’t say anything about them there because they weren’t there. But that says a lot. So somewhere between verse 56 and verse 57 in the white spaces you can put this point. Selfish fear – you can’t ignore it – where were these guys?

A. (:54) Confession of the Centurion

“Now the centurion, and those who were with him keeping guard over Jesus, when they saw the earthquake and the things that were happening, became very frightened and said, ‘Truly this was the Son of God!’”

Walter Wilson: The content of the confession prompted by these sights, in which the soldiers refer to Jesus as God’s Son, effectively reverses the taunts of 27:40 and 27:43, even as it provides an affirmative answer to the question of the high priest at Jesus’s trial in 26:63. Jesus had responded in part to that question by predicting how the Sanhedrists would “see” his vindication. Now, instead, it is the centurion and the guards who “see” the truth, the group of gentiles accepting the title for Jesus that the Jewish authorities had rejected.

Donald Hagner: From the centurion’s perspective, on the other hand, Jesus was probably perceived as possessing divine power, and thus the centurion’s confession amounts to an admission of both Jesus’ innocence and Roman guilt (thus Pobee). There is both irony and tragedy in the fact that the statement is made by Roman soldiers (cf. 8:10–11) and not the Jews to whom Jesus had come—just as in 2:2, 11 it is Gentiles who acknowledge the truth and not the Jews, anticipating the salvation-historical shift that will be articulated in 28:19. The soldiers in their fear mouth words whose real significance they could hardly have known. What they had seen was enough to make them receptive to Jesus’ claim (which they would have heard from the Jewish authorities [see 27:43]), and ultimately their confession does not differ greatly from that of Matthew’s church. On the other hand, the very claim made here was largely responsible for the Jewish rejection of Jesus (cf. 26:63; 27:40, 43).

R. T. France: This declaration thus represents a sharp volte-face: they recognize now that their own earlier mocking of the “king of the Jews” (vv. 27–31) was out of place.

Whatever the soldiers themselves meant by it, for Matthew’s readers this declaration is a climactic theological moment. God has twice declared that Jesus is his son (3:17; 17:5); demons have recognized him as such (4:3, 6; 8:29); Jesus has said so himself (11:25–27; cf. 24:36), has frequently referred to God as his “Father,” and has even on two occasions hinted publicly that he is God’s “Son” (21:37–39; 22:42–45); the disciples have hailed him as “God’s son” in a moment of crisis (14:33 a declaration very similar to this one), and Peter has included this title in his considered estimate of Jesus (16:16). But right up to the time of Jesus’ trial no human observer outside the disciple group has used such language of Jesus, and at the Sanhedrin hearing it has formed part of the basis of his condemnation (26:63), subsequently providing the ammunition for Jewish mockery of this preposterous claim (27:40, 43). Now, however, people right outside the community of faith have recognized and declared the truth, and so reversed that mockery, and the fact that they are not even Jews reinforces Matthew’s message that the new ekklēsia is not to be restricted to the children of Abraham. Like the other centurion we met earlier in the gospel, this officer and his men have displayed faith beyond that of “anyone in Israel” (8:10), and so they too represent the many who will come from east and west to join the Jewish patriarchs in the kingdom of heaven (8:11–12).

B. (:55-56) Faithfulness of Female Disciples

“And many women were there looking on from a distance, who had followed Jesus from Galilee, ministering to Him, 56 among whom was Mary Magdalene, along with Mary the mother of James and Joseph, and the mother of the sons of Zebedee.”

Grant Osborne: The language of discipleship (“follow” [ἀκολουθέω], “serve” [διακονέω]) emphasizes them as faithful disciples. This is unusual, for women were marginalized in the ancient world and were not allowed to be disciples of rabbis (remember the Barbara Streisand movie on that theme, called Yentl). Yet the fact that they were patrons of the group shows that Jesus went beyond custom here. . .

Mary of Magdala, a Galilean town south of Capernaum on the shore of the lake, is always first in the lists of women and was likely a leader of the group. Luke 8:2 tells us that Jesus had cast seven demons out of her, and she then became a devoted disciple. She is most important as a witness of Jesus' death and resurrection, and Jesus appeared to her and made her the first official witness of the resurrection (John 20:11–18, probably as one of the group of women named in Matt 28:9–10). . .

So there were at least four women present at the cross: the mother of Jesus, Mary Magdalene, Mary the wife of Clopas and mother of one of the Twelve, and Salome, probably Mary's sister and mother of James and John.

Van Parunak: as late as Acts 1:14, that Mary is still called "the mother of Jesus." More likely this woman is to be identified with the wife of Cleophas, who is probably the brother of Joseph, foster-father of our Lord.

It may seem strange that Matthew omits the Lord's mother. But John 19:25 apparently describes a moment earlier in the crucifixion, when Mary and John approached the cross and the Lord committed Mary into John's care. As the women moved away from the cross to the location where they are mentioned in Matthew, John has probably led Mary away, so that she and he are no longer at Golgotha.

Donald Hagner: At the very end it is the women, and not the disciples, who are there at the cross. They thus reflect a greater loyalty to their master. As they had faithfully supported him during his ministry, so now it is they who remain with him, even if at a distance, to the bitter end. They therefore deserve this special note of recognition as witnesses of his crucifixion and death. And it is they who will soon convey the message concerning the resurrection of Jesus to the disciples, for it is to the women that he first appeared.

D. A. Carson: Along with the soldiers, certain women, generally not highly regarded in Jewish society, watched to the bitter end. They kept their distance, whether through timidity or modesty. Though last at the cross, they were first at the tomb (28:1). Not only do they provide continuity to the narrative, but they prove that God has chosen the lowly and despised things of the world to shame the wise and strong (cf. 1Co 1:27–31). These women were Galileans who often traveled with the disciples to care for Jesus' needs out of their own resources (cf. Lk 8:2–3).

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How amazing is the messianic prophecy of Psalm 22 in light of the fulfilment seen in this passage?
- 2) Why does Matthew focus more on the spiritual abandonment of the Son due to His being judged for our sin as opposed to the details of His physical suffering?

3) What is the significance of the veil in the temple being torn in two from the top to the bottom?

4) Why does Matthew focus attention on the reaction of the centurion (and his confession) and the onlooking women?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Walter Wilson: A noteworthy rhetorical feature of 27:45–56 concerns the significant number of verbal inclusions it creates with the opening sections of the gospel. For example,

- the astrological phenomenon attending Jesus’s death (27:45) recalls the astrological phenomenon attending his birth (2:2, 9).
- The report in 27:46 that Jesus “cried out with a loud voice” (ἀνεβόησεν ... φωνῆ μεγάλης) recalls the one “crying out [φωνῆ βοῶντος] in the wilderness” (3:3), that is, John the Baptist (3:1), who is identified with Elijah (11:14; cf. 17:11–12), who is mentioned by name in 27:47.
- The opening of the earth (i.e., the tombs) in 27:52 corresponds to the opening of the heavens in 3:16 (also with ἀνοίγω) when Jesus is baptized by John,
- while the confessional statement in 27:54 recalls the voice that speaks from the heavens in 3:17 (both with υἱός).
- Finally, the group of gentile confessors in 27:54 matches the group of gentile worshippers (i.e., the magi) in 2:11.

Together these features give the impression that with this story, we have reached a culminating moment in the life and ministry of Jesus. The fact that extraordinary events occur at both his birth and his death also has the rhetorical force of enhancing the divine dimensions of his life more generally, especially given that such events occur in heaven as well as on the earth.

Grant Osborne: Matthew and Mark center on the horror of putting to death the Son of God. The negative aspects are front and center in contrast to the more positive aspects highlighted in Luke’s and John’s crucifixion narratives. As Davies and Allison say, “Vv. 32–50 do not encourage or inspire but rather depict human sin and its frightening freedom in the unfathomable divine silence. There is terror in this text. The mocking and torture of the innocent and righteous Son of God are not intended to make but to shatter sense, to portray the depths of irrational human depravity.” The mockery deserves judgment, and the judgment of God is depicted in the three hours of darkness seen as a reenactment of the Egyptian plague of Exod 10:21–23 and a harbinger of the final judgment (see on v. 45).

Michael Wilkins: One direct result of Jesus’ ministry has been the restoration and affirmation of women that God intended from the beginning of creation, which we can see demonstrated in the following ways.

- Women were equally worthy of Jesus’ saving activity (e.g., John 4:1–42).
- Women were called to be Jesus’ disciples (Matt. 12:48–50).
- Women received instruction and nurture as Jesus’ disciples (Luke 10:38–42).
- Women were part of his ministry team (Luke 8:1–3).

- Because of their courageous presence at the cross and the empty tomb, women were designated as the first to testify to the reality of Jesus' resurrection (Matt. 28:10; Mark 16:7; John 20:17).

For women to be disciples of a great master was certainly an unusual circumstance in Palestine in the first century. Yet here we find another instance of the unique form of discipleship Jesus instituted. While women were not part of the Twelve, several women disciples traveled with Jesus and had a significant part in his earthly ministry. Jesus restores and reaffirms to women their dignity and worth as persons fully equal to men as humans created in the image of God. He also preserves the male-female distinction of humans, so that they are restored and affirmed in the different roles that God intended from the beginning. Distinctions among Jesus' disciples relate to function, not spiritual standing or commitment or essential personal worth. Jesus restores and affirms to women the status of being coworkers with men in God's plan for working out his will on earth.

John MacArthur: God's Miraculous Commentary on the Cross

In fact, attending the death of Jesus Christ in this particular portion of Scripture are six miracles. Six miracles occur simultaneous to the death of Christ which become God the Father's own commentary on the meaning of the cross. This is God's own testimony as to what the death of Christ means. It's all right here. And frankly, you could read it over and over again and not see it if you didn't stop to contemplate deeply its truth. The meaning of the cross is nowhere more clearly delineated than right in the event itself described by Matthew in these few verses as Matthew gives us God's own commentary on the meaning of the death of His Son.

Let's look at these six miracles and hear what God says about the meaning of the cross through these miracles. The first one we'll call supernatural darkness – supernatural darkness. . .

The sun went out. It became as dark as midnight in the middle of the day.

But what is the point? Well, the rabbis used to teach, and it's recorded in the Talmud that they taught this, that if the sun goes dark it will be a judgment of God on the world for committing a great crime. And indeed we could say the world had committed a great crime in crucifying Jesus Christ. Others have suggested to us that it went dark because nature was throwing a veil over the sufferings of Christ. And still others have suggested that it was dark because this is an act of sympathy on the part of God to cover the nakedness and the dishonor of His Son. And other suggest to us that this is a divine protest. And so it goes.

Now what is the meaning of the darkness? What is God saying about the darkness? No one, no Bible writer, no New Testament or Old Testament writer comments on the darkness at the cross of Christ. They really need not comment, it's very obvious what it means. If you were to dig into the Old Testament text, you would find that darkness is used in Scripture as a symbol of divine judgment. . .

Here's the second miracle. I call it the miracle of sovereign departure. It is a miracle, you see. It's a miracle in reverse, in a sense. It's a strange kind of miracle, but it's a miracle in the sense that it is a supernatural inexplicable event that is beyond the capacity of human understanding, for God is separated from God. God the Father turns His back on God the Son. It is said that Martin Luther went into seclusion to try to understand this mystery and came out more confused than when he began. I understand that. God is separated from God. And Jesus in the climax of the sin bearing, at the close of the three hours of the fury of God being poured out at its maximum capacity, cries out about the fact that He is separated from God. . .

After all, didn't Isaiah 53 say He would be delivered for our transgressions? Doesn't Romans 25 say He's delivered – 4:25 say He's delivered for our offenses? Doesn't 1 Corinthians 15:3 say He died for our sins? First Peter 2:24, "Who in His own self bore our sins in His own body on the tree?" First Peter 3:18, who offered Himself suffering for sin, the just for the unjust? I mean, doesn't the Scripture clearly tell us in 1 John 4:10 that God sent His Son to be the atonement for our sins? Doesn't Galatians 3:13 say He was made a curse for us? And 2 Corinthians 5:21, He was made sin for us who knew no sin? Christ didn't just bear sin, He became sin. He was its personification. But that's why He came. He said that in Matthew 20:28, "I'm come not to be served by to serve and to give My life a ransom for many." And that's why God turned His back because God can't look on sin. When Jesus screamed, "My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me," the answer is because God cannot look upon sin.

Now you say, well, what kind of a separation is this? Well it isn't a separation as to nature. He didn't cease to be God or He would have ceased to exist because He can only be who He is. He was not separated from the nature of God. He was not separated from the Trinity. He was not separated in essence or nature or substance. He was separated in terms of intimate fellowship and communion. Like a child who sins severely against its own father does not cease to become that father's child but does cease to know the intimacy of a loving communion, because the father cannot tolerate the sin, so God turns His back on Christ.

Now when Christ first came into the world, there was a certain separation because He said to be equal with God, Philippians 2, is not something to hold on to. Which means that when He became incarnate, He let go of some of that equality. So there was some separation in His incarnation and He also prayed, "Lord, restore Me to the glory I had with You before the world began," John 17:5, which means there was something missing. And now there is an even more profound separation, not just the separation of incarnation but the separation of utter sinfulness. And the fact that God turns His back on Jesus Christ and He cries out those words that David said He would cry in Psalms 22:1, "My God, My God, why have You abandon Me," indicates that this is a sin situation and God is turning His back on what He will always turn His back on and that is sin. . .

And herein is the great third miracle of the cross. That is this: Jesus' life was not taken from Him. He voluntarily gave it up. And that is demonstrated to us by the fact that He died so very soon, when victims normally lingered for days on the cross. In fact, according to Mark 15 verses 44 and 45, when the word was given to Pilate that Jesus was dead, he couldn't believe it and sent somebody to check on it, because it was so abnormal for one to die that soon. And the reason the Scripture says He cried with a loud voice or screamed or yelled is to demonstrate to us that even at the time when He gave up His life, He had the strength to live if He had willed to live. Jesus not only had the power to take His life back out of the grave, He had the power to give His life whenever He wanted. . .

So we see the wrath of God. We see the holiness of God. And we see the love and grace and mercy of God in the miracles of Calvary. At the very moment of His death, three instantaneous miracles occurred. Look at verse 51. This is the fourth of these miracles in this section. We'll call this one sanctuary devastation. The last one was self-giving death. The one before that, sovereign departure and then supernatural darkness. Sanctuary devastation – look what happened in verse 51 to the temple. “And behold” – and that’s a startled word. Behold, amazingly, shockingly, startlingly – “the curtain” – or veil – “of the temple was torn in two from the top to the bottom.” . . .

In the death of Jesus Christ there is total access into My holy presence. Why? Because He paid for what? For sin. I mean, this is the Father’s own commentary on the meaning of the cross. God throws wide open His arms and says, as the writer of Hebrews in chapter 4 verse 16 says it so beautifully, “Let us come boldly to the throne to receive mercy and grace to help in time of need.” We now can rush into the presence of God for the separation is removed in the death of Jesus Christ who has paid for sin and removed it. It’s no longer a barrier. What a glorious truth. . .

I want you to notice a fifth miracle. Verse 51, “The earth did quake and the rocks were split.” Instantaneously at the death of Jesus Christ, the Father had something else to say and without an audible voice from heaven, He said it in a physical way. He brought to the city of Jerusalem and the area around Jerusalem a devastating earthquake which split rocks open, created fissures in the ground. No doubt those fissures to this day still exist. This was a real earthquake. What was He saying? What was the point of this? . . .

That earth is beautifully described in the epistle of the Hebrews – to the Hebrews in chapter 12 verse 26. “Yet once more I shake not the earth only but also heaven.” He did it once at Sinai. He says I’ll do it again. “Yet once more signifies the removing of those things that are shaken as of things that are made.” In other words, God’s going to shake out of existence the earth that is, “that those things which cannot be shaken may remain, a kingdom which cannot be moved.” So God is going to shake this one out of existence and redo a brand new one, a new earth and a new heaven in which Christ will reign supreme as King of Kings and Lord of Lords. . .

When God shook the earth at the death of Christ, I think He was giving the world a taste of what He’s going to do in the future when He shakes the earth in the time of the coming of the King Himself. I believe when Jesus died on that cross, He so perfectly accomplished the Father’s will, He so earned the right to be the King of the earth, He so earned the right to take the title deed to the earth out of the hand of God, as it’s seen there in the book of Revelation chapter 5, as He takes the title deed out of the hand of God and begins to unroll that title deed and take over the earth from Revelation 6 to 19. I believe He earned the right to do that on the cross. I believe because of His perfect bearing of sin in His own body, because He finished the work of redemption, the Father said, You will be the King of the earth. I will give You the nations for Your footstool. I will give You the earth to rule. All people will bow the knee to You. You will rule the universe, on the earth, under the earth, above the earth, it says in Philippians 2. And I believe shaking the earth at the death of Christ was God’s way of guarantying the promise of a renewed world and a renewed universe. Christ had earned that and it would come – it would come.

And closely connected to that and one reason why I believe that’s the proper interpretation is that it tells us about the last miracle, the sixth one. And this is a marvelous miracle – subduing death. “And the graves were opened.” That obviously could have happened from the earthquake. But the next part couldn’t have happened just from the earthquake. “And many bodies of the saints that slept were raised and came out of the graves.” And you should put a period there. That’s the way the text should read. There was a resurrection, folks. There was a resurrection. Did you get that? You say, what came out of the graves?” Sōmata – bodies. Bodies, not spirits. This isn’t some ethereal thing. These aren’t ghosts. Bodies. This is a real resurrection. What bodies? Many bodies. Not all of them. It was a very discriminating one. Only select ones. Who were they? Saints. What are saints? Holy ones from out of the Old Testament era who were waiting for their resurrection, who had been waiting perhaps a long time. When Jesus died, their spirits came from the abode where righteous spirits dwell and were joined with glorified bodies that came out of those graves. . .

The Father was saying the cross is the point of greatest hope for resurrection. Why? Because if your sin is dealt with and your sin is carried away by Christ and the penalty is paid and the wrath of God is all spent and He has drunk the poison, as it were, to the last drop, then you are free from death and free to live. And if access to God is wide open and if He's going to create a Kingdom that will never be shaken, then you have a right to that access and a right to that kingdom and you'll live in a glorified form to possess it. This is the meaning of the cross. This is the testimony of God the Father.

Charles Swindoll: The group of men and women hovering around Golgotha would not have known that the veil in the temple had torn. But they would have experienced the chilling, thick darkness that had blanketed the heavens for several hours and the sudden earthquake that rocked the land as if on cue the moment Jesus died. All these events announced, as a sort of wordless sermon, that the One who was crucified as King of the Jews was no charlatan or madman. Anybody with an eye to see or an ear to hear would have recognized that something extremely significant had just happened.

TEXT: Matthew 27:57-66

TITLE: BURYING JESUS AND SECURING HIS GRAVE

BIG IDEA:

THE BURIAL OF THE DEAD BODY OF JESUS AND SECURING HIS GRAVE FULFIL MESSIANIC PROPHECY AND SUPPORT THE VALIDITY OF HIS RESURRECTION

INTRODUCTION:

Donald Hagner: In the kerygma of the early church it is not only the death of Jesus that is important but also his burial (see 1 Cor 15:3–4; Acts 13:29). The burial is further confirmation of the reality of Jesus' death; together they provide the necessary prelude to the resurrection itself. As with the death and resurrection, the burial of Jesus is applied spiritually to the life of the Christian in the Pauline letters (Rom 6:4; Col 2:12).

Grant Osborne: This is a transition story that both concludes the crucifixion and prepares for the resurrection. The emphasis is on the reality of Jesus' death and its significance as the death of the royal Messiah.

David Thompson: The book of Matthew is designed to teach that Jesus Christ was Israel's Messiah, King and Savior. The book begins with Jesus' kingly lineage. It develops with Jesus' kingly life. In the 27th chapter we see Jesus' kingly death and, as we near the end of the chapter, we see Jesus' kingly burial.

THE BURIAL OF JESUS CHRIST'S BODY IS A FULFILLMENT OF BIBLICAL PROPHECY, WHICH CLEARLY PROVES JESUS CHRIST IS THE GOD / KING / SAVIOR.

Approximately 700 years before these events occurred, Isaiah, God's prophet, predicted this: "His grave was assigned with wicked men, yet He was with a rich man in His death because He had done no violence, nor was there any deceit in His mouth." Isaiah predicts that somehow Jesus' death and grave will be connected to a rich man. Here in Matthew is the literal fulfillment of that prediction.

Thomas Constable: Matthew emphasized two things about Jesus' burial:

1. the fulfillment of prophecy,
2. and the impossibility of the theory that someone stole Jesus' body.

Stu Weber: Jesus the Messiah died and was buried, proving that he paid for our sin and that his resurrection was the miracle the Bible claims it to be. Matthew's description of Jesus' burial is brief and to the point. But it is also critical. The fact that Jesus was dead and buried is the foundation on which the validity of the Resurrection is based. . .

Despite Pilate's provision of a well-trained Roman guard and the seal of the Roman Empire on Jesus' tomb, the king would prove that he was still in control. Nothing – not even the long arm of Rome's "sovereign" power – would be able to prevent his victorious return to life.

Leon Morris: Matthew prepares us for the resurrection narrative by recounting the way Jesus' burial was carried out and the precautions that were taken to ensure that nobody stole the body out of the tomb. We might have expected family members to arrange for the burial, or if not, then some of his close followers, but Matthew brings into the narrative Joseph of Arimathea, who went to see Pilate to get permission to bury Jesus and then placed him in his own tomb. This was an action of some generosity, for a rock tomb was expensive, and it was not permitted to bury a criminal in a family grave (Sanh. 6:5; cf. Daube, pp. 310-11); the tomb could probably not be used afterward for anyone else. Matthew goes on to tell us that the Jewish leaders recalled Jesus' prophecy that he would rise from the dead and persuaded Pilate to secure the tomb until the third day after the crucifixion.

I. (:57-61) BURYING JESUS IN A RICH MAN'S NEW TOMB

A. (:57-58) The Initiative of Joseph of Arimathea

1. (:57) Coming Out as a Disciple of Jesus

“And when it was evening, there came a rich man from Arimathea, named Joseph, who himself had also become a disciple of Jesus.”

Donald Hagner: i.e., Friday but before the beginning of the sabbath, the dead body of Jesus still hung on the cross. . . .

Matthew uses the word “rich” to indicate the kind of power and influence Joseph had to make his request of Pilate and to have it granted.

Charles Swindoll: Perhaps emboldened by Joseph's willingness to reveal his devotion to Jesus before his fellow Jerusalem elites, Nicodemus – a Pharisee and also a member of the Sanhedrin – who had encountered Jesus earlier in His ministry (John 3:1-21), also stepped out of the shadows and assisted in what had to be a very hasty and incomplete burial before sundown (John 19:39-40).

Leon Morris: It is not without its interest that the crucifixion that sent most of Jesus' followers into hiding had the opposite effect on Joseph and brought him out into the open. . . That he was able to speak to the governor gives us some indication of his importance.

2. (:58) Calling upon Pilate to Release to Him the Body of Jesus

*“This man went to Pilate and asked for the body of Jesus.
Then Pilate ordered it to be given over to him.”*

David Turner: The bodies of those who had died by crucifixion were often not given a proper burial, but left on the crosses to disintegrate or thrown on the ground to be disposed of by scavengers and natural decay. But Jewish piety objected to any body being left unburied (Deut 21:22-23), and so there was provision there for the burial of those executed (Josephus, War 4.317) in a common burial plot rather than in a family tomb. To provide proper burial for someone otherwise unprovided for was a valued act of charity (Tob 1:16-18); cf. the provision for the burial of “strangers” in 27:7. But the provision of a new, rock-cut tomb for Jesus was quite exceptional, and indicates that Joseph was motivated by more than conventional piety. It is, like the act of the woman who anointed Jesus in 26:6-13, a quite extravagant act of devotion.

John Schultz: Late in the afternoon, Joseph of Arimathea went to Pilate to ask for Jesus' body so it could be buried before the beginning of the Sabbath. The Pulpit Commentary comments: "It was the Roman custom to leave criminals hanging on the cross for days, till their bodies were devoured by birds and wild animals; the Jewish Law enacted that when bodies were penally suspended, they should be taken down and buried before night (... Deuteronomy 21:22, 23), that the land might not be defiled. Tomorrow (beginning at sunset), being a specially solemn day, as combining the sabbath and the Passover celebration, the Jews were particularly anxious that the crucified bodies of our Lord and the two robbers should be taken away and put out of sight before the sabbath began."

Commenting on Joseph's actions, The Pulpit Commentary states: "We must remember that this act of Joseph and his friends was not only a bold proceeding, but an act of great self-denial. Contact with a corpse caused ceremonial defilement of seven days' duration, and thus they would be debarred from taking their part in the great Paschal solemnity, with its solemn and joyful observances. But the love of Jesus and the unselfish desire to render him honor enabled them to rise superior to religious prejudices, and willingly to make the required sacrifice."

B. (:59-60) The Internment of the Body of Jesus

1. (:59) Preparation of the Body

"And Joseph took the body and wrapped it in a clean linen cloth,"

2. (:60a) Placement of the Body

"and laid it in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock;"

David Turner: There are many rock-cut tombs of the period in and around Jerusalem. Many are large family vaults with spaces for a considerable number of bodies, and Joseph, as a rich man, is likely to have had such a tomb quarried out for his own family. That he should be prepared to use it for Jesus is a mark of considerable loyalty, especially when it was "new," which both Luke and John explain as meaning that no one had yet been buried there. The point is significant for apologetics, in that it makes it more difficult to explain the women's discovery as due to mistaken identity: there was only one body in the tomb.

D. A. Carson: Tombs were of various kinds. Many were sealed with some sort of boulder wedged into place to discourage wild animals and grave robbers. But an expensive tomb consisted of an antechamber hewn out of the rock face, with a low passage (cf. "bent over," Jn 20:5, 11) leading into the burial chamber, which was sealed with a cut disk-shaped stone that rolled in a slot cut into the rock. The slot was on an incline, making the grave easy to seal but difficult to open. Several men might be needed to roll the stone back up the incline. This sort of tomb is presupposed in the gospel records.

3. (:60b) Protection of the Body

"and he rolled a large stone against the entrance of the tomb and went away."

C. (:61) The Identity of Two Women Witnesses to the Location of the Tomb

"And Mary Magdalene was there, and the other Mary, sitting opposite the grave."

Donald Hagner: The body of Jesus is taken and buried by an influential man who was a disciple of Jesus. The location of the tomb in which the body of Jesus was placed is thus directly known to a disciple of Jesus. And a further guarantee of the location of the tomb is the note that the two Marys were also there opposite the tomb.

D. A. Carson: No mourning was permitted for those executed under Roman law. The women followed with broken but silent grief and watched the burial.

II. (:62-66) SEALING AND SECURING THE GRAVE

Donald Hagner: There is a twofold miscalculation here.

- First, the Jewish authorities underestimate Jesus by failing to realize God's purpose in and through him. That Jesus could rise from the dead they wrongly rule out a priori. And when they have no explanation for what happened to the body of Jesus, ironically they invent the very lie they attempted to protect against (28:13).
- Second, they overestimate the disciples, who were not thinking of Jesus' words about rising from the dead and whose psychological condition hardly made it possible for them to perpetrate such a hoax as the Jewish authorities feared.

The incongruous, ironical result is that the opponents took Jesus' words about rising from the dead more seriously than did the disciples. A vague fear in this case was a greater motivation than the hope of the disciples. Calling attention to the irony in the passage, Gnilka aptly concludes: "The laughter of God roars through the pericope" (2:489). Such must be said also of the pericope that completes this one (28:11-15).

Charles Swindoll: The last five verses in this chapter are unique to Matthew's account. In a sort of addendum to the description of the burial, Matthew cuts to the chief priests and Pharisees again trying to manipulate things behind the scenes by plotting and conniving. Matthew points out that they did all of this "on the next day, the day after the preparation" (27:62). That is, they were doing all this work on the Sabbath, which was forbidden by Jewish Law. Those hypocrites who had condemned Jesus and His disciples for "working" on the Sabbath were now hard at work against the so-called deceiver they had condemned!

Grant Osborne: Nearly all commentaries and studies of the Resurrection Narrative begin the resurrection narrative with 28:1, viewing the posting of the guard at the tomb (27:62-66) as the final event of the transition from the Passion Narrative to the Resurrection Narrative. While viable, this is not the best way to view Matthew's structure. While vv. 51-61 relate to the crucifixion, vv. 62-66 contain material that connect it more closely to the resurrection (Jesus' promise to "rise again" after three days, the guards, and the sealing of the tomb).

The Matthean account is structured beautifully, showing the contrast between Jesus/God and his opponents. It is structured in three episodes, each with two parts contrasting the efforts of Jesus' enemies with the victory of the Risen Lord/God over them (as in the infancy narratives):

Preparation: The setting of the guard (27:62-63) vs. the going forth of the women (28:1)

Reaction: The fear of the guard (28:2-4) vs. the joy of the women (vv. 5-10)

Results: The spreading of lies (vv. 11-15) vs. the proclamation of truth (vv. 18-20).

In this way Matthew shows the exaltation and glory of the enthroned Lord whose enemies are “a footstool for [his] feet” (Ps 110:1). Also there is a contrast between the figures involved in the action, between the guards and the women and between the leaders and the supernatural actions of God (see Luz).

A. (:62-63) Concern of the Jewish Religious Leaders

1. (:62) Meeting with Pilate on the Sabbath

“Now on the next day, which is the one after the preparation, the chief priests and the Pharisees gathered together with Pilate,”

2. (:63) Mention of Jesus’ Resurrection Prophecy

“and said, ‘Sir, we remember that when He was still alive that deceiver said, ‘After three days I am to rise again.’”

Thomas Constable: Jesus was in the tomb only about 36 hours, but because these hours included parts of three days the Jews viewed the period as three days long (cf. Matthew 12:40). The fact that Jesus’ prediction of His resurrection had reached the ears of these men reflects badly on the disciples’ lack of faith. They should have understood and believed that Jesus would arise since knowledge of His prediction of this event was so widespread. These Sanhedrin members did not believe Jesus would rise. They wanted to guard against any plot that His disciples might concoct alleging that He arose. The Jews needed Pilate’s approval for any military action.

Jesus’ first “deception” from their viewpoint was His messiahship, and His last (second) was His claim that He would rise from the dead. The chief priests and Pharisees wanted to protect the people from deception. Matthew viewed their action as self-deception designed to deceive others. They had formerly accused Jesus of being a deceiver (Matthew 26:4).

B. (:64-65) Command to Secure the Grave

1. (:64) Rationale for the Command

Therefore, give orders for the grave to be made secure until the third day, lest the disciples come and steal Him away and say to the people, ‘He has risen from the dead,’ and the last deception will be worse than the first.”

David Turner: The authorities’ fears focus (explicitly at least) not on the possibility that Jesus might actually rise from death, but on the opportunity for his disciples to cash in on such language to stage a fake resurrection (an explanation which they will continue to uphold even after the event, 28:13–15). A Messiah allegedly returned to life after being officially executed for blasphemy, will, they rightly perceive, be far more dangerous to their religious authority than Jesus had been while alive.

D. A. Carson: The disciples disbelieved Jesus’ words about rising again, not because they could not understand the plain words, but because they had no frame of reference capable of integrating a dying and rising Messiah into their own messianic expectations. Shattered by the demoralizing turn of events, they cowered in fear (Jn 20:19), unable and even unwilling to trust their judgment and understanding on anything except the terrible fact that their Messiah had been crucified.

Leon Morris: They were probably uneasy that the body had been given to friends of Jesus for burial, so they wanted to make sure that no one removed the body from the tomb where it had been placed. Accordingly they asked Pilate to take steps to ensure that the body was not stolen. “Command,” they say, for it was only the governor who could order troops to be stationed at the tomb. There was, of course, no reason why they should not have put some of the temple police there, but evidently they felt that some Roman soldiers would be preferable. In any case, once they had handed Jesus over to the Romans he would have been removed from their control and they might not have any rights at the sepulchre. Therefore looks to Jesus’ prophecies. They are not saying that there was a danger that the ordinary kind of grave robber would remove Jesus’ body (and they probably would not have been greatly concerned had this taken place). But because of the prophecies they wanted a guard. They wanted the tomb to be made secure; they did not specify that they wanted soldiers to be there, but security demanded no less. They wanted help until the third day, for that was the time specified in the prophecies, and if the disciples stole the body after that time they could point out that Jesus’ words had not been fulfilled. But if the body was stolen within that time, the disciples could claim that he was raised from the dead. It is, of course, true that the disciples would have had a difficult time claiming a resurrection when all they had was a dead body, but the leaders did not want to give them the opportunity. If such a claim were made, they thought, “the last error will be greater than the first.” Presumably they saw Jesus’ claim to messiahship as the first error and a claim to resurrection as a possible last. They were castigating his teaching and specifically they called his prophecy of his resurrection an error and held that a claim to resurrection would be an even greater error. They did not consider for a moment that there was any element of truth in what Jesus had said.

2. (:65) Receptivity to Issuing the Command

“Pilate said to them,

‘You have a guard; go, make it as secure as you know how.’”

.Robert Gundry: The chief priests had temple guards at their disposal. But to use them the chief priests wouldn’t have had to make a request to Pilate; nor would they later need to shield them from Pilate’s anger for failure at guard duty, for their own guards weren’t answerable to him (28:14). So “Have a guardsquad” means that Pilate is providing them with guards.

Van Parunak: It is sometimes suggested (France, Carson) that he is cynically sending them off to use their own temple guard. But the use of a Latin loan word here, the term “soldiers” in 28:12, and the fact that the guard is afraid that Pilate will care what became of the body, all show that these are Romans. We know that the group that arrested the Lord included a Roman cohort (John 18:3) as well as the temple guard (Luke 22:52), and Pilate is likely referring to this previously assigned body of soldiers. “Take the same men I gave you for the arrest.”

[Alternative View] David Turner: The Jewish leaders want Pilate to deploy his own troops, but he prefers to leave the responsibility to them; “you have a guard” refers to the Jewish temple guards (see on 26:47). It is their problem; let them take care of it with their own resources. The less natural alternative translation, “Take a guard”, would probably indicate that Pilate made a detachment of his own soldiers available, and the fear of punishment by the governor (v. 14) has led some to assume that this was so. But the fact that the guard will subsequently report back not to Pilate but to the priests (28:11), and that the governor’s hearing of their failure is mentioned only as a possibility (28:14), makes it more probable that it was the temple guards that were used. The sealing of the tomb is an additional precaution along with the presence of a guard who were supposed to maintain constant watch.

Grant Osborne: Thus, Pilate does the same as he did at the trial, seeking to please the leaders and avoiding controversy during the volatile period of the Passover. Even though he is filled with contempt for them, he does not want any further trouble from these Jewish diehards.

C. (:66) Commitment to Secure the Grave

“And they went and made the grave secure, and along with the guard they set a seal on the stone.”

David Thompson: The grave is made secure three ways:

- 1) large stone;
- 2) stationed guard;
- 3) sealed tomb.

The only way that body would get out of that tomb would be through a miraculous resurrection.

John Schultz: According to Edersheim, in his book about Israel in the days of Jesus, the large stone that closed the grave was held in place by smaller stones and the seal was placed between those little stones and the large one. The leaders of the nation felt more threatened by Jesus in His death than they did during His life! Their fear about what a dead Jesus could do to them must have evoked the ridicule of “the One enthroned in heaven. David wrote: “The One enthroned in heaven laughs; the Lord scoffs at them.”

There must have been something frightening in Jesus’ own announcement of His resurrection. It meant that He had foretold His own death. It meant that death had not come to Him as an unpleasant surprise. Everything had gone so far according to plan, Jesus’ plan. The strange phenomenon is that those who hated Him paid more attention to what He had said than those who loved Him.

We must think of the similarity between the sealing of Jesus’ tomb and the seal placed on the lions’ den in which Daniel was supposed to find death. Human initiative tries to seal stones in an effort to prevent what God had promised to do on the basis of the blood of an eternal covenant. No power in heaven or hell would have been able to prevent the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What do you think motivated Joseph to step forward at this important point in time when previously had had been a secret disciple because of fear of repercussions?
- 2) How does God’s providential ordering of all of the details of Jesus’ death and burial (in fulfilment of OT messianic prophecy) encourage you regarding God’s control of all the circumstances of your life?
- 3) What is the apologetic value of the guarding and sealing of the tomb?
- 4) Why was it so important that these women witness the location of the burial of Jesus?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Robert Gundry: Jesus' burial in the tomb of "a rich man" fulfills Isaiah 53:9, where we read concerning the suffering Servant of the Lord, "His grave was assigned [to be] . . . with a rich [man] in his death." "Also" makes Joseph "a disciple of Jesus" alongside the just-mentioned women. "Himself" underlines Joseph's discipleship. The resumption of Joseph by "this [man]" puts him forward as a good example of devotion to Jesus. Pilate's commanding Jesus' body to be given Joseph, and doing so "then"—that is, on the spot, without investigation—agrees with Pilate's having declared Jesus righteous and himself innocent of Jesus' blood (27:24); and "to be given back" indicates a return of the body to someone to whom it rightfully belongs, that is, to a disciple who'll treat the body respectfully. The taking of Jesus' body avoids the indignity of its hanging on a cross overnight and throughout the Sabbath. So too do its being wrapped in a linen cloth and placed in a tomb. For Romans normally forbade a proper burial of those executed like Jesus under a charge of high treason (in his case as "king of the Jews" in opposition to Caesar). Matthew describes the linen cloth as "clean," and the tomb as "new." Thus the ritual purity of the shroud and tomb displays Joseph's respect for the body of Jesus. Adding devotion to respect is Matthew's saying that Joseph himself hewed the tomb in rock, or had it hewn in rock on his behalf. "The rock" associates the tomb with the tombs in the rocks where earlier righteous people had been buried (27:51b–53). This association helps the application of Joseph's burying Jesus to the devotion of Christians toward their fellows victimized by persecution (compare 14:12; 25:34–40) and also presages the resurrection of Jesus after the pattern of those earlier ones' resurrection. Tombs hewn in rock had shelves on which wrapped corpses were laid. Matthew's description of the entrance-blocking stone as "large" enhances Joseph's effort to make sure the tomb containing Jesus' body wouldn't be violated. Joseph's going away provides a foil for the vigil of the two Marys, who sit opposite the tomb. "There" emphasizes that they stay for a vigil, which like Joseph's treatment of Jesus' body exemplifies ministerial devotion to the persecuted, a devotion that true discipleship requires (compare 10:41–42; 25:41–46).

John MacArthur: The Amazing Burial of Jesus

The burial of Jesus Christ is as supernatural and as miraculous in many ways as was His death and as will be His resurrection. It is a marvelous and thrilling account of supernatural intervention in every detail in the life of Christ. From His birth to His burial to His resurrection, everything is controlled by God the Father for the fulfillment of divine purpose and prophecy. And we shall see that as we look at this text. Even His burial then becomes a testimony to His kingliness, a testimony to His deity. Even His burial is proof in fact that He is none other than the Son of God who He claimed to be. It is a marvelous and thrilling thing to see God giving evidence as to the deity of Christ even in His being buried.

Now it comes to us in three particular features in verses 57 through 66.

1. The first testimony really comes through Joseph of Arimathea,
2. the second through Mary Magdalene and the other Mary in verse 61,
3. and the third, strangely enough, through the chief priests and Pharisees from verse 62 to 66.

Joseph and the two Marys and then the group of scribes and – or the group rather of chief priests and Pharisees each play a very important role in the burial of Jesus, which role ultimately speaks to the truthfulness of Christ's claim to be the Son of God. And so God is giving testimony to His Son even in this. . .

So there are two major prophecies very explicit, very easily recognized that must relate to the burial of Christ. He must be buried with the rich and He must be buried for a period of three days. Now God uses Joseph of Arimathea to fulfill these prophecies as the human instrument. So Joseph then gives testimony to the deity of Christ through being used in fulfilled prophecy – fulfilled prophecy. . .

It was imperative that Christ be dead by 3:00 so that He could be in the grave on some part of Friday so that that day could be included in the three days He had to be in the earth. He had to be buried on Friday so that Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, at least a portion of each of those days, He would spend in the earth as He had prophesied that He would. . .

Now we don't know what [Joseph's] involvement is in the past. We have no information except one statement given by John in his gospel. Chapter 19 verse 38 John says this, "He was a disciple of Jesus" – listen – "secretly for fear of the Jews." Up to this point he had been a secretive disciple because he was afraid of what it would cost him. He was afraid of the leaders. I mean if he was a member of the Sanhedrin and they found out he was following Jesus, it would be the end of his Sanhedrin rights. It would be the end of his wealth, because he wouldn't be able to do business with anybody. It would be the end of his social status. He and his family would be alienated and ostracized. It would be the end of everything. The price would be very, very high. And this man was not going to take a step of boldness and identify with Jesus until he was certain that Jesus was in fact worth the effort. . .

In other words, if you take the view that He had to be there three days and three nights, He can't rise till the fourth day. But everything in the text says on the third day. So that eliminates the need for interpreting that particular three days and three nights as if it meant three actual 24-hour periods. It is simply a Jewish colloquial expression for any part of a day. . .

Listen, the amazing burial of Jesus Christ attended to by this secret disciple who now becomes public for the whole world to know throughout all history, Joseph of Arimathea, the whole thing is orchestrated to fulfill specific prophecy that Jesus would be three days and that He would be with the rich in His death. He is buried in a wealthy man's grave which the wealthy man made for himself. Now I don't know what got Joseph of Arimathea from being secret to being public. Maybe it was the earthquake and the darkness and the rocks splitting and the graves opening and the temple veil ripping from top to bottom. I don't know whether it was the heart of love. I don't know whether it was the agonizing sympathy he felt when he watched Jesus going through the things He went through. Whatever it was, humanly speaking, I don't know. What I do know is it was God working on his heart. And God was bringing to pass the fulfillment of prophecy. So Jesus was with the rich in His death and He was in the grave for three days. . .

And only two ladies were left, Mary of Magdala and Mary this mother of James and Joseph and wife of Cleophas. And they are sitting – and the Greek says – opposite the sepulcher. And they're just sitting there in deep sorrow, in deep agony. And if Joseph of Arimathea is used by God to confirm the deity of Christ through fulfilled prophecy, these two are used to confirm the deity of Christ through first-hand testimony – first-hand testimony. . .

And then finally, and we come to verse 62. The third group that God providentially orders in the scene to bring about the amazing burial of Jesus Christ are the chief priests and the Pharisees. And they provide in this testimony to the deity of Christ what I think to be as forceful as any proof of His resurrection anywhere in the Scripture. . .

Do you know what would have happened if there was no guard and no seal? Nobody was watching the tomb and all of a sudden we were trying to preach a message that Jesus rose from the dead. And somebody would say, “Don’t give me that, it never happened. They just took His body and somebody took on His identity and somebody who looked like Him made a few appearances,” and so forth and so forth and so forth. But the unbelieving world itself made sure that there’s no other explanation for the absent body of Jesus Christ except a resurrection. If no seal and no guard, the resurrection could have been explained as a grave robbery. But not after this. And the wrath of these Christ haters has led them to secure that grave to the extent that there’s no other explanation than a resurrection. And later on, by the way, we’ll see in chapter 28 the soldiers were bribed to deny the resurrection, which is another testimony to its reality.

Do you see how God is working in everything? He used Joseph of Arimathea providentially to fulfill prophecy. He used the two Marys providentially to give first-hand testimony to the resurrection. And He used the chief priests and the Pharisees providentially to give forceful proof that Jesus indeed rose from the dead. . .

Now listen carefully. How does this relate to you and me? Do you know this verse? “For we know that all things work together for” – what? – “good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose.” Does that come to you with new meaning now? Do you understand what that says? All things are controlled by God to work together to fulfill His eternal purpose for His own beloved children which is their good. I mean, that is a marvelous thing. This idea of God’s sovereignty and God’s providence is not some distant doctrine only for theologians. I mean, this is where the rubber meets the road, folks. It’s when you can’t explain the trouble you’re going through that you need to understand the providential power of a sovereign God who takes every bit of the diverse data of the universe and controls it all for your good and His glory and eternal purpose. Is that comforting? It doesn’t matter what it is. It doesn’t matter what it is. And He demonstrated His ability to do it in the death and burial of Jesus Christ – glorious thing.

S. Lewis Johnson: The Burial of Christ

It’s an amazing thing, but it’s an illustration of the providence of God that he has so arranged the affairs of men that they should kill the Passover lamb, the Passover lamb, sit down and feed upon an animal, when they could have been, if enlightened by the Holy Spirit, rejoicing in the fulfillment of all of the Old Testament promises concerning the lamb of God. The explanation, of course, is that they had no life in them. They were accustomed to strain out the net and swallow the camel, and so they carefully fulfilled all of the Mosaic ritual and their tradition and in fulfilling them they forget the great fulfillment of our Lord’s sufferings.

The burial and its humiliation is reflected in the Apostle’s Creed which many of us have recited many times in the churches in which we have grown up. I believe in God the Father almighty, maker of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ his only begotten son our Lord, who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate was crucified dead and buried. There it is in the apostle’s creed.

The burial account in which we now turn is stranger than fiction, and that itself is a fact that argues for its authenticity. Who in the wildest flight of his imagination would ever have guessed that the Lord Jesus would be interred in the tomb of one of the rich men who belonged to the Sanhedrin, one of the council that put him to death? Who would have ever thought that two men from that council should meet together and should bury the Lord Jesus as a king should be buried? But that is what happened. If we had been writing this account, we would have said that Peter came forward, finally, but Peter had run off and had been in hiding like a wounded animal. . .

But now John tells us something else about him. Joseph was a man who had a flaw in his faith. He waited for the kingdom of God. He had the hope of the Jews. He had become a disciple of the Lord Jesus, so he was deep down within his heart a true believer. But the flaw in his faith was that he had the fear of men. His faith was still not strong enough to stand the stresses and strains of the public eye. The fear of the Jews gripped his heart, and the joy of the Lord therefore was stifled in his breast. . .

What's the meaning of the burial? I suggest to you that there are three things that is meant by this burial. In the first place from the theological standpoint it is the completion of the humiliation of the Lord Jesus. It is one of the neglected facets of the study of our Lord that no one or almost no one has made much of a study of the burial of our Lord and its theological significance. What does it mean? What's its place in the redemptive work? . . .

Never has the discrepancy between the majesty of the eternal God and the humiliation of our Lord Jesus in just being a man been more beautifully portrayed than when his body was lying in the grave. There is the Son of man who is the majestic second person of the Trinity. That discrepancy between the majesty of God and the body of the man Jesus is the real significance of the humiliation of our Lord in his burial. . .

It was also the inception of his exaltation, because God does not permit, there is a limit to the indignities that he permits men to do to the Son of God, and so we read that he was buried in a new tomb, just as the Jewish men were ready to look forward to the time when his body is taken down from the cross and thrown on the pile of bodies at the potter's field to be buried by someone who would dig a hole in the ground and throw the body in, these two men come forward and one who's had a special tomb hewn out, absolutely new, the kind of thing that would be a tomb for a king. . .

The Bible says specifically he came in as a king, and it was specifically stated here that he was placed in this new tomb in which no one had ever yet been placed, so men wanted to bury him like a common criminal, but God had him buried like a king. . .

Furthermore, he was buried in a garden. Well after all, all of our troubles began in a garden, in the Garden of Eden. There the first Adam sinned and died spiritually. It is in a second garden that the Son of man is placed, and from which on Sunday morning there shall come forth the new man, the Lord Jesus, the last Adam and the whole story ultimately finds its conclusion in the garden of God in paradise in which there is a new heaven, new earth and new Jerusalem. The garden. A new tomb. God was transforming the activities of men by sovereign providence so that they would ultimately glorify the son.

J. Ligon Duncan: Jesus' Burial

There are many points of interest in this section that grab and vie for our attention, but it seems to me that the overarching theme of this section as we have seen frankly in the past in Matthew is the providence of God even in Jesus burial. Everything that occurs in this passage serves as an unwitting preparation for God to vindicate His Son in the resurrection. It seems to me that none of the main actors, none of the main characters in this story realize just how they are being used in order to confirm, explain and vindicate the claims of the Lord Jesus Christ as we await the days of His resurrection. I'd like you to look at the passage in two parts today.

First of all, in verses 57 through 61. And then secondly, in verses 62 through 66. In verses 57 through 61 you see Jesus buried, but he's buried in a surprising way. He's buried by a man that we've never heard of before. This heretofore unheard of disciple, Joseph of Arimathea, comes. Instead of the eleven, instead of Jesus' closest associates, this man that we've never heard of before come to bury the Lord Jesus Christ. Now I want you to see a very important truth in that. Now immediately you're thinking well, why didn't His own disciples come? John's disciples had had the character enough, the loyalty enough, the devotion enough and frankly, the courage enough to go and ask for John's body so it could be buried. Why surely the Lord Jesus' disciples would show similar bravery, but they don't. And so your mind immediately begins to meditate on that. But God has a bigger picture, a bigger story that He has in mind for us here, and that is that God in His providence is laying the groundwork here for both the event and the doctrine of the resurrection.

I. God, in His providence, lays the groundwork for the event and doctrine of the resurrection

God is in His loving providence laying the groundwork for His Son's vindication. He is setting up a scenario whereby there are numerous witnesses to the fact that He was indeed dead, and He was indeed buried, and that He was not in that tomb when they came back to check. . .

And this is a passage which gives us a grand reminder of the important of believing in God's word and trusting in His providence. In His overruling providence here, God ordered things so that the death and burial of Jesus were placed beyond all doubt. Think of it. Think of it. These Gentiles and Jews, government officials, religious leaders were in fact conspiring to make sure that no fake resurrection could be claimed. That was their goal. But they were being used by God to confirm Jesus' resurrection. Listen to what J.C. Ryle says: "They little thought what they were doing. They little thought that unwittingly they were providing the most complete evidence of the truth of Christ's coming resurrection. They were actually making it impossible to prove that any deception or imposition had occurred. Their seal, their guard, their precautions were all to become witnesses. In just a few hours that Christ has risen, their own devices became instruments to show forth God's glory." . . .

II. God, in His providence, lays the groundwork for defending His Son's truthfulness and His persecutor's deceitfulness.

So once again God's providence deploys the insults and the schemes of Jesus avowed enemies in order to vindicate Him, to confirm His teaching and to bring Him glory. See, their words were shown to be false and their deceitfulness was revealed while Christ truthfulness was doubly vindicated and confirmed. All the extra measures that they took to secure Jesus' burial ended up drawing attention to His resurrection. And friends, you wouldn't make up a story like this. You'd never make up a story about the disciples not caring enough about the Lord Jesus to take His body down and give it a decent burial. You'd never make up a story about a member of the Sanhedrin coming to bury the Lord Jesus Christ. And Matthew will later on mention the story that was being spread by the Jewish leaders that Jesus had been stolen by His disciples. That very fact lets you know that that was the main way of explaining what had happened to the Lord Jesus Christ. And that fact lets you know that the tomb was indisputably empty. The Jewish leaders would not have made up a story that the tomb was empty if they could have proved it in any other way that it was not. And so the very fact that Matthew includes the story lets you know that the Jewish leaders admitted the emptiness of the tomb, but everything they had done precluded the disciples being the ones who had rescued Jesus. Matthew is showing you the irony of God's providence here. That all the designs of men are used for the glory of Christ.

TEXT: Matthew 28:1-15

TITLE: REACTIONS TO THE EMPTY TOMB

BIG IDEA:

PEOPLE RESPOND IN DIFFERENT WAYS TO THE EMPTY TOMB OF RESURRECTED KING JESUS

INTRODUCTION:

After all of the studies in the Book of Matthew, in this text we come to the victorious climax = the Resurrection of Jesus Christ that proves His identity as Messiah-King and shows that the Father has accepted Him as the propitiation for our sins.

Grant Osborne: The antithesis between the actions of God and those of human beings continues, as the guards and the women react to the reality of the resurrection. Both are filled with fear, but here the similarities cease. The guards faint, while the women become official witnesses to the disciples of the turning point of the ages.

Donald Hagner: None of the alternative explanations of the resurrection of Jesus—whether a stolen body, a Jesus who only “swooned,” or a mistaken tomb—is adequate to explain the total range of phenomena that must be explained. Although outside the range of the historian, the best explanation historically—i.e., that provides a comprehensive account of what happened—is the reality of the resurrection of Jesus. . .

The empty tomb, for all of its impressiveness and importance, is not sufficient evidence in itself for the resurrection of Jesus. What alone can be decisive is reliable eyewitness testimony that Jesus had been raised from the dead. The women, the two Marys, are not only given the first responsibility to convey the message that Jesus had risen from the dead but are also given the privilege of being the first to see the risen Jesus himself. When they encounter him, they respond with unalloyed worship (contrast v. 17). They worship him not so much because he had come back to life but because his resurrection vindicates all that he had said and done during his ministry. And now it must have become exceedingly clear that this was not a special man among fellow humans but the unique manifestation of God’s grace and wisdom, who now reflected the new order of life that would be the portion of all his followers in the consummation of the eschatological age.

Jeffrey Crabtree: Matthew summarized the resurrection day events around witnesses and testimonies. The women told the Eleven and other disciples that they had seen Jesus alive and He would meet them in Galilee. The guards told that a glorious angel had descended from heaven, rolled back the stone, and that now the body of Jesus was gone. A bribe was enough to get them to change their story and tell that Jesus’ disciples stole His body while they all slept.

R. T. France: We are not told at what point between the burial on Friday evening and the opening of the tomb on Sunday morning Jesus actually left the tomb, though the repeated “third day/three days” language (and even more the “three days and three nights” of 12:40) presuppose that he was in the tomb for most of that period. What matters to the narrators is not when or how he left, but the simple fact that now, early on Sunday morning, “he is not here.” (v. 6)

David Turner: There are multiple witnesses to the resurrection in this passage. The Father is the ultimate witness because his power is the presupposition of everything that happens here. The Father's agency is implied by all the passive verbs that describe Jesus's resurrection and exaltation (28:6–7, 18; cf. 16:21; 17:2, 9, 23; 20:19; 26:32). The glorious angel announces the resurrection as the Father's agent (28:6a). The empty tomb itself says nothing but signifies everything about the resurrection (28:6b). The faithful women hurry to announce the resurrection to the disciples (28:8). Jesus himself meets the women on their way and reiterates that he will meet the disciples in Galilee (28:9–10). Even the guards are unintentional evangelists; their announcement to the leading priests confirms their worst fears (28:11). Beyond these direct witnesses to the resurrection, there are two additional factors. The earthquake that rolls away the stone is a portent of an epochal event (28:2). Even the religious leaders' conspiracy to deny the resurrection bears indirect and ironic witness that it is true (28:11–15).

Michael Wilkins: Matthew's concluding chapter climaxes the amazing story of Jesus Messiah. He was conceived in a miraculous manner as the Savior of his people. He lived a sensational life in the power of the Spirit, announcing the arrival of the kingdom of heaven. But he was tragically betrayed by his own people and crucified by the Roman government. Will that be the end of the story? Indeed not! On the third day after his crucifixion, Jesus Messiah is found missing from his grave! Various explanations have been set forth, but Matthew tells in convincing fashion that the only explanation for the empty tomb is that Jesus has been raised, just as he predicted. The angels announce the resurrection, his women followers are the first to witness both the empty tomb and the risen Jesus, and all of his followers now have the commission to proclaim the invitation to enter into a relationship with the risen Jesus as his disciples.

I. (:1-4) THE SURPRISE OF THE EMPTY TOMB

A. (:1) Arrival at the Tomb

1. Timing of the Arrival

“Now after the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week,”

2. Two Women Featured

“Mary Magdalene and the other Mary”

3. Their Expectation

“came to look at the grave.”

They did not come expecting to find an empty tomb. They were discussing how they would be able to roll the stone away to access the dead body of Jesus.

William Hendriksen: Although it was still dark when the women started out, the sun had risen when they arrived at the tomb.

Warren Wiersbe: The women who had lingered at the cross came early to the tomb, bringing spices that they might anoint His body. They thought He was dead. In fact, they wondered how they would move the huge stone that blocked the entrance to the tomb (Mark 16:3). It is remarkable that they did not believe in His resurrection when He had taught this truth repeatedly (Matt. 16:21; 17:23; 20:19; 26:32).

B. (:2-3) Angelic Presence at the Tomb

1. (:2) Mighty Earthquake Event

“And behold, a severe earthquake had occurred, for an angel of the Lord descended from heaven and came and rolled away the stone and sat upon it.”

Stu Weber: The stone did not need to be moved for Jesus to emerge. We know from the other Gospels that his resurrection body was capable of traveling through walls and closed doors. Rather, the stone was rolled away so others could look in and witness the empty tomb.

Leon Morris: Matthew’s characteristic And look introduces a note of vividness; he wants his readers to see the scene at the tomb. He says that there was a great earthquake (for “earthquakes” in Palestine see the note on 27:51; only Matthew has this reference). For introduces a reason for this one: an angel of the Lord came down from heaven. It is not easy to be clear on just what happened when the women came to the tomb. Matthew has one angel, Mark speaks of a young man sitting on the right-hand side (Stendahl thinks that he is the angel in Matthew, for “angels had no wings in the 1st cent.”), Luke has two men in dazzling clothes, while John refers to two angels in white. It seems clear that all these are references to angels; the small differences should not disconcert us unduly. Each of the Evangelists is saying in his own way that when the women came to the tomb they encountered an angelic visitation. It is not surprising that they speak of what happened in slightly different ways, for different people may well have had different perceptions. The important thing is that there were unusual angelic visitations and what the angels said concerned Jesus’ rising from the dead. . .

Mark tells us that as they came to the place they discussed the problem of rolling the stone away, as well they might, for it was a great stone (27:60). But when they arrived, they found their problem solved; the angel had done it for them, and having rolled the stone away he sat on it. What had been an insuperable obstacle for the women was no more than a place to sit for the angel.

Robert Gundry: The present quaking reprises the recent earthquake that split open the rocky tombs at the resurrection of sacred people from the past (27:51b–53). But this time not only is the quaking “great,” but also an angel of the Lord opens the tomb where Jesus has been lying. The angel’s rolling away the stone, previously described as “large” (27:60), causes the earthquake. As in 1:20, 24; 2:13, 19–20, the angel gives both an explanation and instructions. “Out of heaven” points to their divine origin. “Rolled away the stone” exposes the tomb’s emptiness. And “was sitting on it [the stone]” indicates there’s nothing more for the angel to do except for giving the explanation and instructions.

2. (:3) Majestic Appearance – Brilliant and Pure

a. Like Lightning

“And his appearance was like lightning,”

b. White as Snow

“and his garment as white as snow;”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Glorious angels celebrated Jesus’ birth (Lk. 2:9-14), and they celebrated His resurrection.

Grant Osborne: The appearance of the angel draws on apocalyptic descriptions in Dan 10:6 (the man dressed in linen had “his face like lightning”) and 7:9 (the clothing of “the Ancient of Days” was “as white as light” (17:2). Since the transfiguration was a harbinger of the resurrection, this makes sense.

C. (:4) Angst of the Guards at the Tomb

“and the guards shook for fear of him, and became like dead men.”

“Angst” – feeling of deep anxiety or dread

Donald Hagner: The irony is not to be missed: the ones assigned to guard the dead themselves appear dead while the dead now have been made alive.

Leon Morris: That they became like dead men points to the paralysis that overtook them when they were face to face with an angel. They had probably been prepared to face human opposition of some sort; why else would they have been assigned their task? But a striking heavenly visitant who manipulated the great stone with ease and whose appearance was like nothing they had ever seen was something else altogether.

II. (:5-7) THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE EMPTY TOMB

A. (:5) Reassurance to Calm Their Fears

“And the angel answered and said to the women, ‘Do not be afraid; for I know that you are looking for Jesus who has been crucified.’”

Stu Weber: Jesus will forever be known as the crucified one (cf. 1 Cor. 1:23; 2:2; Gal. 3:1). The salvation he wrought through his death, the victory he won, and the obedience he displayed will stand for eternity.

Daniel Doriani: God designed angels to deliver messages, and Matthew shows that they are skilled at their duty. The Father is pleased when angels do what he made them to do (see 1:20–24; 2:13–19), just as he is pleased when we do what he made us to do. Their announcement has three parts.

First, the angel calls attention to Jesus’ prophecy: Jesus “is not here; he has risen, just as he said” (28:6). The resurrection proves that Jesus is all that he had said he is. Through the course of his life, he had claimed the roles of prophet, priest, and king. As king, he reigned from the cross, by defeating our greatest enemy. As priest, he offered the final sacrifice for our sin. As prophet, he foretold that he would die and rise. With the little phrase “just as he said” the angels invite us to meditate on all this (see 16:21; 17:23; 20:19; with 12:40).

Second, the angels call attention to the evidence: “Come and see the place where he lay” (28:6). These messengers are no purveyors of blind faith.

Third, the angels commission the women, so joyful, to announce the resurrection: “Then go quickly and tell his disciples: ‘He has risen from the dead and is going ahead of you into Galilee. There you will see him.’ Now I have told you” (28:7). The soldiers were three times afraid: they feared the earthquake, the angel, the punishment. But the women are four times joyful: Jesus’ tomb is empty. He lives. Every word he said is true. Then, crowning all their joys, they see Jesus with their own eyes (28:8–10). The angels were wise to commission the women. Even if their culture said they were invalid witnesses, the angels knew better.

B. (:6) Reality of His Promised Resurrection

*“He is not here, for He has risen, just as He said.
Come, see the place where He was lying.”*

Stu Weber: Matthew used the Greek imperfect tense to show that he had been lying there for some time. In Matthew's abbreviated account, he did not record whether the women actually looked into the tomb, but we can be sure they did. This strengthened their faith and prepared them to serve as eyewitnesses to the disciples.

Leon Morris: The angel goes on, “as he said,” which should remind them of the predictions that Jesus had made and that apparently none of his followers had taken as they were meant. But the predictions were important, and the angel draws their attention to them. They were not facing a situation in which Jesus had undergone a totally unexpected fate and had then experienced an unanticipated deliverance. He had prophesied both his death and his resurrection, and it was important that his followers should come to understand that the wonderful happening that had just taken place was in fact no more than what Jesus had prophesied during his lifetime.

C. (:7) Reporting Mission

1. Call to Bear Urgent Witness to the Disciples Regarding the Resurrection

“And go quickly and tell His disciples that He has risen from the dead;”

Grant Osborne: This is certainly one of the proofs for the historicity of the resurrection; no one would ever make up a story with women as the official witnesses, since women were not allowed to be witnesses in a legal sense.

Donald Hagner: Note the structural device of the five parallel imperatives spoken by the angelic messenger: do not fear, come, see, go (an imperatival participle), and tell.

2. Context for Seeing the Risen King Jesus in Person

“and behold, He is going before you into Galilee, there you will see Him;”

Grant Osborne: Galilee is the place where Jesus developed and trained his disciples, so Jesus has stressed that as the meeting place where the disciples will be reinstated.

3. Confirmation by Authoritative Proclamation

“behold, I have told you.”

Donald Hagner: The added words ἰδοὺ εἶπον ὑμῖν, “look, I have told you,” function to call attention once again to the angelic, and thus heavenly, source for this revelation, thereby emphasizing the authority of the words.

R. T. France: The angel's final words to the women, literally “Look, I have told you,” are reminiscent of the frequent OT formula, “The Lord has spoken” (Isa 1:2; 25:8; Joel 3:8 etc.) or “I, the Lord, have spoken” (Num 14:35; Ezek 5:15, 17, etc.). The formula marks an authoritative pronouncement (perhaps even that the angel speaks for God), and also functions now as a call to action. The message has been delivered, and now it is up to the women to act on it.

III. (:8-10) THE SUBJECT OF THE EMPTY TOMB APPEARS TO THE WOMEN

Richard Gardner: Brief as it is, the report of Jesus' appearance to the women makes several important points (cf. Meier, 1980:364).

1. First, the resurrection of Jesus has a bodily dimension. The women are able to take hold of Jesus' feet.
2. Second, the resurrection renews the family relationship of Jesus and his disciples. Jesus speaks of a reunion with my brothers.
3. Third, Galilee is named again as the place where this reunion will occur. The reason Jesus chooses Galilee will become apparent shortly (cf. 28:16-20; 26:32).
4. Finally, the One who names us his sisters and brothers is also our Lord. He is One whom the women worship when he meets and greets them.

A. (:8) Emotions of Fear and Great Joy

“And they departed quickly from the tomb with fear and great joy and ran to report it to His disciples.”

Leon Morris: The women made haste to do what they were told. They went away from the tomb quickly; the place of death no longer had any meaning for them. That they went with fear indicates that they were in the grip of the awe that had been aroused in them by their contact with the visitant from another world. But they were not simply scared; they went with great joy. They had come to that place mourning the death of their great leader and dear friend; they went away knowing that he was dead no longer. Well might their emotion be great joy. They had been told to go quickly and tell the disciples, and they took the injunction literally. They ran to tell his disciples. Such good news should be spread abroad quickly, so they certainly made haste.

Stanley Saunders: Fear and great joy here go together as differing dimensions of a singular and wholly appropriate response.

B. (:9) Encounter with Jesus and Response of Worship

*“And behold, Jesus met them and greeted them.
And they came up and took hold of His feet and worshiped Him.”*

Grant Osborne: Throughout Matthew Jesus is to be “worshiped” as Lord (2:2, 8, 11; 8:2; 9:18; 14:33; 15:25), an act that centers on his divine glory as Son of God. Jesus is not a spirit but has been raised bodily – but with new meaning. Before there were resuscitations, but those raised had to die again. Jesus is raised for eternity.

Leon Morris: They had been last at the cross and first at the tomb, and now they are the first of whom Matthew writes that they had the joy of seeing their Lord. From what the angel had told them they would have expected that no one would see Jesus until the appointment in Galilee. But now as they went on their way to do as the angel said, look (the word makes it vivid), there was Jesus before them. Matthew says little about the manner of the meeting, simply that Jesus met them. It is not easy to convey the force of his greeting in English. I have tried with “Greetings,” but this is not a usual way of greeting someone we meet, though it was quite a normal thing to say in the first century. The Basic English translation renders it literally, “Be glad”; GNB reads “Peace be with you,” which was a normal Jewish greeting and may convey something of the meaning. But it was not what Matthew wrote. However, we should not engage in a lengthy discussion of this word as though it were important. The women clearly were not concerned with such matters. They were simply filled with joy at seeing Jesus himself, so they came to him.

R. T. France: The women’s touch, like the invitation to touch him and the eating of food in Luke 24:39–43, demonstrates to the reader the physical reality of Jesus’ risen body: he is not a ghost.

C. (:10) Encouragement and Reminder of Their Reporting Mission

“Then Jesus said to them, ‘Do not be afraid; go and take word to My brethren to leave for Galilee, and there they shall see Me.’”

Grant Osborne: “My brethren” – This expression connotes acceptance and fellowship (cf. 12:48-50; 25:40), and in light of their desertion of him it connotes forgiveness and restoration. Jesus restores them before they have even repented!

Craig Blomberg: He now calls the disciples his “brothers,” the only such place in the Gospels (but cf. Rom 8:29 and Heb 2:11), disclosing keen psychological insight. Not only does he show himself as still loving and accepting those who had abandoned him, but he even treats them as equals! In other words, they remain laborers with him in the work of the Father. Jesus is neither denying his uniqueness nor deifying the disciples. But he is portraying the church as a brotherhood that manifests more equality than hierarchy, even if some functional differentiation between leaders and followers is clear from other Scriptures (e.g., 1 Pet 5:1-5; Heb 13:17).

IV. (:11-15) THE SPIN REGARDING THE EMPTY TOMB BY THE JEWISH RELIGIOUS LEADERS

Albert Mohler: As the women (who are the first to see the risen Jesus) report to the disciples, guards from the tomb report to the chief priests. The religious leaders conspire together once again, fearing the potential threat to their power base if the truth of Jesus’ resurrection becomes public. They pay the guards to circulate a false story among the Jews that negatively casts Jesus’ disciples as conspirators deceiving the people with the news of Jesus’ resurrection.

A. (:11) Confession by the Guards to the Chief Priests

“Now while they were on their way, behold, some of the guard came into the city and reported to the chief priests all that had happened.”

Leon Morris: They might have been expected to go to their own officers, but Pilate had placed the guard at the disposal of the Jewish authorities (27:65) and accordingly it was to them that they reported. In any case, they may well have hesitated to go to their own officers because they would have to confess that they had not prevented the removal of the body from the tomb. It is true that the body had not been stolen, but it might have been difficult to convey the truth of what had happened to skeptical Roman officers. Perhaps it was better to postpone facing certain military punishment as long as possible and to try any other course that seemed open. In any case, the Jewish authorities had been the ones who had understood the necessity of the guard, and some of the guard accordingly thought that the first approach should be made to the chief priests.

Charles Swindoll: Matthew pauses his account of the miraculous, bodily resurrection of Jesus in order to turn attention to the lie that gave birth to a counternarrative. Having walked us through the eyewitness accounts of the women at the tomb and their encounter with angels as well as with Jesus Himself, the scene suddenly cuts away to drop in on Jesus' opponents as they tried to turn the good news into fake news. To the critics and enemies of Jesus, what really happened to the soldiers at the tomb was beside the point.

R. T. France: It is in Jerusalem that Jesus has been rejected and killed, as he had predicted, but with his resurrection that part of his story is now over. It will be far to the north in Galilee that the final phase of the story will begin in v. 16. But before the scene transfers to Galilee, we are given a last glimpse of the discredited Jerusalem régime, as the guards report back in "the city." The chief priests and elders who have seemed to hold all the cards and who have so smugly celebrated their triumph over the northern prophet (27:41–43) are now in total disarray. Their careful plans to get rid of the new Galilean movement have unraveled, and they are left with an embarrassing failure to explain. The best thing they can do is to concoct a cover-up story, backed by bribes to the guards and, if necessary, also to the governor. So the last view we have of Jerusalem is of its leaders engaged in a sordid face-saving exercise, while the women are summoning Jesus' disciples to meet their risen Lord back in the home territory of Galilee. Jerusalem, which has throughout the gospel been a symbol of opposition to God's purpose and of judgment to come, can be left to wallow in its own discomfiture, while the reader turns with relief to Galilee, the place where once again light is dawning (4:14–16).

B. (:12-15a) Counsel of the Jewish Religious Leaders

1. (:12) Bribing the Soldiers to Coopt Their Testimony

"And when they had assembled with the elders and counseled together, they gave a large sum of money to the soldiers,"

Robert Gundry: The chief priests and elders have no excuse for their unbelief. From unprejudiced eyewitnesses (some of the guardsquad) they now know that Jesus has indeed been raised from the dead, that the sign of Jonah, which he promised to give the scholars and Pharisees (12:38–40), has now been given. Furthermore, the soldiers' report included "all the things that had happened." So the chief priests' and elders' unbelief runs counter to full information as well as unprejudiced eyewitness. . . The bribery of the soldiers exposes the Jewish authorities' lack of honesty, and the large size of the sum it took to silence the soldiers argues for the truth of Jesus' resurrection and the falsity of the rumor concocted by those authorities and about to be circulated by the soldiers. Moreover, "the considerable sum of silver coins" given the soldiers contrasts with the paltry sum of thirty silver coins given Judas Iscariot to betray Jesus. By paying more to the soldiers than they did to Judas, the Jewish authorities show greater concern to squelch the news of Jesus' resurrection than they did to get him killed.

John MacArthur: So, those were the three resolutions.

- Bribe the soldiers,
- tell them to preach that the disciples stole the body
- and cover the soldiers if they get in trouble with Pilate.

Now, that is a planned resolution voted on and passed in the Sanhedrin. And what it tells us and what Matthew intends it to tell us is that the apostasy of the nation of Israel was final. Here their Messiah has risen from the dead and they are not the least bit interested in affirming whether or not it is true. They know a supernatural event occurred because an angel was there and an earthquake was there and the phenomena that occurred communicates that. They are not interested in investigating that. They don't want to know anything about that. They are obstinate in their apostasy and they willfully reject Christ no matter what the evidence is. . .

What Matthew is showing us is anything but the resurrection is an absurdity. It offends our reason. It offends our logic. It offends the facts. And thus does Matthew prove the resurrection by the lie. Men had to be paid to say the disciples stole the body. It's a lie for which bribery was necessary. They had to say an absurdity. We know the disciples came and stole the body while we were asleep which is an absolute contradiction - makes no sense.

The simple testimony of Scripture and the complex testimony of Scripture is that Jesus rose from the dead and Matthew is telling us here that you can take the testimony of His friends or you can take the testimony of His enemies and you're going to come up with the very same conclusion. And he includes the testimony of His enemies, as I said, for two reasons. Reason number one, it shows us the depth and the totality of the apostasy of Israel. And secondly, it is the most convincing evidence. Simon Greenleaf, a Harvard professor of law, some years ago wrote, "All that Christianity asks of men is that they would be consistent with themselves, that they would treat its evidences as they treat the evidence of other things and that they would try to judge its actors and witnesses as they deal with their fellow men when testifying to human affairs and actions in human tribunals. The result would be an undoubting conviction of their integrity, ability and truth."

And as I said last time, it is the assessment of those who study the resurrection that there is no other historical event that is as truly and thoroughly attested to as the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. The Lord arose. The folly of this hopeless explanation only demonstrates the reality of the resurrection. And because He lives, He gives life to all who believe in Him.

2. (:13) Fabricating an Explanation for the Empty Tomb

"and said, 'You are to say, 'His disciples came by night and stole Him away while we were asleep.'"

Charles Swindoll: Just as His opponents and critics wanted Him dead when He was alive, they still wanted Him dead after he rose. They concocted fake news in an attempt to countermand the great news of the Resurrection. Then they paid a bribe to promote their story.

Donald Hagner: There is a comical aspect to these final two words since it simultaneously shows them to be irresponsible (some soldiers of the guard were supposed to have been awake through the night; the penalty for failure could amount to capital punishment) and raises the awkward question of how they knew what happened if they were sleeping, not to mention the fact that they would have had to be sleeping extremely soundly if they were not able to hear the large stone being rolled away from the door of the tomb.

3. (:14) Promising Protection from Political Reprisal

"And if this should come to the governor's ears, we will win him over and keep you out of trouble."

Stu Weber: The guards were reluctant to agree to this solution. "What if the governor hears our false report? He will have us all killed!" So the Jewish leaders, the masters of deception, assured the guards that if Pilate heard the false rumor and sought to execute the guards, the Jewish leaders would intervene on their behalf: We will satisfy him and keep you out of trouble.

Leon Morris: The guards must have taken some persuading to say that they had slept on the job. That was a serious offense and could bring down on them the heaviest of penalties. Moreover, they were to say that their slumbers had enabled the followers of Jesus to steal his body, though if they were asleep when the nefarious deed was done it is not easy to understand how they would know what had happened. The guards were thus placing themselves in a hazardous position by putting out the story the chief priests had concocted. But they were also in a hazardous position if they did not do this. There was no denying that they had been put on guard to prevent the theft of a body. There was no denying that the body had been in the tomb when the stone was sealed. There was no denying that the body was no longer there. So on any showing they had failed as guards. They could, of course, have told of the coming of the angel and of what he had done. But who would believe them? Angels are not often seen by mortals, and this could well sound like a story concocted to cover up their failure. So they ran a risk. But they may well have thought that if they did as the chief priests suggested, at least they would have some people in high place who had an interest in making sure that their story was accepted. If they refused, they were on their own.

C. (:15a) Compliance of the Soldiers to This Scheme

“And they took the money and did as they had been instructed;”

D. (:15b) Communication of This Fabricated Story

“and this story was widely spread among the Jews, and is to this day.”

Charles Swindoll: The story’s effectiveness as propaganda is proven by the fact that when Matthew published his Gospel around AD 65, the story was still being spread among the unbelieving Jews (28:15).

William Barclay: It is interesting to note the means that the Jewish authorities used in their desperate attempts to eliminate Jesus.

- They used treachery to lay hold of him.
- They used illegality to try him.
- They used slander to charge him before Pilate.
- And now they were using bribery to silence the truth about him.

And they failed. Magna est Veritas et praevalabit, ran the Roman proverb; great is the truth and it will prevail. It is a fact of history that not all the evil machinations devised can in the end stop the truth. The gospel of goodness is greater than the plots of wickedness.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What lengths did Satan go to try to keep Christ from the Cross . . . and then to try to keep Him in the grave?
- 2) Are we being faithful to the urgency of the commission we have received to spread the report of the resurrection of Jesus to others?

- 3) Do we take time to respond in worship in gratitude for the new life we have in Christ?
- 4) Why should we be surprised when unbelievers reject the testimony of the Scriptures to the person and work of Christ and persist in their wicked rebellion?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Warren Wiersbe: What is the significance of the resurrection?

- It proves that Jesus is God's Son.
- It verifies the truth of Scripture.
- It assures our own future resurrection.
- It is the proof of a future judgment.
- It is the basis for Christ's heavenly priesthood.
- It gives power for Christian living.
- It assures our future inheritance.

Whenever God's people gather on the Lord's Day, they bear witness that Jesus is alive and that the church has received spiritual blessings. When the followers of the Lord gathered that first Lord's Day, they were discouraged and defeated.

David Turner: The resurrection of Jesus is the sine qua non of several themes in Matthew's theology.

Without the resurrection, Jesus's crucial and climactic redemptive act of dying for sinners would go without divine endorsement. The resurrection amounts to the Father's signaling that Jesus's death was victorious and affirming that Jesus's blood of the new covenant will effectively save his people from their sins (cf. Rom. 4:25).

If Jesus did not rise from the dead after promising several times that he would do so (12:40; 16:21; 17:9, 23; 20:19; 26:32), he would be pitied or scorned, not believed and obeyed (cf. 1 Cor. 15:16–19). As is commonly said, he would have been a lunatic or a liar, not the Lord of heaven and earth (Rom. 1:4).

Without the resurrection, Jesus's people could not be saved from their sins (1:21) because his mission would have ended with the ignominy of a cursed person who hung upon a tree (Deut. 21:22–23; Gal. 3:13).

Without the resurrection, Jesus would never drink the new wine, representing the blood of the new covenant, in his Father's kingdom with his disciples (26:27–29).

Without the resurrection, there would be no apostolic foundation for the church (16:18), since Jesus's resurrection turned the deserters back into disciples (26:31–32). Nothing but the astonishing yet true resurrection message delivered to them by the two women and then by Jesus himself could have brought the scattered disciples back into the fold (28:7, 10, 16–20).

Without the resurrection of Jesus, there would be no complete model of sacrificial living. Jesus taught the oxymoron of the crucified life, that genuinely abundant living occurs only when one dies to self-interest and that the self-oriented life is misery. But the model is truncated if Jesus's suffering does not lead to ultimate exaltation, if the crown never replaces the cross (10:38–39; 16:24–26; 20:26–28; 23:12; cf. Rom. 6:1–11).

Without the resurrection of Jesus, there would be no eschatological shalom to rectify all earthly wrongs and renew the world (19:28). The martyrs whose blood cries out from the ground would not be vindicated (23:35; Rev. 6:9–11). Those who do violence to their fellow humans would not be held accountable. There would be no ultimate reckoning (Matt. 13:37–42; cf. Dan. 12:2). Satan would win the cosmic battle. But the resurrection guarantees the final judgment of all humanity (Matt. 13:37–42; 16:27; 25:31; cf. Dan. 12:2; Acts 17:31).

Without the resurrection of Jesus, his people could not hope for their own resurrection and reward (13:43; 16:27; 25:31–40; 27:51–53). Jesus's ethical teaching includes the prospect of judgment and reward in the coming kingdom (4:17; 5:12; 6:4; 7:1–2, 21). The disciples' hope and values focus on the kingdom (6:10, 33), but the kingdom could never come to earth if the king had remained in the grave. With Jesus's throne unoccupied, what would become of the twelve thrones of his apostles, and of the rewards Jesus promised to all his disciples (6:19–21; 13:43; 19:27–29; cf. Dan. 12:3; Rev. 2:26–27; 3:21)?

Without the resurrection, Jesus's climactic saving act of dying for sinners by crucifixion would lack interpretation and proof of divine acceptance. Granted, the apostolic proclamation centered on the cross (Gal. 6:14; 1 Cor. 1:18–25; 1 Pet. 1:19; Heb. 2:9, 14; 9:12–14; Rev. 5:6, 9). But the significance of the cross would be unclear apart from the resurrection. Therefore any presentation of the good news of Jesus the Messiah must stress his resurrection as the essential explanation of the meaning of his death. The gospel must be communicated with culturally appropriate methods and language, but the methods and language must expound the resurrection as proof of the saving power of the crucifixion. Any "gospel" that does not place Jesus's resurrection alongside Jesus's death is not the authentic message of Jesus and the apostles.

Grant Osborne: Victory and vindication are only two of the terms that describe the meaning of the resurrection of Jesus. Death is indeed the "last enemy," but in Jesus as the firstfruits death has been proleptically defeated for every follower of Christ. . . . We have been lifted out of the depths of despair that the reality of this life must produce apart from the Jesus event. In his resurrection we enter a new potential and a new reality that replaces defeat with victory, despair with joy, the decay of death with life for eternity.

There will still be discipleship failure, but in the Risen Lord there is victory. . . .

Stanley Saunders: Modern audiences often come to the resurrection looking for historical evidence and detailed information subject to corroboration or denial. None of the Gospels describes the resurrection itself, however, which by its nature stands always beyond the realm of human verification. What we see, instead, are the expanding circles of its ripples and traces: first the empty tomb, then the fear, stupor, and joy of its first witnesses, then the growth of a community of witnesses. The only meaningful argument for the reality of the resurrection is embodied in the community of the baptized, who have declared their allegiance to the crucified one and together constitute his body re-membered at Table. The community of disciples is commissioned to watch for and name the ripples that become waves of transformation. These waves move most powerfully in the presence of suffering and death.

The resurrection is a new beginning for Israel, the disciples, and for humankind, but Matthew also carefully presents it as the continuation of the passion story. The same women witness both events. The same Jewish leaders play their role. Most important, the Jesus who is crucified now speaks encouragement, can be touched, and makes preparations for the continuation of his mission. The resurrection does not set right a divine plan that was sidetracked by the crucifixion. It completes God's conquest of death and imperial power by vanquishing them at the point of their most powerful expression. Only the resurrection of this one—Israel's rejected Messiah, God's faithful Son, the one condemned by Israel's leaders and people, and the one crucified by the Romans—demonstrates the full extent of God's mercy, forgiveness, and power over all human dominions and death itself. The promise of resurrection is not that we will be rescued from death or transported to another, heavenly world, but that God's heavenly rule has reclaimed and now is transforming the whole of creation. We face death, bearing our crosses for his sake (16:24), with the certainty that it has no real power over us. Only in realization that Jesus has conquered death is true life possible.

William Barclay: As we read this story of the first two people in the world to be confronted with the fact of the empty tomb and the risen Christ, three imperatives seem to spring out of it.

(1) They are urged to believe. The thing is so staggering that it might seem beyond belief, too good to be true. The angel reminds them of the promise of Jesus, and confronts them with the empty tomb; his every word is a summons to believe. It is still a fact that there are many who feel that the promises of Christ are too good to be true. That hesitation can be dispelled only by taking him at his word.

(2) They are urged to share. When they themselves have discovered the fact of the risen Christ, their first duty is to proclaim it to and to share it with others. 'Go, tell!' is the first command which comes to all who have discovered the wonder of Jesus Christ for themselves.

(3) They are urged to rejoice. The word with which the risen Christ meets them is Chairete; that is the normal word of greeting; but its literal meaning is 'Rejoice!' Those who have met the risen Lord must live forever in the joy of his presence from which nothing can part them any more.

John MacArthur: Matthew approaches [the Resurrection] so interestingly. He approaches the resurrection through the emotions of a group of women. . . Their first emotion is the emotion of sympathy. This is the first thing we see. And we can identify with that. These women love the Lord Jesus Christ more than they love anyone. And women, as you know, have a tremendous capacity to love. And I can only imagine how it would be when women could love as fully as women are able to love and love one who was without imperfection. These women loved uniquely.

They had ministered with Jesus in Galilee. They had attended to His needs. They had provided food and hospitality and even money and resources for Him and His traveling disciples as they carried on the Galilean ministry. They had descended the journey to Jerusalem for Passover with Jesus and His group. They had been there at the cross. They were there when He was buried. We saw them in chapter 27 verse 56 gathered at the cross. We saw them in verse 61 sitting opposite the tomb. And now they're back again the morning of the third day. They are loyal. They are devoted. They are loving and they are sympathetic. . .

And Mark tells us in chapter 16 that as they were walking along in the darkness, anticipating the imminent dawn, they were having a discussion about how they were going to get the stone out of the way so they could do what they had come to do. They had no idea it was being guarded by Romans. They didn't know that it was sealed and couldn't be opened. They were anticipating coming into the empty garden and they would need some man or men to help them move that huge massive stone that had been rolled in front of the door. And so they were discussing the fact that they would have to face that large stone. So their emotion was sympathy. And what they lacked in faith they made up for in compassion. And what they lacked in understanding they made up for in courage to identify themselves so continually with Christ. And before we think too little of the women who came without faith, we have to ask ourselves where the disciples are. At least the women were there, whatever the motive. It is one final act of love.

But no sooner do they approach the grave than the emotion of sympathy is transformed into the emotion of terror. And that's the second one I want us to see. The emotion of terror. Verse 2 says, "And behold" – and that's a word to startle us, to shock us, to pull us up short, to make us realize that something dramatic has happened – "there was a great earthquake." . . .

You want to know the truth? You know why those women were the first to see the angel and the living Christ? Because they were there. That's right. Isn't that profound? I mean, if you're not there, you're not going to see it. I mean, they were there and so they saw it. If anybody else would have been there, they'd have seen it. I mean, you don't have to get too profound in some of this. You know what that says to me? And I don't want to extrapolate too much on this, but it's nice if you're there when the Lord does wonderful things. There's a great spiritual truth in that somewhere and that is that the closer you stay to the Lord and what He's doing, the more you're going to enjoy what it is He's doing. I don't know about you, but I'd rather be there and experience it than hear it from somebody else. Wouldn't you? I praise God for people who are there. I mean they're there when the Lord is working. They're there when His people gather together. They're there when His Word is taught. They're there when it's time to come to your knees before Him. They're there when it's time to call on His power in ministry. And they're the ones that experience firsthand the moving of the power of God. No, they saw it because they were there. . .

I trust that you will be the kind of person like those women. What you may lack in faith, you make up for in devotion. What you may lack in understanding, you make up for in loyalty. And God will confirm your weakness and turn it into strength, because you're faithful enough and loyal enough to be where He is and where He's moving and where He's working. . .

And so the women had come to the tomb with an emotion of sympathy. That had been turned into an emotion of terror and now the emotion of terror began to give way to a third emotion and that's noted in verse 8 and that is the emotion of joy. Verse 8, "And they departed quickly from the sepulcher with fear and great joy." Now their fear is tempered by tremendous joy, "And they did run to bring His disciples the message." Did run is the main verb. The angel said go, they spun around on their heels and took off down the path. And they're running into the city to find the disciples to tell them that the message from the angel is that Jesus was raised from the dead. And their terror is mingled now with great joy – the thrill that it might be true, that it might be true, that it might be true, and we're going to see Him in Galilee. . .

In verse 9 – and this takes us to their fourth emotion. They're filled with joy and their joy will turn to worship. “And as they went to tell His disciples, behold Jesus met them.” Having already revealed Himself first to Mary, as it says in Mark 16, and now He goes ahead of them supernaturally transporting Himself, and comes back approaching them and He meets them. And I just love this. “Jesus met them saying, chairete” – is the Greek word – chairete. There He was in resurrection glory, in physical form, right on the road, alive from the dead and He says to them, “Chairete.” You know what that is? Hi. Good Morning. Hello. Well, you'd think maybe you'd get something more profound than that out of the resurrected Son of God. There's something so beautiful about that. That was the ordinary salutation of the marketplace. That was the ordinary greeting that everybody gave as they passed on the roads. That was what you said when you spoke to the people in your own house every day. Here is Christ in resurrection glory, here is the Son of God in His kingly majesty having conquered death, and in a very simple and warm and human way He simply stops some women that He loves and with human tenderness and very natural human sympathy He says, “Good morning. Hi.”

Cooper P Abrams III: Resurrection Responses

I. FEAR AND FAINTING - Matt. 28:2-4

II. FEAR AND FABRICATION – Matt. 28:11-15

III. FEAR AND FAITH – Matt. 28:1, 5-10

<https://bible-truth.org/msg94.html>

Scott Harris: The Resurrection of Christ

The resurrection of the Jesus Christ from the dead is central to God's message of salvation for it is the basis of our faith and hope in God for eternal life. With that in mind, we might think that Matthew would give us every possible detail about it and every post-resurrection appearance Jesus made, yet Matthew approaches it very simply from the perspective of the women who first discovered the wonderful news and then proves the fact of the resurrection by the action of Jesus' enemies. . .

These women come to the garden to look at the grave, and according to Luke, they had also come with more burial spices that they had prepared. Mark's account records that as they had walked to the sepulcher they had been wondering who would roll the stone away that blocked the entrance to the tomb. This was an act of love and devotion, but it was also an act that shows their unbelief. It is possible that the disciples had never related anything to them about what Jesus had said about being raised from the dead on the third day, but that seems improbable. They did not go the grave of Jesus to see if He was resurrected, but to anoint His body with more burial spices as a beautiful act of their devotion to Him. . .

The soldiers that were present were struck with divine fear. The earthquake would have been scary enough, and they would have been somewhat jittery about that anyway since there had been a strong earthquake only three days before, but their fear was of the angel. The word shake here is the same root word as “earthquake.” In a sense the earth had been shaken when the angel did his work and now the guards were shaken because they could see the angel. The fear was so great that they fainted and fell unconscious like dead men. . .

Notice that it is only some of the guard. There are several reasons for this. First, the guard had been frightened out of its wits by the earthquake and seeing the angel. It is doubtful that all of them were still together, and some may have even fled. It is also true that if they had stayed together, they would have attracted Pilate's attention as they came into Jerusalem, and that was something they wanted to avoid as demonstrated by their reporting to the chief priests instead of Pilate. That is the third point to note. . .

What is your response to the resurrected savior? Do you hold to some bribe from the world – fame, fortune, pleasure – to keep you from believing the truth? Or do you believe and fall at His feet to worship – as did the women on that glorious morning?

https://www.gracebibleny.org/resurrection_christ_matthew_28115

TEXT: Matthew 28:16-20

TITLE: THE GREAT COMMISSION

BIG IDEA:

THE GREAT COMMISSION FOCUSES ON MAKING DISCIPLES WORLDWIDE BASED ON THE AUTHORITY AND ABIDING PRESENCE OF JESUS CHRIST

INTRODUCTION:

Daniel Doriani: The commission has a sandwich structure. At the top and at the bottom, Jesus gives reasons for accepting the commission. To start the commission, Jesus says, “All authority in heaven and on earth has been given to me” (28:18). Jesus, as the Son of God, always had authority, but he exercised only a fraction of it during his ministry. He taught with authority and healed people with a word, but now the Father has bestowed full authority on him. He exercises it in a wider sphere: in heaven and on earth, over men and angels, over his disciples and over all mankind. His reign over the nations now begins (Dan. 7:27). Jesus came to serve, but he will now be served.

At the end of the commission he says, “And surely I am with you always, to the very end of the age” (Matt. 28:20). At the beginning of Matthew, we learn that Jesus is God with us to redeem his people (1:23). At the midpoint, we learn that he is God with us to purify his people (18:20). At the end, we learn that he is God with us to disciple the nations (28:20). We have his strength, his Spirit, his presence, and his comfort for our mission; we are not alone.

Jesus supplies two sweeping motives to fulfill a charge that is as large as the world itself. We have all the authorization we need for the task. We never need to hesitate, never need to apologize. Whenever we speak of Christ, we are within our rights. We also have all the power we need, for we have the very presence of God.

Robert Gundry: This paragraph contains a compendium of important Matthean themes: Jesus as the greater Moses, the deity of Jesus, the authority of his commands, the trinitarian associations of baptism, the danger of doubt among disciples, their ministry of teaching, discipleship as obeying Jesus’ commands, the presence of Jesus with his disciples, and the directing of Christian hope to the consummation. Paramount among these themes, however, is the mission to all nations.

R. T. France: Theologically one may read back from this final scene to illuminate the significance of much that has been said and done in earlier chapters.

Craig Blomberg: This short account contains the culmination and combination of all of Matthew's central themes:

- (1) the move from particularism to universalism in the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom;
- (2) discipleship and the establishment of the church;
- (3) Jesus' commands as ultimately incumbent on Christians; and
- (4) the abiding presence of Jesus as teacher, as divine Son of God, and the risen and sovereign Lord of the universe.

Jeffrey Crabtree: These instructions must have been a surprise to the disciples. Their expectations were probably neither worldwide (Acts 1:6; Wilkins 954) nor long-term. Compare the question in Acts 1:6 with “unto the end of the age.” However, these mountainside instructions were the long-term marching orders of the church. All disciples must make other disciples and teach disciple-making—or we have failed (Carson, Matthew 599).

This commission may well give a hint of Matthew’s purpose for penning his Gospel. He brought together large blocks of Jesus’ teaching to share with later generations of believers. This written record was one way Matthew obeyed and satisfied his obligation to make disciples and teach Jesus’ commands. (This writer hopes this commentary will do the same!)

[Ed: As do I!]

With these words, Matthew brought his record to a close. The King has come (1:1). He is God with us, Immanuel (1:23; Blomberg 100). He is God in the midst of the assembly (18:20). He is God who is always with His people as they carry His kingdom news to the ends of the earth (28:20) in this the end of the ages (1 Cor. 10:11).

David Turner: One is immediately struck with the repetition of the word “all” in this passage:

1. Jesus has been given all authority (28:18).
2. Disciples are to be made of all nations (28:19).
3. Such disciples are to be taught to obey all that Jesus commanded (28:20).
4. Jesus will be with his disciples all the days until the end of the age (28:20).

Leon Morris: We must bear in mind that the picture of Jesus as a Jewish rabbi, with a little group of disciples around him, traveling in leisurely fashion in rural Galilee contrasts sharply with the missionary-minded church that we find in the early chapters of Acts. From the beginning the church exercised a missionary function and sought to make disciples out of those who listened to its proclamation. Why this sudden and dramatic change? Surely it is the fact of the resurrection of Jesus, coupled with the charge the risen Lord gave to his followers to make disciples of all nations.

Grant Osborne: Mission for Israel to the nations was to be centripetal; that is, Israel was to stay in the holy Land and witness to the grace of God, so that the nations could come to them to be blessed (the Abrahamic covenant, Gen 12:3; 15:5; 18:18; 22:18; 26:45). The centrifugal mission, taking the message to the nations, would be a messianic act (Isa 11:9-10; 42:6; 49:6). This passage is that messianic launch of that universal mission, and it constitutes “the final word of the exalted Jesus to the disciples” in Matthew.

(:16-17) PROLOGUE – STAGING OF MOUNTAINTOP COMMISSIONING SERVICE

A. (:16) Clear Logistics

1. Participants

“But the eleven disciples”

Donald Hagner: For the first time the disciples are referred to using the poignant term οἱ ἕνδεκα, “the eleven,” rather than οἱ δώδεκα, “the twelve” (cf. 10:1–2, 5; 11:1; 20:17; 26:14, 20, 47).

2. Location

“proceeded to Galilee,”

3. Commander

“to the mountain which Jesus had designated.”

David Turner: Jesus’s meeting them on a mountain echoes the giving of the Torah from Mount Sinai as well as previous mountain experiences in Matthew (4:8; 5:1; 14:23; 15:29; 17:1; 24:3; 26:30; T. Donaldson 1985: 170–90; Allison 1993b: 262–66).

B. (:17) Confused Outlook

1. Worshipful

“And when they saw Him, they worshiped Him;”

2. Hesitant Initially

“but some were doubtful.”

Richard Gardner: When the moment of reunion finally occurs, the experience evokes two reactions. As did the magi at Jesus’ birth (2:11), the disciples worship Jesus. Some, however, even as they worship, do so with the same hesitant or little faith that has characterized the disciples throughout the Gospel. They doubt (cf. 14:28-33; 17:20-21). It will take the reassuring word of Jesus in the verses that follow to fortify them for their calling.

R. T. France: The last time these eleven disciples had seen Jesus was as they ran away from him in Gethsemane; so what sort of reception could they now expect from the master they had deserted? The conflicting instincts to worship the risen Jesus and to avoid a potentially embarrassing encounter make very human sense in this context.

Donald Hagner: It is natural to believe that the eleven disciples would have been in a state of hesitation and indecision. Too much had happened too fast for them to be able to assimilate it. They did not doubt that it was Jesus whom they saw and whom they gladly worshiped. If their faith was too small in measure, that was because they were in a state of uncertainty about what the recent events meant and what might happen next. They found themselves in “a situation of cognitive dissonance par excellence”; (Walsh and Keesmaat, 195). It is precisely this state of mind that is addressed in the words that Jesus speaks to the disciples in the following verses (vv 18–20; see Giblin, who refers to “reassurance”). Jesus’ words will accomplish what the sight of the risen Jesus alone could not. Two things remain intriguing, however: first, that Matthew bothers at all to insert the reference to their doubting, and second, that Matthew records no resolution of their uncertain state of mind (cf. Leon-Dufour, “Origin”). It seems clear that Matthew wanted members of his community to apply the truth to themselves. This can be put in a variety of ways. Garland writes: “Matthew understands that the fluctuation between worship and indecision is every disciple’s struggle. What is needed is confidence that Jesus is Lord of all and present with them at all times”.

Grant Osborne: The disciples are still growing in their faith and understanding and have not yet reached maturity.

I. (:18) THE GREAT COMMISSION CONVEYS DELEGATED AUTHORITY – THE POWER OF JESUS

*“And Jesus came up and spoke to them, saying,
‘All authority has been given to Me in heaven and on earth.’”*

Craig Blomberg: Because of this authority, Jesus has the right to issue his followers their “marching orders,” but he also has the ability to help them carry out those orders.

Jeffrey Crabtree: First, Jesus established His “power”: that is, His right or authority (v. 18; Greek exousia). He had every right to give the instructions He was about to give. Matthew recorded earlier mentions of Jesus’ authority.

- Jesus had taught them as one having authority (7:29).
- He had authority to forgive sins (9:6, 8).
- He gave His disciples authority against unclean spirits (10:1).
- He claimed authority over the temple (21:23-24).

Now, following His resurrection He declared possession of all authority in heaven and on earth. He is Supreme Commander of the universe. He is Ruler. He has the right to govern. He has authority over all—even over those who do not want His story told (vv. 11-15).

David Turner: The glory seen by the disciples at the transfiguration has become the permanent mode of Jesus’s life as the exalted Son of Man.

R. T. France: Jesus has spoken several times, using the language of Dan 7:13–14, of the future sovereignty of the Son of Man (16:28; 19:28; 24:30–31; 25:31–34; 26:64);²³ three of those passages have indicated that that sovereignty would be achieved in the near future, to be seen by those then alive (16:28; 24:30–34; 26:64; cf. also 10:23). But now what has been a vision for the future, albeit the imminent future, has become present reality. The risen Jesus, vindicated over those who tried to destroy him, is now established as the universal sovereign, and his realm embraces not only the whole earth which was to be the dominion of the “one like a son of man” in Daniel’s vision but heaven as well. At the beginning of the gospel Satan offered Jesus sovereignty over the whole earth, but his offer was refused (4:8–10); now Jesus, going the way of obedience to his Father’s will even to the cross, has received far more than Satan could offer. He has spoken already in 11:27 of “everything entrusted to me by my Father;” now that authority is fully spelled out—indeed Jesus himself now possesses the authority that he attributed to his Father as “Lord of heaven and earth” in 11:25. It is this universal sovereignty that is the essential basis of the commission which is to follow in vv. 19–20, and thus of the continuing life of the disciple community until the end of the age.

Grant Osborne: This is not a new authority, for it is linked to the authority Jesus displayed throughout his earthly ministry. Yet at the same time it is a new level of authority, as Jesus receives from his Father his preexistent glory and authority (a further link to the transfiguration). As seen in 16:19; 18:18 this authority “in heaven and on earth” is linked to the authority to “bind and loose,” given to the church, so it is intimately linked to the church’s mission in v. 19.

II. (:19-20a) THE GREAT COMMISSION CONCENTRATES ON THE MISSION OF MAKING DISCIPLES – THE PROGRAM OF JESUS

David Turner: Those who are baptized are to be taught not only to know all of Jesus's commands but also to obey all of them (28:20). Thus in discipleship the intellectual component is secondary, the means to the end, which is spiritual formation (cf. John 13:17). All this implies the central role of the church as God's primary agency for mission. Only in the community/family that is the church can disciples be baptized and taught to observe all that Jesus has commanded (cf. Matt. 16:18–19; 18:17–20).

A. (:19a) Scope of the Discipleship Mission Requires Missionary Outreach

“Go therefore”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Make disciples (v. 19), is the main verb in this sentence in the original and the only imperative. The other three actions—go, baptize, and teach—are participles that function as adverbial modifiers of this main verb and are part of the command.

Charles Swindoll: First, making disciples takes going. It will take reaching into hearts and communicating the good news that Jesus died for our sins and rose from the dead victorious. People need to know that there's nothing they can do to earn salvation. It is received by grace alone through faith alone in Christ alone. That's the proclamation we bear as those entrusted with the Great Commission. And we take that proclamation not just to family members, and not just to neighbors or people within our own country. We take it to the world – to the nations, as Jesus said. There are no exceptions, no borders, and no boundaries to our disciple-making mission.

B. (:19b) Summary of the Discipleship Mission = Making Disciples Worldwide

“and make disciples of all the nations,”

Craig Blomberg: The main command of Christ's commission is “make disciples” (math teusate). Too much and too little have often been made of this observation. Too much is made of it when the disciples' “going” is overly subordinated, so that Jesus' charge is to proselytize merely where one is. Matthew frequently uses “go” as an introductory circumstantial participle that is rightly translated as coordinate to the main verb—here “Go and make” (cf. 2:8; 9:13; 11:4; 17:27; 28:7). Too little is made of it when all attention is centered on the command to “go,” as in countless appeals for missionary candidates, so that foreign missions are elevated to a higher status of Christian service than other forms of spiritual activity. To “make disciples of all nations” does require many people to leave their homelands, but Jesus' main focus remains on the task of all believers to duplicate themselves wherever they may be. The verb “make disciples” also commands a kind of evangelism that does not stop after someone makes a profession of faith. The truly subordinate participles in v. 19 explain what making disciples involves: “baptizing” them and “teaching” them obedience to all of Jesus' commandments. The first of these will be a once-for-all, decisive initiation into Christian community. The second proves a perennially incomplete, life-long task.

D. A. Carson: “To disciple a person to Christ is to bring him into the relation of pupil to teacher, ‘taking his yoke’ of authoritative instruction (11:29), accepting what he says as true because he says it, and submitting to his requirements as right because he makes them” (Broadus). Disciples are those who hear, understand, and obey Jesus' teaching (12:46–50). The injunction is given at least to the Eleven, but to the Eleven in their own role as disciples (28:16). Therefore, they are paradigms for all disciples. Plausibly, the command is given to a larger gathering of disciples.

Either way, it is binding on all Jesus' disciples to make others what they themselves are—disciples of Jesus Christ.

Leon Morris: In this Gospel a disciple is both a learner and a follower; a disciple takes Jesus as his teacher and learns from him, and a disciple also follows Jesus. The life of a disciple is different because of his attachment to Jesus. The Master is not giving a command that will merely secure nominal adherence to a group, but one that will secure wholehearted commitment to a person. In the first century a disciple did not enroll with such-and-such a school, but with such-and-such a teacher. Jesus' disciples are people for whom a life has been given in ransom (20:28) and who are committed to the service of the Master, who not only took time to teach his disciples but who died for them and rose again. Those who are disciples of such a leader are committed people. And, of course, this is the kind of disciple that he looks for his followers to make. They are to make disciples of all the nations, which points to a worldwide scope for their mission. It took the church a little time to realize the significance of this, and in the early chapters of Acts we find the believers concentrating on proclaiming their message to the Jews. But there seems never to have been any question of admitting Gentiles, the only problem being on what conditions.

C. (:19c-20) Specific Components of the Discipleship Mission = Baptizing and Teaching

1. (:19c) Entrance into the Faith via Evangelism and Baptism

“baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit,”

Stu Weber: Baptism is not a step to salvation. Rather, it is an initial step of obedience that results from a person's decision to trust the Messiah. Baptism represents the identification of people with this new way of life and faith. Baptism should be experienced as soon as possible after a person trusts Christ.

Craig Blomberg: The singular “name” followed by the threefold reference to “Father, Son, and Holy Spirit” suggests both unity and plurality in the Godhead. Here is the clearest Trinitarian “formula” anywhere in the Gospels.

Jeffrey Crabtree: Faith in Jesus (18:6), not baptism or learning, brings one into a discipleship relationship with Jesus. Baptism is a testimony that grace has been received (“the answer” or “the pledge” (NIV) in 1 Pet. 3:20-21). It is not a means of grace (contra Bruner 2:821; 1 Cor. 1:14). Once a person becomes a disciple of Christ, the first act of obedience for that individual is to follow Jesus in baptism. According to N.T. practice, only believers were baptized (Acts 2:41; 18:8), which is one reason gospel baptism is only for those who are mentally mature enough to place personal faith in Jesus as Savior. In other words, baptism is not for children too immature to place saving trust in Christ. . .

“Baptize” is a transliteration of the Greek verb (baptizō). In its most basic sense, it means to dip, to immerse. John the Baptist, Jesus, the Twelve during Jesus' earthly ministry, and the early church all practiced immersion as their mode of baptism. Other forms were introduced into church practice decades later but they were not part of the original practice. Extended teaching times between profession of faith and baptism were also a later introduction. . .

In Christian believers' baptism, Jesus' disciples identify with the Triune God. This is the fullest revelation of the divine, greater than the revelation of the O.T. In the N.T., devotion to God encompasses all three Persons of the Godhead. The doctrine of the Trinity is distinctive to kingdom theology and mandates a commitment to Jesus and the Holy Spirit as well as to the Father.

This listing of the members of the Godhead also reflects Jesus' own baptism. The Father spoke, the Son was in the water, and the Holy Spirit descended in the form of a dove (3:16-17). It is important to note that in 28:19 each member is mentioned equally. Neither Person is presented as being superior to or less than either of the other members. This is a clear pronouncement of Jesus' deity (Wilkins 955).

Grant Osborne: baptism “into fellowship with” (Allen, Albright and Mann) or “into the Lordship of” (Carson) the Godhead, expressing a new relationship (Davies and Allison).

2. (:20) Edification in the Faith via Teaching Obedience to Christ's Teaching “teaching them to observe all that I commanded you,”

Craig Blomberg: Evangelism must be holistic. If non-Christians are not hearing the gospel and not being challenged to make a decision for Christ, then the church has disobeyed one part of Jesus' commission. If new converts are not faithfully and lovingly nurtured in the whole counsel of God's revelation, then the church has disobeyed the other part. Key implications for preaching appear here. There must be a balance between evangelistic proclamation and relevant exposition of all parts of God's Word, including the more difficult material best reserved for the mature (cf. 1 Cor 2:1-5 with 2:6-10). So, too, the ministries of the church overall must reflect a healthy balance of “outreach” and “inreach.” Individuals who have differing gifts should be encouraged to expend most of their energies developing their strengths, whether evangelizing or nurturing, speaking or serving. Nevertheless, Jesus calls all Christians to be both witnesses and disciplers.

D. A. Carson: Remarkably, Jesus does not foresee a time when any part of his teaching will be rightly judged needless, outmoded, superseded, or untrue. Everything he has commanded must be passed on “to the very end of the age.”

Grant Osborne: We are at the heart of Matthew's gospel here, with the five discourses centering on Jesus' ethical teaching as the basis here for the teaching ministry of the disciples.

III. (:20b) THE GREAT COMMISSION COUNTS ON CHRIST'S ABIDING PRESENCE UNTIL HE RETURNS – THE PRESENCE OF JESUS

“and lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the age.”

Richard Gardner: As disciples pursue their mission, they do so with the assurance Jesus offers in 20b: I am with you always. It is the promise that God gave to Jacob in Genesis 46:3-4, to Moses in Exodus 3:12, and to the exiles in Isaiah 43:1-7. Now Jesus speaks as God speaks. To put it another way: The One who is named God-with-us at the outset of the Gospel (1:23) promises that he will continue to be God-with-us in his community. (Note how 28:20b and 1:23 thus form a literary inclusion.) Earlier, Jesus indicated that he would be with his disciples when they assembled in his name (18:20). Here he assures us that he will accompany us in our going out as well, until the day dawns when his now hidden presence becomes visible in glory.

Grant Osborne: The final of the six uses of “look” in ch. 28 points to the dramatic truth that provides a proper conclusion to this commission and to the gospel as a whole. It completes one of the key Christological themes of the book, namely, the omnipresence of Christ with his new kingdom community, seen in the beginning (1:23, “Immanuel . . . God with us”) and center (18:20, “there am I in the midst of them”) of Matthew; and so it stresses the deity and divine glory of the Christ. The gospel ends with the “Emmanuel” with which it began. The Great Commission is thus framed by the omnipotence (v. 18) and omnipresence (v. 20b) of Christ. The theme partakes of the Shekinah glory of the OT and the divine comfort of Yahweh’s presence among men (not just divine presence but divine assistance). So God’s protection of his people throughout the ages is promised to the church.

David Turner: Jesus’s presence will last until “the end of the age.” This expression (13:39–40, 49; 24:3) clearly refers to the time of eschatological judgment and renewal at the conclusion of the present order (cf. Cuvillier 1999a). This makes clear that the commission is not only for the original eleven disciples but also for their disciples and their disciples’ disciples in perpetuity until Jesus returns. Through all these days, there will never be a single day when Jesus will not be with his disciples as they are busy about his business.

Marvin Rosenthal: If “the end” in Matthew 24:14 is inside the seventieth week, then “the end of the age” in Matthew 28:20 must also be inside the seventieth week. . . If the Great Commission of the church is to evangelize the world up to the end, then the church must enter the seventieth week of the book of Daniel in order to fulfill its holy calling, only then to be raptured before the Day of the Lord judgment.

Donald Hagner: The great commission and its frame with which Matthew ends remain, like the whole Gospel itself, one of the priceless treasures of the Christian church, providing comfort, strength, and hope until the final dawning of the eschaton.

D. A. Carson: Matthew’s gospel ends with the expectation of continued mission and teaching. The five preceding sections always conclude with a block of Jesus’ teaching (3:1 – 26:5); but the passion and resurrection of Jesus end with a commission to his disciples to carry on that same ministry in the light of the cross, the empty tomb, and the triumphant vindication and exaltation of the risen Lord. In this sense, the gospel of Matthew is not a closed book until the consummation. The final chapter is being written in the mission and teaching of Jesus’ disciples.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why was this meeting staged in Galilee instead of in Jerusalem?
- 2) What movements throughout church history have been strong in their focus on evangelism but weak in their focus on edification and practical discipleship?
- 3) How do you correct the false teaching that not all Christians are disciples . . . but that discipleship is some type of second tier level of Christianity?
- 4) What are some errors regarding baptism that this passage refutes?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

William Barclay: Here we come to the end of the gospel story; here we listen to the last words of Jesus to his disciples; and in this last meeting Jesus did three things.

(1) He assured them of his power. Surely nothing was outside the power of him who had died and conquered death. Now they were the servants of a Master whose authority upon earth and in heaven was beyond all question.

(2) He gave them a commission. He sent them out to make all the world his disciples.

(3) He promised them a presence. It must have been a staggering thing for eleven humble Galilaeans to be sent forth to the conquest of the world. Even as they heard it, their hearts must have failed them. But no sooner was the command given than the promise followed. They were sent out -as we are – on the greatest task in history, but with them there was the greatest presence in the world.

Stu Weber: The entire Gospel of Matthew serves to equip us for the fulfillment of the Great Commission.

- Matthew gives the historical basis for our status as disciples of the Messiah and citizens of the kingdom of heaven. Matthew gives us our true identity.
- Matthew shows us the person with whom we have begun a deeply intimate and loyal relationship.
- Matthew reveals this master's unbending demands and his unending grace, contrasting him with the many other masters who clamor for our loyalty. None of these false gods will reward us for faithfulness as he does. None of them care for our well-being.
- Matthew demonstrates the authority with which we are sent out so we might fulfill our disciple-making ministry with confidence. This confidence is not in ourselves but in the Lord and Savior who promised to be with us.
- Matthew promises us the reward that awaits the good and faithful servant, motivating us to faithfulness in our earthly kingdom task.
- Matthew sets before us a detailed example, in the Messiah himself, showing us exactly how to carry out our commission.
- Matthew provides, through the teachings of the Messiah, the basis for the right character of kingdom citizens as well as guidelines for right relationships within the church family.
- Matthew gives us a message of warning and hope for a world heading for destruction. We must proclaim this message fearlessly and lovingly. Some people will become disciples because of our proclamation of Matthew's message.

Seen from the perspective of the Great Commission, Matthew's Gospel is a training manual for life and ministry. We will become true disciples of the Messiah, effectively reproducing other disciples, if we abide with him and live out what we learn from him.

Jeffrey Crabtree: A sermon might focus on the all-encompassing aspects of the great commission:

- (1) all authority;
- (2) all nations;
- (3) all of Jesus' teachings; and
- (4) all the days.

Likewise, Jesus gave the greatest commission:

- (1) the greatest charge (go);
- (2) the greatest invitation (become a disciple of Jesus);
- (3) the greatest drama (baptism, a reenactment);
- (4) the greatest lesson (Jesus' words);
- (5) the greatest communion (I am with you);
- (6) the greatest promise (I am with you always, to the end of the age).

John MacArthur: The Making Disciples of All Nations

So, Christ came into the world with one motive, basically, and that was to glorify God. And that motive has been passed on to the church. We are to give God glory; that is our reason for being. As the French would say, that's our raison d'être, that's our reason to be: to glorify God, in terms of a motive.

But what about a mission? What is the mission that flows out of that motive? . . .

And the mission that does that is to win men and women to the Savior. And as they come to know Him and their sins are forgiven, and they are transformed from death to life and darkness to light, God is glorified in the miracle of that transformation. The glory of God is manifest in His loving desire, and in His power to redeem lost men out of the world. . .

We are left here to make disciples, to bring people to Christ, to cause people to become followers of the Savior, to seek and to save those that are lost. The verb make disciple, mathēteusate, is an imperative command, from the verb mathēteuō.

He sent the Son, then, to seek and save that which was lost. And then the Spirit, to empower us to witness, as it says in Acts 1:8, to accomplish the same goal. Jesus, in John 17:18, said, "Father, as You sent Me into the world, so send I My disciples," for the same reason; that is, to seek and to save those who are lost. And Jesus said, "After the Spirit is come, you will receive power, and then you will be My witnesses in Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria, and to the uttermost part of the earth."

So, we're in line with that calling and commission that has always been on the heart of God. Even when Jesus initially called the disciples, He said, "Follow Me" - in Matthew 4:18 to 20 - "and I will make you fishers of men." Nothing has changed. From the call of Matthew 4, to the commission of Matthew 28, there has been a training process, so that those who were called to be fishers of men, when they are commissioned to be fishers of men, will know what that involves, and will be faithful to fulfill it.

The tragedy of the church of Jesus Christ is that so many people have lost sight of that commission, and they have settled for a comfortable, self-indulgent kind of Christianity, that is little more than an inexpensive social club membership. That is not God's intention. . . It is not only an available heart, it is a worshiping heart. And then thirdly - and this is where we come to our lesson today - the third element of fulfilling the great commission we see in the passage is submission; submission. . .

He, then, has all authority. What that says is this: He is in charge. He is sovereign, and to Him we must submit. Now, why does He say this? Because it is on the basis of our submission to His authority that we put ourselves in the place of obedience, isn't it? We have to understand that His command is binding before we are going to undertake to obey it, because the command itself is staggering. . .

So, you make a disciple when you lead someone to Christ. All of this stuff that I keep reading about nowadays, that a second - that a disciple is some second-generation or second-level Christian, and later on you can become a disciple, just does not square with Scripture. Making a disciple means leading someone to faith in Christ, which baptism typifies. When you come to Christ, confess Him as Lord and Savior, believe in your heart that God has raised Him from the dead, and demonstrate that in an act of obedient baptism, you are a disciple. . .

I understand that what God wants out of me is availability. What He wants from me is a worshiping heart, that's totally centered on Him, and not the junk of the world. What He wants is a submissive spirit, that says, "Whatever You ask, Lord, I'll do it." And then when I hear it, He wants obedience. And what He gives me in return, is not only all the commands, and all the orders, and all the right instruction, but the power of His own presence to pull it off and make it happen.

Walter Wilson: The abrupt transition in 28:16 picks up the narrative thread from 28:10 without indicating how much time has passed or what has transpired in the interim. The disciples are now reconstituted as Jesus's apostles, recalling their original call as apostles at the beginning of the mission discourse, where they were conferred with authority (10:1) and instructed to "go" (πορεύεσθε, 10:6). The Messiah's renewed life, then, generates a renewed mission, one that reflects the character of that life. The symbolism of the Twelve in 10:2-4 (cf. 19:28) is now broken, the reference to the Eleven (28:16) drawing attention to the absence as well as the betrayal of Judas (cf. 10:4). By the same token, the reference injects an element of hope, inasmuch as the group's presence ameliorates the earlier impression of complete failure (cf. 26:56). The resurrection, then, represents the means by which Jesus continues to be "with" his followers (cf. 1:23) as well as the means by which he is elevated as universal lord and judge (cf. 25:31-46). Insofar as the resurrection also signifies victory over opposition to the messianic movement, it also inspires his followers to be fearless in carrying out their mission (cf. 10:26-31). . .

Thus, having revealed his universal authority to them, the Risen One next orders the disciples to undertake a universal discipling mission. The command to "go" (28:19a) recalls the opening lines of the mission discourse (10:6-7, also with πορεύομαι). Once again, we see that the manner in which the disciples both follow Jesus's example and participate in his authority is by creating new disciples. Whereas they previously had been directed not to evangelize the ἔθνη (10:5), now they are commanded to “make disciples of all the nations” (28:19a). The era of the exclusive mission to Israel (10:6; cf. 15:24) has ended, giving way to the proclamation of the gospel to the whole world, a development that Jesus has anticipated through both his words and his actions, and to which he had assigned eschatological significance in 24:14.

Stanley Saunders: The reordering of heaven and earth under the lordship of Jesus Christ provides Matthew’s basis (“therefore,” 28:19) for the commission proper, which is delivered by means of supporting clauses surrounding the primary, central command: “make disciples of all nations.” The supporting clauses delineate the means or circumstances under which the “discipling” takes place. Jesus’ own training of his disciples is the model. They have been “going” throughout Galilee and Judea, back and forth into Gentile and Jewish territories, and finally to Jerusalem and the cross. Now the disciples are to begin again from Galilee, where Jesus’ mission started, baptizing and leading others to discern, comprehend, and embrace God’s rule. Does the mission to “all nations” suggest the end of the mission to Israel in favor of a predominantly or exclusively Gentile mission? There is no compelling evidence in the Gospel that God’s covenant with Israel has ended. Despite the resistance of Israel’s rulers and people, and even the desertion of his own disciples, Jesus’ saving power embraces all. The mission to the nations depends on the realization that the cross and resurrection bring to fruition Jesus’ mission to “save his people from their sins” (1:21). Jesus’ comprehensive authority over all of heaven and earth includes Israel. God’s mission of restoration and reconciliation now extends to the nations because Israel’s true king is now enthroned.

Greek Diagram Analysis:

οὖν Therefore

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BOOKS:

Barbieri, Louis A. Jr. The Bible Knowledge Commentary. Colorado Springs, CO: Cook Communications Ministries, 1983.

Barclay, William. The New Daily Study Bible – The Gospel of Matthew. Edinburgh: Saint Andrew Press, 2002.

Baxter, J. Sidlow. Explore the Book. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 1960.

Blomberg, Craig L. The New American Commentary – Matthew. Nashville, TN: B&H Publishing Group, 1992.

Bruce, Alexander Balmain. Edited by W. Robertson Nicoll. The Expositor's Greek Testament. Grand Rapids, MI: Wm. B. Eerdmans Publishing Company, 1976.

Carson, D. A. The Expositor's Bible Commentary – Revised Edition – Matthew. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 2010.

Crabtree, Jeffrey. The Randall House Bible Commentary – Matthew. Nashville, TN: Randall House, 2015.

Doriani, Daniel M. Reformed Expository Commentary – Matthew. Phillipsburg, NJ: P&R Publishing Company, 2008.

France, R. T. The New International Commentary on the New Testament – The Gospel of Matthew. Grand Rapids, MI: William B. Eerdmans Publishing Company, 2007.

Gardner, Richard B. Believers Church Bible Commentary – Matthew. Scottsdale, PA, 1991.

Green, E. Michael. The Bible Speaks Today -- The Message of Matthew. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1988.

Gundry, Robert. Commentary on Matthew. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Academic, 2010.

Hagner, Donald A. Word Biblical Commentary – Matthew. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 1995.

Hendriksen, William. Exposition of the Gospel According to Matthew. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, 1973.

- Henry, Matthew. Zondervan NIV Matthew Henry Commentary. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 2010.
- Kent, Homer A. The Wycliffe Bible Commentary. Chicago, IL: Moody Press, 1962.
- Lenski, R. C. H. The Interpretation of St. Matthew's Gospel. Minneapolis, MN: Augsburg Publishing House, 1943.
- MacArthur, John. The MacArthur Study Bible. La Habra, CA: Thomas Nelson, 2006.
- Mohler, Albert Jr. The NIV Grace Truth Study Bible. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 2021.
- Morgan, G. Campbell. The Gospel According to Matthew. Eugene, OR: Wipf and Stock Publishers, 1929.
- Morris, Leon. The Pillar New Testament Commentary – The Gospel According to Matthew. Grand Rapids, MI: William B. Eerdmans Publishing Company, 1992.
- Nixon, R. E. The New Bible Commentary. Grand Rapids, MI: Wm. B. Eerdmans Publishing Company, 1956.
- Nolland, John. NIGTC – The Gospel of Matthew – A Commentary on the Greek Text. Grand Rapids, MI: William B. Eerdmans Publishing Company, 2005.
- Osborne, Grant R. Exegetical Commentary on the New Testament – Matthew. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 2010.
- Platt, David. Christ-Centered Exposition -- Exalting Jesus in Matthew. Good News Publishers, 2013.
- Quarles, Charles L. Exegetical Guide to the Greek New Testament – Matthew. Nashville, TN: B&H Publishing Group, 2017.
- Rosenthal, Marvin. The Pre-Wrath Rapture of the Church. Nashville, TN: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1990.
- Ryle, J. C. Ryle's Expository Thoughts on the Gospels – Volume One – Matthew - Mark. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, 1977.
- Stedman, Ray C. Adventuring Through the Bible. Grand Rapids, MI: Discovery House Publishers, 1997.
- Swindoll, Charles R. Swindoll's Living Insights New Testament Commentary – Matthew. Carol Stream, IL: Tyndale House Publishers, 2020.

- Tasker, R. V. G. The Gospel According to St. Matthew – Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids, MI: Wm. B. Eerdmans Publishing Company, 1961.
- Trench, R. C. Notes on the Parables of Our Lord. Ann Arbor, MI: Baker Book House, 1948.
- Turner, David L. Baker Exegetical Commentary on the New Testament – Matthew. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Academic, 2008.
- Weber, Stu. Holman New Testament Commentary – Matthew. Nashville, TN: Broadman & Holman Publishers, 2000.
- Wiersbe, Warren W. Be Loyal – Following the King of Kings – NT Commentary: Matthew. Colorado Springs, CO: David C. Cook, 1980.
- Wilkins, Michael J. Zondervan Illustrated Bible Backgrounds Commentary -- Matthew. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 2002.
- Wilson, Walter T. Eerdmans Critical Commentary – The Gospel of Matthew. Grand Rapids, MI: William B. Eerdmans Publishing Company, 2022.

ONLINE SERMONS:

(mainly www.preceptaustin.org or www.sermonaudio.com)

- Allen, Greg. https://www.preceptaustin.org/matthew_commentaries
- Bell, Brian. https://www.preceptaustin.org/matthew_commentaries
- Benfield, Chris. https://www.preceptaustin.org/matthew_commentaries
- Bill, Brian. https://www.preceptaustin.org/matthew_commentaries
- Bomkamp, Jim. https://www.preceptaustin.org/matthew_commentaries
- Carr, Alan. https://www.preceptaustin.org/matthew_commentaries
- Chamblin, Knox. https://www.preceptaustin.org/matthew_commentaries
- Constable, Thomas. <https://planobiblechapel.org/tcon/notes/pdf/matthew.pdf>
- Criswell, W. A. https://www.preceptaustin.org/matthew_commentaries
- Deffinbaugh, Robert. <https://bible.org/series/studies-gospel-matthew>

Duncan, J. Ligon. https://fpcjackson.org/resource-library/series-index/matthew-2/?fwp_resource_types=sermons

Guzik, David. <https://enduringword.com/bible-commentary/matthew-1/>

Holwick, David. https://www.preceptaustin.org/matthew_commentaries

Hurt, Bruce. https://www.preceptaustin.org/matthew_commentaries

Johnson, S. Lewis. <https://sljinstitute.net/category/gospel-of-matthew/>

Layne, Ross.

<https://www.sermonaudio.com/search.asp?currpage=6&keyword=Ross%5FLayne&SpeakerOnly=true&subsetcat=series&subsetitem=Matthew%3AThe+Gospel+of+the+King&AudioOnly=false&sortby=added>

MacArthur, John. <https://www.gty.org/library/resources/bible-series-library/scripture/1?book=40>

Malick, David. <http://www.bible.org>

Mohler, Albert. (audio) <https://albertmohler.com/sermon-series/matthew>

Parunak, Van. <https://www.cyber-chapel.org/sermons/matt/index.html>

Piper, John. <https://www.desiringgod.org/scripture/matthew/messages>

Ross, Allen. <https://bible.org/series/exposition-gospel-matthew>

Rugh, Gil. (audio)

<https://www.sermonaudio.com/search.asp?subsetitem=Matthew&subsetcat=bible&keyword=Gil%5FRugh&SpeakerOnly=true&includekeywords=&ExactVerse=>

Schultz, John. https://www.bible-commentaries.com/source/johnschultz/BC_Matthew.pdf

Sproul, R. C. (audio)

<https://www.ligonier.org/learn/scripture/matthew?type=sermon&page=1>

Swindoll, Chuck. <https://insight.org/resources/bible/the-gospels/matthew>

Utley, Bob. <https://bible.org/seriespage/first-christian-primer-matthew>

The Gospel Coalition. <https://www.thegospelcoalition.org/course/matthew/#overview>

Thompson, David.

<https://www.sermonaudio.com/search.asp?t=t&keyword=Matthew&BibleOnly=true&subsetcat=speaker&subsetitem=David+E%2E+Thompson>

Wallace, Peter.

<https://www.sermonaudio.com/search.asp?currpage=2&keyword=Peter%5FJ%2E%5FWallace&SpeakerOnly=true&subsetcat=series&subsetitem=Matthew&AudioOnly=false&sortby=added>

Walvoord, John. <https://bible.org/series/matthew-thy-kingdom-come>