BACKGROUND NOTES

GENERAL:

Drew Hunter: The Old Testament story ends with longing for a King to come establish God's kingdom. This kingdom will bring reconciliation to God for sinners and restoration to flourishing for creation. Matthew announces the arrival of this King and the dawn of this kingdom through Jesus's message and ministry. Jesus's words declare how his people will be ethically transformed (Matt. 5–7) and his works display how his creation will be physically healed (Matt. 8–9). This is a glimpse of the kingdom of heaven on earth.

Yet Matthew shows us, especially in chapter 13, that this kingdom does not arrive all at once.

The mystery of the kingdom is that while it has already dawned in Jesus's life, death, and resurrection, it will not arrive in its fullness until Jesus returns.

Ray Stedman: Beginning in the New Testament we move from the realm of shadow, type, and prophecy, into the full sunshine of the presentation of the Son of God. The Old Testament speaks of him on every page, but speaks in shadows, in types, in symbols, and in prophecies -- all looking forward to the coming of Someone. You cannot read the Old Testament without being aware of that constant promise running through every page -- Someone is coming! Someone is coming!

Leon Morris: "In grandness of conception and in the power with which a mass of material is subordinated to great ideas no writing in either Testament, dealing with a historical theme, is to be compared with Matthew. In this respect the present writer would be at a loss to find its equal also in the other literature of antiquity." (Zahn) In these words a great scholar of an earlier day brought out something of the majesty of our first Gospel. . .

To disparage Matthew is a great mistake. Nobody should minimize the importance of the Gospel that contains the infancy stories, the Sermon on the Mount, and a rich collection of parables (many of which we find in this Gospel only), to name but a few of its contents.

Mark Dever: The Message of Matthew: Jesus, the Son of David

Christianity traced back to Jesus Christ. Most influential figure in human history. Matthew: Jewish by birth and Roman by employment. Writing about mission and message of Jesus as with the other gospels. Unified portrait in the gospels with unique focus in each book.

Connectivity to OT history. Deeply textured portrait of Christ.

Always referred to as the gospel written by Matthew. Authorship not really disputed.

What was Jesus all about? Not some religious innovator.

1) What does this book say?

7 sections of Jesus' ministry. Introduction (1-4) and Concluding Climax (26-28); Chaps. 5-25 constitute main portion – each of 5 sections has a long teaching block and then some narrative.

- (5-9) Sermon on the Mount – Jesus' authority as teacher and healer
- (10-12) Rising Opposition to Jesus' ministry
- (13-mid 16) Two Opposed Camps – Polarizing effect – teaching block has parables
- (16:16 – confession of Jesus as Messiah = hinge point of book thru chap 18 – Teaching on Discipleship and church
- (19-25) Judgment coming on Israel for rejecting her Messiah

2) Was Jesus more New or more Jew?

Faithful Jew who knew His scriptures; respected Rabbi; expected fulfillment of OT passages; inheritor and interpreter of God's special telling of Himself to His special people.

Many things here new about person of Jesus and His mission. But the emphasis is on continuity.

The temple would be destroyed; huge implications; animal sacrifices ended; His body becoming the new temple. Considerable change. Ending of the priesthood; decline of significance of city of Jerusalem; including the Gentiles in the kingdom. Great Commission directed to making disciples in the world.

But still not how Jewish this Jesus is. Starts with 1:1 – Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham.

After destruction of temple, only 2 strains of Judaism survived:

- Rabbinic – after the tradition of the Pharisees
- Jewish Christianity

27:25 – reaction of the Jews to Jesus – “Crucify Him” – Matthew is honest about the conflict between Jesus and the Jewish religious leaders.

Fulfilled OT predictions: (not a comprehensive list)

- 1:22 – Virgin birth
- 2:15 – Flight from Egypt
- 2:17 – Slaughter of innocents
- 2:23 – Jesus being from Nazareth
- 4:14 – Jesus' ministry in Galilee
- 8:17 – Jesus' healings fulfilled prophecy
- 12:17 – the fact Jesus did not talk a lot about His healings publicly

- 13:14 – the peoples’ lack of understanding
- 13:35 – teaching in parables
- 21:4 – Jesus riding on a donkey’s colt for Triumphant Entry
- 26:54-56 – Regarding circumstances of his arrest
- 27:29 – betrayal by Judas for 30 pieces of silver

Not an innovator; He was the answer;

Not an inventor; He was the fulfillment – the key to understanding the OT.

He is the authoritative interpreter of Israel’s religious writings and teachings.

3) Who is Jesus?

OT figures teach us about Jesus – we see the fruition of these lives in Jesus:

- Abraham – in the genealogy; progenitor of the faith
- Moses – always there in the background; Transfiguration scene; his teaching is the reference point for Jesus’ teaching; possible parallel to 5 books of Law of Moses = 5 major discourses in Matthew?
Jesus understood himself as new lawgiver in Israel
- David – planned the temple; wrote many Psalms; greatest of the kings; prefigured Jesus more than anyone; Jesus teaches using comparative statements –
 - o Matt. 12:1ff – one greater than the temple is here –
 - o vs. 38 – one greater than Jonah is here –
 - o vs. 42 – one greater than Solomon is here --Prophet, Priest and King to end all

Who called Jesus the Son of David?

9:27 – 2 blind men

12:23 – blind, mute man

15:22 -- Canaanite woman

20:30-31 – 2 blind men crying out to Jesus

22 – Pharisees; interesting exchange vs. 41ff.

Quoting Ps. 110:1 where David is speaking – Messiah will be a descendent of David but is referenced as greater than David (“my Lord”)

9:36 – Greatest Shepherd – compassionate

16:13-20 – confession of Peter – Jesus is the Messiah

Matthew introduces Jesus as the Christ throughout the book (track these references):

- Matthew and the magi, John the Baptist wonderingly, Peter certainly, the priests and Pilate all calling Jesus the Christ, the Messiah
- Did Jesus Himself ever call Himself the Messiah? Absolutely
 - o 16:20 -- Jesus admits it to His disciples
 - o 22:42 -- Jesus talking to the Pharisees and explaining from Ps. 110
 - o 23:10 -- There is only one true Messiah
 - o 24:5, 23 -- There will be many false claims
 - o 26:63 -- When He is directly asked by the High Priest

Disciples were very limited in their faith and understanding of who Jesus was;
Who really understood Who Jesus Is? a very strange assortment of people:

11:25 – understanding depends on revelation to whom the Father chooses

Only 2 people commended in the gospel for their great faith:

A Roman centurion (8:8) and a Canaanite woman (15:27)

Look at who worshipped Jesus:

- Wise men (2:11)
- Disciples in the boat (ch. 14:33)
- Women at the tomb (ch. 28:9)
- Disciples upon seeing the resurrected Jesus – but still some doubted (28:17)

Practical Application: 20:28 – “the Son of Man did not come to be served but to serve and give His life a ransom for many”

Matt. 9:12 – to understand Jesus, you must understand something about yourself; the doctor came for the sick; for sinners

Grant Osborne: Special hermeneutics recognizes the elements of narrative that go into understanding how Matthew’s stories function. Literary theorists realize that stories contain point of view (the perspective taken by the author, the “shape” given to the story, and the intended effect on the readers), narrative or story time (not chronological because it relates to the order of events in the developing work as a whole rather than the historical progression of them in the life of Christ), plot development (the sequence of events in terms of conflict and climax), characterization and dialogue (the way the characters in a story relate to each other and to the events of the story), and the implied reader (the original audience the author had in mind when writing the story). The goal of analyzing biblical narrative is to see how the stories function at each of these levels and then to put them together in terms of their message and effect on the reader.

AUTHORSHIP, BACKGROUND, SETTING

Warren Wiersbe: Comparison of the Four Gospels:

Portrait of Jesus

1. Matthew: Promised King
2. Mark: Suffering Servant
3. Luke: Perfect Man
4. John: God the Son

Original Audience

1. Matthew: Jews
2. Mark: Romans
3. Luke: Greeks
4. John: The World

Author

1. Matthew: Tax collector, one of the twelve disciples
2. Mark: Close associate of and assistant to the disciples
3. Luke: Gentile physician, early convert
4. John: Fisherman, one of the twelve disciples

Theme

1. Matthew: The messianic King has come, fulfilling Old Testament promises.
2. Mark: The Son of God has come to seek, to serve, and to save.
3. Luke: The Son of Man has come to redeem all of humanity.
4. John: The eternal Son of God has become incarnate.

Response

1. Matthew: Worship Him!
2. Mark: Follow Him!
3. Luke: Imitate Him!
4. John: Believe in Him!

Chuck Swindoll: The apostle Matthew, a Jew himself, offered a decidedly Jewish perspective on the ministry of Jesus. He included more than fifty direct citations—and even more indirect allusions—from the Old Testament. This exceeds any of the other gospels and indicates that Matthew had the Jewish population in mind when he sat down to write. Matthew’s extensive connections between Jesus and the Old Testament provide ample prophetic evidence for Jesus’s ministry but also give contemporary readers a glimpse into how first-century readers approached the Old Testament with a Christ-centered mind-set.

In addition, Matthew’s gospel answers the question on the mind of every Jewish reader: “If Jesus is the King of the Jews, then where is God’s promised kingdom?” Matthew reveals that Jesus did offer the kingdom to Israel, but the offer was rejected (Matthew 4:17; 16:13–28; 21:42–43). God’s primary work in the world is now accomplished through the building of Christ’s church, after which Jesus will come again to earth and establish His kingdom—ruling the world from Israel.

John MacArthur: Matthew, meaning “gift of the Lord,” was the other name of Levi (9:9), the tax collector who left everything to follow Christ (Luke 5:27, 28). Matthew was one of the 12 apostles (10:3; Mark 3:18; Luke 6:15; Acts 1:13). In his own list of the 12, he explicitly calls himself a “tax collector” (10:3). Nowhere else in Scripture is the name Matthew associated with “tax collector”; the other evangelists always employ his former name, Levi, when speaking of his sinful past. This is evidence of humility on Matthew’s part. As with the other 3 gospels, this work is known by the name of its author.

Ray Stedman: As you know, this Gospel was written by Matthew, otherwise known as Levi. He was a publican, and publicans were those men who took the taxes from the people. His name means “the gift of God,” and to call a tax collector by that name obviously indicates that he was converted. It was perhaps our Lord himself who designated him Matthew, just as he changed Simon's name to Peter, and perhaps the names of others of the disciples as well. Tradition tells us that Matthew lived and taught in Palestine for 15 years after the crucifixion, and then he began to travel as a missionary, first to Ethiopia and then to Macedonia, Syria, and Persia. Finally he died a natural death in either Ethiopia or Macedonia, but this is not certain. It is one of the legends or traditions that have come down to us about Matthew.

William Barclay: There was one gift which Matthew would possess. Most of the disciples were fishermen. They would have little skill and little practice in putting words together and writing them down; but Matthew would be an expert in that. When Jesus called Matthew, as he sat in the office where he collected the customs duty, Matthew rose up and followed him and left everything behind him except one thing – his pen. And Matthew nobly used his literary skill to become the first man ever to compile an account of the teaching of Jesus.

The Gospel Coalition: The earliest traditions of the church are unanimous in attributing the first Gospel to Matthew, the former tax collector who followed Jesus and became one of his 12 disciples. The earliest and most important of these traditions comes from the second century in the writings of Papias, bishop of Hierapolis in Asia Minor (c. A.D. 135), and Irenaeus, bishop of Lyons in Gaul (c. 175). Because these early church leaders had either direct or indirect contact with the apostolic community, they would have been very familiar with the Gospels' origins. Moreover, no competing traditions now exist (if they ever did) attributing Matthew's Gospel to any other author. If Matthew did not write the book, it is hard to see why the false ascription would bear the name of a relatively obscure apostle when more well-known and popular figures could have been chosen (e.g., Philip, Thomas, or James).

Daniel Wallace: A number of factors and presuppositions affect the date of this book. Among the most important are:

- (1) authorship;
- (2) the solution to the synoptic problem;
- (3) the date of Acts;
- (4) whether the Olivet Discourse was truly prophetic or a vaticinium ex eventu;
- (5) the theological development, especially related to ecclesiology; and
- (6) the significance of the Jewish nature of the work, especially its anti-Sadducean approach.

Though most scholars date the book c. 80-90, our conclusion is that it should be dated substantially earlier. . .

In conclusion, the following points can be made:

- (1) Matthew depends on Mark and therefore probably should not be dated earlier than the 50s CE.
- (2) Luke neither knew of Matthew's work, nor Matthew of Luke's. If Luke is dated c. 62, then Matthew was probably written within two or three years of Luke (60-65). Thus, regardless of when Mark was written, the independence of Matthew and Luke argues for a date of close proximity to the other.

(3) Matthew was written before the start of the Jewish War because his appeal to the reader to flee from Jerusalem is too late in 67 CE since the Romans had shut off that possibility at that time.

The best guess as to date would therefore be the early 60s (i.e. 60-65). And for what it is worth, this is confirmed by Irenaeus' statement that Matthew composed his work when both Peter and Paul were in Rome (c. 60-64).

PURPOSE OF WRITING

John MacArthur: His purpose is clear: to demonstrate that Jesus is the Jewish nation's long-awaited Messiah. His voluminous quoting of the OT is specifically designed to show the tie between the Messiah of promise and the Christ of history. This purpose is never out of focus for Matthew, and he even adduces many incidental details from the OT prophecies as proofs of Jesus' messianic claims (e.g., 2:17, 18; 4:13–15; 13:35; 21:4, 5; 27:9, 10).

David Malick: When Jesus was presented and rejected as Israel's Messiah, He prepared His disciples to follow His teachings in His upcoming absence as the crucified, and then risen, obedient Servant/Messiah, while Israel slipped toward judgment.

Chuck Swindoll: Matthew wrote his account of Jesus's ministry to show that Jesus was and is indeed the King, Israel's long-awaited Messiah. He reflected this concern in his opening line, "The record of the genealogy of Jesus the Messiah, the son of David, the son of Abraham" (Matthew 1:1). From there, Matthew consistently took his readers back to the Old Testament, providing Old Testament testimony regarding the birth of Jesus, Bethlehem as the location of Jesus's birth, the flight to Egypt, Herod's slaughter of the infants, and the beginning of Jesus's ministry. In a world where many in the Jewish community had claimed the role of Messiah for themselves, Matthew's commitment to grounding the life of Jesus in the Old Testament raised Jesus above the multitude of these false messiahs.

David Malick: The Purposes of Matthew are Many:

A. He desires to show that the major events in the life of Jesus took place in fulfillment of prophecy--He is Messiah

B. He desire to show the comprehensiveness of the message of salvation to include the Gentiles

C. He desires to provide an apologetic for the many questions which would have been raised against Jesus--illegitimacy of birth, residence of Jesus in Nazareth rather than Bethlehem, stealing of the body of Jesus

D. He desires to teach the commandments of Jesus by recording five major discourses throughout the book

E. He desired to demonstrate the reason the message moved from the Jews to the Gentiles (their apathy and rejection of the King)

F. He desired to prove to the Jews that the kingdom program of God had not failed, and was still in effect

Daniel Wallace: In sum, Matthew first proves that Jesus was the Messiah. Second, he shows that Jesus did not fail to establish the kingdom (the failure was the nation's—and the kingdom was inaugurated, though not consummated in the coming of the Messiah). Finally, he wishes to show that because the nation failed to respond, the gospel was now open to Gentiles. But even in this final point Matthew walks a tightrope between giving his audience a rationale for the Gentile mission and making sure that they do not offend their Jewish neighbors by abandoning the Law. In this respect, 5:17-20 and 28:16-20 stand out as the theological cornerstones of this book, and they stand in some tension.

David Platt: "Gospel" literally means "good news," and Matthew's purpose in this book is to write an account of the good news of Jesus Christ—how Jesus came, what Jesus did, what Jesus said, and what Jesus accomplished in His death and resurrection. These truths are intended to change our lives and the entire world.

In order for us to rightly interpret Matthew's Gospel, we need to understand what it is and what it is not. First, as we consider this Gospel, we need to remember that it is not a congregational letter. Matthew is not like 1 Timothy, a letter written by Paul sent to Timothy and the church at Ephesus. This Gospel is not primarily addressing a certain congregation in a certain situation; rather, it is presenting Jesus Christ—who He is and what He has done—to all people.

Second, as you read through Matthew you will also notice that it is not a comprehensive biography. Matthew was not trying to include every minute detail of Jesus' life. There are many things that have been left out. Matthew chose various stories and abbreviated teachings from Jesus' life in order to accomplish a specific purpose. This Gospel includes what it does because the author wants to say something specific about the person and work of Jesus Christ.

Finally, concerning the purpose of Matthew's Gospel, we see that it is not a chronological history. Obviously, time plays a role in Matthew's arrangement, since he begins with Jesus' birth and ends with Jesus' death and resurrection. However, within this broad framework, Matthew has intentionally arranged his material around specific emphases. In particular, Matthew organizes his Gospel around five distinct teaching sections, and in between sections he tells us different stories, or narrative accounts.

MAJOR THEMES AND THEOLOGY

Daniel Wallace: All four gospels emphasize a different facet of Jesus Christ, though Matthew's emphasis is easily the clearest to perceive. He presents Jesus as Messiah, Son of David, King of the Jews.

E. Michael Green: The Life of Discipleship

Matthew's Gospel is strong on discipleship. He is clear that to decide for Jesus means repudiating old ways of behaviour. The law of the kingdom must mark the lives of the members of the kingdom. God's love brings us into the kingdom in the first place; that same love must have a practical outworking in our lives. We are the recipients of the love of God, who accepts us just as we are, unqualified tax collectors, sinners and the like. And that love transforms us. The practical outworking is delineated in the Sermon. That is how disciples are called to reflect the agapē which won them. The indicative of what members of the kingdom are in Christ is followed by the imperative of how they must behave. It is the outworking of what God works within them. Decision for Christ inevitably leads into discipleship of Christ. The Sermon assumes the indicative: it spells out the imperative. The gospel and ethics cannot be separated. And the ethic of the kingdom is spelled out in the Sermon on the Mount. It is meant to be lived out by the church in the midst of a secular society. We are not to expect everybody else to behave like that, but disciples are called to nothing less. That is the outworking of the love that has reached us in Jesus the Messiah. So discipleship is a major concern of Matthew throughout his Gospel. And undoubtedly he intends the readers of his work to apply this truth to themselves. If Jesus is our rabbi, then discipleship is the name of the game.

Van Parunak: Prophecies of the Passion

16:21	17:22-23	20:17-19	26:1-2
From that time forth began Jesus to shew unto his disciples,	And while they abode in Galilee, Jesus said unto them,	And Jesus going up to Jerusalem took the twelve disciples apart in the way, and said unto them,	he said unto his disciples, how that he must go unto Jerusalem,		18 Behold, we go up to Jerusalem;	2 Ye know that after two days is the feast of the passover ,
and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes,	The Son of man shall be betrayed into the hands of men:	and the Son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests and unto the scribes,	and the Son of man is betrayed and be killed,	23 And they shall kill him,	and they shall condemn him to death, 19 And shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify him :	to be crucified.
and be raised again the third day.	and the third day he shall be raised again.	and the third day he shall rise again.

The Gospel Coalition: Themes

1. Portrait of Jesus.
Jesus is the true Messiah, Immanuel (God incarnate with his people), Son of God, King of Israel, and Lord of the church.
Matthew 1:1, 23; 2:2; 14:33; 16:16; 18:20; 21:5–9
2. The bridge between Old and New Testaments.
Jesus fulfills the hopes and promises of the OT through his messianic genealogy, fulfillment of OT prophecies, and fulfillment of the OT law. These bridging qualities may have been one reason Matthew was chosen to begin the NT canon. Another possible reason is that many in the early church thought that Matthew was the first Gospel written, and another is that it was personally written by an apostle, in contrast to Mark and Luke.
Matthew 1:1–17, 22–23; 2:4–5, 15, 17, 23; 5:17–20
3. Salvation-historical “particularism” and “universalism.”
Matthew’s Gospel traces God’s continuing work of salvation within Israel (“particularism”) and extends this saving work to all the peoples of the earth (“universalism”), through the person and work of Christ.
Matthew 10:5–6; 28:19
4. The new community of faith.
The early church included both Jewish and Gentile Christians. Matthew’s Gospel would have encouraged them to transcend ethnic and cultural barriers to find unity in service to Jesus the Messiah as members of his universal church.
Matthew 11:28; 16:18–19; 28:19
5. The church is built and maintained by Jesus’ continuing presence.
God’s saving work in the present age is carried out chiefly by and through the church, which Jesus continues to build and inhabit. Anyone who responds to Jesus’ call—whether Jew or Gentile, male or female, rich or poor, slave or free—is brought into the fellowship of his church to enjoy him and participate in the community of his kingdom.
Matthew 16:18; 18:15–20; 22:10; 28:20
6. A “great commission” for evangelism and mission.
Jesus’ command to “make disciples of all nations” is found only in Matthew and has motivated countless believers to reach out to the lost with the good news of the gospel. As Jesus made disciples in his earthly ministry, he commissions his church to follow his example.
Matthew 28:19
7. Jesus’ five discourses recorded in Matthew can be viewed as a manual on discipleship.

The presentation of five of Jesus' major discourses, addressed at least in part to his disciples, forms the most comprehensive collection of Jesus' instructional ministry found anywhere in Scripture. They paint a holistic picture of life lived in obedience to Christ, and the church has used them to instruct disciples through the ages.

Matthew chs. 5–7; 10; 13; 18–20; 24–25

Donald Hagner: Themes

- OT promises related to Jesus being fulfilled.
- Narrative related to the kingdom of heaven – new relationship between God and humanity.
- Passion-narrative material – Jesus came primarily to die. The basic story of Jesus is the cross – the Messiah comes to die for the sins of the people.
- Modern relevance of ancient texts like Matthew – trappings of the culture very different, but the longings, fears, frustrations, etc. of humanity are common down thru the ages. God has an answer for these same problems that has not changed.

William Barclay: Matthew is especially interested in the Church. It is in fact the only one of the synoptic gospels which uses the word Church at all. Only Matthew introduces the passage about the Church after Peter's confession at Caesarea Philippi (Matthew 16:13–23; cf. Mark 8:27–33; Luke 9:18–22). Only Matthew says that disputes are to be settled by the Church (18:17). By the time Matthew came to be written, the Church had become a great organization and institution, and indeed the dominant factor in the life of the Christian.

Matthew has a specially strong apocalyptic interest. That is to say, Matthew has a specially strong interest in all that Jesus said about his own second coming, about the end of the world, and about the judgment. Matthew 24 gives us a fuller account of Jesus' apocalyptic discourse than any of the other gospels. Matthew alone has the parables of the talents (25:14–30), the wise and the foolish virgins (25:1–13), and the sheep and the goats (25:31–46). Matthew has a special interest in the last things and in judgment.

Leon Morris: Matthew also has a strong polemic against the Pharisees. These men formed a highly regarded sect among the Jews and were insistent that the traditions that came from the great ones of the past must be adhered to. They could not recognize the hand of God in what Jesus was doing, but opposed him at every turn. Matthew reports Jesus' criticisms of the Pharisees as well as the attempts of these Jewish leaders to defeat the purposes of God he discerned in what Jesus taught and did.

Michael Wilkins: Matthew's Gospel, according to citations found in early Christian writers, was the most widely used and influential of any of the Gospels. It has retained its appeal throughout the centuries and has exerted a powerful influence on the church. Its popularity is explained at least in part because of the following distinctives that are found throughout this gospel.

(1) The bridge between Old and New Testaments.

From the opening lines of his story, Matthew provides a natural bridge between the Old Testament and New Testament. He demonstrates repeatedly that Old Testament hopes, prophecies, and promises have now been fulfilled in the person and ministry of Jesus, beginning with the “fulfillment” of the messianic genealogy (1:1), the fulfillment of various Old Testament prophecies and themes, and the fulfillment of the Old Testament law. The early church likely placed Matthew first in the New Testament canon precisely because of its value as a bridge between the Testaments.

(2) Salvation-historical “particularism” and “universalism.”

These terms emphasize that Matthew’s Gospel lays striking emphasis on both the fulfillment of the promises of salvation to a particular people, Israel, and also the fulfillment of the universal promise of salvation to all the peoples of the earth. Matthew’s Gospel alone points explicitly to Jesus’ intention to go first to the lost sheep of the house of Israel (10:5–6; 15:24), showing historically how God’s promise of salvation to Israel was indeed fulfilled. Yet the promises made to Abraham that he would be a blessing to all the nations are also fulfilled as Jesus extends salvation to the Gentiles (cf. 21:44; 28:19). The church throughout the ages has found assurance in Matthew’s Gospel that God truly keeps his promises to his people.

(3) The new community of faith.

Facing the threat of gathering Roman persecution within a pagan world, Matthew addresses a church that is representative of the emerging community of faith. The community apparently has a large membership of Jewish Christians, familiar with temple activities and the Jewish religious system. But it also has a large contingent of Gentile Christians, who are discovering their heritage of faith in God’s universal promise of salvation. The church has consistently found in Matthew’s Gospel a call to a new community that transcends ethnic and religious barriers to find oneness in its adherence to Jesus Messiah.

(4) The church is built and maintained by Jesus’ continuing presence.

Matthew alone among the evangelists uses the term ekklēsia, which later became the common term to designate the church. He emphasizes explicitly that God’s program of salvation-history will find its continuation in the present age as Jesus builds his church and maintains his presence within its assembly. Whoever responds to his invitation (22:10)—whether Jew or Gentile, male or female, rich or poor, slave or free—are brought within the church to enjoy his fellowship and demonstrate the true community of faith.

(5) A “great commission” for evangelism and mission.

The form of Jesus’ commission to “make disciples of all the nations” (28:19) is unique to Matthew’s Gospel, providing continuity between Jesus’ ministry of making disciples in his earthly ministry and the ongoing ministry of making disciples to which the church has been called. This “great commission” has been at the heart of evangelistic and missionary endeavor throughout church history.

(6) The structure of five discourses contributes to a manual on discipleship.

They provide a wholistic presentation on the kind of discipleship that was to be taught to disciples as the basis for full-orbed obedience to Christ and became the basis for Christian catechesis within the church throughout its history.

STRUCTURE

The Gospel Coalition: The most notable literary feature of the book's format is the alternating pattern around which the book is organized. The material in Matthew's Gospel is based on a rhythmic, back-and-forth movement between blocks of narrative material and blocks of discourse material. There are five passages of discourse, which can be viewed as corresponding to the five digits on the human hand and can be easily remembered if one lists the questions that Jesus in effect answers in each unit:

1. How are citizens of the kingdom to live (chs. 5–7)?
2. How are traveling disciples to conduct themselves on their evangelistic journeys (ch. 10)?
3. What parables did Jesus tell (ch. 13)?
4. What warning did Jesus give about not hindering entrance into the kingdom and on forgiveness (chs. 18–20)?
5. How will human history end (chs. 24–25)?

Matthew even used a set formula to signal these units, ending them with the statement “when Jesus had finished [these sayings]” (Matt. 7:28; 11:1; 13:53; 19:1; 26:1).

E. Michael Green: Perhaps the heart of the matter lies in chapter 13. It is the hinge on which the Gospel turns. It is the break in the middle of the book, and the emphasis thereafter moves from the crowds to the Twelve. It may well reflect the theme of the Gospel, too. For here in chapter 13 we see the different responses to the planting of God's seed in the hearts of men and women: it is both reflective and challenging. And if chapter 13 is the hinge of the Gospel, we find two carefully balanced discourses on either side. Discourses 1 and 5 are similar in length and not dissimilar in subject matter. Both are about entry into the kingdom (now, and at the end-time). Discourses 2 and 4 are also similar in length and subject matter. They are concerned with the sending out of people, and the receiving of people, in the mission of the church and in the name of Jesus. Clearly, some care has been taken over the parallelism.

Craig Blomberg: We are more interested here in the significance of the structure for the theology Matthew wishes to communicate. The most obvious thrust of the sequence of topics in the Gospel is that Matthew is tracing the events of Jesus' life in terms of a growing hostility on the part of the Jewish leaders that increasingly leads Jesus himself to turn to the Gentiles and to anticipate a later, widespread ministry on the part of his disciples among them. Theologians often refer to the development of this theme as the tension between particularism and universalism in Matthew. Few have elevated it to the role of the most foundational or overarching theme of the book, but our structure suggests that it should be so identified. Above all, Matthew thus wants to demonstrate God's work in Jesus to bring the fulfillment of his promises to his chosen people, the Jews, and, through (or even in spite of) their reaction, to offer identical blessings and judgments to all humanity.

Van Parunak: Overview of Matthew

So, in broad outline, in Matthew we learn:

- of the Person of Jesus the king, that he is the promised king from the line of David who bears the title “the Son of God”;
- of the Proclamation of Jesus the king, in both word and act (his healings), and the growing opposition to which that Proclamation leads;
- of the Passion of Jesus the king, in which he dies to redeem his people, then rises from the dead

Warren Wiersbe: Being accustomed to keeping systematic records, Matthew gave us a beautifully organized account of our Lord's life and ministry. The book can be divided into ten sections in which “doing” and “teaching” alternate. Each teaching section ends with “When Jesus had ended these sayings” or a similar transitional statement. The chapters can be divided like this:

Narrative	Teaching	Transition
1—4	5—7	7:28
8:1—9:34	9:35—10:42	11:1
11:2—12:50	13:1—52	13:53 1
3:53—17:27	18:1—35	19:1
19:1—23:39	24:1—25:46	26:1
26:1—28:20 (the Passion narrative)

David Malick: Argument of the Book

I. PROLOGUE:

Through the genres of genealogy and narrative Jesus is identified as the Messiah, chosen by God to fulfill the Kingdom promises for Israel and the blessing promises for the world, but he is only received by a remnant (Joseph), He is rejected and persecuted by the nation (Herod), He is worshiped by those outside of the nation (the wisemen), and He is protected by God as the fulfillment of Scripture (1:1 - 2:23)

II. JESUS IS INTRODUCED WITH FOUNDATIONS OF THE KINGDOM:

Having been identified with the prophetic message of John, Jesus is demonstrated to be the true son of God who obeys his word, who proclaims in word and miracles the gospel of the Kingdom, and exhorts His disciples to submit to His rule for enrichment, usefulness to God, greatness in the Kingdom, and temporal life (3:1 - 7:29)

III. JESUS MAKES HIMSELF KNOWN to Israel as Messiah through miraculous works which are characteristic of Messiah and the Kingdom, and through proclamation by Himself and His twelve disciples that the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand for Israel if she will receive Him (8:1 - 11:1)

IV. OPPOSITION TO THE KING:

From an initial questioning of the work of Jesus by John the Baptizer, to more intense opposition which led to the rejection of Jesus by the leaders of the nation, Jesus continued to minister as the suffering servant by identifying the evil of the religious leaders and by proclaiming the gospel message for those who would hear in the form of parables about the interim form of the Kingdom which must take place in view of Israel's rejection of her King (11:2 - 13:53)

V. JESUS' REACTION TO OPPOSITION:

Jesus withdrew from the leadership within the nation who rejected Him only to continue to minister to those (outside of and within the nation) who would follow Him, and to train His disciples for their future ministry to people in His absence as He began to move toward Jerusalem (13:53 - 19:2)

VI. AS JESUS CAME TO JERUSALEM HE CONTINUED TO INSTRUCT HIS DISCIPLES:

He presented Himself as King, and was rejected by the nation, whereupon, He rejected the nation, and explained to His disciples the signs which will precede His second coming, as well as the need for everyone to be personally ready at His second coming (19:3 - 25:46)

VII. THE PASSION AND RESURRECTION OF THE KING:

Jesus was falsely accused, brutally crucified, and gloriously resurrected in accordance with the Scripture and then commissioned his disciples to tell the nations of his authority over heaven and on earth (26:1 - 28:20)

Phillip Kayser:

Other authors have pointed out that Matthew clearly structures the entire book around sections of Isaiah. And it is true. But he does so as an overlay to other structures. But wow, does Isaiah ever open up the book of Matthew!

My proposed structure of Matthew's Gospel:

- 1) 1:1-2:23 - 'The virgin shall bear a son' [Mt 1:23 = Isa 9:6]
- 2) 3:1-4:11 - 'The way of the Lord in the wilderness' [Mt 3:3 = Isa 40:3]
- 3) 4:12-7:29 - 'A great light in Galilee' [Mt 4:15-16 = Isa 9:1-2]
- 4) 8:1-10:42 - 'He carried away our diseases' [Mt 8:17 = Isa 53:4]
- 5) 11:1-12:45 - 'Bruised reeds & Gentile judgement' [Mt 12:17-21 = Isa 42:1-4]
- 6) 12:46-13:58 - 'Hearing and understanding' [Mt 13:14-15 = Isa 6:9-10]
- 7) 14:1-16:12 - 'Teaching the traditions of men' [Mt 15:8-9 = Isa 29:13]
- 8) 16:13-21:11 - 'The King coming to Zion, gentle' [Mt 21:5 = Isa 62:11 & Zec 9:9]
- 9) 21:12-25:46 - 'House of prayer' or 'robbers' den' [Mt 21:13 = Isa 56:7 & Jer 7:11]
- 10) 26:1-28:20 - 'Shepherd and sheep' (& Galilee) [Mt 26:31 = Zec 13:7 & Isa 53:4-6]

TEXT: Matthew 1:1-17

TITLE: GENEALOGY OF JESUS CHRIST, THE SON OF DAVID, THE SON OF ABRAHAM

BIG IDEA:

THE HISTORIC JESUS FULFILLS ALL THE GENEALOGICAL REQUIREMENTS OF THE PROMISED MESSIAH, THE SEED OF ABRAHAM, WHO WOULD SIT ON THE THRONE OF DAVID

INTRODUCTION:

D. A. Carson: Matthew's chief aims in including the genealogy are hinted at in the first verse—namely, to show that Jesus Messiah is truly in the kingly line of David, heir to the messianic promises, the one who brings divine blessings to all nations. Therefore the genealogy focuses on King David (1:6) on the one hand, yet on the other hand includes Gentile women. Many entries would touch the hearts and stir the memories of biblically literate readers, though the principal thrust of the genealogy ties together promise and fulfillment.

J. Ligon Duncan: But Gospels are not written simply to give us a biographical account, they are written for a redemptive purpose. A gospel is a record of what God has done to save sinners. Through the incarnation, the earthly life, the mighty acts and the suffering and death and resurrection of His Son, Jesus Christ. That is what a Gospel is.

R. T. France: The "book of origin" thus holds many puzzles, both as to its intended scope and as to how Matthew has arrived at his list of names and its pattern. But its main aim is clear enough: to locate Jesus within the story of God's people, as its intended climax, and to do it with a special focus on the Davidic monarchy as the proper context for a theological understanding of the role of the person whom Matthew, more than the other gospel writers, will delight to refer to not only as "Messiah" but also more specifically as "Son of David."

Richard Gardner: The most important thing to note in the list of names in this section is that it is a list of kings. Unlike Luke (cf. Luke 3:23-38), Matthew traces Jesus' descent from David through a line of royalty. The list begins with the greatest of Israel's rulers and concludes with the last free king before the exile. Such a lineage serves to underscore the messianic role which Matthew ascribes to Jesus and invites the reader to think of Jesus as one destined for kingship.

Michael Wilkins: The genuineness, and unlikeliness, of this genealogy must have stunned Matthew's readers. Jesus' ancestors were humans with all of the foibles, yet potentials, of everyday people. God worked through them to bring about his salvation. There is no pattern of righteousness in the lineage of Jesus. We find adulterers, harlots, heroes, and Gentiles. Wicked Rehoboam was the father of wicked Abijah, who was the father of good King Asa. Asa was the father of the good King Jehoshaphat (v. 8), who was the father of wicked King Joram. God was working throughout the generations, both good and evil, to bring about his purposes. Matthew shows that God can use anyone—however marginalized or despised—to bring about his purposes. These are the very types of people Jesus came to save. . .

Matthew gives a descending genealogy of Jesus in the order of succession, with the earliest ancestor placed at the head and later generations placed in lines of descent. This is the more common form of genealogy in the Old Testament (e.g., Gen. 5:1–32). Luke gives an ascending form of genealogy that reverses the order, starting with Jesus and tracing it to Adam (Luke 3:23–38; cf. Ezra 7:1–5). This reverse order is found more commonly in Greco-Roman genealogies.

Warren Wiersbe: When you read the genealogy in Genesis 5, the repeated phrase and he died sounds like the tolling of a funeral bell. The Old Testament illustrates the truth that “the wages of sin is death” (Rom. 6:23). But when you turn to the New Testament, that first genealogy emphasizes birth and not death! The message of the New Testament is that “the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord” (Rom. 6:23). . .

It shows that Jesus Christ is a part of history, that all of Jewish history prepared the way for His birth. God in His providence ruled and overruled to accomplish His great purpose in bringing His Son into the world.

Van Parunak: “The book of the generation of Jesus Christ” establishes our Lord as the legal descendant of David, qualified to occupy the throne God promised to his royal ancestor. The whole structure of the list emphasizes this relation to David and his kingdom. That kingdom was the goal to which Israel’s history moved from its beginning with Abraham. Due to the sin of the nation, it unraveled during the very monarchy that should have expanded it, leading to the Babylonian captivity. But now God is raising it up, as the prophets promised, and Jesus the son of Mary is the fulfillment of the ancient promises.

(:1) INTRODUCTION TO THE INCARNATION OF JESUS THE SON OF GOD

A. Record of His Origins

“The book of the genealogy of Jesus Christ,”

D. A. Carson: The first two words of Matthew, biblos geneeseōs, may be translated “record of the genealogy” (NIV), “record of the origins,” or “record of the history.” The NIV limits this title to the genealogy (1:1–17), the second could serve as a heading for the prologue (1:1 – 2:23), and the third as a heading for the entire gospel. . . Matthew rather intends his first two chapters to be a coherent and unified “record of the origins of Jesus Christ” (rightly, Blomberg [NAC]).

R. T. France: The first two words of Matthew’s gospel are literally “Book of genesis”. The effect on a Jewish reader is comparable to that of John’s opening phrase, “In the beginning . . .” The theme of the fulfillment of Scripture is signaled from the very start, and these opening words suggest that a new creation is now taking place. That particular concept of fulfillment is not clearly developed elsewhere in the gospel, which is concerned rather with how Jesus brings the history of God’s people to its climax, but this passing echo of the beginning of the world’s history adds a further allusive dimension for those who wish to think it through, perhaps particularly in the light of the creative act of God which will result in Jesus’ birth. . .

The colorless translation “Jesus Christ” here and in v. 18 in many English versions does not do justice to the excitement in Matthew’s introduction of Jesus under the powerfully evocative title “Messiah,” the long-awaited deliverer of God’s people, in whom their history has now come to its climax. In v. 16 he will draw attention to the titular force of Christos by using the phrase “Jesus who is called the Messiah.”

David Platt: By applying this title to Jesus, Matthew is telling us that He is the Messiah. It is important to keep in mind that "Christ" is not Jesus' last name. No, "Christ" literally means "Messiah" or "Anointed One." Throughout the Old Testament there were promises of a coming anointed one, a Messiah, who would powerfully deliver God's people. Here Matthew says of Jesus, "This is He, the One we've waited for!"

Grant Osborne: Vv. 1 and 17 frame the genealogy and center on the three names in a chiastic arrangement (Christ/David/Abraham in v. 1; Abraham/David/Christ in v. 17; see Hagner, 5). The phrase in 1:1a is taken from Gen 2:4; 5:1 (cf. Gen 6:1; 10:1; 11:10, 27 etc.), where it introduces genealogies or historical narrative and hints here that Jesus fulfills these events and brings a new beginning or new creation.

B. Relation to David

“the son of David,”

D. A. Carson: “Son of David” is an important designation in Matthew. Not only does David become a turning point in the genealogy (1:6, 17), but the title recurs throughout the gospel (9:27; 12:23; 15:22; 20:30–31; 21:9, 15; 22:42, 45). God swore covenant love to David (Ps 89:28) and promised that one of his immediate descendants would establish the kingdom—even more, that David’s kingdom and throne would endure forever (2Sa 7:12–16).

S. Lewis Johnson: It’s evident as you compare these four Gospels that they are not contradictory to one another, but they are complementary. And the purpose of the genealogy of the Gospel of Matthew is to present to us the Lord Jesus as a royal figure connected by blood and by life with the line that has gone before him. Now we shall see that the Lord Jesus Christ’s connection with the regal line is not by blood, because he is connected with Joseph. And it’s Joseph who possesses the regal rights to the throne of David, and the Lord Jesus is not the natural son of Joseph the carpenter. . .

So, the Lord Jesus, then, is legally of Joseph, physically of Mary. Because he is legally of Joseph who had the legal right to the throne, he is able to sit upon the throne and inherit that throne. Because he is of Mary, he possesses his rightful relationship to David physically through her. So he is truly Son of David, both physically and legally. Physically of Mary; legally of Joseph—he is the one, of whom, was born Jesus.

C. Relation to Abraham

“the son of Abraham.”

D. A. Carson: “Son of Abraham” may have been a recognized messianic title in some branches of Judaism (cf. T. Levi 8:15). The covenant with the Jewish people had first been made with Abraham (Ge 12:1–3; 17:7; 22:18), a connection Paul sees as basic to Christianity (Gal 3:16). More important, Genesis 22:18 had promised that through Abraham’s offspring “all nations” (panta ta ethnē, LXX) would be blessed; so with this allusion to Abraham, Matthew is preparing his readers for the final words of this offspring from Abraham—the commission to make disciples of “all nations” (Mt 28:19, panta ta ethnē). Jesus the Messiah came in fulfillment of the kingdom promises to David and of the Gentile-blessings promised to Abraham (see Mt 3:9; 8:11).

Leon Morris: Jesus was also the son of Abraham, “to whom the divine promises were first given and with whom ‘sacred history’ may be said to have begun” (Tasker). It was Abraham with whom God made the covenant that set Israel apart in a special sense as the people of God (Gen. 12:2-3; 15:17-21; 17:1-14). All Israelites took pride in being descendants of the great patriarch, and the Christians were especially fond of him as the classic example of one who believed (Paul brings this out particularly in Romans). His Hebrew name means “father of a multitude” (Gen. 17:5), and it had been prophesied that all nations would be blessed through him (Gen. 12:3). We find the idea of a universal blessing at the end of this Gospel as well as at the beginning (28:19). In combining David and Abraham Matthew is drawing attention to two strands in Jesus’ Hebrew ancestry and implying that he fulfilled all that would be expected in a Messiah with such connections.

I. (:2-6a) GENEALOGY FROM ABRAHAM TO DAVID

A. (:2) From Abraham to Judah

*“To Abraham was born Isaac;
and to Isaac, Jacob;
and to Jacob, Judah and his brothers;”*

B. (:3) From Judah to Ram

*“and to Judah were born Perez and Zerah by Tamar; and to Perez was born Hezron;
and to Hezron, Ram;”*

D. A. Carson: Probably Perez and Zerah (v.3) are both mentioned because they are twins (Ge 38:27; cf. 1Ch 2:4); Judah’s other sons receive no mention.

Grant Osborne: Matthew mentions both Perez and Zerah because they were twins (Gen 38:27–30). The book of Ruth ends with the genealogy of Perez to David (Ruth 4:18–22), showing that a major purpose of that book was to trace the Davidic line and to show that Ruth through her faithful devotion was a worthy ancestress to David.

C. (:4) From Ram to Salmon

*“and to Ram was born Amminadab; and to Amminadab, Nahshon;
and to Nahshon, Salmon;”*

Grant Osborne: Approximately four hundred years are covered from Perez to Amminadab, demanding the omission of several names from the list. This follows the genealogical lists in 1 Chr 2:10–11; Ruth 4:19–20.

D. (:5) From Salmon to Jesse

*“and to Salmon was born Boaz by Rahab; and to Boaz was born Obed by Ruth;
and to Obed, Jesse;”*

Grant Osborne: Rahab was the prostitute who saved the spies at Jericho by hiding them in her house (Josh 2; 6), and this is almost certainly the same Rahab. The problem is that she lived two hundred years earlier, but as in vv. 3–4 there are likely several generations omitted from the list. It means she is the ancestress of Boaz.

E. (:6a) Birth of David the King

“and to Jesse was born David the king.”

II. (:6b-11) GENEALOGY FROM DAVID TO THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY

A. (:6b-7) From David to Asa

*“And to David was born Solomon by her who had been the wife of Uriah; 7 and to Solomon was born Rehoboam;
and to Rehoboam, Abijah;
and to Abijah, Asa;”*

S. Lewis Johnson: And furthermore, you’ll also notice that not only is it taught here that the Lord Jesus Christ’s coming is no unpremeditated accident, but we are also taught that man’s willfulness cannot hinder the purposes of God. One of the things that we are told in the Old Testament is that the Israelite should not marry outside of Israel, but we see that in the genealogy of the Lord Jesus, there is that violation of the Word of God. And furthermore, we are also taught—in the Old Testament as well as the New—that adultery is one of the heinous sins of Holy Scripture. And yet, our Lord Jesus Christ’s coming is related to the act of adultery of David and Bathsheba, because the Lord Jesus has his right to the throne through Solomon, who was the product of that union. Man’s willfulness cannot hinder the purposes of God. How important that is to remember.

B. (:8) From Asa to Uzziah

*“and to Asa was born Jehoshaphat; and to Jehoshaphat, Joram;
and to Joram, Uzziah;”*

C. (:9) From Uzziah to Hezekiah

*“and to Uzziah was born Jotham; and to Jotham, Ahaz;
and to Ahaz, Hezekiah;”*

D. (:10) From Hezekiah to Josiah

*“and to Hezekiah was born Manasseh; and to Manasseh, Amon;
and to Amon, Josiah;”*

E. (:11) From Josiah to the Babylonian Captivity

“and to Josiah were born Jeconiah and his brothers, at the time of the deportation to Babylon.”

Craig Blomberg: The Babylonian exile appears centrally as well, perhaps because Jesus is seen as the climax of the restoration of the nation of Israel from exile.

E. Michael Green: Just as David represented the high-water mark of Israel's hopes and development and pointed forward to his descendant, Jesus, so the Babylonian captivity represented the nadir of Israel's fortunes, the frustration of her hopes, and the end of the royal line; and it too points forward to Jesus the Messiah and his people in whom those fortunes will be restored and those promises fulfilled.

III. (:12-16) GENEALOGY FROM THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY TO CHRIST

A. (:12) From the Babylonian Captivity to Zerubbabel

“And after the deportation to Babylon, to Jeconiah was born Shealtiel; and to Shealtiel, Zerubbabel;”

B. (:13) From Zerubbabel to Azor

*“and to Zerubbabel was born Abihud; and to Abihud, Eliakim;
and to Eliakim, Azor;”*

C. (:14) From Azor to Eliud

*“and to Azor was born Zadok; and to Zadok, Achim;
and to Achim, Eliud;”*

D. (:15) From Eliud to Jacob

*“and to Eliud was born Eleazar;
and to Eleazar, Matthan;
and to Matthan, Jacob;”*

S. Lewis Johnson: And as we look at this genealogy, we should reflect upon the fact that that is precisely our destiny. We shall soon be but names in the memory of our posterity, and then less than names. It brings home to us and points out to us the fact that we are here for a limited time.

E. (:16) From Jacob to the Birth of Jesus, called Messiah

*“and to Jacob was born Joseph the husband of Mary, by whom was born Jesus,
who is called Christ.”*

Leon Morris: Matthew will tell us a little later that the child was conceived as a result of the activity of the Holy Spirit (v. 20). The passive form here is probably the “divine passive,” indicating an activity of God; it certainly points to something different from what precedes and it prepares us for the narrative of the virgin birth. That the virginal conception is in mind in the genealogy is probably another way of bringing out the truth that Jesus was the “son of David.” There is another passive in verse 20, and twice Matthew speaks of Jesus' conception as due to the Holy Spirit (vv. 18, 20). He also cites prophecy to show the real significance of the child who was to be born (vv. 22-23); further, he tells us that Mary was a virgin (v. 23) and that Joseph had no sexual relations with her before the birth of Jesus (v. 25). All this combines to make it clear that Matthew is writing about the coming into the world not simply of another baby, but of the very Son of God.

(:17) SUMMARY – 3 GROUPINGS OF 14 GENERATIONS EACH

A. From Abraham to David

Therefore all the generations from Abraham to David are fourteen generations;”

Michael Wilkins: The number fourteen may be a subtle reference to David, because the numerical value of the Hebrew consonants of his name is fourteen (d w d = 4+6+4). The Jewish practice of counting the numerical value for letters is called gematria. Some forms of Jewish mysticism took the practice to extremes, but its most basic form helped in memorization and for encoding theological meaning.

David Platt: In addition, David's name is the fourteenth in Matthew's list (Blomberg, 53)! Clearly, Matthew intended to connect Jesus to King David.

B. From David to the Babylonian Captivity

“and from David to the deportation to Babylon fourteen generations;”

C. From the Babylonian Captivity to Christ

“and from the deportation to Babylon to the time of Christ fourteen generations.”

Leon Morris: A feature of Matthew’s genealogy is his arrangement, as he tells us, in three groups of fourteen (v. 17). The reason for this is not clear, but it must have been important because Matthew has to omit some names to get his numbers. His second group lacks Ahaziah, Joash, and Amaziah after Joatham (v. 9), and his third group has only thirteen (since it covers some 500 years, there have clearly been omissions). The omissions need not worry us since “father” might be used when speaking of any descendants and not only those in the immediate family (e.g., 3:9).

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What should we conclude about the role of women in the church as we study the women included in this critical genealogy account?
- 2) Why should the prevalence of sin and degradation throughout this historical overview of key Jewish figures bring hope to those burdened with their own sin?
- 3) How does Matthew emphasize that the salvation that the Messiah will bring is inclusive of Gentiles and should stimulate worldwide outreach?
- 4) How does God demonstrate the sovereignty of His purposes, the orderliness of His providence and the wisdom of His timeline down through history?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Bob Deffinbaugh: The differences so far are merely matters of style. But these two Gospel genealogies also differ over some of those who are named in the genealogy:

The difficulty comes in Luke's first section, in which the names are different from those found in Matthew. This would be all right if we were dealing with the ancestries of two entirely different people, but these are both genealogies of Jesus. What is more, while both books trace Jesus' line through his adopted father Joseph, the husband of Mary, of whom our Lord was born, Matthew says that Joseph was the son of Jacob who descended from David through David's son and successor King Solomon (Matt. 1:16), and Luke states that Joseph was the son of Heli who had descended from David through Nathan, who was also David's son but Solomon's brother (Luke 3:23).

While some have concluded that there is no solution to this problem, many have thought otherwise. James Montgomery Boice outlines the two most likely solutions. The first is that which was posed years ago by J. Gresham Machen:

Reconciliation might conceivably be effected in a number of different ways. But on the whole we are inclined to think that the true key to a solution to the problem ... is to be found in the fact that Matthew, in an intentionally incomplete way, gives a list of incumbents (actual or potential) of the kingly David throne, whereas Luke traces the descent of Joseph back through Nathan to David. Thus the genealogies cannot properly be used to exhibit contradiction between the Matthean and the Lukan accounts of the birth and infancy of our Lord.

I am inclined to follow Boice, who opts for a second solution, namely that Matthew's genealogy is of Joseph's family lineage, while Luke's genealogy provides us with Mary's ancestry.

In my judgment, a better solution involves viewing the two lines as the lines of Joseph and Mary respectively, each thereby identified as a descendant of King David... . According to this view, the distinction between the two lines of descent is not between the 'legal' line and the 'paternal' line, as Machen suggests, but between the 'royal' line of those who actually sat on the throne and the 'legal' line of descent from the one oldest son to the next, even though these did not actually rule as kings.

It is not my intention to offer a dogmatic solution to this problem, but only to point out that there is a discrepancy in the two genealogies, and that sound, evangelical scholars have posed some reasonable solutions. My purpose is to show that Matthew's genealogy is very carefully crafted to teach us some very important truths, truths which are foundational to the gospel of Jesus Christ, and thus to our lives. . .

I find Bruner's comments on the structure and organization of this genealogy very insightful. .

Bruner suggests that the first section, from Abraham to David, is an upwardly ascending order. Things just seem to get better and better. David, followed by his son Solomon, are as good as it gets in this genealogical sequence. And thus Bruner believes that this section portrays the grace and mercy of God. We see this, for example, in the inclusion of the Gentile women in the genealogy.

The second section plummets from the kingdom at its best (under David and Solomon) to the very depths – Israel's Babylonian captivity. After Solomon the United Kingdom is divided. The northern kings are consistently evil, and the kings of Judah are a mixture of good and bad. The Babylonian captivity is the consequence of Judah's persistent rebellion. From a human point of view it looks as if Israel's hopes for the fulfillment of God's Old Testament covenants have been dashed on the rocks of reality.

The third section is once again ascending. God delivers His people from Babylon and brings a remnant back to the land of Israel. There are dangers and disappointments, but Israel has good cause for hope. . .

By the way Matthew structures this genealogy, everything appears to be neat and tidy, precise and orderly. There are three sections, each with 14 generations. Does this not convey to the reader a picture of a calm, precise, and orderly administration? Things may have looked chaotic when viewed from a human perspective, but the outcome was certain. God is in complete control. His purposes and promises are always fulfilled.

D. A. Carson: Inclusion of these four women in the Messiah's genealogy instead of an all-male listing (which was customary)—or at least the names of such great matriarchs as Sarah, Rebekah, and Leah—shows that Matthew is conveying more than merely genealogical data. Tamar enticed her father-in-law into an incestuous relationship (Ge 38). The prostitute Rahab saved the spies and joined the Israelites (Jos 2; 6). Hebrews 11:31 and James 2:25 encourage us to think she abandoned her former way of life. She is certainly prominent in Jewish tradition, some of it fantastic (see A. T. Hanson, "Rahab the Harlot in Early Christian Tradition," JSNT 1 [1978]: 53–60). Ruth, Tamar, and Rahab were aliens. Bathsheba was taken into an adulterous union with David, who committed murder to cover it up. Matthew's peculiar way of referring to her, "Uriah's wife," may be an attempt to focus on the fact that Uriah was not an Israelite but a Hittite (2Sa 11:3; 23:39). Bathsheba herself was apparently the daughter of an Israelite (1Ch 3:5 [variant reading]), but her marriage to Uriah probably led to her being regarded as a Hittite.

Several reasons have been suggested to explain the inclusion of these women. Some have pointed out that three were Gentiles and the fourth probably regarded as such (Lohmeyer; Maier; Schweizer). This goes well with the reference to Abraham; the Jewish Messiah extends his blessings beyond Israel, even as Gentiles are included in his line. Others have noted that three of the four were involved in gross sexual sin; but it is highly doubtful that this charge can be legitimately applied to Ruth. . .

A third interpretation (favored by Allen; Fenton; Filson; Green; Hill; Lohmeyer; Brown, Birth of the Messiah) holds that all four reveal something of the strange and unexpected workings of providence in preparation for the Messiah and that as such they point to Mary's unexpected but providential conception of Jesus.

Craig Blomberg: Why are the first four of these women included? Suggestions have included viewing them as examples of sinners Jesus came to save, representative Gentiles to whom the Christian mission would be extended, or women who had illicit marriages and/or illegitimate children. The only factor that clearly applies to all four is that suspicions of illegitimacy surrounded their sexual activity and childbearing. This suspicion of illegitimacy fits perfectly with that which surrounded Mary, which Matthew immediately takes pains to refute (vv. 18-25).

Grant Osborne: God in his providence saw fit to include women who were foreigners and sinners in the royal lineage of Jesus so as to show that he is God not only of righteous Jews but of all humanity and that he has come to bring salvation to the whole world of humanity. Moreover, they foreshadow Mary and provide a rationale for God's choice of an unwed mother to bear the Messiah.

R. T. France: That Matthew's three fourteens are not simply a matter of historical observation is indicated by the imbalance between the three periods in terms of the actual historical time-scale involved. While there is debate about the possible date of Abraham, he is likely to have been at least seven or eight hundred years before David, which, even given the reported longevity of the patriarchs, is a lot to cover in fourteen generations. From David to the exile is about four hundred years, and as we shall see even that relatively modest period has been fitted into fourteen generations only by the omission of four members of the dynastic succession. From the exile to the birth of Jesus is a further six hundred years, so that Matthew's thirteen names for that whole period (compared with Luke's 22 for the same period) again give improbably long "generations." It seems then that Matthew's list, like some other biblical genealogies, is selective, and that the scheme of three fourteens is doing something other than recording statistical data.

The effect of the division into three sets of fourteen generations is to highlight the two turning points in the time of David and the exile. The specific mention that David was "King" (v. 6) indicates the significance of these divisions, as the central section of the list runs from the foundation of the united monarchy of Israel under David to the final dissolution of the monarchy of Judah at the time of the Babylonian exile. David and Jehoiachin thus represent the first and last kings of the dynasty of Judah (Zedekiah, Jehoiachin's uncle, 2 Kgs 24:17, being treated as an irrelevant appendix while the true king was in exile in Babylon), whose historical throne-succession makes up the central section of the genealogical list. Matthew thus signals that this is a royal list, with the probable implication that the throne-succession has continued while the actual monarchy has been in eclipse, until it reaches the destined "son of David" in the birth of the Messiah from this royal line. . .

Perhaps it is more likely that his focus on the number fourteen derives from his observation that there were in fact fourteen names in the genealogical list from Abraham to David as recorded in the OT, and his realization that a little adjustment of the king-list would allow him to produce a symmetrical pattern with the period of the monarchy highlighted as its central phase. In that case the theological focus of Matthew's "book of origin" is not so much on the number fourteen itself as on the royal dimension which his symmetrical structure has brought to light by tracing the line of succession which finds its culmination in the coming of Jesus, the "son of David," and thus potentially in the restoration of the monarchy.

Charles Swindoll: The present royal family of England can trace their lineage back over thirty-five generations through numerous Georges, Edwards, Williams, Fredericks, Charleses (that's my favorite), Jameses, Henrys, Johns, and others. For royal families, genealogy is everything, because in monarchies, political power isn't conferred by vote or achieved by victory . . . it's inherited by birth. . .

For these opening verses, put yourself in the place of a first-century Jewish skeptic — arms folded, eyes narrowed in suspicion, doubt written on your face. You want to see for yourself whether this Jesus of Nazareth is even worth considering as a candidate for the Messiah. You want to see documented proof.

Daniel Doriani: Matthew's Gospel gradually reveals that Jesus was anointed for a far greater victory than that, a victory he accomplished by taking all three of the main leadership offices of Israel. He is the king, anointed to defeat our greatest foes—sin and death. He is the priest, anointed to offer a sacrifice to remove the guilt of sin. He is the prophet, anointed to tell the truth about humanity and himself. The greatest truth is that he defeated sin for us because we cannot defeat sin. He offered himself to remove our guilt because we cannot atone or compensate for our sin.

But Jesus is not just anointed to fulfill the three main offices in Israel. He fulfills other tasks, as Matthew will show us. He fulfills the role of the Sabbath, by giving true rest to his people. He fulfills the role of the temple, for in him God and mankind meet. He judges mankind, knowing every thought and deed, and forgiving every misdeed if we ask for mercy, believing he can grant it.

The title “Christ” signifies a man who is anointed with oil to consecrate him for a special office. He is commissioned by God for a special task. It is vital that we let God define what that task is. In Jesus’ day, most Israelites believed God’s Messiah would free them from Roman domination and, somehow, triumph over unrighteousness and purify the nation.

We now know that these hopes were partly right and partly wrong. Jesus did triumph over sin and purify the nation, but he did not liberate Israel from Rome. And when Jesus failed to deliver them the way they expected, some adjusted their expectations, but many others concluded that he must not be the Messiah.

The problem of misguided expectations is common to mankind. We regularly trust the wrong people or expect them to provide what they cannot or should not give. Some Americans expect our superior armed forces to keep us perfectly safe. Some expect their skills to make them prosperous and secure. Jesus says the wise man builds his house upon the rock—not “a” rock, but “the” rock, that is, Jesus, the Christ (Matt. 7:24).

Still, even those who try to build on the rock can suffer disappointment, if they remake Jesus in their image. How so? They may expect Jesus to make their life easy. They may think they can know Jesus as Savior but not as Lord, but we must let him define himself. He is both Savior and Lord.

G. Campbell Morgan: The relationship between Abraham and Christ is first that of identity of principle. The principle on which Abraham acted when he left Ur of the Chaldees, and throughout the whole of his life, in so far as it was in accord with the Divine will, was that of faith. The whole life and ministry of Jesus, on the plane of His humanity, was true to the selfsame principle; and as it has often been pointed out, the writer of the letter to the Hebrews gives Him precedence of Abraham in this matter, as he declares him to be the Author or File-leader of faith. . .

The relationship between David and Christ is first that of identity of principle in the matter of kingship. David’s loyalty to Jehovah was the condition of his royalty. It was because of his fidelity to Him in circumstances of difficulty that he came at last to full and glorious crowning. In the case of Jesus all that was imperfectly foreshadowed in the experience of David was absolutely fulfilled. Loyalty to the will of God was the master passion of His life, and created the majesty and might of his regal authority. . .

The relationship between the carrying away into captivity and Christ is again that of identity of principle. These people passed under the yoke of a nation full of pride and rebellious against God's government. . . The final fact of relationship between Christ and the captivity is that of his breaking of all the bonds resulting from sin, and leading the exodus of all such as trust Him.

Thus in this genealogical paragraph humanity's aspirations and incompetencies are represented in these generations; and aspirations and incompetencies alike look wistfully to Him. The founder and the king look to Him as Son for the fulfilment of purpose. Faith, which by comparison with sight has seemed feeble through the passing of the centuries, waits His vindication. Government which has perpetually failed waits His administration. Captivity which has sighed and sobbed in its agony waits His emancipation.

- Learn from this list of names that God always keeps His word.
- Learn next from this list of names the sinfulness and corruption of human nature.
- Learn lastly from this list of names how great is the mercy and compassion of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Grant Osborne: Theology in Application

The main idea is the arrival of the royal Messiah. We must realize that this is Matthew's prologue, similar to those in Mark (Mark 1:1–15) and John (John 1:1–18). In this Jewish gospel, a royal genealogy is the perfect way to begin, since genealogies indicated one's position in society. The Davidic Messiah was the subject of much longing in Jesus' day, so Matthew wants to tell his readers the major thing he is saying in his gospel, that in Jesus God's promises in the OT have come true. We will see this time and again in Matthew's gospel, especially in the early chapters. Within this there are several subthemes that stand out.

1. The Messiah Is Now Here

For the Jewish people (and the disciples during Jesus' life) that meant he would come as a conquering king. David was the great warrior-king who won great battles for his people. So when they thought of the royal Messiah, what they contemplated was the destruction of the Romans with the Jewish people as the new world rulers. Yet for Matthew this is not the main point; Jesus would first come as suffering Servant, dying for the sins of humankind (the Jews understood Isaiah 52–53 as referring to the nation rather than the Messiah), and would not return to defeat his enemies until his second coming (Rev 19:11–21). The genealogy here has both aspects in mind. The Christ has arrived, and the time of fulfillment is here. At the same time, Matthew has a great interest in the return of Christ (cf. 13:24–30, 36–43; 20:1–16; 22:1–14; 25:1–46). For the church today this means that we are living in the last days. Our Messiah, the divine warrior, is near, and the great victory is coming soon.

2. The Kingdom Is Here

The entire hope for the Jewish people centered on the Davidic reign. Since David's actual reign ceased, they were awaiting the coming of God's Messiah to fulfill the promise of an eternal Davidic reign (2 Sam 7:11–16). This is fulfilled in the presence of the kingdom that Jesus has inaugurated, and that is a major Matthean theme. "Kingdom" means simply "God reigns," and the purpose of the church today is to allow God to reign in every aspect of its life—its mission, its community, its ethics. We celebrate in every aspect of church life the reign of God, and Jesus' teaching in Matthew can be called “the ethics of the kingdom.” More than anything else we are the children of the kingdom, citizens of heaven and resident aliens in our earthly home (cf. Eph 2:19; Phil 3:20; 1 Pet 1:1, 17; 2:11).

[Editor: although an earthly kingdom still remains for Israel.]

3. Divine Providence at Work

Matthew is interested in salvation history and wants to show how God is in sovereign control of world history and guides it for his own purposes. This will be carried out in the infancy narratives, when every attempt to thwart God’s will (e.g., by Herod) is overturned as God supernaturally intervenes, first in the dream to the Magi (2:12) and then in the angelic messages to Joseph in the dreams of 2:13, 19. This, of course, is one of the primary messages of Scripture, but the average Christian shows all too little awareness of this in his or her daily life. For example, consider trials and faith. Most of the time we trust ourselves more than God to take care of life’s difficulties, yet we claim to believe that he is sovereign. The same God who has guided the process of the coming of the Messiah guides the progress of our lives.

4. God’s Focus on the Outcasts and Downtrodden

The four women mentioned in 1:3, 5, 6 prepared for God’s choice of Mary to bear his Son. All were outsiders, many encased in scandal, yet all were chosen by God and made an essential part of the greatest story in all of history. This same truth was evident in Jesus’ choice of his twelve disciples; he did not select the great teachers like Gamaliel or leaders like Nicodemus. He turned to peasant fishermen (Simon and Andrew, James, and John), despised tax collectors (Levi), and insurrectionists (Simon the Zealot). For the mother of the Messiah, God chose a peasant in a small town, and then had her give birth in suspicious (scandalous) circumstances as an unwed mother. This genealogy tells us that God has worked in this way throughout history. Paul catches it well: “If I must boast, I will boast of the things that show my weakness” (2 Cor 11:30). The point is that when God works through our low status and weakness, the glory goes to him. None of us should ever feel inferior or inadequate. Rather, we should rejoice in such, for God turns human weakness into divine strength.

5. A Worldwide Mission

The four women were all Gentiles or related to Gentiles, and this leads into a major motif in the first gospel, the preparation of the new community of God to fulfill the Abrahamic covenant (to be a blessing to all nations) by taking the gospel directly to the Gentiles. The Jewish people had no concept of direct mission to the Gentiles. When they “travel[ed] over sea and land” to make converts (23:15), they went only to the synagogues to talk God-fearers into becoming full proselytes. Jesus introduced a whole new movement in salvation history, the universal mission to all nations (28:19). Yet it took a decade for the disciples to understand its implications, and only after the lengthy process of Spirit-inspired events in the steps to the Gentile mission of Acts 7–11. In our time this lesson has been learned, but it is still a lengthy process in turning believers today into “world Christians.”

TEXT: Matthew 1:18-25

TITLE: VIRGIN CONCEPTION OF JESUS CHRIST

BIG IDEA:

THE VIRGIN CONCEPTION IN FULFILLMENT OF OT PROPHECY AS CONFIRMED BY ANGELIC REVELATION WAS ESSENTIAL TO CHRIST'S ULTIMATE MISSION AS JESUS AND INCARNATE PRESENCE AS IMMANUEL

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: There are two major ideas here—the sovereign control of all history by God, who works out his plan of salvation in history “when the set time had fully come” (Gal 4:4), and the virgin birth of Jesus as the typological fulfillment of Isa 7:14.

David Platt: In the latter half of Matthew 1 we encounter the most extraordinary miracle in the whole Bible, and the most remarkable mystery in the whole universe. This miraculous mystery is described in eight simple verses. Referring to this miracle, J. I. Packer said, “It is here, in the thing that happened at the first Christmas, that the profoundest and most unfathomable depths of the Christian revelation lie” (Packer, “For Your Sakes He Became Poor,” 69). Our souls ought to be captivated with fascinating glory in the midst of a familiar story.

Leon Morris: Matthew tells the story of the birth of Jesus from the standpoint of Joseph rather than that of Mary, as Luke does. Luke accordingly has such stories as the appearance of the angel to Mary, but Matthew simply says that Mary became pregnant due to an activity of the Holy Spirit and goes on to tell his readers what Joseph did. It would have been expected that he would have divorced Mary, but an angelic visitor told him not to do so. Matthew tells us how Joseph obeyed the angel. Matthew’s account is clearly quite independent of that of Luke, but it emphasizes equally the virgin birth. We should notice

- (a) the emphasis on the place of Joseph,
- (b) the important place of divine guidance given in dreams, and
- (c) the repeated references to the fulfillment of prophecy.

Craig Blomberg: Though Matthew expounds nothing of its significance here, the virginal conception has regularly been understood as a way by which Jesus could be both fully human and fully divine. His father, in essence, was God, through the work of the Holy Spirit; his mother was the fully human woman, Mary. As fully God, Jesus was able to pay the eternal penalty for our sins (v. 21) for which finite humanity could not atone. As fully human he could be our adequate representative and substitutionary sacrifice.

John MacArthur: Don’t ever base your theology on majority rule. There may be people who deny the virgin birth. There may be people who flagrantly and blatantly fight against the deity of Jesus Christ, but maybe even more subtle than that are the people who ignore the virgin birth. Reading a quote by someone that you all know, Robert Schuller at Garden Growth Community Church, this is a quote from The Wittenberg Door, January, 1976. He said, “I could not imprint or in public deny the virgin birth of Christ, but when I have something I can’t comprehend, I just don’t deal with it.”

Well, maybe that is the most serious error of all. Because that's very subtle, to just ignore the virgin birth. We cannot doubt it and we cannot deny it and we cannot ignore it if we simply open our eyes and look at Matthew 1:18-25. It's there. Dr. Walvoord, the president of Dallas Theological Seminary, says – and I quote - “The incarnation of the Lord Jesus Christ is the central fact of Christianity. Upon it the whole superstructure of Christian theology depends.” The whole essence of Christianity, people, is predicated on the fact that Jesus is God in human flesh. And that is something made clear at the very birth of Christ, an essential doctrine.

You see, if Jesus had a human father, then the Bible is untrustworthy, because the Bible claims he did not. And if Jesus was born simply of human parents, there is no way to describe the reason for his supernatural life. His virgin birth, his substitutionary death, his bodily resurrection and his second coming are a package of deity. You cannot isolate any one of those and accept only that one and leave the rest or vice versa, accept them all but one. . .

First of all, the virgin birth conceived, then confronted, then clarified, then connected, and then consummated.

(:18a) PROLOGUE – CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING BIRTH OF JESUS

“Now the birth of Jesus Christ was as follows.”

John MacArthur: The virgin birth is an underlying assumption in everything the Bible says about Jesus. To throw out the virgin birth is to reject Christ's deity, the accuracy and authority of Scripture, and a host of other related doctrines that are the heart of the Christian faith. No issue is more important than the virgin birth to our understanding of who Jesus is. If we deny that Jesus is God, we have denied the very essence of Christianity. Everything else the Bible teaches about Christ hinges on the truth we celebrate at Christmas—that Jesus is God in human flesh. If the story of His birth is merely a fabricated or trumped-up legend, then so is the rest of what Scripture tells us about Him. The virgin birth is as crucial as the resurrection in substantiating His deity. It is not an optional truth. Anyone who rejects Christ's deity rejects Christ absolutely—even if he pretends otherwise

I. (:18b-19) VIRGIN CONCEPTION CREATED A TROUBLING DILEMMA

A. (:18b) Surprise

“When His mother Mary had been betrothed to Joseph, before they came together she was found to be with child by the Holy Spirit.”

Grant Osborne: The key term is “pledged in marriage” (μνηστευθείσης), which means a great deal more than the “engagement” today. It was legally binding (a contract signed by witnesses) and could be broken only by a writ of divorce. If the “husband” (he was considered such) were to die, the engaged woman would be considered a widow. Still, the marriage was not consummated until the wedding night, when the bride ritually went from her parent's home to her husband's home. Betrothal usually happened about the age of twelve (arranged by the two sets of parents), with the wedding a year later. The husbands were usually about eighteen (in order to be established financially).

Charles Swindoll: In his account of the birth of Jesus, Matthew places us squarely within the point of view of Joseph. Remember, Joseph was the one who stood in the line of succession for the Davidic kingship according to the genealogy, so Jews would have been particularly interested in the story of Jesus' birth from Joseph's perspective. But as we, the readers, are placed in Joseph's sandals, we immediately sense the uncomfortable situation: Sometime during the approximately one-year period of betrothal between Joseph and Mary, "she was found to be with child" (1:18). Matthew clarifies for the reader that this unexpected pregnancy was "by the Holy Spirit," but the account makes it clear that Joseph didn't know this.

D. A. Carson: That Mary was "found" to be with child does not suggest a surreptitious attempt at concealment ("found out") but only that her pregnancy became obvious. This pregnancy came about through the Holy Spirit (even more prominent in Luke's birth narratives). There is no hint of pagan deity-human coupling in crassly physical terms. Instead, the power of the Lord, manifest in the Holy Spirit who was expected to be active in the messianic age, miraculously brought about the conception.

B. (:19) Solution

"And Joseph her husband, being a righteous man, and not wanting to disgrace her, desired to put her away secretly."

Grant Osborne: Joseph's righteous character placed him in a dilemma: he had to divorce Mary because of her pregnancy, yet he did not "want" (a second causal participle) to "disgrace" her (δειγματίζω means to make an example by disgracing her publicly, often used of an adulteress, see BAGD, 172). So he compromised by deciding to do so privately. According to Jewish tradition, this would be done by giving her a writ of divorce (see Deut 24:1) privately in front of two witnesses rather than in front of the whole town.

Charles Swindoll: From Joseph's perspective, he had three options in dealing with this dilemma.

- First, he could accept her as a scandalous liar and marry her anyway. But to do so would be to overlook offenses that God condemns.
- Second, Joseph could publicly condemn Mary as an adulteress, and she would be stoned to death under the Law (see Deut. 22:23-24).
- Or third, Joseph could divorce Mary privately and quietly, finding a way to deflect attention from the embarrassing situation.

Perhaps Joseph thought her extended stay with her relative Elizabeth in Judea would be a perfect opportunity to "send her away secretly" (Matt. 1:19). He could just send word that Mary should stay in Judea and not return to Nazareth. Perhaps Joseph could move out of town himself and relocate to his family's ancestral land in Bethlehem. Before long, nobody would remember that he had been betrothed to Mary. Or by the time they realized she had given birth out of wedlock, nobody would care . . . maybe. But even this strategy to maintain his own righteousness and save her from public disgrace had its risks. Was it a realistic possibility that the truth wouldn't surface in a small town like Nazareth?

John MacArthur: At the start of his life, the Jews said Jesus was the son of a man who seduced Mary. At the end of his life, they said the disciples stole his body and faked the resurrection. And Matthew begins with the answer to the first slander and ends his Gospel with the answer to the last slander and spends the rest of the middle of it fighting all the other slanders against the dear Lord Jesus Christ.

Van Parunak: Deuteronomy 22 lays out a detailed set of rules for what was to be done in the case of sexual impurity, either before or within marriage. Table 3 Shows the possible cases. The only case that leaves the women neither dead nor married to her illicit lover is 22:25-27, which must be the case that Joseph assumes here.

Section	Woman's Status	Woman Guilty?	Consequences
22:13-21 The Wife Accused	Married
15-19		No	Husband fined; may never put her away
20-21		Yes	Wife executed by stoning.
22:22 The Adulteress Discovered		Not Stated	Wife and illicit partner executed.
22:23-24 Defiled in the City	Engaged	Presumed Yes	Man and woman both executed.
22:25-27 Defiled in the Country		Presumed No	Only man executed; woman goes free.
22:28-29 Single Girl Defiled	Single	Not Stated	Man must marry woman; can never put her away.

II. (:20-21) VIRGIN CONCEPTION CONFIRMED BY ANGELIC REVELATION

A. (:20a) Recalibration of How to Respond

“But when he had considered this, behold, an angel of the Lord appeared to him in a dream, saying”

Daniel Doriani: The Lord let Joseph struggle to solve his problem for a season before he revealed a better plan. He often works this way. He lets us make plans, then reveals a better way. When this happens, we must change our plans, as Joseph did. We must test our plans and purposes against God’s will, as revealed in Scripture and in the counsel of the wise. Sometimes, circumstances unfold in ways that suggest what God’s will may be. Even plans that look sound must be open to revision.

B. (:20b) Revelation of the Virgin Conception

“Joseph, son of David, do not be afraid to take Mary as your wife; for that which has been conceived in her is of the Holy Spirit.”

D. A. Carson: The angel’s opening words, “Joseph son of David,” tie this pericope to the preceding genealogy, maintain interest in the theme of the Davidic Messiah, and, from Joseph’s perspective, alert him to the significance of the role he is to play.

Leon Morris: Don’t be afraid does not necessarily indicate fear; the word may be used in the sense “shrink from doing something,” and it is this sense that is required here (cf. BAGD, φοβέω, 1.c).

Richard Gardner: Most striking of all is the language we find in the Fourth Gospel. There the author describes believers as those who are “born from above” or “bom of the Spirit” (John 3:3, 6). In another place he refers to those whom Jesus has given “power to become children of God,” asserting that they have been born “not of blood or of the will of the flesh or of the will of man, but of God” (John 1:12-13). If we consider Matthew 1:18-25 alongside texts such as these, we see that the theme of conception by the Spirit applies to believers’ origins as well as Jesus’ origins. In a somewhat different but real sense, we too are “conceived by the Holy Ghost.”

C. (:21) Reason for the Virgin Conception

1. Significance of the Virgin Birth of This Son

“And she will bear a Son;”

2. Essential for his Ultimate Mission = Salvation

“and you shall call His name Jesus, for it is He who will save His people from their sins.”

Richard Gardner: For Matthew, however, it is important that Joseph carry out this responsibility. Naming the child will signify that Joseph accepts the child as his own, and this in turn will secure Jesus’ claim to Davidic ancestry.

D. A. Carson: There was much Jewish expectation of a Messiah who would “redeem” Israel from Roman tyranny and even purify his people, whether by fiat or appeal to law (e.g., Pss Sol 17). But there was no expectation that the Davidic Messiah would give his own life as a ransom (20:28) to save his people from their sins. The verb “save” can refer to deliverance from physical danger (8:25), disease (9:21-22), or even death (24:22); in the NT it commonly refers to the comprehensive salvation inaugurated by Jesus that will be consummated at his return. Here it focuses on what is central, viz., salvation from sins; for in the biblical perspective sin is the basic (if not always the immediate) cause of all other calamities. This verse therefore orients the reader to the fundamental purpose of Jesus’ coming and the essential nature of the reign he inaugurates as King Messiah, heir of David’s throne.

III. (:22-23) VIRGIN CONCEPTION FULFILLED OT PROPHECY

A. (:22) Prophetic Statement

“Now all this took place that what was spoken by the Lord through the prophet might be fulfilled, saying,”

Grant Osborne: There is emphasis upon ὅλον, the “whole” set of events that surrounded the birth of the Messiah. God controlled every aspect of the situation to fulfill his will. The use of “to fulfill” (πληρωθῆναι) is Matthean, found in ten particular fulfillment passages (1:22; 2:15, 17, 23; 4:14; 8:17; 12:17; 13:35; 21:4; 27:9). Four are in the infancy narratives and establish the theme for the rest of the book, namely, that God sovereignly controls all events in conformity with his plan. The primary method Matthew uses is typology; that is, the events of Jesus’ birth are analogous to the way God has worked during the old covenant. Yet there is also a direct relationship between promise and fulfillment here. God has sovereignly controlled salvation history in order to prepare for his Messiah.

Charles Swindoll: At this point in the dramatic narrative, Matthew pushes the pause button and makes an editorial comment for the benefit of his intended Jewish audience —especially those who would be likely to roll their eyes and say, “Gimme a break! Conceived by the Holy Spirit? Born of a virgin? Who’s ever heard of such a thing?” Matthew knew his skeptical audience well. To preempt their objections, he asserted that the virgin conception of the Messiah was, in fact, in keeping with a prophecy in the Old Testament book of Isaiah.

B. (:23) Prophetic Substance

1. Virgin Conception and Birth of a Son

“Behold, the virgin shall be with child, and shall bear a Son,”

Michael Wilkins: Isaiah prophesied that a woman who was a virgin at the time of Ahaz (734 B.C.) would bear a son named Immanuel. Since neither the queen nor Isaiah’s wife was a virgin, this most likely was some unmarried young woman within the royal house with whom Ahaz was familiar. The woman would soon marry and conceive a child, and when it was born give it the name Immanuel—perhaps as a symbolic hope of God’s presence in these dark times of national difficulty. Before the child was old enough to know the difference between right and wrong, Judah would be delivered from the threat of invasion from King Pekah of Israel and King Rezin of Aram (Isa. 7:14–17). The northern alliance was broken in 732 B.C., when Tiglath-Pileser III of Assyria destroyed Damascus, conquered Aram, and put Rezin to death. All this was within the time-frame miraculously predicted as the sign to Ahaz, plenty of time for the virgin to be married and to carry the child for the nine months of pregnancy, and for the approximately two years it would take until the boy knew the difference between good and evil. Thus there was immediate fulfillment of a miraculous prediction.

Grant Osborne: The prophecy was given to Ahaz and introduced by “Therefore, the Lord himself will give you a sign.” In other words, it was mainly intended for Ahaz that God would destroy the kings he dreaded (Isa 7:14–17). So at least a partial fulfillment is indicated for Ahaz’s time. Yet the larger Isaianic context indicates also that a greater picture was envisaged as well. This promised “Immanuel” would bring a dawning of a great light (9:2–3) and would be called “Wonderful Counselor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace” (9:6). He is the “shoot from the stump of Jesse,” the “Branch” on which the Spirit rests (11:1–11), showing a distinct messianic longing.

The LXX recognized this greater thrust and chose to interpret almâ with the narrower “virgin” (παρθένος), thus emphasizing the supernatural manifestations of the child’s birth. Matthew utilized this Septuagintal emphasis and applied it to the virgin birth of Jesus. As Blomberg says, “So it is best to see a partial, proleptic fulfillment of Isaiah’s prophecy in his time, with the complete and more glorious fulfillment in Jesus’ own birth.”

2. Recognition of the Child as Immanuel –
Virgin Conception Essential for Christ’s Incarnate Presence as Immanuel

“and they shall call His name Immanuel, which translated means, ‘God with us.’”

Walter Wilson: Coming to terms with both the meaning and the relationship of the two birth names (“Jesus” and “Immanuel”) juxtaposed through this pattern is held up as a priority for the reader in comprehending the significance of the gospel’s central character.

Daniel Doriani: This is a surprise. The people had been looking for a son of David, but not for Immanuel. Perhaps no one genuinely heard the prophecy; nonetheless, one was given (the fact that we are deaf does not mean God fails to speak). The birth of Jesus, God’s Immanuel, fulfills several prophecies, some clear, others veiled.

Richard Gardner: Joseph will call Mary’s child Jesus, because he will save his people from their sins. The people whom Jesus saves from sin, however, will hail him as Emmanuel—for only someone in whom God is present can deliver from sin! At the end of his Gospel, Matthew will return to this theme of divine presence and reaffirm it in a new way: As God is with us in Jesus, so Jesus promises to be with his community at all times until the very end (28:20).

R. T. France: The phrase “God with us” which thus marks the beginning of Matthew’s presentation of Jesus will have its arresting counterpart at the end of the gospel when Jesus himself declares “I am with you always” with reference not to a continuing life on earth but a spiritual presence (28:20). Cf. also the remarkable words of 18:20, “Where two or three have come together in my name, I am there among them.” At this point it would be possible to read Immanuel only in its probable OT sense as a statement of God’s concern for his people, “God is with us,” but the name as applied to one who has just been declared to owe his origin to the direct work of the Holy Spirit was probably in Matthew’s mind a more direct statement of the presence of God in Jesus himself, so that Jesus’ declaration in 28:20 is only drawing out what has already been true from the time of his birth, that God is present in the person of Jesus. Matthew’s overt interpretation of “Immanuel” thus takes him close to an explicit doctrine of incarnation such as is expressed in John 1:14.

Craig Blomberg: The church in every age should recognize here a clear affirmation of Jesus’ deity and cling tightly to this doctrine as crucial for our salvation. At the same time, Matthew wants to emphasize that Jesus, as God, is “with us”; deity is immanent. Too often those who have rightly contended for Jesus’ full deity have created a God to whom they do not feel close rather than one who became human in every way like them but without sin (Heb 4:15). As God “with us,” Jesus enables us to come boldly before God’s throne (Heb 4:16) when we accept the forgiveness of sins he made available (Matt 2:21) and develop an intimate relationship with him.

IV. (:24-25) VIRGIN BIRTH PROTECTED BY THE OBEDIENCE OF JOSEPH

A. (:24) Married Mary

“And Joseph arose from his sleep, and did as the angel of the Lord commanded him, and took her as his wife,”

Charles Swindoll: Joseph not only behaved as Mary’s faithful protector, but he presumably also took on the role of her advocate. He adjusted his life in a totally new direction once he realized what God was doing in their lives and what part he was meant to play. Together Mary and Joseph would likely bear the brunt of whispered rumors, backbiting gossip, and ugly condemnation—from friends, family, and especially enemies. But Joseph knew the truth, and he made a tough, life-altering decision based on that truth. Being a righteous man, he did what was right, regardless of the personal cost.

Van Parunak: Joseph and Mary were both called upon to make difficult personal choices in bringing the Messiah into the world. Both of them had to suppress their personal goals and their concern for their own reputations, in the face of obedience to the Lord. But in neither case do we sense any hesitation. Confronted with Gabriel’s announcement, Mary said (Luk 1:38), “Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word.” In response to the instruction from the angel of the Lord in his dream, when Joseph woke up, he “did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him” (Matt 1:24). We should thank God for giving both of them this spirit of obedience, and seek to yield ourselves just as willingly to the revelations that he makes clear to us day by day, that he might form Christ in us, and through us bring him to the world around us.

B. (:25a) Kept Her a Virgin

“and kept her a virgin until she gave birth to a Son;”

D. A. Carson: Matthew wants to make Jesus’ virginal conception quite unambiguous, for he adds that Joseph had no sexual union with Mary (lit., he did not “know” her, an OT euphemism) until she gave birth to Jesus (v.25). The “until” clause most naturally means that Mary and Joseph enjoyed normal conjugal relations after Jesus’ birth. Contrary to McHugh (Mother of Jesus, 204), the imperfect eginōsken (“did not know [her],” GK 1182) does not hint at continued celibacy after Jesus’ birth but stresses the faithfulness of the celibacy until Jesus’ birth.

C. (:25b) Named the Child Jesus

Daniel Doriani: This portion of Matthew offers a picture of faith, but more than that it is an account of the acts of the triune God. The Father’s plan of redemption has come to the beginning of its climactic phase. The Spirit’s prophecy to Ahaz and through Ahaz set up the Immanuel principle that now comes to fulfillment. The Spirit also fashioned life in the womb of Mary and moved the hearts of Mary and Joseph to accept their role in the divine drama. Finally, the eternal Son has entered the world of humanity.

May the Spirit work in us to receive what God began to accomplish in the birth of Jesus. May we also submit our plans and our emotions to him, as Joseph did. May we give our hearts and minds to him as Mary and Joseph did. May we know that God is with us, to bless us, in every season of life. In every distress, let us turn to God for comfort. In joy and in blessing, let us not ascribe it to good fortune or hard work, but to Immanuel, who is present to bless. God is with us in the person of Jesus. May we have the faith, trust, love, and obedience to receive the blessings of Immanuel.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What are the implications of denying the historicity of the virgin birth of Jesus?
- 2) When have you wrestled through a problem and come to your own course of action only to have the Lord overrule your agenda and cause you to revise your plans?
- 3) What aspects of this account help to prove that Jesus is the promised Messiah, the Son of God sent to save us from sin?
- 4) How do you respond when God calls you to make a tough faith decision that might involve significant personal cost or rejection?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Richard Gardner: Similar annunciation stories are found in Genesis 16:7-14; 17:15—18:15; Judges 13:2-25; Luke 1:18-23; and Luke 1:26-38 (cf. Isa. 7:10-17). If we compare these narratives, we find a number of common elements:

- (1) An appearance of the Lord or the angel of the Lord.
- (2) A greeting by the one who appears, sometimes addressing the recipient by name.
- (3) A message that a child has been or soon will be conceived.
- (4) The giving of a name for the child and an explanation of the name.
- (5) Information on the future role or destiny of the child.

Sometimes (though not in Matthew's account), the recipient questions how all this can happen and receives a sign of reassurance.

Central to the good news in annunciation stories is the word that God has intervened or will intervene to make possible the birth of someone important for God's purposes. . .

Kingsbury: Jesus, the son born to Mary, is the kingly Messiah of Israel in whom Israel's entire history, begun in Abraham, reaches its eschatological conclusion. Adopted by Joseph into the line of David, Jesus can legitimately be called the Son of David and the Son of Abraham. Ultimately, however, Jesus has his origin in God, which means he is the Son of God, for he was conceived in Mary, a virgin, by the creative act of God's Holy Spirit. As Messiah, Son of David, Son of Abraham, and Son of God, Jesus' mission will be to save his people, the disciples who will constitute his Church, from their sins. By so doing, Jesus will inaugurate the eschatological age of salvation.

Grant Osborne: The Spirit is not a major theme in Matthew, unlike Luke and John. However, here the Spirit is central, and Matthew does want his readers to realize his presence in Jesus' birth and in our world. While simplistic, there is truth in the Trinitarian saying, "The Father proclaims, the Son performs, the Spirit perfects." The Spirit is the presence of the Father and the Son in this world. Jesus makes clear in John's Farewell Discourse (John 14-17) that he must depart so the Spirit may come (John 16:7). This is the age of the Spirit, the final stage in God's plan to prepare this world for the eschaton, when the eternal age will be inaugurated. Bruner says:

The Holy Spirit is the one who brings Jesus to birth in persons, the one who makes Jesus alive in human life, who makes Jesus historical and real. The Genesis of Jesus inside human life is the exclusive work of the Holy Spirit, the Creator Spiritus, who began the world's creation (Gen 1:2) and now generates the world's salvation.

Charles Swindoll: The Jewish marriage process can be divided into three stages.

- First, a man and woman were matched together, usually by their fathers. The couple and their families then took time to become acquainted and approve the match, after which they entered a formal contractual agreement that included some kind of dowry or exchange of property passed from the woman's family to the man's family.
- Once the contract was signed and sealed, the man and woman entered the second stage: betrothal. Betrothal essentially amounted to a waiting period, somewhat similar to what we might call engagement, but with the important distinction that a contract had already been signed, making betrothal final in a sense similar to what we think of as marriage itself.
- When the waiting period had elapsed and the groom's new living quarters had been prepared to receive the bride, the third stage transpired: the wedding ceremony. This included a public presentation of the bride and groom before family and friends, the sealing of their union, and a celebration with a grand feast.

The severing of an arrangement of betrothal would have been a big deal in Jewish culture — essentially a breach of contract!

Walter Wilson: The formal profile of the first scene (1:18–25) is achieved through the blending of three different revelatory genres,

- the angelic annunciation of birth,
- the angelic dream appearance,
- and the fulfillment quotation, the last of which doubles as an oracle of divine name-giving.

Having situated the origins of the Messiah within a broad sweep of salvation history, attention now turns to events surrounding his conception and birth. The narrative in 1:18–25 is linked to the gospel's introduction (1:1–17) both linguistically and logically. Most conspicuous in this regard is the use of γένεσις in the pericope's initial verse, matching the use of the same word in the initial verse of the previous unit: the account of Jesus's "birth" (1:18) will be a continuation of the account of his "genealogy" (1:1), the references to Mary and Joseph in 1:18 picking up on 1:16. The reference to Joseph as "son of David" in 1:20, meanwhile, recalls the identification of Jesus with the same title in 1:1 (cf. 1:6, 17). By explaining how the latter came to be formally adopted by the former, the story elucidates the anomaly with which the genealogy concluded (1:16). In addition, the use of γεννηθέν ("begotten") in 1:20 recalls the repeated use of γεννάω ("beget") in the genealogy, especially ἐγεννήθη ("was born") in 1:16. The Messiah's derivation from the house of David is established through his father, while his derivation from the Holy Spirit is established through his mother.

David Thompson:

JESUS CHRIST IS THE KING OF THE JEWS AND THE SAVIOR OF THE WORLD AND HIS VERY BIRTH AND JOSEPH'S RESPONSE PROVES IT.

SPECIFIC FACT #1 – The specific time of the pregnancy that led to the birth of Jesus Christ. 1:18

(Time Related Fact #1) - Mary became pregnant during her betrothal period to Joseph. 1:18a

(Time Related Fact #2) - Mary became pregnant before she had any physical intimacy with Joseph. 1:18b

SPECIFIC FACT #2 – The specific character of Joseph is revealed by his reaction to Mary’s pregnancy. 1:19

But what we learn from this verse is that Joseph was a righteous man, but he was not a rigid man. He was a righteous man, but he was also a gracious and merciful man. He desired to do what was right before God which meant he could not go ahead with the wedding because if he did he would:

1) Violate Roman and Jewish law which forbid one to marry an immoral woman but expose her and even stone her (Deut. 22:13-21), and

2) He would violate his own integrity– people would think he had committed immorality.

However, he did not want to destroy Mary’s reputation by publically exposing her to the religious leadership. Joseph decided he would handle the matter privately–privately divorce her and send her away. The Scriptures call Joseph a “righteous man” in that he would not put up with immorality and decided to privately divorce Mary.

SPECIFIC FACT #3 – The specific truth concerning Jesus’ conception is revealed to Joseph by an angel, proving who Jesus Christ is. 1:20-21

SPECIFIC FACT #4 – The specific truth concerning Jesus’ prophetic fulfillment is revealed to Joseph and proves who Christ is. 1:22-23

SPECIFIC FACT #5 – The specific response of Joseph to this angelic revelation proves who Jesus is. 1:24-25

Peter Wallace: The Council of Chalcedon put it this way in the year 451 regarding how Jesus is “recognized” in two natures. In other words, you can see that he is true God and true man. He is one person who acts according to the properties of two distinct but inseparable natures.

Therefore, following the holy fathers, we all with one accord teach men to acknowledge one and the same Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, at once complete in Godhead and complete in manhood, truly God and truly man, consisting also of a reasonable soul and body; of one substance with the Father as regards his Godhead, and at the same time of one substance with us as regards his manhood; like us in all respects, apart from sin; as regards his Godhead, begotten of the Father before the ages, but yet as regards his manhood begotten, for us men and for our salvation, of Mary the Virgin, the God-bearer; one and the same Christ, Son, Lord, Only-begotten, recognized in two natures, without confusion, without change, without division, without separation; the distinction of natures being in no way annulled by the union, but rather the characteristics of each nature being preserved and coming together to form one person and subsistence, not as parted or separated into two persons, but one and the same Son and Only-begotten God the Word, Lord Jesus Christ; even as the prophets from earliest times spoke of him, and our Lord Jesus Christ himself taught us, and the creed of the fathers has handed down to us.

If you ever get confused by how to think or speak of the two natures, just remember this:

- persons act,
- natures are.

Jesus is one person who acts according to the properties of two natures.

- His divine nature he has from the Father from all eternity.
- His human nature he has from the Virgin Mary, together with the overshadowing of the Holy Spirit – a nice, mysterious way of putting it!

Wayne Grudem - The doctrinal importance of the virgin birth is seen in at least three areas.

1. It shows that salvation ultimately must come from the Lord.

Just as God had promised that the “seed” of the woman (Gen. 3:15) would ultimately destroy the serpent, so God brought it about by his own power, not through mere human effort. The virgin birth of Christ is an unmistakable reminder that salvation can never come through human effort, but must be the work of God himself. Our salvation only comes about through the supernatural work of God, and that was evident at the very beginning of Jesus’ life when “God sent forth his Son, born of woman, born under the law, to redeem those who were under the law, so that we might receive adoption as sons” (Gal. 4:4–5).

2. The virgin birth made possible the uniting of full deity and full humanity in one person.

This was the means God used to send his Son (John 3:16; Gal. 4:4) into the world as a man. If we think for a moment of other possible ways in which Christ might have come to the earth, none of them would so clearly unite humanity and deity in one person. It probably would have been possible for God to create Jesus as a complete human being in heaven and send him to descend from heaven to earth without the benefit of any human parent. But then it would have been very hard for us to see how Jesus could be fully human as we are, nor would he be a part of the human race that physically descended from Adam. On the other hand, it probably would have been possible for God to have Jesus come into the world with two human parents, both a father and a mother, and with his full divine nature miraculously united to his human nature at some point early in his life. But then it would have been hard for us to understand how Jesus was fully God, since his origin was like ours in every way. When we think of these two other possibilities, it helps us to understand how God, in his wisdom, ordained a combination of human and divine influence in the birth of Christ, so that his full humanity would be evident to us from the fact of his ordinary human birth from a human mother, and his full deity would be evident from the fact of his conception in Mary’s womb by the powerful work of the Holy Spirit.

3. The virgin birth also makes possible Christ’s true humanity without inherited sin.

All human beings have inherited legal guilt and a corrupt moral nature from their first father, Adam (this is sometimes called “inherited sin” or “original sin”). But the fact that Jesus did not have a human father means that the line of descent from Adam is partially interrupted. Jesus did not descend from Adam in exactly the same way in which every other human being has descended from Adam. And this helps us to understand why the legal guilt and moral corruption that belongs to all other human beings did not belong to Christ

TEXT: Matthew 2:1-12

TITLE: WISE MEN STILL SEEK HIM -- THE ADORATION OF THE MAGI VS ANTAGONISM FROM KING HEROD

BIG IDEA:

THE COMING OF THE KING OF THE JEWS PROMPTS EITHER ADORATION AND WORSHIP OR FEAR AND OPPOSITION

INTRODUCTION:

Leon Morris: Matthew may well have included this story to bring out the truth that Jesus is Lord of all peoples; since this is so, it was appropriate that at the time of his infancy people came from a distant Gentile country to pay their homage. In this narrative the Jews and their king are ranged against the infant Jesus, but Gentiles do him homage. There will also be the motif that the purposes of God cannot be overthrown. Earthly kings like Herod may try to circumvent the divine purpose, but in the end they are always defeated. And, of course, there is the strong motif of the fulfilment of Scripture; Matthew finds events in the life of Jesus from the earliest days foretold in the holy writings.

E. Michael Green: Such was the climactic event of all history: Jesus, Immanuel, was born in the little town of Bethlehem, the ancient seat of the Davidic line. His coming always divides people, as we shall see time and again in this Gospel. Here, at the very start of his life, we see two camps forming: one full of praise and welcome; the other full of hatred and opposition. Herod and the Magi stand out in strong contrast, a contrast that will deepen as the story of Jesus' life unfolds towards the cross. . .

The note of contrast is strongly emphasized in this short account. There is the contrast between Herod's kingship and that of Jesus: one inaugurated by Rome, an alien power, and based on aggression and cruelty; the other originating from love, shown in vulnerability and entering into its kingdom through the cross. Herod was thirty-three at his inauguration, and Jesus the same age when he died. What a contrast!

Matthew underlines particularly the contrasting responses to Jesus. We have seen how the Magi pursued what they knew to the utmost of their powers, and made an act of obeisance and dedication that takes our breath away. Those wise men sought him wholeheartedly: wise men and women still do. But over against them stood Herod and the Jewish clergy. Herod's response was hatred and fear: hatred of anything and anyone that threatened his self-centredness, and fear of a possible rival, however improbable. The lust for power blunted the better qualities in Herod's character. Power still has this corrupting tendency today. Hitler's Germany, Stalin's Russia, Saddam's Iraq and Milosevic's Serbia show the lengths to which self-seeking can go against what is known to be right.

Then there were the Jewish chief priests and scribes. Their attitude is almost as amazing as that of the Magi. They knew their Scriptures and had no problem in answering Herod when he wanted to know where the child would be born. Back came the answer, pointing Herod to Micah 5:2. He would be born in Bethlehem, of course. But did they go to greet him? Did they lift a sandal? Not at all. They knew it all, but they did nothing. That is a characteristic danger for clergy and scholars in any age. Their apathy hardened into outright opposition to Jesus as his ministry developed, and ended with frenzied lust for his blood—an awesome warning that knowledge is no substitute for obedience.

D. A. Carson: Of course, Matthew did not just chronicle meaningless events. He wrote to develop his theme of fulfillment of Scripture (Had not God promised that nations would be drawn to Messiah's light [Isa 60:3]?); to establish God's providential and supernatural care of this virgin-born Son; to anticipate the hostilities, resentment, and suffering he would face; and to hint at the fact that Gentiles would be drawn into his reign (cf. Isa 60:3; Nellessen, Das Kind, 120, acutely compares Mt 8:11–12; cf. 28:16–20). The Magi will be like the men of Nineveh who will rise up in judgment and condemn those who, despite their privilege of much greater light, did not receive the promised Messiah and bow to his reign (12:41–42).

Grant Osborne: Worship permeates this story. These exalted personages represent the rest of the world, come to bow at the feet of the infant Jesus. Their great efforts to find the baby show their resolve. This is a real fulfillment of the Abrahamic promise that the Jewish people would be a source of blessing to the world (Gen 12:3; 15:5; 18:18; etc.).

Richard Gardner: The story of the magi gives special prominence to the theme of Jesus' kingship. Jesus is at one and the same time the king of the Jews and the long-awaited world ruler whom all the nations will honor and serve. Only after his resurrection will Jesus really be able to claim that all authority in heaven and on earth has been given to me (28:18). The adoration of the magi, however, confirms and celebrates Jesus' royal destiny in advance.

John MacArthur: Now having established that He is a king by lineage, then in chapter 2, Matthew reemphasizes that He is a king in terms of the fact that certain people paid him homage as a king. If He's a king, Matthew is saying to us, it ought to be evident by his genealogy. He has to be the child of kings. If He is a king, it ought to be evident by the way people respond to Him. And so in chapter 2, Matthew tells us the story of certain wise men who came to proclaim that Jesus was indeed a king and to bow at His feet and worship Him as king. Now that again is part of Matthew's emphasis. He is king by virtue of His genealogy. He is king by virtue the royal majesty that was displayed, and accepted, and honored, and revealed by the work and the effort of these wise men coming and bringing certain gifts.

I. (:1-2) ADVENT OF CHRIST PROMPTS THE MAGI TO SEEK HIM OUT

A. (:1a) Historical Setting

“Now after Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king,”

Leon Morris: The name Bethlehem means “House of Bread,” that is, a granary. Matthew speaks of Bethlehem 5 times, but Luke (twice) and John (once) are the only other New Testament writers to refer to it. It was evidently not considered an important place. It was located about 5 miles (or 8 kilometers) south of Jerusalem. Judea, here as in most places, indicates the southern part of Palestine (in contrast to Samaria, etc.). . .

This Herod is Herod the Great, and he is correctly called “the king” (the title was sometimes accorded the tetrarch, but he was not a king; this Herod was). He was not a Jew, his father being an Idumean and his mother an Arabian, but the Romans made him King of Judea in 40 B.C. He is generally thought to have died in 4 B.C. (there is some dispute about this). He was an unscrupulous tyrant, but his achievements were such that he merited the epithet “the Great.” He was a great builder and was responsible for the erection of the temple in Jerusalem, the rebuilding of Samaria (which he called Sebaste in honor of the emperor), and other significant works. And, in the words of Barclay, “He was the only ruler of Palestine who ever succeeded in keeping the peace and in bringing order into disorder.”

William Barclay: Bethlehem had a long history. It was there that Jacob had buried Rachel and had set up a pillar of memory beside her grave (Genesis 48:7, 35:20). It was there that Ruth had lived when she married Boaz (Ruth 1:22), and from Bethlehem Ruth could see the land of Moab, her native land, across the Jordan valley. But above all, Bethlehem was the home and the city of David (1 Samuel 16:1, 17:12, 20:6); and it was for the water of the well of Bethlehem that David longed when he was a hunted fugitive upon the hills (2 Samuel 23:14–15). . .

But Herod had one terrible flaw in his character. He was almost insanely suspicious. He had always been suspicious, and the older he became the more suspicious he grew, until, in his old age, he was, as someone said, ‘a murderous old man’. If he suspected anyone as a rival to his power, that person was promptly eliminated. He murdered his wife Mariamne and her mother Alexandra. His eldest son, Antipater, and two other sons, Alexander and Aristobulus, were all assassinated by him. Augustus, the Roman emperor, had said, bitterly, that it was safer to be Herod’s pig than Herod’s son. (The saying is even more epigrammatic in Greek, for in Greek hus is the word for a pig, and huios is the word for a son.) . . .

There was the reaction of Herod, the reaction of hatred and hostility. Herod was afraid that this little child was going to interfere with his life, his place, his power and his influence, and therefore his first instinct was to destroy him.

Craig Blomberg: From other historical materials we know that Herod died in 4 B.C. (The calendrical confusion was caused by the switch from a Roman to a Christian calendar in the sixth century A.D., based on the faulty calculations of Dionysius Exiguus, who did not have accurate information about the time of Herod's death.) Jesus' birth itself almost certainly did not occur on December 25. This date became attached to the celebration of Christmas later because it coincided with a Roman holiday known as Saturnalia, when Christians had time off work to worship. Perhaps Jesus was born in the spring when shepherds would have been watching their flocks by night because lambs might be born (Luke 2:8).

Arnold Fruchtenbaum: He was a very clever, ruthless ruler who was constantly on the watch for insurrection and intrigue. His life reads like the worst kind of soap opera of villainy and murder. He became so evil that he killed three or possibly four of his sons, and his favorite wife Miriamne. He had ten wives, and offspring who were constantly conspiring against each other. He was so paranoid that he built incredibly elaborate fortresses in a planned escape route in a line towards Egypt, which included Masada (which he fortified in the 30’s B.C.). He was an Idumean, a race forcibly converted to Judaism earlier in history, and while he practiced Judaism (not eating pork) he was not ethnically Jewish. This is one reason the Jewish people hated him.

B. (:1b) Hallelujah Entourage

“behold, magi from the east arrived in Jerusalem, saying,”

Leon Morris: many interpreters hold that these wise men came from Babylon, and they may have done so, but we cannot be sure. Their study of the stars had led them to believe that a great leader had been born in Judea. That being so, they naturally directed their steps to Jerusalem, the capital city. These men would have been Gentiles, but Matthew gives this no emphasis. Tradition says that there were three of them, but Matthew gives no number and it appears to be a deduction from the number of the gifts. Tradition also makes them kings, but this is highly unlikely.

Robert Gundry: The astrologers' arrival "in Jerusalem" introduces that city as the center of antagonism toward Jesus already at his birth (compare 23:36).

John Nolland: Matthew's Magi do not interpret dreams, but they do observe and interpret the stars (or at least one), and they are from the East. If Matthew has one eye on the role of Magi/astrologers in Moses' infancy haggadah (as seems likely), then this helps to bring the role of astrologer to the fore. It would be wrong to look here for any polemic against astrology or any claim that now the power of the astrologers/magicians is broken. The Magi are positive figures who receive guidance from God (in a manner tailored to their circumstances), not opponents to be vanquished. It is inappropriate to read off this account any evaluation of astrology, either positive or negative; the interest is elsewhere.

Charles Swindoll: The travelers from the east are identified not as kings, but as "magi." The Greek word magos refers to a "wise man and priest, who was expert in astrology, interpretation of dreams and various other occult arts." But we would be wrong to identify the magi as magicians or sorcerers. Rather, we should probably think of them as philosopher-sages or astrologers who engaged in the interpretation of dreams, sought signs in the heavens, and practiced other such forms of primitive science mixed with folklore. It is possible that they had also become familiar with Old Testament messianic prophecies through exposure to Jewish Scriptures like the books of Isaiah and Daniel, which would have been known among Jewish communities spread through Arabia, Persia, and Babylon (see the eastern regions represented in Acts 2:9-11).

These stargazers weren't kings, but they likely belonged to the upper echelons of society, perhaps serving in a royal court. How else could they have afforded such a long journey and brought such expensive gifts? And if they were well-to-do, they would also have been accompanied by at least a modest entourage that would have made their sudden arrival in Judea noticeable.

John MacArthur: The magi were well-versed in astronomy and astrology, agriculture, mathematics, and history. They were involved in various occult practices and were famous for their ability to interpret dreams (cf. Da. 2:1ff.). Such was their political power and influence that no Persian ruler came to power without their approval. . . . The magi from the east (the word literally means "from the rising" of the sun, and refers to the orient) who came to see Jesus were of a completely different sort. Not only were they true magi, but they surely had been strongly influenced by Judaism, quite possibly even by some of the prophetic writings, especially that of Daniel. They appear to be among the many God-fearing Gentiles who lived at the time of Christ, a number of whom—such as Cornelius and Lydia (Acts 10:1–2; Acts 16:14)—are mentioned in the New Testament.

J C Ryle: The cost of the magi to seek Jesus –

The conduct of the wise men described in this chapter is a splendid example of spiritual diligence. What trouble it must have cost them to travel from their homes to the house where Jesus was born! How many weary miles they must have journeyed! The fatigues of an Eastern traveller are far greater than we in England can at all understand. The time that such a journey would occupy must necessarily have been very great. The dangers to be encountered were neither few nor small. But none of these things moved them. They had set their hearts on seeing Him “that was born King of the Jews;” and they never rested till they saw Him. They prove to us the truth of the old saying, “Where there is a will there is a way.” It would be well for all professing Christians if they were more ready to follow the wise men’s example. Where is our self-denial? What pains do we take about our souls? What diligence do we show about following Christ? What does our religion cost us? These are serious questions. They deserve serious consideration.

C. (:2) Homage Inquiry

1. Looking for the Messiah

“Where is He who has been born King of the Jews?”

Grant Osborne: When the Magi called Jesus “King of the Jews,” it became a direct challenge to Herod, a sign to him that his rule may be nearing its end. A man who would murder wives and children because of a perceived threat would not hesitate to go after Jesus with a viciousness impossible to understand by sane people.

2. Longing to Worship Him

“For we saw His star in the east, and have come to worship Him.”

Richard Gardner: It was commonly believed in the ancient world that signs in the heavens accompanied the births of great figures, including rulers such as Alexander and Augustus. The magi in Matthew 2 claim to have seen just such a sign. Having observed the rising star of a newborn Jewish king, they make a pilgrimage to Judea to find him and pay him homage.

John Nolland: The identity of the ‘star’ has been extensively debated. The main options which have been canvassed may be divided between those which look for a natural astronomical explanation (the conjunction of planets, a comet, or a supernova) and those which look to a miraculous event (a new star in the heavens, a wandering ‘star’).

The conditions which the star must satisfy are the following. It must be the kind of star

- (a) for which Magi might be considered to be on the lookout;
- (b) which on some basis or other could be identified as the star of the messiah of the Jews;
- (c) which can blaze a trail for the Magi to follow from Jerusalem; and
- (d) which can finally come to rest over a particular dwelling.

While the first two conditions alone would point in the direction of astrological observation of the natural heavens, the third and fourth can point only to a miraculously provided heavenly light. We appear to be dealing with a new light in the heavens which on the basis of location and/or time of emergence pointed in astrological lore to some special ascendancy of the Jews, but which goes away from its location in the heavens to lead the Magi from Jerusalem to the location of Jesus in Bethlehem. The story itself provides no basis on which the Magi could have determined the identity of the star at its rising with the star which later went ahead to Bethlehem. The reader is left to depend on the superior knowledge (and the reliability) of the narrator.

Bob Deffinbaugh: Why is it so important to find a human explanation for a miracle, other than to avoid the fact that it was a miracle? Why is it, for example, that some commentators on the Book of Jonah (even some very good ones) find it profitable to produce examples of men who were swallowed by “great fish” and rescued alive? God may very well use natural means to accomplish His purposes, but He does not always do so. Sometimes God uses extraordinary measures, measures that have no counterpart in nature, so that the supernatural hand of God is undeniable. I am therefore inclined to the view that this “star” may have been a manifestation of the Shekinah Glory, which we sometimes find in the Old Testament.

II. (:3-8) ANTAGONISM AND OPPOSITION FROM KING HEROD AND THE JEWISH RELIGIOUS LEADERS

A. (:3) Reaction of Distress by King Herod and Jewish Religious Leaders

“And when Herod the king heard it, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him.”

Were the people in Jerusalem worried about:

- 1) Herod’s possible unhinged reaction with ensuing mayhem
- 2) Or false claims of messiahship with corresponding political repercussions ?

Richard Gardner: Given Herod’s fear of rivals, his reaction to those who seek a new king in his kingdom is not surprising. We learn, however, that Herod was not alone in his reaction, but that all Jerusalem was shaken up with him. Here Matthew echoes the Jewish Midrash on Moses which stated that the news of the impending birth of a Hebrew deliverer alarmed the Pharaoh and filled the Egyptians with dread (Josephus, Antiquities 2.205-206, 215). Now the roles are reversed, however: It is the Jewish people and their king who are upset by the birth of a Hebrew deliverer, while representatives of a foreign nation seek to honor him! The irony is profound.

Craig Blomberg: If Herod were a true devotee of the Judaism of Scripture, he should have rejoiced greatly, but he does not. Instead, he views the new child as a mortal threat. “Disturbed” is too weak a translation of his reaction; “in turmoil” or even “terrified” (cf. Weymouth, “greatly agitated”) would be more accurate. “All Jerusalem” probably refers primarily to the religious leaders of Israel who dominated the city, many of whom were also personally installed by Herod.

B. (:4-6) Reaction of Indifference (Eventually Leading to Antagonism) by the Jewish Religious Leaders

1. (:4) Sought Out for Their Biblical Knowledge

“And gathering together all the chief priests and scribes of the people, he began to inquire of them where the Christ was to be born.”

D. A. Carson: The vast majority of the scribes were Pharisees; the priests were Sadducees. The two groups barely got along, and therefore Schweizer judges this verse “historically almost inconceivable.” But Matthew does not say the two groups came together at the same time; Herod, unloved by either group, may well have called both to guard against being tricked. If the Pharisees and Sadducees barely spoke to one another, there was less likelihood of collusion.

John MacArthur: At the top of the totem pole is the high priest and the captain of the temple, then the chief priests of the aristocracy, then the ordinary priests, and then at the bottom the Levites who helped around the temple were the temple police. . .

The scribes were just folks from the other tribes, none in particular, who were scholars and authorities on the law. These people had spent their life studying the law. These were the Bible scholars, and by that I mean Old Testament obviously. . .

Now note, some of them joined the Pharisees party because they were literalists. They were fundamentalists. They were legalists. They believed in everything that it was said the way it was said. On the other hand, some of them joined the Sadducees because they were the liberals who wanted to throw away a lot of the Scripture. They denied a certain things in the Scripture, such as resurrection, such as angels.

So you had two theological parties, the fundamentalists and the liberals in that day, but both of them had their scribes and their scholars. And whether the scribes of the Pharisees, or the scribes of the Sadducees, they were forever and ever challenging Jesus weren't they? Coming and trying to trap Him in His words. So here you have the political wheels and the brains of Israel to begin with right here in Matthew 2 set at odds against Christ.

2. (:5a) Satisfied with Intellectual Knowledge

“And they said to him, ‘In Bethlehem of Judea,’”

John Nolland: Matthew stresses a leadership role in and responsibility for the people. While the role of the chief priests and scribes is quite neutral here, their inactivity in comparison to that of the Magi may imply criticism, and their later hostility to Jesus may be seen as that much more reprehensible in the light of the evident scriptural knowledge of this grouping and their participation in events which pointed to the significance of the birth of Jesus.

3. (:5b-6) Steeped in Prophecy but No Life Connection

“for so it has been written by the prophet, 6 'And you, Bethlehem, land of Judah, Are by no means least among the leaders of Judah; For out of you shall come forth a Ruler, Who will shepherd My people Israel.’”

Grant Osborne: Technically, this is not one of the ten “fulfillment passages” in Matthew, for it does not have the same opening formula as 1:22; 2:15; and others. But it is the same type of OT fulfillment as those.

Leon Morris: The passage is saying that Bethlehem's greatness consists only in that it is the birthplace of the great leader, and this is as plain in Micah as in Matthew.

D. A. Carson: It is tempting to think that Matthew sees a pair of contrasts

- (1) between the false shepherds of Israel who have provided sound answers but no leadership (cf. 23:2–7) and Jesus, who is the true Shepherd of his people Israel, and
- (2) between a ruler like Herod and the one born to rule.

The words “my people Israel” are included, not simply because they are found in 2 Samuel 5:2, but because Matthew, like Paul, faithfully records both the essential Jewish focus of the OT promises and the OT expectation of broader application to the Gentiles. Jesus is not only the promised Davidic king but also the promised hope of blessing to all the nations, the one who will claim their obeisance (cf. Ps 68:28–35; Isa 18:1–3, 7; 45:14; 60:6; Zep 3:10). That same duality makes the desires of the Gentile Magi to worship the Messiah stand out against the apathy of the leaders, who did not, apparently, take the trouble to go to Bethlehem. Of course, the Jewish leaders may have seen the arrival of the Magi in Jerusalem as one more false alarm. As far as we can tell, the Sadducees (and therefore the chief priests) had no interest in the question of when the Messiah would come; the Pharisees (and therefore most teachers of the law) expected him to come only somewhat later.

C. (:7-8) Reaction of Hatred, Hostility and Deceit by King Herod

1. (:7) Dastardly Intelligence Gathering

“Then Herod secretly called the magi, and ascertained from them the time the star appeared.”

2. (:8) Deceitful Investigative Campaign

a. Commissioning the Magi to Locate the Child

“And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, ‘Go and make careful search for the Child;’”

b. Concealing Agenda of Hatred and Hostility

“and when you have found Him, report to me, that I too may come and worship Him.”

III. (:9-12) ADORATION AND WORSHIP OF THE MAGI

A. (:9) Wayfare (Journey) of the Magi

1. Directed Route

“And having heard the king, they went their way;”

2. Divine Guidance

“and lo, the star, which they had seen in the east, went on before them, until it came and stood over where the Child was.”

Grant Osborne: We must remember that it is not a long way from Jerusalem to Bethlehem—only six miles. So it was a journey of a couple hours. For dramatic “look” (ἰδοῦ), see 1:20, 23. Still, the “star” led the way, and this language fits none of the celestial phenomena suggested in 2:2b. It must have been a supernatural manifestation, for it not only “went before” them but also stopped and “stood” above the home in which Jesus was staying. The language is reminiscent of the pillar of fire and the cloud in the wilderness that “went ahead of” Israel to guide them along the way (Exod 13:21; 40:38). God is still in control.

B. (:10-11) Worship of the Magi

1. (:10) Joy of Worship

“And when they saw the star, they rejoiced exceedingly with great joy.”

Craig Blomberg: Thus one born in obscurity is recognized by unlikely devotees as the future King of Israel. The child whose birth is shrouded in suspicions of illegitimacy (chap. 1) is in fact God's legitimate appointee. On the other hand, the legal rulers, both political and religious, by their clinging to positions of power and prestige, prove themselves to be illegitimate in God's eyes.

2. (:11a) Expression of Worship

and they fell down and worshiped Him;”

Charles Swindoll: By this time, Jesus would have been a little over a year old —no longer a swaddled baby lying in a manger. Herod deduced that the child would have been under the age of two “according to the time which he had determined from the magi” (2:16). By this time, then, Mary, Joseph, and Jesus would have settled in a more permanent home in Bethlehem, possibly a home belonging to relatives —descendants of the line of David. After all, Bethlehem had been the family’s ancient hometown.

3. (:11b) Offerings of Worship

Leon Morris: Clearly all three were valuable, and together they formed a munificent gift, suitable for offering to a king. Christians have often seen symbolical meanings in them, gold for royalty, frankincense for deity, and myrrh pointing to suffering and death, but Matthew says nothing about this.

Robert Gundry: Elsewhere in Matthew “gift(s)” is used exclusively and often for offerings to God (5:23–24; 8:4; 15:5; 23:18–19), and the verb “offered” has to do with such offerings in 8:4 and throughout the Old Testament. So the astrologers’ offering of these expensive gifts adds further emphasis on Jesus’ deity and kingship; and the astrologers stand as prototypes of his disciples, who give up earthly treasures for heavenly treasures (6:19–21; 19:21). Like the Gentile kings in Psalms 72:10–11, 15, the astrologers bring gifts of gold to a superior king in Israel. Like the Gentile kings in Isaiah 60:2–3, 6, they bring gold and frankincense. And as Solomon the immediate son of David is perfumed with myrrh and frankincense in the Song of Solomon 3:6; 4:6, Jesus the later son of David is given frankincense and myrrh. These offerings confirm that in 2:2 we should understand “birthed [as] king of the Jews” rather than “birthed [to be] king of the Jews.”

E. Michael Green: “Gold” was valued throughout the ancient world as a medium of exchange as well as a precious metal for making jewelry, ornaments, and dining instruments for royalty. “Incense” or frankincense is derived from an amber resin, which produced a sweet odor when burned. It was used as a perfume (Song 3:6; 4:6, 14), but in Israel it was used ceremonially for the only incense permitted on the altar (Ex. 30:9, 34–38). “Myrrh” consists of a mixture of resin, gum, and the oil myrrhol and was used in incense (Ex. 30:23), as a perfume for garments or for a lover’s couch, as a stimulant (cf. Mark 15:23), and to pack in the wrappings of the clothing of a deceased person to stifle the smell of the body decaying (cf. John 19:39).

C. (:12) Wisdom of the Magi

“And having been warned by God in a dream not to return to Herod, they departed for their own country by another way.”

E. Michael Green: The Magi may have gone south around the lower extremity of the Dead Sea to link up with the trade route north through Nabatea and Philadelphia in the Decapolis east of the Jordan River to Damascus and then east. Or they may have traveled south to Hebron and then west to the Mediterranean coast to link up with the trade route traveling north on the coastal plain, then through Sepphoris and Capernaum to Damascus and then east.

Grant Osborne: Matthew uses χρηματίζω for “warn,” a term often chosen for divine revelation. The emphasis is on the supernatural nature of the warning; God continues to control the action. A major thrust of the first gospel is that when people try to thwart the divine will, God intervenes supernaturally to overcome all such hostile actions (cf. Job 42:2). The fact that this time no angel appears in the dream (cf. 1:20; 2:19) stresses even more the hand of God in the warning. So the Magi take another route home, and Herod’s evil plan is thwarted.

John Nolland: Matthew has no further interest in the Magi once they have pointed to the significance of Jesus. The Magi are not the first Gentile followers of Jesus: Jesus has not yet begun his ministry and, specifically, he has not yet directed that discipleship is to be extended to all peoples. Nonetheless, with the hindsight that comes from looking back from the end of Matthew’s story it is probably right to find some foreshadowing, especially in the scale of the Magi’s joy and in the use of the verb ‘do obeisance’; also, the Magi coming to Jerusalem may pick up on the OT motif of the coming of the Gentiles.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Are we actively seeking God and following God’s leading in our life?
- 2) What are the implications of somebody so important coming from such a humble birth city?
- 3) What type of valuable offerings do we bring to the King?
- 4) How should elders combine the functions of authoritative oversight and compassionate shepherding?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

R. T. France: The first point Matthew needs to establish in his “geographical apologetic” for the origins of the Messiah is that Jesus “of Nazareth” was in fact born where the Messiah must be born, in the Davidic town of Bethlehem. Central to this first infancy story therefore is the combined quotation of Mic 5:2 and 2 Sam 5:2 which identifies the Messiah’s birthplace specifically as Bethlehem in Judah, and the surrounding narrative explains how this was in fact the birthplace of Jesus, even though subsequent events (equally attested to both by scriptural quotation and by divine guidance in dreams) were to dictate his relocation to Nazareth in Galilee.

Charles Swindoll: The real center of attention in this passage —whether indifference, hostility, or worship —was the young Messiah. Let’s briefly consider each of the responses to Jesus in this passage. I think we’ll find that they’re similar to the responses people have to Jesus today.

First, we find indifference. When Herod called together the high priests and scribes, those religious teachers and Bible scholars knew without hesitation the facts surrounding the coming of the Messiah. They could have won first place in a Bible trivia contest. Perhaps they patted themselves on the back for being able to answer the king's scriptural question with such ease. But assuming they found out the reason why Herod was asking, these religious leaders didn't seem interested in checking it out for themselves. They had the book knowledge, but they had no passion. The truth of Scripture hadn't moved from their heads to their hearts, and it had certainly not made it to their hands and feet.

Second, we find hostility. Herod, though veiling his true motives in false piety and curiosity, sought to destroy the child before He became a threat to his rule. People today similarly find the claims of Christ's lordship threatening. Nobody's threatened by a tiny baby in a manger or a moral teacher or a Cynic sage or a religious philosopher. Such descriptions refer to a mere man who can be either respected or ignored. But the God-man, the King with authority over heaven and earth who deserves full obedience and submission? Unbelievers who have everything to lose in the realm of personal power will fight such a Messiah with venom and vehemence. Just like Herod the Great.

Finally, we find worship. Wise women and men today have chosen to follow the guiding light of the Spirit of God and fall down to worship and adore Jesus Christ as God and King. Like the magi of old, they acknowledge Him as worthy of worship, honor, trust, obedience, and total allegiance. And they won't betray their true King for short-term gains found in the favor of a temporal king.

Each of us today must choose how we'll respond to the Messiah —like the wise or the wicked?

William Barclay: From very early times, the gifts the wise men brought have been seen as particularly fitting. Each gift has been seen as representing something which specially matched some characteristic of Jesus and his work.

(1) Gold is the gift of a king. Seneca, the Roman philosopher, tells us that in Parthia it was the custom that no one could ever approach the king without a gift. And gold, the king of metals, is the fit gift for a king.

So, Jesus was 'the Man born to be King'. But he was to reign not by force but by love; and he was to rule over human hearts, not from a throne, but from a cross.

We do well to remember that Jesus Christ is King. We can never meet Jesus on equal terms. We must always meet him on terms of complete submission. Nelson, the great British admiral, always treated his vanquished opponents with the greatest kindness and courtesy. After one of his naval victories, the defeated admiral was brought aboard Nelson's flagship and on to Nelson's quarterdeck. Knowing Nelson's reputation for courtesy, and thinking to trade upon it, he advanced across the quarterdeck with hand outstretched as if he was advancing to shake hands with an equal. Nelson's hand remained by his side. 'Your sword first,' he said, 'and then your hand.' Before we can be friends with Christ, we must submit to Christ.

(2) Frankincense is the gift for a priest. It was in the Temple worship and at the Temple sacrifices that the sweet perfume of frankincense was used. The function of a priest is to open the way to God for men and women. The Latin word for priest is pontifex, which means a bridge-builder. The priest is the one who builds a bridge between human beings and God.

That is what Jesus did. He opened the way to God; he made it possible for us to enter into the very presence of God.

(3) Myrrh is the gift for one who is to die. Myrrh was used to embalm the bodies of the dead. Jesus came into the world to die. Holman Hunt painted a famous picture of Jesus. It shows Jesus at the door of the carpenter's shop in Nazareth. He is still only a boy and has come to the door to stretch his limbs, which have grown cramped over the bench. He stands there in the doorway with arms outstretched, and behind him, on the wall, the setting sun throws his shadow, and it is the shadow of a cross. In the background there stands Mary, and as she sees that shadow there is the fear of coming tragedy in her eyes.

Jesus came into the world to live for men and women, and, in the end, to die for them. He came to give for us his life and his death.

Gold for a king, frankincense for a priest, myrrh for one who was to die – these were the gifts of the wise men, and, even at the cradle of Christ, they foretold that he was to be the true king, the perfect high priest, and in the end the supreme Saviour of the world.

Bob Deffinbaugh: Matthew omits much historical information that we would love to have known. Contrary to popular opinion, we don't know how many Magi came to worship the Lord Jesus. We would certainly like to have been given more information about the Magi. Precisely where did they come from? What did they believe? What was the "star" that appeared, and just how did it guide them? How long was the journey, and what became of them later on? We would like to know how many babies Herod slaughtered, and we would very much enjoy reading a more graphic account of his death. How interesting it would be to read more of the time Jesus and His parents spent in Egypt! Matthew, like the other Gospel writers, was very selective in what he chose to include in his Gospel.

David Thompson: (2:1-23) -- The book of Matthew is designed to prove that Jesus Christ is Israel's King, Messiah and Savior. Matthew chapter one shows us that Jesus Christ, as a baby, deserved to be worshipped as King. Matthew chapter two shows us that Jesus Christ, as a child, received worship as King.

The events described in this chapter are not found in any other Gospel. All of these events are predicted in the O.T. and in this one chapter, in capsule form, is the entire Gospel. What we find in Matthew two are Gentiles seeking Christ, Jews ignoring Christ and political power opposing Christ. The main point of these verses is this:

JESUS CHRIST WAS RECOGNIZED TO BE THE PREDICTED KING OF THE JEWS EVEN AS A BABY AND IT WAS GENTILES WHO FIRST ACCEPTED HIM AND WORSHIPED HIM, NOT JEWS.

The Magi had not seen the star in quite some time but as soon as they headed toward Bethlehem, the star reappeared and directed them to the exact house where Jesus lived. When they arrived they found Jesus and Mary (2:11) and they fell down and worshipped Him and gave Him gold, frankincense and myrrh.

Van Parunak: The "wise men" are μάγοι, sometimes translated "Magi." This term appears in the LXX only in Daniel, where AV has "astrologers," and they are probably connected to the Zoroastrian religion, which was fascinated with the stars. Daniel was made their head, 5:11.

From their own religious background, they would have been interested in any astronomical phenomenon. In addition, from their history with Daniel, they would have known

- his prophecy of ch. 9, setting the approximate date
- perhaps through him, of Balaam's prophecy

Num 24:17 I shall see him, but not now: I shall behold him, but not nigh: there shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel, and shall smite the corners of Moab, and destroy all the children of Sheth.

So when they see an unusual heavenly event, they make their way to the capital of Israel to inquire.

These wise men are an example to us in two ways.

First, they are a fruit of Daniel's faithful testimony among his colleagues. He was known to his neighbors as a worshiper of the true God. He may never have seen any "converts" during his lifetime, but five centuries later, because of his faithful testimony, these men come to seek Christ.

Second, they are an example of eagerly anticipating the Lord's coming. Throughout the NT, we are exhorted to look forward eagerly to the Lord's appearing, and to prepare ourselves for it:

2Ti 4:8 Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.

1Th 1:10 And to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come.

Tit 2:13 Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ;

Heb 9:28 So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation.

Rev 22:20 He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

Application: Like the wise men, we should be eager for his return

The Herodian Dynasty:

John Piper: There are at least five truths that Matthew wants us to see in this story about Christ and worship:

1. Jesus is the Messiah, the King of the Jews, and should be honored as such.
2. Jesus is to be worshiped not just by Jews, but by all the nations of the world, as represented by the wise men from the east.
3. God wields the universe to make his Son known and worshiped. This is his great goal in all things—that his Son be known and worshiped.
4. Jesus is troubling to people who do not want to worship him and brings out opposition for those who do.
5. Worshiping Jesus means joyfully ascribing authority and dignity to Christ with sacrificial gifts.

TEXT: Matthew 2:13-23

TITLE: DIVINE PROTECTION OF THE MESSIAH AGAINST THE TREACHERY OF HEROD

BIG IDEA:

DIVINE PROTECTION IN RELOCATING THE MESSIAH FULFILLS OT PROPHECY

INTRODUCTION:

Analogy of a chess strategist. God moves people around on the chessboard of life like pawns accomplishing his long-term strategy and His short-term tactics. Uses His messenger angel to command the movements of Joseph and Mary and the infant child.

D. A. Carson: The point is that God took sovereign action to preserve his Messiah, his Son—something well understood by Jesus himself, and a major theme in the gospel of John. Egypt was a natural place to which to flee. It was nearby, a well-ordered Roman province outside Herod's jurisdiction, and, according to Philo (writing ca. AD 40), its population included about a million Jews. Earlier generations of Israelites fleeing their homeland (1Ki 11:40; Jer 26:21–23; 43:7) had sought refuge in Egypt. But if Matthew was thinking of any particular OT parallel, probably Jacob and his family (Ge 46) fleeing the famine in Canaan was in his mind, since that is the trip that set the stage for the exodus (cf. v.15).

Grant Osborne: This episode concludes the infancy narratives on a note of treachery and the attempts of God's enemies to defeat his will. It also contains features from 2:1–12, such as the evil attempt of Herod to eliminate his rival and the divine intervention of God, who sends two more dream-revelations to Joseph, telling him when to leave and when to return. At the same time, this is all material unique to Matthew.

There are two major, intertwined themes: the divine sovereignty in salvation history and the continual frustration of the forces of evil as they attempt to disrupt God's will. These are both primary themes in Matthew's gospel as a whole.

Donald Hagner: This pericope is unique to Matthew and is probably drawn from his special source. Two structural features of the pericope are striking.

- First, the passage divides readily into three separate frames, each ending with an OT quotation:
 - (1) vv 13–15, the dream warning and flight to Egypt (Hos 11:1);
 - (2) vv 16–18, the slaughter of the innocents (Jer 31:15);
 - (3) vv 19–23, the return to Israel and settlement in Nazareth (Isa 11:1?).

- Second, there is a remarkable parallelism in the opening of the first and third frames. Apart from the genitive absolutes that begin both frames, we have nearly verbatim agreement in
 - (1) the account of the revelation;
 - (2) the initial imperatives of the angel; and
 - (3) the obedient response of Joseph (which, in each instance, mirrors the angelic commands of the same frame).

John Nolland: The remainder of the chapter, bringing Matthew's Infancy Narrative to its conclusion, offers a sequence of scenes which are united by their concern with the threat represented by Herod's hostility in the face of news of the birth of a messianic claimant to the throne. The threat substantially subsides by the end of the chapter, but there remains some residual sense that Judea represents a place of danger for Jesus.

S. Lewis Johnson: so the impression is given by these claims that Scriptures are fulfilled in each aspect of the narrative, and by special attention being directed to the angel of the Lord, that what we have here is an account that is constructed with great care and with a definite purpose. He is the Messiah, and prophecy speaks of him.

That does seem to be the aim of the evangelist as he unfolds the accounts of the birth and early life of our Lord Jesus Christ. But there is also another level of truth here that I want to stress this morning as we look at the section that is before us. And that other level of truth is the Providence of God in prophecy and in history. If there is one thing that Matthew seems to be saying to us, it is on this level that God is no omniscient spectator, but he is the supreme mover at all of the events of redemption. And even in the incidental events of the Messiah, one can see that Scripture itself is fulfilled. . .

One of our most prominent, contemporary systematic theologians has said that Providence may be defined as that continuous exercise of the divine energy, whereby the Creator preserves all his creatures, is operative in all that comes to pass in the world, and directs all things to their appointed end.

Now that definition indicates that there are three things that are prominent in God's Providence. First of all, there is the element of preservation. He preserves all things and all his creatures. And second, concurrence or cooperation; he works or is operative in everything that comes to pass in the world. He is not surprised by anything, not surprised by any of the events that take place, and not surprised by any of the thoughts of your heart. And finally, government; he directs all things to their appointed end. . .

John Wesley used to like to say, "I read the newspaper to see how God is governing the world." And I think it would do us good to read it in the same spirit, for we are not reading things that are surprising to God. He does not take the Dallas Morning News and, at his breakfast table, after reading the headlines decide that certain activities are appropriate for this particular time. But he is well aware of everything that is taking place, and is actually moving it all to one great common goal when all things are gathered together in our Lord Jesus Christ.

I. (:13-15) CALLED OUT OF EGYPT (Hos. 11:1) – SURPRISING BUT PROPHECIED

A. (:13) Urgent Warning

"Now when they had departed, behold, an angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream, saying, 'Arise and take the Child and His mother, and flee to Egypt, and remain there until I tell you; for Herod is going to search for the Child to destroy Him.'"

D. A. Carson: The focus on God's protection of "the child" is unmistakable. Herod was going to try to kill him (v.13), and Joseph took "the child and his mother" (v.14—not the normal order) to Egypt.

Grant Osborne: Herod's evil intentions are a controlling factor in this chapter, and he is the archetypal anti-hero. Jesus brings life and freedom, he death and bondage. Jesus gives of himself completely; Herod lives for himself completely. Several have noted here a Moses typology, with the divine protection of the baby as Pharaoh/Herod slaughter the children; the LXX uses the verb "flee" (ἀναχωρέω, as used in Matt 2:14) for the first time when Moses flees Pharaoh in Egypt and becomes a refugee in Midian.

Craig Blomberg: Egypt afforded a natural haven for first-century Jews. A large Jewish community had lived there for several centuries, and even from Old Testament times Egypt had often provided a refuge when danger threatened Israel (e.g., 1 Kgs 11:40; 2 Kgs 25:26; Zech 10:10).

B. (:14) Immediate Evacuation

"And he arose and took the Child and His mother by night, and departed for Egypt;"

Charles Swindoll: As the adage goes, "Where the Lord guides, He provides!" So, gathering their limited belongings and packing the treasures securely, Joseph obeyed the angel's instruction instantly. Matthew indicates in 2:14 that they left "while it was still night." Joseph didn't call a family meeting to weigh the angel's words, didn't begin a week of planning and packing, and didn't go ahead to find suitable lodging in Egypt for his family. He fled immediately because the angel had warned him that Herod would soon be searching for the child to destroy Him (2:13). Because of the dangerous prospect of a pursuit, Joseph and his family no doubt left Bethlehem in a manner similar to the magi—quietly and secretly, without a word to anyone. They left without a trace.

R. E. Nixon: There is irony in the fact that Egypt, the place of bondage (Ex. 20:2), is now the place of safety.

C. (:15) Enduring Obedience in Fulfilment of OT Prophecy

"and was there until the death of Herod, that what was spoken by the Lord through the prophet might be fulfilled, saying, 'Out of Egypt did I call My Son.'"

D. A. Carson: The "son" language is part of this messianic matrix (cf. Willis J. Beecher, The Prophets and the Promise [New York: Crowell, 1905], 331–35); insofar as that matrix points to Jesus the Messiah and insofar as Israel's history looks forward to one who sums it up, then so far also does Hosea 11:1 look forward. To ask whether Hosea thought of Messiah is to ask the wrong question, akin to using a hacksaw when a scalpel is needed. It is better to say that Hosea, building on existing revelation, grasped the messianic nuances of the "son" language already applied to Israel and David's promised heir in previous revelation so that had he been able to see Matthew's use of 11:1, he would not have disapproved, even if messianic nuances were not in his mind when he wrote that verse. He provided one small part of the revelation unfolded during salvation history; but that part he himself understood to be a pictorial representative of divine, redeeming love.

Leon Morris: This is the first time that Matthew speaks of Jesus as "Son" with reference to God. That Jesus is the Son of God is a very important concept for Matthew, and it is interesting that it makes its appearance so early.

Charles Swindoll: In light of the various ways plēroō can be used, what does Matthew mean when he says an event or circumstance in the life of Christ “fulfilled” an Old Testament Scripture? In a broad sense, the “thing that is lacking” in the Old Testament text that is “fulfilled” by the New Testament event is first and foremost a more complete revelation in Jesus Christ. A type of Christ may lack its antitype in the life of Christ; an illustration may lack its referent; a prophecy may lack its accomplishment; a promise may lack its fulfillment; a series of events may lack its ultimate climax. The New Testament authors saw in the person and work of Jesus Christ the ultimate revelation of God (see, e.g., Luke 24:27; John 5:39; Heb. 1:1-2). In other words, the body of revelation contained in the Old Testament Scriptures was lacking the further revelation that comes through Christ, similar to the way a question may have an incomplete answer.

This kind of notion of the Old Testament —through its use of pattern, type, illustration, or anticipation —being “fulfilled” in the New Testament would have been familiar to Matthew’s Jewish readers. This approach invites readers to mull over passages of Scripture, thinking more carefully about what Matthew is doing in each individual “fulfillment” passage.

Craig Blomberg: As before, the fulfillment quotation does not contradict the events of history, but neither does it fit them so closely as to substantiate charges that the narrative was created out of the quotation. The historical events described focus on the flight of Jesus and family; the quotation described their return. In its original context the Old Testament text cited (Hos 11:1) is not predictive prophecy but a recollection of God’s love for his people Israel at the time of the exodus. Attempts to find a messianic title in Hosea’s use of “son” seem contrived and unconvincing. Most simply attribute Matthew’s hermeneutic to some form of Jewish exegesis (e.g., midrash or pesher) which many today would recognize as illegitimate.

Better than either of these approaches is that which recognizes the exegesis as typological (and even more specifically that of analogical correspondence). Matthew sees striking parallels in the patterns of God’s activities in history in ways he cannot attribute to coincidence. Just as God brought the nation of Israel out of Egypt to inaugurate his original covenant with them, so again God is bringing the Messiah, who fulfills the hopes of Israel, out of Egypt as he is about to inaugurate his new covenant. This is the first of several instances in Matthew in which Jesus recapitulates the role of Israel as a whole. The language of Jesus’ son-ship foreshadows Jesus’ role as Son of God (or Immanuel) and recalls Old Testament texts that link Messiah with “the Son” (e.g., Pss 2:7; 89:26-27; 2 Sam 7:14; cf. Num 24:7-8, LXX, in which God himself brings the Messiah out of Egypt).

S. Lewis Johnson: Augustine wrote, many years ago, that in the Old Testament the New Testament lies concealed. And that in the New, the Old lies revealed. And so what we have here in this New Testament is a revelation of the fullness of meaning that existed in the Old Testament. And the essential thing that we must remember when we think about the types of the word of God is the word, correspondence – the events, the persons, the institutions of the Old Testament, by divine intention, by the exercise of his divine providence – are intended to correspond to the events of the New Testament revelations.

In other words, we find in the Old Testament events that are designed to correspond to the events of the redemptive work of the Lord Jesus. For example, the Passover account and the Passover service; that particular institution is designed to correspond to certain aspects of the ministry of the Lord Jesus, for he is the true lamb of God. It’s not surprising, then, that the Apostle Paul should write about Jesus Christ our Passover who has been sacrificed for us. So the Apostle saw in the rite of the Passover, in the Old Testament, a clear adumbration of the Lord Jesus himself. So the term that is important for us is, correspondence – the events, the institutions, the Tabernacle, the services (such as the services of the Levitical cultus), and individuals such as Joseph and Moses and others who look forward to Christ – correspond to things that are found in the New Testament.

Well in what way do we have a correspondence between Israel and the Lord Jesus? Well, Israel is called in the Old Testament, “God’s son.” In fact, Israel is called his first born. And furthermore, Israel is called the servant of the Lord. Now if there is one person who is God’s unique Son, and who is the servant of the Lord, it is the Lord Jesus. And so what we have, then, is a recapitulating in our Lord Jesus’ experiences of the experience of Israel which pointed forward to him.

So that when they went down to Egypt and were called out of Egypt, their experiences corresponded to that which would happen in the Messianic experiences of the Lord Jesus. He is the seed, he is the representative Israelite through whom God does everything for them.

(:16-18) ASIDE: WAILING OVER HEROD’S MASSACRE OF INFANTS AROUND BETHLEHEM (Jer. 31:15) – SURPRISING BUT PROPHECIED

A. (:16) Slaughter of Male Infants

“Then when Herod saw that he had been tricked by the magi, he became very enraged, and sent and slew all the male children who were in Bethlehem and in all its environs, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had ascertained from the magi.”

Bruce Hurt: Enraged (thumuoo) is used only here but we get a vivid picture of the meaning from the root word thumos which in turn is from thúo which means to move impetuously, particularly as the air or wind, a violent motion or passion of the mind; move violently, rush along. And so thumos describes passion (as if breathing hard) and speaks of an agitated, "heated" anger that rushes along (impulse toward a thing). It is a tumultuous welling up of the whole spirit produced by a mighty emotion which seizes and moves the whole inner person. Thumos especially when accompanied by breathing hard pictures a "panting rage". We can picture Herod exploding with a sudden outburst of passion. When someone is in this anger you can often see their nasal passages widening to take in more air in the heat of their passion!

R. T. France: Estimates of the total population of Bethlehem in the first century are generally under 1,000, which would mean that the number of male children up to two years old at any one time could hardly be more than 20, even allowing for “all its district.”

William Barclay: Here is a terrible illustration of what some people will do to get rid of Jesus Christ. If they are set on their own course, if they see in Christ someone who is liable to interfere with their ambitions and rebuke their ways, their one desire is to eliminate Christ; and then they are driven to the most terrible things, for if they do not break others physically, they will break their hearts.

Warren Wiersbe: Matthew introduced here the theme of hostility, which he focused on throughout his book. Satan is a liar and a murderer (John 8:44), as was King Herod. He lied to the magi and he murdered the babies. But even this horrendous crime of murder was the fulfillment of prophecy found in Jeremiah 31:15.

John Butler: Abortion makes Herod's act look like a Sunday School picnic. We kill millions and millions of babies every year and the news media yawns and turns the other way. What we need to learn is that there is a relationship between our lack of affection for Christ and our abortion acts. In fact much evil in our land goes back to our bad attitude for Jesus Christ. The politicians do not understand this for they are part of the problem and they pass laws to allow evil which they cannot control. Those who defend abortion are not friends of Christ. They have more in common with Herod than with Christ.

Louis A. Barbieri Jr.: This slaughter of the male children is mentioned only here in the biblical record. Even the Jewish historian Josephus (A.D. 37-?100) did not mention this dastardly deed of putting to death innocent babies and young children. But it is not surprising that he and other secular historians overlooked the death of a few Hebrew children in an insignificant village, for Herod's infamous crimes were many.

B. (:17-18) Weeping and Great Mourning

“Then that which was spoken through Jeremiah the prophet was fulfilled, saying, 18 ‘A voice was heard in Ramah, Weeping and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children; And she refused to be comforted, Because they were no more.’”

Craig Blomberg: Ramah originally was located approximately five miles north of Jerusalem and would have been one of the first cities the exiles passed by as they headed north on their way out of Israel. First Samuel 10:2-3 associates Rachel's tomb with the same general area on the border of Judah and Benjamin.

D. A. Carson: The exile sent Israel into captivity and thereby called forth tears. But here the tears are not for him who goes into “exile” but because of the children who stay behind and are slaughtered. Why, then, refer to the exile at all? Help comes from observing the broader context of both Jeremiah and Matthew. Jeremiah 31:9, 20 refer to Israel = Ephraim as God's dear son and also introduce the new covenant (31:31-34) the Lord will make with his people. Therefore the tears associated with exile (31:15) will end. Matthew has already made the exile a turning point in his thought (1:11-12), for at that time the Davidic line was dethroned. The tears of the exile are now being “fulfilled”—i.e., the tears begun in Jeremiah's day are climaxed and ended by the tears of the mothers of Bethlehem. The heir to David's throne has come, the exile is over, the true Son of God has arrived—and he will introduce the new covenant (26:28) promised by Jeremiah.

Leon Morris: Matthew relates Rachel's grief to the situation in Bethlehem after Herod's men were through. Neither the prophet nor Matthew says whose voice was heard: the emphasis is on the mourning, not the mourners, and the language stresses the depths of the grief. It is this sort of bitter grief that Matthew sees in Bethlehem. Her children in a passage like this means “descendants,” and Rachel's grief is such that she will not be comforted. The reason? Because they are no more. Nothing can alter the fact of the exile and nothing can alter the fact of the killings at Bethlehem. Thus the grief remains. Yet we should add that Jeremiah's prophecy goes on to the note of hope (Jer. 31:17) and to the making of a new covenant (Jer. 31:31-34); further, the Israelites did in time return from their exile. All this points to the fact that the child Jesus would in due course come back from his exile in Egypt.

II. (:19-23) CALLED A NAZARENE – OUT OF GALILEE (Is. 11:1; Ps. 22:6-8; Is. 49:7; 53:3) – SURPRISING BUT PROPHECIED

A. (:19-20) Revelation that the Coast is Clear

“But when Herod was dead, behold, an angel of the Lord appeared in a dream to Joseph in Egypt, saying, 20 ‘Arise and take the Child and His mother, and go into the land of Israel; for those who sought the Child’s life are dead.’”

Grant Osborne: Again there is a parallel with Moses, as the language echoes Exod 4:19, where the Lord tells Moses in Midian, “Go back to Egypt, for all those who wanted to kill you are dead.” At nearly every point of the plot in chs. 1–2, this Moses typology is evident. Matthew bathes every aspect in typology and the fulfillment of Scripture. The point is the sovereign hand of God behind every detail of Jesus’ birth and childhood.

B. (:21) Return to Israel

“And he arose and took the Child and His mother, and came into the land of Israel.”

C. (:22-23) Relocation to Nazareth

1. (:22a) Danger in Judea

“But when he heard that Archelaus was reigning over Judea in place of his father Herod, he was afraid to go there.”

Michael Wilkins: After remaking his will at least seven times, Herod finally settled on dividing the kingdom between three of his remaining sons, Archelaus, Herod Antipas (14:1ff.), and Herod Philip (16:13). Archelaus, a nineteen-year-old son by Malthace, was appointed successor to Herod’s throne with power over Judea (including Samaria and Idumaea). Archelaus quickly displayed the same kind of cruelty that marked his father’s reign. He overreacted to an uprising in the temple at Passover after his father’s death, sending in troops and a cavalry who killed about three thousand pilgrims. He was notorious for his cruel treatment of both Jews and Samaritans, continually using oppressive measures to quell uprisings of the people. Augustus feared a revolution from the people, so he deposed Archelaus from office and banished him to Gaul in A.D. 6. The rule over Judea was thereafter passed to Roman prefects.

2. (:22b-23a) Departure for Nazareth in Galilee

“And being warned by God in a dream, he departed for the regions of Galilee, 23 and came and resided in a city called Nazareth,”

Michael Wilkins: Joseph led the family to the region of Galilee, which was not under the jurisdiction of Archelaus. Galilee was governed by another of Herod the Great’s sons, Herod Antipas, who did not yet have the same bloodthirsty reputation as did his older brother.

Craig Blomberg: Many commentators find a contradiction in these verses with Luke because Matthew seems to know nothing of Mary’s and Joseph’s original residence in Nazareth. But Matthew narrates only that which is relevant to his fulfillment quotations. He certainly says nothing that would exclude a previous residence in Galilee. Probably Mary and Joseph had intended to resettle in Bethlehem in their ancestral homeland and now have to change their plans and go north once again.

R. T. France: The “new Moses” can now return to the place in which his work of deliverance will be launched. But that place is not Bethlehem. Judea has become an unsafe place for the new Moses, even after the death of the “Pharaoh” whose murderous jealousy initially caused his exile. As the story unfolds we shall be reminded repeatedly that the Jerusalem which shared Herod’s alarm in v. 3 will remain hostile territory for the new king of the Jews, and Bethlehem is too close to Jerusalem for comfort. Political wisdom thus dictates Joseph’s relocation to the now independent state of Galilee to the north, but his move is directed not simply by prudence but also by divine guidance (another dream, v. 22), which will ensure that the Davidic Messiah born in Bethlehem will start his public career not as a Judean but as “Jesus of (Galilean) Nazareth.”

Grant Osborne: Nazareth was a fairly small village of fifty to sixty acres with about 480 population and thus not significant in and of itself.

William Barclay: Nazareth lay in a hollow in the hills in the south of Galilee. But a young boy had only to climb the hills for half the world to be at his door. He could look west and the waters of the Mediterranean, blue in the distance, would meet his eyes; and he would see the ships going out to the ends of the earth. He had only to look at the plain which skirted the coast, and he would see, slipping round the foot of the very hill on which he stood, the road from Damascus to Egypt, the land bridge to Africa. It was one of the greatest caravan routes in the world.

It was the road by which, centuries before, Joseph had been sold down into Egypt as a slave. It was the road that, 300 years before, Alexander the Great and his legions had followed. It was the road by which, centuries later, Napoleon was to march. It was the road which, in the twentieth century, General Sir Edmund Allenby was to take. Sometimes it was called the Way of the South, and sometimes the Road of the Sea. On it, Jesus would see all kinds of travellers from all kinds of nations on all kinds of errands, coming and going from the ends of the earth.

But there was another road. There was the road which left the sea coast at Acre or Ptolemais and went out to the east. It was the Road of the East. It went out to the eastern bounds and frontiers of the Roman Empire. Once again, the cavalcade of the caravans and their silks and spices would be continually on it; and on it also the Roman legions clanked out to the frontiers.

Nazareth indeed was no backwater. Jesus was brought up in a town where the ends of the earth passed the foot of the hilltop. From his boyhood days, he was confronted with scenes which must have spoken to him of a world for God.

Homer Kent: From Matthew one would suppose that Bethlehem was the original residence. Luke supplements by showing Nazareth to be the former home. Joseph apparently intended to dwell permanently in Bethlehem until his plans were divinely altered.

Louis A. Barbieri Jr.: Nazareth was the town which housed the Roman garrison for the northern regions of Galilee. Therefore most Jews would not have any associations with that city. In fact those who lived in Nazareth were thought of as compromisers who consorted with the enemy, the Romans. Therefore to call one “a Nazarene” was to use a term of contempt.

3. (:23b) Despised Reputation of Nazareth

*“that what was spoken through the prophets might be fulfilled,
‘He shall be called a Nazarene.’”*

D. A. Carson: Nazareth was a despised place (Jn 7:42, 52), even to other Galileans (cf. Jn 1:46). Here Jesus grew up, not as “Jesus the Bethlehemite,” with its Davidic overtones, but as “Jesus the Nazarene,” with all the opprobrium of the sneer. When Christians were referred to in Acts as the “Nazarene sect” (24:5), the expression was meant to hurt. First-century Christian readers of Matthew, who had tasted their share of scorn, would have quickly caught Matthew’s point. He is not saying that a particular OT prophet foretold that the Messiah would live in Nazareth; he is saying that the OT prophets foretold that the Messiah would be despised (cf. Pss 22:6–8, 13; 69:8, 20–21; Isa 11:1; 49:7; 53:2–3, 8; Da 9:26). The theme is repeatedly picked up by Matthew (e.g., 8:20; 11:16–19; 15:7–8; see Turner). In other words Matthew gives us the substance of several OT passages, not a direct quotation (so also Ezr 9:10–12; cf. Str-B, 1:92–93).

It is possible that at the same time there is a discreet allusion to the nēšer (“branch”) of Isaiah 11:1, which received a messianic interpretation in the Targums, rabbinic literature, and Dead Sea Scrolls (cf. Gundry, Use of the Old Testament, 104), for here, too, it is affirmed that David’s son would emerge from humble obscurity and low state. Jesus is King Messiah, Son of God, Son of David; but he was a branch from a royal line hacked down to a stump and reared in surroundings guaranteed to win him scorn. Jesus the Messiah, Matthew is telling us, did not introduce his kingdom with outward show or present himself with the pomp of an earthly monarch. In accord with prophecy, he came as the despised Servant of the Lord.

Leon Morris: Had he been known as “Jesus of Bethlehem” he would have had the aura of one who came from the royal city; there would have been overtones of messianic majesty. But “Jesus the Nazarene” carried with it overtones of contempt. We are to understand the prophets as pointing to one who would be despised and rejected, and Jesus as fulfilling this by his connection with obscure Nazareth.

Warren Wiersbe: Who ever heard of a king being born in a humble village and growing up in a despised city? The humility of the King is certainly something to admire and imitate (Phil. 2:1–13).

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How can you testify to God’s providence at work in your own life in providing direction and protection?
- 2) Why do powerful world figures become so enraged when they feel threatened?
- 3) Why is prophecy often more valuable when viewed through the rear view mirror?
- 4) How do you respond to critics that claim that Matthew is just pulling OT quotes out of context and applying them to the Messiah in reckless and unwarranted fashion?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

R. T. France: The inclusion of Egypt in Jesus' infant itinerary has for Matthew two scriptural resonances which do not fit neatly together. On the one hand, Jesus is the new Moses, and it was in Egypt that Moses escaped the infanticide of Pharaoh, and from Egypt that as an adult he fled to escape Pharaoh's anger (Exod 2:11–15), returning eventually to Egypt when "those who sought your life are dead" (Exod 14:19, echoed by Matthew in 2:20). But on the other hand Jesus is also the new Israel, God's "son," as the quotation from Hos 11:1 will presuppose; as patriarchal Israel went down to Egypt and came back to the promised land, so now does Jesus, the new Israel. If it is supposed that typology must depend on exact correspondences, Matthew's typology here is decidedly loose, not only in that Jesus is seen both as the deliverer and the delivered, but also in that whereas Moses escaped from Egypt and returned to it, Jesus (like Israel) does the opposite. But typology depends on meaningful associations rather than exact correspondences, and in each of these quite different ways the mention of Egypt is sufficient to provide food for thought on the relation between the events God directed in Egypt more than a millennium ago and what the same God is now accomplishing through the new deliverer, who is identified by the prophetic text as his Son.

A further effect of including Egypt in the story of Jesus' infancy is to add an important extra dimension to the geographical area which is involved in preparing for the coming of the Messiah. Not only is he the Galilean Messiah born in Judea, but he is honored by magi from "the East" (Mesopotamia?), who bring gifts particularly associated with Arabia (and with biblical echoes of Sheba) and part of his childhood is spent in safety in Egypt. Thus all the main elements of Israel's surrounding world as we know them from the OT are involved in welcoming God's Messiah, who, as the story unfolds, will prove to be much more than only the deliverer of Israel.

But of course that is the essence of typology, which depends not on predictions but on transferable "models" from the OT story. The exodus, leading as it did to the formation of a new people of God, was a potent symbol even within the OT of the even greater work of deliverance which God was yet to accomplish (e.g. Isa 43:16–21; 51:9–11; Jer 16:14–15; 31:31–34; Hos 2:14–15), and Matthew has taken up that prophetic typology and applied it to the "new exodus" which has now come about through Jesus. Later in this gospel we shall find the language of a new covenant (26:28) and we shall hear Jesus speaking to and about his disciples in terms which belong to the new people of God constituted at Sinai; as Jesus sets up "his ekklesia" (16:18) with its twelve leaders "judging the twelve tribes of Israel," (19:28) the message will be reinforced that the events which constituted Israel as the special people of God under Moses are now finding their counterpart in the even more fundamental and eschatological role of the "new Moses."

But not only is Jesus in Matthew's view the founder of a new community of the people of God, he also himself embodies it as not only Israel's leader but himself the true Israel. Some of the most potent OT models for Jesus' mission in this gospel are drawn from passages which in their original context spoke, at least in part, about Israel as a corporate entity under the figure of an individual representative: see on 8:17 for the Servant of Yahweh and on 10:23 for the Son of Man. More directly parallel to the present typology is that which undergirds the story of Jesus' testing in the wilderness, when the nature of Jesus' status as "Son of God" is explored in relation to Israel's filial testing in the wilderness period which followed the first exodus (see on 4:1–11). Thus, far from Matthew's having seized on a convenient use of the word "son" (which in any case is not there in the LXX version of Hos 11:1) in relation to Egypt and illegitimately transferred it to a quite different kind of situation involving a different kind of son, this quotation in fact expresses in the most economical form a wide-ranging theology of the new exodus and of Jesus as the true Israel which will play a significant role throughout Matthew's gospel. As usual, Matthew's christological interpretation consists not of exegesis of what the text quoted meant in its original context, but of a far-reaching theological argument which takes the OT text and locates it within an over-arching scheme of fulfillment which finds in Jesus the end-point of numerous prophetic trajectories.

E. Michael Green: Looking back over this cycle of stories illustrating Jesus' childhood, a number of strands stand out.

First, Matthew makes it plain that God works through both surprise and continuity to bring about his purposes. The story of Jesus is utterly continuous with Abraham, with David and with the whole history of the chosen people. But it also bristles with surprises. Perhaps this is to encourage us to expect God to be working in our lives steadily and continuously, making sense of our past history; but also to be on the lookout for God's surprises in our lives, ready to grasp them and follow through their implications when they come.

Secondly, Matthew has a clear message for the readers of his day. By then the Gentile mission was in full flood, and the tensions with Judaism had reached snapping-point. The temptation to give up on the Jews would have been very great. But Matthew says, 'Don't give up on the Jewish people. God has not given them up. He has a special purpose for them. It stretches back to the dawn of time. It is from Jewish stock that Jesus was born. Do not forget it.'

Thirdly, Matthew has a word of encouragement about opposition. Opposition is inevitable, but it will never, in the providence of God, be allowed to quench God's mission. There was every possibility of quenching the Messiah: his mother Mary might have been stoned as an adulteress; he might have been killed by Herod; he might have been lost in Egypt. But no. God's hand was upon him. Opposition could not extinguish God's light. What an encouragement that would have been to Matthew's readers! The church, so frail, so exposed, would not be allowed to sink, however threatening the storms and waves that broke over it.

Charles Swindoll: Throughout my life, I've had seasons in which numerous decisions and opportunities have driven me to seek the will of God. Never has the Lord sent an angel or spoken to me in a dream or guided me with a star, as He did in the second chapter of Matthew. However, I have learned a handful of principles for discerning God's will through both my study of Scripture and my reflection on how God has led me —and others —through the years.

First, God leads those who have chosen to follow Him. You need to be a Christian if you hope to be led by God. Romans 8:14 says, "For all who are being led by the Spirit of God, these are sons of God." Christians enjoy a personal relationship with Christ through the indwelling Spirit. One of the great benefits believers have that non-Christians don't is the privilege of being led by the Spirit.

Second, God leads through His written Word. Careful, intelligent, and diligent study of the Bible helps us to learn God's mind on moral and practical matters, informs a Christian view of the world, and imparts wisdom and virtue in keeping with the heart of God. Psalm 119:105 says, "Your word is a lamp to my feet and a light to my path." The Bible may not directly address your specific question, like "Should I accept this job offer or that job offer?" But as God's values and priorities become yours through careful meditation on His Word, you will be able to more critically think through the values and priorities involved in even seemingly neutral decisions like these.

Third, God leads through the inner promptings of the Holy Spirit. I don't mean tingling, butterflies, or warm sensations. I mean something inexpressible and, yes, even mysterious. The Spirit of God truly—not metaphorically—lives in us. He will work to convict you when you're doing wrong and give you a sense of confidence and relief when you do what's right. He'll illuminate the truth of Scripture and open your eyes to see things you didn't see before. When you pray for wisdom and insight, He'll give it (Jas. 1:5). In, with, and through the inspired Word of God, the Spirit works in, with, and through you as you genuinely and humbly seek Him.

Fourth, God leads through the counsel of wise, qualified, mature, trustworthy Christians who love and care for you (see Prov. 11:14). All these adjectives are important. Don't ask just anybody you know to share their perspective and insight; seek those who exhibit Christlike character, have years of experience walking with God, know you intimately, and have your best interests in mind. You want counselors who are objective, who have no personal or vested interest in the outcome of your decision, and who will ask hard questions and not let you get away with weak answers.

Fifth, God leads by replacing restlessness and fear with confidence and calmness. He gives us inner peace. Colossians 3:15 says, "Let the peace of Christ rule in your hearts." Of course, the feeling of peace over a decision can't be separated from the other four principles. I've met people in total rebellion against God's clearly revealed will in Scripture who claimed to have had peace over their sinful decisions. But if your process for discerning God's will renders several equally good and viable alternatives, there's nothing wrong with humbly taking steps toward the one that brings peace and relieves restlessness.

William Barclay: Before we move on to the third chapter of Matthew's gospel, there is something at which we would do well to look. The second chapter of the gospel closes with Jesus as a little child; the third chapter of the gospel opens with Jesus as a man of thirty (cf. Luke 3:23). That is to say, between the two chapters there are thirty silent years. Why should it have been so? What was happening in those silent years? Jesus came into the world to be the Saviour of the world, and for thirty years he never moved beyond the bounds of Palestine, except to the Passover at Jerusalem. He died when he was thirty-three, and of these thirty-three years thirty were spent without record in Nazareth. To put it in another way, ten-elevenths of Jesus' life were spent in Nazareth. What was happening then?

(1) Jesus was growing up to boyhood, and then to manhood, in a good home; and there can be no greater start to life than that.

(2) Jesus was fulfilling the duties of an eldest son. It seems most likely that Joseph died before the family had grown up. Maybe he was already much older than Mary when they married. In the story of the wedding feast at Cana of Galilee there is no mention of Joseph, although Mary is there, and it is natural to suppose that Joseph had died.

So Jesus became the village craftsman of Nazareth to support his mother and his younger brothers and sisters. A world was calling him, and yet he first fulfilled his duty to his mother and to his own family and to his own home.

(3) Jesus was learning what it was like to be a working man. He was learning what it was like to have to earn a living, to save to buy food and clothes, and maybe sometimes a little pleasure; to meet the dissatisfied and the critical customer, and the customer who would not pay his debts. If Jesus was to help men and women, he must first know what their lives were like. He did not come into a protected, cushioned life; he came into the life that all must live. He had to do that, if he was ever to understand the life of ordinary people.

(4) Jesus was faithfully performing the lesser task before the greater task was given to him to do. The great fact is that, if Jesus had failed in the smaller duties, the mighty task of being the Saviour of the world could never have been given to him to do. He was faithful in little so that he might become master of much. It is a thing never to be forgotten that in the everyday duties of life we make or mar a destiny, and we win or lose a crown.

Bruce Hurt: Four Ways Old Testament is Quoted in New Testament

Note that this material is a compilation from Arnold Fruchtenbaum's handout entitled "Life of Messiah", notes from "Messianic Christology" and comments from David Cooper's Messiah: His Historical Appearance.

When the New Testament quotes the Old Testament, it does so in four different ways. Every Old Testament quotation found within the New Testament will always fit into one of these four categories. There is one example of each of the four ways in Matthew Two, so this will be used as the basis for explaining them. These four ways of quoting the Old Testament are the ways the rabbis in 1st century Israel quoted them in rabbinic writings. Because of so very much unscientific exegesis of the Scriptures, many honest, sincere men and women have reached the conclusion that prophecy cannot be understood, and that it is a waste of time to try to understand it. There is no occasion for such gross and fantastic misinterpretation of prophecy. Essentially, history and prophecy are written upon the same basic principles. History tells what has occurred; predictive prophecy tells what will be. The same fundamental laws of logic and of language govern in both instances. If one gets these facts clearly in mind and approaches prophecy just as he does history, recognizing that the same principles obtain in both cases, he is in a position to understand prophecy more nearly accurately than is usually the case. (Adapted from David Cooper - Messiah-His Historical Appearance)

CATEGORY (1) Literal prophecy plus literal fulfillment – Matthew 2:6 quotes Micah 5:2.

Matthew 2:6 “AND YOU, BETHLEHEM, LAND OF JUDAH, ARE BY NO MEANS LEAST AMONG THE LEADERS OF JUDAH; FOR OUT OF YOU SHALL COME FORTH A RULER WHO WILL SHEPHERD MY PEOPLE ISRAEL.”

Micah 5:2 “But as for you, Bethlehem Ephrathah, Too little to be among the clans of Judah, From you One will go forth for Me to be ruler in Israel. His goings forth are from long ago, From the days of eternity.”

Note a specific point for point fulfillment, even predicting that Messiah would be born in Bethlehem of Judea (not in Bethlehem of Galilee) and this is the easiest kind of prophetic fulfillment to spot. That is the literal meaning, the literal interpretation of Micah 5:2; the Messiah, when He is born, will be born in the town of Bethlehem, within the tribal territory of Judah.

CATEGORY (2) Literal prophecy plus typical fulfillment - a typology -

Matthew 2:15 “He remained there until the death of Herod. This was to fulfill what had been spoken by the Lord through the prophet: ‘OUT OF EGYPT I CALLED MY SON.’”

Hosea 11:1 “When Israel was a youth I loved him, And out of Egypt I called My son.”

In this OT passage from Hosea, the literal meaning of Hosea 11:1 is describing ISRAEL being called out of Egypt. It is calling Israel God’s son. Look at Exodus 4:22-23. It is not a prophecy per se, but a historical event which foreshadows a future event. In this passage the calling of Israel out of Egypt is used as a TYPE, or parallel, or similar event, to God bringing Jesus out of Egypt. Many of the citations in the Book of Hebrews of Exodus and Leviticus fall into this category.

CATEGORY (3) Literal prophecy plus application

Matthew 2:17-18 “Then what had been spoken through Jeremiah the prophet was fulfilled: 18 A VOICE WAS HEARD IN RAMAH, WEEPING AND GREAT MOURNING, RACHEL WEEPING FOR HER CHILDREN; AND SHE REFUSED TO BE COMFORTED, BECAUSE THEY WERE NO MORE.”

Jeremiah 31:15 “Thus says the LORD, ‘A voice is heard in Ramah, Lamentation and bitter weeping. Rachel is weeping for her children; She refuses to be comforted for her children, Because they are no more.’”

In this type of usage of Old Testament Scripture, there is one point of similarity, but also many differences. Matthew 2:17-18 uses Jeremiah 31:15 which in the original context is Jeremiah witnessing an event in his day as he sees the women of Ramah, where Rachel (she was the symbol of Jewish motherhood) was buried, crying as they see their sons being taken to exile in Babylon. They would never see them again. The events of Jeremiah have a point of similarity with the events in Bethlehem, since the Jewish mothers are weeping for sons they will never see again. However Ramah and Bethlehem are different towns, and the Babylonian exiles weren’t going to their death as were the infants of Bethlehem. Everything is radically different except the mothers weeping.

CATEGORY (4) Summation - a summary

Matthew 2:23 “and came and lived in a city called Nazareth. This was to fulfill what was spoken through the prophets: ‘He shall be called a Nazarene.’”

There is no exact quotation or prophecy, but when the word prophet switches from singular to plural, it is a summation. “That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets” is a clue, when prophet becomes prophets, plural instead of singular, you are getting a summary. If you search the Old Testament for a mention of Nazareth, the only remote similarity is Isaiah 11:1, which calls Messiah a Netzer, which means branch, and sounds similar to Nazareth. However, the point that Matthew is making is that Jesus would be despised and rejected of men, as the Nazarenes were despised in their culture. Isaiah 53:3 and other scriptures foretell this. "He was despised and forsaken of men." Other scriptures are: Isaiah 49:7; Psalm 22:6. "As spoken by the prophets" refers to prophecies such as these.

TEXT: Matthew 3:1-12

TITLE: THE MINISTRY OF JOHN THE BAPTIST, THE FORERUNNER OF JESUS

BIG IDEA:

THE BAPTISM OF JOHN EMPHASIZING REPENTANCE PREPARED THE NATION FOR THE SUPERIOR BAPTISM OF JESUS AND THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN

INTRODUCTION:

Craig Blomberg: Matthew abruptly jumps from the events surrounding Jesus' birth to the time of his adult life. Apart from the one episode of Jesus teaching in the temple at age twelve (Luke 2:41-52), none of the canonical Gospels describes anything about his intervening years. Apparently, they provided few clues to his true identity or coming mission. In striking contrast, the apocryphal gospels fill Jesus' "hidden years" with all kinds of miraculous exploits, esoteric teaching, and exotic travels.

E. Michael Green: In all the Gospels the ministry of Jesus is prefaced by that of John. There is a very good reason, in addition to the obvious historical one: the central message of John is repentance, and without repentance there is no way in which a person can respond to the good news and become a member of the kingdom of heaven. Repentance is the inescapable beginning.

Walter Wilson: Before the public ministry of the Messiah to Israel can commence, both the Messiah and the people must be prepared. The narratives in chapter 3 concern John the Baptist, whose role as forerunner Matthew elaborates by likening him to the prophet Elijah. John's ministry paves the way for that of Jesus through its emphasis on certain key themes, including the need for national repentance, warnings of eschatological judgment, and the advent of God's heavenly reign. Both John's message and his location (in the wilderness) are expressed as the fulfillment of biblical prophecy concerning the return of the exiled community to Jerusalem. The people of Jerusalem (and indeed all Judea) respond to this message by going out to the wilderness, confessing their sins, and submitting to baptism by John in the river Jordan. Whereas Luke has John respond to questions from tax collectors and soldiers about what sort of conduct accords with repentance, Matthew has him reprove Jesus's future opponents (the Pharisees and Sadducees) for their failure to bear fruit worthy of repentance. While the ensuing speech underscores the reality of divine punishment, it also promises the outpouring of the Spirit, a sign of God's restored presence.

S. Lewis Johnson: The importance of John the Baptist in the ministry of the New Testament may be gleaned from one particular statement that the Lord Jesus made concerning him. In the 11th chapter of this same Gospel of Matthew, in reference to John the Baptist, the Lord Jesus said, "Verily I say unto you, among them that are born of women, there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist." It's evident from this statement that the importance of John the Baptist is forever settled in holy Scripture.

And not only this, but in the beginning of the Gospel of Mark, the writer of that gospel relates the ministry of John the Baptist to the beginning of the gospel of the Lord Jesus. In other words, the ministry of John the Baptist is extremely important for the gospel itself. And then, as you well know, there are two passages in the Old Testament in which the ministry of this last of the Old Testament prophets is prophesied, and significant words are said concerning it.

John was a rugged, stern John Knox kind of character, who thundered out the way of the Lord to a stiff-necked generation. I do not think that any true preacher of the word of God would have relished the task that John the Baptist was given. And yet John, although his message was not yet geared for the times – he surely was not a relevant preacher – had a tremendous influence on his contemporaries. Campbell Morgan, in his commentary on the Gospel of Matthew, has said that the ministry of John the Baptist was attractive because all of Jerusalem and Judea and the region round about the Jordan went out to him. His ministry was convictive because they were baptized by him and confessed their sins as they were baptized, and it was invective because he did not hesitate to say to that generation of Pharisees and Sadducees who came to his baptism, “O generation of vipers, who hath warned thee to flee from the wrath to come?”

David Thompson: JOHN THE BAPTIST’S JOB WAS TO PREPARE THE NATION ISRAEL TO MEET JESUS CHRIST, THE KING WHO COULD USHER IN ISRAEL’S KINGDOM, AND TO INTRODUCE THE NATION TO JESUS CHRIST.

I. (:1-4) ENTERING MINISTRY

A. (:1-2) Pointing People to the Kingdom of Heaven

“Now in those days John the Baptist came, preaching in the wilderness of Judea, saying, 2 ‘Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.’”

Craig Blomberg: Matthew introduces John as he came to be known—as one who baptized people. He calls him a preacher or, more literally, one who speaks as a herald. John proclaimed God’s message as a prophetic spokesman in the desert of Judea, the wilderness area to the south of Jerusalem. Reminiscent perhaps of Israel’s wandering in the wilderness prior to their entry into the promised land, John too prepared the way for One who would reconstitute God’s people. Jesus himself would also have his time in the wilderness shortly (4:1-11).

D. A. Carson: He began his preaching in the “Desert of Judea,” a vaguely defined area including the lower Jordan Valley north of the Dead Sea and the country immediately west of the Dead Sea. It is hot and, apart from the Jordan itself, largely arid, though not unpopulated. It was used for pasturage (Ps 65:12; Joel 2:22; Lk 15:4) and had Essene communities.

Charles Swindoll: The word translated “repent” is the Greek term metanoēō [3340], which means to “change one’s mind,” resulting in a change of allegiances, lifestyle, or trajectory. It doesn’t mean “change your ways.” True repentance doesn’t start with external actions or mere behavior modifications. We’ve all seen outwardly compliant children do what’s right while harboring rebellion in their hearts. The kind of repentance John preached was a change of mind that was followed by a change of lifestyle.

The urgency for John’s call to repentance was the imminent coming of the kingdom of heaven. John’s original Jewish audience—as well as Matthew’s Jewish readers—would most likely have understood the coming kingdom of God as the messianic kingdom described in such passages as Daniel 2:44: “The God of heaven will set up a kingdom which will never be destroyed, and that kingdom will not be left for another people; it will crush and put an end to all these kingdoms, but it will itself endure forever.” Daniel’s dramatic vision itself hearkens back to other messianic prophecies, such as Isaiah 9:7: “There will be no end to the increase of His government or of peace, on the throne of David and over his kingdom, to establish it and to uphold it with justice and righteousness from then on and forevermore. The zeal of the LORD of hosts will accomplish this.”

So, the “kingdom of heaven,” Matthew’s expression for the “kingdom of God” (see Mark 1:15), is the long-anticipated kingdom that would come with the arrival of the Messiah. With the kingdom would come righteousness, peace, justice, deliverance, and blessing for God’s people. The coming of the kingdom would also bring judgment and wrath upon unbelievers, the wicked, and those who rejected God and His Messiah. This is why repentance was necessary. “John’s message . . . was that a change of mind and heart (metanoete, ‘repent’) was necessary before they could qualify for the kingdom. They did not realize how far they had drifted from God’s Law and the requirements laid down by the prophets (e.g., Mal. 3:7-12).”

Grant Osborne: Kingdom of Heaven

Five ideas emerge in the prophetic and intertestamental periods:

1. the regathering of Israel (4 Ezra 13:39–41),
2. the destruction of the nations (Dan 2:44; 7:26; 2 Bar. 36–40),
3. the reign of God’s people (Dan 7:27; Wis 3:8; T. Jud. 25:1–2; Matt 19:28; 1 Cor 6:2; Rev 20:4),
4. the harvest of judgment (Dan 12:2; 4 Ezra 4:30; 2 Bar. 72–74; Matt 3:12; 13:30, 40),
5. and the transformation of this world into a new earth (Isa 65:17; 66:22; 1 En. 45:3–5; 2 Bar. 32:1–7; Matt 19:28; Rev 21:1).

By the time of Christ, virtually all the attention was given to the destruction of Rome, and this is why Jesus’ twelve disciples never understood that he came to suffer and die—they had no basis for understanding this, for they thought only of a conquering Messiah. . .

the kingdom of God has come and is coming, and the people of God live between the ages, feeling the tension between the already and the not yet. In the Messiah the kingdom has arrived, yet the events have only been inaugurated, and the final stage is in the future.

S. Lewis Johnson: John’s message is that that kingdom of the heaven is at hand, because the King has come. There are two aspects of this kingdom: the aspect of the ministry of the Lord Jesus at his first coming, in which he lays the foundation for the kingdom in the shedding of his precious blood, for it is the blood that he shed that inaugurates the New Covenant which is the foundation of that kingdom; and then there is the ministry of the king at his second advent, at which he destroys the enemies of the program of God and brings that kingdom to pass upon the earth. So then we have a public manifestation of the king. He comes as the hidden king in his first coming. He comes as the magnificent king of glory in his second coming. . .

You’ll notice John does not know anything about this interval between the first coming and the second coming. As a prophet who resided in the Old Testament prophecy primarily, he looks forward to the great events of the New Covenant period, and he sees mountain peaks, but he does not see the valleys that lie between the peaks. And so he sees the first coming mingled with the second coming. And as history unfolds, we have learned that there is now 1900 years plus between the first advent and the second advent, but John puts them together, for his vision is not yet clarified by the unfolding of the revelation of God. The future, in a sense, is fore-shortened for John, but the truths that he proclaims are truths.

John Nolland: Because the mention of the wilderness location is geared to evoking the tradition of wilderness renewal, the reader is given no help in imagining how John, at least in the early stages, could have gained any audience for his message in an unpopulated wilderness area. John is being thought of as a prophet, but where the prophets characteristically take their message from God to the people, here the people must trek out into the wilderness to receive the message. This is presumably because the commerce with God which John is calling for is deemed to have its natural setting in the wilderness (as the place to initiate eschatological renewal).

B. (:3) Preparing People to Respond to the King

*“For this is the one referred to by Isaiah the prophet, saying,
‘The voice of one crying in the wilderness,
Make ready the way of the Lord, Make His paths straight!’”*

Craig Blomberg: Verse 3 presents John the Baptist as the fulfillment of Isa 40:3. The quotation reproduces the LXX almost verbatim. In Isaiah the speaker remains unidentified. He could be viewed individually as a specific prophet or corporately as all of the people of Israel (so Qumran; cf. 1QS 8:14). The larger context of Isa 40-66 discloses that the prophecy depicts part of Israel's end-time restoration. The messianic era, the millennial kingdom, and eventually the new heavens and the new earth often blend together in characteristic prophetic foreshortening. John is thus heralding the beginning of the full restoration and blessing of God's people. Just as roads were often repaired in the ancient world in preparation for royalty traveling on them, so John calls his listeners to rebuild highways of holiness (cf. Isa 35:8), i.e., to return to moral living in preparation for God's coming in Jesus.

E. Michael Green: But we are bound to notice how he comes: preaching (:1). ‘Who are you, John?’ we ask. ‘A voice,’ he replies (:3). Just that. He was actually a very great prophet, with a radical message of repentance to deliver. He lived a simple lifestyle which powerfully challenged the religious leaders of the day, who lived in considerable luxury. His message shook the state. His courage was phenomenal. And yet with striking humility he sees himself as nothing more or less than the voice through which God was addressing his nation. He takes no credit for his ministry. He is simply his Master's voice. What an example to preachers!

Leon Morris: Prepare may be used of making a thing ready or keeping it ready. Here the imagery is of a road that needs to be repaired so that it may be ready for the Lord to travel over it smoothly. Way may be used in the literal sense of a road; here the imagery is that of the road over which a king will approach. In antiquity when it was known that the sovereign was coming, every effort would be made to ensure that the road was as smooth as it could be. The great one must be able to travel easily and quickly. “The Lord” refers in Isaiah to Yahweh, but the Baptist is applying the passage to Jesus. When Matthew records this use of Scripture he is revealing something of his Christology. To ascribe to Jesus words that in Holy Scripture applied to God shows that for the writer Jesus occupies the highest of places. The use of the same prophecy in the other Synoptists indicates that this was an accepted practice among the Christians, not something peculiar to Matthew. Make his paths straight continues the metaphor, but it is not quite clear whether straightening the path means eliminating bends or removing bumps. It is perhaps more likely to be making the path level (cf. Moffatt, “level the paths”) than altering it to have fewer bends. All is to be made ready for the coming of God's chosen one. John's announcement of the coming of the kingdom and his call to repentance were ways of preparing the path for the coming of Jesus.

John MacArthur: He is presented as the forerunner of Jesus. He prepared the way for Jesus' arrival. The whole passage emphasizes this. In ancient times, it was common when a king was coming to a city to send ahead of him certain servants, certain heralds, and they had two functions. One of the functions was to announce the king was coming. The other function was to prepare the road so that the travel would be easy. So usually the herald would go ahead with the idea of verbalizing the arrival of the king, and also with a coterie of servants who could fix the road. And since roads in those days were subject to all kinds of pitfalls and hazards and, and broken places, and so forth and so on, this was very important that the king not be delayed, that the king not be injured as he traveled because something was not foreseen. And so a herald went to proclaim and to prepare, to announce the king is coming, and to get the road ready for when the king came by. . .

Now, you can see from what I'm trying to show you, this is a significant man. He came to get the people ready for the King. Now you know what happened. He came to get 'em ready for the King. The King came to offer them the kingdom. They didn't want the forerunner. They beheaded him. They didn't want the King. They crucified Him. The whole thing fell apart. Israel was set aside, and it's all gotta be redone in the future, right? And the kingdom was postponed, and there's gotta be another forerunner to get Israel ready again for the coming kingdom.

C. (:4) Peculiar in His Dress and Diet

1. Peculiar in His Dress

“Now John himself had a garment of camel's hair, and a leather belt about his waist;”

2. Peculiar in His Diet

“and his food was locusts and wild honey.”

Craig Blomberg: Matthew describes John's dress as much like that of the prophet Elijah of old (2 Kgs 1:8). His diet resembles that of desert dwellers of the day. Both clothing and food point to an austerity and asceticism appropriate to his stern calls for repentance.

Grant Osborne: Locusts (including grasshoppers) and wild honey (probably taken by John himself from beehives) were the food of the poor, especially those living in the desert.

Leon Morris: The picture we get is of a man who lived simply. His clothing was far from splendid or elaborate, and his food such as could be obtained in the wild.

II. (:5-10) EXPOSING HYPOCRISY

A. (:5-6) Invitation to the Masses -- Popular Appeal

1. (:5) Widespread Response

“Then Jerusalem was going out to him, and all Judea, and all the district around the Jordan;”

2. (:6) Wholehearted Submission -- Baptism and Confession of Sins

“and they were being baptized by him in the Jordan River, as they confessed their sins.”

Craig Blomberg: John is apparently a charismatic figure who attracts crowds from many nearby places. His welcome reception provides a striking contrast with 2:3, though hostilities will resume in v. 7, confirming that it is primarily the official Jewish leaders who reject God's new revelation. The crowds who come and repent make public their change of heart by acknowledging their failure to meet God's standards and by resolving to change their ways. They visibly demonstrate the seriousness of their pledge with the rite of water baptism. The Greek imperfect tense (literally, were being baptized) suggests that John's ministry lasts for a significant period of time. . .

Baptizing in the river suggests that the people were either immersed or had water poured over them. The best historical evidence suggests immersion was more likely. The most common meaning of the verbs bapt and baptiz points in this direction as well, though there are instances in which the terms also refer to a more superficial dipping (e.g., Rev 19:13). In general the New Testament evidence concerning baptism strongly supports immersion for believers, even if the history of the church is littered with sad examples of individuals and movements that have proved overly divisive on this issue.

Warren Wiersbe: The Jews baptized Gentile converts, but John was baptizing Jews! His baptism was authorized from heaven (Matt. 21:23–27); it was not something John devised or borrowed. It was a baptism of repentance, looking forward to the Messiah's coming (Acts 19:1–7). His baptism fulfilled two purposes: It prepared the nation for Christ, and it presented Christ to the nation (John 1:31).

Charles Swindoll: When John the Baptizer took up the rite of immersion, he “infused into the ritual act of initiation and purification an ethical quality that baptism had not had before. His was a moral community of penitent souls seeking personal righteousness, and he associated with the act of baptism the imperative necessity for a thorough change in the condition of the soul.” Or, as one commentator states, “Baptism for John was a symbol of repentance, a symbol of cleansing from sin and turning away from the old life to a new life.” So, like proselyte baptism, John's baptism was an outward symbol of inward devotion to God, submission to His will, and identity with the true people of God. And it was more than just a mark of repentance from sin; it was also a consecration to a life of loving service to God and to holiness. Take note, however, that the audience of John's address was not morally and spiritually “filthy” Gentiles, but Jews! He was saying, in effect, “Because of your sin, you are outside of Abraham's covenant with God—unclean! You must repent like a Gentile and come to God as if for the first time.”

B. (:7-9) Invective against Self Righteous Hypocrites – Powerful Confrontation

1. (:7) Targeting Jewish Religious Leaders

“But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees coming for baptism, he said to them, ‘You brood of vipers, who warned you to flee from the wrath to come?’”

Craig Blomberg: By calling them “vipers,” John refers to their shrewdness and to the danger they pose to others. Possibly an indirect allusion to the evil caused by the original serpent (Gen 3) appears as well. The last line of v. 7 therefore oozes with sarcasm. John knows full well that the Jewish leaders are not fleeing from the coming wrath. This wrath forms part of the full arrival of the kingdom, which will lead to judgment of God's enemies as well as blessing for his followers. God's wrath does not reflect “the emotion of anger but that part of his divine holiness that actively repudiates that which is unholy in his creatures.”

R. T. France: As the two main ideological groups in the Sanhedrin both Sadducees (the “politically” dominant group from whom the priestly and temple hierarchy were drawn) and the Pharisees (a self-conscious “party” grouping committed to rigorous observance of the law) represented key elements in the Jerusalem establishment, and the mention of them together probably suggests a sort of “cross-party delegation” who had come out to examine this disturbing new religious phenomenon down by the Jordan. The description of them as “coming to his baptism” rather than “being baptized” like the crowds in v. 6 suggests such a surveillance role, and the reception they received from John (vv. 7–10) makes it unlikely that any of them actually were baptized.

2. (:8-9) Trumpeting Required Corrective Action

- a. (:8) Proper Response = Genuine Repentance Demonstrated by Fruit
“Therefore bring forth fruit in keeping with repentance;”

Warren Wiersbe: John’s preaching centered on repentance and the kingdom of heaven. The word repent means “to change one’s mind and act on that change.” John was not satisfied with regret or remorse; he wanted “fruits meet for repentance” (Matt. 3:8). There had to be evidence of a changed mind and a changed life.

- b. (:9) Improper Response = False Security “*and do not suppose that you can say to yourselves,
'We have Abraham for our father'; for I say to you, that God is able from these stones to raise up children to Abraham.*”

Craig Blomberg: In v. 9 John again reminds his listeners that they dare not trust in their ancestral credentials or believe that they alone are legitimate candidates for inclusion in the people of God. Matthew’s two-pronged emphasis, introduced in chaps. 1-2, thus continues: the messianic age brings new people into God’s kingdom and excludes others who thought themselves secure. The Messiah is the true Son of Abraham (1:1-2); apart from him there is no salvation. The reference to “these stones” probably reflects an original Aramaic wordplay between children (b nany) and stones (abnany) and was no doubt inspired by the characteristically rocky ground that covers Israel.

Grant Osborne: The Jewish people are not automatically secure on the basis of their heritage. There may be an echo of Isa 51:1–2, “Look to the rock from which you were cut and to the quarry from which you were hewn; look to Abraham, your father,” interestingly in a context of comfort and promise. As Davies and Allison say, “From Abraham, a lifeless rock (cf. Gen 17:17; 18:10–14; Rom 4:17), God had miraculously caused to be born Isaac and descendants as numerous as the stars of heaven.” God could do so again, so the people dare not fail to obey him and develop lives in keeping with their covenant privileges.

E. Michael Green: Religious observance and religious pedigree are not enough. The Pharisees and Sadducees had that and to spare. Orthodoxy is not enough. To be Abraham’s seed is not enough. If there is no heartfelt repentance, there will be no spiritual life for you in the kingdom of the Messiah.

C. (:10) Prophetic Warning of Imminent Judgment

every tree therefore that does not bear good fruit is cut down and thrown into the fire.”*

Craig Blomberg: v. 10 again predicts imminent judgment for those who reject John's call to repentance. The fire, as v. 12 makes clear, stands for eternal punishment. One must not think of any lesser judgment as in view. A “fruitless” Christian is no Christian at all (cf. Jas 2:14-26). Christians in every age must heed John's warning to the Pharisees and Sadducees. Too often in the history of the church, people have trusted in living in a “Christian” country, being raised in a Christian family, holding membership or even office in a local church, and even in verbal claims to have repented and to have trusted in Christ. Yet without the evidence of a changed life and perseverance in belief, all such grounds of trust prove futile.

Grant Osborne: Certainly final judgment is primarily in view (the present tenses are prophetic, emphasizing the certainty of it), though the destruction of Jerusalem should probably be included as well. The fact that the ax is ready to cut down the “root” is important; the goal is not pruning (John 15:2) but total destruction. When woodsmen cut down trees, they normally cut at the trunk, from which they want another tree to grow; but when the root is cut, the tree is gone forever.

III. (:11-12) ELEVATING CHRIST

A. (:11) Because of His Superior Baptism

1. Baptism of John

“As for me, I baptize you with water for repentance,”

2. Benchmark Comparison

“but He who is coming after me is mightier than I, and I am not fit to remove His sandals;”

3. Baptism of Christ

“He will baptize you with the Holy Spirit and fire.”

Craig Blomberg: The expression baptism “with/in the Holy Spirit” appears six other times in the New Testament. Five of these texts refer to this very saying of John (Mark 1:8; Luke 3:16; John 1:33; Acts 1:5; 11:16). Acts 1-2 demonstrates that John's prediction was fulfilled at Pentecost. The sixth reference appears in 1 Cor 12:13, where it is clear that all Christians receive Spirit-baptism. The phrase therefore refers to a ritual that depicts a believer's initiation into the body of Christ by the indwelling Holy Spirit, who never departs following true conversion and regeneration. Baptism of the Spirit must not be confused with the “filling of the Spirit,” which recurs repeatedly to empower believers to proclaim God's word boldly (Acts 2:4; 4:8,31; 9:17; 13:9). Here is further reason why one cannot be a Christian without having a changed life; the indwelling Spirit guarantees that the process of sanctification will begin (cf. Rom 6-8).

Warren Wiersbe: But John mentioned two other baptisms: a baptism of the Spirit and a baptism of fire (Matt. 3:11). The baptism of the Spirit came at Pentecost (Acts 1:5, and note that Jesus said nothing about fire). Today, whenever a sinner trusts Christ, he is born again and immediately baptized by the Spirit into the body of Christ, the church (1 Cor. 12:12–13). In contrast, the baptism of fire refers to the future judgment, as Matthew explains (Matt. 3:12).

Grant Osborne: The mention of “and fire” has caused some controversy. Some think them antithetical, with the Spirit coming on the faithful and the fire of judgment on the unfaithful. This would certainly fit the context of judgment. More and more, however, the two are being seen as a hendiadys (“spirit-fire”—note that one preposition introduces both, indicating they are a unity). Still, there is a question whether the “Spirit-fire” refers to judgment or the refining fire of the Spirit. But this disjunction is unnecessary. It is best to see both nuances: those who accept the message of the kingdom are purified by the Spirit while those who reject it face judgment. Both nuances fit the OT background as well as the Judaism of Jesus’ day (e.g., Qumran; cf. 1QS 4:20–21).

Leon Morris: Baptizing with the Holy Spirit goes along with baptizing with fire, which here stands for purification. Some interpreters understand fire to refer to judgment (as it often does; Ridderbos, e.g., accepts this view here), but the link with the Holy Spirit makes it more likely that the same people are referred to and that they are purified as well as indwelt (fire was linked with the coming of the Spirit on the Day of Pentecost, Acts 2:3).

John MacArthur: It's best in my view to see this as a separate judgment of fire. I think it refers to immersing men in fiery divine judgment. When He comes, He will baptize you with the Holy Spirit and fire. Now, we've already seen - now, note this - that in Scripture, fire speaks of God's judgment. It can be used in a refining sense, but it speaks most dominantly of God's judgment and wrath. These are distinct baptisms. The former, of the Holy Spirit, belongs to all believers; the latter, to all unbelievers. The former, to those with true repentance; and the latter, to those with no repentance. And this, I think, beloved, fits the contextual use of fire in the passage. If fire means judgment - fire in verse 10; and fire means judgment - fire in verse 12; it would be really stretching the point for fire to mean something else in the verse in between without the Holy Spirit making a comment on it to show us that it meant something else. It fits the context. You have three parallel sentences in verses 10, 11, and 12. Every one of them ends in fire. And in each case the fire would be the same. There would be no reason to make any difference - fire of judgment.

B. (:12) Because of His Severe Judgment

1. Function of Ultimate Judgment

and He will thoroughly clear His threshing floor;”*

Charles Swindoll: This image refers to workers during the grain harvest who would use a tool called a winnowing fork—like a rake or pitchfork—to separate grain kernels from their husks. Workers would toss the grain stalks into the air, and the heavy seeds would fall to the ground while the chaff would blow away in the wind.

2. Fate of Ultimate Judgment

a. Fate of the Wheat = God’s Precious People
“and He will gather His wheat into the barn,”

b. Fate of the Chaff = Worthless Wicked
“but He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.”

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why was John the Baptist preaching in the wilderness?
- 2) Why did the Jewish religious leaders come out to the wilderness scene?
- 3) How can we tell that there is no post-conversion experience of Holy Spirit baptism as some Pentecostal groups claim?
- 4) If eternal judgment is executed via divine fire, why don't we believe in the annihilation of the wicked instead of eternal suffering?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

A. T. Robertson: One cannot properly understand the theological atmosphere of Palestine at this time without an adequate knowledge of both Pharisees and Sadducees.” In the same way that twenty-first-century Christianity has its conservative and progressive wings, first-century Judaism had its right-wing (Pharisee) and left-wing (Sadducee) branches. The Pharisees were more traditional and orthodox in their doctrine and practice. They were the much larger party, having the respect and favor of the general population, who mostly saw eye to eye with them on theological matters. The Sadducees, on the other hand, tended to be much more secular in their doctrine, yet they generally had control of the priesthood and worked in close association with the prevailing political powers.

Most likely, the term “Pharisee” means “separated one.” Many historians trace this strict branch of Judaism back to the remnant of orthodox, observant Jews who lived during the Babylonian exile, represented by figures like Daniel and his three friends (see Dan. 1:8-20). While in exile, these Jews had to preserve their culture, religion, language, and identity by separating themselves from the world and maintaining strict attention to detailed traditions. However, after several centuries, the methods used to preserve purity in faith and practice had turned into a legalistic, judgmental, and hypocritical approach to religion. This group also came to believe that the traditional teachings and practices that were developed in the course of their study of the Law were as authoritative as the Law of Moses itself, leading many to argue that this “oral law” had actually been passed down to the rabbis from Moses through oral tradition.

The Sadducees, meanwhile, were on a different end of the theological spectrum. They accepted no oral teaching or tradition beyond what could be found in the five books of Moses (the Pentateuch). In this way, they represent a kind of early form of biblical criticism that found a “canon within the canon” and tried to reform Judaism based on this rationalistic approach. Furthermore, while the Pharisees believed in the sovereignty of God and in predestination regarding many matters, the Sadducees rejected the notion of predestination altogether in favor of a strong view of human free will. The Sadducees also denied the reality of angels, spirits, and life after death, emphasizing instead the blessings received in this life for faithfulness to the covenant —especially with regard to the sacrificial system. They resembled in some ways the progressive deists of the eighteenth century —skeptical to the core of anything supernatural or fatalistic.

Daniel Doriani: Question 76 of the Westminster Larger Catechism asks, “What is repentance unto life?” The catechism answers:

Repentance unto life is a saving grace, wrought in the heart of a sinner by the Spirit and the Word of God, whereby, out of the sight and sense, not only of the danger, but also of the filthiness and odiousness of his sins, and upon apprehension of God's mercy in Christ to such as are penitent, he so grieves for and hates his sins, as that he turns from them all to God, purposing and endeavoring constantly to walk with him in all the ways of new obedience.

The pastors and scholars who penned this knew that true repentance is more than shame over misdeeds or sorrow over pain inflicted to self or others. The penitent man grieves that he has offended God. He hates the sin he has committed. The sinner may feel dreadful or numb. He may have caused much damage or little. But the penitent, unlike Judas, refuse to despair. They turn from heinous sin to a gracious God. They know God is merciful; they also know that true repentance entails a constant endeavor to walk with God in obedience. The repentant turn from sin once for all, yet we also turn to Jesus daily for mercy and for healing.

When the catechism calls repentance a grace and fruit of the Spirit, it follows the Scripture that says, “God grants repentance unto life” (Acts 11:18). Unless the Spirit enlightens, we will never see that sin is rebellion against God. The Spirit speaks and convicts, but we listen, agree, forsake our sinful ways and return to the Lord, so that repentance is also our act. In fact, Abraham Kuyper says, “Sacred Scripture refers to conversion almost one hundred and forty times as being an act of man, and only six times as an act of the Holy Ghost.”

John Nolland: Christian baptism, anticipated in 28:18, is to be seen as a development from John's baptism. It is not entirely clear why baptism plays no role in the Synoptic account of Jesus' ministry (contrast Jn. 3:22; 4:1-2), but the best suggestion seems to be, though this is not worked out in any systematic way, that there is a general assumption that those who respond to Jesus' ministry have already been baptized by John. This passage views Jesus' ministry as endorsing and building on that of John, and the Synoptists have no desire to set Christian baptism in competition with that of John. (Christian baptism emerges in 28:18 precisely because of the expansion of vision at that point to include the peoples of the non-Jewish nations.)

John MacArthur: Now, we need to discuss for just a brief moment the kingdom of heaven. What is the kingdom of heaven? What does John mean by it? Well, basically, it's an Old Testament concept. The precise phrase, “the kingdom of heaven,” is not found in the Old Testament; but it is an Old Testament concept. This is why I say that. Nebuchadnezzar, for instance, in Daniel 4:37, refers to God as “the king of heaven.” Daniel 2:44 calls Him “the God of heaven”; and Daniel 4:25 says, “He will set up a kingdom which will never be destroyed.” Now, the God of heaven, the King of heaven, God and heaven are then associated. The kingdom of heaven and the kingdom of God then are associated terms.

Now, Matthew uses the term “kingdom of heaven” 32 times; and he is the only gospel writer that ever uses it. Mark doesn't use it. Luke doesn't use it. John doesn't use it. They use “the kingdom of God,” and there may be a special reason for that. As I tried to point out from Daniel, and there are many other illustrations, heaven and God were thought of as synonymous. God was the King of heaven; and the reason Matthew may use it is because Matthew's gospel is a characteristically Jewish gospel; and one thing about Jews that you learn historically as you study Judaism is that a Jew would never say the name of God; and in deference to that, they would substitute frequently the term “heaven.” We even say things like that today. We say, “Heaven smiled down on me.” We mean God. We use it in a synonym fashion; and it may be that Matthew is in some sense accommodating a current substitute by calling the “kingdom of heaven” that rather than the “kingdom of God,” so that there is not an overt offense. That's one possibility.

Personally, I don't see any great distinction between the kingdom of heaven and the kingdom of God. As you study it throughout the gospels, they seem to be parallels. In fact, if we had the time, and we don't tonight, I could take you through passages in Matthew and Mark and Luke, all recording the same incident where one time Matthew uses “kingdom of heaven,” Mark uses “kingdom of God,” and Luke uses “kingdom of God,” interchangeably, identical terms. And so I don't think there's any reason to build a huge case that they're different. He was simply saying, “The kingdom of God, the kingdom of heaven, the kingdom Messiah is gonna rule, is coming.”

Now, we go a step further, okay? The kingdom of heaven has two aspects. Two aspects - the outer and the inner, and sometimes, in the gospels, the outer is in view, and sometimes the inner is in view. Let me show you what I mean. In the broadest sense, the kingdom of heaven, the kingdom of God, includes - watch this - everybody who professes to acknowledge God. Now, in Matthew 13 we'll see that, that the kingdom of heaven's got in it wheat and what? Tares, right? That the kingdom of heaven is like a great big bush with birds in it; and you've got the true and the false, the real and the non-real.

So in the outer sense, the kingdom of heaven is, is everybody that professes; but in the inner sense, it's only the really regenerated, born-again, genuinely saved people; and in some passages, the inner is in view; and in some, the outer; and we'll see that as we go through Matthew. The big circle of profession includes the true and the false. The little circle only those truly born again in Christ.

Now, tracing the kingdom will help us a little bit. Let me give you a quick little historical look at the kingdom. We're gonna go flying by, so hang on. There are five distinct phases in the kingdom. Five phases. I, I tried to reduce a very difficult subject to simple terms so I could understand it and pass it on to you simply.

First of all, it's talking about the rule of God. The rule of God over the hearts of men and over the world. Both are included. Now, the first phase of this thing is the prophesied kingdom, the prophesied kingdom. For example, Daniel said that God is gonna come and set up a kingdom, a kingdom that'll never be destroyed; and Daniel foresaw that Christ would be the King of that kingdom. It was a prophesied kingdom.

The second thing, the second phase of this is what you could call the present kingdom or the at-hand kingdom; and that was the kingdom described by John the Baptist. He was saying, “The prophesied rule of God is now imminent. It's now ready.” Jesus said it. The twelve said it. It's at hand. It's coming. It's imminent. It's near. The rule of God, the reign of Christ, both internally and externally - it's here.

Then the third phase of the kingdom was what I call the interim phase. The prophesied, the imminent or at-hand, and the interim; and, there, the kingdom is described in this way. After the King was rejected by Israel, the King returned to heaven, and the kingdom now exists in a mystery form. Christ isn't literally in the world, literally reigning, literally sitting in Jerusalem ruling the kingdom; but He reigns a kingdom in the hearts of all who acknowledge Him as Lord, right? So it's an interim kingdom, the mystery form. So you have the prophesied, the at-hand, which would've been both earthly and internal, the whole thing; and when they wouldn't accept the King, the kingdom went inside; and now in a mystery form is in the hearts of those who believe. And, as Paul says in Romans 14:17, "The kingdom of God is righteousness and joy and peace in the Holy Spirit." It's internal.

The fourth phase of the kingdom is what I call the manifest phase. You start with the prophesied, the at-hand, the interim, and then the manifest; and this is the literal, thousand-year millennium that is to come. It will involve an external rule where Christ literally rules, physically in the earth, and an internal where He rules the hearts of the believing people. The book of Revelation talks about this. Jesus, in Matthew 16, gave people a glimpse of this in the transfiguration. So what do you have? You have the prophesied kingdom, the at-hand one, the interim one, the manifest one for a thousand years; and finally what I call the everlasting kingdom. Second Peter 1:11, Peter calls it, "The eternal kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." The fifth and final phase.

Now, that's generally the flow of the kingdom. The Old Testament prophesied a kingdom — a kingdom that would be external, where they would literally be in the earth; and the earth would be the place of the kingdom; and the earth would be ruled by the King; and it would also be internal, the hearts of the believing people would submit to that reign. And John and Jesus and the twelve said it's at hand. But it was rejected, and so an interim, internal kingdom has taken form now that we call this mystery age. But one day the kingdom will be manifest internally and externally, and then that thousand-year kingdom will exist and, at the end of that, an everlasting kingdom.

TEXT: Matthew 3:13-17

TITLE: THE COMMISSIONING OF THE KING – BAPTISM, ANOINTING AND APPROVAL

BIG IDEA:

THE COMMISSIONING OF JESUS TO PUBLIC MINISTRY INCLUDED BAPTISM TO IDENTIFY WITH SINNERS, ANOINTING WITH THE HOLY SPIRIT AND THE PUBLIC APPROVAL OF GOD THE FATHER

INTRODUCTION:

Walter Wilson: The . . . final segment of chapter 3 both dramatizes Jesus’s role as God’s faithful Son and suggests that such faithfulness represents the means by which God’s plan of redemption will be accomplished. Among the many people drawn by John’s preaching is the Messiah himself, who travels all the way from Galilee to the river Jordan. When John demurs at Jesus’s request for baptism, the latter explains that he must be consecrated to his messianic vocation by joining the sinful multitudes in this rite of renewal, thereby fulfilling the righteousness that this vocation will embody. During the performance of the rite itself, the investiture of Jesus with the Spirit is presented both visually, in the dove-like descent of the Spirit upon him, and verbally, in divine words of commendation that allude to several biblical texts and concepts. With his identification as God’s Beloved Son, the readers have their most definitive answer to the question of Jesus’s identity, a question to which the entire opening section of the gospel has been devoted.

G. Campbell Morgan: These few verse reveal the relation of the King to heaven, as they tell the story of His attestation and anointing.

Grant Osborne: There is tension in the fact that Jesus at one and the same time transcends John’s baptism as the Messiah and yet submits to that baptism. “The baptism of Jesus, indeed, serves as a kind of transition between the work of preparation and the appearance on center stage of the one who brings fulfillment.” [Hagner] Moreover, there is also a Trinitarian thrust—both the Father and the Spirit participate in the anointing of the Son. There is an incredible aura of the power of God in this scene, and in fact the shaking of the heavens (a major apocalyptic image) occurs as Jesus comes up out of the water (v. 16), and God himself tells the onlookers who this Jesus really is, the very Son of God.

John MacArthur: This is, as it were, His coronation. This is His commissioning, the beginning of His ministry. It’s a rich and a blessed section of Scripture. The King comes out of 30 years of seclusion, 30 years of obscurity, 30 years of being hidden, as it were, finally to manifest Himself to the world. John the Baptist, the voice of one crying in the wilderness, has made ready the path. The way is prepared. The path is straight, and from the quiet seclusion of Nazareth, the Lord Jesus comes to inaugurate His work, to assume His office, and He is commissioned. He is crowned, as it were, in a very wonderful way right here as we begin in this paragraph.

Now, I want us to see three aspects to the commissioning of Jesus Christ.

- First, the baptism of the Son.
- Second, the anointing of the Spirit.
- Thirdly, the word of the Father, and you will notice that all the Trinity is involved. . .

And so, beloved, what do we see in the commission here? He is chosen to be a king, but His, but His throne is gonna be a cross. He's chosen to be a king, but He's gonna die, a sin offering. And so He is commissioned. By baptism, He identifies with sinners and pictures His death. By being anointed with the Spirit, He is empowered to minister a ministry that ultimately will make Him a sacrifice. The dove of sacrifice. And by the Father's word, He is said to be the worthy sacrifice. What an introduction. What a beginning. What a ministry was His.

I. (:13-15) APPROPRIATENESS OF BAPTISM OF JESUS BY JOHN

A. (:13) Intentionality of Jesus – He Came to Be Baptized

“Then Jesus arrived from Galilee at the Jordan coming to John, to be baptized by him.”

Dr. Justin Imel: Jesus came from Galilee to the Jordan to receive John’s baptism. Mark informs us that Jesus came from Nazareth (Mk 1:9)—the distance could have been some 60 to 70 miles. This tells us the value that Jesus placed on being baptized by John. He traveled a considerable distance by foot to receive John’s baptism.

<https://drjustinimel.com/sermon-on-matthew-the-perfect-baptism-matthew-313-17/>

Scott Harris: John’s message was one of repentance, and as previously pointed out, this was a very strong message. Some in our day have tried to soften the tone and make the message more palatable to American society. They say that repentance is simply changing your mind about Jesus. They then present the gospel to try to get you to change your mind about Jesus the same way as you might change your mind about what brand of soap you like best. They market Jesus. Such a message is a distortion of the gospel. Repentance is not just a change of mind. It is a change of mind that radically changes the life! John’s message was the same as the prophets before them. He called the people to conversion. He implored the people to turn back to the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, for them to trust the Lord alone, and for them to forsake anything and everything in their lives that was ungodly. This was the Herald’s Message.

B. (:14) Objection of John – You Are Sinless and Don’t Need a Baptism of Repentance

*“But John tried to prevent Him, saying,
‘I have need to be baptized by You, and do You come to me?’”*

Scott Harris: John knew from childhood who Jesus was. This was the Messiah, the Christ, the one who would sit on David’s throne, this is the “Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world” (John 1:29). John recognizes that Jesus is without sin, for He will be the one that will remove sin from the world. This being true, John is very reluctant to baptize Jesus with a baptism of repentance. The grammar of the verb, “prevent” here is one of continual action. John kept trying to prevent Jesus from being baptized by him. John is as strongly opposing baptizing Jesus as he was opposing baptizing the Pharisees and Sadducees, but for opposite reasons. Jesus was sinless and had no need of this baptism. The Pharisees and Sadducees were still in their sins and had not repented. In addition Jesus is the one who is to “Baptize with the Holy Spirit and fire” (vs 11). John tells Jesus that Jesus should baptize him, not the other way around. This leaves us with a question as well. Understanding the nature of John’s baptism as being one of repentance, one in which the person confessed their sins and were then immersed in the Jordan as a sign of the washing away of their sin, why is one who is without sin coming for this baptism?

Leon Morris: John is surprised at finding Jesus among his baptizands. It does not seem right and therefore he does not want this baptism to proceed. The Fourth Evangelist tells us that the Baptist did not know Jesus until he saw the Spirit descend on him like a dove (John 1:33), which may mean that he did not know Jesus or that he did not know him to be the Messiah. But Matthew does not address himself to this question. He simply tells us that John recognized his inferior place without going into the question of how he came to know it or for that matter how he understood it. Since John does not speak of Jesus as Messiah, he may have meant only that he knew that Jesus had greater authority than he or was morally superior to him.

D. A. Carson: John tried to deter Jesus (imperfect of attempted action) from his baptism, insisting (the pronouns are emphatic) that he stood in need of baptism by Jesus. Earlier John had difficulty baptizing the Pharisees and Sadducees because they were not worthy of his baptism. Now he has trouble baptizing Jesus because his baptism is not worthy of Jesus. . .

At the very least, John must have recognized that Jesus, to whom he was related, whose birth was more marvelous than his own and whose knowledge of Scripture was prodigious even as a child (Lk 2:41–52), outstripped him. John the Baptist was a humble man; conscious of his own sin, he could detect no sin Jesus needed to repent of and confess. So John thought that Jesus should baptize him. Matthew does not tell us when John also perceived that Jesus was the Messiah (though that may be implied by vv.16–17); Matthew focuses on Jesus' sinlessness and the Father's testimony, not on John's testimony (unlike the fourth gospel, where the Baptist's witness to Jesus is very important).

John MacArthur: Now, John's statement — this is an incredible statement, and I want you to see how rich it is. His statement is one of the most clear and one of the most powerful and one of the most forceful declarations of the sinlessness of Jesus Christ ever given in the Scripture. When anybody wants to argue about the sinlessness of Christ, whether Christ was really without sin, this is a great place to start. Virtually, John is saying, "Look, You can't be baptized with my baptism, because mine is a baptism for sinners." And what is he, in effect, saying? "You're not a sinner." "You're not a sinner." He is declaring, on the other hand, that, "I have need to be baptized by You. I am a sinner. You and I are opposites. I," he says, "am in the class of the people I'm baptizing. You are not." And he is saying, "Not only are You sinless, but You are beyond even the very prophets of God."

C. (:15) Explanation of Jesus – This Act Fulfills All Righteousness

“But Jesus answering said to him, ‘Permit it at this time; for in this way it is fitting for us to fulfill all righteousness.’ Then he permitted Him.”

John MacArthur: In the book of Isaiah, in chapter 53, it says, "He was numbered with the" - What? - "transgressors" - sinners. I believe the supreme element - listen - in the baptism of Jesus was the identification of the sinless Son of God with sinners. And I think the first thing Jesus ever did when He stepped out of obscurity and He stepped into the limelight was declare the very primary reason for which He came, and that was to identify Himself with sinners. He who had no sin took His place among those who had no righteousness. He who was without sin went down into a baptism that was only for sinners, and He was saying as loud and clear as ever

He could say, "I take My place with sinners." And let it be clear from the start that this Jesus is the friend of sinners. Let it be clear that Paul was right. "He who knew no sin became" - What? - "sin for us." His ministry began that way. How fitting. He didn't come to just teach. He didn't come just to set an example. He didn't come to be a moralist. He didn't come to be a revolutionary. He came to identify with sinners, and He was numbered with the transgressors; and there in His baptism He identified with sinners. Even in His birth, He identified with sinners. He was the Child of Mary, who was a sinner.

In His death, He identified with sinners - two, one on each side - and He bore the sins of every sinner who ever lived. Listen, in order to bring sinners to righteousness, He had to go to the depths of the waters of death. He had to bear sin. He had to identify with sinners. There was no other way to fulfill all righteousness.

And in Isaiah 53:11, it says, "My righteous servant shall make many righteous" - How? - "He shall bear the sin of many." Isaiah 53:11, "My righteous servant shall bear the sin of many." Jesus submitted to John's baptism as a symbolic act of identifying with sinners who were seeking salvation; and I'll go a step further. I believe that His baptism was a symbol of His death. I believe it was a symbol of His dying as He went into that water, and a symbol of His rising as He came out.

You say, "Apparently, you believe he was immersed." True, and I will defend that in a moment. And I think it was, it was the same picture, really, as Christian baptism. I think Jesus was showing His identification with sinners. I think He was previewing His death and His resurrection.

Walter Wilson: Jesus submits to John's baptism of repentance (3:2, 8, 11), an act that expresses his solidarity with the people (3:5-6), in contrast to the people's religious leaders (3:7). This act can also be understood as a further instance of "fulfillment" (3:15) insofar as it reveals a critical aspect of Jesus's person and ministry, namely, his role as servant (3:17), a role that complements his role as eschatological judge (3:11-12). John's struggle to recognize this fact (cf. 11:2-6) illustrates the practical difficulty of reconciling these two aspects of Jesus's identity.

G. Campbell Morgan: In Isaiah liii. we read, "He . . . was numbered with the transgressors." There, in baptism as in incarnation and birth, and finally and for consummation, in the mystery of His Passion, we see the King identifying Himself with the people over whom He is to reign, in the fact of their deepest need, and direst failure.

Grant Osborne: The best way to understand it is to combine two nuances:

- (1) there is a salvation-historical thrust as Jesus identifies with his people (Isa 53:12) in preparing for the saving activity of God (his saving work is the will of God = "righteousness").
- (2) Jesus obeys his Father's will (= all righteousness) by assuming the role of suffering Servant (Isa 53:11) and so endorses John's ministry.

In this there is also a moral element, for Jesus' action is a moral conduct that obeys God's will, and so Jesus is fulfilling Scripture by doing it God's way. In short, he "fills to the full" the "right" requirements of God in "the OT pattern and prediction about the Messiah." He does not need to repent, but by submitting to baptism Jesus begins his messianic work by identifying with the human need and providing the means by which it can be accomplished.

D. A. Carson: John's baptism had two foci—repentance and its eschatological significance. Jesus affirms, in effect, that it is God's will ("all righteousness") that John baptize him; and both John and Jesus "fulfill" that will, that righteousness, by going through with it ("it is proper for us"). The aftermath, as Matthew immediately notes (vv.16–17), shows that this baptism really did point to Jesus. Within this framework we may recognize other themes. In particular, Jesus is indeed seen as the Suffering Servant (Isa 42:1). But the Servant's first mark is obeying God: he "fulfills all righteousness" since he suffers and dies to accomplish redemption in obedience to the will of God. By his baptism, Jesus affirms his determination to do his assigned work. Thus the "now" may be significant. Jesus is saying that John's objection (v.14) is in principle valid. Yet he must "now," at this point in salvation history, baptize Jesus, for at this point Jesus must demonstrate his willingness to take on his servant role, entailing his identification with the people.

Bob Deffinbaugh: While believer's baptism looks back to Christ's death, burial, and resurrection (Romans 6:1-11), our Lord's baptism by John looks forward, anticipating His death, burial, and resurrection on behalf of guilty sinners. Our Lord's baptism cannot include his repentance and confession of sin for He had no sin (as His temptation and subsequent conduct will verify). It may be that He was baptized in order to identify with sinners, but not to identify Himself as a sinner. Based on our Lord's own words to John, it seems not to have focused as much on sin as on the righteousness that would be accomplished by our Lord's ministry, in which John the Baptist was a partner.

II. (:16) ANNOINTED WITH GOD THE SPIRIT FOR MINISTRY

"And after being baptized, Jesus went up immediately from the water; and behold, the heavens were opened, and he saw the Spirit of God descending as a dove, and coming upon Him,"

G. Campbell Morgan: The dove therefore is the bird that signifies patience, gentleness, harmlessness; and is the type of sacrifice possible to the lowliest of the people. . . The dove is the emblem of weakness; but the Spirit of God in the form of a dove is an emblem of power in gentleness – Deity submissive to sacrifice for the salvation of men. This was an anointing for death, for atonement. It was not simply an anointing for preaching, but for living in order to dying. He had consented to death; and Heaven crowned Him with power for that death.

Grant Osborne: There have been many suggestions for the imagery of the dove here, but the best is probably to see a combination of Gen 1:2 (the Spirit of God hovering over creation), thus signifying a new creation; the Spirit as a symbol of Israel (Hos 7:11), with Jesus as the ideal, true Israelite; the dove returning to Noah's ark (Gen 8:8–12) with the imagery of a new world being inaugurated; and the dove as a messenger signifying to Jesus the divinely commissioned role set for him. Putting them together, the descent of the Spirit signifies a new age being inaugurated in the coming of the Messiah, God's very Son.

D. A. Carson: The Spirit's descent in v.16 needs to be understood in the light of v.17. The Spirit is poured out on the servant in Isaiah 42:1, to which v.17 alludes. This outpouring does not change Jesus' status (he was the Son before this) or assign him new rights. Rather it identifies him as the promised Servant and Son and marks the beginning of his public ministry and direct confrontation with Satan (4:1), the dawning of the messianic age (12:28).

R. T. France: The significance of the baptism hinted at in vv. 14–15 is distinguished from the revelatory event which follows it, which takes place after Jesus has come out of the river. Three elements are combined in vv. 16b-17, the opening of heaven, the descent of the Spirit, and the divine proclamation. The opening of heaven is familiar elsewhere in the NT as an expression for a visionary experience (John 1:51; Acts 7:56; 10:11; Rev 4:1; 19:11). There is a significant OT parallel in Ezek 1:1 where Ezekiel, standing beside a river, also sees heaven opened and receives a theophanic vision and hears God’s voice commissioning him for his prophetic role and giving him the Spirit (Ezek 2:2). Isa 63:19 (EVV 64:1) asks God to tear (LXX anoigō, as here) the heavens and come down to redeem his people. The opening of heaven is the prelude to the divine communication which follows and especially to the visible descent of the Spirit.

Dr. Justin Imel: The Spirit came upon Jesus. It was vital that the Spirit come upon Jesus in order for Jesus to begin his ministry. Jesus’ ministry was carried out with the aid of the Holy Spirit. Immediately after Jesus was baptized, the Lord “was led up by the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted by the devil” (Matt 4:1). Therefore, the Spirit played a vital role in Jesus’ being a merciful high priest by suffering temptation. The Holy Spirit empowered Jesus to carry out the great miracles he performed: “If it is by the Spirit of God that I cast out demons, then the kingdom of God has come upon you” (Matt 12:28).

Not only did the Spirit enable Jesus to carry out his ministry, but the Spirit demonstrated that Jesus was indeed the Christ. The Greek christos literally means “anointed one.” In the Old Testament, prophets, priests and kings were anointed with oil as a demonstration that they were chosen by God. E.g., about David’s coming king, we read: “Then Samuel took the horn of oil and anointed him in the midst of his brothers. And the Spirit of the Lord rushed upon David from that day forward” (1 Sam 16:13).

The Spirit came upon Jesus in this context to anoint him as the Christ, to demonstrate that he was God’s chosen One. Lest you think that I’m making too much of the literal meaning of “Christ,” the Old Testament refers to the Messiah’s anointing with the Holy Spirit. “The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because the Lord has anointed me to bring good news to the poor; he has sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to those who are bound” (Is 61:1). Therefore, the Spirit comes upon Jesus and anoints him, demonstrating that he is, in fact, the One whom God has chosen.

III. (:17) APPROVED BY GOD THE FATHER AS WORTHY SACRIFICE FOR SIN

*“and behold, a voice out of the heavens, saying,
‘This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleased.’”*

David Platt: The Son obeys, the Spirit anoints, and in verse 17 the Father speaks.

S. Lewis Johnson: Incidentally, this statement, “this is my beloved Son in whom I am well-pleased,” does not really mean, primarily, “this is my beloved Son in whom I am delighted.” But the meaning of the Greek word is, rather, this is my Son in whom and upon whom my pleasure rests, or whom my plan for the salvation of both Israel and the Gentiles is centered. So what it means then is not, I’m very pleased with him, I’m happy over him. It means he is the one in whom I am going to accomplish my purposes. It is a word that has to do with the plan and purpose of God.

Leon Morris: Matthew's This is my Son makes the words relevant to the bystanders; they are an open testimony to the Father's approval of his Son (cf. 17:5), and we should view "Son" as a messianic title. The heavenly voice points to a relationship shared by no other. Beloved tells us of the strong affection the Father has for the Son; it is probably (as Allen thinks) "an independent title = 'the Beloved' = the Messiah" (see further the note on the same expression in 17:5). It is reinforced with in whom I am well pleased. The verb has the meaning "to think it good, give consent" and thence "to be well pleased, take pleasure in"; the latter is, of course, the meaning here. The divine voice gives approval to Jesus as he begins his public ministry. The words are reminiscent of Psalm 2:7 and Isaiah 42:1; they show us that right at the beginning of his ministry Jesus was identified with both the Messiah and the Suffering Servant, "and this strange combination exactly describes the nature of the Lord's ministry soon to begin" (Melinsky). We should perhaps notice the mention of the three Persons of the Trinity in this passage; Matthew has a certain trinitarian interest (cf. 28:19).

Warren Wiersbe: On three special occasions, the Father spoke from heaven: at Christ's baptism, at the Transfiguration (Matt. 17:3), and as Christ approached the cross (John 12:27-30). In the past, God spoke to His Son; today He is speaking through His Son (Heb. 1:1-2).

R. T. France: From this point on Matthew's readers have no excuse for failing to understand the significance of Jesus' ministry, however long it may take the actors in the story to reach the same christological conclusion (14:33; 16:16; 26:63-64). It will be this crucial revelation of who Jesus is which will immediately form the basis of the initial testing which Jesus is called to undergo in 4:1-11: "If you are the Son of God ..." (4:3, 6). And there, as in the account of the baptism, Jesus' sonship will be revealed in his obedience to his Father's will.

Dr. Justin Imel: This passage is an enthronement text for Jesus. It is here that the Father declares to the world that Jesus Christ is indeed his Son. The voice from heaven serves as undeniable proof that Jesus is the Son of God and the great King of all. As the great King, Jesus deserves the praise of all: "To the King of ages, immortal, invisible, the only God, be honor and glory forever and ever. Amen" (1 Tim 1:17). Are you giving the "king of ages" glory and honor in your life?

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why are the Scriptures so silent about the first 30 years of the life of Jesus?
- 2) Why did Jesus feel compelled to be baptized?
- 3) How does this passage contribute to our understanding of the Trinity?
- 4) What is significant about the testimony of God the Father regarding Jesus?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Grant Osborne: Recognition of Our Unworthiness before Jesus --

John the Baptist's humility reflects the necessary realization of the great heroes of the faith throughout biblical history. Moses (Exod 3:11 – 4:16), Gideon (Judg 3:15), Isaiah (Isa 6:5), Jeremiah (Jer 1:6–7), Ezekiel (Ezek 1:1–2:3), and Peter (Luke 5:8) all felt their inadequacy and unworthiness to serve the Lord. The fact is that we are unworthy of Christ and inadequate to do his work, but Paul answers that. He freely admitted that "in person he is unimpressive and his speaking amounts to nothing" (2 Cor 10:10), but he adds, "If I must boast, I will boast of the things that show my weakness" (11:30), and "I will boast all the more gladly of my weaknesses, so that Christ's power may rest on me" (12:9).

We all must come face to face with our sinfulness so that we will rest entirely on Christ. Then our inadequacies will be a means by which Christ's power will be all the more evident, for in him we will accomplish more than we ever could in our own strength and abilities. Our insufficiencies should force us to turn to Christ and his Spirit for the power to accomplish things for God. We all have seeds of greatness in us but must depend on the Spirit to unleash that power and maximize our potential for the glory of God.

David Platt: There are many different opinions about what Jesus means here, but it seems that Jesus' baptism is the convergence of a variety of factors. We'll consider three of these factors.

First, Jesus' baptism is an identification with sinners. Jesus came, according to Isaiah 53:12, to be "counted among the rebels," and ultimately this has to do with their sin, though Jesus Himself had no sin (Heb 4:15). We identify with Jesus when we are baptized, being united to Him in His life, death, and resurrection, so it makes sense that baptism is in a very real sense His identification with us. He who had no sin took His place among those who had no righteousness. This is the essence of what Jesus came to do (see 2 Cor 5:21).

In addition to identifying with us, Jesus also sets an example for us. His baptism is an example for saints. Jesus models obedience for His followers by being baptized, which is an obedience that He will eventually command His followers to submit to (Matt 28:20). Jesus is validating here the central importance of baptism. He begins His ministry by showing what would be central in our mission. Baptism is not something that man has made up; it's something that God has commanded, something He has called every follower of Christ to do, and something He has told us to do in all nations (28:19). Jesus sets the stage for this at the beginning of His public ministry.

Finally, baptism is not only an identification with sinners and an example for saints, but it is also a picture of salvation. Baptism pictures death and resurrection to new life, such that here at the beginning of Jesus' ministry, we get a picture of the climax of this ministry. That is, His immersion portrays His future death and resurrection. And now, every person who trusts in Christ for salvation is baptized, immersed in water, as a picture of our dying to sin and to ourselves and rising to new life in Christ.

S. Lewis Johnson: What does this baptism mean? Well first of all, it means that the Lord Jesus is identified with the Nation Israel. It is his positive submission to the kingdom program which he himself is inaugurating and bringing to its conclusion. It is his confession that he, as the king in heart, is prepared for the coming of the kingdom. There are no negative acts of sin or thoughts of sin for him to confess, but he makes a positive declaration of his submission to the will of God as any Israelite should have done through the ministry of the forerunner, John the Baptist.

Second, it is his inauguration into his Messianic office. The Spirit coming upon him is the sign and the seal of the Messianic era. In Isaiah chapter 1 and in Isaiah chapter 61 verse 1 it is stated, concerning the Messianic ministry of the Messiah, that it would be characterized by the possession of the Holy Spirit. In Isaiah chapter 42, God says, in the first of the prophecies, “I have given my Spirit upon him.” It is his endowment with power for the carrying out of his Messianic task. All of his preaching, all of his carrying out of miracles, and finally his act of redemption upon the cross are carried out under the direction of the Holy Spirit of God.

Incidentally, of course, all of our acts and all of our lives are to be carried out under the direction of the Holy Spirit of God.

And finally, it is the illustration of the goal of his ministry. The fact that the Lord Jesus went down into the water and came out of the water is a vivid representation, a kind of mirror of the event of the cross where he went into the waters of baptism. And the fact that later on he calls the suffering of the cross his baptism is striking confirmation of the fact that right here, at the beginning of his ministry, in the light of the voice from heaven, he’s the suffering servant of Jehovah. He goes down into the water and comes out of the water as if to say the great ministry of the Messiah is his suffering and his death.

John Piper: Now what does all this tell us about baptism? Three things:

1. It tells us that John's baptism is not simple continuation of circumcision. This is important because those who defend infant baptism often appeal to circumcision as the old sign of the covenant and say that baptism is the new sign. The one was given to infants and so should the other be. Circumcision was the sign of belonging to the Old Covenant people of God. Every Jewish male received it. If you were born Jewish, you received the sign of the covenant as a baby boy. So at least some of the Pharisees and Sadducees came to see circumcision as the sign of God's favor and of their security as the covenant people. But John's baptism was a radical attack on this false security. He infuriated the Pharisees by calling the people to renounce reliance on the sign of the covenant that they got when they were infants, and to receive another sign to show that they were not relying on Jewish birth, but on the mercy of God received by repentance and faith. A new people within Israel was being formed, and a new sign of a new covenant was being instituted. It was not a simple continuation of circumcision. It was an indictment of a misuse of circumcision as a guarantee of salvation. Circumcision was a sign of ethnic continuity; baptism was a sign of spiritual reality.

2. John's baptism was a sign of personal, individual repentance, not a sign of birth into a covenant family. It is hard to overstate how radical this was in John's day. The Jews already had a sign of the covenant, circumcision. John came calling for repentance and offering a new sign, baptism. This was incredibly offensive, far more offensive even than when a Baptist today says that baptism is not a sign to be received by infants born into a Christian home, but a sign of repentance and faith that a person chooses for himself, even if he already has been christened as an infant, the way the Jews were circumcised as infants. John's baptism is the beginning of the radical, individual Christian ordinance of baptizing those who believe.

3. John's baptism fits what we are going to see in all the rest of the New Testament, and indeed in all the first two centuries of the Christian era until A.D. 200 when Tertullian mentions infant baptism for the first time in any historical document, namely, that all baptism was the baptism of believers, not infants. And the reason was that baptism was the sign of belonging to the new people of God who are constituted not by birth or ethnic identity, but by repentance and faith in Jesus Christ.

Scott Harris: Jesus was born under the law of Moses (Gal. 4:4) and he kept the law, not the Pharisaical interpretation of it, but God's original intent. Jesus said in Matt 5:17 that He came to fulfill the law. Jesus voluntarily submitted to divinely approved ordinances whether religious or secular. For example, He was circumcised, presented in the Temple and celebrated the feasts even though His own relationship with God was independent of God's covenant with Israel. But Jesus' submission to the rituals of the covenant brought Him into full identification with all of Israel. Jesus even paid taxes to Caesar though He was exempt as the Son of God (Matthew 17:25-27). Jesus came into the world to identify with man so much so that Isaiah 53:12 says he would be "numbered among the transgressors." The self-righteous Scribes and Pharisees would call Jesus a glutton and drunkard, a friend of sinners (Matthew 11:19) because of His identification with man.

In the Levitical law a clean person that touched an unclean person, or in some cases even something that an unclean person had touched, would also then be considered unclean and would have to wash (Leviticus 11, etc.). Jesus was sinless and clean, and because His righteousness was internally generated and not externally granted (as is our righteousness) nothing could actually make Him unclean (such as the woman in Matthew 9:20f that touched His garment). However, in Jesus' baptism He fulfills all righteousness by fulfilling the Levitical code of ceremonial cleanliness. Jesus came to minister to sinners (the unclean), and in His Baptism He identifies Himself with sinful man even though He Himself was without sin. Jesus' baptism also gives approval to John's message and sets the example for those who would follow Him.

Jesus baptism was also symbolic of His death and resurrection. He only spoke of personal baptism in two other passages and in both He related Baptism to His death. In Luke 12:50 he speaks of His soon coming crucifixion as a "baptism." In Mark 10:38 He asks James and John if they would be able to "drink the cup that I drink, or be baptized with the baptism with which I am baptized" which was a reference to his coming death. It would be in His death that all righteousness would be completed as Jesus would bear the full price of the sin of men in Himself in order that He could impute His own righteousness to sinful men. Jesus baptism by John was part of His identification with sinful men pointing to the time when He would bear the sin of men.

Jesus' baptism also signified something else. It was the beginning of His public ministry as He was anointed by the Holy Spirit.

TEXT: Matthew 4:1-11

TITLE: THE TEMPTATION OF JESUS CHRIST

BIG IDEA:

JESUS AS THE SECOND ADAM DEFEATED THE TEMPTATIONS OF SATAN BY RELYING ON THE WORD OF GOD IN THE POWER OF THE SPIRIT

INTRODUCTION:

D. A. Carson: We must conclude that Satan's aim was to entice Jesus to use powers that were rightly his but which he had voluntarily abandoned to carry out the Father's mission. Reclaiming them for himself would deny the self-abasement implicit in his mission and in the Father's will.

Charles Swindoll: Think about what hung in the balance. Were Christ to yield to the temptations, not only would He disqualify Himself from being the perfect, innocent sacrifice for the sins of the world, but He would also allow the devil to declare himself victor, thereby claiming once and for all total dominion over humanity and the world. However, by withstanding the tests, Jesus would retain His rightful position as the victorious Ruler of all creation . . . and also leave us an example to follow when we, too, are tempted.

Craig Blomberg: One might expect the main, central period of Jesus' public ministry to unfold at once, but one more crucial preparatory event must occur. Jesus could well have perverted the nature of his messianic sonship and bypassed the way of the cross in favor of some more glamorous political or military role as liberator of Israel. But refusing to die for the sins of the world would have given the devil rather than God the victory. So Jesus' resolve to fulfill God's plans for him must be tested and proved right at the outset of his ministry.

Grant Osborne: The final event that launches Jesus' messianic ministry is the testing of Jesus. In the ancient world all sons of the king had to be tested and prove their right to the throne, and the heroes of the OT were put to the test before their ministries as well (e.g., Abraham with Isaac). Jesus passes the test and proves himself to be truly Son of God, thus entering his ministry on a note of triumph. He is announced in 3:1–12, anointed and empowered in 3:13–17, and proven by combat here. There is wilderness typology and a deliberate contrast with Israel here: they failed the test in the wilderness, but Jesus is victorious. In fact, the order of the temptations and Jesus' responses reverse the order of Israel's failures in Deut 6–8, as we will see. . .

Satan tests his "commitment to the will of his Father (the real criterion of true sonship)" and the reality of Jesus as the Son of God. Jesus triumphs and shows himself to be "the true Israel, the 'Son of God' through whom God's redemptive purpose for his people is now at last to reach its fulfillment." . . .

In effect the three tests concern the Shema (Deut 6:5), which calls on Israel to "love the Lord your God with all your heart ... soul ... and strength." The first temptation concerns the heart and how Israel's hunger was intended to test their heart for God (Deut 8:2). The second temptation tests Jesus' safety and his desire to save his soul/life and whether he will follow God even if it means his soul/life. The third tests his resolve to draw his strength from God alone rather than seek to rule the world by himself.

Warren Wiersbe: Just as the first Adam met Satan, so the Last Adam met the enemy (1 Cor. 15:45). Adam met Satan in a beautiful garden, but Jesus met him in a terrible wilderness. Adam had everything he needed, but Jesus was hungry after forty days of fasting. Adam lost the battle and plunged humanity into sin and death. But Jesus won the battle and went on to defeat Satan in more battles, culminating in His final victory on the cross (John 12:31; Col. 2:15).

E. Michael Green: But what did the temptation mean to Jesus? It would be a great mistake to suppose that the story of the temptations is included in the Gospel primarily to provide an example to Christian disciples, though they do provide that example. These temptations were messianic. They were uniquely appropriate to God’s Son, who had just received a clear vision of his mission. How was he to carry it out? How was he to lead people back to God? Was he to adopt the path of the conquering king or of the suffering Servant?

(:1) PROLOGUE – SETTING FOR SPIRITUAL COMBAT

A. Connection to His Baptism

1. Sequential Connection

“Then”

2. Spirit Connection

“Jesus was led up by the Spirit”

D. A. Carson: Jesus’ three temptations tie into his baptism, not only by the references to sonship and the Spirit, but by the opening “Then” (tote). Jesus’ attestation as the Son (3:17) furnishes “the natural occasion for such special temptations as are here depicted” (Broadus). The same Spirit who engendered Jesus (1:20) and attested the Father’s acknowledgment of his sonship (3:16–17) now leads him into the desert to be tempted by the devil.

B. Consigned to a Realm of Barrenness and Isolation

“into the wilderness”

D. A. Carson: The “desert” is not only the place associated with demonic activity (Isa 13:21; 34:14; Mt 12:43; Rev 18:2; cf. Trench, Studies in the Gospels, 7–8) but, in a context abounding with references to Deuteronomy 6–8, the place where Israel experienced her greatest early testings.

C. Conflict with the Devil

“to be tempted by the devil.”

Craig Blomberg: Matthew warns against two common errors—blaming God for temptation and crediting the devil with power to act independently of God. In the New Testament, God is always so dissociated from evil that he is never directly responsible for tempting humans (Jas 1:13). Yet the devil is never portrayed as an enemy equal with but opposite to God; he always remains bound by what God permits.

Leon Morris: Matthew is telling us that immediately after the experience in which Jesus, so to speak, was commissioned for his work as Messiah Satan tried to deflect him from doing the will of God. On this occasion the evil one is called the devil, the one who opposes God and tries to lead the people of God, and here the Son of God, away from the right path. Jesus has been called into the service of God. The devil will then try to seduce him into the service of evil.

I. (:2-4) TEMPTATION #1 -- FAILURE TO TRUST GOD'S PROVISION --
Can God care for me? Goodness and Love of God attacked SUFFICIENCY -- Lust of the Flesh – Self-gratification

A. (:2) Seductive Approach of Offering Something Attractive

“And after He had fasted forty days and forty nights, He then became hungry.”

D. A. Carson: The parallels with historic Israel continue. Jesus' fast (doubtless total abstention from food but not from drink; cf. Lk 4:2) of forty days and nights reflected Israel's forty-year wandering (Dt 8:2). Both Israel's and Jesus' hunger taught a lesson (Dt 8:3); both spent time in the desert preparatory to their respective tasks. The main point is that both “sons” were tested by God's design (Dt 8:3, 5; cf. Ex 4:22; Gerhardsson, Testing of God's Son, 19–35), the one after being redeemed from Egypt and the other after his baptism, to prove their obedience and loyalty in preparation for their appointed work. The one “son” failed but pointed to the “Son” who would never fail. In this sense, the temptations legitimized Jesus as God's true Son (see Berger, “Die königlichen Messiastraditionen,” 15–18).

Charles Swindoll: Though wicked to the core, the devil's no dummy. He knows that the best chance he has at successfully hooking victims with temptation and dragging them into sin is when they are weakened in mind, emotion, and will. When Satan catches us alone in a weakened state, he can more easily get us to justify our evil desires. And he can craft his temptations in such a way that the path toward destruction appears like the road to glory. His temptations can seem not only reasonable but even downright good and right.

B. (:3) Specific Area of Temptation

*“And the tempter came and said to Him,
‘If You are the Son of God, command that these stones become bread.’”*

Charles Swindoll: Satan's subtle suggestion was designed to make the Son doubt the Father's love for Him and concern for His physical welfare. Didn't the Son have every right to use His divine power and authority to meet the basic needs of His life?

Michael Wilkins: Satan does not doubt Jesus' identity as the Son of God, nor is he trying to get Jesus to doubt it; rather, he is trying to get Jesus to misuse his prerogatives as the Son of God.

C. (:4) Scripture Quotation of Rebuttal

“But He answered and said, ‘It is written, ‘Man shall not live on bread alone, but on every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God.’”

Craig Blomberg: In this instance the text he cites originally underscored God's provision of manna as an alternative to the Israelites' reliance on their own abilities to feed themselves. The principle applies equally well to Jesus' situation and to any other context in which people are tempted to give physical needs priority over spiritual needs.

II. (:5-7) TEMPTATION #2 -- FAILURE TO TRUST GOD'S PROVIDENCE -- How does God want to deliver and exalt me? Sovereignty of God attacked SUSTAINABILITY -- Lust of the Eyes -- Self-protection

A. (:5) Seductive Approach of Offering Something Attractive

“Then the devil took Him into the holy city; and he had Him stand on the pinnacle of the temple,”

Charles Swindoll: Here Satan used a completely different strategy. This time it wasn't about satisfying Jesus' physical needs; instead, it was about attracting a crowd, instantly promoting His fame, and gaining the attention and adoration He rightly deserved as the Son of God.

B. (:6) Specific Area of Temptation

*“and said to Him, 'If You are the Son of God throw Yourself down; for it is written,
'He will give His angels charge concerning You'; and
'On their hands they will bear You up, Lest You strike Your foot against a stone.'”*

Charles Swindoll: The devil conveniently left out an important part in the middle: “to guard you in all your ways.” The text thus indicates that the promise of protection was related to accidents that would occur in the course of a person's normal comings and goings —not to intentional, attention-grabbing stunts that put oneself in danger.

David Platt: We are tempted to question God's presence and manipulate God's promises.

Leon Morris: What Satan is suggesting is that Jesus should needlessly thrust himself into danger; he would be creating a hazard where none previously existed. And for what? To compel God to save him miraculously. It is a temptation to manipulate God, to create a situation not of God's choosing in which God would be required to act as Jesus dictated. Jesus rejects the suggestion with decision. He prefers the way of quiet trust in the heavenly Father, a trust that needs no test, and a ready acceptance of his will. He refuses to demand a miracle even if from the perspective of someone on earth that might seem desirable, even compelling.

C. (:7) Scripture Quotation of Rebuttal

*“Jesus said to him, 'On the other hand, it is written,
'You shall not put the Lord your God to the test.'”*

D. A. Carson: For both Israel and Jesus, demanding miraculous protection as proof of God's care was wrong; the appropriate attitude is trust and obedience (Dt 6:17). We see, then, something of Jesus' handling of Scripture. His “also” shows he would not allow any interpretation that generates what he knew would contradict another passage.

Craig Blomberg: This time the devil asks Jesus to demonstrate miraculously God's ability to preserve his life. The devil again knows that Jesus has the power to do this, and he cites Ps 91:11-12 to justify it. There God promises all who “dwell in the shelter of the Most High” (Ps 91:1) safeguarding and protection. The devil's mistake is to confuse the psalmist's stumbling so as to fall with Jesus' deliberately jumping off. We must not test God's faithfulness to his word by manufacturing situations in which we try to force him to act in certain ways. We dare not deliberately put our lives in danger as some kind of fleece. Jesus thus replies by quoting Deut 6:16 on not testing God. The original context alluded to Israel's rebellion against the Lord at Massah (again harking back to Exod 17:1-7).

III. (:8-10) TEMPTATION #3 -- FAILURE TO TRUST GOD'S KINGDOM PROGRAM –

How does God want to accomplish His agenda? Wisdom of God attacked SUPREMACY – Pride of Life -- Self-exaltation

A. (:8) Seductive Approach of Offering Something Attractive

“Again, the devil took Him to a very high mountain, and showed Him all the kingdoms of the world, and their glory;”

Bob Deffinbaugh: Consider the appeal of the offer from the devil’s viewpoint.

Jesus’ Condition	The Devil’s Offer
Deprived – tired, hungry	Splendor, not suffering
Alone with the wild animals 116	Significance, not obscurity
Waiting indefinitely	Instant results, not delayed
Nothing accomplished	Power to do what He wanted

To each condition of Jesus the devil offered a solution. The last one is the key to this temptation. In answering the first two temptations, Jesus had already resisted the first three aspects of the devil’s third temptation. He would not turn stones into bread to stop His suffering from hunger. He would not jump off the highest point of the temple to get instant notoriety. In neither temptation would He succumb to the lure of a shortcut to get instant results. The devil then added another element to make up a new and enticing package: “You can have splendor, significance and instant results, AND you can serve God while you do it. That’s what you want to do, isn’t it? Serve God? What have you done with your life so far, Jesus? Been a carpenter’s son, huh? Look, I’ll give you the kingdoms, and you may do with them as you wish. You’re a king, aren’t you? Inaugurate the kingdom of God on earth, if that’s what you want to do. Free Israel from Roman rule. Establish justice in the world. Take care of the poor. Bring about world peace. Wouldn’t that please God? Do it without suffering! Do it successfully! Do it now! YOU CAN HAVE IT ALL!”

B. (:9) Specific Area of Temptation

*“and he said to Him,
‘All these things will I give You, if You fall down and worship me.’”*

Craig Blomberg: After having tempted Jesus to satisfy a legitimate bodily appetite in an illegitimate way and then to use his supernatural power to rebel against God even while seeming to demonstrate great faith, Satan now makes the most brazen offer of all. He will give Jesus all the kingdoms of the world in return for worship. Ironically, Jesus would receive this glory anyway after his death and resurrection; but here the devil tries to seduce him with instant power, authority, and wealth apart from the way of the cross. Satan regularly tempts Christians in the same way— with the success syndrome, empire building, or alleged guarantees of health and wealth. But the devil's price is damning. He requires nothing short of selling one's soul in worshipping him, which leads inexorably to eternal judgment. Whatever joy and power he can offer vanishes with death. Jesus rightly rejects the devil's offer and quotes Deuteronomy for a third time (Deut 6:13). Only one is worthy of worship, the One who redeemed Israel from Egypt, the Lord God Yahweh himself. Jesus' insistence on worshipping God alone makes the characteristic Matthean theme of worshipping Jesus (e.g., 2:2; 8:2; 9:18; 14:33; 15:25; 20:20; 28:17) all the more significant as evidence for his divinity.

Bob Deffinbaugh: The devil would have liked for Jesus to believe that after bowing down before him, He would be finished with him. Worship signifies several things, however:

- allegiance to the one who is worshiped (there is a duty of loyalty);
- the superiority of the one who is worshiped (worship flows from inferior to superior);
- dependence of the worshiper on the one who is worshiped (the worshiper acknowledges that he is not sufficient without the one who is worshiped).

Jesus realized that the symbolic act of bowing down and worshipping the devil would also carry with it a continuing obligation.

C. (:10) Scripture Quotation of Rebuttal

“Then Jesus said to him, ‘Begone, Satan!

For it is written, ‘You shall worship the Lord your God, and serve Him only.’”

Warren Wiersbe: Notice that Luke’s account reverses the order of the second and third temptations as recorded in Matthew. The word then in Matthew 4:5 seems to indicate sequence. Luke only uses the simple conjunction “and” and does not say he is following a sequence. Our Lord’s command at the end of the third temptation (“Get thee hence, Satan”) is proof that Matthew followed the historical order. There is no contradiction since Luke did not claim to follow the actual sequence.

Grant Osborne: Now the impetus shifts to Jesus, for Satan has to obey his command to leave (4:11). The use of the imperative and the brevity of the command are frequent in exorcisms (8:32; cf. Mark 1:25); Jesus takes charge, and the battle is over. The victory belongs to Jesus, and Satan can only skulk away.

(:11) EPILOGUE

A. Departure of the Devious Devil

“Then the devil left Him;”

B. Arrival of Ministering Angels

“and behold, angels came and began to minister to Him.”

D. A. Carson: Though the conflict has barely begun, the pattern of obedience and trust has been established. He has learned to resist the devil (cf. Jas 4:7). The angelic help is not some passing blessing but a sustained one (the imperfect tense is probably significant). Jesus had refused to relieve his hunger by miraculously turning stones to bread; now he is fed supernaturally (diēkonoun, “attended,” GK 1354, is often used in connection with food; e.g., Mt 8:15; 25:44; 27:55; Ac 6:2; cf. Elijah in 1Ki 19:6–7). He had refused to throw himself off the temple heights in the hope of angelic help; now angels feed him. He had refused to take a shortcut to inherit the kingdom of the world; now he fulfills Scripture by beginning his ministry and announcing the kingdom in Galilee of the Gentiles (vv.12–17).

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How can the same event be both a test from God and a temptation from Satan?
- 2) How can we check our priorities to make sure that we are not placing our confidence in material things?
- 3) Do we ever try to manipulate God to perform acts in our own self-interest that do not advance His kingdom agenda?
- 4) In what ways do angels minister to God’s people today?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Charles Swindoll: The episode of Jesus’ temptation by Satan in Matthew 4 leads to a hypothetical question often used by seminary professors who are trying to get their students to think through their doctrinal convictions: “Could Jesus have sinned in the wilderness?” The two responses are often posed this way: “Yes, Jesus could have sinned, being fully human —the temptation wouldn’t have been real if He was guaranteed victory.” Or, “No, Jesus couldn’t have sinned, being fully divine —it is impossible for God to sin.”

The answer to this question reveals everything about the soundness of one’s Christology —that is, the doctrine concerning Christ. The Bible teaches that Jesus is not just a man but is also God the Son. On the other hand, He is not just God but is also fully human. He is the God-man, fully God and fully human in one person (John 1:1, 14; Phil. 2:5-11). The Christian church has therefore definitively taught that Jesus has “two undiminished natures —human and divine —in one person, and that the unity of the two natures is ‘without confusion, without change, without division, without separation.’”

So the question as to whether Jesus could have sinned is solved by an understanding of the nature of His incarnation as the God-man. Because Jesus was fully human, He could be tempted by Satan and feel the full force of this temptation. However, because Jesus was simultaneously fully God, He could not sin but would be victorious over the temptation. This doesn’t make the temptation less real. A person can pummel a 12-inch-thick steel wall with a sledgehammer over and over again with every ounce of might he or she has, but the nature of the steel wall is such that it will not succumb to the pounding. In the same way, Satan unleashed a genuine attack on the God-man, but His nature is such that He was able to be tempted but unable to sin. . .

When we ponder Satan’s strategies and goals in leading us into temptations that test our faith and obedience, we need to keep some important principles in mind: something about Satan, something about Scripture, something about the Savior, and something about sin. These reminders and warnings aren't complicated. They're simple enough to memorize; in fact, I'd suggest that you do.

First, regarding Satan, remember that he's a defeated enemy —so don't fear and don't be intimidated in the face of his temptations.

Second, regarding Scripture, remember that it's alive and powerful —so don't hesitate to stand on it.

Third, regarding the Savior, remember that He's our Shield and Sustainer —so don't lean on your own strength.

Fourth, regarding sin, remember that you don't have to yield to temptation —so resist its call.

David Platt: As we consider the temptation of Jesus in Matthew 4:1-11, we'll begin by acknowledging six realities. These are really basic reminders that will help us wrap our minds around what is happening in this passage.

1. There is a spiritual world.
2. We are involved in a spiritual war.
3. Our enemy in this spiritual war is formidable.
4. The stakes in this spiritual war are eternal.
5. The scope of this spiritual war is universal.
6. Our involvement in this spiritual war is personal.

Michael Wilkins: Three important implications surface in reflecting on Jesus' temptations:

- (1) Satan's power. Satan does have significant influence over the people and powers of this world, but his influence is limited.
- (2) The Scripture's power. Temptations involve the twisting of reality, so the antidote comes from the truth of Scripture.
- (3) The Spirit's power. Jesus was guided and empowered by the Spirit in his temptations. He was never alone in his struggle, even at the most difficult moments. Jesus relied on the power of the Spirit to enable him to resist the devil's temptations.

Throughout his life Jesus gives the ultimate example of how Christians today can also overcome the temptations that will come our way: Resist the devil in the power of the Spirit through the guidance of the Word to accomplish the will of God.

G. Campbell Morgan: Here, then, is revealed the Man Whom God ordained to be King – God's archetypal Man, the perfect man – and as we look at Him we see that the supreme end of life is vocation; that the essence of life is spiritual; that the present expression of the spiritual fact and vocation is physical. Temptation commences in the external, which is physical; passes to the internal, which is spiritual; attacks finally the vocational, which is the supreme thing in the life of every man. This is the picture of human life, according to the purpose of God.

Daniel Doriani: Temptation invites a man or woman to take something that is good, when for some reason the person tempted does not have the right to that good thing or cannot, at that moment, use it properly. Thus temptation begins with something that is good and perverts it. So Satan tempted Jesus with good things, such as food and knowledge, by inviting him to take them for himself at that moment, even though he had no absolute right to them. Since food, knowledge, and honor are good and Jesus was a man, he was susceptible to the temptation to take them for himself, at the wrong place and time. In saying this, we do not question Jesus' sinlessness, we assert his humanity.

After forty days of fasting, Jesus might well want food. But would he take food in a self-interested way? To change rocks to food—to use his miraculous powers to satisfy his hunger—is to promote self-interest above God's cause. Similarly, to jump off the temple would be to force God to perform a miracle in the interest of personal security. To bow to Satan is to gain power without suffering.

Satan offered something good in all three temptations; that is why they tested Jesus.

Grant Osborne: Jesus exemplifies absolute surrender to the Father's will, and where Israel/we failed (in the areas of food, protection, and gaining kingdoms) Jesus succeeded by obeying God. Hagner says it well: "In this pericope we encounter a theme that is vital in the theology of the Gospels. The goal of obedience to the Father is accomplished, not by triumphant self-assertion, not by the exercise of power and authority, but paradoxically by the way of humility, service, and suffering. Therein lies true greatness (cf. 20:26–28)."

1 John 2:16	Eve (Gen 3:6)	Christ
Cravings of sinful people	Good for food	First temptation
Lust of their eyes	Pleasing to the eye	Third temptation
Boasting	Desirable for gaining wisdom	Second temptation

R. T. French: The most significant key to the understanding of this story is to be found in Jesus' three scriptural quotations. All come from Deut 6–8, the part of Moses' address to the Israelites before their entry into Canaan in which he reminds them of their forty years of wilderness experiences. It has been a time of preparation and of proving the faithfulness of their God. He has deliberately put them through a time of privation as an educative process. They have been learning, or should have been learning, what it means to live in trusting obedience to God: "As a father disciplines his son, so the Lord your God disciplines you." (Deut 8:5; for Israel as God's son cf. Exod 4:22; Jer 31:9; Hos 11:1–4) Among the lessons they should now have learned are not to depend on bread alone but rather on God's word (8:3), not to put God to the test (6:16), and to make God the exclusive object of their worship and obedience (6:13). Now another "Son of God" is in the wilderness, this time for forty days rather than forty years, as a preparation for entering into his divine calling. There in the wilderness he too faces those same tests, and he has learned the lessons which Israel had so imperfectly grasped. His Father is testing him in the school of privation, and his triumphant rebuttal of the devil's suggestions will ensure that the filial bond can survive in spite of the conflict that lies ahead. Israel's occupation of the promised land was at best a flawed fulfillment of the hopes with which they came to the Jordan, but this new "Son of God" will not fail and the new Exodus (to which we have seen a number of allusions in ch. 2) will succeed. "Where Israel of old stumbled and fell, Christ the new Israel stood firm." It is probably also significant that the passage of Deuteronomy from which Jesus' responses are drawn begins with the Šema', the text from Deut 6:4-5 recited daily in Jewish worship which requires Israel to "love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your strength;" it is precisely that total commitment to God that this wilderness experience is designed to test.

Bob Deffinbaugh: Beware of offers that promise things that God has not promised.

1. Super results. "Follow these methods," a youth leader is told, "and the size of your youth group will triple." "Raise your family this way," parents are told, "and your children will be obedient and follow Christ." "Use our fundraising plan," church leaders are told, "and you will raise so much money that your building fund goal will be exceeded."

2. Instant results. "Your ministry doesn't have to take years to develop," a seminary graduate is told. "Get a successful ministry now! Not later!"

3. Recognition and importance. "Be significant for God," we are told. "Be a leader in your church. Have impact for Christ. That's what successful Christians do."

4. No suffering. "God wants you to be blessed," Christians everywhere are being told. "Expect happiness and prosperity." Perhaps the most popular form this message takes in our circles today is fulfillment. "Enter this ministry," we are told, "and find fulfillment like you've never had before." Anytime you are offered a fulfilling ministry in this church or anywhere else, watch out! Somebody is trying to sell you something.

S. Lewis Johnson: Now let me sum up in just a sentence, what is meant by the temptation from the standpoint of the argument of the Gospel of Matthew? It's evident by virtue of our Lord's victory in the temptation, that he is seen to be qualified morally to be the Davidic sovereign. If there was any question about his moral qualifications, they vanish in the victory of the struggle with Satan.

And second, he is perfectly qualified morally to be our Savior, impeccable in his holiness and righteousness, as well as loving in the plan and will of God. It's interesting that Milton concluded his Paradise Lost with this.

And finally the Lord Jesus is seen to be perfectly qualified morally to be a sympathetic high priest. I know that you often think that your hope in the Christian life, when you run into difficulty, is to run into some other Christian and speak to them about your spiritual needs and troubles. I do not want to discourage you from doing this as occasion may suggest it. But I do want to suggest to you that the important counseling is done by the Lord Jesus himself. And the great psychologist and psychiatrist, the great source of truth and guidance for the Christian, is our great High Priest in heaven.

TEXT: Matthew 4:12-25

TITLE: SUMMARY OF POWERFUL IMPACT OF EARLY GALILEAN MINISTRY

BIG IDEA:

MANIFESTING THE LIGHT OF JESUS TO A WORLD LOST IN DARKNESS REQUIRES COMMITTED DISCIPLESHIP, EFFECTIVE SOUL WINNING AND IMPACTFUL KINGDOM WORDS AND WORKS

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: The preliminary events are over, and it is time for Jesus to engage in his messianic mission. Like Mark 1:14, Matthew begins after John the Baptist is imprisoned; John 1–5 shows that Jesus' ministry actually began earlier, interspersing ministry in Judea and Galilee before moving to Capernaum. So the Synoptic Gospels actually begin later in Jesus' ministry.

Irving Jensen: Matthew's reporting skips most of the first year of Jesus' ministry. Only John reports the early Judean ministry of that year (John 1:19 – 4:42). The passage in this unit opens Jesus' Galilean ministry, beginning the second year of His mission.

E. Michael Green: Fresh from his baptism and temptation, Jesus launches his public ministry. Matthew stresses the fact that it continues that of John. John is arrested by Herod, and imprisoned in the terrible dungeons of Machaerus; Jesus immediately and boldly replaces him. John preached repentance, and that is precisely the subject of Jesus' preaching. Not for the first time, nor for the last, does Matthew stress the continuity of Jesus' work with all that had gone before. Very soon he will expand on the content of Jesus' teaching, but first of all he gives us some indication of his initial impact and the characteristics of the budding ministry.

J. C. Ryle: We have in these verses the beginning of our Lord's ministry among men. He enters on His labors among a dark and ignorant people. He chooses men to be His companions and disciples. He confirms His ministry by miracles which rouse the attention of all Syria and draw multitudes to hear Him.

John MacArthur: Jesus is the day star. Jesus is the bright and morning star. Jesus is the One of whom Malachi said, "The sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his beams." And "the sun" there is spelled s-u-n, and that is the great reality of this tremendous text in Matthew. Look again at verse 16, "The people who sat in darkness saw a great light; and to them who sat in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up." You see, Matthew sees the darkness of man, and he calls the light of Jesus Christ to bear upon the darkness of man, and here he's really quoting the great prophet Isaiah, as we shall see in a few moments. This is how Matthew introduces the ministry of Jesus. It is the light dawning on the darkness. . .

Jesus had a clear, explicit plan. The plan was this: by words and works He would establish His deity. By the things that He did and the things that He said, He would make manifest who He really was.

Walter Wilson: With John off the stage, Jesus returns to Galilee, his relocation from Nazareth to Capernaum according with biblical prophecy, thereby likening the advent of his public ministry to the dawning of a new age in salvation history, an age that brings light to all people, even the gentiles. Like John, Jesus proclaims a message of repentance. Unlike John, he also calls disciples who will “follow” him in his journeys through Galilee and share in his ministry, summoning them with irresistible authority. Before they can “fish” for other disciples, however, these fishermen must abandon both their livelihood and their familial connections, thereby becoming “brothers” of both Jesus and other members of the messianic movement. As they accompany Jesus, they learn how the ministry of the kingdom includes acts of both word and deed, the latter coming to expression especially in miracles of healing, which attract large crowds from throughout the region. An appropriate audience is assembled, then, for the delivery of the Messiah’s first major address.

I. (:12-17) THE LIGHT DAWNS IN THE DARKNESS OF GALILEE -- BEGINNING THE CAPERNAUM MINISTRY

Donald Hagner: This passage serves as an important transition, bringing Jesus to Galilee where his ministry is to have its formal beginning. Jesus has been prepared by the baptism and the temptation in the wilderness, the stage is fully set, and now comes the word that John has been arrested: the work of the forerunner is complete. Jesus comes to Nazareth and to Capernaum beside the sea, and in these regions, so significant in their correspondence to the prophecy of Isaiah, Jesus begins to proclaim the presence of the kingdom by word and deed: a great light appears to those who sit in darkness. Thus, as G. Dalman (Sacred Sites and Ways [London: SPCK, ET 1935] 183) puts it, “the loveliest lake of Palestine remains the place where God’s redeeming power appeared to men for the first time on earth in a new guise, like a light, and thus was the prophetic word (Isa 8:23; 9:1) concerning the great light in the land of Zebulun and Naphtali abundantly fulfilled.” The gospel in its essence is the proclamation of the good news of the dawning of God’s rule. With that rule begins a new frame of salvation-history, one closely related to the eschaton itself.

A. (:12-16) Relocation to Capernaum in Galilee to Bring Light to a People in Need

1. (:12) Withdrawing from Judea

“Now when He heard that John had been taken into custody, He withdrew into Galilee;”

R. T. France: The continuity between John and Jesus is recognized by the link made here, and yet there is a clear sense of discontinuity, of a new and different ministry beginning in a new location. This “withdrawal” was in part a matter of political wisdom: in view of John’s conflict with Antipas his “successor” could not expect to be safe in the same area, especially if, as Josephus tells us (Ant. 18:118), Antipas saw the baptizing movement as a potential source of sedition. Galilee was, of course, also under Antipas, but an itinerant preacher touring the Galilean villages was a less obvious target for political concern than John’s centripetal campaign by the Jordan. News of John’s fate will again cause Jesus to “withdraw” in 14:13.

John Phillips: In Jesus’ day nine cities bordered the lake and a busy life went on all around it. Township ran into township about the feet of the green western hills, and along the shore there were docks and harbors. Farmers elbowed fishermen; dockworkers jostled coopers and shipwrights. Fishing and fish curing were big business, employing thousands of families and making Galilee famous in the Roman world long before the Gospels were written. An intricate system of aqueducts carried water to the farms and orchards. There were dyeworks at Magdala and pottery kilns and shipyards at Capernaum. Presiding over the whole scene was the regal city of Tiberias with its magnificent Herodian palace, where Greek sculptures shone in the sun and reminded the Jews that their land was in the hands of the Gentiles. Walking the roads of Galilee, a Jew would meet long caravans heading south to the fords of Jordan. He would meet Rome's marching cohorts encased in iron, and their officers richly arrayed in armor adorned with purple and gold. He would meet Phoenician merchants bringing the treasures of lands across the sea to the bazaars and markets of a hundred towns. He would see chariots of the wealthy, troops of gladiators, and bands of roving entertainers coming to play before the cosmopolitans of Caesarea, Tiberias, and Decapolis. This was "Galilee of the Gentiles" (Matthew 4:15), as the proud Judeans contemptuously termed it. This was where Jesus chose to live.

John MacArthur: Well, so Jesus chose Galilee. The whole idea must have been just offensive to Jerusalem Jews. That the Messiah would settle in Capernaum of Galilee. You've gotta be kidding. There are no theologians there. That's a place where people are farmers and fishermen. The outstanding Jewish minds were in Jerusalem. The revelation of God was to be in Jerusalem. That was the sacred city and the only fitting place for the Messiah. It must have been as offensive to them as was the announcement of John, here in the fourth chapter, when he announces to the whole world when he wrote his gospel that the first person Jesus ever revealed His messiahship to was a Samaritan.

Galilee? A Galilean messiah was ludicrous. In John chapter 7, verse 40, "Many of the people therefore, when they heard this saying, 'Of a truth this is the Prophet.'" Many of them said that. 'Others said, 'This is the Christ.' But some said, 'Shall Christ come out of Galilee?'' Galilee?! 'Can anything good come out of Nazareth?'' And later on that same crowd, in John 7:52, "Answered and said to him, 'Are you also of Galilee? Search, and look: for out of Galilee arises no prophet.'" What are you talkin' about?

2. (:13) Settling in Capernaum

"and leaving Nazareth, He came and settled in Capernaum, which is by the sea, in the region of Zebulun and Naphtali."

R. T. France: Jesus' relocation (the combination of kataleipō and katoikeō indicates a decisive move away to a new home) took him from the rather remote hill-village in which he had been brought up (see on 2:23 for Nazareth) to a busy lake-side town set among other thriving villages which depended largely on the productive fishing industry of the Lake of Galilee. He thus gained a more public platform for his proclamation, as well as escaping the suspicion attaching to a local boy who becomes a celebrity (see on 13:54–58). Matthew records only one return to Nazareth, whereas Capernaum and the neighboring lakeshore communities will be the setting for most of the Galilean ministry. It is sobering to note, however, that even Capernaum, favored with so much of Jesus' presence, will be denounced as unresponsive in 11:23–24.

Capernaum was an important settlement on the north-western shore of the lake, and the presence there of a centurion (8:5) and a customs post (9:9) indicates that it was a local administrative center. The population in the first century was perhaps as high as 10,000, substantially bigger than Nazareth. While Capernaum had its resident Roman officials, it was a traditionally Jewish town, very different from the newly-established Hellenistic city of Tiberias a little further down the Western shore. While Luke and Josephus more correctly speak of the "Lake" of Galilee, Matthew, Mark and John consistently refer to this inland fresh-water lake as a "sea" (reflecting the OT name yām-kinneret, Num 34:11 etc.), but in my translation (except in v. 15, see comments below) and in the commentary, I have thought it less misleading to modern readers to use “lake.”

In the traditional tribal allocation after the conquest the tribes of Zebulun and Naphtali shared the area between the Lake of Galilee and the territory of Asher along the Mediterranean coast. The lakeshore area originally belonged to Naphtali, while Nazareth was in Zebulun, but tribal areas had little actual relevance by NT times. Matthew combines the two tribes in order to echo Isaiah’s prophecy.

Grant Osborne: The importance of the tribal names is seen in the chiasm in vv. 13b–15:

A Galilee
B by the sea
C Zebulun and Naphtali
C' Zebulun and Naphtali
B' toward the sea
A' Galilee

3. (:14-16) Fulfilling OT Prophecy of the Dawning of a Great Light

“This was to fulfill what was spoken through Isaiah the prophet, saying, 15 ‘The land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali, By the way of the sea, beyond the Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles-- 16 The people who were sitting in darkness saw a great light, And to those who were sitting in the land and shadow of death, Upon them a light dawned.’”

Van Parunak: Isaiah promised that the northern districts, which were the first to feel the oppression of Mesopotamian invaders, would also be the first to enjoy the blessing of the coming kingdom. When our Lord moves from Nazareth (in Zebulun) to Capernaum (in Naphtali), both of the tribes mentioned by Isaiah are associated with his ministry.

R. T. France: Matthew sets the geographical scene more carefully than Mark, both by noting Jesus’ removal from Nazareth to Capernaum and by giving it theological significance by means of another formula-quotation. The effect of his reference to Isa 9:1–2 is to designate Galilee as the place of light, as opposed to the darkness which we shall eventually find to be settled over Judea. The dawning light is heralded in Jesus’ proclamation, and the succeeding section of the gospel set in and around Galilee will be essentially one of light and hope, as light shines on the people at large and they respond gladly to it, despite the hostility of some whose special interest keeps them from welcoming it. Galilee is the place where the mission will be enthusiastically launched and developed (and from which eventually, after the conflict and rejection in Judea, the mission will be relaunched to reach all nations, 28:16–20). Even as early as this there is a further hint (cf 1:3–6; 2:1–12, and the Abrahamic theme of 1:1; 3:9) that Jesus’ messianic mission extends beyond Israel alone, in Isaiah’s loaded phrase “Galilee of the nations.”

John Walvoord: These prophecies [commenting on Is. 9], as interpreted in their normal literal sense, predicted fulfillment of the expectation of a kingdom on earth after the second coming of Christ in keeping with the premillennial interpretation of Scripture. There was nothing in this passage that corresponded to the present reign of Christ on earth or the present position of Christ in heaven, the interpretation of amillenarians. In this passage, as in many passages in the Old Testament, the first and second coming of Christ were not distinguished and the Child who was born (Isa 9:6) in Bethlehem in His first coming will be the same Person described as the Everlasting King who will reign forever (Isa 9:7). The theme of the future kingdom of Christ on earth was a familiar subject of the prophecies of Isaiah (Isaiah 11:4; Isa 16:5; Isa 28:5-6, 17; Isa 32:16; Isa 33:5; Isa 42:1, 3-4; Isa 51:5).

Warren Wiersbe: The “light” that Isaiah promised was the Light of the Word of God, as well as the Light of His perfect life and compassionate ministry.

G. Campbell Morgan: Now He made Capernaum His base of operations, that neglected city living under the shadow of death. When He came, men saw Life at its highest, and its best, according to a Divine Ideal; the Light of Love flashed over their sorrows and their sins; the Light of Truth illuminated the dark corners, and revealed evil things. There, in the midst of the darkness and in the midst of the need, He struck the key-note of His ministry.

William Barclay: Of all parts of Palestine, Galilee was most open to new ideas. Josephus says of the Galilaeans: ‘They were ever fond of innovations, and by nature disposed to changes, and delighted in seditions.’ They were always ready to follow a leader and to begin an insurrection. They were notoriously quick in temper and given to quarrelling. Yet for all that, they were the most brave and honourable people. ‘The Galilaeans’, said Josephus, ‘have never been destitute of courage.’ ‘Cowardice was never a characteristic of the Galilaeans.’ ‘They were ever more anxious for honour than for gain.’ The inborn characteristics of the Galilaeans were such as to make them most fertile ground for a new gospel to be preached to them.

This openness to new ideas was due to certain facts.

(1) The name Galilee comes from the Hebrew word galil which means a circle. The full name of the area was Galilee of the Gentiles. In his commentary on Matthew, A. Plummer wishes to take that to mean ‘heathenish Galilee’. But the phrase came from the fact that Galilee was literally surrounded by Gentiles. On the west, the Phoenicians were its neighbours. To the north and the east, there were the Syrians. And even to the south, there lay the territory of the Samaritans. Galilee was in fact the one part of Palestine that was inevitably in touch with non-Jewish influences and ideas. Galilee was bound to be open to new ideas in a way that no other part of Palestine was.

(2) The great roads of the world passed through Galilee, as we saw when we were thinking of the town of Nazareth. The Way of the Sea led from Damascus through Galilee right down to Egypt and to Africa. The Road to the East led through Galilee away out to the frontiers. The traffic of the world passed through Galilee. Down in the south, Judaea is tucked into a corner, isolated and secluded. As it has been well said, ‘Judaea is on the way to nowhere: Galilee is on the way to everywhere.’ Judaea could erect a fence and keep all foreign influence and all new ideas out; Galilee could never do that. Into Galilee, the new ideas were bound to come.

(3) Galilee’s geographical position had affected its history. Again and again it had been invaded and conquered, and the tides of the other nations had often flowed over it and had sometimes engulfed it.

B. (:17) Repentance Preached to Prepare Sinners for the Kingdom

*“From that time Jesus began to preach and say,

Grant Osborne: “From that time” (ἀπὸ τότε) is a significant transition found three times in this gospel (4:17; 16:21; 26:16) and indicates a new start. Several believe that “from that time Jesus began to” (4:17; 16:21) indicates the major sections of Matthew’s gospel and divide the book accordingly (1:1 – 4:16; 4:17 – 16:20; 16:21 – 28:20). While this is viable, it probably reads too much into the phrase. More likely, it indicates a new phase to Jesus’ ministry. The time of preparation is over, and Jesus begins to proclaim his kingdom message.

R. T. France: If the announcement of “God’s kingship” in v. 17 might lead the reader to expect some dramatic development in world history, the character of these first recruits offers a different perspective: four local fishermen do not sound like a world-changing task-force. The parable of the mustard seed (13:31–32) will spell out the paradoxical character and insignificant beginnings of the kingdom of God.

Warren Wiersbe: In the New Testament, the word kingdom means “rule, reign, authority” rather than a place or a specific realm. The phrase “kingdom of heaven” refers to the rule of God. The Jewish leaders wanted a political leader who would deliver them from Rome, but Jesus came to bring spiritual rule to the hearts of people. This does not deny the reality of a future kingdom as we have already noted.

Leon Morris: Jesus began with the same emphasis as John the Baptist had. The two go together: if the kingdom of God is near, then clearly people cannot be complacent. They must prepare for that kingdom, and that means repenting of their sins. Jesus calls on them to realize that they are unfit for the kingdom of heaven and to repent accordingly. Such preaching is a clarion call to action, not a recipe for slothful complacency. We should not overlook the importance of this call to repentance at the very beginning of Jesus’ ministry; everything else follows from that. Matthew has often been seen as one who stresses the importance of good works, and of course he does. But this must not be held in such a form that his emphasis on grace is missed. From the beginning Jesus took it for granted that people are sinners, and accordingly his first message was that they must repent. Only so would they know the forgiveness he came to bring. . .

There is a sense in which God has acted decisively in sending his Son: the kingdom is here in his words and deeds. But there is another sense in which the culmination of the kingdom in all its fulness is a future reality: the best is yet to be. Both truths are important.

William Barclay: Finally, Matthew gives us a brief one-sentence summary of the message which Jesus brought. The Authorized Version and Revised Standard Version both say that Jesus began to preach. The word preach has come down in the world; it is all too unfortunately connected in the minds of many people with boredom. The word in Greek is kērussein, which is the word for a herald’s proclamation from a king. Kērux is the Greek word for herald, and the herald was the man who brought a message direct from the king.

This word tells us of certain characteristics of the preaching of Jesus, and these are characteristics which should be in all preaching.

(1) The herald had in his voice a note of certainty. There was no doubt about his message; he did not come with perhapses and maybes and probablys; he came with a definite message. The German poet Goethe had it: ‘Tell me of your certainties: I have doubts enough of my own.’ Preaching is the proclamation of certainties, and we cannot make others sure of that about which we ourselves are in doubt.

(2) The herald had in his voice the note of authority. He was speaking for the king; he was laying down and announcing the king's law, the king's command and the king's decision. As was said of a great preacher, 'He did not cloudily guess; he knew.' Preaching, as it has been put, is the application of prophetic authority to the present situation.

(3) The herald's message came from a source beyond himself; it came from the king. Preaching speaks from a source beyond the preacher. It is not the expression of one individual's personal opinions; it is the voice of God transmitted through that person to the people. It was with the voice of God that Jesus spoke to men and women.

John MacArthur: Can I add one little note here? I like to mention that Jesus preached, because I believe in preaching, and I'm always running into people who aren't sure we oughtta preach. They're not sure there's a place for preaching. Maybe we oughtta just have small group studies and things like that. Jesus preached. The word is kruss. It means "to proclaim." The fine Bible commentary writer named Lenski says this: "The point to be noted is that to preach is not to argue or reason or dispute or convince by intellectual proof against all of which a keen intellect may bring counter argument. We simply state in public, or testify to all men the truth, which God bids us state. No argument can assail the truth presented in this announcement or testimony. Men either believe the truth, as all sane men should, or refuse to believe it, as only fools venture to do," end quote. It's a great thing to preach.

II. (:18-22) THE RADICAL CALL TO TOTAL DISCIPLESHIP COMMITMENT AND THE MISSION OF SOUL WINNING

A. (:18-20) Calling of Peter and Andrew

R. T. France: Hitherto Jesus, while briefly involved with John and others by the Jordan, has been presented as operating alone. But it is significant that his first recorded action is to gather a group of followers, who will commit themselves to a total change of lifestyle which involves them in joining Jesus as his essential support group for the whole period of his public ministry. From this point on we shall not read stories about Jesus alone, but stories about Jesus and his disciples. Wherever he goes they will go; their presence with Jesus, even if not explicitly mentioned, is assumed. While the Twelve will not be formally listed until 10:1-4, the stories from here on will assume a wider group of disciples than just these first four. They will be the primary audience for his teaching (5:1-2) and witnesses of his works of power, but they are also called to be his active helpers in the task of "fishing for people," as we shall discover in ch. 10. The first time Jesus will be left alone after this point will be when eventually the disciples desert him in the garden of Gethsemane (26:56). Until then, Matthew's story is not only that of the Messiah, but also of the messianic community which is being formed around him. The placing of this incident right at the beginning makes it clear that that was Jesus' intention.

Grant Osborne: Jesus calls his first followers and immediately gives them a new kind of ministry, fishing for people. There are three major points here:

- (1) The creative force in discipleship is Jesus, and the task of every follower is to surrender to his active presence.
- (2) The purpose of discipleship is evangelistic, to learn a whole new type of "fishing."
- (3) The demand is for radical surrender, to leave everything in order to follow Christ.

The emphasis is also on their radical response to the call. Simon and Andrew “immediately” (v. 20) leave both vocation and home. This introduces the theme of radical discipleship in Matthew; Jesus has absolute priority over occupation and family. This is also shown when we compare 1 Kgs 19:19–21 (the call of Elisha), where Elisha was plowing his field when Elijah called him. There he was allowed to kiss his parents good-bye, while here and in 8:21–22 there is no time to bid family farewell. The radical nature of Jesus’ demand leaves no room for farewells.

David Platt: Now let me be very careful here: I am not saying, and I would not say based on the whole of the New Testament, that all followers of Jesus must lose their careers, sell or give away all their possessions, leave their families behind, and physically die for the gospel. But the New Testament is absolutely clear that for all who follow Jesus, comfort and certainty in this world are no longer your concerns. Your career revolves around whatever Jesus calls you to do and however He wants to use you to spread the good news of the kingdom. Your possessions are not your own, and you forsake material pleasure in this world in order to live for eternal treasure in the world to come. And this could mean that you sell or give away everything you have. After all, position is no longer your priority.

Donald Hagner: But for Matthew, the placement of the passage is also important in that it fits in with his emphasis on the importance and nature of discipleship, something he will stress in the major discourse that follows the brief description of the ministry of Jesus in vv 23–25. Thus the evangelist uses the tradition for historical purposes, showing the way in which Jesus gathered disciples, but also for pastoral purposes directly relevant to his readers. That is, the calling of these disciples serves as a model of the nature of true discipleship generally. The call of God through Jesus is sovereign and absolute in its authority; the response of those who are called is to be both immediate and absolute, involving a complete break with old loyalties. The actual shape of this break with the past will undoubtedly vary from individual to individual, but that there must be a fundamental, radical reorientation of a person’s priorities is taken for granted. As the first disciples were called and responded, so are Matthew’s readers called to respond. Such response is of primary importance if they are to participate in the new reality of the kingdom. And with discipleship comes the task of bringing others into the kingdom—a task for which Jesus equips those whom he calls (cf. 28:18–20).

1. (:18-19) Initiating Call by Jesus of Peter and Andrew

*“And walking by the Sea of Galilee, He saw two brothers, Simon who was called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea; for they were fishermen.
19 And He said to them, ‘Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men.’”*

Robert Gundry: The word for “net” means a net with weights attached to its perimeter. When cast into the sea it would enclose fish as it sank to the bottom. Then the fishermen drew the weighted perimeter together to prevent the fish from escaping and raised the net containing the fish.

S. Lewis Johnson: So, if the king is to have a kingdom, it would be natural to expect that he should have disciples. So as he begins his ministry, he begins to call his disciples. And incidentally, you notice that he calls them.

John MacArthur: In one of his books, S. D. Gordon pictures Gabriel as engaged in a dialogue with Christ shortly after the ascension. The angel is asking Christ about the plans for evangelism, and Jesus said, “Well I asked Peter and James and John and Andrew and a few others to make it the business of their lives to tell people. Then, those others would tell others, and finally the whole world would hear the story and feel the power of it.” In the legend, Gabriel said, “But suppose, they don’t tell others. What then?” Jesus answered quietly, “Oh, I have no other plans. I’m counting on them. I have no other plans.”

Have you ever analyzed how Jesus trained soul winners? Let me just give you some brief insights. Our time is nearly gone. First, listen to this. As you look at the New Testament, this is what you find. How did Jesus win people? They watched Him. He didn’t give them 45 lectures. He just did it, and they watched and they learned. . .

For three years, Jesus trained His men how to be available, how to have no favorites, how to be sensitive, how to secure a public confession, how to use love and tenderness and how to take time and to apply everything they ever knew as fishermen; patience, perseverance, courage, an eye for the right moment, and hide themselves in the midst of all of it. I think whoever said it is right when he said, “Evangelism is not taught as much as it’s caught,” like everything else in the Christian life.

2. (:20) Immediate Response of Total Commitment

E. Michael Green: There may have been something about fishermen, too, that made them particularly suitable for the ‘fishing for people’ that they would be doing in future. A good fisherman in those waters needs courage, for dangerous squalls erupt on that treacherous lake. He needs perseverance, patience and flexibility in the use of different methods (three types of fishing-net were used). He must keep himself unobtrusive so as not to frighten the fish away, and he must have a sense of timing. All these qualities were essential in the new kind of fishing to which this landsman introduced them.

Warren Wiersbe: Why would Jesus call so many fishermen to His side? For one thing, fishermen were busy people; usually professional fishermen did not sit around doing nothing. They either sorted their catch, prepared for a catch, or mended their equipment. The Lord needs busy people who are not afraid to work.

Fishermen have to be courageous and patient people. It certainly takes patience and courage to win others to Christ. Fishermen must have skill; they must learn from others where to find the fish and how to catch them. Soul winning demands skill too. These men had to work together, and the work of the Lord demands cooperation. But most of all, fishing demands faith: Fishermen cannot see the fish and are not sure their nets will enclose them. Soul winning requires faith and alertness too, or we will fail.

B. (:21-22) Calling of James and John

1. (:21) Initiating Call by Jesus of James and John

“And going on from there He saw two other brothers, James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, in the boat with Zebedee their father, mending their nets; and He called them.”

2. (:22) Immediate Response

III. (:23-25) SUMMARY OF POWERFUL IMPACT OF HIS INITIAL MINISTRY

Walter Wilson: Like Matthew's other summary statements, the overview provided in 4:23–25 emphasizes the scale and effectiveness of Jesus's ministry, special attention being drawn to his acts of healing. The general impression is not only of a man on the move but also of a man whose renown spawns a far-flung movement, with people streaming to Jesus from many places. While the preceding story had illustrated the impact of Jesus's words, here the focus is on both his words and his deeds, the complementarity of the two passages establishing a pattern that will be replicated more fully in the ensuing chapters, where a presentation of "the Messiah of the word" (5:1 – 7:29) is joined to a presentation of "the Messiah of the deed" (8:1 – 9:35). The fact that the wording of 4:23 corresponds closely to that of 9:35 supports this feature, the two verses creating a frame around the intervening material that encourages the reader to interpret its contents as a unity. Accordingly, our passage can be understood as a heading for what follows, with the contents of chapters 5–9 providing specific illustrations of what 4:23–25 portrays in general terms. In the depiction of the Messiah's "deeds," we encounter a new element, the practice of healing distinguishing Jesus from John but (eventually) binding him to the disciples he has just called (cf. 10:1, 8). No doubt the expectation that the messianic era would usher in a time of human health and wholeness would have helped generate a sense of anticipation in this regard.

A. (:23) Three Aspects of Ministry – Impactful Kingdom Words and Works

1. Teaching Ministry

“And Jesus was going about in all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues,

Michael Wilkins: Approximately forty-five miles from north to south and twenty-five miles from east to west, Galilee must have been intensively cultivated and extensively populated in Jesus' day. Conservative estimates place the population at around 300,000 people in the two hundred or more villages and towns in Galilee, which make for a large citizenry to whom Jesus presents the message of the kingdom.

R. T. France: The mention of "proclaiming the good news" alongside "teaching" in the synagogues is perhaps not simply repetition but rather distinguishes informal preaching to gathered crowds from the more formal opportunity to speak by invitation in a regular weekly assembly; the content is however unlikely to have differed significantly.

E. Michael Green: First, he preached (17, 23). The word kēryssein was used to describe the work of the herald in a Greek city. It involved bold, clear, challenging proclamation. When the herald had something to proclaim, people had better listen. It was important. It came with the authority of the civic authorities. Effective preaching today has an arresting quality and a sense of authority that far transcend the personality of the preacher.

Secondly, Jesus gave himself to teaching (23), explaining the difficulties people found in his preaching, clearing up misunderstandings and changing attitudes. Teaching is directed primarily towards informing the mind; preaching towards reaching the will.

2. Preaching Ministry

“and proclaiming the gospel of the kingdom,”

3. Healing Ministry

“and healing every kind of disease and every kind of sickness among the people.”

Grant Osborne: Christ has now fully prepared for his ministry proper. He has “fulfilled all righteousness” by being baptized (3:15), proven himself to be Son of God by passing the test against Satan, moved to Galilee in fulfillment of Scripture, and chosen a nucleus of his followers. Now he is ready to begin, and Matthew wants to tell of his actions as well as his teaching, i.e., his works and his words. So we begin with a summary of his early ministry in Galilee. Matthew centers on Jesus’ message before an extended narration of his powerful ministry of healing, nature miracles, and exorcisms (chs. 8–9). In this sense 4:23–25 is transitional, concluding the preliminary stages of Jesus’ ministry in chs. 3–4 and introducing the Sermon on the Mount in chs. 5–7.

Leon Morris: the impression Matthew leaves is that of the breadth of Jesus’ ministry at this time, not of its narrowness. It is better to understand it as a reference to the general populace. Matthew stresses that Jesus healed them all, a fact that differentiates him from the healers of antiquity (or, for that matter, in modern times). Those healers had their successes and their failures, but Jesus had complete mastery over illness; he healed all who came to him.

Charles Swindoll: Since the practices of teaching and preaching were able to convey Jesus’ central message, why did He engage in healing sickness and disease?

- First, the miracles Jesus did proved that He had divine authority in His teaching and preaching. People couldn’t reject His message without rejecting God Himself.
- Second, the miracles demonstrated that God is compassionate; He cares about not only spiritual needs but also physical needs.
- Third, the miracles verified that Jesus was the prophesied Messiah, whose mission included the ushering in of a kingdom in which sickness, disease, suffering, and death would be vanquished.
- Finally, His miracles proved that the offer of the kingdom to Israel was legitimate — the One who had authority over sickness, disease, and demonic forces could be taken seriously when He offered the kingdom of God to those who repented and accepted Him as Messiah.

B. (:24) Growing Reputation of His Healing Ministry

1. Spreading News

And the news about Him went out into all Syria;”

2. Severe Disabilities

“and they brought to Him all who were ill, taken with various diseases and pains, demoniacs, epileptics, paralytics;”

Craig Blomberg: Matthew enumerates several categories of maladies that Jesus cures. Examples of all of these will subsequently be illustrated. The most striking on the list is demon possession, which Matthew carefully distinguishes from ordinary diseases, including epilepsy (“those having seizures”). Contrary to what many today believe, the ancient world regularly and carefully distinguished between afflictions ascribed to demons and other forms of illness. Demon possession was viewed as a unique situation in which an evil spirit actually took control of an individual, acting and speaking through that person in at least partial independence of his or her own volition and consciousness. Almost everyone in ancient societies believed in the reality of demon possession, and striking examples of it remain common enough today so as to be deniable only through severe naturalistic prejudice. Jesus' miracle working understandably attracts crowds, but those in the crowds will need to be instructed on what true discipleship involves if they are to become genuine followers.

John Nolland: The listing is not particularly intended to specify disease types; it is rather to underline the massive range and scale of Jesus' healing activity. In his survey of disease, Matthew's thought ranges over the pain and suffering involved, the imprisoning control of evil spirits, the episodic attacks of maladies such as epilepsy (the word used points to folk belief that the influence of the moon was involved, and it may well have a wider reference than to epilepsy), and the awful limitations imposed by paralysis.

A thread runs from the uses of 'whole' and 'every' in v. 23 ('the whole of Galilee', 'every disease and every sickness') through the uses of 'whole' and 'all' in v. 24 ('all those sick', 'the whole of Syria') and on in v. 25 to the list of all the parts of Jewish Palestine. Matthew is concerned to create an image of comprehensiveness, clearly in the interests of asserting the scale of the significance of Jesus.

3. Supernatural Healings

"and He healed them."

Grant Osborne: The primary thrust is the incredible extent of Jesus' ministry. He impacted everyone he met and healed as many as came to him. His reputation exploded to the point that people were coming to him from everywhere. Yet it is not just the power of his ministry but also the compassion of his ministry that is so meaningful. We will see this "hermeneutic of love" again, as he was willing to break religious taboos and traditional demands (e.g., healing on a Sabbath) whenever there was a need. He healed everyone he could, each person who was brought to him. He cared deeply about them all.

C. (:25) Comprehensive Geographic Breadth of Ministry

"And great multitudes followed Him from Galilee and Decapolis and Jerusalem and Judea and from beyond the Jordan."

R. T. France: In view of the various sources of opposition to Jesus which we shall encounter in chs. 11–16 (even including the Galilean communities of Nazareth, 13:53–58, and of Chorazin, Bethsaida and Capernaum, 11:20–24), it is important for Matthew's readers to keep in mind this overall impression of general enthusiasm for Jesus' Galilean ministry which he has provided at the outset.

Grant Osborne: Every great revival in history has been accompanied by great excitement and innumerable converts, from the Josianic revival in 2 Chr 34:29 – 35:19, or the Wesley revival in England, or the two great awakenings in America. Jesus saw similar results, with people coming from everywhere to see him (even more, see Mark 1:21–45). This kind of "frenzy" is needed today. It is happening in China, and we desperately need to develop teachers there who can harness the energy and direct it to worldwide evangelism. Yet we also need that energy for the Lord in the Western world as well.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why did Isaiah prophecy that light would dawn in those northern regions?
- 2) How should you respond to people today who tend to denigrate the value of preaching and seek to promote more non-authoritative types of interactions over God's truth?
- 3) Why shouldn't we expect a lot of kingdom type miracles in today's church context?
- 4) What do you think about the following statement: "The New Testament pattern for discipleship is more about 'go and tell' than 'come and see.'"

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

David Platt: What does it mean to follow Jesus as a genuine disciple?

Follow

- A. Live with radical abandonment for His glory.
 1. We leave behind all things.
 2. We live for one thing: to honor the King.
- B. Live with joyful dependence on His grace.
 1. He takes the initiative to choose us.
 2. He provides the power to use us.
 3. He gets the glory through us.
- C. Live with faithful adherence to His person.
 1. We are not casual listeners.
 2. We are not convinced listeners.
 3. We are committed learners and followers.
- D. Live with total trust in His authority.
 1. He is the Master of every domain in our lives.
 2. He is the Lord of every detail in our lives.
- E. Live with urgent obedience to His mission.
 1. Every follower of Jesus is a fisher of men.
 2. Every disciple is a disciple-maker.
 3. This is an unconventional plan that demands a universal response.

Will You Follow Jesus?

- A. Consider the cost of discipleship.
- B. Consider the cost of non-discipleship.

Charles Swindoll: After departing the Jordan River Valley in the vicinity of Jericho, Jesus returned briefly to Nazareth, then ministered around the Sea of Galilee, establishing His base in the city of Capernaum. He would call His first disciples along the seacoast.

Ray Pritchard: Somewhere in my past I heard the story about a man who was a phenomenal fisherman. He was so good that his fame spread far and wide. When everyone else was catching two or three fish a day he would come back with two or three hundred. Eventually the local game warden decided to investigate because it just sounded too good to be true. On a certain day, the game warden showed up at the man's door, identified himself, and asked to go fishing with him. The man was agreeable to that and off they went to the lake. When they got into the boat, immediately the warden noticed that something didn't seem right. The man didn't have any fishing poles or bait. He didn't even have a tackle box. All he had was a small duffel bag.

So off they went, chatting about this and that until the man maneuvered the boat to the middle of the lake. Without a word, he turned off the motor, reached into the duffel bag and pulled out what looked like a stick of dynamite. Before the warden could say anything, he lit it and threw it into the water. It exploded with a mighty roar and stunned fish by the dozens floated to the surface. The man calmly started his boat and began gathering the fish in his net.

The warden said, "Now see here. This is highly illegal." But the man just laughed and steered the boat to another part of the lake. He did the same thing with a second stick of dynamite and sure enough more fish floated to the surface.

By this time the warden had seen enough. He said, "Mister, you've broken so many laws I can't even begin to count them." The man just laughed and pulled out another stick of dynamite. The warden kept on talking. "This is illegal possession of dynamite and illegal detonation of dangerous material and disturbing the peace and about a half-dozen other misdemeanors and felonies." While the warden was talking, the man calmly lit the stick of dynamite and handed it to the game warden. As he did he asked him the question fishermen always ask, "Are you going to talk or are you going to fish?"

That really is our problem when it comes to evangelism—too much talking and not enough fishing. We're good at talking; we're not so good at fishing. Most of the time we act as if Jesus said, "Follow me and we'll talk about fishing for men." So we read books and go to seminars and watch videotapes and take training sessions and listen to sermons (just like this one!).

We end up experts at talking about fishing for men. We know how to bait the hook and what kind of lure to use. We learn all about how to fish for the loud-mouth speckle-bellied atheist and which bait works with the salt-water Pharisee. And most of us have a tackle box full of memorized Scripture, clever questions and some very old tracts. Yes, we're good at talking about fishing.

Bob Deffinbaugh: I believe that Matthew has gone to considerable effort to underscore the relationship Jesus had to Galilee.

- Jesus' parents were from Galilee, and He would have been born there other than the providential guidance of God (in order to fulfill the prophecy that He would be born in Bethlehem of Judea).
- Jesus was raised in Galilee. God directed Joseph to take Mary and Jesus to Egypt, and then to Nazareth of Galilee. Jesus was a Galilean in that this was His home.
- Jesus began His earthly ministry in Galilee. He went from Galilee to Jerusalem.
- Many Galileans followed Jesus to Jerusalem, particularly His disciples and the women who accompanied Him.
- Most of Jesus' earthly ministry was in Galilee.
- Jesus met His disciples in Galilee, after His resurrection.

Matthew makes a point of letting His readers know that Jesus was from Galilee. He informs us that after His baptism and some preliminary ministry in Judea, Jesus withdrew to Galilee and from there He commenced His public teaching ministry, which would take Him to Jerusalem. He lets his readers know that Jesus not only went to Galilee, but that He was from Galilee – that is, He was a Galilean, as were His disciples. So what is the point or the purpose of this emphasis on Galilee?

First of all, I believe that His association with Galilee was part of His humiliation as the Messiah. Jesus humbled Himself to come to this earth in human flesh (Philippians 2:5-8; Hebrews 2:14-18; 4:14-16; 5:7-10).

Second, I believe our Lord's association with Galilee is consistent with our Lord's saving purpose. As Isaiah 9 described it, Galilee not only had a higher concentration of Gentiles than did Jerusalem or Judea, it was also a place of great spiritual need. The people were living in darkness. It was a place where people sat in the shadow of death. Upon such a needy place and people, the Light dawned. This is not to say that the people of Judea were more spiritual, or that they were less in need. It is to say that they did not perceive it to be this way. The people of Jerusalem and Judea saw themselves as those who were spiritually enlightened, those who were not in need. They were certainly wrong. . .

I call this "the principle of inversion." Jesus is drawn to those who are most aware of their need and those who are most despised by those who think themselves spiritual. By seeking out sinners, Jesus manifests divine grace, and thereby brings great glory to Himself.

J. Ligon Duncan: Notice Jesus' miracles. Those miracles, those attesting signs confirmed both His person, and His message. You remember Jesus claimed to be the Son of God, the lamb of God, the Messiah promised in the Old Testament. His miracles were proof of His person. Proof of His claims. They were also proof of His message of divine stamp of approval on the truth of the Gospel message which He preached.

By the way, have you ever reflected on the different kind of miracles that Moses did in comparison to Jesus' miracles? Moses' miracles, were primarily miracles of warning, judgment and destruction. Think of the ten plagues. Jesus' miracles were a display of God's mercy. Moses' miracles were a display of God's power in wrath and judgment. Jesus' miracles were a display of God's power in mercy and loving kindness on those who were needy. What better way to display the power of the New Covenant, than the healing mercies and miracles of Christ. Those miracles confirmed that He was the Messiah of prophecy. The Old Testament in passages, like Isaiah 35 had told us that the Messiah would come, doing miracles. And so Jesus' miracles proved His claims to be the Messiah.

They also proved that the kingdom had now arrived, because the Old Testament prophets told us that when the Messiah came, and when He established His new kingdom, it would be shown forth with power and miracles. And so Jesus' healing miracles proved who He is and the truth of His message.

Notice also the universal character of these healings. Jesus heals in Galilee, a place where Jews and Gentiles were mixed and people come to Him to be healed from Syria, from Decapolis, from Jerusalem, from Judea and from across the Jordan. People from all over come to Christ to be healed. Jesus healed all regardless of race or nationality and so showed Himself to be the Savior of the world.

Notice also the types of healings that the Lord Jesus did. In verse 25, we are told that Jesus in His ministry healed every kind of disease and every kind of sickness. A general word is used. Various diseases and torments to indicate that Jesus healed all sorts of things. But three specific words are used in that passage that I would like to point your attention to: demoniacs, epileptics, and paralytics. Jesus did not simply, like some latter day television faith healers, heal vague aches and pains, headaches, armaches, backaches. Jesus healed the most deadly diseases known to His time, and He did it instantaneously and irrevocably by the power of God and He did it in the presence of His enemies who more than anyone else would have like to have proved Him a farce. And even those of the Pharisees, such as Nicodemus would come to Him at night in John chapter 3, and say, Rabi, we know that you are from God, because nobody could do the things that you are doing. . .

In those three particular healings, we are being told by Matthew, that Jesus was doing a redemptive work of destroying the kingdom of Satan. No longer would Satan have sway over people, over their hearts, in the dominion of sin. But Christ would destroy that dominion, and He Himself would set up the rule of the kingdom of God. Matthew is telling you this is the Son of God who has come to release you from captivity. The Gospel's power in our lives is displayed in Jesus' healing power.

John MacArthur: Alexander McLaren, that great preacher, said, quote, "It may be doubted whether we have an adequate notion of the immense number of Christ's miracles. Those recorded are but a small portion of those done. Those early ones were illustrations of the nature of His kingdom. They were His first gifts to His kingdom's subjects," end quote. What a great thought. What a great thought. Those miracles were a taste of His kingdom, just like His words were. You wanna know what the kingdom is going to be like? Just check out all the miracles and multiply that a millionfold, and that's what the kingdom is going to be like. A miraculous, supernatural kingdom!

Those were tastes of the kingdom, and that's why in Hebrews 6 the writer says, "You have tasted the powers of the age to come." You've been in on the miracles. You've seen the signs and wonders and diverse gifts of the Holy Spirit that confirmed unto you the preaching of the gospel. Hebrews 2, 3, and 4. You've tasted of the age to come. That's why He condemned in Matthew 13 those unbelieving Pharisees because they had seen the power of the kingdom, and they should have known this was the King. Listen, these were kingly credentials. These were pre-kingdom manifestations of kingdom power to prove to those people that He was the King and He would bring the kingdom. And the miracles and the teaching are so interwoven that you can't extract one from the other. . .

Now listen, beloved, I'm convinced that the only time these kind of miracles will again happen is in the next time, just before the kingdom comes. Not now. This is the parenthesis, but in that time, when God begins the re-gathering of Israel, the time of the Tribulation, and begins to set up His kingdom, then we're going to see these marvelous signs of the kingdom again. And when the kingdom comes in full bloom, the supernatural will take over. Miracle upon miracle will happen.

TEXT: Matthew 5:1-12

TITLE: THE BEATITUDES TIED TO KINGDOM DISTINCTIVES

BIG IDEA:

LIVING OUT KINGDOM DISTINCTIVES MEANS THAT ONE WILL ENJOY BIG-TIME BLESSINGS EVEN WHEN PERSECUTED FOR THE SAKE OF RIGHTEOUSNESS

INTRODUCTION:

Rather than refer to this discipleship discourse as it is commonly known as “The Sermon on the Mount” I have chosen to label it Kingdom Distinctives. The focus should not be on the location of this oratorical masterpiece but on the unique content as it defines the citizens of the kingdom.

William Barclay: One great scholar called the Sermon on the Mount ‘the Ordination Address to the Twelve’. Just as young ministers have their task set out before them, when they are called to take charge of their first churches, so the Twelve received from Jesus their ordination address before they went out to their task. It is for that reason that other scholars have given other titles to the Sermon on the Mount. It has been called ‘the Compendium of Christ’s Doctrine’, ‘the Magna Carta [the charter of liberties] of the Kingdom’ and ‘the Manifesto of the King’. All are agreed that in the Sermon on the Mount we have the essence of the teaching of Jesus to the inner circle of his chosen disciples. . .

True, it will find its fullness and its consummation in the presence of God; but, for all that, it is a present reality to be enjoyed here and now. The beatitudes in effect say: ‘O the bliss of being a Christian! O the joy of following Christ! O the sheer happiness of knowing Jesus Christ as Master, Saviour and Lord!’ The very form of the beatitudes is the statement of the joyous thrill and the radiant gladness of the Christian life. In the light of the beatitudes, a gloom-encompassed Christianity is unthinkable.

Leon Morris: Matthew’s method is to give some important teaching of Jesus in the form of comparatively lengthy discourses (he has five major discourses), interspersed with other aspects of his ministry, such as healing and the instruction of disciples. Now that he has introduced Jesus’ ministry with the call of disciples and with the explanation that Jesus taught, preached, and healed, Matthew comes to the first great section of teaching, usually called “The Sermon on the Mount.”

Grant Osborne: The current tendency is to see the Sermon through the lens of inaugurated eschatology, that keeping the commands should be the goal of all believers but that they will be fully observed only after Christ has returned. . . There is a distinct wisdom flavor in the sermon, but primarily it is the new laws for the kingdom age, intended as an ethical model to be followed by the new citizens of the kingdom community.

In Matthew’s gospel the Sermon immediately follows the summary of Jesus’ kingdom preaching (4:17, 23) and must be seen in that light. Therefore it establishes the ethical standards of righteousness for Jesus’ followers. Overman says, “This section of the gospel has as its primary focus the ordering of relationships and behavior within the community.” France calls this “The Discourse on Discipleship,” centering on the radically new lifestyle demanded of Jesus’ followers who will become a “Christian counter-culture.” In that sense it is the law of the new covenant, the demands of discipleship in the eschatological community brought by Christ. It is not a new messianic Torah but rather a transformation of the Torah of the OT into the Torah of the Messiah.

Craig Blomberg: Inaugurated eschatology thus seems most in keeping with Jesus’ teaching on the kingdom more generally. Inaugurated eschatology recognizes an “already/not yet” tension in which the sermon’s ethic remains the ideal or goal for all Christians in every age but which will never be fully realized until the consummation of the kingdom at Christ’s return.

J. C. Ryle: Let us learn how entirely contrary are the principles of Christ to the principles of the world. It is vain to deny it. They are almost diametrically opposed. The very characters which the Lord Jesus praises, the world despises. The very pride, thoughtlessness, high tempers, worldliness, selfishness, formality, and unlovingness which abound everywhere, the Lord Jesus condemns.

Charles Swindoll: The very first word in the Greek translation of the book of Psalms is makarios: “Blessed [makarios] is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly” (Ps. 1:1, KJV). The theme of blessing is carried on throughout the collection of songs, with the term appearing twenty-five times in the Psalms. It expresses the positive benefits of a life of faithfulness. The Greek term originally conveyed “the happy estate of the gods above earthly sufferings and labors. Later it came to mean any positive condition a person experienced.” From the Latin word beatus, a translation of makarios, we get the term “Beatitudes,” used to describe the repeated use of the adjective in Jesus’ Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5:1-12). Here the term describes transcendent happiness, the kind that neither depends upon earthly fortunes nor falters before temporal hardships. A “blessed” person possesses what we would call true joy. . .

Through these words, Jesus —with penetrating insight —exposed the brittle veneer of all self-righteousness prevalent in His day . . . and in ours. He explained the essence of true righteousness, which leads to a deep-seated joy. Weaving threads from the Old Testament throughout this garment of truth, the heir of the throne of David set forth principles that must never be ignored by subjects of His kingdom. Yet how few truly embrace Jesus’ words!

Bob Deffinbaugh: I’m with Hughes in his commentary when he says that probably the primary sense of the word “blessed” here is the sense of approval. It is saying that God has expressed His approval on these people. To be blessed is to be approved by God, and I think that probably fits my view as well.

E. Michael Green: To follow Jesus demands a totally different way of life, and is vital for the people of God. Right at the outset of his ministry Jesus lays it on the line. The new age has dawned. And the Sermon shows what human life is like after repentance and commitment to the King. In a word, life is very different. The injunction “Do not be like them” (6:8) encapsulates the tone of the whole Sermon. A sharp contrast is constantly being drawn between the standards of Jesus and those of all others. Here we meet a distinctive lifestyle, with radically different values and ambitions. Everything is at variance with life outside the kingdom.

Warren Wiersbe: The King's Principles: True Righteousness –

I have always felt that Matthew 5:20 was the key to this important sermon: “For I say unto you, that except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.” The main theme is true righteousness. The religious leaders had an artificial, external righteousness based on law. But the righteousness Jesus described is a true and vital righteousness that begins internally, in the heart. The Pharisees were concerned about the minute details of conduct, but they neglected the major matter of character. Conduct flows out of character.

Donald Hagner: The righteousness described here is to be the goal of the Christian in this life, although it will only be attained fully in the eschaton proper. It is primarily an ethics concerning the individual, but it is not without implications for social ethics. The radical nature of the sermon must not be lost in a privatization of its ethics. . .

What must be stressed here, however, is that the kingdom is presupposed as something given by God. The kingdom is declared as a reality apart from any human achievement. Thus the beatitudes are, above all, predicated upon the experience of the grace of God.

David Platt: The last thing we need to come away with is an imposing and crushing laundry list of things that we must do in order to be accepted by God. When you read the Sermon on the Mount, you should not walk away thinking, "I must turn the other cheek in order to be accepted by God. I must love my enemies and pray for those who persecute me in order to be accepted by God. I must follow the Golden Rule perfectly in order to be accepted by God." We are not accepted by God because of anything that we do. We are accepted by God completely and totally because of a perfect Savior who has died a bloody death in our place and who has risen again in victory. Yes, we pray for our enemies, we love those who persecute us, and we follow the Golden Rule. But we do these things not in order to earn acceptance before our God, but because we have acceptance by God and we want to glorify Him in everything that we do.

R. Kent Hughes: The Sermon on the Mount is the compacted, congealed theology of Christ and as such is perhaps the most profound section of the entire New Testament and the whole Bible. Every phrase can bare exhaustive exposition and yet never be completely plumbed... . It shows us exactly where we stand in relation to the kingdom and eternal life. As we expose ourselves to the X-rays of Christ's words, we see whether we truly are believers; and if believers, the degree of the authenticity of our lives. No other section of Scripture makes us face ourselves like the Sermon on the Mount.

(:1-2) PROLOGUE TO THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT

A. (:1a) Typology of Mountaintop Revelation

“And when He saw the multitudes, He went up on the mountain;”

Charles Swindoll: Jesus' miracles had drawn crowds from all over the regions of Galilee, Syria, the Decapolis, Jerusalem, Judea, and even beyond the Jordan (4:23-25). A group this large would have had not only diverse backgrounds and beliefs but also different life experiences, different struggles, and different levels of commitment to spiritual things. In addition to regional differences, Jesus' audience contained people old and young, male and female, well-off and poor, religious and rebellious. With such a diverse group of people, what would Jesus preach? What lessons could He possibly teach that would minister to all of them together and each of them individually? The fundamentals of life. These essential principles would transcend language, culture, gender, age, and class.

Donald Hagner: These introductory verses indicate that Jesus addresses primarily the disciples in the sermon. The crowds prompt him to go to the mountain where he can teach his disciples in relative privacy. Yet from the way in which Matthew ends the great sermon, “the crowds” too had gathered and heard the teaching and were amazed at the authority of his teaching (7:28–29).

E. Michael Green: The main point about the mountain here is the parallel to Mount Sinai. Moses went up Mount Sinai to get the law from God to give to the people of Israel. And now Moses’ great successor ascends a mountain to receive from his Father and transmit to his disciples the law of the kingdom. We have a new law for a new people given on a new mountain by a new Moses. That is the context of the Sermon.

B. (:1b) Target Audience

“and after He sat down, His disciples came to Him.”

Grant Osborne: The disciples were those committed to following Jesus (4:18–22) and were closely involved in his ministry. They are the ones expected to live by the principles elucidated in the message that follows.

Charles Swindoll: The “disciples” (5:1) who had come to Him to hear the message included many more than just Jesus’ inner circle of Peter, James, John, Andrew, and select others. This is evidenced at the end of the sermon, where Matthew reports, “When Jesus had finished these words, the crowds were amazed at His teaching” (7:28).

Donald Hagner: It was customary in Judaism for the rabbi to teach from a seated position. Thus Jesus sat down (καθίσαντος αὐτοῦ) before he began to teach (cf. 13:2; 24:3). Jesus, somewhat like a new Moses, goes up to the mount to mediate the true interpretation of the Torah. . . . Jesus can teach as he does because of his unique identity as the Messiah, the Son of God. His teaching alone, and not that contained in the Pharisaic oral tradition, penetrates to the full meaning of God’s commandments. Thus Jesus majestically assumes his authority as teacher and begins in a definitive manner to expound the way of righteousness to his disciples.

William Barclay: Jesus began to teach when he had sat down. When a Jewish Rabbi was teaching officially, he sat to teach. We still speak of a professor’s chair; the pope still speaks ex cathedra, from his seat. Often a Rabbi gave instruction when he was standing or strolling about; but his really official teaching was done when he had taken his seat. So, the very intimation that Jesus sat down to teach his disciples is the indication that this teaching is central and official.

John Nolland: As radical as its demands are, this is no manual for an exclusive spiritual elite. Its concern to elucidate the will of God is based on theological and ethical considerations and is not linked to a distinctive call for an exclusive few. The double audience of disciples and crowds fits in with this: the disciples learn from within the context of a relationship of committed discipleship, but that which they learn has pertinence as well to all the others who hear.

C. (:2) Teaching Gravity

“And opening His mouth He began to teach them, saying,”

William Barclay: This phrase he opened his mouth is not simply a decoratively roundabout way of saying he said. In Greek, the phrase has a double significance.

(a) In Greek, it is used of a solemn, grave and dignified utterance. It is used, for instance, of the saying of an oracle. It is the natural preface for a most weighty saying.

(b) It is used when people really open their hearts and fully pour out their minds. It is used of intimate teaching with no barriers between.

Again, the very use of this phrase indicates that the material in the Sermon on the Mount is no chance piece of teaching. It is the grave and solemn utterance of the central things; it is the opening of Jesus' heart and mind to those men who were to be his right-hand men in his task. . .

The Sermon on the Mount is greater even than we think. Matthew in his introduction wishes us to see that it is the official teaching of Jesus; that it is the opening of Jesus' whole mind to his disciples; that it is the summary of the teaching which Jesus habitually gave to his inner circle. The Sermon on the Mount is nothing less than the concentrated memory of many hours of heart-to-heart communion between the disciples and their Master.

R. T. France: The focus of these chapters is not then the wider proclamation of the “good news of the kingdom,” (4:23) but the instruction of those who have already responded to that proclamation, and now need to learn what life in the “kingdom of heaven” is really about. The teaching will frequently describe them as a special group who stand over against, and indeed are persecuted by, people in general. They are those who have entered into a new relationship with “your Father in heaven,” and who in consequence are called to a radically new life-style, in conscious distinction from the norms of the rest of society. They are to be an alternative society, a “Christian counter-culture.”

It is because of this distinctive focus of chs. 5–7 that I have preferred to call this the “Discourse on Discipleship” rather than use the familiar but non-descriptive title “Sermon on the Mount,” a term which too often conveys to modern hearers the concept of a general code of ethics rather than the specific demands of the kingdom of heaven. . .

The discourse is indeed intended as a guide to life, but only for those who are committed to the kingdom of heaven, and even they will always find that its reach exceeds their grasp.

I. (:3-9) THE 7 BEATITUDES STRESSING BLESSINGS ASSOCIATED WITH RIGHTEOUS CHARACTER EXPRESSED IN RIGHTEOUS LIVING

A. (:3) Poor in Spirit

J. C. Ryle: He means the humble, the lowly-minded, and the self-abased. He means those who are deeply convinced of their own sinfulness in God's sight. These are they who are not wise in their own eyes and clever in their own sight. They are not rich and wealthy. They do not imagine that they need nothing. They regard themselves as wretched and miserable and poor and blind and naked. Blessed are all such! Humility is the very first letter in the alphabet of Christianity. We must begin low if we would build high.

Leon Morris: It is the opposite of the Pharisaic pride in one's own virtue with which Jesus was so often confronted (and which has all too often made its appearance in later times). . .

Of these lowly people Jesus says, theirs is the kingdom of heaven. We should understand this in the sense of consequence rather than reward. In no sense do they merit the kingdom, but being what they are they possess it.

Charles Swindoll: those who realize their own utter helplessness and absence of spiritual merit. The only response to such realization is total dependence on the Lord God for spiritual riches. Pride, arrogance, and haughtiness are banished in the life of true happiness, contentment, and joy. This is the attitude expressed in the great hymn of Augustus Toplady, “Rock of Ages”:

*Nothing in my hand I bring,
Simply to the cross I cling;
Naked, come to Thee for dress;
Helpless, look to Thee for grace;
Foul, I to the fountain fly;
Wash me, Savior, or I die.*

By giving up the foolish agenda of building our own kingdoms of dirt here on earth, we truly participate in Christ’s kingdom agenda. We serve under His sovereign rule, allowing Him to direct our steps while He gets the glory He deserves.

Donald Hagner: In Israel, especially in the post-exilic period, poverty and piety often went together, the poor (Luz refers to the “déclassé”) having no other recourse than their hope in God. The poor were driven to complete reliance upon God, and the righteous poor were thought especially to be the objects of God’s special concern (cf. Pss 9:18; 33[34]:18; 40:18; Isa 57:15; Jas 2:5). The poor were particularly in view in expressions of eschatological hope. In a passage alluded to in Matt 11:5, Isaiah (61:1) writes:

*The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because the Lord has anointed me to bring good tidings to the afflicted [poor];
he has sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to those who are bound.*

This passage is almost certainly the basis for the present beatitude. The good news that has now come to the poor is that the kingdom is “theirs” (αὐτῶν is in an emphatic position). Thus this opening beatitude points to eschatological fulfillment (cf. the citation of Isa 61:1–2 and the beginning of Jesus’ Galilean ministry in Luke 4:18–19).

D. A. Carson: The natural conclusion is that, though the full blessedness of those described in these beatitudes awaits the consummated kingdom, they already share in the kingdom’s blessedness so far as it has been inaugurated.

B. (:4) Those Who Mourn

“Blessed are those who mourn, for they shall be comforted.”

J. C. Ryle: He means those who sorrow over sin and grieve daily over their own shortcomings. These are they who trouble themselves more about sin than about anything on earth. The remembrance of it is grievous to them. The burden of it is intolerable. Blessed are all such! The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit; a broken and a contrite heart. One day they shall weep no more. They shall be comforted.

Charles Swindoll: This doesn't mean that God calls us to permanent depression or to hum a constant dirge. As Ecclesiastes wisely affirms, "There is an appointed time for everything. . . . A time to weep and a time to laugh; a time to mourn and a time to dance" (Ecc. 3:1, 4). What Jesus is saying is that when we mourn for the woes and wrongs of this world, we can take comfort in the here and now that one day the wrongs will be righted, death will be dealt a death blow itself, and God will wipe away every tear from our eyes (Rev. 21:4).

Donald Hagner: Those who mourn do so because of the seeming slowness of God's justice. But they are now to rejoice, even in their troubled circumstances, because their salvation has found its beginning. The time draws near when they shall be comforted (cf. Rev. 7:17; 21:4), but they are already to be happy in the knowledge that the kingdom has arrived. Their salvation is at hand.

R. T. France: This verse illustrates the danger of treating the first half of a beatitude in isolation from the second half. To say simply that those who mourn are "happy" would clearly be nonsense. Their "happiness" consists in the fact that they will be comforted.

Bob Deffinbaugh: Mourning is the appropriate response to sin, and the appropriate manifestation of mourning is repentance. But there is the other side of the coin. Just as mourning is the appropriate response to sin, so worship is the appropriate response to the perfections of God. It would be wrong to experience and confront sin and not mourn, but it is just as wrong to come face to face with the perfections of God and not worship. I think it is interesting because we are considering mourning in our text but yet there is a very prominent theme today about joy and rejoicing, and you say, "Well, isn't that sort of schizophrenic?" You know the answer? It probably is. "Rejoice with those who rejoice, weep with those who weep". Those both go on at the same time, and the reality is, as I understand it, we would not rejoice and praise God as we ought apart from the mourning that comes in response to sin. As I understand it, our mourning because of the occasion of sin is what makes our joy and our rejoicing greater because our salvation takes us from its consequences.

C. (:5) The Gentle

"Blessed are the gentle, for they shall inherit the earth."

Charles Swindoll: The world has some less-than-flattering descriptions for the gentle or meek person: wimp, doormat, milquetoast, spineless, weak, yellow, pushover. But the biblical term used here, praus [4239], means "not being overly impressed by a sense of one's self-importance, gentle, humble, considerate." The word is used in the Greek version of the Old Testament to describe Moses (Num. 12:3)—hardly somebody we would picture in a constant state of kowtowing to those around him. Meekness doesn't mean weakness, but strength under control. Those who keep their anger in check, who don't flaunt their power or constantly claim their rights, who put others' interests before their own—these are the kind who will "inherit the earth" (Matt. 5:5). In the future, they will be fellow heirs with Christ, ruling with Him in the kingdom (Rom. 8:16-17; 2 Tim. 2:12). But even in the present, God may place them in positions of influence, knowing they can be trusted to handle authority with integrity and humility.

Donald Hagner: In view are not persons who are submissive, mild, and unassertive, but those who are humble in the sense of being oppressed (hence, “have been humbled”), bent over by the injustice of the ungodly, but who are soon to realize their reward. Those in such a condition have no recourse but to depend upon God.

William Barclay: The full translation of this third beatitude must read:

O the bliss of those who are always angry at the right time and never angry at the wrong time, who have every instinct, impulse and passion under control because they themselves are God-controlled, who have the humility to realize their own ignorance and their own weakness, for such people can indeed rule the world!

D. (:6) Those Who Hunger and Thirst for Righteousness

“Blessed are those who hunger and thirst for righteousness, for they shall be satisfied.”

Charles Swindoll: In Matthew, the term “righteousness” is used to emphasize the visible manifestation of a right disposition or moral uprightness reflected in one’s attitudes and actions (5:6, 10; 6:1). Throughout this Gospel, the superficial and humanly impossible righteousness of the Pharisees is contrasted with God’s righteousness (6:33), for which we are to “hunger and thirst” (5:6).

Martin Lloyd-Jones: This Beatitude again follows logically from the previous ones; it is a statement to which all the others lead. It is the logical conclusion to which they come, and it is something for which we should all be profoundly thankful and grateful to God. I do not know of a better test that anyone can apply to himself or herself in this whole matter of the Christian profession than a verse like this. If this verse is to you one of the most blessed statements of the whole of Scripture, you can be quite certain you are a Christian. If it is not, then you had better examine the foundations again.

Bob Deffinbaugh: Why is hungering and thirsting such a good illustration? Because as water and food is to the body, so righteousness is to the spiritual life. We as humans hunger and thirst not only for food but for satisfaction in life. We search in all kinds of different areas to be filled, to be satisfied, but we always end up falling short.

John Piper states: “God has put eternity in our hearts and we have an inconsolable longing.”

Blaise Pascal said that we all have a “God-shaped void” in our lives.

All men are hungry and thirsty; the problem is that we try to fill that emptiness, that hunger, with things other than the righteousness of God. Some of you reading this message are empty; you have not been satisfied. You are trying to fill that “God-shaped void” in your life with all kinds of things, but you are left empty, unsatisfied. There is an incredible message of hope for you if you are searching for the answer.

C.S. Lewis states: We are half-hearted creatures, fooling around with drink and sex and ambition, when infinite joy is offered us, like an ignorant child who wants to go on making mud pies in a slum because he cannot imagine what is meant by the offer of a holiday at the sea, we are far too easily pleased.

E. (:7) The Merciful

“Blessed are the merciful, for they shall receive mercy.”

Donald Hagner: The fifth beatitude marks a new emphasis in the beatitudes. Whereas the first four find their focus primarily in a state of mind or an attitude (and imply conduct only secondarily), this beatitude refers to the happiness of those who act, namely, those who are merciful toward others.

J. C. Ryle: He means those who are full of compassion towards others. They pity all who are suffering either from sin or sorrow, and are tenderly desirous to make their sufferings less. They are full of good works and endeavors to do good. Blessed are all such! Both in this life and that to come they shall reap a rich reward.

Charles Swindoll: The “merciful” are those whose hearts are moved for those in need, having a desire to step in and assist in relieving their pain. This kind of mercy goes beyond merely feeling sorry for people or having pity or sympathy. It may start with such emotions, but it doesn’t end there. The merciful person empathizes with those who suffer and then actually does something to help. James 2:15-16 says, “If a brother or sister is without clothing and in need of daily food, and one of you says to them, ‘Go in peace, be warmed and be filled,’ and yet you do not give them what is necessary for their body, what use is that?” Similarly, 1 John 3:17 admonishes, “Whoever has the world’s goods, and sees his brother in need and closes his heart against him, how does the love of God abide in him?”

F. (:8) The Pure in Heart

“Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.”

William Barclay: So, the basic meaning of katharos is unmixed, unadulterated, unalloyed. That is why this beatitude is so demanding a beatitude. It could be translated:

Blessed are those whose motives are always entirely unmixed, for they shall see God.

It is very seldom indeed that we do even our finest actions from absolutely unmixed motives.

J. C. Ryle: He means those who do not aim merely at outward correctness but at inward holiness. They are not satisfied with a mere external show of religion. They strive to keep a heart and conscience void of offense and to serve God with the spirit and the inner man. Blessed are all such! The heart is the man. “Man looks at the outward appearance, but the Lord looks at the heart” (1 Samuel 16:7). He who is most spiritually-minded will have most communion with God.

Donald Hagner: “Pure in heart” refers to the condition of the inner core of a person, that is, to thoughts and motivation, and hence anticipates the internalizing of the commandments by Jesus in the material that follows in the sermon. It takes for granted right actions but asks for integrity in the doing of those actions, i.e., a consistency between the inner springs of one’s conduct and the conduct itself. Another way of putting this is in terms of “single-mindedness” (cf. Jas 4:8, where it is the “double-minded” who are exhorted to “purify [their] hearts”). Purity of heart and purity of conscience are closely related in the pastoral Epistles (cf. 1 Tim 1:5; 3:9; 2 Tim 1:3; 2:22; cf. 1 Pet 1:22).

Craig Blomberg: The “pure in heart” exhibit a single-minded devotion to God that stems from the internal cleansing created by following Jesus. Holiness is a prerequisite for entering God's presence. The pure in heart pass this test, so they will see God and experience intimate fellowship with him. This Beatitude closely parallels Ps 24:3-4.

Bob Deffinbaugh: So, first, having a pure heart means living by the rule of God, living a life that is pleasing to God. Secondly, having a pure heart means living for the sole purpose of God, to have a heart that is fully devoted to God. It means single-minded devotion and commitment to God, doing anything and everything in our life for the sole purpose of glorifying God (1 Corinthians 10:31). “Pure” in this sense means unadulterated.

G. (:9) The Peacemakers

“Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called sons of God.”

Charles Swindoll: Those who make peace relieve tensions and don’t feed fuel to fires of controversy. A peacemaker seeks resolutions to arguments and debates. A peacemaker works hard to keep offenses from festering into fractured relationships. A peacemaker’s words generate light but not heat. Proverbs 15:1 says, “A gentle answer turns away wrath, but a harsh word stirs up anger.” It is important to note, however, that being a peacemaker does not amount to being a passive person who lies down like a doormat and lets people walk all over them. The kind of peacemaking referred to here is active, not passive. Peacemakers are engaged in a ministry of reconciliation and restoration, entering troubled waters to help bring calm. In this way, they model in this life the ministry of Jesus, the Son of God, who came preaching peace and reconciliation to those willing to hear.

Donald Hagner: In the context of the beatitudes, the point would seem to be directed against the Zealots, the Jewish revolutionaries who hoped through violence to bring the kingdom of God. Such means would have been a continual temptation for the downtrodden and oppressed who longed for the kingdom. The Zealots by their militarism hoped furthermore to demonstrate that they were the loyal “sons of God.” But Jesus announces the kingdom entirely apart from human effort and indicates that the status of υιοὶ θεοῦ, “children of God” (cf. Rom 9:26), belongs on the contrary to those who live peaceably. It is the peacemakers who will be called the “children of God.” Later in the present chapter, Jesus will teach the remarkable ethic of the love of even one’s enemies (vv 43–48). This stress on peace becomes a common motif in the NT (cf. Rom 14:19; Heb 12:14; Jas 3:18; 1 Pet 3:11).

Leon Morris: those who make peace are fulfilling what membership in the family really means, and this is something to which all the members of the family must aspire.

II. (:10-12) THE FINAL BEATITUDE STRESSING BLESSING ASSOCIATED WITH ENDURING PERSECUTION

If the citizen of the kingdom of heaven lives a life in harmony with kingdom distinctives he will inevitably suffer persecution. It is that eventuality that Jesus now addresses.

Charles Swindoll: I understand 5:11-12 as expanding on the beatitude of 5:10 regarding persecution. These statements provide a surprising conclusion to the previous seven beatitudes, and the association between persecution and joy seems counterintuitive. This is why in this case Jesus expends a few words of explanation beyond the pithy principle.

A. (:10) Persecuted for the Sake of Righteousness

“Blessed are those who have been persecuted for the sake of righteousness, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.”

Charles Swindoll: In 5:10 Jesus refers to those who are persecuted and harassed for living lives in keeping with God’s ethical standards and for promoting these moral truths in their teaching and preaching.

Donald Hagner: V 10 could well be the closing beatitude of the collection used by Matthew, since it rounds out the collection by an inclusio, i.e., concluding with the same ending as in the first beatitude: “for theirs is the kingdom of heaven” (cf. v 3). The poor and the persecuted, precisely the most unlikely candidates, are proclaimed the happy or blessed ones who receive the kingdom.

The ninth beatitude, vv 11–12, is in effect an elaboration of the preceding beatitude. Its original independence from the preceding collection of eight is indicated not only by its different form but also by the use of the second person pronoun rather than the third. Matthew probably received it in the form in which it stands and added it to the collection he had received from another source.

B. (:11-12) Further Expansion of Theme of Persecution

“Blessed are you when men cast insults at you, and persecute you, and say all kinds of evil against you falsely, on account of Me. 12 Rejoice, and be glad, for your reward in heaven is great, for so they persecuted the prophets who were before you.”

Leon Morris: Persecuted believers are in good company. The plural brings all the prophets together as one godly company. The persecutions they received no doubt varied greatly, but the point is that persecution is the lot of the people of God while they walk this earth. In three consecutive verses Matthew has used the verb “persecute,” which puts emphasis on the concept. Here even the prophets, whom everyone now accepts as the servants of God par excellence, were treated badly in their own day. It is a privilege for the servants of God in later days to share in some measure in the lot of these great men of God.

R. T. France: The so-called “ninth beatitude”, vv. 11–12, is in fact a repetition and expansion of v. 10, and stands from a literary point of view outside the tightly-structured unit of eight beatitudes. It lacks the epigrammatic conciseness of vv. 3–10, nor does it repeat their regular formula “for it is they / to them...” Moreover, its change to a second-person form links it directly with the verses that follow rather than with vv. 3–10. Like vv. 13–16, vv. 11–12 speak of the sharp contrast between the disciples (whose “good life” has been spelled out in the third person in vv. 3–10) and other people around them. I therefore think it more appropriate, despite the repetition of the opening makarioi, to treat the “ninth beatitude” not as a part of the beatitudes as such but as the linking introduction to this following section which comments on the effect of living the good life on the rest of society. [treats vv. 11-16 as a unit]

D. A. Carson: These verses neither encourage seeking persecution nor permit retreating from it, sulking, or retaliation. From the perspective of both redemptive history (“the prophets”) and eternity (“reward in heaven”), these verses constitute the reasonable response of faith, one which the early Christians readily understood (cf. Ac 5:41; 2Co 4:17; 1Pe 1:6–9; cf. Da 3:24–25). “Discipleship means allegiance to the suffering Christ, and it is therefore not at all surprising that Christians should be called on to suffer. In fact it is a joy and a token of his grace” (Bonhoeffer, Cost of Discipleship, 80–81). But in reassuring his disciples that their sufferings are “neither new, nor accidental, nor absurd” (Bonnard), Jesus spoke of principles that will appear again (esp. Mt 10, 24).

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How do the Beatitudes of Matthew compare to the Sermon on the Plain from the book of Luke?
- 2) In what sense has the Kingdom arrived and in what sense are we still anticipating its arrival?
- 3) Do you think it is a good translation for the modern day to say “Happy are . . .” instead of “Blessed are . . .”?
- 4) When in life have you functioned as a peacemaker?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Leon Morris: This discourse displays many resemblances to Luke’s “Sermon on the Plain” (Luke 6:17-49), and many interpreters hold that they are variant accounts of the same discourse. Luke’s use of “plain” does not rule this out, for it means no more than “a level place” and may well indicate a rather flat area in the mountains (though against this is the fact that a great multitude came to be healed, Luke 6:18, and it is unlikely that the sick would have climbed a mountain). Both sermons begin with beatitudes, go on to significant ethical teaching, and conclude with the little parable of the men building houses. But the differences between the two are such that it is not easy to regard them as variant accounts of the same sermon. It is better to think that Jesus used similar material on more than one occasion.

Grant Osborne: The best structure is to see 5:3–16 as the introduction and 7:13–27 as the conclusion, with the central section comprised of three parts:

- the relationship of the law to the new covenant in Jesus (5:17–48),
- true versus false piety (6:1–18), and
- social ethics (6:19 – 7:12).

Donald Hagner: As one possible outline, the following may be suggested:

I. Introduction (5:3–16)

- A. The Foundation of Righteous Living: The Beatitudes (5:3–12)
- B. The Essence of Discipleship: Salt and Light (5:13–16)

II. The Main Body of the Sermon (5:17—7:12)

- A. The Relation between the Old and the New Righteousness (5:17–48)

1. Continuity with the Old (5:17–20)
2. The Surpassing of the Old: The Six Antitheses (5:21–48)
- B. Outward vs. Inward Righteousness (6:1–18)
 1. Almsgiving (6:1–4)
 2. Prayer and the Lord’s Prayer (6:5–15)
 3. Fasting (6:16–18)
- C. Dependence upon God (6:19–34)
 1. Serving God Rather Than Wealth (6:19–24)
 2. The Disciple and Anxiety (6:25–34)
- D. Various Teachings and the Golden Rule (7:1–12)

III. Conclusion (7:13–27)

- A. The Two Ways (7:13–14)
- B. The False and the Genuine (7:15–23)
 1. Warning concerning False Prophets (7:15–20)
 2. The Insufficiency of the Charismata (7:21–23)
- C. The Parable of the Two Builders (7:24–27)

Bob Deffinbaugh: There is a certain pattern in the Beatitudes. For instance, if you look at verse 3 of chapter 5, Jesus says, “Blessed are the poor in spirit, for the kingdom of heaven belongs to them,”—present tense. Then, when you come down to verse 10, He says, “Blessed are those who are persecuted for righteousness, for the kingdom of heaven belongs to them.” So you have this present tense—the kingdom is theirs—and in between, in verses 4 through 9, they’re all future tenses. . .

I think, as most commentators would say, that we have to conclude there is a present dimension and a future dimension to what Jesus is teaching in the Sermon on the Mount. There are things yet to come, but there are foretastes (firstfruits) with us that we presently possess as well, and those are dealt with in the Sermon on the Mount.

John MacArthur: Makarios is an adjective that simply, basically means “happy” or “blissful.” That’s really what it means. But I want to expand that a little bit so you’ll understand the significance of this new message. The word basically comes from a root makar, that root means “to be happy,” real happiness. Not in the world’s sense of happiness based upon positive circumstance. . .

The word, then, has the idea of an inward bliss, an inward happiness which is neither the result of circumstance nor subject to change on the basis of circumstance. This is the basic New Testament meaning of “blessed.” It means an inner peace, an inner bliss, an inner happiness, an inward joy that is not produced by circumstance nor is it affected by circumstance. It is a state of happiness, a state of wellbeing in which God desires his children to live. . .

Makarios then, is fundamentally an element of the character of God. And man will only know that element insofar as he is a partaker of the divine nature. . .

The Sermon on the Mount is the great statement of the king as he opens his mouth and gives blessing instead of cursing to those who desire it. That’s the general biblical context in which this sermon is delivered - a new age, a new king, a new message. . .

There's no politics in the Sermon on the Mount. None. There is not one reference to the social, political aspect of the kingdom made here, not one. The Jews were so concerned about the politics and the social life. Jesus makes no reference to that at all. The stress - I want you to get this - the stress is on being. That's the word you're going to have to see. The stress is on being. It's not on ruling or possessing it is on being.

In other words, he's not after what men do, he's after what men are. What men are. Because what they are will determine what they do. All of the ideals that are given in the Sermon on the Mount are contrary to human ideas about government, human ideas about kingdoms. In fact, the most exalted people, the most exalted people in Christ's kingdom would be the lowest of the low in the world's evaluation. . .

Jesus was confronting a whole society full of religionists. They all had their own little thing going. And the point that Jesus was making is, "Hey, you know, you're all wrong, every one of you." For the Pharisees he was saying, "Religion is not a matter of external observance." And for the Sadducee he was saying, "Religion is not a matter of human philosophy invented to accommodate the new day." And to the Essenes he was saying, "Believe Me, religion is not a matter of geographical location." And to the Zealots he was saying, "And neither is religion a matter of social activism."

What he was saying is this, "My kingdom is inside." Do you see? It's inside. That's the whole point. That's the whole message of Jesus to the world. That's the whole basis of the Sermon on the Mount. It's inside, not outside. Not outside rituals, not outside philosophy, not outside location or monasteries or any of that stuff, not outside activism, it's inside.

William Hendriksen: The sayings of Matt. 5:1-12 must have resounded from the mountain with tremendous emotional force. What the Speaker is doing is nothing less than this: he is stating that though everybody may consider his followers to be most wretched and unfortunate and though they themselves are by no means always filled with optimism regarding their own condition, in the sight of heaven and by the standards of its kingdom they are happy indeed; yes, "happy" in the most exalted sense of the term; hence, superlatively blessed. Not only is this true because of the blessing in store for them in the future – that, too, is implied; see especially 5:12: "your reward in heaven is great" – but even because of their present state. Already heaven's favor is resting upon them. Right at this moment the light of their future bliss is beginning to engulf them. Even now, no matter how despised they may be, this is true, for the Spirit of glory and of God rests upon them (1 Peter 4:14).

Martin Lloyd-Jones: Matthew puts the true teaching concerning the kingdom in the very forefront of his Gospel, for the great purpose of this Sermon is to give an exposition of the kingdom as something which is essentially spiritual. The kingdom is primarily something "within you". It is that which governs and controls the heart and mind and outlook. Far from being something which leads to great military power, it is to be "poor in spirit". In other words, we are not told in the Sermon on the Mount, "Live like this and you will become Christian"; rather we are told, "Because you are Christian live like this." This is how Christians ought to live; this is how Christians are meant to live. . .

What is of supreme importance is that we must always remember that the Sermon on the Mount is a description of character and not a code of ethics or of morals. It is not to be regarded as law – a kind of new "Ten Commandments" or set of rules and regulations which are to be carried out by us – but rather as a description of what we Christians are meant to be, illustrated in certain particular respects. It is as if our Lord says, “Because you are what you are, this is how you will face the law and how you will live it.” . . .

None of these descriptions refers to what we may call a natural tendency. Each one of them is wholly a disposition which is produced by grace alone and the operation of the Holy Spirit upon us. I cannot emphasize this too strongly. No man naturally conforms to the descriptions here given in the Beatitudes. . .

These descriptions, I suggest, indicate clearly (perhaps more clearly than anything else in the entire realm of Scripture) the essential, utter difference between the Christian and the non-Christian . . . as I see things at the present time, the first need in the Church is a clear understanding of this essential difference. It has become blurred; the world has come into the Church and the Church has become worldly. The line is not as distinct as it was. . . Our ambition should be to be like Christ, the more like Him the better, and the more like Him we become, the more we shall be unlike everybody who is not a Christian.

Van Parunak: This sermon is a carefully structured chiasm that echoes the main issues of Deuteronomy:

- the ten commandments (Deut 5, 12-26), and
- the consequences associated with our response to them (Deut 6- 11, 27-28).

Each of these themes has two parts.

- The ten commandments, according to our Lord’s summary in 22:37-40, it can be summarized as uncompromised devotion to God and equitable treatment of our neighbor.
- Moses himself distinguishes the consequences as blessings (Deut 11:27; 28:1-14) and curses (11:28; 28:15-68).

The structure of the Sermon reflects both of these distinctions. The corresponding members are (chart):

Setting	4:25-5:2	7:28-8:1
Blessings and Warnings	5:3-12, Blessings	7:13-27, Warnings
Law and Prophets	5:17-19	7:12b
Manward Responsibilities	5:20-48 (contrasts with “them of old time”)	7:1-12a (absolute)
Godward Responsibilities	6:1-18 (contrasts with “the hypocrites”)	6:19-34 (absolute)

TEXT: Matthew 5:13-16

TITLE: SALT AND LIGHT -- IMPACTING THE WORLD AROUND US ... OR GOOD FOR NOTHING?

BIG IDEA:

KINGDOM CITIZENS SHOULD HAVE A POWERFUL INFLUENCE ON THE WORLD

- TO COUNTERACT DECAY BY STANDING FOR RIGHTEOUSNESS ... AND

- TO SHINE THE TORCH OF TRUTH AND LIFE TO THE DARKNESS AROUND US OUT OF A MOTIVATION TO BRING GLORY TO GOD

INTRODUCTION:

Show and Tell today -- hand out O-rings ... examine them ... not very expensive ... very common ... doesn't seem very significant ... we use these a lot in repairing the big Caterpillar machines at my work ... put it on your finger and listen while I tell you a story about a very famous O-ring

On January 28, 1986 America was shocked by the destruction of the space shuttle Challenger, and the death of its seven crew members. One of those who died that day was a female schoolteacher -- privileged to be selected as the first civilian in NASA history to "ride the rocket" into the last frontier. It was to be the Challenger's 10th mission -- we had come to take for granted the safety of these missions.

The temperature that day at ground level at Pad 39B was 36 degrees F, that was 15 degrees cooler than any other previous launch by NASA. The boosters started rumbling according to play. But 0.68 seconds after ignition black smoke started coming from the bottom right booster. Apparently the burning of one of the O-rings in the booster caused the smoke. That's why I gave you each an O-ring so you could get an ideal of what we're talking about. O-rings are rubber "rings" that are used to make airtight seals. If one of the O-rings breaks air can get in and gas can get out -- a very combustible combination -- and one that proved tragic in this instance. A terrible explosion just seconds after liftoff and the impact was not only felt but actually seen around the world on the TV broadcast.

What people had trouble coming to grips with was how could such a small and seemingly insignificant component -- a tiny O-ring -- cause such a huge catastrophe?

If you are at all like me, you wrestle at times with feelings of being insignificant not talking about the kids ... you guys know you are significant ... we parents make it a point to tell you that all the time ... but sometimes as adults we forget that. It's a huge world out there and we often ask: What can little old me accomplish for the Lord? What's my mission? Why doesn't Christ just come back and kickoff the big celebration? What am I doing here?

CONTEXT / REVIEW:

Christ certainly knew His Mission -- Matt. 4:23-25;

Matt. 9:35 -- teaching / preaching / healing

Remember the Beatitudes that we studied last week in Matthew Chapter 5 from the Sermon on the Mount. As members of the kingdom we should be progressing in a number of key character areas ... as we pursue the blessedness that is associated with conformity to the righteousness of God. We learned what type of people we have been called to be.

Finished with the reality of persecution.

Today we are going to look at the very simple instructions that Jesus gave to His disciples to help them focus on their true mission -- This is how we are going to find significance in our life here on earth -- What have we been called to do?

Pastor Brian knew this was a good passage to give to me ... You see I love to dig into a passage and come up with an outline that really helps to explain the flow of thought in the text. I will look at the tiniest details by making grammatical diagrams in the Greek and then try to put the passage back together by capturing what I call the Big Idea of the paragraph. I worked long hours on this and here is what I have come up with ... see what you think:

2 major points:

- 1) You are the Salt of the earth
- 2) You are the Light of the world

Kids, what do you think? Pretty impressive, eh? You're going to be able to follow me just fine ... we are going to talk about Salt and Light -- 2 very simple pictures -- nothing very fancy here (hold up objects)

- Significance of the Metaphor -- Why did Christ pick these 2 simple phenomena
- Underlying Assumption: Why is the world in such desperate need of salt or light
- Try to come to grips with our Mission as Salt or Light -- What are the implications for us
- Look at the Pathway to Ineffectiveness -- what would negate the type of powerful impact we are supposed to have on the world

I. (:13) SALT -- THE INDWELLING HOLY SPIRIT WORKS THRU BELIEVERS TO COUNTERACT THE DECAY AND ROTTENNESS IN THE WORLD AS WE TAKE A STAND FOR RIGHTEOUSNESS

"You are the salt of the earth; but if the salt has become tasteless, how will it be made salty again? It is good for nothing anymore, except to be thrown out and trampled under foot by men."

A. SIGNIFICANCE OF THIS METAPHOR OF SALT

Must first understand how salt was used at the time of Christ ...

In our contemporary society, we may miss the real value of salt. Many ancient societies understood the value of salt far better than we. The Romans believed, for instance, that salt was very valuable. Sometimes Roman soldiers even received their pay in salt. How would you like that ... Go home be warmed and filled! Some have said that it was from this practice that the phrase "not worth his salt" originated.

Primarily in the days before refrigerators, salt was rubbed on to the meat to keep it from going bad so quickly; it was a preservative ... cf. the American Indians and the early settlers with their practice of salting the meat to preserve it

This seems to be the main emphasis in this passage; the fact that salt also is used to enhance the taste seems to be suggested by vs 13 "tasteless" ... but the context seems to argue more for a rendering of: if the salt has lost its distinctive essence ...

Interesting word: "moronized" -- we get the word moron; I don't think Jesus is talking about believers giving the world some pizzaz; although by virtue of counteracting the process of decay we do make the world a more palatable place -- both for ourselves and for others -- bringing out the true meaning of life

B. UNDERLYING ASSUMPTION: Apart from the impact of believers as salt and the ministry of the Holy Spirit in restraining sin, the world would be much more ROTTEN.

How rotten would it be? lots of examples where God sets something good in motion and man wrecks it with a downward spiral of increasing wickedness

1) Look at the Fall -- God saw all that He had made and behold it was very good ... Until man chose to disobey and go his own way .. Happened very quickly!
What type of offspring did Adam and Eve raise? the kind where brother murders brother!
Doctrine of Total Depravity ... Sin Nature .. Man incapable on his own of even responding to God; dead in his trespasses and sins apart from God's redeeming grace

2) Look at the Days of Noah -- Gen 6: 5, 11-12

"Then the Lord saw that the wickedness of man was great on the earth, and that every intent of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually.. . Now the earth was corrupt in the sight of God, and the earth was filled with violence. And God looked on the earth, and behold, it was corrupt; for all flesh had corrupted their way upon the earth"

Noah = a good example of trying to function as Salt and Light in his culture; called a preacher of righteousness (good example of putting the Sermon on the Mount into practice)

3) Look at the Days of Sodom and Gomorrah -- Gen. 18

God couldn't find 10 righteous people there; He was merciful to hustle Lot out before bringing judgment; his wife was so attached to the world, so compromised, she looked back and was turned into a pillar of salt

4) Look at the nation of Israel -- Removal of the Shekinah Glory from the Temple -- Ezekiel 10-11; all that God had done to plant the nation, cultivate it, look for it to produce good fruit ... What was the output??

5) Look at Romans 1 -- the account of progressive wickedness how does that play out in the Roman Empire; what about in the United States?

6) Look at the description of the Last Days in 2 Pet. 2

7) Look at the description of the Tribulation Period in the Book of Rev. -- what happens when all the believers are removed at the Rapture and God starts over with the 3 Witnesses?
picture of Babylon in Rev. 18:2-3

What is the consistent thread as we look at these different time periods throughout the history of man? Man's natural depravity has a tendency to cycle downward in spirals of increasing wickedness ... no matter how good things were at the beginning ...
Not to say that there cannot be revivals for a period of time ... but when you look at the overall trend...

Does that mean I am a pessimist when it comes to what kind of impact can we expect the gospel to have on the world?? I would say that I am a realist ..

I am certainly not of the postmill camp that see the kingdom gradually taking over the world and things improving until we reach some type of millennial fulfillment of the OT promises and then Christ returns

Look at our culture today? How rotten has it become ... just in our lifetime and all of this is with the presence of some measure of salt ... let's look at our Mission as the salt of the earth

C. COMING TO GRIPS WITH OUR MISSION AS BELIEVERS - THOSE INDWELT BY THE HOLY SPIRIT -- TO BE THE SALT OF THE EARTH

"You are the salt of the earth"

Why do I throw in the ministry of the Holy Spirit here? Not mentioned in the text in Matt 5 ...
It is primarily the Holy Spirit that performs this ministry of restraining evil; of sanctifying and purifying;
cf. 1 Cor. 7:14 -- very interesting passage

IMPLICATIONS:

1. Salt has no impact unless it touches the meat -- Called to be Radically Associated with Unbelievers what type of contact do we have with non-Christians? with our culture?

Christ came and spent quality time building into the lives of His disciples; general teaching time reaching out to the multitudes; and personal outreach by rubbing shoulders directly with the publicans and sinners to the extent that the Separatist Pharisees blasted Him for it

cf. book title: Out of the Saltshaker & into the World

If salt just hangs around all day with salt, it will not fulfill its intended function;
O-rings in the box are worthless ... they have to be applied to where a seal is needed

Where does my life touch non-Christians? What type of an impact am I having there?

cf. quote from book -- p.124 -- John Stott -- rabbit hole Christianity Probably more of us need to change our approach in this area than any other
Our schedules are structured around doing things with other believers ...
We know that ... but are we committed to changing that??
As we head this direction we must remember a second key implication:

2. Salt has no impact unless it retains its distinctive essence -- Called to be Radically Different from the World

As Christians, do we stand out as different from the world?
emphasis on the ministry of the HOLY Spirit
Some Christians wrestle much more in this area ... they have plenty of contact with unbelievers ... but they have become worldly so there is no distinction

Look at the music artists who try to appeal to the more popular crowd ...
What kind of testimony do you end up with??

Do we laugh at the same jokes? some uncomfortable moments at work
Do people change what types of jokes they will tell around you ...

Do we use the same vocabulary as unclean vessels?
Oh pardon my French do people change their vocabulary around you??

Problem: That's what nonbelievers at work think a Christian is: someone who is not allowed to laugh at dirty jokes and can't use coarse language ... we are giving the wrong impression.. What about the heart attitudes of how we treat other people, how we love others and are concerned for their well-being ...

- What about mercy triumphing over judgement?
- What about having pure motives rather than a selfish agenda?
- What about pursuing the ministry of a peacemaker as a reconciler?
- What about a servant type heart as we help others?
- What about loving our neighbor as ourself?? something the Pharisees couldn't stomach

It is much harder to bring this type of understanding home to those we are trying to reach for Christ

Do we watch the same TV shows with all of their sexual innuendos?
Do we have the same value system ... the materialism of the world?
Are we friends of the world or friends of God?

Problem with some of the seeker church mentality: if it thinks that it can sneak an entrance into non-believers hearts by being as much like them as possible without crossing the line ... and thus attract them (or trick them) into Christianity ...

- so we present a service that differs very little from the style of entertainment the world finds attractive
- so we use a vocabulary that has been cleansed from any words that might offend the conscience or stir up conviction -- no mention of sin, of hell, of God's holiness and justice and righteousness
- so we present a very man-oriented type of message ... more of a manual on how to be happy and fulfilled as a person ... manology ... rather than theology which presents truth from God's perspective with a vision to glorifying God ...

Where is the power there to counteract the decay and rottenness of the world??

2 Pet 2:9 "But you are a chosen race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for God's own possession, that you may proclaim the excellencies of Him who has called you out of darkness into His marvellous light."

Are we authentic? Are we the real thing? --- We can only impact the world if we are yielded to the Holy Spirit

Consequences of being salt

3. Salt is not always welcomed with open arms -- it carries a bit of a sting, a bite to it --

Called to be Radically Committed to Righteousness speaking the truth in love ... but there is something of a confrontational tone at times; not just going with the flow; fitting in with the crowd

That is why the context speaks of persecution ...

"all who live godly in Christ Jesus will suffer persecution"

4. Implications in terms of Political Activism here in the United States?

But Are we Called to Be Radically Immersed in Political Activism? Difficult Question ...
Defining the arena ... no question that our personal relationships with others are primarily in view ...
But what about our responsibility to our larger community and overall culture?
I might not be the best one to respond here ... always a danger of our perspective being distorted by our own sin or our own blind spots in certain areas ... Not an easy question

Safe Question: What would Jesus do?

Certainly would not characterize Him as a political activist; however, our form of government is vastly different;

cf. the Moral Majority -- even Dr. Jerry Falwell has tempered his approach and expectations in this area

cf. our family joking about "being on Alert" -- many causes seek to cast a millstone of a guilt trip around your neck if you do not support their cause by doing X, Y, and Z

cf. Pietistic approach; almost isolated from the world you live in ...not advocating that; not criticizing the efforts of those who feel called to such a political role;

However, not going to be intimidated into some type of legalistic response by way of obligation;

How does my Lord want me to function as salt in the context in which He has put me???

D. PATHWAY TO INEFFECTIVENESS = LOSING OUR DISTINCTIVENESS conformity to the world around us-- friendship with the world = enmity to God; failure to develop biblical convictions or lack of backbone to stand by them; unwillingness to expose wickedness for what it really is

"but if the salt has become tasteless, how will it be made salty again? It is good for nothing anymore, except to be thrown out and trampled under foot by men."

Do we want lives that are characterized as good for nothing ... or lives that really have an impact for Christ?

Kids ... here's an illustration you might be able to identify with:

A Peanuts cartoon, showed Peppermint Patty talking to Charlie Brown. She said, "Guess what, Chuck. The first day of school, and I got sent to the principal's office. It was your fault, Chuck."

He said, "My fault? How could it be my fault? Why do you say everything is my fault?"

She said, "You're my friend, aren't you, Chuck? You should have been a better influence on me."

While Peppermint Patty was seeking to pass the buck, she was in a very real sense right. We should be a good influence on our friends. We certainly do have an influence, for good or for bad.

Kids, remember our simple outline?? Salt and Light

II. (:14-15) LIGHT -- THE INDWELLING PERSON OF JESUS CHRIST WORKS THRU BELIEVERS TO PROVIDE A BEACON OF LIGHT IN A CONTEXT OF DARKNESS IN THE WORLD
(AS WE SHINE THE TORCH OF TRUTH AND LIFE TO A WORLD LOST IN DARKNESS)

*“You are the light of the world. A city set on a hill cannot be hidden.
15 Nor do men light a lamp, and put it under the peck-measure, but on the lampstand; and it gives light to all who are in the house.”*

A. SIGNIFICANCE OF THIS METAPHOR OF LIGHT

Interesting that the Theme of the 2002 Winter Olympics in Salt Lake City = LIGHT THE FIRE WITHIN

Think about that ... what is supposed to light that fire?? Inspiration ??? What does that mean??

All types of symbolism and imagery of light throughout the pageant ..

At least the world claims to place a value on Light and long for Light .. but of course they are trying to manufacture a false substitute apart from the True Light of the World

Coming from a belief in the inherent Goodness of Man (instead of Total Depravity)

Remember the claims of Christ -- presented first by John the Baptist .. the one who came announcing the King; and then reiterated by Christ Himself

Luke 1:76-79 Zacharias, the father of John the Baptist, prophesying about his ministry of being the forerunner to Christ

"For you will go on before the Lord to prepare His ways ... the Sunrise from on high shall visit us, to shine upon those who sit in darkness and the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace."

John chapter 1

"In Him (Christ) was life, and the life was the light of men. And the light shines in the darkness, and the darkness did not comprehend it. There came a man, sent from God, whose name was John. He came for a witness, that he might bear witness of the light, that all might believe through him. He was not the light, but came that he might bear witness of the light. There was the true light which, coming into the world, enlightens every man."

Remember John 8 -- Jesus confronted the Pharisees with this same claim:

"I am the light of the world; he who follows Me shall not walk in the darkness, but shall have the light of life."

One of my all-time favorite illustrations ... you've probably heard it before ... but humor me ...

Think about the difficulty of navigating large ships out in the open seas and then bringing them safely into harbor in all types of nasty weather and conditions of poor visibility. It's amazing that more ships don't ram into one another or end up on the rocks ...

In the darkest part of the night, a ship's captain cautiously piloted his warship through the fog-shrouded waters. With straining eyes he scanned the hazy darkness, searching for dangers lurking just out of sight.

Then His worst fears were realized when he saw a bright light straight ahead. It appeared to be a vessel on a collision course with his ship. Just then this American vessel he was piloting received a radio message from the Canadians he was about to crash into:

Canadians: Please divert your course 15 degrees to the south to avoid a collision.

Americans: Recommend you divert your course 15 degrees to the north to avoid a collision.

Canadians: Negative. You will have to divert your course 15 degrees to the south to avoid a collision.

Americans: This is the Captain of a US Navy ship. I say again, divert YOUR course.

Canadians: No. I say again, you divert YOUR course.

Americans: THIS IS THE AIRCRAFT CARRIER USS LINCOLN, THE SECOND LARGEST SHIP IN THE UNITED STATES' ATLANTIC FLEET. WE ARE ACCOMPANIED BY THREE DESTROYERS, THREE CRUISERS AND NUMEROUS SUPPORT VESSELS. I DEMAND THAT YOU CHANGE YOUR COURSE 15 DEGREES NORTH. I SAY AGAIN, THAT'S ONE FIVE DEGREES NORTH, OR COUNTER MEASURES WILL BE UNDERTAKEN TO ENSURE THE SAFETY OF THIS SHIP.

Canadians: This is a lighthouse. Your call.

* * * * *

Something about lighthouses that seem to appeal to everybody.

- They are perched up on some prominent precipice where they can have maximum utility .. you don't find any lighthouses hidden away in some cave or valley
- They are very simple in their mission -- provide a beacon of light to those out in the darkness who need that critical help for navigation and safety

cf. all the Christian ministries that have sprung up around this theme ... lighthouse ministries

How can we help others see Jesus??

Not many songs in the hymnal about salt; but plenty about light:

*"The whole world was lost in the darkness of sin, the light of the world is Jesus;
Like sunshine at noonday His glory shone in, The light of the world is Jesus.
Come to the Light, tis shining for thee; sweetly the light has dawned upon me;
Once I was blind, but now I can see; The Light of the world is Jesus."*

(That's our testimony and that's the message we take to the dying world around us.)

*"Hail the heaven-born Prince of Peace! Hail the Sun of Righteousness!
Light and life to all He brings, Risen with healing in His wings"*
(Hark, the Herald Angels Sing)

"Silent Night! Holy night! Son of God, Love's pure light" (Silent Night)

"Fair is the sunshine, Fairer still the moonlight, And all the twinkling starry host: Jesus shines brighter, Jesus shines purer, Than all the angels heaven can boast." (Fairest Lord Jesus)

"Make me a blessing, Make me a blessing, Out of my life may Jesus shine"

Perhaps the most famous and the most appropriate ... Kids, you all know this one:

"This little light of mine, I'm going to let it shine Hide it under a bushel, NO ... I'm going to let it shine ..."

B. UNDERLYING ASSUMPTION: Apart from believers, the world would be completely DARK
No light, No Life

- Ignorance ... but the problem is primarily one of the heart, not of the mind
- Blindness .. Satan has blinded their minds so they are unable to see
- Lack of Direction -- cf. Pharisees: "the blind leading the blind"
- Darkness associated with wickedness

John 3:19-21 "And this is the judgment, that the light is come into the world, and men loved the darkness rather than the light; for their deeds were evil. For everyone who does evil hates the light, and does not come to the light, lest his deeds should be exposed. But he who practices the truth comes to the light, that his deeds may be manifested as having been wrought in God."

do a word study of "darkness" -- see what it is that Christ has delivered us from
"we have been delivered from the domain of darkness" (Col 1:13)

Our mission is to be light to the world. When the Lord Jesus Christ commissioned the apostle Paul, he told him,
"I am sending you to [the Gentiles] to open their eyes and turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God" (Acts 26:17-18).

Mike Eruzione -- got to light the Olympic Torch; interviewed and just didn't have the words to express how thrilled he was to participate.
We have been entrusted with the torch of the gospel; our very lives are to be the light that shines in the darkness and gives people an opportunity to see Jesus and be delivered as we have been
What a privilege!

C. COMING TO GRIPS WITH OUR MISSION AS BELIEVERS = THOSE INDWELT BY JESUS CHRIST -- TO BE THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD

"You are the light of the world"

Implications for us:

1) Light needs to make itself accessible to those who need it

Light should be easy to spot in the darkness; Christ expresses this by saying that a city on a hill cannot be hidden.

One commentator noted: Hill cities in Palestine were impressive sites. They were built there because the cool sea breezes would act like an air conditioner in the arid climate, and also because a city on a hill was easiest to defend. It is hard to fight going up hill. The mark of Palestinian cities is that they are always in view. At night they glow in the distance. When we are the light of the world everyone will know it. We cannot reflect His light and remain obscure. We cannot hide His light. God does not call us into the secret service. Either secrecy will destroy the discipleship or discipleship will destroy the secrecy. We cannot live light filled lives in our society without standing out, without having people notice us. They may not like us; they may persecute us, but they will know we are there.

2) Light is not a respecter of persons

Not up to us to pick and choose who we think is a good candidate for the gospel; we can easily be influenced by our own prejudices; only reach out to those in our social, economic class; only speak to those who are like us; light is not that way; the beacon shines for all to see and respond to

3) Light needs to provide answers and direction

We use light so that we can see where we are going. As our lives shine forth with the righteousness of Christ, we need to be prepared to give an answer to those who want to know more about the source of this light and how it is associated with life and redemption from this world of darkness

We have been talking mostly about our:

- Individual implications of this mission of being the light of the world
- Apparently there are corporate implications for us as a church as well
"A city set on a hill cannot be hidden"

As a church, how is our light shining in the community around us?

D. PATHWAY TO INEFFECTIVENESS = HIDING OUR LIGHT

- overcome by the fear of men; fear of ridicule, of embarrassment, of persecution
- lack of compassion for the plight of the lost
- lack of passion to be a true follower of Christ and Fisher of men

"Nor do men light a lamp, and put it under the peck-measure, but on the lampstand; and it give light to all who are in the house."

cf. attitude expressed by the book: I'm Glad You Asked

(:16) CONCLUSION: OUR MOTIVATION = THAT OTHERS MAY GLORIFY GOD ALSO

"Let your light shine before men in such a way that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven."

Jesus has much to say in the Sermon on the Mount about our heart motivation. Remember, the Pharisees majored on the externals of the law ... Christ countered with:
"Blessed are the pure in heart" not the whitewashed sepulchres who were still rotten on the inside

key = our good works; not our words

Easy for us to come across as self-righteous ... like the Pharisees ... conclusion of those watching our life ... he's really a good person ... he definitely deserves to go to heaven if anyone does ...
Or: he sure thinks highly of himself ... We want them to see our good works and glorify our Father who is in heaven ... Quite a challenge ... Quite an opportunity

Remember our little O-ring that we started off talking about? Proved to be very significant in the case of the Challenger launch. It would be a tragedy if we turned out to be good for nothing and lost our distinctiveness as members in the family of God; or if we hid our light under a bushel basket;

We shouldn't have any issues regarding our significance ..

We have been called to be Salt and Light to a world that is rotten and dark;

- Not being asked to do something unnatural or impossible .. but act in a way that is totally consistent with our new nature;
- We have within us the ministry of the indwelling Holy Spirit ... the life of Christ;

What a privilege to reach out to the world around us and impact that world for Jesus Christ, for the gospel, and for the kingdom of God.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

1) What are some ways that we have seen our Christian testimony compromised?

- 2) What do societies look like where there is no Christian influence?
- 3) What are some of the pressures to hide my light instead of position it to shine brightly?
- 4) What is the effect of light on darkness?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Charles Ryrie: Re Col. 4:5-6 -- Salt is a preservative that retards spoilage. Our speech should be tempered so as never to be insipid, corrupt, or obscene.

Kittel: Re "tasteless" -- Denotes a physical or intellectual deficiency in animals or men, in their conduct and actions, also in things. The word can refer to physical sloth or dullness, but the main ref. is to the intellectual life. It takes on various meanings in different contexts. Thus it can mean 'insipid' of insufficiently seasoned foods... The difficulty of the saying as thus attested in three different forms is that salt cannot lose its chemical qualities... It is impossible that what Jesus brought, what He gave His disciples, what He made of them, should become insipid and perish. The Gospel is as incorruptible and indestructible as salt... illustrates indestructibility and permanence of God's gift in Christ ... not dependent on man... The [word] now suggests, not the physical impossibility of a change in the chemical constitution of salt, but the psychical possibility of a change in the faith of disciples. The warning concerns the earthly being of the disciple. He who through the powerful Word of Christ has become an apostle, a fisher of men, a shepherd, a rock, loses all value if his faith vacillates and he falls away.

John Walvoord: Influence of True Disciples -- ... While salt can preserve and flavor almost any food, ... salt without flavor should be thrown away. So disciples, without true moral character and spiritual commitment to the King, are useless in the kingdom of heaven. It also implies the rottenness of the world, which needs the preservative of the salt, as D. Martyn Lloyd-Jones points out.

Lenski: Commentators waver between the single use of salt in counteracting corruption or the double use of doing this and also rendering food palatable. In Christ's word the tertium comparationis is a unit idea not a duality. The thought of making the world palatable to God is quite impossible. All that Christ has in mind with the figure of salt is that his disciples check the moral corruption of the world, so that it does not quickly perish in its own moral rottenness. This figure by no means exhausts our function in the world, even also as other figures at once follow.

John Piper: So we can see why a life devoted to righteousness or godliness will be persecuted or reviled or spoken against.

- If you cherish chastity, your life will be an attack on people's love for free sex.
- If you embrace temperance, your life will be a statement against the love of alcohol.
- If you pursue self-control, your life will indict excess eating.
- If you live simply and happily, you will show the folly of luxury.
- If you walk humbly with your God, you will expose the evil of pride.

--If you are punctual and thorough in your dealings, you will lay open the inferiority of laziness and negligence.

-- If you speak with compassion, you will throw callousness into sharp relief.

-- If you are earnest, you will make the flippant look flippant instead of clever.

-- And if you are spiritually minded you will expose the worldly-mindedness of those around you.

When you desire to be godly in all your affairs and relationships -- when you follow the righteousness of Jesus in his strength and for his glory -- there are two possible responses people can have who stay around you. These are described in John 3:20-21.

- For every one who does evil hates the light, and does not come to the light, lest his deeds should be exposed. [That is one possible response: hating the light and not accepting it.]

- But he who does what is true comes to the light, that it may be clearly seen that his deeds have been wrought in God. [That is the other possible response: doing the truth and coming to it and freely admitting that all good in us is accomplished by God.]

The two options are persecution or conversion. (See these two options in Matthew 5:10 and 16.) But, we ask, what about all the unbelievers in my life who are neither converted nor persecuting -- who are just civil, or even polite? There are at least two possible explanations.

- One is that your light is under a bushel. You are keeping the stumbling block of the cross well concealed (Galatians 5:11; 6:12-13). You don't let your distinctive values show.

- The other is that you are letting them show and the people around you are moving toward one or the other of these two polls: persecution or conversion.

Neither of these must happen immediately. There are all kinds of factors that can hinder expressions of persecution. We see these often in the gospels when the Pharisees were angered but were hindered by expediency from expressing their anger in outright persecution. Neither persecution nor conversion will always happen immediately. In fact many people are torn inside themselves, partly hating the claims of Christianity in your life, partly attracted by them.

So we should all examine ourselves to see if we are playing a kind of cowardly Christian incognito. And if so we should repent and resolve to be more sincere in the expression of who we really are. But we must not assume that, because there is no persecution right now and no conversion right now, the fault must lie with us. The gestation period for the new birth may be nearing a happy end. Or the storm may be ready to break against you.

John Kolkebec: Message - "Are you Worth Your Salt?" Mt 5:13-14

I. Uses of Salt

1. Season - Do you bring out the true meaning of life?

Man's reality/Purpose in life Acts 17:27/ John 17:3

Who are you helping to find reality/Salvation/Relation?

2. Preserves Food -
Used to roll meat in Salt & place in ground.
Do you preserve and promote proper relationships?
Authority-Government, Work, Family, Enemies -- Rom 13, Col 3:23, Eph 5, Rom 12:19
3. Promotes Thirst -
i.e. on Popcorn
Do others thirst for your relationship with God?
Mat 7:6 Blessed who thirst
4. Cleansing - Do you encourage righteousness?
Babies washed in salt. Ps 119:9,11 Cleanses us/Others
We have answers- Flee Flesh / Fight Satan / Pray when World Tempts
5. Provide Foundations for Roads/Roofs -
Salt with dirt of life can give meaning to life.
Do you share foundational truths?
6. Heals - Do you show God's Love?
Know you are disciples by your love. Jn 13:35
7. Given as Salary -
Are you really Christ's possession?
We are bought with a price 1 Cor 6:20. His inheritance!
8. In Battle -
Killed soil's ability. Lk 14:33-35? (light fertilizer)
9. Prevented Stench of Society's Waste -
Does your presence help to prevent sin? Lk 14:35

II. God's promise of Provision - "Covenant of Salt"

- A. Provision for God's Priests, Lev. 2:13; Num 18:8,11,19
- B. We are Priests of God, Ex 19:5/ 1Pet 2:9-12; Mt 6:33

III. Need for a choice Lk 14:25-35/ Mt 5:13

- A. Hate (not person) but demand of relation that would make you disobey God.
- B. You are Salt! Are you useful for Battle?

Bill Prater: Sermon on the Mount -- Matthew 5:13

In the previous verses the Lord presented the principles and qualities that make a Christian distinctive. Beginning with verse 13 He goes on to give a striking picture of what it really means to behave as a Christian. In describing the Christian as the salt of the earth, Jesus provides a powerful illustration of the impact and impression we are to be making on the society in which we live.

The size of our influence is not the focus in this verse, but rather the strength of it.

I. A DIVINE OPPORTUNITY

We must keep in mind as we approach this verse that this is not a call for volunteers. Jesus is telling those of His day, as well as those of us today, that as believers we ARE salt whether we want to be or not. It is not a matter of whether or not we are influencing others, but it is a matter of how we are influencing them.

As salt, we have an awesome opportunity to make an eternal difference in the lives of those around us.

A. Salt is Visible

1. Notice that as Christians we are the salt of the earth. Our ministry is to a lost and dying world. We are to win lost souls and establish them in the faith.
2. The only way we can accomplish our God-given mission is to be a visible part of our society. We are not to hide ourselves within the confines of the four walls of the church building, totally isolated from the rest of the world.
3. We must remember - NO CONTACT, NO IMPACT!
4. Matthew 9:10-13; John 17:14-15

B. Salt is Valuable

1. In today's society, we tend to miss the impact of what Jesus was saying in this verse. However, those in ancient societies understood the value of salt far better than we. The Romans believed, for instance, that there was nothing as valuable as salt, except for the sun. Many Roman soldiers received their pay in salt. Some have said that it was from this practice that the phrase "not worth his salt" originated.
2. Those listening to Jesus may not have understood all of what He was saying, but they knew that to be called "the salt of the earth" was to be something very special and valuable.
3. Jesus has chosen us (John 15:16), as believers, to do His work here on earth. We are of great value to Him. But not only are we of value to the Lord, but we are also of great value to the world, although they may not realize it or acknowledge it.

C. Salt is Vital

1. Among its many other uses, salt is essential to the health of both humans and animals. In ancient days it was a vital part of the economy in terms of a source of revenue.
2. Our existence as believers and our influence as "the salt of the earth" is vital to the preservation of our society. Right now it is the existence of believers in the world that is staying the awful punishment of a holy and righteous God.

II. A DEFINITE RESPONSIBILITY

By nature and by purpose believers are to be distinctly different. By nature we are a new creation, born of God (2 Corinthians 5:17; 1 Peter 1:23). By purpose we are to:

A. Be Pure

1. Its color being white, salt symbolizes purity.
2. Purity is a must on the part of God's people (1 Timothy 5:22; 2 Corinthians 7:1; 1 Peter 1:15-16; 1 John 1:3).

B. Preserve

1. To the people of Jesus' day salt was a preservative vital to their way of life. The only way fishermen could get their product to the market in good condition was to salt it and pack it between layers of salt. The salt kept the fish fresh and edible.
2. "Ye are the salt of the earth" implies that there is a rottenness in the earth. It implies a tendency to pollution and to becoming foul and offensive. The world's tendency is to evil. It's like meat which has a tendency to putrefy and become polluted. Ever since the fall of man in the garden, the world has become more and more corrupt. It is the purpose of believers to be a preserving influence to retard the moral and spiritual decay in the world.

3. The most effective way of halting the corruption in society is by bringing individuals in society to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ.

C. Be Pungent

1. If something is said to be pungent it means that it has a stinging or biting quality causing an irritating sensation.

2. In our own unique way, as believers we are to be somewhat irritating to the world. Just as salt in a wound stings, believers are to prick the conscience of the world and be an irritant to ungodly behavior.

3. Our life as a Christian ought to be a positive witness for Christ, but it should also be a negative condemnation to the person who refuses to believe.

4. 2 Corinthians 2:15-16

D. Penetrate

1. Once salt has been applied to food, it penetrates that food and changes the way it is. As Christians we are to penetrate the world and change the way it is. The apostles penetrated the society in which they lived and made such a difference that it was said that they had "turned the world upside down" (Acts 17:6).

2. As salt penetrates the food to which it is applied, it adds flavor to that food. And in much the same way, we as Christians are to add flavor to the world around us. If as a Christian we are not making the world around us a better place by our presence, we are not fulfilling our function as salt. Our life as a Christian ought not to be dull and tasteless (Job 6:6). We ought to be a living example of the "flavor" that Jesus Christ can add.

3. Salt also creates thirst. Christians ought to create a thirst for God in those around them.

III. A DREADFUL POSSIBILITY

"It is a well-known fact that the salt of this country [ie. Palestine] when in contact with the ground, or exposed to rain and sun, does become insipid and useless. From the manner in which it is gathered, much earth and other impurities are necessarily collected with it. Not a little of it is so impure that it cannot be used at all; and such salt soon effloresces and turns to dust--not to fruitful soil however. It is not only good for nothing itself, but it actually destroys all fertility wherever it is thrown...No man will allow it to be thrown on to his field, and the only place for it is the street; and there it is cast, to be trodden under foot of men." (The Pulpit Commentary, Volume 15, page 152)

There is danger, disgrace, and possible disaster here in terms of our Christian testimony. The possibility of a Christian losing his or her testimony is as real as salt losing its saltiness. The above quote gives us some idea as to how salt loses its savor and how we can lose our testimony as a child of God.

A. Association "It is a well-known fact that the salt of this country [ie. Palestine] when in contact with the ground, or exposed to rain and sun, does become insipid and useless..."

1. Just as salt can become insipid and useless through exposure to the wrong elements, so can a Christian.

2. Proverbs 13:20; 1 Corinthians 15:33; 2 Corinthians 6:14-18

3. Nothing will cause a child of God to be stale and tasteless and render them useless any quicker than associations with worldly people and worldly activities.

B. Contamination "...From the manner in which it is gathered much earth and other impurities are necessarily collected with it. Not a little of it is so impure that it cannot be used at all..."

1. James 1:27

2. As we discussed at the beginning of this lesson, Jesus did not pray that the Father would remove believers from the world but that He would keep them from the contamination of the world (John 17:14-15).

3. Prolonged association with the world will ultimately mean being contaminated by the world.

C. Devastation "...It is not only good for nothing itself, but it actually destroys all fertility wherever it is thrown..."

1. The Christian who through prolonged association with world becomes contaminated by the world will have a devastating effect upon the world in terms of his or her testimony.

2. Not only does a contaminated Christian become ineffective in having an influence upon the lost, but they also render other Christians around them ineffective.

D. Repudiation "...No man will allow it to be thrown on to his field, and the only place for it is the street; and there it is cast, to be trodden under foot of men."

1. While the world may not embrace them, they will tolerate a "salty" Christian, but they have absolutely no use for a tasteless one. They will reject them and the God they supposedly served.

2. A Christian who has lost their testimony is good for nothing. It is a sad reality that there are a lot of "good for nothing"

TEXT: Matthew 5:17-20

TITLE: JESUS FULFILLING THE LAW -- SHARPENING THE FOCUS . . . RAISING THE BAR

BIG IDEA:

WHEN IT COMES TO UNDERSTANDING THE RIGHTEOUSNESS REQUIRED BY GOD, CHRIST BOTH SHARPENS THE FOCUS AND RAISES THE BAR

INTRODUCTION:

Pastor Brian has called the Sermon on the Mount, Christ's stump speech – in other words this same message or at least its major themes were probably repeated by Christ numerous times and in many settings throughout His 3 ½ years of earthly ministry. I like that designation. Some of us just listened to the third presidential debate this past week ... the stump speeches ... the standard lines of the two candidates are already boring me ... there is so much rhetoric ... so much twisting of the truth and misrepresentation ... so many big promises and so little power to make things happen ... to really make a change in people's lives ... I admit I am somewhat of a political cynic ... not to minimize the importance of our responsibility to evaluate the issues and to vote ... and certainly not painting both candidates with the same brush when it comes to character and convictions ... but when it comes to stump speeches ... they tire me out ..

The Sermon on the Mount is 2000 years old ... for me it is about 50 years old ... but I'm not tired of it ... I don't find it boring It is exciting and fresh ... because it is the Word of God and it is powerful ... it communicates the essence of kingdom life ... it shows me what true righteousness looks like when Christ reigns in our hearts ... you want the true message of Peace and Security and Prosperity ... it is all here in the Sermon on the Mount ...

Christ is no mere politician of some local time and place

He is the fulfillment of everything the OT promised in terms of the coming Messiah:

- He is the ultimate prophet who would not only communicate God's message ... but Himself be the incarnate Word of God
- He is the Sympathetic Priest – the one mediator between God and man ... who Himself is the very sacrifice that has paid the penalty for our sins
- He is the Reigning Eternal King who is ushering in His kingdom according to His sovereign Reign

Don't forget what we have covered already in the Sermon on the Mount ... review your notes ...

Today we come to a pivotal short paragraph that sets up the specific topics Christ is going to address to contrast His explanation of the law of God with that of the scribes and Pharisees. He takes up the topics of murder, of reconciliation and forgiveness, of adultery and divorce, of the swearing of oaths, of retaliation vs love, of almsgiving, of prayer, of fasting, of materialism, of anxiety ... the list goes on.

The contrast is going to be severe at every point ...

- you have those who pride themselves on being the experts in the law ... those who have made a profession out of telling others how to live in a way that will please God – the self-righteous scribes and Pharisees who are going to be exposed as white-washed sepulchres ... trying to look pretty on the outside but stinking of death and condemnation on the inside

- vs. the Lawgiver and Lawfulfiller Himself – the Lord Jesus Christ

He never backs away from a confrontation where He sees an opportunity to shed light on the true nature of the kingdom of God and His righteousness

Let's see who the real expert is on the subject of the law of God and the type of righteousness that is demanded by Him

Charles Swindoll: For many long years, faulty information had been taught by the religious aristocracy. With unquestioned authority, these religious leaders twisted the meaning of Holy Scripture, offered interpretations that were simply wrong, and demanded applications that were frankly impossible. Not content to let God's Word speak for itself, they added to the commandments of God and required that everyone obey their additions without hesitation. When Jesus sat down and delivered His illustrious Sermon on the Mount, jaws must have dropped as His audience heard an entirely different interpretation, delivered in an entirely different mode of communication.

With boldness and clarity, He explained crucial truths in such a way that anyone could grasp the meaning. His teachings were both insightful and convicting. They stood in sharp contrast to the traditional religious instructions the people had been taught throughout their lives. And just as these truths were impactful among Jesus' original audience, they have immense bearing for us today. . .

So, rather than setting aside, rejecting, or replacing the Word of God, Jesus had come to "fulfill" and to "accomplish" it (5:17-18). Jesus Himself would fulfill God's Word doctrinally, ethically, prophetically, and personally. He would live its laws and interpret its words as God originally intended. He would fulfill its prophecies and promises as predicted.

Grant Osborne: The body of the sermon begins here. The central issue is the relationship of Jesus' kingdom teaching (in a sense, a new Torah) to the old Torah or law. When one realizes the radical nature of this new ethical teaching, it is understandable that Jesus begins with this issue. He wants to make clear that he is unswerving in his adherence to the Torah. This supplements but does not replace Torah; rather, it is the true explication of Torah, the implications that have not previously been understood.

Moreover, Torah is caught up and fulfilled in this new kingdom teaching. It is clear that Jesus brings something entirely new to the table—a new righteousness; but that new righteousness is not opposed to the old but is the true implication of it. The six antitheses in 5:21–48 draw out and exemplify this fact.

The scribes and Pharisees had developed the oral tradition in order to explicate the law more clearly for the people; they wanted to make its meaning evident on the practical level of living it rightly. Jesus is saying in effect that they have failed to do so. Only he can "fulfill" it, that is, bring it to its intended end or goal.

I. (:17-18) CHRIST SHARPENS THE FOCUS ON OT REVELATION BY WAY OF FULFILLMENT ... NOT BY WAY OF ANNULMENT

ILLUSTRATION: SHARPENING THE FOCUS

This past week Karen and I enjoyed travelling throughout the gorgeous mountains of Vermont – the changing leaves were just in their prime ... God's glorious beauty shouted from every mountaintop .. a dazzling array of colors ... sometimes muted ... sometimes very bright and vivid ..

Locals know us as "leaf peepers"

Now that we have advanced into the modern age with a digital camera ... Karen can take pictures to her heart's content (cell phones .. that's a story for another day ... not going there yet)

These new cameras with their Auto-Focus features are great ... you don't have to play with a lot of complicated dials and settings ... just point and click ...

But the level of light vs shadows available is a crucial variable you cannot control ... you might have the same shot of a quaint old-fashioned church with a high steeple in the town square ... set against the backdrop of some trees with every shade of orange and red imaginable... but if the sun is behind the clouds or you are in the shadows ... the picture will not be the same as when the lighting is just right ... The reality of the scene is the same ... the church is what it is ... but until you have the proper lighting you don't get the full impact

That is the analogy we are going to look at this morning as we examine the relationship between the revelation of God's righteousness in the OT Law and Prophets and the sharpened focus on God's revelation brought about by the light of God's glory in the person of His Son, our Lord Jesus Christ.

The OT was a period of types and shadows. The New Covenant revelation is one of completion and fulfillment.

- Look at the feasts ... what they were intended to signify ..
- Look at all the different sacrifices
- Look at the laws associated with cleanliness
- Look at the OT characters themselves

Abraham – the father of those who would be called into the family of faith

Moses – picture of God redeeming His people

Joshua – a type of the Savior who would lead his people into the promised land

David – a type of the righteous King who would come

Christ was viewed as a threat by those who made it their business to major in God's revelation. Not welcomed with open arms; not recognized as the Messiah; but treated with suspicion and attacked as an enemy of the law of Moses

PRINCIPLE OF INTERPRETATION: THE PROGRESSIVE NATURE OF GOD'S REVELATION DOES NOT ANNUL THE CONTINUITY OF THAT REVELATION

A. (:17a) Wrong View of OT Revelation = Failing to see Progression in the context of Continuity
“Do not think that I came to abolish the Law or the Prophets”

Def of “the Law and the Prophets”

More than just five books of OT

Seems to be a reference to entire revelation of OT

Sometimes a reference to just “the Law” can also speak of the whole (vs. 19)

The law itself divided into 3 components: moral, ceremonial, civil – but an integrated whole with special application to the nation of Israel

(Caution: will be using some labels here ... helpful in being able to speak to a system of thought)

1. Forget About the OT = Deny the Continuity of God's Revelation

(cf. my marketing campaign: “Forget About Bob”) scribes and Pharisees had invested everything in trying to be experts on the OT law

a. Unfounded Charge made against Christ (and later against the Apostle Paul)

Abolishing the Law -- Christ speaking against the commands of Moses; not submitting to them – Why would they make such a charge?

(Warren Wiersbe:)

- 1) His authority didn't fit their mold (7:29)
"He was teaching them as one having authority, and not as their scribes"
- 2) His associations didn't fit their mold
 This man rubs shoulders with the lowest class of sinners in society
- 3) His activities didn't fit their mold
 How could He perform acts of healing on the Sabbath Didn't conform to their traditions ... which they had elevated to
 The same degree of authority as scripture itself
- 4) His message didn't fit their mold
 Message of a call to repentance – not what the self righteous want to hear

b. Ultra Dispensationalists – Sermon on the Mount has no application to today Application: How do evangelicals forget about the OT?
 Yes, the keeping of the law cannot save or sanctify us
 Yes, believers are no longer under the law as the rule of life
 But there is much of value in the OT and much that applies to us today ...

2. Reduce the Message of the OT to one of External Legalism

- a. Scribes and Pharisees of Christ's day misunderstanding of the communication of God's message in the OT – especially regarding the true nature of righteousness
- b. Legalists of Today
 - Seventh Day Adventists
 Application: How do evangelicals fall into legalism in their approach to spirituality?

the practice of adding extra commandments to the Law that Christ:

"They tie up heavy loads and put them on men's shoulders, but they themselves are not willing to lift a finger to move them" (Matt. 23:4, NIV).

3. Deny the Progressive Nature of God's Revelation – 2 Examples:

a. Theonomists -- want to see the civil laws and associated penalties promoted in our society today; fail to recognize the distinctive program that God has for the nation of Israel ... since they see the church as fulfilling all that pertains to the nation of Israel (except they do allow for the cessation of the sacrifices) (Rushdoony, North – very intellectual ... heavy stuff ..)
 But they are compensating for the failure of the evangelical church to give enough attention to God's revelation in the OT – a swing of the pendulum

b. Messianic camp needs to be careful here – They come from a cultural emphasis of wanting to retain their special Jewish heritage while celebrating the fulfillment that Christ has brought to the types and shadows of the OT feasts, etc. Sounds good ... but has some areas where we need to be cautious:

- aren't we supposed to be promoting a unity in the body of Christ where we no longer form cliques around areas of distinctive race or culture?? I would have the same issue of caution with other distinctive groups (Korean Presbyterian churches, Chinese churches) – I see the value ... yet we live in a world of people of all backgrounds ... shouldn't our church be one that could attract everyone who wants to be a disciple of Christ??

- areas of emphasis – too easy to get on a soapbox about peripheral issues and get the attention diverted away from what should be primary Application: How do evangelicals deny the progressive nature of God’s revelation?

B. (:17b-18) Right View of OT Revelation = Seeing Progression in the context of Continuity Christ came to Completely and Entirely Fulfill God’s Revelation in the OT
“I did not come to abolish, but to fulfill. For truly I say to you, until heaven and earth pass away, not the smallest letter or stroke shall pass away from the Law, until all is accomplished.”

In what sense did Christ fulfill God’s revelation in the OT:

- By His life of obedience ... completely fulfilled all of the righteous requirements of the law
Gal. 4:4 “made under the law”
Remember His baptism – “it is fitting for us to fulfill all righteousness”
Submitted to the instruction of his parents
Observed the feasts and the sacrifices
Earned the commendation of His Heavenly Father: “This is my Son in whom I am well pleased” – shows that His righteousness was not just external but proceeded from the heart
- By the fulfillment of all prophecy – some yet future
- Most importantly, in His death and resurrection – He redeemed us, reconciled us
Brought us into a new relationship with God under the New Covenant

Leon Morris: To fulfil has been understood in three main ways:

- (1) It may mean that he would do the things laid down in Scripture.
- (2) It may mean that he would bring out the full meaning of Scripture.
- (3) It may mean that in his life and teaching he would bring Scripture to its completion.

Each points to an aspect of the truth, and Jesus may well have meant that he would fulfil Scripture in more ways than one.

Summary: CHRIST SHARPENS THE FOCUS ON OT REVELATION BY WAY OF FULFILLMENT ... NOT BY WAY OF ANNULMENT

II. (:19-20) CHRIST RAISES THE BAR BY EMPHASIZING THE TRUE NATURE OF THE RIGHTEOUSNESS WHICH GOD HAS ALWAYS REQUIRED = PERFECTION = ONLY THE LIFE OF CHRIST

Remember 5:48 “Therefore you are to be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect.”

ILLUSTRATION: RAISING THE BAR

My athletic career peaked in the 6th grade ... (Doesn’t seem to surprise any of you) I was a standout in the Junior Olympics that year. One of my best events was the high jump. Different than today when you have fancy techniques like the Fosbury Flop where you leap over backwards, head first ... we just lined up ... took a run at the pole and did a scissor kick to try to clear it. Every time you made the height they would raise the bar ... eventually nobody could make it ...

Our passage this morning serves as the introduction to how Christ will interpret some very specific commands of God from the OT. In each case he sets forth the contrast between what the scribes and Pharisees are teaching the people and the true intent of God’s Law. He raises the bar ... making the transition from the Old Covenant to the New Covenant by remaining consistent to the continuity of revelation while introducing the progressive aspects of that revelation.

A. (:19) CHRIST PLACES THE HIGHEST PRIORITY ON BOTH OBEYING GOD’S LAW COMPLETELY AND TEACHING/MODELING IT ACCURATELY -- A STANDARD TO WHICH ONLY HE CAN ATTAIN

“Whoever then annuls one of the least of these commandments, and so teaches others, shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven; but whoever keeps and teaches them, he shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven.”

Some important principles from this one verse:

1. Teaching God’s Word is a Sobering Responsibility

Message of James: don’t just rush forward and babble away; guard the tongue

Not for those young in the faith ... will puff them up

Know your limitations

2. There are Differing Levels of Reward and Recognition in the Kingdom of Heaven

Should not be surprising

Does this primarily refer to privileged positions of responsibility in the Millennial Kingdom?

Certainly nothing to minimize or sneeze at

On the other hand can become a stumbling block to those who pursue with motive of selfish ambition .. must not minister from mixed motives

Remember back to previous context: “see your good works and glorify your Father”

But the key here is that we all will fall short ... the only one who is perfect in this area of obedience is Christ Himself – really continuing to contrast Himself with the scribes and Pharisees

3. We need to Understand the Transition from the Old Covenant (the dispensation of the law) to the New Covenant –

How does this mesh with our understanding of the New Covenant?? Impossible to cover adequately here ... requires systematic treatment of relationship of the believer to the law – cf. book by Alva McClain – Law and Grace

Our focus today: What is Christ saying in verse 19?? Placing a high importance on the law ... Are there any millennial applications here ... where the civil aspect of the law will once again become more prominent?? I don’t know

This might come as a surprise since we have been taught:

- “We are not under the law ...” in what sense?? Is there any sense in which the law is still the rule of life for the believer

- “Christ is the end of the law” – in what sense – are we to forget about the OT?

What don’t we mean here?

Some people use this verse as a justification to push for necessary obedience on the Part of believers to:

- keep the Sabbath day holy --

But: only of the 10 commandments not repeated in NT

Specifically said that it was given as a sign to nation of Israel

But: principle still has some merit from model of creation

- give tithes (10 % of gross or net ...income)

But teaching of NT on giving is that of sacrificial giving ...

The Lord owns it ALL; we are stewards; how to exercise wise stewardship ... not just giving money away ... but investing wisely for eternity ... lot of issues involved

What do we mean here?

What is the standard of life today for the believer?

Alva McClain: “This standard is the will of God in the context of His grace given in our Lord Jesus Christ as revealed perfectly in the entire written Word of God.” (and as enabled by the indwelling Holy Spirit who unites us with the life of Christ)

- The law is one law – an indivisible unity including moral, ceremonial and civil elements
 - remember James ... if you break the law in one part ... you have broken the entire law
 - Christ emphasized ceremonial aspects – “Show thyself to the priest, and offer the gift that Moses comanded” (Matt. 8:4)
- The law with its injunctions cannot be separated from its penalties
- The law can save no sinner – no one can keep it perfectly
- The problem is not with the law – it is an accurate expression of the righteous character of God
- Why then was the law given?
 - Remember that the covenants and promises were given first .. law added
 - Necessary for restraint of evil
 - Gives the knowledge of sin and of transgression
- Clearly the Christian believer is no longer under the law – subject to all of its command and liable to all of its penalties – it cannot sanctify us either
- That does not mean that the law has no relevance for us – it remains a valuable part of Scripture and the moral aspect continues to teach us about God’s standard for righteousness

B. (:20) CHRIST RAISES THE BAR WAY ABOVE ANY LEVEL OF SELF RIGHTEOUSNESS

“For I say to you, that unless your righteousness surpasses that of the scribes and Pharisees, you shall not enter the kingdom of heaven.”

Christ could not have painted things in more dramatic fashion:

- How do you think the crowd would have reacted to a statement like this? Certainly it got their attention ... made them re-examine their thinking
- How do you think the scribes and Pharisees would have reacted? Stirred up their anger and opposition – who is this man of Nazareth to criticize us ... to question our level of spirituality?

The Righteousness Required by God:

1. Is a Free Gift -- The Only Righteousness that Counts with God is One which He Freely Gives as a Gift of His Grace

Look at the Problem of Self Righteousness and Pride:

Cf. the problem of the rich man in Matt. 19:16-26 – came to Christ with the right goal: wanting to find out how to obtain eternal life ... but asked the wrong question = “Teacher, what good thing shall I do that I may obtain eternal life?” No problem ... just go obey all the commandments ... the standard of righteousness we have already seen = Perfection ... knock yourself out

The law shows us the weakness of our flesh and how far short we fall of God’s standard

Disciples alarmed at Jesus’ answer – “Then who can be saved ...with God all things are possible”

Where am I driven by achievement ... doing ... doing ... doing?

Where do I compare myself with others in order to puff myself up?

How do I come across to unbelievers as possessing some sort of special works righteousness rather than proclaiming the true message of the gospel: only a sinner saved by grace?

2. Focuses on the Heart -- The Only Righteousness that Counts with God is One that Flows out of a Heart Changed by God

Grant Osborne: The problem is inherent in all legalistic movements: certain patterns are identified with holiness, but they are too easily external (acted out) rather than internal (truly believed and lived). The result is hypocrisy (see Matt 23). Therefore, a mere righteousness by fiat is insufficient. The lifestyle God demands is of the heart, lived out in daily actions.

Illustration: When Karen and I got in the car to head off on our trip this past week ... we noticed right away that we couldn't see clearly because our windshield was dirty ... we used the washer fluid and the wipers several times ... but it didn't seem to help .. then we realized that the problem was the inside of the windshield was still dirty!

Message of Matt 15 – Christ not after lip service; not after the external traditions that are man-made; only concerned with the righteousness that proceeds from the heart

Christ described the scribes and Pharisees in Matt 23:25-28

“Woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! For you clean the outside of the cup and of the dish, but inside they are full of robbery and self-indulgence.

You blind Pharisees, first clean the inside of the cup and of the dish, so that the outside of it may become clean also.

Woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! For you are like whitewashed tombs which on the outside appear beautiful, but inside they are full of dead men's bones and all uncleanness.”

Why do we focus our evangelism on methods of manipulation and emotionalism and intellectual argumentation? We fail to understand the true dynamic of how God works on the inside of a person's heart in accordance with His sovereignty and grace to draw a person to repentance and faith.

Caution: As we study the Commands of Christ ... make sure that we are not setting up another external code of do's and don'ts where the burden is on our discipline and self effort to achieve ... this would be a recipe for defeat.

The New Covenant is all about the law of Christ written on our heart within ... with the empowerment coming by grace through faith in the one who indwells us – the person of Christ made real in our experience by the power of the Holy Spirit

Key passage: Romans 8:4 “in order that the requirement of the Law might be fulfilled in us, who do not walk according to the flesh, but according to the Spirit.”

Out of a motive of thanksgiving for having been delivered from the dominion of sin and death ... we now yield the members of our body as instruments to fulfill the righteous intent of God's law with regards to loving God and loving others – and it is all accomplished by grace through faith .. identical to how we entered into the Christian life

The goal of the sanctifying process is nothing short of the perfection which the law of God requires

3. Is Found in Christ -- The Only Righteousness that Counts with God is the One that is Found in Christ

The scribes and Pharisees could not stomach this message; they wanted to protect the empire that they had built around exalting themselves as the experts in both performing and interpreting God's righteousness

Get our focus back to the Person and work of Jesus Christ ...

- the message of the Sermon on the Mount is the message of the Gospel of John = Jesus' special sign miracles point us to faith in Him as the promised Messiah, the Son of God – who alone can provide spiritual life
- the message of the Sermon on the Mount is the message of Romans = Instead of boasting about prideful distinctions, all believers need to unite in promoting the worldwide message of the gospel which reveals the righteousness of God
- the message of the Sermon on the Mount is the message of 1 Corinthians = we preach the foolishness of the cross; Christ has become to us wisdom from God, and righteousness and sanctification, and redemption .. let him who boasts, boast in the Lord
- the message of the Sermon on the Mount is the message of Galatians = Never surrender the liberty of our new life in Christ to the bondage of religious legalism
- the message of the Sermon on the Mount is the message of Colossians = The key to spirituality is living out our union with the supreme and sufficient Christ (understanding that we are complete in Him)
- the message of the Sermon on the Mount is the message of the Book of Hebrews .. God's supreme revelation to us today is found in the person of His Son ... the living Word of God

CONCLUSION: SHARPENING THE FOCUS AND RAISING THE BAR

I would like to conclude with four simple points of application:

1) We need to appreciate that Christ completely fulfills all of God's righteous requirements as set forth in the Law and the Prophets. What does that mean for us?

- we are no longer under the law
- we enjoy all of the benefits of the New Covenant with the Law of Christ written on our hearts
- grace does not mean that obedience doesn't matter – message of Apostle Paul -- should we continue in sin that grace should abound? Called to Holiness
- as disciples of Jesus Christ, out of love and devotion to Him, we make it our aim to live from The heart in such a way that He will be well pleased

2) We need to value God's message to us in the OT – studying it diligently to find those principles that guide us into understanding the will of God for us today in the context of grace.

- Remembering the Principle of Interpretation: the progressive nature of God's revelation does not annul the continuity of that revelation
- 2 Tim 3:16 “All Scripture is inspired by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for training in righteousness.” – speaking about OT Scripture

3) We need to examine our own lives for any trace of self-righteousness or legalism and return in humility to living by grace through faith by the power of the Holy Spirit

- we have been justified and given the righteousness of Christ as our own
- we do not want to become puffed up with pride like the scribes and Pharisees – comparing our so-called level of spirituality to others ... and viewing ourselves as the experts who hold the key to understanding God's truth

4) We need to be on guard against false teachers that will try to bring us back under the burden of the law and compromise the freedom of our new life in the Spirit

We need to look to our Lord Jesus Christ to sharpen our focus and raise the bar for us on our understanding of God's revelation

As we continue in the coming weeks to examine this stump speech of our Lord in the Sermon on the Mount .. that is precisely what should take place.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Do you have a high view of Scriptures and a commitment to its inspiration and inerrancy?
- 2) If Jesus had come to abolish the law and the prophets what would He have taught differently?
- 3) How does your view of progressive revelation impact your understanding of the continuity of revelation?
- 4) How can our righteousness exceed that of the scribes and Pharisees?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Charles Ryrie: Among evangelicals, three primary positions on the Mosaic Law exist. They can be distinguished from each other by one simple test: how they interpret Christ's words, "Do not think that I have come to abolish the Law or the Prophets; I have not come to abolish them but to fulfill them" (Matt. 5:17, NIV). More specifically, each view can be identified by how it interprets the phrase "to fulfill" (Greek: plerosai). At the risk of oversimplifying (for variations exist within each viewpoint), the three positions and their adherents are as follows:

1. Christ Revises the Law (Reformed)

In Reformed theology, Christ "fulfilled" the Law in the sense of revealing its true meaning and intent — and, to some extent, transcending it. Reformed tradition divides the Law into three categories: moral, civil, and ceremonial. The moral laws are seen as still in force for the Church, but Christ's ministry helps us better understand them. The civil and ceremonial laws are considered types and shadows of Christ that no longer function as pointing forward to Him, so they have been set aside.

2. Christ Replaces the Law (Lutherans and Dispensationlists)

Christians are not under the Law of Moses as a "rule of life." This position reads Matt. 5:17 and 18 together, and the emphasis is placed on the phrase "until everything is accomplished" at the end of verse 18. Since Jesus has "accomplished" (or fulfilled) the entire Law, all of it has "passed away" (see v.18) for Christians. The Law remains a vehicle of revelation but not regulation.

3. Christ Reaffirms the Law (Theonomians and others)

Theonomians are a small, fringe group of evangelicals whose origin traces back to Reformed scholar Rousas J. Rushdoony, who insisted in his 1973 book, The Institutes of Biblical Law, that the Church should work to bring Mosaic civil laws and penalties (e.g., the death penalty for adulterers, idolaters, and sorcerers) into the law books of modern “Christian societies.” Sometimes called Christian Reconstructionists, their views have spread beyond their Reformed birthplace into Pentecostal circles.

Theonomians depart from the Reformed view in that only the moral aspects of the Law apply today, and they believe that only the ceremonial aspects of the Law passed away in Christ. Thus, Gothard is not a Theonomian. However, we can say that, of all the interpretations of Matt. 5:17, this one comes the closest to his position. Like the Theonomians, Gothard believes Christ’s basic meaning was to reaffirm the validity of the Law for all time.

Nonetheless, Gothard’s view goes beyond that of the Theonomians. He, too, believes that modern civil laws should be based on Scripture, but he also strongly promotes the ceremonial requirements of the Law for Christians today. In this, his belief comes closer to that of a group outside of evangelicalism: Seventh-Day Adventists (SDA).

Historic Christian Position:

The historic Christian position on Matt. 5:17 has not been that Christ came to reaffirm the Mosaic Law; but that, in its original form, the Law was provisional and incomplete at some level. The fact that it was necessary for Christ to come and “fulfill” it is proof enough of that. This is a basic area of agreement between the Reformed, Lutherans, and Dispensationalists.

Another area of agreement among evangelicals has been that neither the ceremonial nor the civil aspects of the Law are required of Christians today. Evangelicals take different theological routes, but they arrive at the same conclusion: it is not only unnecessary but wrong for Christians to require others to be circumcised, to keep the Levitical purification rites, or to impose Mosaic civil sanctions.

Van Parunak: It is sometimes suggested that “fulfill” implies that the law is “finished” and thus now obsolete. The meaning of the verb πληρωω here should be understood in the light of Matthew’s frequent use of the word throughout the book (16x, more than any other book except Acts). Thirteen of these references (including 5:17) talk about the fulfillment of Scripture.

Most of them deal with prophecies or types that anticipate our Lord’s life. He “fulfills” the prophecy or type by presenting himself as the one to whom it refers. We have already seen this verb used five times by Matthew to describe the fulfillment of Scripture by events in our Lord’s life: 1:22 (the virgin birth), 2:15 (the flight into Egypt), 2:17 (the slaughter of the innocents), 2:23 (being called a Nazarene), and 4:14 (the move to Capernaum). Six more times Matthew uses the word in contexts like this, and twice our Lord speaks of the fulfillment of Scripture (here and in 26:54), though in these cases he doesn’t point to a specific promise.

So here, he claims that he fulfills, not only the prophets (whose words dominate most of the other “fulfillment” passages) but also the law. The Law describes the man in whom God is well pleased. By claiming to fulfill it, the Lord is saying that the law has a particular man in view, the Messiah, the last Adam.

Sometimes people say that he fulfills the law by keeping it. It is true that he keeps it, but “fulfill” implies more than this. It implies that when God gave the law, he intended it to point to the Messiah.

Application: We ought to be very suspicious of claims that the law of God is no longer in effect. Indeed, it is impossible for us to obey certain parts of it, because the kingdom of God has no worldly form in this present age. But this entire section pre Craig Blomberg: Fulfillment of Scripture, as throughout chaps. 1-4, refers to the bringing to fruition of its complete meaning. Here Jesus views his role as that of fulfilling all of the Old Testament. This claim has massive hermeneutical implications and challenges both classic Reformed and Dispensationalist perspectives. It is inadequate to say either that none of the Old Testament applies unless it is explicitly reaffirmed in the New or that all of the Old Testament applies unless it is explicitly revoked in the New. Rather, all of the Old Testament remains normative and relevant for Jesus' followers (2 Tim 3:16), but none of it can rightly be interpreted until one understands how it has been fulfilled in Christ. Every Old Testament text must be viewed in light of Jesus' person and ministry and the changes introduced by the new covenant he inaugurated. Nor is there any evidence here for the common Christian division of the law into moral, civil, and ceremonial categories or for elevating the Ten Commandments above others. This is not to say that the law cannot or should not be subdivided, but valid divisions will probably require greater thematic nuance and sophistication.

Verse 18 reaffirms the absolute authority of all of the Scriptures down to the smallest components of individual words. They will endure for all time but with the important qualification “until everything is accomplished.” With the coming of Christ, many aspects of the law are brought to complete fruition (e.g., the need for sacrifices, on which see Hebrews). In other instances certain requirements of the law endure until Christ's coming again (e.g., classically, love of neighbor and God). In short, Christian application of the Old Testament must always take into account both the continuities and the discontinuities with the New Testament. Given this hermeneutic, correct teaching and practice of all “these commandments” (v. 19, almost certainly referring back to the Old Testament law just mentioned) are crucial. Jesus will give six illustrations of such correct interpretation shortly (vv. 21-48).

R. T. France: Matthew is conscious of two opposite tendencies with which he is concerned, on the one hand a tendency to claim, in line with Paul's “freedom from the law” teaching, that the OT laws no longer matter and can be abandoned, and on the other hand a tendency to emulate the scribes and the Pharisees in careful literal observance of the law as if nothing had changed with the coming of the Messiah. The former of these tendencies is confronted in vv. 17-19, the latter in v. 20 (illustrated by the examples which follow in vv. 21-47). It is likely that the material Matthew has brought together for this two-pronged attack is derived from teaching which Jesus gave on different occasions and in relation to different groups. What we must investigate is whether in bringing these contrasting strands of teaching together in this discourse he has produced an incompatible mixture, or whether there is a consistent principle with regard to Jesus and the law which underlies the correctives which he offers to the two opposite extremes. The key to this issue must be what is meant by Jesus “fulfilling” the law and the prophets. . .

There is an intriguing little saying of Jesus recorded in 11:13 which throws light on this issue. In speaking of the pivotal role of John the Baptist as the point at which the time of fulfillment has dawned, Jesus is recorded as commenting that “All the prophets and the law prophesied until John.” The law is thus linked with the prophets as looking forward to a time of fulfillment which has now arrived. The Torah, then, is not God's last word to his people, but is in a sense provisional, looking forward to a time of fulfillment through the Messiah.

In the light of that concept, and of the general sense of “fulfill” in Matthew, we might then paraphrase Jesus' words here as follows: “Far from wanting to set aside the law and the prophets, it is my role to bring into being that to which they have pointed forward, to carry them on into a new era of fulfillment.” On this understanding the authority of the law and the prophets is not abolished. They remain the authoritative word of God. But their role will no longer be the same, now that what they pointed forward to has come, and it will be for Jesus’ followers to discern in the light of his teaching and practice what is now the right way to apply those texts in the new situation which his coming has created. From now on it will be the authoritative teaching of Jesus which must govern his disciples’ understanding and practical application of the law.

John MacArthur: After all, where all the scribes and Pharisees were always expounding the law, Jesus wouldn’t do that. He was busy talking about grace, and busy talking about mercy. And where the Pharisees and Scribes were binding the law on people, He was busy forgiving people. And where they were always talking about the outside, He was always talking about the inside. And He even blasted away at some of the most sacred of their traditions. Is this a new theology?

Well, right here, Jesus puts it all in perspective, and what He says, in effect, is this: “This is nothing new, nothing new at all. I’m going to reiterate to you, and I’m going to fulfill the whole Old Testament law. I will not set aside one jot, I will not set aside one tittle of that law till all of it is fulfilled.” And so the amazing manifesto of the king is in direct confrontation to their thinking. He wouldn’t lower the standard, He would raise it where it belonged. . .

Now you say, “Which law is the Lord speaking of?” Now watch this one. He is speaking of all three, people. Some people say He’s just talking about the moral law. No, He’s not. He came to fulfill the whole thing, whether it was the moral law, the outgrowth of the moral law in Israel, the judicial law, or the law of worship, the ceremonial law; He came to fulfill every bit of it. It was all authored by God; it is all preeminent – all the principles, all the patterns, all the prophecies, all the types, all the symbols, all the pictures. Everything in the Old Testament is authored by God, and it all is fulfilled in Jesus Christ.

So we see, first of all, that the law is preeminent, because it is authored by God. Secondly, the law is preeminent, because it is affirmed by the prophets. It is affirmed by the prophets. Look at verse 17. “Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets.”

You know, the prophets – and just introducing that term “prophets” – cracks this thought open to us. The prophets simply reiterated, reinforced the law. They would say to the people of Israel, for example, “You’d better keep God’s law. You’re breaking God’s law. You’re falling away from His law.”

Thirdly, accomplished by Christ. And this is the heart of the matter. It is accomplished by Christ. . .

Now there are four things in these four verses as we break it down into an outline. Four aspects of the Lord’s view of God’s law. This is the Lord looking at the law of God, our Lord Jesus Christ, and He sees four things: The preeminence of the law, the permanence of the law, the pertinence of the law, and the purpose of the law. The preeminence, the permanence, the pertinence, and the purpose of the law. These are all factors of Christ’s statement regarding God’s word. It is preeminent, it is permanent, it is pertinent, and it is purposeful. . .

The Jews were looking for a more lax system. They couldn’t keep up with the scribes, and they couldn’t keep up with the Pharisees; and, body, they were hoping somebody’d come and drop the standards a little bit so they could make it. And the Lord Jesus Christ lifts the standard even higher, and then He just wipes out the Pharisees and the scribes for their hypocritical approach to God’s law.

You see, what they were doing; they had substituted human tradition for the law of God, and Jesus came in and just wiped the human tradition away, just cleaned it off. The judicial law was fulfilled, for the most part; the ceremonial law was fulfilled, for the most part. Even some of the moral laws; I said the Sabbath was fulfilled. But God's righteous standards never changed, and so He says, just so they don't ever forget it, "Nothing is going to pass, nothing, until it's all fulfilled." . . .

It's a timeless Book. People have the stupid audacity to say, "What does a 2,000-year-old book have to say today?" Everything. It's authored by the eternal, living God. It is His eternal, living Word. These words are alive and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, of joints and marrow, and are a discerners of the thoughts and intents of the heart. And so till heaven and earth pass, this Word shall abide. Every type will be fulfilled; every prophecy will be realized; every law will be verified. . .

When you put your faith in Jesus Christ and were united with Him in His death, then you died to the law in terms of its power and penalty, and you have risen in new life, no longer under the law in that sense. So Rom. 7:6 says, "We are now delivered from the law, delivered from the law." . . . When you become a Christian, you don't become lawless, you're under the law of Christ. (1 Cor. 9:21) . . .

Now what's he saying? He's saying, "I'm not under the law anymore, in terms of its penalty. I'm not under the law anymore in terms of its power to dominate my life, because I've been freed by the cross, and I've been given a greater power in the Holy Spirit. But I'll tell you; that doesn't mean that I don't have to keep it anymore. Oh, I delight in God's law, and I will keep God's law. The law of God is good; the problem is me, see. The problem is me." . . .

Now let me summarize. Listen carefully. What do the Epistles teach? The Epistles teach what I call the clarification of Matthew 5:19. And what is it? On the one hand, in some sense, the law passes away, is no longer binding ceremonially, civilly, and in the sense of its moral consequence, in the penalty.

But in another sense, the law is still binding, so that Paul can say, "I delight in the law of God." So that the apostle Paul can say, in Romans 8:4, "So the righteousness of the law is fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." He's says, "I delight in it," in chapter 7. He says, "I fulfill it," in chapter 8. Beloved, that's the message that the Lord was giving there.

TEXT: Matthew 5:21-26

TITLE: DEALING WITH ANGER AS RELATED TO MURDER

BIG IDEA:

UNRESOLVED ANGER EXPRESSES MALICE TOWARDS OTHERS (SIMILAR MOTIVATION TO MURDER) WHILE ACTUALLY HURTING OURSELVES

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: The six antitheses (on murder, adultery, divorce, oaths, retaliation, love of neighbor) function in two ways: they exemplify the “better righteousness” Jesus has just demanded, and they further explain how Jesus has fulfilled/deepened the law in the new ethics of the kingdom (introduced in 5:17–20). There is a deliberate contrast between the literal, legalistic teaching of the Pharisees and the high standards demanded here. The form is rabbinic: “You have heard that it was said” commonly introduced rabbinic discussion of a point of law, but the second half (“but I am telling you”) goes beyond Jewish teachers to give Jesus’ authoritative interpretation of the true meaning of the commands. It means in effect, “This is how you were taught, but I will now tell you what it really means.” . . .

His purpose is not to contravene but to provide the true messianic understanding of the commands. Jesus is not contravening the law in essence but rather a shallow, external understanding of it. Davies and Allison calls this “not contradiction but transcendence,” meaning that Jesus’ “ideas surpass those of the Torah without contradicting the Torah.”

R. T. France: Four ways of seeing these examples of “going beyond” the law and the tradition of the Pharisees:

- (1) an “inward” concern with motive vs. an “outward” concern for a literal observance of regulations;
- (2) moving behind the rule itself to ascertain the greater principles for conduct as God’s people;
- (3) centering not on the negative aspect of avoiding sin but on the positive purpose for “discovering and following what is really the will of God”;
- (4) substituting for what can be completely achieved (a distinct set of rules) a “totally open-ended ideal” of perfection (v. 48), which will not be ultimately achievable in this life.

Warren Wiersbe: Jesus took six important Old Testament laws and interpreted them for His people in the light of the new life He came to give. He made a fundamental change without altering God’s standards: He dealt with the attitudes and intents of the heart and not simply with the external action. The Pharisees said that righteousness consisted of performing certain actions, but Jesus said it centered in the attitudes of the heart.

Leon Morris: Jesus is protesting against a strictly literal interpretation of the commands, an interpretation that indicates an apparent willingness to obey what God has said, but which imposes a strict limit on obedience and leaves scope for a good deal of ungodly behavior. He is laying down authoritatively how these commands of God should be understood.

Donald Hagner: The antitheses, which consist basically of the material introduced directly by the repeated twofold formula (“you have heard . . . but I say to you”), are accompanied in each instance by illustration, application, or clarification of some kind (the first antithesis includes the most such material, the third the least). In this way the radical significance of the antithesis and the extent to which it involves a departure from common understandings of the law are dramatically clarified. . .

Despite his affirmation of the continuity between Jesus and the law, Matthew at the same time stresses the authority of Jesus as the eschatological Messiah who in bringing the law to a new, definitive interpretation can also transcend it. Messianic transcending of the law is not understood as involving a violation of it.

I. (:21-22) JESUS' TEACHING REGARDING THE COMMANDMENT NOT TO MURDER

A. (:21) Traditional Teaching of the Rabbis

"You have heard that the ancients were told, 'You shall not commit murder' and 'Whoever commits murder shall be liable to the court.'"

Gordon Osborne: Jesus begins with murder as the most egregious of the sins, taking the life of another human being. The point is that anger is murder in the heart and so must be confronted as the basis of most murders. Jesus' purpose is to show that God's demands are deeper than the usual shallow understanding; murder in the heart is just as serious as murder in action.

Craig Blomberg: "Murder" is the correct rendering since the underlying Hebrew (ratsach, sometimes translated "kill") did not include killing in self-defense, wars ordered by Yahweh, capital punishment following due process of law, or accidental manslaughter.

Bruce Hurt: Their misapplication of the Law led to a liberal attitude toward murder, adultery, divorce, vows, retaliation and love. Therefore Jesus calls His listeners and we the readers of His sermon to exhibit allegiance to a higher standard, a standard of righteousness that far surpasses that of the Scribes and Pharisees and which shines a beacon of supernatural light that points the lost to the great and mighty supernatural Father of lights, the Heavenly Father.

B. (:22) Transcendent Teaching of Jesus

1. Anger Leads to Guilt and Judgment

"But I say to you that everyone who is angry with his brother shall be guilty before the court,"

Charles Swindoll: The Messiah caught them off guard with His "but I say to you" statement (Matt. 5:22). He moved from the outward act that none of them had committed to the inner attitude that went deeper—to the actual cause of the chain reaction of attitudes, thoughts, emotions, and actions that leads people to commit murder. Ever been angry with your brother? You may be innocent before the city magistrate, but you are guilty before God's court. Ever call your brother useless or a fool? You're guilty before God's bench of perfect justice and are liable to eternal fire! You've murdered that person in your heart or slain that person with your tongue. Though no physical wounds are visible, the words themselves leave a mark on the mind and emotions. . .

Here Jesus applies the principles of the Beatitudes—particularly the ones involving mercy and peacemaking—to very concrete situations.

Scott Harris: Jesus now goes on to destroy their self-righteousness by teaching that things they thought were of no consequence such as anger, calling other people names and attacking other people's character, brought about the same or greater danger of punishment.

Leon Morris: It is not correct to say that he replaces the law with his own commands, for in no case does he relax a provision of the law. Rather, he shows that, rightly understood, the law goes much further than his hearers had reckoned.

John Nolland: Matthew considers three parallel cases by way of example. Because there appears at first sight to be an ascending order of seriousness of the sphere of answerability ([local?] court, high court, God), interpreters have struggled to find some ascending sequence in being angry, saying 'Raka', and saying 'Fool'. But such efforts are probably misplaced.

E. Michael Green: The rabbis, aware that they were not inspired, never spoke on their own authority. They normally introduced a saying either by repeating it from some previous rabbi or by saying, 'There is a teaching that ...' But here is one who quietly but with immense authority juxtaposes his own view, fully supportive of the authority of the Old Testament, to centuries of its scribal interpreters: 'But I tell you ...' Who is this 'I', who speaks with such breathtaking assurance?

2. Intensified Anger Leads to More Severe Guilt and Judgment

"and whoever shall say to his brother, 'Raca,' shall be guilty before the supreme court,"

Craig Blomberg: First, he considers those who accost their fellow believers with the epithet "Raca" (a quasi-swear word in Aramaic). The expression probably meant something like empty-headed. So too those who call someone a "fool" commit a sin. This word (mows) carries overtones of immorality and godlessness as well as idiocy. As with the commands against anger, both of these prohibitions against the use of insulting names undoubtedly carried the implicit qualification of "where unjustified," since Jesus himself uses the term in 23:17,19 (in direct address) and in 7:26 (in indirect address) when the label is accurate.

Bryce Morgan: But murder is just one example of what this kind of anger can do. As Jesus points out in verse 22, this anger is also manifested in our speech; in how we demean others. Jesus' words are more specific than the ESV word "insults". Literally, Jesus is saying, "whoever says to his brother, 'Raka'"! That's an Aramaic word meaning empty. A comparable insult today might be something like, "You, blockhead!" or "You good-for-nothing". Jesus adds another example at the end of v. 22... literally, from the Greek moros, the insult is "You, moron!"

3. Contempt Leads to Ultimate Guilt and Judgment

"and whoever shall say, 'You fool,' shall be guilty enough to go into the fiery hell."

Gordon Osborne: Jesus' point is that each of the three lead a person to judgment both on the earthly and the heavenly planes. Moreover, it is clear here that name-calling is at the core of showing angry contempt. This was even more true in ancient Judaism, where the name bespoke the essence of what a person was (e.g., “Jesus” = “Yahweh saves,” 1:21). “Gehenna” is a metaphor for hellfire, used seven times by Matthew, which refers to the Hinnon Valley, where in ancient times human sacrifices were offered to the pagan god Molech (2 Kgs 23:10) and where in Jesus’ day garbage was burned day and night, making it a perfect metaphor for eternal fiery judgment.

II. (:23-26) URGENCY OF RECONCILIATION

A. (:23-24) Reconciliation with a Brother

1. (:23) Perception of an Offense

“If therefore you are presenting your offering at the altar, and there remember that your brother has something against you,”

Gordon Osborne: We must remember that Jesus’ disciples were from Galilee and rarely got to Jerusalem, so this only happened once or twice a year and was an important event (the “altar” is the sacrificial altar in the inner court of the temple). Also, there were probably long lines waiting, so the picture is of one who had been there some time and was finally able to perform his solemn duty. . . Jesus’ point is that as long as there is sin in the church between members, worship is compromised.

John Nolland: The key to the big picture is almost certainly the recognition that the murder commandment is being interpreted in the light of the love commandment (which will become the specific focus of attention in the final antithesis) and therefore attracts to itself the same relational focus. The murder commandment becomes to some degree a negative formulation of the love commandment.

2. (:24) Priority of Reconciliation over Worship

“leave your offering there before the altar, and go your way; first be reconciled to your brother, and then come and present your offering.”

Leon Morris: Leave your gift is a sharp command; there is something more urgent than completing the act of sacrifice. The worshiper is to leave the animal right there, in front of the altar, and go. The interruption of so solemn an act emphasizes the overriding importance of reconciliation. First has a time reference: “in the first place, before doing anything else.” It is important that the worshiper get his priorities right, and the first thing to do is to effect reconciliation. He must take whatever steps are needed to restore harmony, and only when this is done may he come back and resume his offering. The act of sacrifice is not as important as the spirit in which it is done.

B. (:25-26) Reconciliation with an Adversary

1. (:25a) Arbitration Preferred to Going to Court

while you are with him on the way,”*

Craig Blomberg: Jesus’ second illustration of the urgency of reconciliation pictures an out-of-court settlement between fellow litigants. These verses offer good advice at the literal level of legal proceedings, but in light of vv. 21-22 they obviously refer primarily to the spiritual goal of averting God’s wrath on Judgment Day before it is too late to change one’s destiny.

D. A. Carson: In the ancient world, debtors were jailed until the debts were paid. Thus v.26 is part of the narrative fabric and gives no justification for purgatory, universal restoration, or urgent reconciliation to God. It simply insists on immediate action. Malicious anger is so evil—and God’s judgment so certain (v.22)—that we must do all in our power to end it (cf. Eph 4:26–27).

2. (:25b-26) Avoid Intensifying Your Liability

a. (:25b) Process of Judgment Can Quickly Escalate

“in order that your opponent may not deliver you to the judge, and the judge to the officer, and you be thrown into prison.”

b. (:26) Penalty Can Be Severe

“Truly I say to you, you shall not come out of there, until you have paid up the last cent.”

Gordon Osborne: At one level, this passage shows beyond doubt that Jesus is the transcendent interpreter of Torah, for he turns to the heart of the law, the Ten Commandments, for his first example, and it shows it must be understood in a deeper sense. At another level, Jesus establishes a key ethical standard for the kingdom people, showing that anger/hatred is tantamount to murder.

The community of the new covenant is clearly all about relationships. There can be no anger or contempt marring the life and worship of God’s people, either inside (the first illustration) or outside (the second illustration) the community. Theology is not just about God and the spiritual life. Broader ethical issues are also theological because in Scripture the way we relate to others is the way we relate to God. To be angry or feel contempt for another is to disparage God’s child and, therefore, God himself. We cannot separate relationships with others from our relationship with God.

Bryce Morgan: Brothers and sisters, friends, are you angry this morning? Maybe you've buried that anger deep inside of you. Maybe it's right at the surface, ready to break out. Wherever it is, however it's affecting you, don't avoid it. Don't minimize it. Don't rationalize it. And please don't feed it. Instead, face it. Face it in light of Jesus. Let his words from Matthew 5 convict you and drive you to God's forgiveness. But also let his words lead you down a new path, a path of humility, patience, forgiveness, reconciliation, and peace. If we are following Jesus through the forgiveness of his cross, then we should be giving attention to and guarding our hearts from the poisonous anger God spoke to us about this morning.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) When are we guilty of justifying ourselves based on external conformity when our heart is far from God’s desired goal?
- 2) What types of offenses stir us to anger and contempt towards others?
- 3) Are we secure in the deliverance that Christ has provided from guilt and condemnation?

4) Are we quick to address relationships that need reconciliation as much as we can initiate on our part?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Gordon Osborne: Contempt for Others, Human Pride, and God's Judgment

Self-centeredness is the core of sin, and it is total arrogance alone that can account for the human tendency to look down on others. When we look down on a small insect, they all look the same, and we do not disparage one more than another. When God looks down on us, the distance is far greater than that between us and an insect. How dare we consider ourselves better than another? We are all so inferior to God that we are equal to one another, and there is no basis for feeling superior. It is only our sinful desire to build ourselves up that enables us to feel contemptuous toward another. Our thought should be to help another in their area of weakness, knowing that we will need them to help us in our areas of weakness.

William Barclay: In [this passage], Jesus speaks with an authority which no other man had ever dreamed of assuming. The authority which Jesus assumed always amazed those who came into contact with him. Right at the beginning of his ministry, after he had been teaching in the synagogue in Capernaum, it is said of his hearers: "They were astounded at his teaching, for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes" (Mark 1:22). Matthew concludes his account of the Sermon on the Mount with the words: "Now when Jesus had finished saying these things, the crowds were astounded at his teaching, for he taught them as one having authority, and not as their scribes" (Matthew 7:28–9).

It is difficult for us to realize just how shocking a thing this authority of Jesus must have seemed to the Jews who listened to him. To the Jews, the law was absolutely holy and absolutely divine; it is impossible to exaggerate the place that the law had in their reverence. . .

But, to Jesus, a statement required no authority other than the fact that he made it. He was his own authority.

Clearly, one of two things must be true – either Jesus was mad, or he was unique; either he was a megalomaniac, or else he was the Son of God. No ordinary person would dare to make such a claim, to take and overturn what up to that point had been regarded as the eternal word of God.

The amazing thing about authority is that it is self-evidencing. No sooner does someone begin to teach than we know at once whether or not that person has the right to teach. Authority is like an atmosphere about people. They do not need to claim it; they either have it, or they do not. . .

Jesus took the highest human wisdom and corrected it, because he was who he was. He did not need to argue; it was sufficient for him to speak. No one can honestly face Jesus and honestly listen to him without feeling that this is God's last word beside which all other words are inadequate, and all other wisdom out of date. . .

The judgment court is the local village council which dispensed justice. That court was composed of the local village elders, and varied in number from three in villages of fewer than 150 inhabitants, to seven in larger towns and twenty-three in still bigger cities. . .

So, Jesus forbids forever the anger which broods, the anger which will not forget, the anger which refuses to be pacified, the anger which seeks revenge. If we are to obey Jesus, all anger must be banished from life, and especially that anger which lingers too long. It is a warning thing to remember that we cannot call ourselves Christians and lose our temper because of any personal wrong which we have suffered.

Immediately, Jesus goes on to speak of two cases where anger turns into insulting words. The Jewish teachers forbade such anger and such words. These teachers spoke of ‘oppression in words’ and of ‘the sin of insult’. They had a saying: ‘Three classes go down to Gehenna and return not—the adulterer, he who puts his neighbour openly to shame, and he who gives his neighbour an insulting name.’ Anger in a person’s heart and anger in a person’s speech are equally forbidden.

First of all, the person who calls another Raca is condemned. Raca is an almost untranslatable word, because it describes a tone of voice more than anything else. Its whole accent is the accent of contempt. To call a man Raca was to call him a brainless idiot, a silly fool, an empty-headed blunderer. It is the word of one who despises another with an arrogant contempt. . .

Then Jesus goes on to speak of the person who calls someone else mōros. Mōros also means fool, but the person who is mōros is a moral fool, someone who is playing the fool. The psalmist spoke of fools who say in their hearts that there is no God (Psalm 14:1). Such people were moral fools, who lived immoral lives, and who in wishful thinking said that there was no God. To call people mōros was not to criticize their mental ability; it was to cast aspersions on their moral character; it was to take their name and reputation from them, and to brand them as loose-living and immoral. . .

As we have said, all these gradations of punishment are not to be taken literally. What Jesus is saying here is this: ‘In the old days, people condemned murder; and truly murder is forever wrong. But I tell you that not only are your outward actions under judgment; your inmost thoughts are also under the scrutiny and the judgment of God. Long-lasting anger is bad; contemptuous speaking is worse, and the careless or the malicious talk which destroys a person’s good name is worst of all.’ Those who are the slaves of anger, those who speak in the accent of contempt, or who destroy another’s good name, may never have committed a murder in action; but they are murderers at heart.

Sinclair Ferguson: Jesus came to fulfill the law, not to destroy it. In fact, as we have seen, Jesus teaches that the Law of God is an essential diagnostic tool. Whether we break it or keep it, and whether we encourage others to break it or keep it, is an indication of our true spiritual condition. It is the standard for evaluation in the kingdom of God (Matt. 5:19), but not the standard for entrance into the kingdom. Rather than dispensing with righteousness, Jesus tell his disciples that unless their righteousness surpasses that of the Pharisees and the teachers of the law, they will certainly not enter the kingdom of heaven... It is no accident that these contrasts ("you have heard... but I say") are set in the context of Jesus as the fulfilment of the Exodus: He is the Son God has called out of Egypt (Mt 2:15); He passes through the waters in His baptism (Mt 3:13, 14, 15, 16, 17); He is tested in the wilderness (Mt 4:1-11); He expounds the law of God in the mountainous region (Mt 5:1). Rather than displace the teaching God had given through Moses, Jesus' whole ministry is identified by Matthew as the fulfilment of God's teaching.

Warren Wiersbe: Anger is an emotional arousal caused by something that displeases us. In itself, anger is not a sin, because even God can be angry (Dt 9:8, 20; Ps 2:12). The Bible often speaks of anger “being kindled” (Ge 30:2; Dt 6:15), as though anger can be compared to fire. It is difficult for us to practice a truly holy anger or righteous indignation because our emotions are tainted by sin, and we do not have the same knowledge that God has in all matters. God sees everything clearly and knows everything completely, and we do not. The NT principle seems to be that the believer should be angry at sin but loving toward people. The fire of anger, if not quenched by loving forgiveness, will spread and defile and destroy the work of. According to Jesus, anger is the first step toward murder (Mt 5:21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26), because anger gives the devil a foothold in our lives, and Satan is a murderer (Jn 8:44). Satan hates God and God’s people, and when he finds a believer with the sparks of anger in his heart, he fans those sparks, adds fuel to the fire, and does a great deal of damage to God’s people and God’s church. Both lying and anger “give peace to the devil” (Eph 4:27-note).

Spurgeon: Murder lies within anger, for we wish harm to the object of our wrath, or even wish that he did not exist, and this is to kill him in desire. Anger “without a cause” is forbidden by the command which says “Thou shalt not kill;” for unjust anger is killing in intent. Such anger without cause brings us under higher judgment than that of Jewish police-courts. God takes cognizance of the emotions from which acts of hate may spring, and calls us to account as much for the angry feeling as for the murderous deed. Words also come under the same condemnation: a man shall be judged for what he “shall say to his brother.” To call a man Raca, or a worthless fellow, is to kill him in his reputation, and to say to him, “Thou fool,” is to kill him as to the noblest characteristics of a man. Hence all this comes under such censure as men distribute in their councils; yes, under what is far worse, the punishment awarded by the highest court of the universe, which dooms men to “hell fire.” Thus our Lord and King restores the law of God to its true force, and warns us that it denounces not only the overt act of killing, but every thought, feeling, and word which would tend to injure a brother, or annihilate him by contempt.

John MacArthur: Who Is a Murderer?

Now if you know anything about the Bible, you know that this was the very first human crime. In Genesis chapter 4 it says this, “And Cain talked with Abel his brother: it came to pass, when they were in the field, that Cain rose up against Abel, his brother, and murdered him.” And of course God said, “What hast thou done? the voice of thy brother’s blood cries unto me from the ground. And now art thou cursed from the earth, which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother’s blood from thy hand.”

And so it is that from the first human crime, murder, on through the Revelation of God, murder is a biblical issue. Now if we study the Scripture, we know how God feels about it. It is forbidden. It is punishable by death. We learn other things about murder in the Bible. For example, we learn that murder is a crime authored by the devil himself. John 8:44 says the devil is a murderer. And murder is basically authored by Satan.

We find something else about murder in Matthew chapter 15:19, for example, we find that murder is a manifestation of an evil human heart. Matthew 15:19 says, “For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies.” . . .

Now Jesus is saying, “You know, you believe that it’s wrong to murder because if you do you’ll be in danger of judgment.” And at that point the scribes and the Pharisees would have said, “Amen, Amen. We’re against murder. We have been taught by them of old by the rabbinical tradition that murder is an evil thing.” In fact, the thought that they did not murder - now listen to this. This is the key. The thought that they did not commit murder was one way in which they convinced themselves they were righteous. We would not murder. We would never murder anyone. And consequently, we must be righteous. We have kept the law of God, ‘Thou shalt not kill.’ We wouldn’t murder anyone. And so their not murdering was one of their favorite ways to justify themselves. . .

Jesus simply says, it isn’t the issue of murder alone, it’s the issue of anger and hatred in your heart. You cannot justify yourself because you don’t kill. Because if there’s hatred in your heart, you are the same as a murderer. And so I say the first point in this statement is that Jesus’ words affected their own self-righteousness. It affected how they viewed themselves, how we view ourselves. . .

First question, who is a murderer? Second question, who deserves death and hell? Who does, who deserves death and hell? You do, I do, we’re all guilty of murder. We’ve all sinned and come short of the glory of God, and the wages of sin is what? Death. And so you say, “Well, how do we escape? I mean if we’re all murderers and no murderer will inherit the kingdom, if we’re all murderers, and we all deserve death and hell, then how do we escape? I mean we’ve all worshiped in hypocrisy. We’ve all been angry. We’ve all said malicious things. We’ve all thought a curse, or said a curse. We’ve all been unreconciled to a brother. We’ve all done that. What are we going to do?”

And that is exactly what Jesus is after. He wants to drive them to the fact that they cannot be righteous on their own, which will drive them to their knees at the foot of the cross to accept the imputed righteousness that only Jesus Christ can give. You see? Everything that He says here is to drive them to frustration and inadequacy so that they come to Him.

Justin Imel, Sr: The Urgency of Reconciliation

If we come to the altar and remember that our brother has something against us, we are to leave our gift and first be reconciled with our brother, and then come offer our gift.

Jesus here shows us the urgency of reconciliation—reconciliation is always to precede worship. Reconciliation must precede worship, for if we have hatred and strife in our hearts, we will be separated from God. Hatred, contentions, outbursts of wrath will keep one from heaven (Gal 5:19-21). “If someone says, ‘I love God,’ and hates his brother, he is a liar; for he who does not love his brother whom he has seen, how can he love God whom he has seen?” (1 Jn 4:20). Reconciliation must precede worship, for true worship involves the fellowship of believers—The Corinthian church was not able to take the Lord’s Supper properly because of all the division which existed in that congregation (1 Cor 11:17-22). Reconciliation must precede worship, for we worship the great Creator and if we have hate toward those made in God’s image, how can we properly worship God?

God expects us to worship without strife: “I desire therefore that the men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting” (1 Tim 2:8). Does someone have something against you? Do you need to go to someone and say, “I’m sorry?”

We are to agree with our adversary quickly, lest we are thrown in prison and must pay the last penny.

Jesus again shows the urgency of reconciliation. We need to reconcile while some openness still exists between us and the other party.

Elsewhere we're told to reconcile quickly. "Do not let the sun go down on your wrath, nor give place to the devil" (Eph 4:26-27). If we allow the sun to go down on our wrath, we give a place to the devil, because our brooding and anger lead to other sins. "Let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath; for the wrath of man does not produce the righteousness of God" (Js 1:19-20). We are to be slow to anger—Not become angry quickly, and we're to get rid of anger quickly. We're to do so, you see, for when we're angry, we act in ungodly ways.

If we do not agree with our adversary quickly, he may deliver us over to the judge, the judge hand us over to the officer, and we might be thrown into prison. We will not get out until we pay the last penny. This goes back to the practice of a "debtors' prison" where one could have one thrown into prison for not repaying a debt. The idea is prevalent in the Parable of the Unforgiving Servant (Matt 18:21-35).

This shows an earthly danger in holding a grudge against a brother—we can be taken to court and even imprisoned. This would ruin our reputation and make it much more difficult to set a good example for others to follow. Legal action could leave a black mark on our record and make it difficult to find employment or obtain a loan.

Chip Bell: If Looks Could Kill

We finished last week with Jesus' statement that "your righteousness must surpass that of the Pharisees", the most carefully righteous people of his day. I'm sure his followers then wondered how that could be possible that they could be even more righteous than the Pharisees.

But what Jesus meant was that although the Pharisees were very concerned with obeying the external requirements of the code, they followed it in a very legalistic, wooden, joyless way. Jesus called them "actors". They cared very little about whether they were doing what God wanted. They only cared that they did exactly what God told them to do. In fact, they had even added a few extra rules (and some of them were actually the opposite of what God wanted). And so, Jesus tells his disciples that the true meaning of the law, the Kingdom Code, is to honor God not just with your actions, but also with your thoughts, your motives and your attitudes. The Kingdom Code is deeper and more personal than the law of any country. It delves into the innermost parts of a man that no other man can judge and only God can know.

What follows are six comparisons between external performance of the law and internal obedience to the law. Jesus deals with anger, lust, divorce, lying, revenge, and hatred. In each case, he calls us, his followers, to commit ourselves not just to obeying the external requirements of the law, but also to allowing the Kingdom Code to govern our thoughts, our motives and our attitudes. . .

There are a couple of misunderstandings about this verse:

It is NOT saying that anger is the same as murder or just as bad as murder. (Just for the record, I would much rather you were angry with me than...)

It is NOT saying that anger itself is sin. From other passages, we know that Jesus himself was sometimes angry and that we can be angry without sinning. (We'll see that in a minute.) Anger is initially a response, not a choice. We probably respond with anger so often because we're fallen—so in that sense even that initial anger is sinful. But it's not a sin in the sense of a choice I make to disobey God. When it first strikes, I think anger is more of a temptation than a sin. It's what we choose to do with anger and what we choose to do because of anger that makes it sinful. As we'll see from later verses, it's unresolved anger that is sinful.

Some Practical Advice about Anger...

I'd like to close today with some practical advice about anger. These are not explicitly from the Bible. And I'm not a psychologist. (here comes the email) But here are some practical things I have learned about trying not to sin when I'm angry.

ANGER IS AN ALARM.

A warning light. Treat it as such. Find out what's setting off the alarm.

Something is wrong—maybe in someone else's actions

Injustice, a personal attack

Like all warning systems, you can have false alarms. You can be angry even if you haven't been wronged. (Something amiss in me.)

assumptions, inconvenience,

DON'T LET ANGER ACT.

Commit yourself to not allow anger to either act or speak.

In anger we say things and do things that we wouldn't say or do if we were sober. Don't let anger control you. Exercise self control. (fruit of God's Spirit)

WAIT. BREATH DEEPLY.

Most of the time, that means waiting. When I'm hot, that's a bad time to try to deal with the problem. Anger passes away. So why not wait a little. Let your emotions calm down. Take a few deep breaths. Get some perspective. Let the emotional part of your anger dissipate so that you can think about both the situation and your response more objectively and rationally.

CAN YOU PUT IT AWAY?

I think that sometimes, things bother me that are best left ignored.

If you bring up every little thing that bothers you or makes you angry, then you will constantly have some conflict to resolve. And life is more than conflict resolution.

If you're married, you have either discovered this principle, or you are constantly living in conflict. Opposites attract and that means that usually your husband or your wife is basically designed by God to drive you crazy. So rather than bring up every little thing that bothers you, I think that sometimes you can apply "automatic forgiveness" and just ignore it.

I put it in a big box called "grace" and then put it away in the closet where it won't get in the way of our relationship.

So when you find yourself angry, ask yourself, "Can I just overlook this?" If you can, put it in the grace box and put it away. Don't let it tear down your relationship.

STILL BOTHERS YOU? TALK TO THEM! NOW.

Sometimes anger is too big to fit in the grace box. And sometimes, even though we fit it inside and put the box away, the lid keeps popping off and there's our anger again, right in the middle of the living room floor.

What I'm talking about is that sometimes our efforts to overlook an offense and "let go" of anger—sometimes that doesn't work well. If you find you're still angry or angry again, then it probably means that it's time to take action. No, I don't mean kill the other person. I mean talk to them. Take the initiative and speak with them. And do it now. If the anger is popping back out, then you need to act now.

Be as calm as you can be. Don't attack, just explain. Take responsibility for your own actions—anything that you did to contribute to the conflict. Take responsibility for your own beliefs and feelings. (Not, "You made me angry.") Try saying something like "I believe that what you did was wrong." Or, "I felt angry when you did that."

Be willing to listen. You may have missed something. This may be just a huge misunderstanding. It's good to be as open as possible to hearing the other person's perspective. Hopefully, as you approach this person with prayer and with a loving attitude, they will respond.

FORGIVENESS IS FOR YOU.

There's always a chance that they will not listen to you or will not respond in a good way. But whether they respond in repentance or whether they respond in stubbornly doing the same thing again, there is only one healthy thing you can do: forgive them.

A lot of times we think of forgiveness as what we are supposed to do when someone apologizes. But the truth is that forgiveness is a one-party transaction. Even if someone is blatantly and stubbornly sinning against you, the very best thing you can do about it is to forgive them. Somehow we get it in our heads that if we withhold our forgiveness, then we're really going to let them have it. We're going to show them what real pain feels like! We won't forgive them. That'll teach them.

But in reality, when we do that, it doesn't hurt the other person at all. We only hurt ourselves. The more we indulge our anger, the more it consumes us, distorts our perspective on all of life, ruins our other relationships, eats away at our health, and turns us into bitter old men and women.

Unresolved anger is a sin. And like all sins, it destroys us. The reason God tells us to stay away from sin is because he doesn't want us to get hurt.

Sometimes you might feel so angry you could kill. Very often you can't help that. But it's what you do next that really matters. Because whenever you harbor anger in your heart, whenever you refuse to forgive or refuse to reconcile, the life that's really in danger is yours.

TEXT: Matthew 5:27-30

TITLE: DEALING WITH LUST AS RELATED TO ADULTERY

BIG IDEA:

AVOIDING ADULTERY DOESN'T GIVE YOU A PASS TO INDULGE IN LUST

INTRODUCTION:

William Barclay: It is necessary that we should understand what Jesus is saying here. He is not speaking of the natural, normal desire, which is part of human instinct and human nature. According to the literal meaning of the Greek, the man who is condemned is the man who looks at a woman with the deliberate intention of lusting after her. The man who is condemned is the man who deliberately uses his eyes to awaken his lust, the man who looks in such a way that passion is awakened and desire deliberately stimulated.

John Nolland: In this second antithesis the adultery commandment is expanded to include indulgence in illicit sexual activity in the realm of the imagination. The challenge is given to go to the limit to eliminate sin.

Craig Blomberg: Either way, the present tense participle refers to one who continues to look rather than just casting a passing glance, and in either case the mere viewing or mental imagining of a naked body is not under consideration. Instead Jesus is condemning lustful thoughts and actions—those involving an actual desire (the most literal translation of the verb epithyme) to have sexual relations with someone other than one's spouse. Yet despite the danger of overapplying this verse, an even greater danger is that of underapplying it. Adultery among Christians today is a scandal, yet it almost never occurs without precipitation. Christians must recognize those thoughts and actions which, long before any overt sexual sin, make the possibility of giving in to temptation more likely, and they must take dramatic action to avoid them.

Donald Hagner: He shifts the attention from the external act to the inner thought. There, in the inner person, lie the real problem and the initial guilt. To lust after someone sexually is to nurture a burning desire for that person in one's heart. Such lust has a consuming effect. Where lust exists, the discipleship of the kingdom requires dramatic and determined action to rid oneself of the cause.

Robert Gundry: True discipleship, then, will show itself through sexual self-discipline in the heart as well as in act.

John MacArthur: And in the text before us, our Lord is giving us several perspectives on sin. First of all, in the very passage I just read, we see the depth of sin. And that is not only an act, it is an attitude. It is much deeper than just committing adultery. It is even looking on a woman to lust after her. And so our Lord shows us the depth of sin.

Also, I think we see here the deceit of sin, that it's never as simple as it looks. Sin would like to make us think that if we're highly respectable on the outside, we're all right. Jesus shows us that you could be highly respectable on the outside and be rotten on the inside.

We see not only the depth and the deceit of sin, but we see the destructiveness of sin. Our Lord is showing us that sin will cast someone into hell. At the end of verse 29 He says it, and at the end of verse 30. Sin is so severe that the ultimate end of sin is to cast people into an eternal hell.

This is the destructiveness of sin. So serious is it that we would be better to maim ourselves if that would prevent it. We would be better to deal with ourselves in a very harsh and brutal way to prevent sin because of what sin can do.

I. (:27-28) JESUS' TEACHING ON ADULTERY FOCUSES ON LUST

A. (:27) Traditional Teaching of Jewish Religious Leaders

"You have heard that it was said, 'You shall not commit adultery';"

J. Ligon Duncan: But the Lord Jesus wants to make it clear that that command cannot nearly be kept by literally refraining from adultery in sexual immorality. It must be kept at a deeper level because the law is a matter of the heart. He teaches us that in this passage. Notice again, that Jesus is not attacking the Old Testament, He's not attacking the moral law, but the Lord Jesus is attacking the interpretation of the moral law by the Pharisee in His day.

B. (:28) Transcendent Teaching of Jesus

"but I say to you, that everyone who looks on a woman to lust for her has committed adultery with her already in his heart."

Richard Gardner: Adultery does not begin in the neighbor's bedroom, Jesus says, but in the craving in one's heart to possess the neighbor's spouse.

David Thompson: Now in verse 28 Jesus wants to take an understanding of adultery to a whole new level. When He says, "But I say to you," it is very emphatic in Greek. Jesus is speaking as Divine King and He is addressing God's perspective of what is classified as adultery, namely, "looking on a woman to lust for her." One might say, "I've never committed adultery because I never divorced my mate." Jesus says think again; just as you have a speech problem in that you've committed murder, so you have an eye problem in that you've committed adultery (Grammatical Point #1) - The participle "looks" is present tense which means Jesus is speaking about a continual habitual looking. This is not a one moment in time glance; this is a repeated gazing.

(Grammatical Point #2) - The infinitive "to lust" is a purpose infinitive. In other words, the premeditated purpose of the looking is to lust. The tense of the infinitive is aorist, which would seem to indicate that the action of lusting occurs before the action of looking (Dana & Mantey, p. 230).

Now here is Christ's point—if a man or woman continually and habitually is prompted by lusts to continually look at something immoral—this one is guilty of committing adultery in his/her heart.

Paulson: So, in Jesus's terminology, lust is a desire to possess. It's an intention to dominate. Which then inflames to a coveting desire. So when a man lusts after a woman, he takes the mystery of personhood and reduces her to a consumer item and covets her as a thing, rather than a person. . . It's impossible to live in the kingdom of God when we objectify his crown creation. Human beings. . .

Do you know one of the best spiritual disciplines you can embrace if you're struggling with lust is fasting? Because we remind our soul that our body doesn't control us. We start to rewire parts of our brain to go no, no, I don't need that. I can feed on something a little bit different.

II. (:29-30) RADICAL REMOVAL OF THE PATHWAY TO TEMPTATION ADVOCATED

A. (:29) Picture of Removal of Right Eye

“And if your right eye makes you stumble, tear it out, and throw it from you; for it is better for you that one of the parts of your body perish, than for your whole body to be thrown into hell.”

William Barclay: “stumble” -- Behind it there are two pictures.

- First, there is the picture of a hidden stone in a path against which someone may stumble, or of a cord stretched across a path, deliberately put there to make them trip.
- Second, there is the picture of a pit dug in the ground and deceptively covered over with a thin layer of branches or of turf, and so arranged that, when unwary travellers set foot on it, they are immediately thrown into the pit.

The skandalon, the stumbling-block, is something which trips people up, something which sends them crashing to destruction, something which lures them to their own ruin.

Grant Osborne: The idea of gouging out and cutting off, needless to say, demands a violent, decisive measure for removing the source of the temptation. The reason is seen in “to fall away” (σκανδαλίζει), a strong term that does not simply indicate temptation to general sin but that which leads one virtually into apostasy. This would be moral apostasy or very serious sin.

Thomas Constable: It is extremely important for us to monitor our thoughts carefully because of the depth, and power, and subtlety, and perverting nature, and effect, and danger, and pollution of sin (cf. Rom. 8:13-14; 1 Cor. 9:29; Col. 3:5).

B. (:30) Picture of Removal of Right Hand

“And if your right hand makes you stumble, cut it off, and throw it from you; for it is better for you that one of the parts of your body perish, than for your whole body to go into hell.”

William Barclay: Of course, the words of Jesus are not to be taken with a crude literalism. What they mean is that anything which helps to seduce us to sin is to be ruthlessly rooted out of life. If there is a habit which can be seduction to evil, if there is an association which can be the cause of wrongdoing, if there is a pleasure which could turn out to be our ruin, then that thing must be surgically excised from our life. . .

If people are harassed by thoughts of the forbidden and unclean things, they will certainly never defeat the evil things by withdrawing from life and saying, I will not think of these things. They can do so only by plunging into Christian action and Christian thought. They will never do it by trying to save their own lives; they can do it only by flinging their lives away for others.

Craig Blomberg: The “right” eye and hand refer to those viewed in antiquity as more valuable. Again, eternal judgment appears as the punishment for those who fail to heed Jesus' words. Sin that is not dealt with leads inexorably to judgment. Jesus is not implying, however, that sexual sin cannot be forgiven when there is true repentance.

William Hendriksen: Sin, being a very destructive force, must not be pampered. It must be “put to death” (Col 3:5). Temptation should be flung aside immediately and decisively. Dillydallying is deadly. Halfway measures work havoc. The surgery must be radical. Right at this very moment and without any vacillation the obscene book should be burned, the scandalous picture destroyed, the soul-destroying film condemned, the sinister yet very intimate social tie broken, and the baneful habit discarded. In the struggle against sin the believer must fight hard. Shadow-boxing will never do (1 Cor 9:27).

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What are the specific areas of temptation where lust presents a potential problem for you?
- 2) How can you devise and implement specific drastic plans to ensure that you minimize the possibility of temptation in those areas?
- 3) How can we manage to live in the world but not be of the world in this area of visual and graphic sexual temptation that is so pervasive in today’s culture?
- 4) What are some of the areas of self-discipline and spiritual tactics needed to have victory over sexual temptation?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Warren Wiersbe: How do we get victory? By purifying the desires of the heart (appetite leads to action) and disciplining the actions of the body. Obviously, our Lord is not talking about literal surgery, for this would not solve the problem in the heart. The eye and the hand are usually the two “culprits” when it comes to sexual sins, so they must be disciplined. Jesus said, “Deal immediately and decisively with sin! Don’t taper off—cut off!” Spiritual surgery is more important than physical surgery, for the sins of the body can lead to eternal judgment. We think of passages like Colossians 3:5 and Romans 6:13; 12:1–2; 13:14.

Grant Osborne: In light of the number of Christian leaders and laypeople whose ministries are being destroyed by sexual sin of late, this is truly one of the critical passages to be preached and discussed. It has been estimated that better than one-half of men in the average congregation are caught up in internet pornography, and lust has become a way of life in our culture, caused by the dress codes of our day as well as the soft-porn movies that proliferate. Jesus’ call for extreme measures must be heeded before it is too late. Adults as well as children should purchase the software to lock themselves out of X-rated sites, and accountability groups need to be set up in every church. All too many males (as well as many females) should be admitting, “I am a sexoholic,” and should be getting help. This issue has become a pandemic, and every church and Christian group should be seeking solutions even more vigorously than in the past.

Charles Swindoll: Jesus wasn’t advocating literal self-mutilation as a solution for sexual lust. However, the hyperbolic figure of speech does point to a severe, uncompromising moral self-control and self-denial. Lust enters through the eyes and sends a message to the mind, where the imagination takes over. So we shouldn’t look at things we know are treacherous, like pornographic images, and we shouldn’t stare at people as if they are merely objects of physical attraction. We should, to interpret Jesus’ figure of speech, be “blind” to them! Likewise, through the act of touching, lust is stimulated. If your hands go where they shouldn’t, then you have ignited your imagination and poured gasoline on the fire. Keep your hands to yourself!

R. T. France: The theme is impediments to ultimate salvation, and the importance of eliminating them at all costs, a theme which could have many different applications to relationships, activities, mental attitudes etc., certainly not only to sexual temptation. It is probably not helpful to speculate whether the eye and the hand were chosen to represent specific sins or temptations. As “removable” parts of the body they serve to make the point that any loss, however painful, is preferable to the total lostness of geënnā. The throwing of the “whole body” into hell belongs to the pictorial imagery as the alternative to physical amputation; it is not the basis for a doctrinal debate over either the nature of human existence after death or the physicality of hell. Nor should this passage be used to suggest that amputees will be raised in an imperfect body.

Daniel Doriani: While Jesus probes the heart of the matter, our public discourse becomes ever more superficial. Our comedies treat adultery and fornication as jokes. Our commercials and clothing styles promote lust. Our public policies assume that everyone over the age of eighteen is sexually active. And we deride the concept of absolute standards. But then we fret over the consequences of sexual immorality, such as teenage pregnancy and the host of sexually transmitted diseases, starting with AIDS. The solution, society proposes, is not fidelity within marriage and abstinence outside of marriage, but “safe sex” and condom distribution. . .

We cannot prevent certain thoughts from entering our minds. But once they enter, we may either entertain them or cast them aside and turn our minds elsewhere. Martin Luther said that we cannot stop birds from flying over our heads, but we can keep them from building nests in our hair. We cannot keep impure thoughts from flitting into our minds, but we can refuse to let them roost and find a home there. . .

Discontentment with a spouse drives out love and respect for her. Discontentment is prideful, for the discontented think they deserve better. Discontent is distrust in God’s providence, for it accuses God of providing the wrong spouse.

The culture says, “Get the best partner you can.” But we should say, “God has given me this man, this woman.” Then we should ask not what our spouse can do for us, but what we can do for our spouse. Contentment is the partner of love and the scourge of the roving eye.

Contentment breeds faithfulness.

Bob Deffinbaugh: Jesus says, “But I say... .” He does not diminish the Law; He goes beyond and extends the Law. Now this is where some might differ. The question is whether Jesus is just giving the interpretation of the Law that always should have been, or is He actually extending the Law beyond that which anyone in the Old Testament saw it to be?

My sense is that while Jesus is giving us the proper interpretation of the Law, He is also taking us beyond that which anyone thought it to be. We’ll see that further in our next lesson, when we talk about divorce. When Jesus gets through teaching about divorce, no one, not even the conservatives, were willing to go where Jesus went on the matter of adultery and divorce. Nobody! The disciples were saying, “My goodness, Lord. If that is the case, we shouldn’t even marry!” (Matthew 19) Everybody is shocked at where Jesus takes us on this matter. Jesus brings us to the heart of the matter, to the root of sin, but I think there is a sense in which He goes beyond it. . .

There is a fairly clear pattern here. Jesus states the Law, then He adds His enhancement (raising the bar), and finally He gives an illustrative application. . .

Verses 31-32 deal with divorce and will be addressed in our next lesson. Various Bible translations may include verses 27-32 in one paragraph, while other versions may divide these verses into two paragraphs. We must understand that these two sections are closely related, and that the reason divorce is viewed as being so evil in verses 31 and 32 is because it often results in adultery. So understand that while I have chosen to end this lesson at verse 30, we will address the relationship between adultery and divorce in our next lesson. Divorce and adultery are very closely related in this text, so do not think that it all ends at verse 30, since our teaching here focuses on the sin of adultery. . .

But in this text in Matthew, Jesus tells me that when I sin, I don’t just break the Law in this one point; I break the Law in every point! Think of it! Here are the scribes and Pharisees saying, “Murder and adultery! On these we are clean. This is going to be a cake walk!” But before Jesus gets done, they are guilty across the board. That is total depravity, folks! If you take sin the way Jesus does, and you go to the heart of it, there is no sin of which you and I are not guilty! I’m guilty at every point! Not because I failed at one point, but because I failed at every point! This is hopeless. Jesus talks in these dark terms about sin and the consequences of it.

Van Parunak: The “right eye” is the aiming eye for a right-handed archer, and losing it would make a man ineffective in battle. In spite of its great value, if it causes sin, it must be discarded immediately. How much more should lesser things be rejected, if they lead us into sin? Paul teaches,

Rom 13:14 But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof.

In the case of sexual sin, Job shows us how to apply this principle:

Job 31:1 I made a covenant with mine eyes; why then should I think upon a maid?

Recall Solomon’s exhortation in Proverbs,

Prov 4:25 Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee.

In their very helpful book Every Man’s Battle, Stephen Arterburn and Fred Stoeker discuss implementing Job’s principle in the “bounce reflex,” resolving not to allow one’s attention to linger on the lustful stimulus, but to bounce one's eyes away from it immediately. The starting point is "a covenant with mine eyes," a solemn, deliberate decision to avoid stimulating materials that might lead us into sin.

This same principle can be applied to any sin. Make a resolve to flee from temptation, not to dally around and allow yourself to be teased by it. If you play with the idea, you will progress to the action.

TEXT: Matthew 5:31-32

TITLE: DEALING WITH DIVORCE AND REMARRIAGE AS RELATED TO ADULTERY

BIG IDEA:

WHEN A DIVORCED PERSON REMARRIES THE RESULTING UNION CONSTITUTES ADULTERY

INTRODUCTION:

This passage deals with an additional way (other than lusting after a woman in your heart) to become guilty of breaking the commandment regarding adultery. The teaching of Jesus brings us back to God's original intent for marriage that the sacred contact be permanent and exclusive until death. Divorce cannot be used as a legitimate excuse to take another man's wife. The complicating factor in the text is the extra phrase "except for the cause of unchastity." Why is that included here and not in other parallel passages on the subject?

D. A. Carson: The introductory formula "It has been said" is shorter than all the others in this chapter and is linked to the preceding by a connective de ("and"). Therefore, though these two verses are innately antithetical, they carry further the argument of the preceding pericope. The OT points toward insisting not only that lust is the moral equivalent of adultery (vv.27–30) but that divorce is as well. This arises out of the fact that the divorced woman will in most circumstances remarry (esp. in first-century Palestine, where this would probably be her means of support). That new marriage, whether from the perspective of the divorcée or the one marrying her, is adulterous.

Leon Morris: In the other passages in this section Jesus is dealing with a specific command of God. But people were not commanded to get divorced; this passage assumes the practice of divorce and speaks of the way it was regulated in the Mosaic law. The bill of divorce was a protection for the woman; a capricious husband could not drive her from his home and afterward claim that she was still his wife. He must give her the document that set out her right to marry someone else. It was accepted throughout Judaism that a man was entitled to divorce his wife (the procedure is given in Deut. 24:1-4). A wife was not permitted to divorce her husband, though she could petition the court, and if her plea was accepted the court would direct the husband to divorce her. The husband's right was regarded as inalienable, and the only question was the ground on which he based his action. The school of Shammai took a hard line and saw the meaning of "some indecency" (Deut. 24:1) as adultery, whereas the school of Hillel allowed a much wider range of interpretation, and, for example, permitted a man to divorce his wife if she spoiled his dinner (Mishnah Git. 9.10; it adds the further information that R. Akiba allowed divorce "Even if he found another fairer than she"). Against such a background Jesus calls on people to appreciate the true meaning and solemnity of marriage. We should bear in mind that he is laying down great principles that should guide conduct; he is not making laws or giving a precise list of occasions when divorce might take place.

John Nolland: It is, therefore, likely that the intention of the present Gospel text is to challenge easy divorce, whether initiated by the husband or provoked by the wife, in each case by labelling the subsequently formed relationship as adulterous. In each instance the challenge is addressed to the man: whether he be the one contemplating divorce or the one planning to collude with the stratagems of a woman who has found her way out of a marriage in pursuit of something better. Marriage is not a contract to be cancelled when no longer convenient but rather, as testified to in Mal. 2:14-16, a covenant relationship that calls for sustained faithfulness.

E. Michael Green: The plain meaning of Jesus' words is that divorce followed by remarriage is tantamount to adultery in the eyes of God. Jesus is even stricter than Shammai! As we see from 19:3, Jesus takes his hearers back to the purpose for which God instituted marriage. It was intended to be exclusive and lifelong. That is the ideal. To fail to keep this ideal is to spoil God's plan for man and woman. It does not mean that failure cannot be forgiven, or that a subsequent marriage cannot be happy and fruitful. It simply asserts that such a marriage is adulterous and can never bear testimony to the one-man-one-woman relationship, for good or ill, which marriage was intended by the Creator to be. And that was a shattering statement by the new Moses, going back behind the Mosaic concession in Deuteronomy 24:1 (designed, incidentally, not to facilitate divorce but to restrict it) to the original purpose of God. In the kingdom, as at the creation, marriage is meant to be exclusive and lifelong.

Donald Hagner: The husband who divorces his wife causes her to commit adultery because in the culture of that day, unlike ours, a single woman could hardly survive on her own, except through prostitution. She was therefore bound to take another husband and so be made into an adulteress. And the man who married such a divorced woman himself committed adultery in so doing, because he has married the wife of another man. This viewpoint presupposes the permanent character of the marriage bond. For Jesus, not even divorce can change that fact.

I. (:31) TRADITIONAL TEACHING BY JEWISH RELIGIOUS LEADERS

“And it was said, 'Whoever sends his wife away, let him give her a certificate of divorce'.”

Walter Wilson: The unusual brevity of the unit itself (it is the only section of the antitheses without supporting illustrations) is offset by the extended treatment devoted to the question of divorce in Matt 19:1-9 (cf. Mark 10:1-12).

R. T. France: the debate concerns not one of the ten commandments but a single piece of regulatory law which occurs in Deut 24:1-4. This, the only pentateuchal passage which directly speaks of divorce, served perforce as the basis for subsequent Jewish teaching on the subject, even though it was not concerned with the rightness or wrongness of divorce in itself, nor with permissible causes of divorce, but only with the aftermath of a divorce which is assumed to have taken place.

Van Parunak: Grammatically, the text does not authorize the issuing of a “bill of divorcement,” but simply describes the fact that such a custom existed. It contains, not three commands, but only one, with a lengthy condition that includes the existence of one or more divorces. The only command is that under these conditions,

Deut 24:4 then her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled.*

I discuss the reasons for this translation extensively in chapter 4 of Except for Fornication. One important piece of evidence is Jeremiah's summary of this law:

Jer 3:1 If a man put away his wife, and she go from him, and become another man's, shall he return unto her again? Shall not that land be greatly polluted?

Jeremiah treats the putting away as a condition, not as a command or permission. . .

The references to the certificate of divorce and putting away in Deuteronomy 24 are a regulation of an ungodly practice, not an endorsement of the process and certainly not a command. . .

II. (:32) TRANSCENDENT TEACHING BY JESUS

A. Divorcing Your Wife Puts Her in Jeopardy of Committing Adultery (Unless She Has Already Committed Adultery)

“but I say to you that everyone who divorces his wife, except for the cause of unchastity, makes her commit adultery;”

R. T. France: What effect then does Jesus’ new teaching have on the understanding of Deut 24:1–4? Ideally it makes it obsolete, if God’s purpose for marriage is truly honored, since the prior divorce for which it legislates will not in fact occur in the ethics of the kingdom of heaven. In opposing current divorce legislation Jesus is rescuing Deut. 24:1–4 from misuse for a purpose for which it was never intended. It was not meant to provide a positive basis for the ethics of God’s people, but only a trouble-shooting provision in case things went wrong. In 19:4–5 he will ground his positive understanding of marriage on a different pentateuchal source, and if that prior principle is observed there will be no divorce and therefore no use for the remedial legislation of Deut 24:1–4.

Robert Gundry: “Except for the reason of sexual immorality” means that it won’t be the wife’s first husband who makes her to be adulterated by divorcing her. She has already been adulterated. But emphasis falls on the responsibility of husbands not to put their unadulterated wives in a position that pretty much dooms them to adulteration by remarriage out of economic necessity. The passive voice in “be adulterated” reflects male dominance in Jewish marital culture. Strikingly, on the other hand, the man who marries a divorcée adulterates himself whether or not he himself is divorced.

B. Marrying a Divorced Woman Always Constitutes Adultery (if Her Former Husband Is Still Alive)

“and whoever marries a divorced woman commits adultery.”

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Was Moses sanctioning the legitimacy of divorce in the Deut. 24 passage?
- 2) Was the teaching of Jesus intended to be even more severe than the position held by the School of Shammai? If so, then how could you have a legitimate exception clause for the sin of sexual immorality?

3) How can we stress that God provides forgiveness and grace to those marriage partners who repent so that they are not viewed as some type of second class Christians?

4) What should your response be once you become aware that you have committed an act of adultery?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

One of my major objections to the position that allows for divorce and remarriage for an exception clause of adultery is that if one partner wishes to get out of the marriage commitment, he or she then has an incentive to drive the other partner to commit adultery. That would then constitute “legitimate” grounds for divorce and subsequent remarriage. This type of loophole would then incentivize bad behavior. In light of the preponderance of biblical data where no “exception clause” is found it seems far better to hold to the stricter interpretation of No Divorce and No Remarriage unless the former partner has died.

John Piper: Divorce and Remarriage: A Position Paper

Eleven Reasons Why I Believe All Remarriage After Divorce Is Prohibited While Both Spouses Are Alive:

1. Luke 16:18 calls all remarriage after divorce adultery.
2. Mark 10:11-12 call all remarriage after divorce adultery whether it is the husband or the wife who does the divorcing.
3. Mark 10:2-9 and Matthew 19:3-8 teach that Jesus rejected the Pharisees' justification of divorce from Deuteronomy 24:1 and reasserted the purpose of God in creation that no human being separate what God has joined together.
4. Matthew 5:32 does not teach that remarriage is lawful in some cases. Rather it reaffirms that marriage after divorce is adultery, even for those who have been divorced innocently, and that a man who divorces his wife is guilty of the adultery of her second marriage unless she had already become an adulteress before the divorce.

4.1 Jesus assumes that in most situations in that culture a wife who has been put away by a husband will be drawn into a second marriage. Nevertheless, in spite of these pressures, he calls this second marriage adultery.

4.2 The remarkable thing about the first half of this verse is that it plainly says that the remarriage of a wife who has been innocently put away is nevertheless adultery: "Everyone who divorces his wife, except on the ground of unchastity, makes her (the innocent wife who has not been unchaste) an adulteress." This is a clear statement, it seems to me, that remarriage is wrong not merely when a person is guilty in the process of divorce, but also when a person is innocent. In other words, Jesus' opposition to remarriage seems to be based on the unbreakableness of the marriage bond by anything but death.

4.3 I will save my explanation of the exception clause ("Except on the ground of unchastity") for later in the paper, but for now, it may suffice to say that on the traditional interpretation of the clause, it may simply mean that a man makes his wife an adulteress except in the case where she has made herself one.

4.4 I would assume that since an innocent wife who is divorced commits adultery when she remarries, therefore a guilty wife who remarries after divorce is all the more guilty. If one argues that this guilty woman is free to remarry, while the innocent woman who has been put away is not, just because the guilty woman's adultery has broken the "one flesh" relationship, then one is put in the awkward position of saying to an innocent divorced woman, "If you now commit adultery it will be lawful for you to remarry."

5. 1 Corinthians 7:10-11 teaches that divorce is wrong but that if it is inevitable the person who divorces should not remarry.

6. 1 Corinthians 7:39 and Romans 7:1-3 teach that remarriage is legitimate only after the death of a spouse.

7. Matthew 19:10-12 teaches that special Christian grace is given by God to Christ's disciples to sustain them in singleness when they renounce remarriage according to the law of Christ.

8. Deuteronomy 24:1-4 does not legislate grounds for divorce but teaches that the "one-flesh" relationship established by marriage is not obliterated by divorce or even by remarriage.

9. 1 Corinthians 7:15 does not mean that when a Christian is deserted by an unbelieving spouse he or she is free to remarry. It means that the Christian is not bound to fight in order to preserve togetherness. Separation is permissible if the unbelieving partner insists on it.

10. 1 Corinthians 7:27-28 does not teach the right of divorced persons to remarry. It teaches that betrothed virgins should seriously consider the life of singleness, but do not sin if they marry.

11. The exception clause of Matthew 19:9 need not imply that divorce on account of adultery frees a person to be remarried. All the weight of the New Testament evidence given in the preceding ten points is against this view, and there are several ways to make good sense out of this verse so that it does not conflict with the broad teaching of the New Testament that remarriage after divorce is prohibited.

Voddie Baucham: The Permanence View of Marriage – Matt. 5:31-32

Context of Sermon on the Mount: Key Principles:

- The law of God is perfect, timeless and relevant and yet insufficient for our salvation.
- Jesus is our key to interpreting the OT in light of the Kingdom.
- Our righteousness must exceed the righteousness of the Pharisees. Must look at Pharisaism thru lens of original hearers – think of the most righteous people you can imagine (not as group of hypocritical, self-righteous wicked people).

Consistent pattern throughout these 6 antitheses.

- "You've heard this"
- "But I say this"

It is as wrong to keep the law as if that will justify you as it is wrong to not keep the law. Continuing discussion with the 7th commandment relating to adultery. Now Jesus brings in the issue of Divorce and Remarriage.

These are forgivable sins. Person may have a fulfilled life of service after repentance. God also blesses second union after repentance.

Overwhelming number of Christians today do not hold to this permanence view of Marriage that we hold.

Shortest and most concise of these 6 antitheses. Jesus referring to the case law here of Deut. 24:1-4, not directly to the Ten Commandments. The case law is the outworking of God's moral law to particular situations.

Two schools of thought in Jesus' day regarding reference to "indecency":

- School of Shammai – gross indecency or immorality
- School of Hillel – more liberal and generous – extended meaning to all types of real or imagined offenses including an improperly cooked meal

(comes into play more in Matt. 19 text)

Major Views on Divorce and Remarriage in the church:

1) Permanence View – no divorce; no remarriage under any circumstances – Dwight Pentecost, James Montgomery Boice, John Piper

2) Semi-Permanence View – allows for divorce, but doesn't allow for remarriage

3) Permissive View – allows for divorce and allows for remarriage – John MacArthur, John Frame, D. A. Carson

- One Clause view -- Some say remarriage allowable in the case of adultery only; but not abandonment or anything else
- Two Clause view – In the case of adultery and in the case of abandonment of a believing spouse by an unbelieving spouse
- Liberal View – For just about anything

Nuances within each of these views. Not a deal-breaker; doesn't mean we can't fellowship with others. Not arguing that everybody that disagrees with us is out in the weeds.

Argument: Difficult to hold to Permanence View from a pastoral perspective because of so many people in difficult situations. But there's difficulty regardless of your position. Still people you have to look in the eye and say "No you may not divorce; No you may not remarry."

e.g. what about abuse or neglect or incompatibility or fiscal irresponsibility or idolatry or blasphemy or lying and deceit or refusing to have children or drunkenness or addiction or lengthy imprisonment or unbelief in prior marriage = not biblical grounds for divorce and then remarriage even if you hold to Two Clause Position

Only difference is that despite the thousands of difficult situations that we might encounter, the Permanence View has only 2 more difficulties to deal with than the Permissive View.

It's difficult regardless of the position you hold. But it is a moot view because we don't base our position on the pastoral difficulties involved in counseling others.

Principles of the Permanence View:

1) The one-flesh union created in marriage is permanent until death.

Matt. 19 – look at what happens before you get to the exception clause. Pharisees questioning Jesus on a number of things that he had preached on. Jesus points them back to marriage ordinance in Genesis. Jesus only gives the exception clause after He has been asked another question. This first question is asked and answered with no exception clause given. Unequivocal answer of “No” – you cannot separate them.

Mark 10:9

In our vows we say “For better or worse, forsaking all others until death do us part” – otherwise we should change our vows

Next antithesis Jesus addresses in Matt. 5 = oaths and vows – marriage vows are permanent

2) Initiating a divorce is never lawful.

Next question in Matt. 19 – diving into the case law; Jesus says you are reading the case law wrong; Moses did not command Israel to give certificate of divorce; Deut. 24 is about remarriage; Moses assumes that divorce is already happening – not addressing that; putting restrictions on the existing practice

1 Cor. 7:10-11 – don't get divorced

1 Cor. 7:12-16 – don't get divorced

3) Remarriage after divorce is an act of adultery if a former spouse is living.

Rom. 7:2-3 – no exception clause in any of these passages; only death paves the way for remarriage without adultery [notice that it says “act of adultery” – not perpetual adultery]

Mark 10:10-12 – no exception clause; whoever does this commits this

Luke 16 – the other parallel passage

Matt. 5:31-32 – What's this a statement about? If she has committed this act she has already made herself an adulteress – you haven't made her an adulteress. But if you divorce her for some other reason you have made her an adulteress when she goes and remarries.

Whoever marries a divorced woman for any reason for any circumstance as long as her former spouse is still alive (doesn't say “Unless her divorce was a lawful one”) – no exception clause

Exception Clause – Only in Matt. 5 and Matt. 19 --

Porneia used – instead of word for adultery – sexual immorality – Why use this broader term; associated with Jewish betrothal law not a consummated marriage; betrothal was a covenant; a legally binding document; Matthew wrote to a Jewish audience; Joseph was going to put Mary away for porneia

3 Purposes for Marriage: Procreation / Sanctification / Illustration – think about divorce and remarriage within this framework

1) Procreation

Mal. 2 – God was seeking godly offspring

2) Sanctification

1 Cor. 7 – legitimate desires God has given for sex can be legitimately fulfilled within context of marriage

3) Illustration of the relationship between Christ and His Church

Divorce and Remarriage is a perversion of this intended picture;

Unthinkable under any circumstance to think that Christ would divorce the bride for whom He died.

What about principle that your righteousness must exceed that of the Pharisees?

- Hillel School – no problem here
 - Shammai School – big problem – Jesus would be saying: “The Pharisees say that you can only divorce in the case of gross immorality; I say to you exactly the same thing”???
- You don’t have to do any better than they do.

Pastoral Implications:

1) We will always encourage you to stay married. To keep your vows.

No reasons you can give that would change our mind to say that divorce is allowed in your extreme situation.

2) We will always walk with you through difficult marriage circumstances with a view towards repentance and reconciliation. No loophole that allows you to check out and be completely righteous. We will not perform wedding ceremonies for those seeking a second marriage while the first spouse is living. Go be reconciled.

Pastoral responsibility to protect a spouse who is being abused. But still would not advise divorce.

What this does not mean:

- That couple is committing new acts of adultery with every instance of intimacy thereafter
- Does not mean you should divorce current spouse and return to initial spouse; you don’t re-commit a sin to demonstrate your repentance for the first time you did it; Instead, now grab ahold of the Permanence View and don’t let go
- Does not mean that divorced and remarried people are second class citizens in the kingdom of God

Don’t mess with God by presuming on His grace and reasoning: I know that God forgives this sin as with any other so I will go ahead and sin and then look for forgiveness

I tell my wife: “If you leave me, I’m going with you.”

Marriage is not difficult because of the person you are married to. You are the problem. If leave and enter another marriage you take with you the problem = You!

Van Parunak: Most commentators neglect the position of the exception, and assume that it applies to the entire verse. If the Lord had meant the exception to apply to both clauses, he could made that clear.

He could have repeated it with each half:

*I say unto you,
whosoever shall dismiss his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery:
and whosoever shall marry her that is dismissed, saving for the cause of fornication, committeth adultery.*

He could have put it before the pair:

*I say unto you, that saving for the cause of fornication, whosoever shall dismiss his wife causeth her to commit adultery:
and whosoever shall marry her that is dismissed committeth adultery.*

Or he could have put it after both conditions:

*I say unto you,
whosoever shall dismiss his wife causeth her to commit adultery:
and whosoever shall marry her that is dismissed committeth adultery, saving for the cause of fornication.*

But there is no grammatical precedent for a modifier that falls in the middle of one clause to be applied to neighboring clauses as well.

The solution to the problem lies, not in twisting the grammar of the verse, but in the verb “dismiss” ἀπολυω. Recall that this is not the OT verb for divorce, but a secular verb from the Greco-Roman culture of the first century. It was used for divorce, but it has a much broader meaning, and three places where it occurs in the Greek Bible give us an important clue.

Gen 15:2 And Abram said, Lord GOD, what wilt thou give me, seeing I go [middle of ἀπολυω] childless, and the steward of my house is this Eliezer of Damascus?

Num 20:28 And Moses stripped Aaron of his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his son; and Aaron died there in the top of the mount: and Moses and Eleazar came down from the mount. 29 And when all the congregation saw that Aaron was dead [passive of ἀπολυω], they mourned for Aaron thirty days, even all the house of Israel.

Luk 2:27 and when the parents brought in the child Jesus, to do for him after the custom of the law, 28 Then took he him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said, 29 Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart [ἀπολυω] in peace, according to thy word: 30 For mine eyes have seen thy salvation,

In each of these cases, the verb means “to dismiss from life,” a meaning that it commonly has in other Greek literature. The biblical way to deal with fornication in a marriage is by executing the guilty party. When that is done, the other party is of course free to remarry.

So the Lord’s message turns on a double meaning of this verb. If a man dismisses his wife for any reason other than fornication, her remarriage makes both her and her future husband adulterers, for the bond with her previous husband is still in place. However, if he dismisses her for fornication, following the instructions of Deuteronomy 22, he dismisses her from life. Now she cannot remarry, and her widower is certainly free to remarry without adultery.

Application: The Lord's teaching on divorce leaves no loophole. Throughout the Bible, the Lord hates divorce. His law recognizes that it takes place, and regulates it, but it is still sin, and remarriage is adultery. The Scriptures provide no exceptions. This is the most important single thing for a young person to keep in mind when entering into marriage: if you intend to live pleasing to the Lord, the marriage commitment is permanent, and there is no godly exit except by the death of the spouse.

TEXT: Matthew 5:33-37

TITLE: INTEGRITY SHOULD MAKE OATHS UNNECESSARY IN NORMAL SPEECH

BIG IDEA:

OATHS ARE UNNECESSARY IN NORMAL SPEECH SINCE GOD DESIRES SIMPLE TRUTHFULNESS BASED ON PERSONAL INTEGRITY

INTRODUCTION:

Craig Blomberg: Jesus' followers should be people whose words are so characterized by integrity that others need no formal assurance of their truthfulness in order to trust them.

Grant Osborne: The OT allows oaths for anchoring the truth value of a statement, but the Jewish people had taken this to incredible lengths with the variety of oaths accepted or rejected and the frequency of their use. To Jesus this was an issue of honesty and integrity, for any statement of a citizen of the kingdom should be self-authenticating and should be true at the core. There is no need to use oaths to support an assertion.

R. T. France: Two different but related subjects are at issue here. Oaths, invocations of God or of some sacred object to undergird a statement or promise, shade into vows, solemn promises to God of an action to be performed. The OT passages summed up in v. 33 apparently relate to both issues, though Jesus' response focuses on the use of oaths to support one's word rather than on vows (he will touch on the latter question in 15:3-6). His simple command not to use oaths at all (v. 34a) is illustrated by a number of possible oaths each of which is shown to be inappropriate (vv. 34b-36), and explained in the pronouncement of v. 37 that any elaboration of a simple affirmation or denial is "from evil." Since the OT law not only provided for but in some cases demanded such elaborating oaths (e.g. Num 5:19-22), there is a prima facie case to be made that Jesus is here opposing the intention of one aspect of the law. At least he is doing what he did in v. 32, declaring that these provisions should never have been needed if people practised the uncomplicated truthfulness which is what God desires. . .

Jesus' prohibition of all swearing (its comprehensiveness is indicated by the emphatic holōs, "at all") will be explained in principle in v. 37. With regard to vows, which were voluntary, Jesus is not so much opposing OT legislation as telling his disciples not to take up an option which the law offered but did not require. His words recall the comment of Deut 23:22 that while vows once undertaken must be fulfilled (vv. 21, 23) if you do not make a vow at all "there will be no sin in you." Oaths too could be voluntary (Lev 5:4; Num 30:3-15), and such oaths are found frequently throughout the OT history, but there were also occasions when the law required an oath (Exod 22:11; Num 5:19-22; cf. the general expectation that oaths will be taken in Yahweh's name, without specific context, in Deut 6:13; 10:20), and these too are swept aside by Jesus' blanket prohibition if it is taken as a literal regulation.

William Barclay: The ideal is that people should never need an oath to buttress or guarantee the truth of anything they may say. The character of an individual should make an oath completely unnecessary. The guarantee and the witness should lie in what that person is. Isocrates, the great Greek teacher and orator, said: 'A man must lead a life which will gain more confidence in him than ever an oath can do.' The second-century Christian theologian Clement of Alexandria insisted that Christians must lead such a life and demonstrate such a character that no one will ever dream of asking an oath from them. The ideal society is one in which no one's word will ever need an oath to guarantee its truth, and no one's promise will ever need an oath to guarantee its fulfilling.

Charles Swindoll: Apparently, people had become untrustworthy in their promises and nonchalant about actually following through on commitments. To get others to take their promises seriously, people had to swear by heaven, by the earth, by Jerusalem, or by their own lives, in an almost superstitious sort of way (see Matt. 5:34-36). But even in this swearing, there was a catch—none of them actually used the name of God. As such, some were interpreting these oaths as allowing for a bit of flexibility. If a man broke a vow sworn “by Jerusalem,” only Jerusalem would be offended, but not God. Stan Toussaint puts it well: “The Jewish concept of taking oaths was based on a false interpretation of Leviticus 19:12, ‘You shall not swear falsely by My name.’ They thought that any oath, therefore, which did not include the name of God was not binding. Sometimes these oaths even came to be used as a means of deceit.”

I. (:33) TRADITIONAL TEACHING OF JEWISH RELIGIOUS LEADERS BASED ON MOSAIC LAW

“Again, you have heard that the ancients were told,”

D. A. Carson: The Mosaic law forbade irreverent oaths, light use of the Lord's name, broken vows. Once Yahweh's name was invoked, the vow to which it was attached became a debt that had to be paid to the Lord.

A sophisticated casuistry judged how binding an oath really was by examining how closely it was related to Yahweh's name. Incredible distinctions proliferate under such an approach. Swearing by heaven and earth was not binding, nor was swearing by Jerusalem, though swearing toward Jerusalem was. That an entire Mishnaic tract (m. Šebu.) is given over to the subject (cf. also m. Sanh. 3.2; t. Ned. 1; Str-B, 1:321–36) shows that such distinctions became important and were widely discussed.

John MacArthur: Now, you'll notice it says in verse 33, “Again you have heard that it hath been said by them of old, ‘Thou shalt not perjure thyself but shall perform under the Lord thine oaths.’” Now, that statement is not included in the Old Testament. It was kind of a composite statement of their Jewish tradition, but it is based upon Old Testament reality, for oaths are a part of the Old Testament. Now, you'll notice the word “oath” and you'll notice the word “perjure.” Both come from the same root. The word “swear” in verse 34 is a synonym. . .

The missing ingredient in their system was it never told them when oaths were proper, and so you might say the missing ingredient led to frivolous swearing. They were swearing oaths for every little thing through every day. Swearing by this and swearing by that and swearing to this and swearing to that, and all the time swearing and taking oaths indiscriminately, ad-libbed, glibly, taking them as a common matter of conversation.

The second thing, not only a missing ingredient but a misplaced emphasis. Notice the phrase, “Unto the Lord.” That was their little catch. As long as you swore unto the Lord, you had to do it. But if you swore to anything else, you didn't have to. Right? It was King's X. Remember when you were a little kid? “I know I told you that, but I had my fingers crossed.” Remember that? It's exactly what they were doing. "I know, but I had them behind them behind my back, they were crossed." "Oh, no, they weren't." And you know those little arguments. King's X. That's what they were playing.

If you don't swear to the Lord, you don't have to keep it, see? So they were saying I swear by heaven, I swear by earth, I swear by Jerusalem, I swear by my head, I swear by the temple, I swear by this, I swear by that, and they go right out and just do the very opposite. And they didn't have any impunity at all, no sense of guilt, because they didn't swear by the name of the Lord, and all it did was make a network of lies going everywhere.

A. Prohibition of False Vows

"You shall not make false vows,"

William Hendriksen: What we have here in Matthew 5:33-37 (cf. James 5:12) is the condemnation of the flippant, profane, uncalled for, and often hypocritical oaths, used in order to make an impression and to spice daily conversation. Over against that evil Jesus commends simple truthfulness in thought, word and deed.

B. Performance of Legitimate Vows

"but shall fulfill your vows to the Lord."

There is a legitimate use of oaths in special and solemn circumstances.

Leon Morris: The use of both the negative ("You shall not break your oath") and the positive ("you shall keep your oaths") gives emphasis to the importance of respecting sworn testimony.

Justin Imel, Sr.: Jesus is about to do two things with this commandment:

- (1) He will speak of the Law's true intent; and
- (2) He will raise the Law to a new level.

But, in no way, does Jesus encourage the breaking of this commandment. Jesus cannot encourage breaking this commandment in any way, shape, or form, for it is the Word of God.

II. (:34-37) TRANSCENDENT TEACHING OF JESUS EXPOSING THEIR HYPOCRISY AND DECEITFULNESS

"But I say to you,"

D. A. Carson: If oaths designed to encourage truthfulness become occasions for clever lies and casuistical deceit, Jesus will abolish oaths, for the direction in which the OT points is the fundamental importance of thorough and consistent truthfulness. If one does not swear at all, one does not swear falsely. . .

Jesus insists that whatever a man swears by is related to God in some way, and therefore every oath is implicitly in God's name; heaven, earth, Jerusalem, even the hairs of the head are all under God's sway and ownership (v.36).

Leon Morris: To swear means "To make a solemn declaration or statement with an appeal to God or a superhuman being, or to some sacred object, in confirmation of what is said" (Shorter Oxford Dictionary). J. Schneider understands swearing to be “primarily self-cursing should one not be speaking the truth” (TDNT, V, p. 458). Such a solemn statement is sometimes called for, but Jesus is saying that it should not be necessary for his followers. He is not forbidding the taking of an oath in a law court or the like. The law said, “you shall ... swear by his name” (Deut. 6:13; 10:20), and Jesus himself responded when the high priest put him on oath (26:63-64). He is saying in the strongest terms that those who follow him must speak the truth. They must never take the line that only when an oath is sworn need they be truthful. At all with the negative excludes the oath altogether. There must never be the need for it.

A. (:34-36) Prohibition of Unnecessary and Convoluted Vows

1. (:34-35) Don't Invoke God

a. (:34) By Referencing Heaven

“make no oath at all, either by heaven, for it is the throne of God,”

Craig Blomberg: To “swear” (v. 34) does not mean to curse or use bad words but to affirm the truth of a statement while calling on God to judge oneself if it is in fact untrue.

b. (:35a) By Referencing Earth

“or by the earth, for it is the footstool of His feet,”

Leon Morris: At one and the same time the footstool brings out subjection and nearness. It is perhaps relevant that God’s footstool is associated with worship (Ps. 99:5).

c. (:35b) By Referencing Jerusalem

“or by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great King.”

R. T. France: Oaths normally invoked God as the guarantor of the person’s word, and it was this which made it so serious a matter to break them: it was a misuse of God’s name (Exod 20:7), a profanation (Lev 19:12). In response some Jews had already developed the habit, which underlies much of our “social swearing” today, of finding more innocuous substitutes for the actual name of God; here Jesus lists oaths by heaven, earth, Jerusalem and one’s own head, while in 23:16–22 he will add a further list (the temple, the gold of the temple, the altar and the gift on the altar). Such casuistry, of which the Mishnah provides numerous examples, receives very short shrift, since heaven, earth and Jerusalem are inseparably linked with God as his dwelling and possession; the point is made by allusions to Is 66:1 (“Heaven is my throne and the earth is my footstool”) and Ps 48:2 (“Mount Zion, the city of the great King”). The oath by one’s head might have been given parallel treatment, since the head too is God’s creation, but the point is made more obliquely by pointing out that you have no power over your own head; the implication is that it is God, not you, who determines the color of your hair (some early patristic interpreters took this verse as a ruling against the use of hair-dye!), since he is its creator and sustainer. All such surrogate oaths display not reverence but theological superficiality.

Grant Osborne: To swear by heaven is to invoke God’s very throne (Ps 2:4; 11:4; Isa 66:1), and that is God’s prerogative, not ours. To swear by earth also goes back to God, for he created it and it is his. It is God’s right to use earth as his own footstool, not our right to use earth to bolster our own petty claims. To swear (facing) “toward” (εἰς) Jerusalem is to pretend that you can tell God what to do; it is his (the “great king,” Ps 48:2) city, not yours to control.

2. (:36) Don't Invoke Yourself

“Nor shall you make an oath by your head, for you cannot make one hair white or black.”

Leon Morris: The first three rejected oaths all in one way or another refer to God, but now comes an oath that centers on the person of the swearer. You are not to swear by your head, Jesus says. For this final example the verb swear is repeated, which may be for emphasis, but more probably in order to give balance to the sentence. To swear by the head means that the swearer “would give his head (i.e., his life) if he were not speaking the truth” (Ridderbos). The reason for not swearing moves from the greatness of God to the littleness of people: no one is able to change the color of even one hair, a very small part of the human body. Such an impotent being is not one by whom to swear oaths!

William Barclay: Here is a great eternal truth. Life cannot be divided into compartments in some of which God is involved, and in others of which He is not involved. There cannot be one kind of language in the church and another kind of language in the home. There cannot be one kind of standard of conduct in the church and another standard of conduct in the business world. The fact is that God does not need to be invited into certain departments of life and kept out of others, He is everywhere, all through life, and every activity of life.

He hears not only the words which are spoken in His name, He hears all words, and there cannot be any such thing as a form of words which evades bringing God into any transaction. We will regard all promises as sacred if we remember that all promises are made in the presence of God.

B. (:37) Performance of the Simple Truth

1. Stand on Your Word Alone

“But let your statement be, 'Yes, yes' or 'No, no';”

Leon Morris: The conclusion of the matter is that it is never necessary for Christ's people to swear an oath before they utter the truth. Their word should always be so reliable that nothing more than a statement is needed from them. God is in all of life, and every statement is made before him. Your statement will refer to anything you say. I have translated the Greek fairly literally, but the meaning may well be as in REB, “Plain 'Yes' or 'No' is all you need to say.” That would suit the context. Another possibility is that the words signify much what James says: “Let your 'yes' be yes, and your 'no' no” (Jas. 5:12), that is, your statement should be thoroughly reliable and thus make an oath unnecessary.

Walter Wilson: the invocation of special witnesses by means of the oath is seen to have the paradoxical effect of actually trivializing one's speech, since the practice represents a tacit admission that one's speech is unreliable without it. Moreover, if it is true that “the mouth speaks out of that which fills the heart” (12:34), then the practice of swearing runs the risk of trivializing not only one's speech but also one's self, that is, one's moral integrity. That being the case, in the requirement that Jesus imposes, “all places of appeal outside the self are rejected.”

John Nolland: The challenge is to stand, as far as one's word is concerned, nakedly on one's own integrity: neither by the introduction of an oath implicitly to downgrade the committedness of one's word without an oath nor by the use of the oath to seek to take hostage the honour of anything else to our own claim to truthfulness. Nothing by which I might swear can be made to carry responsibility for my truthfulness; the responsibility is my own.

John MacArthur: And what He's saying is keep it for those times when it is needful, when invoking God's name is a right thing because of the seriousness of the matter. But on other occasions, in your normal logos and by the way, that word is translated in the New Testament probably 50 times as common speech, just the word speech. Let your normal speech be yes means yes, and no means no. And you don't have to swear by anything because your word is your bond, right? So Jesus is merely reiterating what I said at the beginning, the two Old Testament standards.

2. Shun Going Beyond That

"and anything beyond these is of evil."

Leon Morris: This may mean that it originates in evil or, more probably, that it comes from the devil (so Lenski).

Grant Osborne: anyone who centers on more and more oaths rather than personal integrity is following Satan.

William Barclay: Let us look at the last part of this verse. The Revised Standard Version has it that the answer given must simply be yes or no; 'anything more than this comes from evil'. What does that mean? It can mean one of two things.

(a) If it is necessary to take an oath from someone, that necessity arises from the evil that is the individual. If there was no evil in that person, no oath would be necessary. That is to say, the fact that it is sometimes necessary to make someone take an oath is a demonstration of the evil in Christless human nature.

(b) The fact that it is necessary to put people on oath on certain occasions arises from the fact that this is an evil world. In a perfect world, in a world which was the kingdom of God, no taking of oaths would ever be necessary. It is necessary only because of the evil of the world.

What Jesus is saying is this – the truly good person will never need to take an oath; the truth of the sayings and the reality of the promises of that person need no such guarantee. But the fact that oaths are still sometimes necessary is the proof that people are not good and that this is not a good world.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What are some legitimate contexts today where taking an oath is still legitimate and appropriate?
- 2) What is the distinction between a vow and an oath?
- 3) What type of unnecessary expressions do we use to try to reinforce the validity of our words instead of just standing on our words alone (e.g. "Honestly . . .").

4) Do we have the reputation that our word is reliable?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

D. A. Carson: In the Scriptures God himself “swears” (e.g., Ge 9:9–11; Lk 1:72–75; cf. Ps 16:10 and Ac 2:27–31), not because he sometimes lies, but in order to help people believe (Heb 6:17). The earliest Christians still took oaths, if we may judge from Paul’s example (Ro 1:9; 2Co 1:23; 1Th 2:5, 10; cf. Php 1:8), for much the same reason. Jesus himself testified under oath (26:63–64).

David Thompson: JESUS CHRIST, THE RIGHTEOUS KING, GIVES HIS DISCIPLES TEACHING CONCERNING THE IMPORTANCE OF THEM BEING MEN WHO KEEP THEIR WORD, NOT MEN WHO MAKE A BUNCH OF OATH PROMISES.

Walter Wilson: In terms of its ramifications for the evangelist’s readers, the list provided in 5:34b–36 is best interpreted against the backdrop of contemporary practice. According to certain rabbinic authorities, oaths sworn by heaven, by earth, or by one’s own head were not considered legally binding. Assuming such rulings as a background for the Matthean community, “any casuistic attempt to circumvent 34a is excluded; appeal to non-binding oaths—such as the rabbis specified—is rejected.” The opposition of heaven and earth in the first two illustrations (5:34b–35a) functions rhetorically to reinforce the sense of totality applied to the prohibition. Having moved from heaven to earth, the scene then moves to Jerusalem, the center of the earth (e.g., Ezek 5:5; 38:12). The logic in each of the first three explanatory clauses involves associating each referent with the sacral majesty of God. The significance of heaven and earth resides not in themselves but in the fact that they are related to God by virtue of being, respectively, God’s throne and footstool, the imagery being derived from Isa 66:1 (cf. Acts 7:49). The same reasoning is then applied to Jerusalem, which is described as “the city of the great King” (cf. Ps 48:2). Each formula is shown to be unacceptable because each refers (albeit indirectly) to God, and therefore does not avoid the problem of calling upon God as witness.

William Barclay: But in the time of Jesus there were two unsatisfactory things about taking oaths.

The first was what might be called frivolous swearing, taking an oath where no oath was necessary or proper. It had become far too common a custom to introduce a statement by saying ‘By thy life’, or ‘By my head’, or ‘May I never see the comfort of Israel if ...’. The Rabbis laid it down that to use any form of oath in a simple statement like ‘That is an olive tree’ was sinful and wrong. ‘The yes of the righteous is yes,’ they said, ‘and their no is no.’

There is still need of warning here. Far too often, people use the most sacred language in the most meaningless way. They take the sacred names upon their lips in the most thoughtless and irreverent way. The sacred names should be kept for sacred things.

The second Jewish custom was in some ways even worse than that; it might be called evasive swearing. The Jews divided oaths into two classes, those which were absolutely binding and those which were not. Any oath which contained the name of God was absolutely binding; any oath which succeeded in evading the name of God was held not to be binding. The result was that if a man swore by the name of God in any form, he would rigidly keep that oath; but if he swore by heaven, or by earth, or by Jerusalem, or by his head, he felt quite free to break that oath. The result was that evasion had been brought to a fine art.

The idea behind this was that if God's name was used, God became a partner in the transaction; whereas if God's name was not used, God had nothing to do with the transaction. The principle which Jesus lays down is quite clear. In effect, Jesus is saying that, far from having to make God a partner in any transaction, no one can keep God out of any transaction. God is already there. Heaven is the throne of God; the earth is the footstool of God; Jerusalem is the city of God; our own heads do not belong to us; we cannot even make a hair white or black; our lives are God's; there is nothing in the world which does not belong to God; and therefore it does not matter whether God is actually named in so many words or not. God is there already.

Justin Imel, Sr.: Jesus is calling upon his disciples to live with such integrity that no oath is necessary. Every time I go to the DMV or to vote or am called upon to testify in court, those there likely do not know me well enough to realize my truthfulness. Even if they know I'm as honest as "Honest Abe," others may come along to examine such records who have no idea who I am; they don't know if I'm telling the truth or not. However, in my day-to-day associations, that had better not be the case!

Scripture calls upon us to be a people known for our integrity. "Let your light shine before others, so that they may see your good works and give glory to your Father who is in heaven" (Matt 5:16). "Keep your conduct among the Gentiles honorable, so that when they speak against you as evildoers, they may see your good deeds and glorify God on the day of visitation" (1 Pet 2:12).

Scripture likewise calls upon us to be people of the truth. "Having put away falsehood, let each one of you speak the truth with his neighbor, for we are members one of another" (Eph 4:25). "Do not lie to one another, seeing that you have put off the old self with its practices and have put on the new self, which is being renewed in knowledge after the image of its creator" (Col 3:9-10).

If we are people of integrity and speak the truth, we do not need oaths. I don't need to take an oath so that you know what I say I'll do. All I will need to do is simply to say "Yes" or "No." I won't need God to witness my truthfulness; my life will demonstrate that truthfulness. David spoke of such truthfulness: "O LORD, who shall sojourn in your tent? Who shall dwell on your holy hill? He who walks blamelessly and does what is right and speaks truth in his heart" (Ps 15:1-2).

Steven Molin: Have you ever wondered how this idea of swearing, and taking oaths, and placing ones hand on the bible came to be? It came from the assumption that people lie – we frequently lie – and that we will not tell the truth unless we are compelled to do so. So when someone thinks we may be lying, they say "Do you swear to God?" "Do you swear on your mother's grave?" "Do you...Cross your heart and hope to die if you should ever tell a lie?" Somehow, we figure that if someone is invoking their mother's grave, or bargaining with their own life, they will certainly tell the truth.

And if we swear to God, and yet lie, it means that we are prostituting God's name in order to get away with our lie. We are using God's honor to deceive someone else. All along, we thought the Second Commandment meant that we weren't supposed to spit out the name of the Lord when we cut ourselves shaving or hit our thumb with a hammer. But Luther had it right when he wrote in the Small Catechism:

“We are to fear and love God so that we do not use his name superstitiously, or use it to curse, to swear, to lie, or to deceive.”

So what is Jesus' antidote for swearing on his name, or swearing on anyone else's name? Just don't do it. When you are asked for your answer, you simply say “yes” or “no.” And you tell the truth. Followers of the Savior do not need extra encouragement or more reasons to tell the truth. We don't need legalistic rules, or the threat of perjury, or the weight of our mother's graves to compel us to speak the truth. We only need to be reminded that it is our duty as followers of Jesus to be honest. Always honest.

Tom Wright: Yes or No Is Enough

We live in a culture in which the truth is often the first casualty of interactions between men. We have an incredibly elaborate system of lawyers and contracts and notaries and binding signatures to ensure that we do what we say we will do, at least when it's perceived to be important enough. And none of it makes people any more truthful. In fact, most people don't even believe truth is an objective reality! . . .

As with Jesus' previous commands in the Sermon on the Mount dealing with murder, adultery, and divorce, the Law of Moses had already spoken to this issue, but the scribes and Pharisees had perverted the teaching of the Law and had chronically missed the spirit of the Law. Throughout this sermon, Jesus is zeroing in on the spirit of the Law in keeping with its purpose as the reflection of God's holy character. . .

I don't believe Jesus' point in Matthew 5 is that oaths are evil or that an oath can never be legitimate. I believe His point is that the swearing of oaths as practiced by the scribes and Pharisees was evil, in its entirety – because they deliberately swore their oaths by everything EXCEPT God in a foolish effort to sidestep their accountability TO God!

Our Lord emphatically points out in Matthew 5 that God alone is sovereign over all things – heaven, earth, Jerusalem, even the hairs on your head. And you – you are sovereign over nothing, not even your own hair. No matter what you choose to swear by, it is God to whom you and I and every other created thing are accountable, and you're accountable to Him whether you swear an oath or don't swear an oath. You're accountable to Him every time you open your mouth.

It would be better to swear no oath at all than to think you can contrive a way to avoid accountability before God to be a truthful person. . .

If we reserve truthfulness only for declarations that take the form of oaths or vows, and we neglect truthfulness the rest of the time, that is Phariseeism, and it is evil – and it makes oaths an instrument of evil.

Oaths must not become devices for lowering the standard of truthfulness that applies to us at all times as children of God. . .

Let's focus on the goal of godly lives from godly hearts. We will not speak truth in our hearts if we are not in love with the One who is Truth.

- Brothers and sisters, let us be truthful people because we hunger and thirst for righteousness.
- Let us be truthful people because God re-created us to be pure in heart.
- Let us be truthful people because we desire to be salt and light in a world that desperately needs our God and Savior, Jesus Christ.
- Let us be truthful people because we long to live out the lovely character of the One who gave us life at the cost of His own life's blood.
- Let us be truthful people because we are our Father's children.

That's reason enough.

TEXT: Matthew 5:38-42

TITLE: GOING THE EXTRA MILE INSTEAD OF RETALIATION FOR PERSONAL WRONGS

BIG IDEA:

KINGDOM ETHICS REQUIRE GIVING UP OUR RIGHTS WHEN WE ARE WRONGED INSTEAD OF RETALIATING

INTRODUCTION:

Charles Swindoll: The wheels of justice turned on the principle of payback. However, God gave these guidelines to govern civil and criminal justice. They prevented judges and courts from exacting excessive punishments on people. They also served as a deterrent to criminal acts because people could be sure that, in such a system of justice, what they did to others would come back upon them in equal measure.

This law of retribution was not intended to govern personal, everyday relationships between family members, friends, and neighbors. Yet many were applying this principle in a tit-for-tat, this-for-that style of vigilante “justice.” Such an interpretation left no room for grace and mercy, forgiveness and forbearance. Jesus knew human nature. He knew that if all individuals felt it was their legal obligation to retaliate against every little wrong, it would lead to an escalation of aggression and a breakdown of society.

So Jesus urged His listeners to respond to personal offenses with grace and mercy. When an evil person insults you, take the insult. If they take their aggression one step further and slap you on the cheek, refuse to retaliate (Matt. 5:39). If somebody tries to unjustly take from you or force you to do something, voluntarily give up your right to personal dignity and respect, and cooperate (5:40-42). Jesus knew that such alarming and unexpected responses to wicked behavior often disarm and disorient people and lead not to an escalation of wickedness and violence but to repentance and reconciliation.

Walter Wilson: In his response, Jesus does not reflect on the appropriateness of the lex talionis as a judicial rule, his concern instead being with its inappropriateness as a standard of communal ethics. By instructing his followers not to resist evildoers, Jesus repudiates both the concept of (equivalent) retribution upon which the law rests and the use of violence that it sanctions. In its place, he lays out an alternative strategy, one that fulfills the law (5:17) not by curtailing retaliation further but by eliminating it altogether. Moreover, this strategy entails not simply refraining from retribution but responding to injustice with actions that constitute a visible protest against the use of force, actions through which one’s “light” shines before others (5:16). The sorts of situations presented in the unit would have had special meaning for a group experiencing persecution.

Craig Blomberg: Striking a person on the right cheek suggests a backhanded slap from a typically right-handed aggressor and was a characteristic Jewish form of insult. Jesus tells us not to trade such insults even if it means receiving more. In no sense does v. 39 require Christians to subject themselves or others to physical danger or abuse, nor does it bear directly on the pacifism-just war debate. Verse 40 is clearly limited to a legal context. One must be willing to give as collateral an outer garment—more than what the law could require, which was merely an inner garment (cf. Exod 22:26-27). Coat and shirt reflect contemporary parallels to “cloak” and “tunic,” though both of the latter looked more like long robes. Verse 41 continues the legal motif by referring to Roman conscription of private citizens to help carry military equipment for soldiers as they traveled.

Each of these commands requires Jesus' followers to act more generously than what the letter of the law demanded. “Going the extra mile” has rightly become a proverbial expression and captures the essence of all of Jesus' illustrations. Not only must disciples reject all behavior motivated only by a desire for retaliation, but they also must positively work for the good of those with whom they would otherwise be at odds.

Leon Morris: The principles

- that we are to refrain from asserting our rights and
- that we should put the needs of others before our own

run through all of life and mark the difference between the servant of God and the worldling.

Richard Gardner: Instead of succumbing to an escalating cycle of hostile acts, eager to secure or defend our rights, we are to act in such a way that the cycle is broken. This might mean letting go of wounded pride, in order to deescalate a conflict situation. It might mean yielding ground in a legal or other dispute, in order to pacify one or more irate parties. Or it might mean pursuing a new level of reciprocity, in which we seek to meet evil with good stronger than evil (cf. Prov. 24:29; Rom. 12:17-21; 1 Thess. 5:15; 1 Pet. 2:23). In these and other ways, we act as the peacemakers Jesus commends in 5:9.

Donald Hagner: Jesus again expounds the ethics of the kingdom. What he presents is ethics directed more to conduct at the personal, rather than the societal, level. These directives are for the recipients of the kingdom, not for governmental legislation. Rather than demanding strict justice, or allowing for retaliation of any kind, the disciple of the kingdom defers to others. The disciple does not insist on personal rights. Furthermore, the true disciple does more than is expected. He or she is free from society's low standards of expectation, being subject only to the will of the Father. The conduct of the disciple is filled with surprise for those who experience it. This element of surprise relates closely to and reflects the grace that is central to the gospel. It is the unworthy who have experienced the good things of the kingdom; and as they have experienced the surprise of unexpected grace, so they act in a similar manner toward the undeserving among them (cf. Luke 6:34–35). Jesus himself provides the supreme example of the fulfillment of this ethic (cf. passion narratives and 1 Pet 2:23), and the disciples are called to follow in his path. Kingdom ethics demands not mechanical compliance to rules but a lifestyle governed by the free grace of God.

Ray Fowler: There are two mistakes people make with these commands of Jesus. Some people try to explain them away, which takes away the punch of Jesus' commands. While others find them impossible to obey, and so give up on them altogether. We need to be careful that we look at these commands within their immediate context and also in conjunction with other related commands of Scripture. Otherwise, like my friend in California, we may put these commands so far out of reach that we never even attempt to obey them.

So let's look at the immediate context first. And the immediate context is the Old Testament teachings on justice. Look at verse 38 where Jesus says: “You have heard that it was said, ‘Eye for eye, and tooth for tooth.’” Jesus is speaking here about what is often referred to as the lex talionis (law of retaliation) or “the law of the tooth.” It is mentioned three times in the Old Testament: in Exodus 21:24, Leviticus 24:20 and Deuteronomy 19:21. It sounds gruesome to us, because we tend to think of it in terms of personal revenge, but that was not the original intent of the law.

I. The Old Testament taught justice – “eye for an eye” (38)

- A. Excessive punishment was prohibited (Deuteronomy 19:16-21)
 - 1) The punishment fit the crime
 - 2) Evil was restrained
- B. Personal revenge was forbidden (Deut 32:35; Romans 12:19)
 - 1) Let the courts do their job
 - 2) God will repay

II. Jesus taught radical love over revenge (39-42)

- A. Do not resist an evil person (39a)
 - 1) Spoken to individuals in their personal relationships
 - 2) Different set of Scriptural commands for governments, courts, military, police, etc. (Romans 13:1-4)
- B. Four examples of radical love over revenge:
 - 1) Personal insults: turn the other cheek (39b)
 - 2) Lawsuits: Let him have your cloak as well (40)
 - 3) Forced actions: Go the second mile (41)
 - 4) Requests: Give to the one who asks you (42)

CONCLUSION: Let me close today’s message with three applications.

- 1) Practice mercy rather than justice (James 2:13)
- 2) Go beyond what is required (Matthew 5:47)
- 3) Trust God with the results (1 Peter 2:23)

<https://www.rayfowler.org/sermons/matthew/radical-love-over-revenge/>

I. (:38) TRADITIONAL TEACHING OF JEWISH RELIGIOUS LEADERS = LEX TALIONIS

“You have heard that it was said, ‘An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth.’”

Warren Wiersbe: The original law was a fair one; it kept people from forcing the offender to pay a greater price than the offense deserved. It also prevented people from taking personal revenge.

John MacArthur: God instituted judges and magistrates and authorities to take care of civil matters. Now watch this. You have three times in the Old Testament where the phrase, “An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth,” is mentioned. All three of those times [Ex. 21; Lev. 24; Deut. 19] relate to a civil situation. They relate to something occurring within a duly constituted authority (a judge, a magistrate, et cetera). “An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth” is not a statement that is in any way related to personal relationships. But in fact that’s precisely what the Pharisees had done with it. They took a divine principle of judicature, a divine principle for the courts, and they made it a matter of daily vendettas. . .

You know how to get rid of evil in your society? Give just punishment speedily for people who commit crimes, even perjury, as in this case [Deut. 19]. “And those which remain shall hear and fear, and henceforth commit no more any such evil among you. And thine eye shall not pity.” Now, notice this: There is no place in a law court for pity. You see? Pity is not in a law court. The law demands justice. If society is to be preserved, there must be justice. The court is not the place for pity.

II. (:39-42) TRANSCENDENT TEACHING OF JESUS

“But I say to you,”

Kent Hughes: Jesus changes our lives! We no longer consider it our duty to get even. “Eye for eye, tooth for tooth” is fine for the court, but not for our relation to others—even our enemies. Thanks to Jesus, we have let go of our legalistic obsession with fairness. We are glad that Jesus was not fair with us, for if we were to have gotten what was coming to us, it would not have been good. As Jesus’ followers we give ourselves to the highest welfare of others, even our enemies. We put up with the sins and insults of others for Christ’s sake and theirs. Though hurt many times before, we refuse to withdraw into the shell of self. We do not run from hurt. We appear weak, but we are strong, for only the most powerful can live a life like this. But the power is not ours, but Christ’s. Everything comes from Christ.

A. (:39a) Governing Principle

“do not resist him who is evil;”

Leon Morris: “Do not resist the evil person” does not mean that we should let evil triumph throughout our communities. Jesus is referring to private retaliation, not to public order, and he is instructing his followers not to be intent on getting their own back when someone wrongs them. To be the victim of some form of evil does not give us the right to hit back.

Donald Hagner: The articular τῷ πονηρῷ here clearly does not mean “the evil one,” i.e., Satan (as in v 37; cf. 6:13). If an evil person were in view, one would expect an anarthrous noun. It is much more likely that the evangelist has in mind “the evil deed.” This is interpreted first in terms of nonretaliation, as in the first illustration, then in terms of compliance with unreasonable requests (vv 40–41), and finally in terms of simple charity (v 42).

Van Parunak: This negative is followed by four positive examples, the last doubled and adorned with a negative to show that it is the last. This initial statement as the summary, which is then expounded in four specific examples.

Each example presents an offense to which we might react with a spirit of revenge, but instead are told to receive graciously. The examples are ordered from the most severe offense to lesser ones, perhaps to help us recognize how pervasive is the self-centeredness that leads us to seek revenge. . .

In each of the four specific cases, an action by another that would offend the flesh and might invite thoughts of getting even, instead is to stimulate us to a gracious, kind response. In each case later teaching, and even the personal example of our Lord, shows that we are not completely passive. The Spirit has given us examples to help us apply these principles, but we should not miss the basic point of the principles. The believer, faced with an offensive world, does not take offense. Where the unbeliever seeks revenge, the believer seeks the good of those who give offense.

David Thompson: The word “resist” is a Greek word that means to stand against, to oppose (Smith, p. 37). Jesus is telling His disciples that your job is not to stand against or oppose those who are evil. What we may observe from Scripture is there were times when the right thing to do was to resist evil. For example, Jesus went into the Temple and physically drove out sellers and money changers (Matt. 21:12; John 2:15). Paul withstood Peter to his face because he was to be condemned (Gal. 2:11). We are to resist the devil (James 4:7; I Pet. 5:9) and the evil he promotes (Rom. 12:9). There are times when people are to be put out of the church (I Cor. 5:13; Matt. 18:15-17). Righteousness does not continually stand against evil; it presents the Gospel to evil.

B. (:39b-42) 4 Illustrations to Reinforce Practical Application

1. (:39b) Attacking Your Dignity

“but whoever slaps you on your right cheek, turn to him the other also.”

R. T. France: Such a response follows the model of God’s servant who “gave my back to those who struck me and my cheeks to those who pulled out the beard (LXX has “to slapping”); I did not hide my face from insult and spitting,” Isa 50:6. In a culture which took honor and shame far more seriously than ours, this was a paradoxical and humiliating demand.

John MacArthur: What Jesus is saying is this: “When someone treats you in a way that is less than you deserve, when someone takes the right to dignity that you have, don’t retaliate. Be slapped again before you would ever think to retaliate. Take as much as they want to give but don’t retaliate.” If you’re worried about your dignity, beloved, someday you’re gonna be a Son of God in the image of Jesus Christ and you’re gonna stay that way forever, and God’s gonna pour out all the goodness of his great grace on you forever and ever and ever. So if you’re worried about your dignity, just hang on, you’ll get it. Don’t fight for it here, because if you do, you’re gonna disavow the fact that you’re a Son of God and that you’re related to Jesus Christ, because you won’t be acting in a way consistent with them.

2. (:40) Attacking Your Security

“And if anyone wants to sue you, and take your shirt, let him have your coat also.”

Michael Wilkins: The tunic was the basic garment, a long-sleeved inner robe similar to a nightshirt that a person wore next to the skin. It was often worn short by men and ankle length by the women. The “cloak” was the outer robe (cf. 27:35; John 19:23–24), which was an indispensable piece of clothing. When it was given as a pledge, it had to be returned before sunset, because it was used by the poor as a sleeping cover.

John Nolland: A number of assumptions seem justified in order to flesh out this illustration.

- First, we have no reason to doubt that the indebtedness implied is genuine: the plaintiff has a good case.
- Second, the one being summoned to court is extremely poor: there is nothing but the clothing in which he or she stands to sue for in compensation for the unpaid debt.

- Third, the attempt to gain possession of the tunic, while probably not technically in violation of OT law, is clearly in violation of the spirit of Ex. 22:25-27.

3. (:41) Attacking Your Liberty

Michael Wilkins: Persian royal post officers could force a civilian to carry official correspondence, and Roman military personnel could organize bands of unpaid laborers from the common people to construct roads, fortifications, and public buildings. The most familiar New Testament scene is when Simon of Cyrene was forced into service by the Roman guards to carry Jesus’ cross (27:32; Mark 15:21). The Greek term milion means a “thousand paces,” which measures approximately 4,854 feet (just under the distance of a modern U.S. “mile”).

John Nolland: In the third example we are dealing with a practice of compulsory and often unpaid or poorly paid public service. We have no specific knowledge of the forms in which this was practised in Roman Palestine, but since Persian times impressing people and animals without notice for temporary service to the authorities had been customary and legal; the practice has been well documented. It is understandable that the populace experienced this requirement as irksome, that they often resented it, and that it was all too subject to abuse. Hostility to Roman rule would make such impressment yet more distasteful. The recommendation is to generous and ungrudging compliance. Presumably such compliance has the power to turn an exaction into genuine public service, generously given to a representative of the government who has ‘need’ of it. This is not necessarily an endorsement of the practice of impressment as such, but in a situation in which changing the rules was not a possibility, the proposed response would have the capacity of turning the nature of the transaction from one in which both parties felt worse about each other after the encounter to one in which positive human interaction might become possible.

R. T. France: This oppressive practice was of course deeply resented by the people of occupied Palestine, but it was a Roman legal provision and they would have no choice about complying up to the limit required (“mile” was a Roman, not a Jewish measure). But Jesus calls on the disciple not only to accept the imposition but also to volunteer for a double stint. To do this for anyone would be remarkable, but to do it for the enemy was unheard-of. This cameo thus serves not only to illustrate Jesus’ demand to renounce one’s rights, but also prepares us for his equally revolutionary command to love one’s enemies (v. 44), and suggests that Jesus advocated a response to the Roman occupation which not only full-blown Zealots but even the ordinarily patriotic populace would have found incomprehensible.

4. (:42) Attacking Your Property

“Give to him who asks of you, and do not turn away from him who wants to borrow from you.”

Walter Wilson: With respect to the overall structure, it appears that the scenarios have been arranged in descending order of severity, beginning with physical assault (5:39b) and concluding with financial importunity (5:42).

Michael Wilkins: to give freely to whoever seeks assistance, especially to those from whom there is little chance of repayment, is the height of generosity.

R. T. France: The point they are making is that in the kingdom of heaven self-interest does not rule, and even our legal rights and legitimate expectations may have to give way to the interests of others. It is for each disciple to work out for themselves how this principle can most responsibly be applied to the issue of giving and lending in the different personal and social circumstances in which we find ourselves.

John MacArthur: Let's pray together. Father, instead of fighting for our rights, may we live for what is right before you. The spirit of humility, gentleness, forgiveness, and love to those who are set against us, that we may truly be the sons of our Father, that people may see in us the wondrous forgiving love of Jesus Christ. It grieves our heart, Lord, to know that so often we preach a Christ of forgiveness, a God of forgiveness, and then we live unforgiving lives which must literally destroy the validity of our testimony. May we, as Paul said to Titus, "adorn the doctrine of God." May our living may match our message that people will see in us that forgiving Christ, see in us that forgiving God, as we, even though the rights of dignity, security, liberty, and property be taken away, may we never retaliate with less than love, bringing to them a certain amount of shame that they may know that they're missing a dimension of life that we possess and in so knowing seek the only one who can give it, our Lord Jesus Christ in whose name we pray. Amen.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How difficult is it for us to refrain from insisting upon our rights and from trying to retaliate against those who have wronged us?
- 2) How do these verses apply to the issue of vigilante justice?
- 3) How did the Lord Jesus apply these verses in His own life?
- 4) How does verse 42 apply to the common situation of being approached by panhandlers who camp out at a particular intersection in your community and seem to make it their full time job to ask for donations?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Charles Swindoll: Jesus' statements must be understood in their overall context. Nowhere in Scripture are we instructed to be submissive victims to physical, verbal, or sexual abuse, rape, terrorism, murder, or other threats of true harm. It's noble to bite your tongue when some guy insults you in the checkout lane, or to refuse to lean on the horn when an aggressive driver cuts you off in traffic, or to take a step back when an upset mother slaps you for scolding her out-of-control child. But it's deplorable to sit back passively as a bully injures a defenseless victim, or to refuse to defend your children if a kidnapper tries to drag them off, or to raise the flag of surrender if an army of terrorists rolls across your nation's border. John Stott puts Jesus' words into perspective: "Christ's illustrations are not to be taken as the charter for any unscrupulous tyrant, ruffian, beggar or thug. His purpose was to forbid revenge, not to encourage injustice, dishonesty or vice. . . . True love, caring for both the individual and society, takes action to deter evil and to promote good.”

William Barclay: That law [lex talionis] became part and parcel of the ethic of the Old Testament, where we find it laid down no fewer than three times. “If any harm follows, then you shall give life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, burn for burn, wound for wound, stripe for stripe” (Exodus 21:23–5). “Anyone who maims another shall suffer the same injury in return: fracture for fracture, eye for eye, tooth for tooth; the injury inflicted is the injury to be suffered” (Leviticus 24:19–20). “Show no pity: life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot” (Deuteronomy 19:21).

(1) The lex talionis, the law of tit for tat, so far from being a savage and bloodthirsty law, is in fact the beginning of mercy. Its original aim was definitely the limitation of vengeance. In the very earliest days, the vendetta and the blood feud were characteristic of tribal society. If a man of one tribe injured a man of another tribe, then at once all the members of the tribe of the injured man were out to take vengeance on all the members of the tribe of the man who committed the injury; and the vengeance desired was nothing less than death. This law deliberately limits vengeance. It lays it down that only those who committed the injury must be punished, and their punishment must be no more than the equivalent of the injury they have inflicted and the damage they have done. Seen against its historical setting, this is not a savage law but a law of mercy.

(2) Further, this was never a law which gave a private individual the right to extract vengeance; it was always a law which laid down how a judge in the law court must assess punishment and penalty (cf. Deuteronomy 19:18). This law was never intended to give the individual person the right to indulge even in the vengeance of tit for tat. It was always intended as a guide for a judge in the assessment of the penalty which any violent or unjust deed must receive.

(3) Still further, this law was never, at least in any even semi-civilized society, carried out literally. The Jewish jurists argued rightly that to carry it out literally might in fact be the reverse of justice, because it obviously might involve the displacement of a good eye or a good tooth for a bad eye or a bad tooth. And very soon the injury done was assessed at a money value; and the Jewish law in the tractate Baba Kamma carefully lays down how the damage is to be assessed. If a man has injured another, he is liable on five counts – for injury, for pain, for healing, for loss of time and for indignity suffered.

- In regard to injury, the injured man is looked on as a slave to be sold in the market place. His value before and after the injury was assessed, and the man responsible for the injury had to pay the difference. He was responsible for the loss in value of the man injured.
- In regard to pain, it was estimated how much money a man would accept to be willing to undergo the pain of the injury inflicted, and the man responsible for the injury had to pay that sum.
- In regard to healing, the injurer had to pay all the expenses of the necessary medical attention, until a complete cure had been effected.
- In regard to loss of time, the injurer had to pay compensation for the wages lost while the injured man was unable to work, and he had also to pay compensation if the injured man had held a well-paid position and was now, in consequence of the injury, fit for less well-rewarded work.

- In regard to indignity, the injurer had to pay damages for the humiliation and indignity which the injury had inflicted. In actual practice, the type of compensation which the lex talionis laid down is strangely modern.

(4) And most important of all, it must be remembered that the lex talionis is by no means the whole of Old Testament ethics. There are glimpses and even splendours of mercy in the Old Testament. “You shall not take vengeance or bear a grudge against any of your people” (Leviticus 19:18). “If your enemies are hungry, give them bread to eat; and if they are thirsty, give them water to drink” (Proverbs 25:21). “Do not say, “I will do to others as they have done to me”” (Proverbs 24:29). “It is good to give one’s cheek to the smiter, and be filled with insults” (Lamentations 3:30). There is abundant mercy in the Old Testament too.

So, we see that ancient ethics were based on the law of tit for tat. It is true that that law was a law of mercy; it is true that it was a law for a judge and not for a private individual; it is true that it was never literally carried out; it is true that there were accents of mercy speaking at the same time. But Jesus obliterated the very principle of that law, because retaliation, however controlled and restricted, has no place in the Christian life.

R. T. France: Here more than anywhere in this section we need to remind ourselves that Jesus’ aim is not to establish a new and more demanding set of rules to supplant those of the scribes and Pharisees. It is to establish a “greater righteousness,” a different understanding of how we should live as the people of God, an alternative set of values. In place of the principle of retribution he sets non-resistance; in place of the defence of legal rights he sets uncalculating generosity; in place of concern for oneself he sets concern for the other. The disciple may be forced to conclude that in an imperfect human society Jesus’ illustrations of these principles could not work as literal rules of conduct, that unlimited generosity to beggars would not only undermine the economic order but also in the end do no good to the beggars themselves. But instead of therefore dismissing Jesus’ teaching as starry-eyed utopianism, a proper response to this challenging section is to ask in what practical ways Jesus’ radical principles can be set to work in our very different world. Our answers will vary, but if they are true to Jesus’ teaching they will represent an essentially non-self-centered approach to ethics which puts the interests of the other before personal rights or convenience.

D. A. Carson: While these four vignettes have powerful shock value, they were not meant to be new legal prescriptions. Verse 42 does not commit Jesus’ disciples to giving endless amounts of money to everyone who seeks a “soft touch” (cf. Pr 11:15; 17:18; 22:26). Verse 40 is clearly hyperbolic. No first-century Jew would go home wearing only a loincloth. Nor does this pericope deal with the validity of a state police force. Yet the illustrations must not be diluted by endless equivocations. The only limit to the believer’s response in these situations is what love and the Scriptures impose.

The Bible Says: Jesus said that the righteousness of His Kingdom did not consist of obsessively paying back an eye for an eye, but it was obtained through mercy. Referencing His authority yet again by saying But I say to you, He says not to resist (seek to pay back) an evil person for the evil they have done you. Instead of returning evil for evil, return good.

This is at the heart of His kingdom. This is the mercy principle Jesus shared in the Beatitudes: “Makarios (blessed) are the merciful for they shall receive mercy” (Matthew 5:7). This is what

Paul will tell the believers in Rome, “Never pay back evil for evil to anyone. Do not be overcome by evil, but, overcome evil with good” (Romans 12:17; 21). This is what James means when he writes, “mercy triumphs over judgment” (James 2:13). Righteousness (social harmony) comes when people forgive and overlook offenses done to them, not when they prosecute every wrong. <https://thebiblesays.com/commentary/matt/matt-5/matthew-538-42/>

Gregory Brown: The Kingdom Response to Personal Injustice

The Pharisees applied the law of “eye for eye” not only to courts, but to personal relationships, which only justified the natural sin within the human heart. However, we as believers are not to be identified by obeying our sinful nature but our new nature. We are to live as citizens of heaven on earth. How then should we respond when others hurt us? Essentially, it could be summarized by simply saying, we must give up our rights. In the following verses, Christ describes four ways that we should give up our rights when wrongs are committed against us. These four examples probably have specific applications to being persecuted for our faith. . .

Christ is not commanding believers to never resist an evil person, and he certainly is not forbidding the government and court system from executing justice. This is made clear by the next phrase: “To the person who strikes you on the cheek, offer the other as well.” Christ was forbidding personal retaliation, not civil justice. He was dealing with how we respond when evil is committed against us personally. In that case, we should give up our right to retaliate and instead respond gently. His teaching doesn’t mean we should never call the police or seek justice from an authority. . .

Application Question: Why is it so hard to give up our right to personal retaliation? Should believers always turn the other cheek when insulted? If not, why not, and how should we discern when to pursue justice? If possible, describe a time when you decided to turn the other cheek and the results. . .

Our possessions are to be held with an open hand before the Lord. This will seem very difficult to those who have zealously strived to accumulate things: books, electronics, homes, and cars. However, Scripture teaches that the whole earth is the Lord’s (Ps 24:1). We don’t own anything. We are just stewards of the Lord’s resources. In fact, in Matthew 6:19-21, Christ calls us to not store up riches on the earth but to practice simplicity, since riches have a tendency to steal our hearts. Also, in 1 Timothy 6:6-8, Paul taught that we should learn to be content with food and covering. If we have understood and practiced these principles with our possessions, it will be much easier to relinquish them, if the Lord calls us to, and respond in love to those who persecute us. . .

Are you willing to let go of your possessions out of devotion to Christ and love for those who seek to harm you? These types of sacrifices are commonly the way God saves our enemies and draws them to repentance.

Application Question: Why is it so hard to give up our rights to our possessions? Why should we be willing to give them up, even when they are unjustly taken? . . .

How do you respond when someone imposes on your time and energy? Are you gracious? Do you recognize that your time and energy are the Lord’s and he can use them, as he sees fit? Do you trust God’s sovereignty in the interruptions of the day—including disruptions and impositions by those who are rude and disrespectful, like a difficult boss or family member? Our time is not ours. It is the Lord's, and we must use it even to serve those who hurt and harm us. This is often God's method of saving the lost and bringing repentance in the lives of the redeemed.

Are you offering your time to the Lord? Are you willing to sacrifice it for the benefit of others, even the rude and unthankful? Sacrifice of time and energy for others, including the unthankful, will mark kingdom citizens in this world. Does it mark you?

Application Question: Why is giving up our time for others so difficult, especially when they are ungrateful? How can we prepare for unplanned interruptions and handle them graciously? Describe a time you willingly sacrificed time and energy for someone who was rude and/or ungrateful and the effects of that sacrifice on them and yourself.

Finally, we must not only sacrifice our rights to retaliate, to our own possessions, and to our time, we also must give up our rights to our money. Again, this is very difficult to hear, as money is very hard to earn and even harder to keep. We naturally feel that since we earned our money, it is not right for anybody else to have it. We often struggle with the government taking so much of our money in taxes. In our hearts, we think, "I earned this! Why are they taking it!?" With the poor, we think, "Why don't they work for their own money and stop being lazy!?" But if we are followers of Christ, our money is the Lord's, and we are to be extremely generous with it. . .

In order to do this, we must be willing to use our money to bless the unlovable. When we do this generously and joyfully, we look like God, and God will bless us.

Is your money the Lord's—for him to use to bless others as he wills? Or is your money primarily used for selfish purposes?

Application Question: What makes Jesus' teaching about giving money to whoever asks so difficult? How can we practice this kind of generosity? What are some probing questions to ask ourselves for discerning when to give and when not to?

<https://bible.org/seriespage/16-kingdom-response-personal-injustice-matthew-538-42>

Jacob Gerber: "An Eye for an Eye"

Well, here we are coming to another unlawful expansion of what the law taught. You see, when we look at the law for an eye for an eye, Jesus is reminding us that there was a very specific scope, a very specific scope for the eye, for an eye, a law of retaliation. Namely, the scope was for public justice. This was a law for public justice. The idea was if you put out the eye of my friend and I'm angry about that and I want justice. I see that, in fact, the retaliation is administered in public by the civil magistrate who is charged with keeping the peace, keeping justice, administers the same kind of punishment to the one who has done this to my friend. That should, I may still be angry about it, but that should settle my desire for wanting to seek justice privately. It limits vengeance. I see that justice has been done and I don't have to do anything.

Furthermore, this limits the kind of punishments that could happen if you were the one accused of a crime. If you stole a loaf of bread, you could not have your hand chopped off. If you put out someone's eye, you could not be put to death for it. There was a limitation on how far justice could go, and that was utterly honest. An eye for an eye. . .

The second principle we need to see is that even in our private lives, our private matters, we need to understand that Jesus is not talking about saying that self-defense, lawful self-defense, is somehow wrong. Because even the law acknowledged necessary defense. . .

Now most of the passions that are seething and raging and our soul trying to get whatever we can, most of our passions are sinful passions. They're corrupted by sin that's always wanting, always greedy, always grabbing after something and is angry whenever we don't get what we want, especially justice like what Jesus is talking about in this passage. . .

So to summarize this, when we suffer physically or spiritually, the law requires that we not respond from our passions, from that anger that rises up to say, I want to get even. Our actions and even our attitudes must be guided not by the raging passions inside of us, but by our deliberate conscious, shaped according to the Word of the Lord, affections. Affections where God trains us to respond to others as He responds to us. . .

We will never rid ourselves of this corruption in this life. We are certainly waiting for the life to come when we will be perfectly glorified and rid of this corruption. But God does promise real forgiveness now. More than this, God promises real growth, real cleansing, real sanctification. To transform us into people who are increasingly conformed to the image of Jesus Christ, who did not revile in return, did not threaten, but instead continue to trust himself to the one who judges justly. That's the image of our Savior, and that's what God commands for us. There's no hope outside this gospel. There's no hope outside the fact that Jesus came to suffer for sinners. Look to him and be saved.

TEXT: Matthew 5:43-48

TITLE: LOVE FOR ENEMIES WITHOUT PARTIALITY

BIG IDEA:

THE TRANSCENDENT TEACHING OF JESUS REGARDING THE GREATER RIGHTEOUSNESS OF KINGDOM CITIZENS CLIMAXES WITH THIS COMMAND TO LOVE OUR ENEMIES WITHOUT PARTIALITY

INTRODUCTION:

E. Michael Green: The last example Jesus chooses of the ‘greater righteousness’ of members of the kingdom is the most challenging of all. It makes explicit what has been implicit throughout the whole chapter hitherto: love (5:43–48). The Great Lover has poured his love upon us unworthy rebels. He has purified us, has adopted us into his kingdom, and wants us to be his ambassadors in the human kingdoms. How is it to be done, and how is our allegiance to be shown? Supremely, by love. Love is the mark which, above all else, should distinguish those who know themselves to have been found by a loving God.

Leon Morris: This section is of fundamental importance for an understanding of the Christian ideal of love. We all love our friends, but love of our enemies is quite another matter. But the followers of Jesus are not to take their standards from the communities in which they live. The God they serve is a loving God, and therefore they are to be loving people.

William Barclay: There is no other passage of the New Testament which contains such a concentrated expression of the Christian ethic of personal relations. To the ordinary person, this passage describes essential Christianity in action, and even the person who never darkens the door of the church knows that Jesus said this, and very often condemns the professing Christian for falling so far short of its demands.

David Doriani: Few teachings in Scripture are more memorable and more challenging than this: “Love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you” (Matt. 5:44). It is alien to our thought, our practice, and our nature. We are pleased with ourselves if we love our family and friends, though even that is a struggle at times.

I. (:43) TRADITIONAL TEACHING OF JEWISH RELIGIOUS LEADERS

“You have heard that it was said, ‘You shall love your neighbor, and hate your enemy.’”

E. Michael Green: And of course neighbour was to be taken in the broadest possible sense of ‘other person’, like the neighbour in the parable of the Good Samaritan. But that was too tough for many of the scribes. It was unrealistic to understand ‘neighbour’ so broadly. So they added yet another of their escape clauses: ‘and hate your enemy’. That command appears nowhere in the Old Testament. It is a concession to human frailty invented by the scribes. And it was emphatically underlined by the Essenes of Qumran, who enthusiastically awaited the final battle in which their enemies would be crushed. But Jesus will have none of it. It is not limited love, but unlimited love, love to the just and the unjust, to evil and good alike, that is the mark of the Great Lover. And it must not be sporadic, but a settled mark of our characters, just as the regular following of day by night is a mark of the settled character of God himself. That is the meaning of perfect, teleioi (48). Be like God in indiscriminating and undifferentiating love towards all and sundry. That is the mark of the Master. That is the mark of the disciple.

The word ‘love’ is significant. The ancient world knew about philia, friendship; it knew about erōs, sexual love; it knew about storgē, the love that binds families together; but agapē was something very different. That is why the word is practically unknown before Christ—the commodity itself was in such short supply. For agapē means a love that gives itself for the good of the recipient. It means love that springs from the nature of the donor rather than from the real or fancied worthiness of the recipient. Of course we cannot like our enemies. But we can love them, in this sense of agapē love. We can desire and work for their highest good. We can regard them as those for whom Christ came and died and who are therefore intensely valuable to him. At least, we can begin to move in that direction if we ourselves have been magnetized by the love of the God who treats us like that. And it is nothing less than that for which Jesus looks in his disciples. Like Father, like son and daughter.

Donald Hagner: Clearly, neither Jesus’ listeners nor Matthew’s readers would have been surprised by the added words, since the traditional interpretation had become regularly associated with the text. The “neighbor” meant fellow Jew; the “enemy” meant Gentile.

John Nolland: Two things are at once obvious.

- First, unless Matthew intends a rather limited understanding of ‘enemy’, this gloss is not true to Lv. 19:18, where the context speaks against hating, taking vengeance, and bearing a grudge — matters which arise when one perceives that another has behaved like an ‘enemy’.
- Second, the wording of Lv. 19:18 nonetheless opens itself to some kind of restricting gloss since it addresses the command to love (only) to one’s relationship with one’s neighbour.

J. Ligon Duncan: He teaches us that we must not illegitimately limit the extent of our neighbor love. That is, we must not come up with rationalizations that restrict God’s command to us to love our neighbor. The Pharisees were doing that. The Pharisees took a good law, you shall love your neighbor, and they appended an unbiblical truth ‘and hate your enemy.’ You see that law of neighbor love, some of which we heard in Leviticus 19, is a law that demands practical love of neighbor, not just sentiment towards neighbor, but a practical helping of neighbor. Not slandering your neighbor’s name, but looking for your neighbor’s interests in his estates, in his person, in his vocation, in his good name and reputation. In all these practical ways, Leviticus and other commands of Moses demand that we love our neighbor. But nowhere do those passages command that we hate our enemy. And the Pharisees, you see, were saying “Well yes, we must love our neighbor, but you have to understand who your neighbor is.” Your neighbor is the person who has a claim on your love. Your neighbor well may be a relative. Your neighbor may be a fellow citizen of Israel, but there are some who do not deserve that kind of treatment or love, they were teaching.

The Pharisees, you see, misunderstood the meaning of neighbor. They misinterpreted the Law of God in its teaching on our neighbor. They had a worldly understanding of who our neighbor is. They restricted the definition of neighbor. Jesus addresses this, of course, in the parable of the Good Samaritan, but He does it here as well. The Pharisees had defined “neighbor” as a person who had a claim on your love, a person who deserved to be treated lovingly by you, and so they had redefined neighbor.

II. (:44-47) TRANSCENDENT TEACHING OF JESUS

“But I say to you,”

A. (:44-45) Love Your Enemies to Demonstrate You Are Genuinely Sons of God

1. (:44) The Radical Command

a. Love Your Enemies

“love your enemies,”

Grant Osborne: Two changes are important:

- (1) from the singular “enemy” to the plural “enemies,” stressing the universal nature of the command, and
- (2) the use of the present imperative, stressing the ongoing need of such an attitude.

This was revolutionary, and there is no evidence for such a command in Jewish literature.

Leviticus 19:33–34 commanded love for the resident alien, and Prov 25:21 speaks of acts of kindness for one’s enemy (cf. also Exod 23:4–5; Job 31:29–30; Prov 17:5, 24:17), but nowhere is love commanded for one’s enemy.

David Doriani: When Jesus said “Love your enemies,” most Jews would have thought first of the Romans, who occupied and defiled their land. What good could ever come from loving the Romans? Would the Romans love the Jews back? No, but “Jesus does not promise that love will turn enemies into friends.” Our love of enemies is independent of the person loved, independent of their rank or attractiveness. None of that matters. Results are immaterial.

Kent Hughes: Jesus' call to love one's enemies is supremely radical! "To return evil for good is devilish; to return good for good is human; to return good for evil is divine." That is true! To love an enemy is divine, and to pray for an enemy - a persecutor - is supremely divine! The fact that the text mentions "enemies" (plural) suggests that Jesus means personal enemies who are presently doing us harm. This is amazing teaching. To the man on the street, the mere idea of loving his enemies is absurd and offensive and beyond his capability. It offends his natural sense of right and wrong. To those under the Old Testament Law, the idea of loving one's enemies was completely contrary to their perception of God's Law, which they thought required rejection and hatred of enemies - a limited love. Jesus commanded a love without limits, that loves everyone regardless of what they say or do to us. This is revolutionary, whatever one's culture. In fact, if practiced by you and me, it would change our entire community.

b. Pray for Those Who Persecute You

“and pray for those who persecute you”

Leon Morris: He proceeds to an example of what he means with the injunction to pray for (or “on behalf of”) the persecutors. The verb “to persecute” (see on v. 10) can indicate persecution in any form, but here it is persecution specifically directed at Jesus’ followers (you). It may be possible to regard in a detached way persecution of others; it is not so easy when one is the object of the persecution. “Persecutors are the most difficult enemies to love” (Nixon). But it is precisely in a situation of persecution that Jesus’ followers are to show their love by praying for those who are harming them.

David Doriani: One cannot genuinely pray for someone without hoping for their good. When we pray for an enemy, animosity dwindles and compassion increases. Love is an act of a whole person reaching out to whole persons. God's love is the source and the model for love of enemies. Augustine said that God's love is incomprehensible and unchangeable in that he began to love us before we were reconciled to him through the blood of his Son. Our sin made us his enemies. Yet because our iniquity had not entirely consumed his handiwork, "He knew . . . how . . . to hate what we had done, and to love what he had done [in creating us]." Therefore, to love our enemies is to live like a child of God.

2. (:45) The Reason

a. Prove Your Family Identity

"in order that you may be sons of your Father who is in heaven;"

Donald Hagner: To participate in the kingdom relates the disciple to the Father in a unique way, and that unique relationship involves doing his will. This is also the point of v 48. The children of the kingdom are called to reflect the character of their heavenly Father (cf. Eph 5:1), who has brought to them the kingdom. The early Church picks up the emphasis of this teaching in such passages as Rom 12:14; 1 Cor 4:12; 1 Pet 3:9. One important foundation for the unheard-of command to love one's enemies is the very fact that God gives his good gifts of sunshine and rain both to good and to bad. The different words for "good" (ἀγαθούς, "good," and δικαίους, "just") and "bad" (πονηρούς, "evil," and ἀδίκους, "unjust") represent stylistic variation, as does the chiasmic order of the nouns. The "bad" are, from the context, analogous to the "enemies" of God. To love one's enemies is, then, to treat them as God treats those who have rebelled against him. Thus the children, the disciples, should imitate their heavenly Father.

Leon Morris: We will see that to be God's children means to love. Love and membership in God's family go together. Sons here are members of the heavenly family. There is a sense in which those members are infinitely diverse and another sense in that they are all characterized by dependence on and likeness to the Father; in this sense sons are "those who are bound to a personality by close, non-material ties; it is this personality that has promoted the relationship and given it its character" (BAGD, 1.c.γ). The conduct Jesus has enjoined in the previous verse is the conduct that characterizes those in close relationship with the heavenly Father. God loves like that, and his sons come to love in some measure like that, too.

b. Pattern Your Conduct after the Goodness of God

"for He causes His sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sends rain on the righteous and the unrighteous."

Grant Osborne: The sunshine and rain are both natural blessings that form the basis of plant growth and therefore of life as a whole. God does not curse the wicked with all bad things and bless the good with all good things. Even those who reject God are made in his image and loved by him, so his people must reflect his goodness even toward their persecutors.

B. (:46-47) Love Your Enemies to Demonstrate that Your Heart Has Been Transformed by God's Grace

1. (:46) Your Righteousness Must Exceed that of the Despised Tax-Gatherers

*"For if you love those who love you, what reward have you?
Do not even the tax-gatherers do the same?"*

Leon Morris: Tax collectors have never been popular in any culture, but in first-century Palestine they were especially unpopular. Partly this was because they gathered taxes for the Romans, and anything that helped the conquerors was anathema to the subject Jews. Partly also it was because they tended to be extortionate. In the eyes of Jesus' audience there were no more wicked people than tax collectors as a class. If even they would respond to love with love, then anyone would. They are the last people one would expect to show love, but they do — to their own kind. This example shows that there is nothing wonderful about this kind of love.

J. Ligon Duncan: You see my friends, if you want to measure whether you've gone beyond niceness to real Christian love, look at your hearts and ask yourselves: "How do I love those who have hurt me? How do I love those who hate me? How do I love those who have no claim on my love?" Then, you will see how far you have to go in love. Thank God, the Lord Jesus does not leave us to our own devices, for this love cannot be created by human effort. We must run back to Him. We must get more love to Christ if we are to grow in this kind of love to one another. You see, there is no humanly generated love that can enable you to love people in this sort of a self-sacrificial way. Only a living and loving relationship with the heavenly Father, an assurance that He has given you everything that you need in Christ, an assurance that all blessing awaits in glory, can enable you to love those will take advantage of you. And that's precisely what Christ is calling you to.

2. (:47) Your Righteousness Must Exceed that of Unsaved Gentiles

*"And if you greet your brothers only, what do you do more than others?
Do not even the Gentiles do the same?"*

E. Michael Green: There's a sting in the tail of this marvellous passage. For it is hard to miss the scorn in the designations tax collectors and pagans (46–47). Commentators often suggest that Matthew has failed to love the outsider with God's all-embracing love, and reverts here to prejudiced descriptions inherited from his past. That is to assume Matthew made the sentences up. But if they came from the lips of Jesus, a very different scenario emerges. He hoists the hearers with their own petard. For almost all of them would despise the hated tax collectors and the Gentile pagans. And with gentle irony Jesus shows them that their loveless attitude is identical with that of the very people they despise. Love is a tender plant, and those who live in glass houses should not throw stones.

David Doriani: Many churches seem cold and unwelcoming to visitors, but almost every church thinks it is friendly. Why? Because the members are friendly with their friends. They greet everyone who greets them. This is not noteworthy. Genuine love keeps an eye open for the quiet, the awkward, and the friendless, and seeks them out.

C. S. Lewis: The rule for all of us is perfectly simple. Do not waste your time bothering whether you 'love' your neighbour; act as if you did. As soon as we do this we find one of the great secrets. When you are behaving as if you loved someone, you will presently come to love him. If you injure someone you dislike, you will find yourself disliking him more. If you do him a good turn, you will find yourself disliking him less. ... The difference between a Christian and a worldly man is not that the worldly man has only affections or 'likings' and the Christian has only 'charity.' The worldly man treats certain people kindly because he 'likes' them; the Christian, trying to treat every one kindly, finds himself liking more and more people as he goes on—including people he could not even have imagined himself liking at the beginning.

(:48) SUMMARY OF KINGDOM RIGHTEOUSNESS = LIVE LIKE YOUR HEAVENLY FATHER INTENDS FOR YOU TO LIVE

“Therefore you are to be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect.”

D. A. Carson: Some interpret this verse as the conclusion of the last antithesis (vv.43–47; e.g., Allen, Hendriksen). In that case the perfection advocated is perfection in love. But “perfection” has far broader associations, and it is better to understand v.48 as the conclusion to the antitheses.

Donald Hagner: There is a sense, however, in which this verse also serves as the logical conclusion to all the preceding antitheses. The righteousness of the kingdom, which altogether exceeds that of the Pharisees, involves a call to be like the Father.

R. T. France: The disciple’s life-style is to be different from other people’s because it draws its inspiration not from the norms of society but from the character of God. Even the God-given law had been accommodated to a practical ethical code with which Jewish society had come to feel comfortable, but Jesus is demanding a different approach, not via laws read as simply rules of conduct but rather by looking behind those laws to the mind and character of God himself. Whereas any definable set of rules could, in principle, be fully kept, the demand of the kingdom of heaven has no such limit—or rather its limit is perfection, the perfection of God himself.

Leon Morris: That their standard is to be the highest possible (“no limit to your goodness,” REB) is shown by the words that follow: even as your heavenly Father is perfect. When Matthew uses the adjective heavenly it always refers to God (he has the word 7 times out of its 9 New Testament occurrences). In this he contrasts with Luke, who uses it of the heavenly host (Luke 2:13) and of the heavenly vision (Acts 26:19). Matthew thus employs the term to stress the difference between God and others, just as Father brings out his nearness and his love. To set this kind of perfection before his followers means that Jesus saw them as always having something for which to strive. No matter how far along the path of Christian service we are, there is still something to aim for. There is a wholeheartedness about being Christian; all that we have and all that we are must be taken up into the service of the Father.

Craig Blomberg: Jesus is not frustrating his hearers with an unachievable ideal but challenging them to grow in obedience to God’s will—to become more like him. J. Walvoord rightly observes, “While sinless perfection is impossible, godliness, in its biblical concept, is attainable.” But such godliness cannot be comprehensively formulated in a set of rules; the ethics of the sermon are suggestive, not exhaustive.

William Barclay: The Greek word for perfect is teleios. This word is often used in Greek in a very special way. It has nothing to do with what we might call abstract, philosophical, metaphysical perfection. A victim which is fit for a sacrifice to God, that is a victim which is without blemish, is teleios. A man who has reached his full-grown stature is teleios as distinct from a half-grown youth. A student who has reached a mature knowledge of a subject is teleios as opposed to a learner who is just beginning, and who as yet has no grasp of things.

To put it in another way, the Greek idea of perfection is functional. A thing is perfect if it fully realizes the purpose for which it was planned, designed and made. In point of fact, that meaning is involved in the derivation of the word. Teleios is the adjective formed from the noun telos. Telos means an end, a purpose, an aim, a goal. A thing is teleios if it achieves the purpose for which it is planned; human beings are perfect if they achieve the purpose for which they were created and sent into the world.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What prompted the Pharisees to define “neighbor” in such a way that they could excuse hating the Gentiles (and the Romans in particular)?
- 2) What examples do we see in Scriptures of people praying for those persecuting them?
- 3) How do you demonstrate this type of love as practical action towards your enemies?
- 4) How do our churches respond to the marginalized in society?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Donald Hagner: The final, climactic antithesis turns to the great love commandment of the OT. Jesus, interpreting the law in the light of the dawning kingdom, extends the application of that commandment so as to include even one’s enemies. The love he describes, of course, is not an emotion (pace Carson) but volitional acts for the benefit and well-being of others, even those we may dislike. In this love that knows no boundaries, the disciples are to reflect the generosity of God, who sends blessing upon both the righteous and the unrighteous and who has brought the kingdom to the unworthy. Through the coming of the kingdom, the disciples are thus called to be “perfect” as their Father is perfect. The righteousness of the kingdom can be satisfied by nothing less. And as the disciples live out this righteousness, they confirm their identity as “children of the heavenly Father.” This is an ethic that will startle those who experience it; it is an ethic that will inevitably shine like light in a dark place and cause the Father to be glorified (v 16). It should be added that the perfection in view here is a goal toward which disciples are called to strive, but not one they will fully achieve in this life. The Christian will thus always have occasion to pray for the forgiveness of sins, as Jesus taught his disciples to pray (6:12). The call to perfection is quite like the Pauline call for Christians to be what they are in Christ. Here it is a matter of being children of the Father.

William Barclay: There is agapē with its accompanying verb agapan. These words indicate unconquerable benevolence, invincible goodwill. (Agapē is the word which is used here.) If we regard people with agape, it means that no matter what they do to us, no matter how they treat us, no matter if they insult us or injure us or grieve us, we will never allow any bitterness against them to invade our hearts, but will regard them with that unconquerable benevolence and goodwill which will seek nothing but their highest good. From this, certain things emerge.

- (1) Jesus never asked us to love our enemies in the same way as we love our nearest and dearest. The very word is different; to love our enemies in the same way as we love our nearest and dearest would be neither possible nor right. This is a different kind of love.

(2) Wherein does the main difference lie? In the case of our nearest and dearest, we cannot help loving them; we speak of falling in love; it is something which comes to us quite unsought; it is something which is born of the emotions of the heart. But in the case of our enemies, love is not only something of the heart; it is also something of the will. It is not something which we cannot help; it is something which we have to will ourselves into doing. It is in fact a victory over that which comes instinctively to us by our very nature.

Agape does not mean a feeling of the heart, which we cannot help, and which comes unbidden and unsought; it means a determination of the mind, whereby we achieve this unconquerable goodwill even to those who hurt and injure us. Agape, someone has said, is the power to love those whom we do not like and who may not like us. In point of fact, we can only have agape when Jesus Christ enables us to conquer our natural tendency to anger and to bitterness, and to achieve this invincible goodwill to all people.

Charles Swindoll: To love only members of one's own family or tribe is natural —any wicked unbeliever does that (5:46-47). Jesus called His audience to a greater love, a love that was supernatural. Such a love requires a work of the Spirit in our hearts to transcend our normal human tendency to love only our own. Because of the transcendent nature of this agapē, Jesus said that those who love in such a way are like children of their heavenly Father (5:45) and are to be, in fact, "perfect," as He is (5:48). This doesn't refer to sinless perfection. One commentator explains the real significance of the word translated "perfect" this way: "The Greek word is teleios, a word which carries the meaning of culmination, of maturity, of achievement in function. . . . It is an active word, and, in context, means that our love must be all-inclusive as God's is all-inclusive."

David Doriani: The settled enemies of God must fall and shall fall. When their rebellion is implacable and irreversible, they are ripe for God's judgment, which is just and true (Rev. 16:5–7; 19:2). On judgment day, God's patience ends.

This is how we must understand the psalms and prophecies that approve of God's judgment. Believers hate violence and wickedness. Some people give themselves over to such sins, so they are properly called "the violent" or "the wicked." The Bible never commands us to hate individual enemies, but there is a place for righteous wrath toward God's settled enemies. On judgment day, we will rejoice at their downfall, for their end is inseparable from the victory of God and his saints. Thus, when we view the wicked as a class, from an eternal perspective, our love for them ceases.

In daily life, however, we have no right to adopt the eternal perspective. We cannot classify people. The man standing before us may be wicked, but we do not know whether he will repent or not. Remember the conversion of Paul. Once the archenemy of the church, he became its great apostle. Paul's salvation demonstrates God's "unlimited patience" (1 Tim. 1:16). Therefore, we should be patient with sinners too.

John Piper: Two Main Reasons Why We Should Love Our Enemies.

- One is that it reveals something of the way God is. God is merciful. "He makes his sun rise on the evil and on the good, and sends rain on the just and on the unjust" (Matthew 5:45). "He does not deal with us according to our sins, nor repay us according to our iniquities" (Psalm 103:10). "Be kind to one another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, as God in Christ forgave you” (Ephesians 4:32). So when Christians live this way, we show something of what God is like.

- The second reason is that the hearts of Christians are satisfied with God and are not driven by the craving for revenge or self-exaltation or money or earthly security. God has become our all-satisfying treasure and so we don’t treat our adversaries out of our own sense of need and insecurity, but out of our own fullness with the satisfying glory of God. Hebrews 10:34: “You joyfully accepted the plundering of your property [that is, without retaliation], since you knew that you yourselves had a better possession and an abiding one.” What takes away the compulsion of revenge is our deep confidence that this world is not our home, and that God is our utterly sure and all-satisfying reward.

So in both these reasons for loving our enemy we see the main thing: God is shown to be who he really is as a merciful God and as gloriously all-satisfying. The ultimate reason for being merciful is to glorify God—to make him look great in the eyes of man.

David Thompson: Jesus teaches the reasons for loving and praying for enemies. 5:45-48

Reason #1 - One demonstrates he is a true child of the Heavenly God. 5:45a

Now Jesus explains this point – God causes the sun to rise on the evil and the good. God sends rain on the righteous and the unrighteous. In our dispensation, loving another person does not make us a child of God, but it does give evidence that we are a child of God. God loved us while we were yet sinners.

Reason #2 - There is no reward for loving those who love you. 5:46

What will earn one rewards would be for one to do what is the ultimate good for one who didn’t love him.

Reason #3 - Even Gentiles greet their brothers. 5:47

Apparently the Jews were teaching that as long as they gave each other greetings, it was a demonstration they were right with God.

Reason #4 - This demonstrates that we are becoming completely godly in character. 5:48

Loving enemies and praying for enemies is very “godlike.” It shows we are maturing, we are growing, and we are blossoming. It shows we are righteous.

Matthew McCraw: Loving the Enemy

As a side-note, this should be a warning to us that we do not take a command of God and change it into something that we want it to be rather than what God really meant. We must be very careful so as not to distort the Word of God. That’s probably a sermon for another time.

So, the people had not only missed the full meaning of God’s command, they had actually distorted it.

Jesus sought to bring clarity to what God meant and show the fuller meaning and heart of the commandment. . .

Loving our enemies makes us more like God and more like God wants us to be.

Gregory Brown: Radical Love: The Ethic of Kingdom Citizens

1. Love must be demonstrated in acts of kindness.

2. Love must be demonstrated through prayer.

Are you demonstrating your repentance by your deeds? Are you examining yourself to see if Christ is in you? Are you making your calling and election sure? The primary way we do this is by our love. Radical love is a proof that Christ—the one who died for his enemies and prayed for them on the cross—is in us. This doesn't mean we won't fail at this. We will. But when we do, we should repent and come to Christ for grace to try again. If we are content to simply live a life of bitterness and unforgiveness towards those who have failed us, maybe we have never truly received the mercy of God (cf. Matt 5:7).

Does the way you respond to those who harm you confirm your citizenship? Remember Christ is teaching that if our righteousness doesn't surpass that of the Pharisees and teachers of the law, we will not enter the kingdom of heaven (Matt 5:20). The Pharisees and teachers of the law were jealous, vengeful, and unforgiving. Though religious, they cursed, lied about, and murdered our Lord. If our love is no different than theirs, we have never truly been saved, and therefore, we will not enter the kingdom of heaven.

What are characteristics of this radical love?

1. Radical Love Should Be Demonstrated to All People
2. Radical Love Should Be Demonstrated Specifically to Enemies
3. Radical Love Proves the Salvation of Disciples
4. Radical Love Will Be Rewarded by God
5. Radical Love Distinguishes Believers from the World

Scott Harris: Loving Your Neighbor

Jesus restores the meaning of the law in Matthew 5:44. Love your enemies and pray for those that persecute you. The context is the same as we examined last week. This is dealing with personal situations. This cannot be used to argue for pacifism. It is not talking about what occurs on a battlefield or between countries or when the law itself is broken. The enemies here are your personal enemies. This command brings the nature of righteousness to its second highest operating principle (the first being to love God) and demands a response that is humanly impossible. Men without Christ may go so far as to tolerate their enemies, but they cannot love them. . .

The characteristic demonstrated here is God's gracious impartiality. God gives what is good to both those that love Him and those that hate Him. He causes the sun to rise on everyone both good and evil. He causes the rain to fall on everyone both good and evil. One of the errors of the health, wealth, prosperity preachers is they fail to recognize this fact about God. He is impartially good to all and gives prosperity even to the wicked. This fact perplexed the writer of Psalms 73 until he considered the final end of the wicked and then he understood God's justice. Judgement will come, but God is gracious up to that point. We are to demonstrate this same attribute to our enemies. We are to love without partiality and to pray without partiality. We are to be good to both those who are our friends and those who are our enemies.

TEXT: Matthew 6:1-4

TITLE: PRACTICE RIGHTEOUSNESS THE RIGHT WAY FROM THE RIGHT MOTIVATION – EXAMPLE OF GIVING ALMS

BIG IDEA:

PRACTICING RIGHTEOUSNESS FOR PUBLIC ACCLAIM FORFEITS HEAVENLY REWARD – TRUE VS HYPOCRITICAL PIETY -- EXAMPLE OF GIVING ALMS

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: In one sense, this section, like the previous one, exemplifies the authoritative teaching of Jesus on matters of OT law, for the three things mentioned in these verses are three basic aspects of Jewish piety and summarize one's relationship with God. France suggests that 5:20–48 centers on a positive righteousness that exceeds that of the scribes and Pharisees while this section centers on the wrong kind of righteous conduct done to impress others rather than God. As with the antitheses, Jesus shows how the people of his day all too often understood these aspects, but he also tells how the people of the kingdom will perform them more deeply.

This is a very Jewish section and as such shows a situation in Jesus' day, not just Matthew's time. It demonstrates that our piety is part of our relationship with God and should never be done to impress others. Our motivation must always be God-oriented, never earth-centered (see also 6:19–21; Col 3:1–2). The section is composed of three admonitions (6:2–4, 5–6, 16–18), into which the Lord's Prayer is inserted. The parallelism between the three is striking: a "when you" clause followed by "not like the hypocrites" and a report of their actions, concluding with an amēn statement about "fully receiving their reward." Then comes a positive command to give/pray/fast "in secret" and a promise of true reward. . .

When the believer gives, it must never be out in the open to be seen (and admired) by others but always secretly as an act of worship to God. Giving is a private affair done entirely to please the Father. Both have their reward, but the former yields an earthly reward (applause) and only the latter has an eternal reward.

D. A. Carson: In each act the logical structure is the same:

- (1) a warning not to do the act to be praised by men,
- (2) a guarantee that those who ignore this warning will get what they want but no more,
- (3) instruction on how to perform the act of piety secretly, and
- (4) the assurance that the Father who sees in secret will reward openly

J. C. Ryle: Observe that our Lord takes it for granted that all who call themselves His disciples will give to the poor. He assumes as a matter of course that they will think it a solemn duty to give according to their means to relieve the needs of others. The only point He handles is the manner in which the duty should be done. This is a weighty lesson. It condemns the selfish stinginess of many in the matter of giving money. How many are rich towards themselves but poor towards God! How many never give a farthing to do good to the bodies and souls of men! And have such people any right to be called Christians in their present state of mind? It may be well doubted. A giving Savior should have giving disciples.

Charles Swindoll: Few things were more of a turnoff to Jesus than religion on parade. He reserved His severest criticism for religious hypocrites who liked to be seen showing off their piety in order to impress others. Jesus was a master at exposing what lay beneath the veneer of all that nonsense. And frequently He urged His followers to practice total honesty, authenticity, and simplicity.

Daniel Doriani: When we do something good, Jesus says, we can seek one of three goals: the praise of society, the praise we give ourselves, or the praise of the Father. Hypocrites seek glory from men. They love “praise from men more than praise from God” (John 12:43). But we can also do good so that we will feel good about ourselves, and not really for the sake of others.

E. Michael Green: Next, Jesus takes the three main areas of traditional religious devotion: prayer, fasting and almsgiving. He warns his hearers against the ostentatious devotion sometimes to be found in the religion of his day, as of ours; and equally against the mechanical formalism to be found in some pagan circles. No, sincere obedience to God’s word is the key to an authentic devotional life. Not playing to the gallery, but humbly living in the light of the Father’s will. Such is the attitude he can reward.

That simplicity, that lack of ostentation, applies to our giving (6:1–4). It goes without saying that disciples will be generous givers. But they will not make their donations in a way that will draw attention to themselves. They will not do it publicly or to gain respect. It will be quiet. It will meet real need. It will be offered in love and gratitude to the heavenly Father who has given us all we have.

David Thompson: The great theologian Augustine said the greatest enemy of true spiritual piety is the love of honor. All other vices produce evil works, but the love of honor does good works out of evil motives. G. Campbell Morgan once said, “Probably the vast majority of people are more influenced by what men will say, than by what God Almighty thinks.” It is clear from this passage that not only does God see everything we do under the auspices of good works, but He monitors the motives behind the good works. In this section, Jesus addresses all kinds of good things which may be done from evil motives.

WE WILL LOSE REWARDS IF WE PLAY ACT OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS FOR SHOW IN FRONT OF MEN.

It is possible to do the very things mentioned in this section with bad motives. Our rewards will not just be determined by righteous acts, but by the motives for the righteous acts.

(:1) OPENING THESIS STATEMENT

A. Warning: Don’t Seek Public Acclaim

“Beware of practicing your righteousness before men to be noticed by them;”

Grant Osborne: This introduces the theme of 6:1–18, true “righteousness” (cf. 5:20), and Jesus is establishing a strong antithesis between the earthly and the heavenly in achieving this righteousness. There is a geometric progression: the more you have an earthly perspective, the fewer your rewards in heaven. We have stated throughout that “righteousness” (δικαιοσύνη) must be understood as action, that is, right conduct in doing the will of God (cf. 3:15; 5:6, 10, 20; 6:33), so “righteous deeds” is the proper way to understand it here. The righteous deeds here are almsgiving, prayer, and fasting. The will of God is not to perform these pious acts in order to get attention.

Richard Gardner: This verse is expressed in the plural, as compared with the singular focus of the following examples. It is thus a general exhortation, which introduces 6:2–18 in much the same way as 5:20 introduced 5:21–48, and in each case the key term is dikaiosynē, “righteousness.” Here it is concerned not with personal or social ethics but with matters of religious observance, but it remains something to be “done.” The three examples of almsgiving, prayer and fasting are thus categorized as activities which God requires of his people. Jesus’ quarrel is not with the doing of them -- indeed he assumes that the disciple will do them— but with the manner and the motive. The manner to which he objects is “in front of other people,” i.e. publicly; the motive is “so that they will notice you,” i.e. aiming for human approval. Cf. 23:5–7 for a similar criticism of the scribes and Pharisees, using the same verb theaomai in 23:5.

B. Result: Forfeiture of Heavenly Reward

“otherwise you have no reward with your Father who is in heaven.”

Craig Blomberg: The principle uniting all three illustrations appears first. Verse 1 does not contradict 5:16 because the motives in the two passages are entirely different. That which is done solely or primarily for personal honor or gain may accomplish its objective (v. 2b), but God will grant no further reward.

I. (:2) FALSE PIETY IN GIVING ALMS

A. Warning against Seeking Public Acclaim in Giving Alms

“When therefore you give alms, do not sound a trumpet before you, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets, that they may be honored by men.”

David Thompson: In other words, don’t toot your own horn and broadcast the fact that you did something to help someone else.

So the question arises how do we keep our giving in secret? Let me suggest four ways:

- 1) We keep giving secret by not being proud of what we were able to give.
- 2) We keep giving secret by not broadcasting what we did give.
- 3) We keep giving secret by thanking God for what we are able to give.
- 4) We keep giving secret by not thinking that our rewards are determined solely by an invoice of our giving.

Grant Osborne: By the time of Jesus righteousness and almsgiving were virtually synonymous, and almsgiving was an important part of temple and synagogue services. Synagogues functioned as social agencies in the first century, providing relief for the poor who depended on contributions from people in the community. Therefore, it was natural that ostentation became connected with giving; it was a perfect way to be seen as particularly pious. . . it is probably best just to take the trumpet as a metaphor for drawing attention to one’s pious act of giving.

John Nolland: Luz denies rather strongly that a trumpet was actually blown at the giving of a major gift, taking the words as a metaphor of irony (so too, Gnilka; Gundry; Guelich, Sermon; France; Davies-Allison are somewhat less confident in their denial). It is still possible—despite the lack of solid evidence—that a trumpet was blown to draw attention to very large gifts (thus Schlatter; Bonnard; Hill), in order perhaps to encourage others to do similarly; on the other hand, perhaps the association was made because trumpets were blown at fasts (see Büchler), at a time when large gifts were given to avert disaster (see G. Friedrich, TDNT 7:87–88). Or perhaps the sound is that of coins being thrown into the six trumpet-shaped money chests placed in the temple specifically for the collection of alms (the “Shofar-chests” of m. Šeqal. 2:1; see Danby’s note [The Mishnah] on that text) in order to attract the attention of others (so McEleney). The point, in any case, is clear: the hypocrites did all they could to draw attention to their generosity.

Richard Gardner: Hypokritēs (the word originally meant a theatrical “actor”) is used by Matthew not only here in vv. 2, 5, 16 but also for a critic who does not criticize himself (7:5) and as a general term for those subject to ultimate judgment (24:51; in the LXX hypocritēs is used for the godless). Its main use, however, is for those with whom Jesus will be engaged in controversy in 15:7; 22:18, and six times in ch. 23. In several of these uses it probably carries the sense of insincerity, of consciously acting a part, which is close to what “hypocrite” means today. But in general, notably in 7:5; 15:7; 23:15, 23, 25, the focus is not so much on a conscious attempt to deceive as on a false perspective or sense of values which prevents the “hypocrites” from seeing things as God sees them; they are not so much deceivers as disastrously self-deceived (like the enthusiastic but misguided followers of 7:21–23). In this passage there is no necessary allegation of deceit as such—they presumably did give alms, pray and fast; the problem was that they wanted everyone to know it. Rather these religious show-offs are “actors” in that they aim to impress others, but at the same time their behavior demonstrates how far they are out of touch with God’s understanding of “righteousness.”

J. Ligon Duncan: Christ is here criticizing the two-faced spirituality. The fake spirituality of the Pharisees. He is saying that the religion of the Pharisees is not genuine, but it is theatrical religion. Their religious activities were done for the sake of impressing men, not done for the sake of glorifying God.

Christ is making it clear here that the only thing that matters in our religious performances, and the things that we do is what God thinks, it does not matter what others think. It only matters what God thinks. And that is important for us to remember. We need to ask ourselves in our giving, why are we giving? Are we giving to be recognized, or we giving because we think that it somehow puts God into our debt. Or, are we giving because of the love of God which has been implanted in our heart. Does our giving bear the marks of genuine Christianity? Does our giving bear the marks of true Christianity? Generosity. Is our giving generous? Or is it stingy? Is our giving grudging, or is it cheerful? Is our giving motivated by our love to God, and the love of God shed abroad in our heart, or is it motivated out of a desire to manipulate God? So that He is beholding to us. We need to ask those questions, and remember Jesus’ warning against hypocrisy.

B. Forfeiture of Heavenly Reward

“Truly I say to you, they have their reward in full.”

William Barclay: What Jesus is saying is this: “If you make charitable gifts to demonstrate your own generosity, you will get the admiration of the world – but that is all you will ever get. That is your payment in full.”

II. (:3-4) TRUE PIETY IN GIVING ALMS

A. (:3) Instruction on Giving Alms Secretly

do not let your left hand know what your right hand is doing”*

Charles Swindoll: Ideally, our giving is not only to be joyful and generous, but it’s also to be done with a right motive and attitude. The result will be giving in secret —not in ways that draw attention to ourselves, but in ways that keep our own attention on God. This is the direction Jesus moved when He described how we’re to give. When you give to those in need, you should not let your left hand know what your right hand is doing (Matt. 6:3). This idiom probably refers to a kind of “sleight of hand” move, similar to what a magician might do to make a coin or handkerchief disappear. Metaphorically, it means simply to give in secret, without drawing attention to yourself in any way. In fact, go out of your way to avoid attention.

Daniel Doriani: We must clarify Jesus’ teaching. He does not mean we must always hide our good deeds. He does not say that it is wrong to be seen praying. Rather, it is wrong to pray in order to be seen. He does not say it is wrong to be seen giving a gift to the needy. But it is wrong to give in order to be seen giving.

J. Ligon Duncan: You see, the Lord Jesus knows that there are many types of hypocrisy. And He addresses two of those types in this passage. The first kind is the person who gives because they want to be praised by other people. But the other kind is the one that your servant struggles with more frequently. And that is the tendency to self-praise, when we do what the Lord calls us to do. To sort of pat ourselves on the back and feel good about the fact that we have done some duty, and almost feel as if the Lord owes us something for having been faithful in our giving. It is possible to gain all ones reward by self-praise, just like it is to gain all of ones rewards by the praise of others. And the Lord Jesus is saying, seek the favor of God. Seek the reward of God. Seek the pleasure of God, not your own pleasure and not the opinions of others as you give.

B. (:4) Assurance of Heavenly Reward

*“that your alms may be in secret;
and your Father who sees in secret will repay you.”*

John Nolland: Only deeds done for God’s glory will receive an eschatological reward. This stress is in keeping with the emphasis on the inner obedience to God’s commandments, which we encountered in chap. 5. God is concerned with the heart, with the motivation behind a person’s deeds, as much as with the external deeds themselves. The application of the passage is clear and timeless in its bearing upon Christians.

John MacArthur: Let me tell you something, folks. You do it and forget it, and God will remember it and reward it. You do it and remember it and God will forget it and there will be no reward. Take your choice. You want it here and now or you want it forever. You want the blessing of God or the applause of men? Don’t keep mental books on your giving.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What types of Christian fund raising and giving violate the principle advocated in this passage?
- 2) To what extent is our Christian service motivated by the desire for self praise – wanting to feel good about ourselves and pat ourselves on the back for a job well done?
- 3) How can we examine the manner and motives of our Christian giving?
- 4) To what extent is the prospect of eschatological reward a legitimate motivation for Christian piety and service?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Grant Osborne: Giving is to be an act of worship and compassionate concern, not a statement of worth. The concept of reward is an important theme in the Sermon on the Mount (see also 19:29). The principle is that God will reward us on the basis of our spiritual priorities and deeds. If we live entirely for him and surrender earthly attachments and rewards, our reward will be heavenly and eternal.

D. A. Carson: There are different kinds of hypocrisy.

- In one the hypocrite feigns goodness but is actually evil and knows he is being deceptive (e.g., 22:15–18).
- In another the hypocrite is carried away by his own acting and deceives himself. Such pious hypocrites (as in 7:1–5), though unaware of their own deceit, do not fool most onlookers, and this may be the meaning here.
- A third kind of hypocrite deceives himself into thinking he is acting for the best interests of God and man and also deceives onlookers. The needy are unlikely to complain when they receive large gifts, and their gratitude may flatter and thus bolster the giver's self-delusion (cf. D. A. Spieler, "Hypocrisy: An Exploration of a Third Type," AUSS 13 [1975]: 273–79).

Perhaps it is best to identify the hypocrisy in v.2 with this third type.

Warren Wiersbe: Our sinful nature is so subtle that it can defile even a good thing like sharing with the poor. If our motive is to get the praise of men, then like the Pharisees, we will call attention to what we are doing. But if our motive is to serve God in love and please Him, then we will give our gifts without calling attention to them. As a result, we will grow spiritually; God will be glorified; and others will be helped. But if we give with the wrong motive, we rob ourselves of blessing and reward and rob God of glory, even though the money we share might help a needy person.

Does this mean that it is wrong to give openly? Must all giving be anonymous? Not necessarily, for everyone in the early church knew that Barnabas had given the income from the sale of his land (Acts 4:34–37). When the church members laid their money at the apostles' feet, it was not done in secret. The difference, of course, was in the motive and manner in which it was done. A contrast is Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5:1–11), who tried to use their gift to make people think they were more spiritual than they really were.

William Barclay: When we study the opening verses of Matthew 6, we are immediately confronted with one most important question -- what is the place of the reward motive in the Christian life? Three times in this section, Jesus speaks of God rewarding those who have given to him the kind of service which he desires (Matthew 6:4, 6, 18). This question is so important that we will do well to pause to examine it before we go on to study the chapter in detail.

It is very often stated that the reward motive has no place whatsoever in the Christian life. It is held that we must be good for the sake of being good, that virtue is its own reward, and that the whole conception of reward must be banished from the Christian life. . .

Nor is this an isolated instance of the idea of reward in the teaching of Jesus. He says of those who loyally bear persecution, who suffer insult without bitterness, that their reward will be great in heaven (Matthew 5:12). He says that those who give to one of these little ones a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple will not lose their reward (Matthew 10:42). At least part of the teaching of the parable of the talents is that faithful service will receive its reward (Matthew 25:14–30). In the parable of the last judgment, the plain teaching is that there is reward and punishment in accordance with our reaction to the needs of others (Matthew 25:31–46). It is abundantly clear that Jesus did not hesitate to speak in terms of rewards and punishments. And it may well be that we ought to be careful that we do not try to be more spiritual than Jesus was in our thinking about this matter of reward.

S. Lewis Johnson: Now, I mentioned the doctrine of Christian rewards. What are Christian rewards? Well, I wish I could tell you, because I'm interested in knowing what rewards are. But unfortunately, because we are sinful beings and because we live in time, because all of us are the children of Adam, even though redeemed, we are unable to understand the true nature of Christian rewards, just as we cannot understand the true character of heaven. We know there is a heaven. We know there is a reward, and there are rewards, but we do not know the precise nature of them. We do not know our inheritance, for example, and in all the references to our inheritances in Scripture, we know, of course, that they are not material things such as things down here upon the earth. We know certain things about them only in the sense that they are not like things down here on the earth.

For example, we are told with reference to our inheritance that it is incorruptible, undefiled, and it does not fade away. Now, that does not tell us what it is. It tells us what these things are not. They are not things like things down here upon the earth. So we can conclude, I think, that Christian rewards exist, but the precise character of them remains hidden from us, because we do not have the capacity at the present time to understand what they would be.

Why are they necessary? Well, if there is no goal in life that provides a gain, then the action that we do is in futility and meaningless. If what we do is not good for something, it's good for nothing. And for that reason, there must be Christian reward. Absence of rewards and absence of punishment permits injustice to have the last word. What's the good of being good, someone has said, if there's no such thing as eternal punishment? And so the natural product of the life that pleases God in its consummation is Christian reward, just as the natural product of two people who come to know each other then come to love each, the natural product is—as I mentioned several Sundays ago—Christian marriage.

And so, Christian rewards are the activity in its consummation, and they are the natural thing which Christians should expect. We do labor with the incentive of Christian reward.

Daniel Doriani: Some object that Jesus is contradicting himself, for he also said, “Let your light shine before men, that they may see your good deeds and praise your Father in heaven” (Matt. 5:16). How then can he prohibit the display of righteousness in our passage? John Stott replies that Jesus is speaking about different things:

It is our human cowardice which made him say “Let your light shine before men,” and our human vanity which made him tell us to beware of practicing our piety before men. A. B. Bruce sums it up well when he writes that we are to “show when tempted to hide” and “hide when tempted to show.” Our good works must be public so that our light shines; our religious devotions must be secret lest we boast about them.

The goal both times is the same, that the glory go to God. Our good works are public, so that God may be praised for transforming his people. Our religious acts must be private, so that the glory goes to God and not to ourselves.

TEXT: Matthew 6:5-6

TITLE: PRACTICE RIGHTEOUSNESS THE RIGHT WAY FROM THE RIGHT MOTIVATION – EXAMPLE OF PRAYING

BIG IDEA:

PRACTICING RIGHTEOUSNESS FOR PUBLIC ACCLAIM FORFEITS HEAVENLY REWARD – TRUE VS HYPOCRITICAL PIETY -- EXAMPLE OF PRAYING

INTRODUCTION:

Donald Hagner: The same point is being made about praying as was made about almsgiving. Prayer (even if offered in the context of public worship or a prayer gathering) is to be directed to God in secret and not to be made a public spectacle to display the “righteousness” of the one who prays. A true reward for prayer will come only when prayer is God oriented, genuine, and not for display—only when prayer is directed to God and not to others.

Charles Swindoll: They are not to pray “like the hypocrites” (6:5), who loved to perform their prayers in public places where they couldn’t be missed. They wanted more than to be observed; they wanted to be applauded. And they didn’t want simply to inform onlookers; they wanted to impress them. Hypocrites don’t love God or love to pray; they love to be seen. In getting what they’re seeking —public approval—they get their reward. Today, we see people praying in the end zone after scoring a touchdown, on a busy street corner for pedestrians to see, or loudly at a restaurant so all the “heathen” customers around them can see that they’re religious. Our prayers should not be on display.

John Nolland: The challenge is to take the purity of motivation which by definition must characterize totally private engagement with God out into the complexities of normal life where others see what we do.

Walter Wilson: Wherever a potential audience is at hand, it seems, the hypocrites will ensure that their prayers are seen and heard, thereby exhibiting the sort of false piety about which Jesus laments in 15:8–9: “This people honors me with their lips, but their heart is far from me; in vain do they worship me” (cf. Isa 29:13).

J. Ligon Duncan: I want you to note here that Christ is not condemning all public prayer. The Lord Jesus Himself prayed in public. He prayed in semi-private settings, as well as public settings. And we are given records in the Scriptures of the prayers of the saints of both the Old and the New Testaments. The Lord Jesus is not saying to His disciples, be at pains, never to pray in public. He is not saying, never ever pray over your meal when you are in a public place. He is not saying, don’t stand up and pray at Prayer Meeting, and He is certainly not saying, never have a prayer in your worship services. That is not His point. His point is that all prayer ought to be with a view to God as its audience, not as man. And we ought to look for God’s answer and His approval, not the approval of men. All of our prayer must be done in humility and with a view to God alone.

I. (:5) FALSE PIETY IN PRAYING

A. Warning against Seeking Public Acclaim in Praying

“And when you pray, you are not to be as the hypocrites; for they love to stand and pray in the synagogues and on the street corners, in order to be seen by men.”

Robert Gundry: Along with the synagogues, the intersections of wide streets provide a maximum number of admiring human auditors.

R. T. France: Devout Jews prayed three times a day (Dan 6:10), not necessarily at fixed times (m. Ber. 1:1–2; 4:1), though the ninth hour (3 p.m.) seems to have been normal (Acts 3:1; 10:30). Standing was the normal Jewish attitude for prayer (cf. Mark 11:25; Luke 18:11, 13), though sometimes people knelt (2 Chron 6:13; Dan 6:10; Luke 22:41) or even, in special circumstances, prostrated themselves (Num 16:22; Matt 26:39).

William Hendriksen: The reference here is to prayer in general, including thanksgiving, praise, adoration, confession of sin, personal petition, intercession for the needs of others, etc.

B. Forfeiture of Heavenly Reward

“Truly I say to you, they have their reward in full.”

II. (:6) TRUE PIETY IN PRAYING

A. Instruction on Praying in Secret

“But you, when you pray, go into your inner room, and when you have shut your door, pray to your Father who is in secret,”

Robert Gundry: Private prayer ought to be secret so as to avoid being corrupted by the desire for public admiration.

Donald Hagner: refers to an inner room of a house (cf. Matt 24:26, the only other Matthean occurrence), sometimes secret or hidden (cf. Luke 12:3, “private room,” RSV “behind closed doors,” NRSV and often used as a storeroom (cf. Luke 12:24). It would be a room that allowed privacy; the reference to shutting the door adds emphasis to this aspect.

Grant Osborne: This of course does not disparage corporate prayer, but even that should be private in the sense of a time between God and his community. The major point is the complete absence of any desire to impress others. As in 6:4, 18 the reward then will come from God and be both earthly blessing and heavenly, eternal joy.

William Hendriksen: The idea is not that there must be a separate prayer room. . . . The main emphasis, however, is not even on the place of prayer but on the attitude of mind and heart. Not the secrecy is the real underlying thought but the sincerity. The reason for mentioning the secret place is that the sincere and humble worshiper, one who is not interested in making a public display for the sake of enhancing his prestige, will find the secluded nook or den to be most appropriate for his devotions. It is there that he can shut out the world and be alone with his God.

B. Assurance of Heavenly Reward

Richard Gardner: The point of this vivid metaphor is not that we should confine our praying to dark, private places, but that we should pray with the sole intent of communion with God, whose presence is hardly a public phenomenon. Only then can we receive the true reward of prayer.

Daniel Doriani: It is better to “go into your room, close the door and pray to your Father, who is unseen,” for prayer is essentially private (6:6). Public prayer has all the distractions of a public situation: limits on time, the effects of an audience, and more. In private prayer, we can ask questions, groan, or pause and admit our confusion. A secluded place is best for that. Hypocrites pray with at most one eye on God and at least one eye on their reputation. But if we attend to God in prayer, he gives us his ear: “Then your Father, who sees what is done in secret, will reward you” (6:6).

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How self-conscious are you when praying in public?
- 2) How does this passage speak to organizations and groups that normally give no place to God or to spiritual things, but then make a big deal about some special day of prayer?
- 3) What are some ways that you might pray differently in public than in private?
- 4) What type of repayment or reward do you think is referenced here for sincere prayer that is focused on bringing glory to God?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

William Barclay: No nation ever had a higher ideal of prayer than the Jews had; and no religion ever ranked prayer higher in the scale of priorities than the Jews did. ‘Great is prayer,’ said the Rabbis, ‘greater than all good works.’ One of the loveliest things that was ever said about family worship is the Rabbinic saying: ‘He who prays within his house surrounds it with a wall that is stronger than iron.’ The only regret of the Rabbis was that it was not possible to pray all day long.

But certain faults had crept into the Jewish habits of prayer. It is to be noted that these faults are by no means peculiar to Jewish ideas of prayer; they can and do occur anywhere. And it is to be noted that they could only occur in a community where prayer was taken with the greatest seriousness. They are not the faults of neglect; they are the faults of misguided devotion.

- (1) Prayer tended to become formalized. There were two things the daily use of which was prescribed for every Jew.

The first was the Shema, which consists of three short passages of Scripture – Deuteronomy 6:4–9, 11:13–21; Numbers 15:37–41. Shema is the imperative of the Hebrew word for to hear, and the Shema takes its name from the verse which was the essence and centre of the whole matter: ‘Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord.’

The full Shema had to be recited by every Jew every morning and every evening. It had to be said as early as possible. It had to be said as soon as the light was strong enough to distinguish between blue and white, or, as Rabbi Eliezer said, between blue and green. In any event, it had to be said before the third hour, that is, 9 am; and in the evening it had to be said before 9 pm. If the last possible moment for the saying of the Shema had come, no matter where a man found himself, at home, in the street, at work or in the synagogue, he must stop and say it. . .

The second thing which every Jew had to repeat daily was called the Shemoneh ‘esreh, which means the Eighteen. It consisted of eighteen prayers, and was, and still is, an essential part of the synagogue service. In time the prayers became nineteen, but the old name remains. Most of these prayers are quite short, and nearly all of them are very lovely. . .

(2) Further, the Jewish liturgy supplied stated prayers for all occasions. There was hardly an event or a sign in life which had not its stated formula of prayer. . .

(3) Still further, devout Jews prayed at regular times, always in the morning and the evening, and sometimes also at noon. Wherever they found themselves, they were bound to pray. Clearly, they might be genuinely remembering God, or they might be carrying out a habitual formality. . .

(4) There was a tendency to connect prayer with certain places, and especially with the synagogue. . .

(5) There was among the Jews an undoubted tendency towards long prayers. . .

(6) There were certain other forms of repetition, which the Jews, like all people of the middle east, were apt to use and to overuse. People had a habit of hypnotizing themselves by the endless repetition of one phrase or even of one word. . .

(7) The final fault which Jesus found with certain of the Jews was that they prayed in order to be seen. The Jewish system of prayer made ostentation very easy. Jews prayed standing, with hands stretched out, palms upwards, and with heads bowed.

Grant Osborne: Exegetical Outline

I. Problem of Ostentatious Prayer (6:5–6)

- A. Prohibition—don’t desire to be seen by men (no reward) (v. 5)
- B. Positive command—pray privately to the Father (reward) (v. 6)

II. Problem of Long-Winded Praying (6:7–8)

- A. Don’t babble—only think they’ll be heard (v. 7)
- B. Don’t pray like this—your Father knows your needs (v. 8)

III. The Model Prayer (6:9–13)

- A. Introduction—worship (v. 9a)

- B. The thou-petitions (vv. 9b–10)
- C. The we-petitions (vv. 11–13)

IV. Addendum (6:14–15)

- A. Forgive and be forgiven (v. 14)
- B. Don't forgive and be condemned (v. 15)

Bob Deffinbaugh: Jesus develops two basic kinds of prayer. The first is “showcase prayer” by which the person praying actually draws attention to himself. He wants to be known as spiritual and holy. His religion gives him status, and by public prayer, he maintains and feeds it. The second kind of prayer is “relational prayer.” This is prayer that seeks time with the Father. Jesus, for teaching purposes, draws a distinct line between the two, but we must acknowledge that most people will fall somewhere between the two extremes. It is also important to understand that no one can read the mind and intentions of another heart. What might seem to be the height of arrogance may only reflect upbringing. Or gentle, quiet prayers may come from one who has no private prayer life at all. Jesus’ instructions are for us to know and personally apply His words and to let the Holy Spirit guide and train our hearts in these matters.

There are, however, some warning signs to which we might want to pay attention.

- Do I have an “I am speaking to God” voice? This may be a matter of upbringing. Nevertheless, none is needed, and such a change in voice can draw attention to the one praying—unless one is in an environment that expects it, in which case not changing the voice can draw attention.
- Elegant words and lots of them. This may be a matter of gifting and natural oratory, but again none are needed.
- Personal agenda. It’s hard to excuse this one. You pray according to what you want done and what others need to do to help it along.
- Gossip. “Please God. Help Jane resist the temptation to keep seeing that guy.” Such public prayers are only fruitful if Jane is there and has asked for intercession on that subject.
- Public prayer of any kind without a private prayer life. It is a given that if you are not speaking to the Father when you are alone, there is no good speaking to Him publicly.

So Jesus advises us to go into our rooms and shut the door. This is the “normal” opposite of standing on a street corner. If He had used a phrase like “pray in private” or “pray alone,” all kinds of extreme ideas may have developed. How private do you need to be? Must we become hermits or monks to have a prayer life? Jesus simply meant that there are places and ways to pray that are between the Father and us. By entering such places, we demonstrate that we “believe that He exists and rewards those who seek Him” (Hebrews 11:6).

Scott Harris: The Proper Purpose of Prayer

The hypocritical Jewish religious leaders feigned or pretended to be something they were not. That is what a hypocrite is – someone who acts out a part that is not true in reality. They gave the appearance that they were close to God, but in reality they did not really care what God thought of them. What was important to them was what the people thought.

In a warning to His disciples about the Scribes' hypocritical piety, Jesus said this of them in Luke 20:46-47, "Beware of the Scribes, who like to walk around in long robes, and love respectful greetings in the market places, and chief seats in the synagogues, and places of honor at banquets, who devour widows' houses, and for appearance's sake offer long prayers; these will receive greater condemnation."

The Scribes and Pharisees wanted the people to think they were pious and close to God, so they made it their practice to pray in such a way as to be seen by men. They went into the synagogues and made a show out of their prayers. They would stand before all the people, lifting up their hands and speaking loudly. In the streets, they would stop on the corners and do the same thing, calling attention to themselves and their supposed piety. Jesus says here that their prayers went only as far as the sound of their voice. They did not reach God because they were not meant for God.

John MacArthur: But the worst fault – and the final one to mention and then to look at the text – is that they prayed to be seen by men, not heard by God. That's the – that's the major fault. Believe me, if there is pride in the human heart their system of prayer would really feed it. That kind of a system would feed spiritual pride so readily. Look at verse 5. It says in verse 5, they loved to pray. Now at first glance that sounds so wonderful, "for they loved to pray."

But the question is why did they love to pray? Did they love to pray because they loved God? Did they love to pray because it ushered them into the communion of His blessed presence? Why do they love to pray? They didn't love to pray for any good reason. They loved to pray to be seen by men. And we talked about the word "see," didn't we, back in the last message we gave you? And we said it's the verb theaomai from which we get theatrical or theater. They wanted to be on the show. They wanted to be on the stage. Hypokritēs originally meant an actor. They were an actor in a theater. They were putting on something for everybody to see how holy they were.

Now listen. That was the wrong motive. And, beloved, that's what Jesus wants to deal with here, the motive of our prayers. We may never unscramble all the mystery of prayer, but we can certainly deal with the issue of the motive as the Lord does here. Our prayers are not to be offered to men, but to God. Do you ever pray a prayer and while you're praying in some group, you're saying in your mind, "Boy, I bet they thought that was a good phrase?"

TEXT: Matthew 6:7-15

TITLE: THE MODEL PRAYER AS TAUGHT BY JESUS

BIG IDEA:

OUR PRAYERS SHOULD NOT TRY TO MANIPULATE GOD BUT SHOULD EXPRESS OUR COMPLETE DEPENDENCE IN WORSHIP AND PETITION FOR NEEDS AFTER THE PATTERN INSTRUCTED BY JESUS

INTRODUCTION:

R. T. France: The “digression” on prayer which breaks into the tripartite unit of teaching on religious secrecy begins with a similar contrast between the wrong and the right ways of praying, in which “the Gentiles” take the place of the “hypocrites” in v. 5. The focus this time is not on prayer performed with a view to human approbation but on an attitude and practice in prayer which betrays a misunderstanding of how God expects to be approached by his people.

J. Ligon Duncan: This prayer before us is designed to be a pattern for our prayer. It is not ultimately meant to be a prayer which we simply repeat by rote. That would actually violate one of the principles which the Lord Himself has set down in this passage. It is a perfectly appropriate, of course, to repeat it back to God, and to serve as a rubric for our prayer and for our worship.

But each petition that Christ gives us in this prayer is ultimately suggestive of a whole range of appropriate matters for prayer. Jesus’ prayer focuses on the worship of the Father, and the kingdom of the Father, and the provision of the Father, and the grace of the Father, and the protection of the Father. And all of those categories provide you hundreds of ideas for how you can pray to the living God. Have you put to work these principles, the principles of this passage in your life of secret prayer.

Bethany Bible Church (Portland OR): In the midst of these words of warning concerning prayer - that we find this digression from Jesus' main topic of the dangers of hypocrisy. It seems that, for the moment, He sets aside the concern of hypocrisy before others in order to teach us some deeper truths about prayer. He shows us what our manner should be when we pray to His Father and, as it were, coaches us in the right way to approach Him and speak to Him. It's as if He says, "I want you to learn to be real and sincere in your prayers. I don't want you to pray before men in such a way as to deliberately be seen and thought well of by them. And by the way; while we're on the subject of the right way to pray, let me pass on a few more words of instruction to you." Perhaps He goes on to say more about the subject of prayer because prayer to the Father is such an important aspect of our lives as His followers.

I have found it helpful to divide what the Lord says into three principles that He wishes to pass on to us. The first of these three principles is that we are to pray with . . .

- I. SINCERITY OF EXPRESSION (vv. 7-8).
- II. REVERENCE OF CONTENT (vv. 9-13).
- III. HOLINESS OF HEART (vv. 14-15).

William Hendriksen: In harmony with the fact that, according to both old and New Testament, the glory of God is important above everything else, the first three petitions have reference to the Father's name, kingdom, and will. Human needs – bread, pardon for sin, and victory over the evil one – take the second place.

Van Parunak: Structure of the Body of the Prayer:

This structure reminds us of two practical lessons about prayer.

1. Prayer is not just asking for things. In the outer frame, we acknowledge to God who he is. This exercise is the heart of worship. When we come to the Lord, we should focus our minds on who he is. The prayer gives a particularly good example of two focal points of such meditation. It starts with his mercy and accessibility, and ends with his power and majesty.

2. Prayer is not random. While there is nothing wrong with spontaneous prayer, there is also a place for prayer that is planned and ordered. When we speak with an important person, we prepare our thoughts in advance. There's nothing wrong with doing the same with God.

I. (:7-8) DON'T PRAY LIKE UNBELIEVERS

A. (:7a) Using Meaningless Repetition – Incantations vs Intelligent Speech

“And when you are praying, do not use meaningless repetition, as the Gentiles do,”

No prayer has been abused more in terms of meaningless repetition than this Model Prayer

R. T. France: The term for “Gentiles” is the same as that used in 5:47 (on which see below on 18:17) to denote the world outside the disciple community. The emphasis here is not so much on their not being Jewish as on their being religious outsiders, people who do not understand what it means to know God as a heavenly Father. So instead of trusting a Father to fulfill their needs, they think they must badger a reluctant Deity into taking notice of them (cf. the expressive modern term “God-botherer”). Their approach to prayer is characterized by two colorful terms, first “babbling,” a noisy flow of sound without meaning, and polylogia, “much speaking,” “many words.” It is an approach to prayer which values quantity (and perhaps volume?) rather than quality. It is not necessarily purely mechanical, but rather obtrusive and unnecessary. It assumes that the purpose of prayer is first to demand God's attention and then to inform him of needs he may have overlooked.

Van Parunak: An excellent illustration of the difference between the prayer of a believer and that of the heathen is in the encounter of Elijah with the prophets of Baal on Mount Carmel in 1 Kings 18. The pagan prophets prayed repeatedly the same thing, “O Baal, hear us,” and when he didn't hear, they prolonged their prayer and their urgency. . . . By contrast, Elijah's prayer was direct and to the point.

B. (:7b) Heaping Words Upon Words – Quantity vs Quality

“for they suppose that they will be heard for their many words.”

Grant Osborne: These are not prayers of worship or intercession but self-centered prayers that try to control the gods.

D. A. Carson: Nor is he forbidding all long prayers or all repetition. He himself prayed at length (Lk 6:12), repeated himself in prayer (Mt 26:44; unlike Sir 7:14!), and told a parable to show his disciples that “they should always pray and not give up” (Lk 18:1). His point is that his disciples should avoid meaningless, repetitive prayers offered under the misconception that mere length will make prayers efficacious. Such thoughtless babble can occur in liturgical and extemporaneous prayers alike. Essentially it is thoroughly pagan, for pagan gods allegedly thrive on incantation and repetition. But the personal Father God to whom believers pray does not require information about our needs (v.8). “As a father knows the needs of his family, yet teaches them to ask in confidence and trust, so does God treat his children” (Hill).

C. (:8) Ignoring Any Intimate Family Relationship – Where Father Knows Best

for your Father knows what you need, before you ask Him.”*

R. T. France: The reason why “you” (plural, the disciple community united in prayer) are not to be like them lies in a theology which attributes to God both the benevolent concern of a Father and an omniscience which makes the prayer apparently unnecessary (cf. Isa 65:24: “Before they call, I will answer”). But if God does not need to be informed of our needs, why does he expect us to tell him about them? Christian spirituality has traditionally found the answer in a concept of prayer not as the communication of information, still less as a technique for getting things from God (the more words you put in the more results you get out), but as the expression of the relationship of trust which follows from knowing God as “Father.” The pattern prayer which follows illustrates how such a relationship works.

II. (:9-13) PRAY AS INSTRUCTED BY JESUS – ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS OF PRAYER = WORSHIP AND PETITION

“Pray, then, in this way:”

Grant Osborne: The Heart of Prayer is Worship

When we say, “Our Father who is in heaven,” we are not uttering a formal address but celebrating a relationship. We are reminding ourselves of the deep intimacy and incomprehensible love of the One to whom we pray. Moreover, by uttering “our,” we also celebrate the fact that we are “co-heirs with Christ” (Rom 8:17) and share his relationship with the Father. It is Christ’s incredibly deep relationship with his Father that we share. We are part of the family of God and so corporately celebrate this new oneness with him and Christ in an “our” setting. That is the heart of worship—sharing this new intimacy first with Christ and then with “our” brothers and sisters.

R. T. France: Not all aspects of prayer are included in this pattern prayer. There is no explicit confession of sin, no direct thanksgiving for blessings already received, no intercession for the needs of the world or for those to whom disciples are sent (or for their persecutors, 5:44). All of these may be developed through meditation around the clauses of the prayer individually. But the fundamental starting point is worship and petition.

A. (:9a) Invocation (Opening Address) -- Directed to God as Father

1. Tone of Intimacy -- Relationship of a Child to a Father

“Our Father”

Sense of family and community – larger than just individual orientation – Not “My Father”
Not directed towards other men who may be listening it; not saying words to impress them or to put on a show or for their benefit.

Open and Transparent; nothing to hide;

Great expectations in coming before your heavenly Father.

Michael Wilkins: The term for “Father” is ’abba, a term used by children for their earthly fathers to express the warmth and intimacy a child experiences when in the security of a loving father’s care.

Daniel Doriani: The words “Our Father in heaven” reveal the first element of Christian prayer. It is family speech, for we address God as “our Father.” In Jesus’ day, this was radical. Jewish prayers stressed God’s sovereignty, lordship, glory, grace, and covenant. On rare occasions, the Old Testament refers to God as “Father” (Deut. 32:6; Ps. 103:13; Isa. 63:16; Mal. 2:10), but no prophet taught the people to pray to God as “our Father.”

When Jesus called God “his own Father,” some Jews were offended (John 5:18). Pious Jews held God in such awe that they used circumlocutions to avoid saying his name, for fear of misusing it. Therefore, we must pause to consider something remarkable—Jesus teaches us to address the holy, almighty Lord as “our Father.”

When we meet a great person or someone holding high office, we find it difficult to call him by his first name. Whether we like our president or not, we do not call him “Bill” or “George,” but “Mr. President.” But if titles are proper for such people, then the Creator and King of heaven certainly deserves titles of respect. But God is personal. Therefore, he requests a personal title: Father. Nothing shapes our prayers more than this word. It explains why prayer is simple and why sinners can approach God with confidence. . .

When God says, “You are the children of the LORD your God” (Deut. 14:1), he is saying two things: “I love you” and “However strong you are compared to others, you are weak enough to need my help. Like children, you should have enough sense to say, ‘Help me.’” Why deny our need of God’s strength? We are children, humble and weak enough to need God’s help. We are also believers, wise and confident enough to ask God, our Father, to help us.

2. Tone of Majesty -- Respect for the Transcendence of God

“who art in heaven,”

Not a distant father who has abandoned His family

One in a position of power and knowledge and sovereignty

Jacob Gerber: Tension between 2 types of approach in prayer:

When we pray to our father, Jesus is teaching us to pray with all of the confidence of children. My children do not care in the least what I am busy with when they have a need. They barge directly into my presence to tell me their needs. Doesn't matter if I'm sleeping. Even this morning, it's one of them. One of my children, I love you, Caleb, every night he comes into my room to tell me, to wake me up, to get my attention, to tell me what he needs. It was a foot cramp this morning. We worked out the foot cramp and sent him back to bed. Children don't care. They come into the presence of their father and Jesus says, pray like that. You are praying as children to your father. Come right into his presence.

Then Jesus says, this is our father who is in heaven. This is not just your dad. He is in heaven. He is transcended. He transcends above us. He is higher than us. Separated from us wholly. In fact, what the Bible says is that He is holy, holy, holy, unimaginably, indescribably, holy, so far distant from us, that there would be no way for us to climb up to him unless he came down and offered himself to us. Our Father in heaven. . .

Well to apply all of this. How then should we pray? In this text, what we see is that prayer is a paradox of two things that are both true. That we pray as unworthy servants, number one of Almighty God, the Creator of Heaven and Earth. Then number two that we pray, and the deepest sense of intimacy and the familiarity to our Father as his beloved children. Then we need to sit in this paradox. We need to not just say these things and move on, but we need to think about how these truths genuinely seem contradictory. It seems like either we are slaves or we are sons. Either we are debtors or we are free. We cannot be both. And yet Jesus teaches us to pray from both perspectives.

Daniel Doriani: We pray to the sovereign king, the Father who dwells on high. The address “our Father in heaven” means that God is both near to us, for he is our Father, and beyond us, for he is in heaven. So then, true prayer is private, confident, simple, familial, corporate, and transcendent; we pray to the Father, to our Father, and to our Father in heaven. Through it all, biblical prayer is God-centered.

B. (:9b-10) Three Expressions of Submission and Worship

1. (:9b) Devoted to His Holy Character

“Hallowed be Thy name.”

Fundamental attribute that defines who God is = His Holiness.

Grant Osborne: The first God-oriented petition is that the sacredness of God’s name be magnified in every area of life. In the ancient world a person’s name bespoke the very essence of the person (see on 1:21), so God’s name tells who he is at the core of his being. Since holiness is at the heart of the divine character, that must be made evident in everything the disciple does.

R. T. France: God’s “name” is a recurrent OT term for God himself as he is perceived and honored by people. It is frequently described as “holy” (Ps 30:4; 97:12; 103:1; 111:9 etc.) since holiness is a prime characteristic of God himself. The present clause is not then a request that it be made holy, as the traditional translation “hallowed” properly means—it is holy already. Rather it is that people may recognize and acknowledge its holiness, by giving God the reverence which is his due; cf. Isa 29:23 where to “keep God’s name holy” is further explained by “stand in awe of the God of Israel.” Compare the concern of the prophets that God’s name should not be profaned as a result of his people’s sinful behavior and its punishment (Ezek 20:8–9; 36:20–23; cf. Isa 48:11; 52:5–6). This clause then is not merely a petition that people in general may come to acknowledge God, but is itself an expression of that reverence which his holiness requires.

E. Michael Green: Having brought us within the Father’s presence, the prayer makes three petitions about God and his glory, followed by three about ourselves and our needs. The order is significant. We are not to be so taken up with ourselves that we rush into God’s presence and give him a shopping list of our needs. His name is to be hallowed: that is to say, we long for his name, or character, to have top place in the world and in people's hearts. 'Lord, may we make you our Number One.' What a marvellous note of adoration with which to begin a time of prayer!

William Barclay: Therefore, when we pray 'Hallowed be your name,' it means: 'Enable us to give to you the unique place which your nature and character deserve and demand.'

2. (:10a) Dedicated to the Father's Agenda – Submissive and Obedient and Visionary
"Thy kingdom come."

Daniel Doriani: This petition overlaps with the first, for God's name is honored whenever his rule is more evident. "Your kingdom come" means that Christ is king and that we want his rule to become more evident every day.

"Your kingdom come" is also an evangelistic prayer. We pray that the blessings of salvation will flow, that the church will grow in size and influence, that Christians will grow in maturity, and that we would obey Jesus in every sphere of life.

We also pray that Christ will return. If we seek God in prayer, we long to see him face-to-face. To pray "Your kingdom come" is to pray for the restoration of all things, that his kingdom will come in its perfect form. Finally, to pray "Your kingdom come" is to ask the Lord to reign now, in our lives.

D. A. Carson: That kingdom is breaking in under Christ's ministry, but it is not consummated until the end of the age (28:20). To pray "your kingdom come" is therefore simultaneously to ask that God's saving, royal rule be extended now as people bow in submission to him and already taste the eschatological blessing of salvation and to cry for the consummation of the kingdom (cf. 1Co 16:22; Rev 11:17; 22:20). Godly Jews were waiting for the kingdom (Mk 15:43), "the consolation of Israel" (Lk 2:25). They recited "Kaddish" ("Sanctification"), an ancient Aramaic prayer, at the close of each synagogue service. In its oldest extant form, it runs, "Exalted and hallowed be his great name in the world which he created according to his will. May he let his kingdom rule in your lifetime and in your days and in the lifetime of the whole house of Israel, speedily and soon. And to this, say, Amen" (Jeremias, Prayers of Jesus, 98, emphasis his). But the Jew looked forward to the kingdom, whereas the reader of Matthew's gospel, while looking forward to its consummation, perceives that the kingdom has already broken in and prays for its extension as well as its unqualified manifestation.

John MacArthur: And then we discussed the priority of God, "Hallowed be thy name," and we said that that means that God's name is all that He is. And to hallow His name means to set it apart, to exalt it, to glorify it, to honor it, and we gave you four ways that we do that. We hallow His name when we believe that He is, when we believe that He is who He is, when we completely are committed to His presence, and when we obey His Word. And He is to be hallowed, not in general in the universe, but in general in the universe, and most importantly, through us.

Van Parunak: We must understand this petition, like the others, in the light of the OT. As we saw in our studies in Isaiah, the concept of the coming kingdom was revealed in a time when the kingdom of Israel was on the verge of being obliterated. God promised that he would raise up a righteous king to replace the apostate kings, and restore Zion, the place which he had long chosen to set his name (Deut 12:11; Psa 78:68).

Isa 2:2 And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the LORD'S house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. 3 And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem.

Isa 60:1 *Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the LORD is risen upon thee. 2 For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the LORD shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. 3 And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising. 14 The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee, The city of the LORD, The Zion of the Holy One of Israel.

This clause in the prayer teaches us that our Lord's earthly ministry does not mark the full arrival of the kingdom. Both he and John proclaimed that "the kingdom of God is at hand," but his people are still to pray for its full realization. Luke in particular records the disciples' misunderstanding in this regard, and our Lord's correction. As the group made their way to Jerusalem, we read, Luk 19:11 And as they heard these things, he added and spake a parable, because he was nigh to Jerusalem, and because they thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear. 12 He said therefore, A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return. ...

After the resurrection, our Lord continued to emphasize that the kingdom was not theirs to implement and execute, but awaited a future divine intervention:

Act 1:6 When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? 7 And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power.

John on Patmos longed for this day, and prayed, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus" (Rev 22:20). In doing so, he echoed this clause of the Lord's Prayer, and when we pray it, we are continuing that request.

3. (:10b) Dedicated to the Father's Will – Submissive and Obedient and Visionary
"Thy will be done, On earth as it is in heaven."

R. T. France: To pray such a prayer is, of course, to be committed oneself to honor God's name, accept his kingship and do his will.

William Barclay: Let us assume that the second petition explains and amplifies and defines the first. We then have the perfect definition of the kingdom of God – The kingdom of God is a society upon earth where God's will is as perfectly done as it is in heaven. Here we have the explanation of how the kingdom can be past, present and future all at the one time. Anyone who at any time in history perfectly did God's will was within the kingdom; anyone who perfectly does God's will is within the kingdom; but since the world is very far from being a place where God's will is perfectly and universally done, the consummation of the kingdom is still in the future and is still something for which we must pray.

S. Lewis Johnson: Now when we think about the will of God, we must distinguish two of his wills. There is, of course, his decretive will. That decretive will is the will of God that determines everything that is going to come to pass. Daniel speaks of this in the 4th chapter, in the 35th verse of his great prophecy when he says, "And all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing, and he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can stay his hand and say unto him, 'What doest Thou?'" And so he does according to his determinate will. The Lord Jesus went to the cross at Calvary according to the decretive will of God. It was his determining will, established in the councils of eternity, that the Son of God should suffer for our sins at the cross at Calvary.

There is also the preceptive will of God. The preceptive will of God is what we see in holy Scripture as that which pleases him. Now his preceptive will does not always come to pass. His preceptive will is what pleases him, but we often do things that displease him. But we cannot do contrary to his decretive will. His decretive will determines all things that are going to come to pass.

Now what does the Lord mean when he says, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven"? This is, then, a petition that we are to pray, by which we are to pray that on earth, the things that are done upon earth shall be pleasing to the God who dwells in heaven and dwells in the midst of a sphere in which things are done with respect to his will. So this is a prayer, then, that the matters which concern his preceptive will will be pleasing to him. And we know from the teaching of holy Scripture that during the Millennial Age, when the Lord Jesus rules and reigns upon the earth, his will will be done in the earth as it is in heaven. So this, then, is a petition for willing submission to the preceptive will of God.

C. (:11-13a) Three Petitions for Dependence on God for Basic Needs

William Barclay: The second part of the prayer, the part which deals with our needs and our necessities, is a marvellously created unity. It deals with the three essential human needs and the three spheres of time within which we all move.

- First, it asks for bread, for that which is necessary for the maintenance of life, and thereby brings the needs of the present to the throne of God.
- Second, it asks for forgiveness and thereby brings the past into the presence of God.
- Third, it asks for help in temptation and thereby commits all the future into the hands of God.

In these three brief petitions, we are taught to lay the present, the past and the future before the footstool of the grace of God.

1. (:11) Dependent on His Daily Provision of Basis Physical Needs -- Food "Give us this day our daily bread."

Daniel Doriani: We miss the urgency of this prayer today. Americans live in a land of plenty. Indeed, we have so much food we worry more about obesity than hunger. We buy large quantities of food in well-stocked stores and stuff it into capacious refrigerators and freezers. We plan ahead, so that our food seems to come from our work and our kitchen. In Jesus' day, it was more obvious to a laborer that he should pray daily for his daily bread. A common laborer lived on a payment for that day's work. If he could find no work or if his employer withheld his wages, he might go hungry. Western culture has changed enough (monthly paychecks are an example) that we do not feel the urgency to pray for food daily. But our food still comes from God, and we honor him when we acknowledge it.

Michael Wilkins: the wording seems to recall Israel's daily reliance on God for manna in the desert (Ex. 16). In the same way as manna was only given one day at a time, disciples are to rely on daily provision for life from God, helping them to develop a continuing, conscious dependence on him (cf. Matt. 6:34; Phil. 4:6).

John MacArthur: But bread is all of that physical area. Martin Luther had it right when he said: "Everything necessary for the preservation of this life is bread, including food, a healthy body, good weather, house, home, wife, children, good government, peace." End quote. He saw all of the physical elements of life, the necessities, but not the luxuries of life. I don't think that we can ask God for the luxuries of life based on this verse, but for the necessities. What He chooses to give us by way of luxury is at His gracious hand. But He promises to give us the necessities. You remember back in Proverbs chapter 30? Psalm, Proverbs 30 written by Agur? And, in verses 8 and 9 he says, "Lord, don't give me so much that I forget You, and don't give me so little that I steal and dishonor Your name. Just give me food that is convenient for me." I think that's the heart of this. It isn't self-seeking, give me more and more and more and more. It's just saying, Lord give me what I need.

2. (:12) Dependent on His Daily Provision of Basic Spiritual Needs -- Forgiveness
"And forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors."

Daniel Doriani: Jesus' point is that God forgives the penitent. That is, if we understand how precious it is to be forgiven, if we know how much it cost God to forgive, then we will forgive others. The forgiven have motives to forgive. We thank God for his gift, we admire the beauty of his way, and we hope to do the same for others.

R. T. France: The petition for forgiveness is the only clause of the prayer which is singled out for comment at the end (vv. 14–15). The point of that comment, as indeed of the balancing structure of the clause itself, is that forgiveness is a reciprocal principle, a point which will be more fully underlined in the parable of 18:23–35. That parable, like the present petition, will be about debt, though the introductory question and answer in 18:21–22 makes it clear that debt is a metaphor for offenses which need to be forgiven. Here too any purely monetary understanding of debt is ruled out by the fact that it is debts to God for which forgiveness is asked. The substitution in vv. 14–15 of "offenses" (and cf. the "sins" of Luke 11:4a), gives a more prosaic but undoubtedly correct interpretation of the graphic metaphor of debt. Matthew's version, unlike Luke's, by keeping the same metaphor in both halves of the clause ensures that a close parallel is maintained between God's forgiveness and ours. We should note that it is the debtors rather than the debts which we have forgiven; our concern, like God's, is to be with personal relationships. . .

To ask to be forgiven while oneself refusing to forgive is hypocritical.

John MacArthur: Surely, if you'll think about it, you will agree with me that the most essential and the most blessed and the most difficult thing that God ever did was provide man with the forgiveness of sin. It is most essential because it keeps us from eternal hell, and gives us joy even in this life. It is most blessed because it introduces us into a fellowship with God that goes on forever and it is most difficult because it cost the Son of God His life, on a cross. But the most essential, the most blessed, and the most difficult thing is the forgiveness of sin. It is the greatest need of the human heart. Sin has a two-fold effect, generally, and that is that it damns men forever. That's its future effect. Its present effect is that it robs men of the fullness of life by bringing to bear upon his conscience an unrelieved and unrelenting guilt. And so as we face the problem of sin we face the fact that sin brings immediate consequences, guilt and the loss of meaningfulness, peace and joy and life and the future consequence that sin brings eternal damnation.

S. Lewis Johnson: What he means is simply this: that those who have been truly forgiven by God necessarily manifest a forgiving spirit. And that forgiving spirit is the evidence that we have truly been born again. So when we read, in verse 14, "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you; and if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses," that is the manifestation of the evidence of the new birth.

3. (:13a) Desirous of Favorable Outcomes

- a. With respect to Trials which Lead to Temptations
 "And do not lead us into temptation,"

E. Michael Green: The third of the 'we' petitions is for God's guidance and strength against the enemy.

Craig Blomberg: "Lead us not into temptation" does not imply "don't bring us to the place of temptation" or "don't allow us to be tempted." God's Spirit has already done both of these with Jesus (4:1). Nor does the clause imply "don't tempt us" because God has promised never to do that anyway (Jas 1:13). Rather, in light of the probable Aramaic underlying Jesus' prayer, these words seem best taken as "don't let us succumb to temptation" (cf. Mark 14:38) or "don't abandon us to temptation."

[Ed: Or if that explanation requires too much linguistic gymnastics, maybe simply an expression of desire not to be led into places of severe testing where temptation by the evil one could present significant difficulty.]

D. A. Carson: The NT tells us that this age will be characterized by wars and rumors of wars but does not find it incongruous to urge us to pray for those in authority so "that we may live peaceful and quiet lives" (1Ti 2:2). While Jesus told his disciples to rejoice when persecuted (Mt 5:10-12), he nevertheless exhorted them to flee from it (10:23) and even to pray that their flight should not be too severe (24:20). Similarly, a prayer requesting to be spared testings may not be incongruous when placed beside exhortations to consider such testings, when they come, as pure joy.

John MacArthur: When the prayer says, "Lead us not into trial," I believe the implication of the prayer is, "Lord, don't ever lead us into a trial which will present to us such a temptation that we will not be able to resist it." Did you get that? "Don't ever lead us into something we can't handle. Don't give us a trial that is going to become an irresistible temptation, but rather deliver us from any trial that would bring evil on us as a natural consequence. Don't put us into something we can't handle." And, you know, that's just a claim of a promise, as we shall see in a little while. The term implies testing. It implies a process. And by the way, any time you see a word like peirasmos, with an asmós ending on it, that is a Greek noun, that the asmos ending implies a process. Don't put us into any process, any procedure, any series of circumstances, any situation that is going to draw us into irresistible sin.

- b. With respect to Domination by the Tempter
"but deliver us from evil [or the evil one]."

Grant Osborne: The personalized form is better than the traditional "from evil" because the articular "the evil one" (τοῦ πονηροῦ) favors the more personal concept, though of course "evil" and "the evil one" are virtually synonymous. In Matthew the "evil one" causes us to twist our words into lies (5:37), takes kingdom truths out of our heart (13:19), and sows evil in our lives (13:19). "Deliver" means "save us from" and connotes the idea of both protection and removal from his power. So the final petition asks God for strength and deliverance from the temptations wrought by Satan.

D. (:13b) Doxology

"For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen."

Grant Osborne: The traditional doxology ("for yours is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen") appears in only a few late manuscripts (L W Θ 0233 et al.), and several of the best manuscripts end here (B D Z et al.), with a variety of endings in others. This makes it almost certain that it is not original. It is possible that churches added their own doxology when praying this prayer, and this one emerged as the best summary of the contents of the prayer. However, it (and the other endings) is based on 1 Chr 29:11–13 and is meaningful, so it is not wrong to utter the ending as a personal prayer.

(:14-15) APPLICATION – IMPORTANCE OF FORGIVENESS

A. (:14) What Happens When You Forgive Others?

"For if you forgive men for their transgressions, your heavenly Father will also forgive you."

John MacArthur: Talking here about Parental Forgiveness, not Judicial Forgiveness ... I used the illustration of my family. If a child of my family sins against me and against the standards that I establish, they're not thrown out of the family. They don't have to do something to get back in the family, but they need to come and make some things right so the intimacy of a family fellowship can be maintained and restored, you see. That's what we're talking about. . .

Another illustration that's very clear. Jesus said this: give and it, what? Shall be given to you. In whatever measure you mete it out that's exactly how God will mete it out to you. Hmm. Luke 6, how about this one? Sow sparingly, reap what? Sparingly. Sow bountifully, what? Reap bountifully. God deals with us the way we deal with Him. Whatever we invest in His kingdom, we receive a return on. If we harbor sins and grudges and so forth, we cut ourselves off from the blessedness that can accrue to us because of those things. We have taught you so many times that as you give, you invest with God, you receive a return on it. The same thing is true on your confession of sin and seeking forgiveness. God deals with you the way you deal with others, and maybe the short circuit in your spiritual life is just that you have some people that you're holding bitter resentment or a grudge against, and it's constant.

B. (:15) What Happens When You Don't Forgive Others?

“But if you do not forgive men, then your Father will not forgive your transgressions.”

Warren Wiersbe: In this “appendix” to the prayer, Jesus expanded the last phrase of Matthew 6:12, “as we forgive our debtors.” He later repeated this lesson to His disciples (Mark 11:19–26). He was not teaching that believers earned God’s forgiveness by forgiving others, for this would be contrary to God’s free grace and mercy. However, if we have truly experienced God’s forgiveness, then we will have a readiness to forgive others (Eph. 4:32; Col. 3:13). Our Lord illustrated this principle in the parable of the unmerciful servant (Matt. 18:21–35).

R. T. France: The stark simplicity of this pronouncement raises uncomfortable questions. First, how does this conditional forgiveness relate to the gospel of free and unmerited grace which Paul proclaims? Does our act of forgiving earn our forgiveness from God? . . .

A second problem relates to the breadth of the forgiveness required. Its object is literally “people” without any further specification. So is there no limit to what and whom we must forgive? Should disciples forgive war criminals, serial murderers and abusers of children? What does “forgive” mean in such circumstances? . . . The phrase “against me” in that passage perhaps gives us a guide to the intention of this passage as well. While the reference to the offenses of “people” could hardly be more general, the clause of the prayer which these verses are explaining uses the metaphor of debt specifically of those who are indebted to us (v. 12). It is where there is personal offense that the concept of “forgiveness” properly applies. Those who commit evil by which we ourselves are not affected should be the object of our prayerful concern and (as far as possible) sympathetic understanding, but it is properly speaking not for us to “forgive” them: that is God’s prerogative. The concern of these verses, as of 18:21–35, is with the disciples’ response to those whose offense is against them. It is our own enemies whom we are to love (5:44).

William Hendriksen: Though in the teaching not only of Paul (Rom. 3:24; Eph. 2:8; Titus 3:5) but certainly also of Christ (Matt. 5:1-6; 18:27; Luke 18:13) salvation rests not on human accomplishments but solely on the grace and mercy of God, this does not mean that there is nothing to do for those who receive it. They must believe. Included in this faith is the eagerness to forgive. Unless the listeners forgive men their trespasses, they themselves will remain unpardoned.

Van Parunak: Before returning to the background theme of the privacy of our duties to God, the Lord returns to one of the themes raised in the prayer, that our requests for forgiveness must be accompanied with forgiveness on our part toward others.

He changes the term for sin, from “debts” (emphasizing sins of omission) to “trespasses” (emphasizing sins of commission, presumably easier to avoid). This would be strange if he were simply amplifying the fifth petition. The caution here has a broader application. In chapter 18, the Lord instructs his disciples on the need for forgiveness. This instruction begins with a detailed protocol for dealing with offenses between believers. Note the use of the word “trespass.”

Mat 18:15 Moreover if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. 16 But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. 17 And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church: but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican.

As a result of this instruction, Peter asks him,

Mat 18:21 Then came Peter to him, and said, Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times?

The Lord responds by telling a parable about a great lord who forgives his servants their debts, only to have one of those servants enforce a much lesser debt on one of his debtors. When he hears of the servant’s ingratitude, he condemns him to a worse punishment than the one to which he was originally liable. He concludes, again using the word “trespass,”

Mat 18:35 So likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses.

So far, we can see a clear link between the amplification in ch. 6 and the lessons about forgiveness in ch. 18. But there is one more detail. In Ch. 18, between the Lord’s protocol for reconciliation and Peter’s question, he promises the disciples the power of corporate prayer:

Mat 18:18 Verily I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. 19 Again I say unto you, That if two of you shall agree on earth as touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven. 20 For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.

We need to forgive one another, not just because the Lord tells us to, but because it is a critical condition for gathering together in prayer. We cannot “agree on earth” about our petitions to heaven if we are not agreed on earth about other things, specifically our relation with one another. The exhortation to forgiveness is not just about obtaining forgiveness from God. It is about ensuring our access to him in corporate prayer, ensuring that we as a church remain in close communication with our heavenly Father. Bitterness among believers blocks our communion with God.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

1) Is it helpful or not to repeat this prayer verbatim every week in church service?

- 2) How would you characterize your prayers in terms of how much weight you give to various subjects compared to how Christ teaches us to pray here?
- 3) What is our expectation of the coming kingdom which we are petitioning God to usher in?
- 4) Why does Matthew place such importance on possessing the spirit of forgiveness as a prerequisite to approaching God in genuine worship?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Warren Wiersbe: This prayer is known familiarly as “The Lord’s Prayer,” but “The Disciples’ Prayer” would be a more accurate title. Jesus did not give this prayer to us to be memorized and recited a given number of times. In fact, He gave this prayer to keep us from using vain repetitions. Jesus did not say, “Pray in these words.” He said, “Pray after this manner”; that is, “Use this prayer as a pattern, not as a substitute.”

The purpose of prayer is to glorify God’s name and to ask for help to accomplish His will on earth. This prayer begins with God’s interests, not ours: God’s name, God’s kingdom, and God’s will. Robert Law has said, “Prayer is a mighty instrument, not for getting man’s will done in heaven, but for getting God’s will done on earth.” We have no right to ask God for anything that will dishonor His name, delay His kingdom, or disturb His will on earth.

It is worth noting that there are no singular pronouns in this prayer; they are all plural. It begins with “Our Father.” When we pray, we must remember that we are part of God’s worldwide family of believers. We have no right to ask for ourselves anything that would harm another member of the family. If we are praying in the will of God, the answer will be a blessing to all of God’s people in one way or another.

If we put God’s concerns first, then we can bring our own needs. God is concerned about our needs and knows them even before we mention them (Matt. 6:8). If this is the case, then why pray? Because prayer is the God-appointed way to have these needs met (see James 4:1–3). Prayer prepares us for the proper use of the answer. If we know our need, and if we voice it to God, trusting Him for His provision, then we will make better use of the answer than if God forced it on us without our asking.

John MacArthur: “thy kingdom come” – God’s Program -- The very word Messiah means “anointed one,” one with a right to rule and reign. You see, and this is so important for you to understand, God’s program centers on a person. It is not a plan without a person, it is not a program without a person; history focuses on a person – one who will come again to reign as King of Kings and Lord of Lords. Such was the hope of Israel, such is the hope of the church – such is the hope of the world. Jesus Christ the King will consummate history. Someone has well said, “History is His story.” History is the redemptive unfolding of God’s plan in the person of Jesus Christ. We are moving to the place where Christ dominates. In Daniel, as we shall see tonight – and I can’t help but mingle the two sermons – in Daniel, as we see the image smashed by a flying stone coming through the air, that stone is representative of Christ, and then the stone fills the whole earth. You see, Christ is inseparable from His Kingdom. There is no plan apart from the person; the person is the plan. And to pray, “Thy kingdom come,” is nothing more or less, nor could it be more or less, than “Christ reign, here and now.” That is what that is saying, and we’ll see it as we move through it this morning. . .

The universal kingdom in heaven is established; the prayer is let it come to this earth. This one little infinitesimal speck of sand in an infinite universe, that rebels against holy God, let it be brought into harmony, see, with the rest. The universal kingdom is total, and uninterrupted, and eternal, and we are simply able to acknowledge that. But what we’re praying here is, “Oh, God, stop the rebellion. Turn it around, and may You be reigning here as You’re reigning there.” It’s a great concept. Although His name is hallowed in heaven, it isn’t always hallowed on earth; although His will is done in heaven, it isn’t always done on earth; and although His kingdom is come in heaven, it isn’t come in all cases on earth, because there’s rebellion. The purpose, then, of the prayer is to bring His kingdom to earth, that He might put down sin, that He might put down rebellion, that He might put down evil, that He might bring in God’s hallowed name, God’s kingdom, God’s will. And you know, it’s wonderful to think about. That’s going to happen, by the way, and when it does happen there won’t be any more distinguishing between His universal and His earthly kingdom; they’ll blend into His eternal reign. They’ll blend into His eternal reign. . .

The kingdom comes in conversion, commitment, and finally, we’ll just call it coming again, or consummation. I believe, people, that one day the heavens will split wide open, and Jesus Christ will descend and plant His feet on the Mount of Olives, and in this world He will establish His kingdom. I believe that Revelation tells us it’ll be a thousand-year millennial kingdom, in which He will set things right and rule with a rod of iron, and the world will finally hear the answer to the prayer, “may the universal kingdom become the earthly kingdom.” And for a thousand years He will reign with a rod of iron, in righteousness, justice, truth and peace, at the end of which time that kingdom will phase into the universal kingdom, and never again will there be a distinction. But I believe this world will see a real reigning of Jesus Christ here, when the curse is reversed, and it’s like God meant it to be before the fall. There is a coming again.

Phil Newton: It is not the size of our prayers or the vocabulary of our prayers or the wordiness of our prayers that gets us a hearing with the Father. It is because we come to him in dependence upon the righteousness of Christ, casting ourselves upon his resources, and looking to him as our Father that grants our hearing. He “knows what you need before you ask Him,” so your prayer does not need to be an attempt at manipulating the Father to give you what you want. For you cannot. It is rather a time to quiet your heart before him, to pour out your needs, and to cling to him in faithful dependence.

Ray Pritchard: We do not pray to inform God of anything. Because God knows all things from the beginning to the end, he knows the future as well as he knows the past. It is not as if God “needs” our prayers in order to gather accurate information. God doesn’t need our prayers, but we need to pray. We pray in order to express our complete dependence on our Heavenly Father. We pray to build our faith. We pray because he is God and we are not. We pray because God has ordained that our prayers are part of his unfolding plan for the universe.

Alexander Maclaren: The words of Christ, like the works of God, are inexhaustible. Their depth is concealed beneath an apparent simplicity which the child and the savage can understand. But as we gaze upon them and try to fathom all their meaning, they open as the skies above us do when we look steadily into their blue chambers, or as the sea at our feet does when we bend over to pierce its clear obscure. The poorest and weakest learns from them the lesson of divine love and a mighty helper; the reverent, loving contemplation of the profoundest souls, and the experience of all the ages discern ever new depths in them and feel that much remains unlearned. 'They did all eat and were filled, men, women, and children—and they took up of fragments that were left five baskets full.'

This is especially true about the Lord's Prayer. We teach it to our children, and its divine simplicity becomes their lisping tongues and little folded hands. But the more we ponder it, and try to make it the model of our prayers, the more wonderful does its fulness of meaning appear, the more hard does it become to pray 'after this manner.' There is everything in it: the loftiest revelation of God in His relations to us and in His purposes with the world; the setting forth of all our relations to Him, to His purposes, and to one another; the grandest vision of the future for mankind; the care for the smallest wants of each day.

As a theology, it smites into fragments all false, unworthy human thoughts of God. As an exposition of religion, the man who has drunk in its spirit has ceased from self-will and sin. As a foundation of social morals it lays deep the only basis for true human brotherhood, and he who lives in its atmosphere will live in charity and helpfulness with all mankind. As a guide for personal life, it gives us authoritatively the order and relative worth of all human desires, and with these the order and subordination of our pursuits and life's aims. As a prayer it is all comprehensive and intended to be so, holding within the perfect seven of its petitions, all for which we should come to God, and resting them all on His divine name, and closing them all with a chorus of thanksgiving. As a prophecy it opens the loftiest vision, beyond which none is possible, of the final transformation of this world into the kingdom in which God's will shall be perfectly done, and of the final deliverance from, all evil of the struggling, sinning, sorrowing souls of His children...

...'After this manner pray ye.' The question which is usually made prominent in thinking of these words is really a very subordinate one. Did Christ intend to establish a form, or only to give an example? Churchmen say, a form; Dissenters generally say, an example. But it would be better for both Churchmen and Dissenters to try to realise for themselves what 'this manner' is.

TEXT: Matthew 6:16-18

TITLE: PRACTICE RIGHTEOUSNESS THE RIGHT WAY FROM THE RIGHT MOTIVATION – EXAMPLE OF FASTING

BIG IDEA:

PRACTICING RIGHTEOUSNESS FOR PUBLIC ACCLAIM FORFEITS HEAVENLY REWARD – TRUE VS HYPOCRITICAL PIETY -- EXAMPLE OF FASTING

INTRODUCTION:

Donald Hagner: In the first century, fasting apparently provided an exceptional opportunity for impressing others with the extent of one's piety. Here, as in the previous two species of piety, the activity was carefully designed so as to inflate personal pride (cf. Luke 18:12). Jesus tolerates no such conduct. Our righteousness is a matter of service to God and is to be directed to him. True righteousness is, in the last analysis, seen in secret. Only this kind of righteousness will be truly rewarded in any lasting way.

Warren Wiersbe: It is not wrong to fast, if we do it in the right way and with the right motive. Jesus fasted (Matt. 4:2), so did the members of the early church (Acts 13:2). Fasting helps to discipline the appetites of the body (Luke 21:34) and keep our spiritual priorities straight. But fasting must never become an opportunity for temptation (1 Cor. 7:5). Simply to deprive ourselves of a natural benefit (such as food or sleep) is not of itself fasting. We must devote ourselves to God and worship Him. Unless there is the devotion of the heart (see Zech. 7), there is no lasting spiritual benefit.

John MacArthur: Along with alms giving and certain prescribed prayers, twice-weekly fasting was one of the three major expressions of orthodox Judaism during Jesus' day. The scribes and Pharisees looked on these practices with great seriousness and were careful not only to follow them faithfully but to do so as publicly and ostentatiously as possible-ostensibly as a testimony to true godliness but in reality as a testimony to their own self-styled piety. When they gave alms, they blew trumpets "in the synagogues and in the streets" in order to "be honored by men" (Matt. 6:2). When they prayed "in the synagogues and on the street corners," they did so "to be seen by men" (Mt 6:5). And when they fasted, they "put on a gloomy face" and neglected their "appearance in order to be seen fasting by men" (Mt 6:16). They did not see religion as a matter of humility, repentance, or forgiveness, but as a matter of ceremony and proud display. And therefore the external rituals which they paraded as badges of godly righteousness actually marked them as ungodly hypocrites, as Jesus declared in each of the three verses just cited (cf. Mt 5:20).

Religious ritual and routine have always been dangers to true godliness. Many ceremonies, such as praying to saints and lighting a candle for a deceased relative are actually heretical. But even if it is not wrong in itself, when a form of praying, worshiping, or serving becomes the focus of attention, it becomes a barrier to true righteousness. It can keep an unbeliever from trusting in God and a believer from faithfully obeying Him. Even going to church, reading the Bible, saying grace at meals, and singing hymns can become lifeless routines in which true worship of God has no part...

Daniel Doriani: But why should we fast? According to John Piper, we fast to nourish our hunger for God and to reduce our hunger for the world. We ought to fast because our physical appetites are so intense that they threaten to overwhelm our hunger for God. Piper writes: “The greatest enemy of hunger for God is not poison but apple pie. It is not the banquet of the wicked that dulls our appetite for heaven, but mindless nibbling at the table of the world. It is not the X-rated video, but the prime time dribble of triviality we drink in every night.” . . .

We fast because fasting says, “I do not live for my appetites. I set aside physical desires, so that I may seek God in prayer, that I may desire God and his blessing.” When we fast, we battle the relentless stream of appetites. We demonstrate that we do not live by bread alone. When we fast, the body grows weak, and that reminds us that we do not live by our strength, our provision, and our planning.

Charles Spurgeon: The church of God would be far stronger to wrestle with this ungodly age if she were more given to prayer and fasting. There is a mighty efficacy in these two gospel ordinances. The first links us to heaven, the second separates us from earth. Prayer takes us into the banqueting-house of God; fasting overturns the surfeiting tables of earth. Prayer gives us to feed on the bread of heaven, and fasting delivers the soul from being encumbered with the fulness of bread which perishes. When Christians shall bring themselves up to the uttermost possibilities of spiritual vigor, then they will be able, by God’s Spirit working in them, to cast out devils which to-day, without the prayer and fasting, laugh them to scorn.

Grant Osborne: The purpose of fasting is to remind oneself that God is uppermost in life, even over basic human drives. So it is a God-directed activity, and it is completely wrong to want others to see your piety and be impressed. Rather, only God should know that one is fasting. . .

Fasting is an intensely personal activity centering entirely on one’s relationship with God, and it is an important Christian discipline for kingdom children in this interim age between the advents (Matt 9:15). Its purpose is to remind us that God is the most important aspect of our lives, far more important than major human drives like food or sex (1 Cor 7:5), and fasting places God first. To turn this into an attention-getting device and to prefer human admiration over the worship of God is blasphemous. One’s entire devotion must be fixed on the Father.

Fasting is closely connected to prayer and therefore connotes an intense relationship and communion with God. But too many use it almost as magic to get God to answer their prayers, i.e., to so convince God of their sincerity that he will say “yes” to their request. It is good to fast during times of crisis but to center more on God—and not in the mistaken belief that this practice will be more efficacious even than prayer.

I. (:16) FALSE PIETY IN FASTING

A. Warning against Seeking Public Acclaim in Fasting

“And whenever you fast, do not put on a gloomy face as the hypocrites do, for they neglect their appearance in order to be seen fasting by men.”

William Barclay: The great danger was that some people might fast as a sign of superior piety, that their fasting might be a deliberate demonstration, not to God, but to others, of how devoted and disciplined they were. That is precisely what Jesus was condemning. He was condemning fasting when it was used as an ostentatious parade of piety. The Jewish days of fasting were

Monday and Thursday. These were market days, and into the towns and villages, and especially into Jerusalem, there crowded the people from the country. The result was that those who were ostentatiously fasting would on those days have a bigger audience to see and admire their piety. There were many who took deliberate steps to see that others could not miss the fact that they were fasting. They walked through the streets with hair deliberately unkempt and dishevelled, with clothes deliberately soiled and disarrayed. They even went to the lengths of deliberately whitening their faces to accentuate their paleness. This was no act of humility; it was a deliberate act of spiritual pride and ostentation.

Walter Wilson: The crux of their pretense is nicely captured in the wordplay created by the juxtaposition of verbs with the φαν- stem: when they fast, the hypocrites make their faces “unrecognizable” (ἀφανίζουσιν) so that they will be “recognized” (φανῶσιν) by the people. Their sullenness, then, is not a true reflection of their disposition but part of an effort to appear pious to others.

John Piper: Few things feel more gratifying to the heart of fallen man than being made much of for our accomplishments, especially our moral and religious accomplishments... All of this we are prone to do because of our seemingly insatiable appetite for the praise of men. We want to be made much of. We want people to like us and admire us and speak well of us. It is a deadly drive. Jesus warned us, “Whoever exalts himself shall be humbled; and whoever humbles himself shall be exalted.”

B. Forfeiture of Heavenly Rewards

“Truly I say to you, they have their reward in full.”

Warren Wiersbe: But hypocrisy not only robs us of character, it also robs us of spiritual rewards. Instead of the eternal approval of God, we receive the shallow praise of men. We pray, but there are no answers. We fast, but the inner man shows no improvement. The spiritual life becomes hollow and lifeless. We miss the blessing of God here and now, and also lose the reward of God when Christ returns.

II. (:17-18) TRUE PIETY IN FASTING

A. (:17-18a) Instruction on Fasting Secretly

“But you, when you fast, anoint your head, and wash your face so that you may not be seen fasting by men, but by your Father who is in secret;”

J. C. Ryle: Let us learn from our Lord’s instruction about fasting the great importance of cheerfulness in our religion. Those words, anoint your head and wash your face, are full of deep meaning. They should teach us to aim at letting men see that we find Christianity makes us happy. Never let us forget that there is no religion in looking sad and gloomy. Are we dissatisfied with Christ’s wages and Christ’s service? Surely not! Then let us not look as if we were.

B. (:18b) Assurance of Heavenly Reward

“and your Father who sees in secret will repay you.”

John Nolland: Once again the embedded challenge is to take the purity of motivation which by definition must characterise totally private engagement with God out into the complexities of normal life where others necessarily see what we do.

Phil Newton: In our day it seems the most common thing is for people to announce that they are fasting or to tell about their fast. I received a booklet from a Baptist pastor several years ago telling about his 40-day fast, and how that became the key to his spiritual growth and his church's growth. Then he outlined in true-Baptist program fashion how to institute such a fast in one's own life. But Jesus tells us... Let this be between you and the Lord. The Lord sees in secret and rewards accordingly.

F. B. Meyer: How fondly Jesus repeats these words (Matthew 6:4, 6, 18). Though compelled to live so much in the public gaze of men, his heart was always sighing for the secret place of fellowship with his Father, who waited for Him there.

Of course, the main object of those paragraphs was to withdraw his disciples from the excessive outwardness of the age in which He spoke, and which necessarily detracted from the singleness, directness, and simplicity of the religious life. It is impossible to perform our religious duties before men, without insensibly considering what impression we are producing, and how far their estimation of us is being enhanced. And in so far as we seek these things, the stream is contaminated with mud and silt, and becomes turbid. We have just as much religious life as we show to God in secret — just that, no less, no more. Whatever is not wrought between thee and God, with no record but his eye, is chaff which the wind driveth away.

Here is a test for our alms, our prayers, and our fasting from sin and self-indulgence. If we do any of these to maintain or increase the consideration that men have of us, they count for nothing in the eye of God. But whatever is done for Him alone will secure his inevitable notice and reward. Dwell on that very definite assurance: "Shall recompense thee." There is no doubt about it. For every petition breathed into his ear; for every sigh and tear; for every abstinence from sin and self there will be a certain recompense, after the Divine measure. Such seeds shall have a prolific harvest. Seek then the secret place, where prying eyes cannot follow, and curious ears cannot overhear.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why is fasting such an uncommon practice among Christians today?
- 2) What made fasting an attractive religious practice for the Pharisees?
- 3) What is the connection between fasting and prayer?
- 4) What are some practical suggestions for observing a special day of fasting?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

D. A. Carson: Under Mosaic legislation, fasting was commanded only on the Day of Atonement (Lev 16:29–31; 23:27–32; Nu 29:7); during the exile regular fasts of remembrance were instituted (Zec 7:3–5; 8:19). In addition to these national fasts, both OT and NT describe personal or group fasts with a variety of purposes, especially to indicate and foster self-humiliation before God, often in connection with the confession of sins (e.g., Ne 9:1–2; Ps 35:13; Isa 58:3, 5; Da 9:2–20; 10:2–3; Jnh 3:5; Ac 9:9) or to lay some special petition before the Lord, sometimes out of anguish, danger, or desperation (Ex 24:18; Jdg 20:26; 2Sa 1:12; 2Ch 20:3; Ezr 8:21–23; Est 4:16; Mt 4:1–2; Ac 13:1–3; 14:23). It may belong to the realm of normal Christian self-discipline (1Co 9:24–27; cf. Php 3:19; 1Pe 4:3), but already in the OT, it is bitterly excoriated when it is purely formal and largely hypocritical (Isa 58:3–7; Jer 14:12; Zec 7:5–6)—when, for instance, men fasted but did not share their food with the hungry (Isa 58:1–7).

In Jesus' day, the Pharisees fasted twice a week (Lk 18:12; cf. Str-B, 2:242ff.), probably Monday and Thursday (m. Ta'an. 1:4–7). Some devout people (e.g., Anna) fasted often (Lk 2:37). But such voluntary fasts provided marvelous opportunities for religious showmanship to gain a reputation for piety. One could adopt an air that was “somber” (or “downcast,” Lk 24:17, the only other place in the NT where the word skythrōpos is used) and disfigure oneself, perhaps by not washing and shaving, by sprinkling ashes on one's head to signify deep contrition or self-abnegation, or by omitting normal use of oil to signify deep distress (cf. 2Sa 14:2; Da 10:3). The point is not that there was no genuine contrition but that these hypocrites were purposely drawing attention to themselves. They wanted the plaudits of men and got them. And that's all they got. . .

Yet Jesus, far from banning fasting, assumes his disciples will fast, even as he assumes they will give alms and pray (vv.3, 6). His disciples may not fast at the moment, for the messianic bridegroom is with them and it is the time for joy (9:14–17). But the time will come when they will fast (9:15). (Observe in passing that here Jesus assumes the continued existence of his disciples after his departure.) What he condemns is ostentation in fasting. Moreover, he forbids any sign at all that a fast has been undertaken, because the human heart is so mixed in its motives that the desire to seek God will be diluted by the desire for human praise, thus vitiating the fast.

Washing and anointing with oil (v.17) were merely normal steps in hygiene. Oil does not here symbolize extravagant joy but normal body care (cf. Ru 3:3; 2Sa 12:20; Pss 23:5; 104:15; 133:2; Ecc 9:8; Lk 7:46; cf. NIDNTT, 1:120). The point of v.18 is not to draw attention to oneself, whether by somber mien or extravagant joy. Jesus desires reticence, not deception. And the Father, who sees in secret, will provide the reward.

R. T. France: The sort of fasting envisaged here is presumably that of choice rather than of routine, since there would be little point in putting on a show to impress people with one's fasting if it was already known and expected. In 9:14–17 we shall find the voluntary fasting of the Pharisees used as a stick with which to beat the Jesus movement, which is thus alleged not to take its religious obligations sufficiently seriously; the argument of course assumes that other people knew the Pharisees were fasting. . . the disciples' washing and anointing are part of the everyday bodily care which were sometimes forgone as part of the self-affliction involved in fasting (m. Ta'an. 1:6). Anointing, like the washing of the face, represents normal cosmetics (Luke 7:46; cf. Ruth 3:3; 2 Sam 14:2; 2 Chr 28:15; Dan 10:3), not an artificial show of gaiety; everything is to be outwardly normal. Fasting, like alms-giving and prayer, is to be between the disciple and God. No-one else should know.

William Barclay: In Jewish fasting, there were really three main ideas in people's minds.

(1) Fasting was a deliberate attempt to draw the attention of God to the person who fasted. This was a very primitive idea. The fasting was designed to attract God's attention, and to make him notice those who thus denied themselves.

(2) Fasting was a deliberate attempt to prove that penitence was real. Fasting was a guarantee of the sincerity of words and prayers. It is easy to see that there was a danger here, for that which was meant to be a proof of repentance could very easily come to be regarded as a substitute for repentance.

(3) A great deal of fasting was vicarious, done on behalf of others. It was not designed to save an individual's own soul so much as to move God to liberate the nation from its distresses. It was as if specially devoted people said: "Ordinary people cannot do this. They are too involved in work and in the world. We will do this extra thing to counterbalance the necessary deficiency of piety in others."

Such then was the Jewish theory and practice of fasting. . .

There are very few ordinary people in whose lives fasting plays any part at all. And yet there are many reasons why a wise fasting is an excellent thing.

(1) Fasting is good for health. Many of us live a life in which it is easy to get soft and flabby. It is even possible for people to reach the stage when they live to eat instead of eating to live. It would do a great many people a great deal of physical good to practise fasting far more than they do.

(2) Fasting is good for self-discipline. It is easy to become almost completely self-indulgent. It is easy to come to a stage when we deny ourselves nothing which it is in our power to have or to pay for. It would do most of us a great deal of good if for some time each week we set aside our wishes and our desires, and exercised a stringent and an antiseptic self-discipline.

(3) Fasting preserves us from becoming the slaves of a habit. There are not a few of us who indulge in certain habits because we find it impossible to stop them. They have become so essential that we cannot break them; we develop such a craving for certain things that what ought to be a pleasure has become a necessity; and to be cut off from the thing which we have learned to desire so much can be a purgatory. If we practised a wise fasting, no pleasure would become a chain, and no habit would come to rule our lives. We would have control over our pleasures, and not our pleasures over us.

(4) Fasting preserves the ability to do without things. One of the great tests in life is the number of things which we have come to regard as essential. Clearly, the fewer things we regard as essentials, the more independent we will be. When all kinds of things become essentials, we are at the mercy of the luxuries of life. It is no bad thing to walk down a street of shop windows, and to look in at them and remind ourselves of all the things that we can do without. Some kind of fasting preserves the ability to do without the things which should never be allowed to become essentials.

(5) Fasting makes us appreciate things all the more. It may be that there was a time in life when some pleasure came so seldom that we really enjoyed it when it did come. It may be that nowadays the appetite is blunted; the palate is dulled; the edge has gone off it. What was once a sharp pleasure has become simply a drug which we cannot do without. Fasting keeps the thrill in pleasure by keeping pleasure always fresh and new.

Fasting has gone almost completely out of the lives of ordinary people. Jesus condemned the wrong kind of fasting, but he never meant that fasting should be completely eliminated from life and living. We would do well to practise it in our own way and according to our own need.

Charles Swindoll: SEVEN BENEFITS OF FASTING

1. Fasting helps us concentrate attention on issues that require prayer.
2. Fasting enables us to rearrange our priorities in order to focus on things that really matter.
3. Fasting encourages us to examine our lives and inspect our motives.
4. Fasting assists us when we're seeking the Lord's will.
5. Fasting strengthens our self-control and discipline.
6. Fasting brings us back to basics and simplifies our lives.
7. Fasting equips us to recover from grief and endure sorrow.

Daniel Doriani: HOW TO FAST: PRACTICAL MATTERS

1. Fast regularly. Jesus assumes his disciples will fast. He says "when you fast," not "if you fast" (Matt. 6:16). Jesus fasted, and he predicted that his disciples would fast after he left them (Matt. 4:2; 9:15). Fasting has its ups and downs as a discipline. The Puritans loved corporate fasts, but in recent decades, fasting fell into neglect. Richard Foster found that not one book was published on fasting from 1861 to 1954. John Wesley wisely observed, "Some have exalted religious fasting beyond all Scripture and reason; and others have utterly disregarded it."

2. Fast prayerfully. Almost every culture has some concept of fasting. Many fast to show sorrow. Others fast to deprive themselves, thinking self-deprivation pleases their gods. Today some fast for their health, to purge and recalibrate their bodies. Such fasting may be beneficial. But Christians fast to dedicate themselves to God and to prayer. We need not pray all day; we need not forsake all regular activities. But we do pray more as we fast.

3. Fast secretly. Praise from men can be addictive. It is gratifying to be noticed for our accomplishments. Jesus says, "When you fast, do not look somber. . . . Wash your face, so that it will not be obvious to men that you are fasting" (6:16–18). If you aim to be noticed and praised by men, you will probably succeed. People of faith will notice and admire your discipline. But the Bible calls it pride and hypocrisy. Someone may ask, "How is it hypocrisy for people to know what you are doing? What is wrong with letting your deeds show? That is simple honesty." But the public display of our works poisons the well. When we fast or give away money and seek credit for it, we do it to impress others and not to seek God. We pretend to act for God, when really we act for ourselves and our audience. We are posers, feigning love for God.

4. However, we may fast corporately, so that believers can join together to pray for a great matter. The people of Israel did this, the apostles did this (Acts 13–14), and in times past the church often did this. As long as the essential motive is to seek God, there is no harm if others discover that we are fasting, especially if they are seeking God the same way beside us.

5. Fast humbly. There is a proud religion—legalism—that makes its rules and imposes them on others for the glory of exercising authority. It says, “Do not handle, do not taste, do not touch!” There is also a self-made religion that features “self-abasement and severe treatment of the body.” These, Paul says, “are of no value against fleshly indulgence” (Col. 2:21, 23 NASB). The fleshly indulgence that Paul has in mind here is actually the sin of pride, not gluttony. C. S. Lewis said: “Fasting asserts the will against the appetite—the reward being self-mastery and the danger pride. . . . Ascetic practices which, in themselves, strengthen the will, are only useful insofar as they enable the will to put its own house in order, as a preparation for offering the whole man to God.”

Fasting is a means to an end—saying good-bye to the power of our possessions, so that we may give ourselves to the reign of God (Luke 14:33). Apart from that end, fasting can be rebellion, a desire to master the animal self and to secure the triumph of the will.

6. Fast creatively. If a diabetic cannot fast for physical reasons, she can lay aside television to devote herself to God. Some people eat a slice of plain bread when they fast. It cuts their hunger, so they think about food less and remember their goal. The issue is broader than food. Fasting includes “abstinence from anything which is legitimate in and of itself for the sake of some spiritual purpose.” We could “fast” from any physical blessing that threatens to become our first love. One person could fast from televised news for a week and devote that time to God. Another could fast from shopping for anything but food.

Gregory Brown: How to Fast Properly

In Matthew 6, Christ deals with three commonly abused religious practices in Israel—giving, praying, and fasting. The religious leaders had made things that were good in and of themselves into bad things. The rituals of giving, praying, and fasting had become a form of self-worship. They did those acts to be seen and praised by men instead of to honor God and receive his approval.

It is appropriate that right after teaching about proper prayer, Christ focuses on fasting. One can pray without fasting, but one cannot fast biblically without prayer. They go together. Therefore, in one sense, Christ is continuing his teaching on prayer. . .

Application Question: How should we practice proper fasting?

1. When fasting, we must practice secrecy. Of course, when we choose to not eat, others may notice. But we should practice, as much as possible, not sharing this discipline with others. Why? It’s not because telling others is bad; it’s because our hearts are bad. They are too prone to spiritual pride and loving the praise of others. We practice secrecy to protect our sin-filled hearts. Certainly, there may be times to share that we are fasting—such as with a corporate fast or for accountability sake—but as a general principle, we must practice secrecy.

2. When fasting, we should act normal. When Christ said that the disciples should put oil on their heads and wash their faces, he was not describing extravagant practices. These were normal acts of body care and grooming in ancient times. Oil was often scented and used, at least partially, as perfume.

3. When fasting, we must focus on God alone and not others. He is the purpose of our fast—to seek his face in a special way. As we do this, God will reward our faithfulness.

4. When fasting, we must fervently pray. As mentioned, one can pray without fasting, but not fast without praying. In every biblical account, the two are linked together. If we have no extra prayer and time in God's Word, we are just not eating—which, by itself, brings no spiritual benefit.

5. When fasting, we must practice obedient living. In Zechariah 7:4-5 and 8-10, God rebukes Israel for fasting without the accompanying righteousness.

Reasons to Fast

- 1. Fasting is appropriate when mourning over some great pain or loss.
- 2. Fasting is appropriate when mourning over sin.
- 3. Fasting is an appropriate means of seeking to conquer sin and temptation.
- 4. Fasting is appropriate when seeking God's favor in a desperate situation.
- 5. Fasting is appropriate when seeking wisdom and revelation from God.
- 6. Fasting is appropriate when preparing for some great ministry or task.
- 7. Fasting is appropriate for developing self-control.
- 8. Fasting is appropriate in helping us extend mercy to others.

G. Campbell Morgan: These are three great subjects, and they mark the revelation of man to God – alms, and prayer, and fasting. Deny the Divine existence, wholly or in part, and wholly or in part all these will cease. As a man loses his hold upon God, or as a man comes to deny God altogether, these things cease in the inverted order. First, fasting ceases. Then prayer ceases, for a man cannot pray unless he fasts – that inner fasting of the life; if that cease, prayer will cease. And then alms will cease. A man gives less now than when he had less to give, because he has been so very busy getting, that he forgot to pray. He forgot that not in making, but in fasting, is the real strength of life, and there is always degradation and deterioration, when that is forgotten.

These words and these deeds and these activities must be undertaken in actual relationship with Him. Alms must be given in the consciousness of His observation. Prayer must be offered in the place of loneliness with Him. Fasting must be solely a means of helping communion with Him.

TEXT: Matthew 6:19-24

TITLE: KINGDOM PERSPECTIVE TOWARDS WEALTH – WHAT DO YOU TREASURE?

BIG IDEA:

UNDIVIDED ALLEGIANCE AS CITIZENS OF THE KINGDOM MUST BE REFLECTED IN OUR VALUE SYSTEM, VISION AND VOLITION (LOYALTIES)

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: The final of the three central sections of the Sermon on the Mount concerns the community citizen's social responsibilities toward possessions (6:19–34) and others (7:1–12). In the former section, 6:19–21 establishes the theme (earthly vs. heavenly treasures), and 6:22–24 carries it further, centering on the choice between two masters. Then 6:25–34 contrasts worry with trusting God for one's needs. Thus 6:19–34 flows naturally out of 6:1–18 in the sense that it continues the emphasis on the centrality of God over earthly concerns. In 6:1–18 Jesus centered on the vertical aspect of piety; here he centers on the horizontal aspect of human needs, but the message is the same: center on God and his place in our lives, not on self and worldly concerns. . .

Jesus now turns from piety to possessions. Social values begin with choices regarding priorities. What is most important in one's life? Jesus narrows this down to the most critical tension—God or this world. Everyone seeks treasure and stores up savings for the future. The question is which will be the master of one's life: God or earthly concerns. Every person will be a slave to something, and the choice centers on what one treasures most. The ultimate choice is between the things of God and the things of earth. What you see is what you will get. If it is the earthly that is in control, the result will be anxiety. If God is in control, the result will be trust.

John Nolland: There is an easy transition from the call in 6:1-18 to behaviour that God will secretly reward to the challenge here to store up treasure in heaven. Indeed, we have here a fitting conclusion generalising from vv. 1-18. However, vv. 19-21 is a transitional piece, and v. 19 also looks forward to v. 24 in which devotion to 'mammon' is somewhat equivalent to 'stor[ing] up ... treasures on the earth'. Vv. 19-24 function as a unit in which the importance of the challenges in vv. 19-21, 24 to single-mindedness are underlined by a centrally positioned call in vv. 22-23 to have clear vision.

R. T. France: There is a clear continuity of thought between the idea of a secret, heavenly reward in vv. 1–6, 16–18 and the subject of treasure in heaven which opens this section of the discourse with its focus on the disciple's attitude to material security.

Daniel Doriani: Chapter 6 describes three of the forces, the false gods, that keep people from seeking the kingdom. The first is reputation or human honor (6:1–18). The second is wealth (6:19–24). The third is security (6:25–34), which Jesus tackles in terms of worry.

Michael Wilson: Depictions of people praying for the actualization of God's reign "on earth" (6:10) lead naturally to depictions showing how God's people ought to align their values with those of the impending kingdom. Specifically, the image of treasures "on earth" (6:19) communicates how the desire for material wealth often competes with spiritual priorities over the direction of a person's core commitments, or "heart." Since it is not possible to live in service to both God and money, Jesus demands of his followers undivided allegiance to the kingdom, a requirement dramatized through language that prompts the reader to imagine a human body that is full of either light or darkness, or a slave who tries to serve two masters. . .

The pursuit of earthly goods, meanwhile, results not only in loss but also in failure to acquire imperishable goods. The text assumes that the work of gathering a treasure of some kind represents a basic human drive, and that this drive (signified in 6:21 by the "heart") can be guided in only one direction. Since Jesus's followers must "love the Lord your God with all your heart" (22:37), it is not possible for them to love both God and mammon (6:24). The use of material possessions, then, serves as a critical barometer of one's commitment. A similar appropriation of the topos informs the claim in Job 36.3: "My heart is not fixed on earthly concerns, since the earth and those who dwell in it are unstable; rather my heart is fixed on heavenly concerns, for there is no upset in heaven."

Those whose hearts are oriented toward God when they give alms have not only treasure in heaven (cf. 6:20–21; cf. 6:3–4) but also selves that are full of light (6:22; cf. 5:14–16). Conversely, those whose hearts are not oriented toward God when they give alms not only fail to have treasure in heaven (6:19; cf. 6:2) but also have selves consumed by darkness (6:23; cf. 15:14).

Richard Gardner: In verses 19-24 we find a cluster of three sayings, which Matthew uses to develop the theme of a life with one focus.

John MacArthur: Now in chapter 6:19 and following He says you must also have the right view toward wealth, luxury, verses 19 to 24; and watch this, then from 25 to 34, you must have the right view of necessities. So He's talking about things here: First luxuries and then necessities.

And so we have to make a choice.

- We make a choice, first of all, verses 19 and 20 whether we lay up our treasure on earth or in heaven.
- We make a choice, secondly, in verses 22 and 23 of whether we are going to exist in light or whether we're going to exist in darkness.
- We make another choice in verse 24 whether our Master will be God or our master will be money, because it can't be both.

So the Lord really gives us three choices, which really come together to be one choice, and that is to choose properly how we handle our wealth.

E. Michael Green: The worldliness that we are called to avoid can take a religious or a secular form. And so we differ from those who are not Christians both in our devotional life, which Jesus has dealt with in the first half of the chapter, and also in our ambitions. These are disclosed principally in two ways: 'What do we really value?' and 'What do we worry about?' It is to these twin areas of money and worry that Jesus now turns, as he seeks to show with embarrassing directness what it means to be a citizen of the kingdom.

I. (:19-21) THE TWO TREASURES -- SEEK HEAVENLY TREASURES RATHER THAN EARTHLY -- WHERE IS OUR TREASURE?

William Barclay: So Jesus warns people against three kinds of pleasures and possessions.

(1) He warns them against the pleasures which will wear out like an old suit of clothes. The finest garment in the world, moths or no moths, will in the end disintegrate. All purely physical pleasures have a way of wearing out. At each successive enjoyment of them, the thrill becomes less thrilling. It requires more of them to produce the same effect. They are like a drug which loses its initial potency and which becomes increasingly less effective. It is foolish to look for pleasure in things which are bound to offer diminishing returns.

(2) He warns against the pleasures which can be eroded away. The grain store is the inevitable prey of the marauding rats and mice which nibble and gnaw away the grain. There are certain pleasures which inevitably lose their attraction as we grow older. It may be that we become physically less able to enjoy them; it may be that as our minds mature they cease in any sense to satisfy us. In life, we should never give our hearts to the joys the years can take away; we should find our delight in the things whose thrill time is powerless to erode.

(3) He warns against the pleasures which can be stolen away. All material things are like that; not one of them is secure; and if people build their happiness on them, they are building on a most insecure basis. Suppose a person's life is so arranged that happiness depends on the possession of money; suppose a recession and economic crash comes and that person wakes up to find the money gone; then, with the wealth, happiness has also gone.

If we are wise, we will build our happiness on things which we cannot lose, things which are independent of the chances and the changes of this life.

A. (:19) Futility of Seeking Earthly Treasures

1. Command – Expressed Negatively

“Do not lay up for yourselves treasures upon earth,”

Grant Osborne: The present tense directed at stopping future actions (“don't at any time store up”).

Charles Swindoll: An important point needs to be made here: Jesus wasn't prohibiting possessions per se. Nowhere does the Bible forbid ownership of property or having possessions. Riches and honor come from God, who ought to be thanked for material blessings when He graciously gives them (1 Chr. 29:12-13). Nor was Jesus warning against planning for the future. Those who would use this passage to teach that buying insurance or investing for retirement constitutes a lack of faith are reading this in a way the Lord didn't intend. Scripture exhorts us to plan wisely and especially to provide for our families (1 Tim. 5:8; Jas. 4:13-15). The Lord also was not dissuading us from enjoying the gifts He gives us (see 1 Tim. 6:17).

Rather, Jesus was denouncing a life focused on the accumulation of more and more, warning against selfishness and an extravagant lifestyle. He used the term translated “treasures” purposefully. The Greek term thēsauros [2344] is used to refer to the gold, frankincense, and myrrh given to Jesus by the magi (Matt. 2:11) and to “the treasures of Egypt” that Moses forsook (Heb. 11:26). What is being condemned is a this-worldly hoarding of wealth and riches, setting one's heart and mind on these things. The Bible is clear that “those who trust in their wealth and boast in the abundance of their riches” are wicked (Ps. 49:5-6).

Craig Blomberg: To avoid those dangers, rich Christians must be characterized by generosity in giving and meticulous stewardship in using money for the Lord's work.

Bob Deffinbaugh: Biblical Examples of Laying up Treasures on Earth:

a) Example of Achan (Joshua 6:17-18, 7:1-26).

b) Example of Rich Young Ruler (Matthew 19:16-22)

2. Reason – Leads to Futility

“where moth and rust destroy, and where thieves break in and steal.”

Daniel Doriani: But Jesus does ban the godless, selfish accumulation of goods—heaping up possessions and savings beyond the ability to enjoy or spend them. James warns those who live in luxury and self-indulgence, “You have fattened yourselves in the day of slaughter”—that is, judgment day (James 5:5). The same godlessness that leads to hoarding also leads to a hard heart—to neglect of the needy and exploitation of the poor (James 5:4–6).

Jesus also forbids the dream that life consists in the abundance of our possessions (Luke 12:15). He warns us not to tether our hearts to this world. When Jesus says, “Don’t lay up treasures,” he does not forbid joyful living or financial planning. He does forbid greed and love of money and selfish luxury.

B. (:20) Security of Seeking Heavenly Treasures

1. Command – Expressed Positively

“But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven,”

Daniel Doriani: We lay up treasures in heaven by investing in God’s causes and God’s people. The effects of such investments last forever. We store treasures in heaven by worshiping God, growing in knowledge and grace, and growing in love for God and neighbor. Financially, we store treasures in heaven by using money for kingdom causes, by giving money to the church, to missions, to Christian schools, to the poor. When we store treasures in heaven by investing our money in God’s people, our investment will bear dividends for eternity. The Greek roots of the word “philanthropy”—meaning “love” and “mankind”—are apt. By giving, we demonstrate our love for mankind.

2. Reason – Leads to Security

“where neither moth nor rust destroys, and where thieves do not break in or steal;”

John Nolland: Heavenly treasure is vulnerable neither to nature nor to one’s fellow humans. What might be involved in storing up treasures in heaven has already been made clear by the principles established in vv. 1-18.

C. (:21) Conclusion: Your Heart Will Align with Your Treasure

“for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.”

Grant Osborne: Jesus concludes that what people “treasure” becomes the guiding principle for their whole life. “Heart” (καρδία) is the whole being, referring to “the inner person, the seat of understanding, knowledge, and will” (EDNT, 2:250). So it means we give total loyalty to that which is of ultimate significance. Jesus is asking whether worldly wealth or the things of God will rule our lives. As Plummer puts it, “We must store our wealth above, in order that our hearts may be drawn upwards. The two act and react upon one another.”

Charles Swindoll: Those words should prompt us to do some soul-searching. Ask yourself some questions:

- Am I living unselfishly?
- Do I demonstrate generosity and care for others? Or am I tightfisted and reluctant to help those in need?
- Do I know when I have acquired enough? Or am I stuck in an endless race grasping for more and more?
- Do I allow things to lure me into a materialistic lifestyle?
- Am I just plain greedy? Or am I content with what God has given me and satisfied with His provision for my simple needs?

II. (:22-23) THE TWO VISIONS – CLARITY OF FOCUS VS DISTORTION – CHOOSE LIGHT OVER DARKNESS – WHERE IS OUR FOCUS?

D. A. Carson: Jesus is therefore saying either

- (1) that the man who “divides his interest and tries to focus on both God and possessions ... has no clear vision, and will live without clear orientation or direction” (Filson)—an interpretation nicely compatible with v.24; or
- (2) that the man who is stingy and selfish cannot really see where he is going; he is morally and spiritually blind—an interpretation compatible with vv.19–21.

A. Role of the Eye as Essential to the Illumination of the Body

“The lamp of the body is the eye;”

R. T. France: Perhaps we can be no more definite than to say that the imagery depends on light being necessary for the proper functioning of the body (person) and that this light is in some way dependent on the condition of the eye.

William Barclay: The Distorted Vision

The idea behind this passage is one of childlike simplicity. The eye is regarded as the window by which the light gets into the whole body. The color and state of a window decide what light gets into a room. If the window is clear, clean, and undistorted, the light will come flooding into the room, and will illuminate every corner of it. If the glass of the window is colored or frosted, distorted, dirty, or obscure, the light will be hindered, and the room will not be lit up... So then, says Jesus, the light which gets into any man’s heart and soul and being depends on the spiritual state of the eye through which it has to pass, for the eye is the window of the whole body.

B. Contrast in Spiritual Illumination Based on Your Approach to Wealth

1. Clarity of Vision (Related to Generosity)

“if therefore your eye is clear, your whole body will be full of light.”

2. Distortion (Related to Stinginess)

“But if your eye is bad, your whole body will be full of darkness.”

Daniel Doriani: Jesus poses a diagnostic question: if your eye is perpetually set on riches, ask yourself, “Why am I fixated on material things?” The answer is, “Because you have given your heart to material things.” It is right, therefore, to repent and ask God to redirect your heart toward him.

R. T. France: The meaning “generous” is suggested by the use of the derivative noun haplotēs for “generosity” in e.g. Rom 12:8; 2 Cor 8:2; 9:11, 13, and the adverb haplōs in Jas 1:5 for God’s giving “generously” (cf. LXX 1 Chron 29:17; Prov 11:25). If generosity is to be understood as the outworking of the “simplicity,” “openness” denoted by haplous, this would form a direct counterpart to the phrase ophthalmos ponēros, “bad eye,” which is used for a jealous stinginess in 20:15. In view of the recognized meaning of the “bad eye” to denote selfish greed or meanness, it seems likely that this saying is meant to indicate that one indication of a person’s spiritual health is their generosity or lack of it in the use of their material possessions. So this rather obscure little saying seems to be using a word-play which the English translator cannot reproduce without extensive paraphrase in order to commend either single-mindedness (in pursuing the values of the kingdom of heaven) or generosity, or more likely both, as a key to the effective life of a disciple.

Charles Swindoll: In this section, Jesus was essentially talking about the need for a singularity of mind-set. We know how sight works—light reflected from objects enters our eyes and the images then enter our minds. The goal of the righteous is that the light that enters their eyes is “clear.” The word translated “clear” is haplous [573], which means “motivated by singleness of purpose so as to be open and aboveboard, single, without guile, sincere, straightforward.”

In other words, we need to have clarity of focus, not double-sightedness or double-mindedness. One commentator puts it well: “Jesus, using this language metaphorically, affirms that if a man’s spiritual sense is healthy and his affections directed towards heavenly treasure, his whole personality will be without blemish; but if that spiritual sense is diseased by a false sense of values, or by covetousness, or by a grudging ungenerous spirit, he will rapidly become disingenuous.”

Seen in this light, the need for a single-minded focus on the things of heaven instead of a blurred double vision held captive by the things of earth leads directly to Jesus’ clear conclusion in 6:24: “You cannot serve God and wealth.” Many Christians believe they can balance the passionate pursuit of Christ with the passionate pursuit of riches, or give equal time to both of these. But in the Christian life that has enthroned Jesus alone as Lord, there is no room for competing loyalties. Our possessions and pursuits must be submitted to Christ’s plans and priorities, not the other way around.

Donald Hagner: These difficult verses can only be understood correctly by noting the context in which they stand, i.e., the pericopes on either side, both of which refer to concern with wealth. The ἀπλοῦς eye and the πονηρός eye are not to be understood physically as a healthy and a diseased eye (contra Guelich, Sermon). The eye is referred to metaphorically in this passage. The πονηρός eye is the “evil eye” of Near Eastern cultures—an eye that enviously covets what belongs to another, a greedy or avaricious eye (see G. Harder, TDNT 6:555–56). For the Jewish use of the expression in this sense, see m. ’Abot 2:12, 15; 5:16, 22 (= Danby, 2:9, 11; 5:13, 19). Other references to an evil eye in this sense are found in Matt 20:15 and Mark 7:22 (cf. Sir 14:8–10; Tob 4:7). The ἀπλοῦς eye, given the symmetrical structure of the passage, is probably the opposite of the evil eye, namely, a generous eye, as in the cognate adverb ἀπλωῶς, “generously,” in Jas 1:5 (cf. Rom 12:8; 2 Cor 8:2; 9:11, 13)—an eye that is not attached to wealth but is ready to part with it. It is easier to understand ἀπλωῶς as a synonym for the expected ἀγαθός, “good,” in the ethical sense argued above, than to understand πονηρός in the physiological sense of “unusual” (as does Guelich, Sermon, following Sjöberg). On the other hand, ἀπλωῶς can also mean “single” (BAGD, 86a) in the sense of devotion to one purpose, a meaning consonant with the point made by the following verse (v 24). Cf. too “singleness [ἀπλότης] of heart” in Eph 6:5.

Bob Deffinbaugh: Here are two prime examples of men who had good eternal vision: they saw clearly, they saw eternity, and they saw the reward versus the temporary things that were passing on by. Because of this faith, God used them in mighty ways.

By faith Abraham, when he was tested, offered up Isaac, and he who had received the promises offered up his only begotten son, in whom it was said, IN ISAAC YOUR SEED SHALL BE CALLED. By faith Moses, when he became of age, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh’s daughter choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the passing pleasures of sin, esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt; for he looked to the reward (Hebrews 11:17-18).

C. Conclusion: Need for Spiritual Illumination or You Will Live in Darkness

“If therefore the light that is in you is darkness, how great is the darkness!”

Richard Gardner: A more likely interpretation, however, is that Jesus is dealing with need for a clear vision of God’s will and telling a parable to make his point. When we have good (healthy) eyes, our world is one of light, and we see and walk clearly. But when our eyesight is poor (unhealthy), life is a dark and blurry affair. So it is, Jesus suggests, with the spiritual realm. If we have only a shadowy awareness of God’s will, how dark life will be! If on the other hand our vision is focused on God and illumined by God (cf. Iss. 4:1-6), our lives will be full of light.

Van Parunak: Now the organ of revelation is not a city or a lamp, but the individual’s eye, which can be either “single” or “evil.” The Jews are condemned for their distorted perception. If their eyes were working properly, they would recognize the Lord, but there is a defect that keeps them from perceiving.

What kind of defect is in view? The basic meaning of ἀπλωῶς is “single, without guile, sincere, straightforward” (BDAG). The “single eye” perceives things as they are, without distortion. Correspondingly, the “evil eye” insists on distorting the truth and explaining it away. The Jewish attitude toward the Lord illustrates the distortion of the “evil eye.” They are so committed to their own tradition that they could not recognize the obvious evidence from the Scriptures and from the Lord’s works that identify him as the Messiah. “Single” is a good translation, if we understand it of “clear” vision, contrasted with “double” or “blurred” vision.

This understanding fits well with the context in Matthew 6. Here, we are confronted with a clear conflict in claims to our loyalty. We can serve either God or mammon. We can seek treasure either on earth or in heaven. The “single eye” sees this clearly. It recognizes the folly of claiming to serve the Lord while actually following after material things. But the “evil eye” is distorted and blurred. It thinks it can have it both ways, and rationalizes away the clear claims of God on the devotion of his people.

III. (:24) THE TWO MASTERS -- SERVE GOD ALONE RATHER THAN BEING DOUBLEMINDED – WHO (OR WHAT) ARE YOU SERVING?

A. Thesis Statement – Impossibility of Divided Loyalty

“No one can serve two masters;”

Grant Osborne: With two masters it would be impossible to give either total allegiance. In the case of God and wealth this is especially true because the two demand opposite things of the slave: possessions demand self-centered living, while God demands that we serve others. Moreover, God’s demands are absolute; there is no room for serving wealth.

B. Any Attempt at Divided Loyalty Will Fail

“for either he will hate the one and love the other, or he will hold to one and despise the other.”

D. A. Carson: Either God is served with a single-eyed devotion, or he is not served at all. Attempts at divided loyalty betray not partial commitment to discipleship but deep-seated commitment to idolatry.

C. Conclusion: Restatement of Thesis Statement with Specific Application

“You cannot serve God and mammon.”

As Jim Elliot wrote, “He is no fool who gives up what he cannot keep to gain what he cannot lose.”

Daniel Doriani: This is suggested by the name Jesus chooses for money. The term “mammon,” means “trusted thing” or “that which one trusts.” The name is apt, for we are prone to trust money. Remember the prayer, “Give me neither poverty nor riches. . . . Otherwise, I may have too much and disown you and say, ‘Who is the LORD?’” (Prov. 30:8–9; cf. Hos. 13:6). Jeremiah commands, “Let not . . . the rich man boast of his riches” (Jer. 9:23). Ezekiel says, “Because of your wealth your heart has grown proud” (Ezek. 28:5). Job says a man can speak to gold and say, “You are my security” (Job 31:24). It is all too easy to set the heart on riches (Ps. 62:10).

Craig Blomberg: Jesus proclaims that unless we are willing to serve him wholeheartedly in every area of life, but particularly with our material resources, we cannot claim to be serving him at all.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What are some of the elements of a biblical perspective towards wealth?
- 2) What are some of the indicators that the orientation of your life is laying up treasures in heaven instead of on earth?
- 3) What are some pathways that lead to unhealthy vision?

4) How did Jesus challenge His disciples to be all in?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Donald Hagner: The issue in view in these passages is not wealth primarily, but an absolute and unqualified discipleship. Wealth, it happens, is only the most conspicuous example of that which can distract from true discipleship. Only the rarest of individuals can possess much of this world's wealth without becoming enslaved to it and without letting it cut the nerve of true discipleship. For this reason, the NT contains a very strong polemic against wealth (e.g., 1 Tim 6:6–10; Heb 13:5). Most important is where one's heart lies, i.e., what controls one's interests, energy, and commitment. There is no absolute requirement here for poverty. But the individual disciple must be sensitive to that point at which wealth and possessions are not compatible with authentic discipleship. Jesus asks for uncompromising commitment to God's will and purposes. This is what it means to store up treasures in heaven. The person who stores up treasures on earth "is not rich toward God" (Luke 12:21) and is in the end "a fool." The person who is distracted from unqualified discipleship because of a covetous eye exists in a deep darkness and is to be pitied. The nature of discipleship is such that it allows no such divided loyalties. If one chooses to follow Jesus, the commitment and service entailed are absolute. It is impossible to be a partially committed or part-time disciple; it is impossible to serve two masters, whether one of them be wealth or anything else, when the other master is meant to be God. This view of the rigorously single-minded nature of discipleship is in keeping with the view of discipleship elsewhere in the Gospel (e.g., 10:34–39; 16:24–26).

Bob Deffinbaugh: Where Is Your Treasure?

In Matthew 6, Jesus brings up two big temptations we all face as believers that distract us and pull us away from the importance and the satisfaction that we can have in our relationship with God the Father.

- The first temptation evident in chapter 6 is the religious man doing his works before man to receive the praise of man instead of doing them in secret, where only God the Father knows. Jesus says that if we seek the praise of men, we have our reward, but if we seek to glorify God, the Father will reward us openly. The examples given are charitable deeds, prayer, and fasting. The temptation is to seek to be noticed, to be put on a high pedestal as one who is religious, and to gain the praise of men.
- The second temptation we face as believers is the temptation of being like the world in seeking treasures on this earth. So often, we look at the things of this earth and say to ourselves, "If only I had that, then I would be all set." We seek to find security and satisfaction in temporary things instead of what we already have in our relationship with God the Father through Jesus Christ. Both of these temptations want our attention, and both distract us from what truly matters – our relationship with God the Father.

The big question from the Sermon on the Mount is the question of where my heart is. . .

Therefore, we must guard our hearts and watch over them so that our heart follows hard after the things of God and is not distracted by the things of this world. In this message, I ask three questions.

- The first question we must ask ourselves as we begin this passage of Scripture is: "Where is our treasure?" In asking this, we will answer the question "Where is our heart?" because where your treasure is, there your heart will be also.

- The second question to ask ourselves is: "Where is our focus?" What are our eyes focused on? Are they focused on the seen or the unseen?
- The final question to be addressed is: "Who, or what, are you serving?" Here Jesus is surrounded by religious people, Sadducees and Pharisees, men who look very religious on the outside, but who in their hearts are serving money and themselves rather than God. Jesus is also surrounded by people who have never heard this kind of radical teaching. Jesus is asking us to repent, to change our minds about these things, to live a life of faith, and to serve the one true God.

John MacArthur: Now, He's been talking about your heart and He wants us to have our heart fixed single mindedly and totally devoted on the kingdom of God, so that our treasure is there, our heart is there, our love is there, our passion is there, our burden is there, our investment is there, our all is there, and we're to have that single minded heart. And then He illustrates that with the eye, the eye then becomes the illustration of the heart. And the eye is like the lamp of the body. When we can see with our eyes, sighted people their body is filled with the light that comes in from the world by which they perceive, and understand what's in their vision. But if your eye is dark it is black, there's no light that comes in you perceive nothing. And that's the way it is with the heart, if your heart is toward God it lights your entire spiritual being, if your heart is toward the material things, toward the treasure of the world the blinds come down of your spiritual perception and you do not see, spiritually as you ought. Tremendous principle. He takes a physical illustration and He says that the eye is like a window, if that window is clean and clear the light floods the body, if the window is blacked out no light enters. This is a spiritual metaphor. But there's a richness in here that I don't want you to miss. Look at the word healthy or single; I don't know what your version says in verse 22. It says, "The lamp of the body is the eye; and if, therefore, thine eye be (single or) healthy," I want you to see something that I think is fascinating about that word. The word is literally from the root of haplous which means generous, okay, it means generous. It is used that way many, many times, just give you three illustrations, James 1:5, "God who gives liberally." Or generously. Romans 12:8 Paul urges us to "give liberally." Or generously. Second Corinthians 9 he talks about the liberality or the generosity of the Macedonians. It is a word that means generous or liberal. He is saying then, if your eye or your heart, because the eye is illustrating the heart, if your heart is generous your whole spiritual life will be flooded with spiritual understanding. Isn't that a great truth?

You know there are people who come to church and leave church, don't seem to change and they never grow and never seem to love the Word and never seem to be a witness to others and never seem to be productive in their life and they just stay the same way all the time, and when I see somebody like that they never seem to understand what's going on, they never perceive spiritual realities, I wonder to myself so very often if it isn't because they are so focused on the earth and so earthbound and so oriented toward treasures here that the blinds are down and they have no spiritual perception at all. To put it another way, until you take care of the view of money in your life you will never be able to deal with spiritual realities. That's exactly Luke 16:11. If you don't know how to take care of money why would God commit to you the true riches, right? See, what I'm saying here and what our Lord is saying is that this issue is bigger than we think, it may be blinding us in spiritual perception. Verse 23, "If your eye is evil, your whole body's full of darkness." And there you're introduced to the evil eye, you've heard that phrase, haven't you? Gave 'em an evil eye.

You know what the evil eye is? That's a Jewish colloquialism, to mean grudgingly. For example in Deuteronomy 15:9 it talks about when you have a slave and it's coming to the Jubilee Year and he is to be freed, that you have an evil eye toward him. That is you are ungenerous, stingy and you grudge him that freedom. In Proverbs 23:6 it says, "Eat not the bread of him who has an evil eye."

In other words don't eat a bite of somebody's food if they grudge you every bite. How about Proverbs 28:22, this is a tremendous statement, it says, "He that hastens to be rich has an evil eye, and considers not the poverty that shall come upon him." You hurry to be rich and you will be ungenerous, grudging and selfish, that's the contrast. All right He says, you have two treasuries in heaven or in earth. Wherever you put your treasure that's where your heart will be, and if your heart is in heaven where your treasure is you're going to have a generous spirit and that generous spirit is like a seeing eye that floods your spiritual life with perception. If your treasure is in earth you're going to see nothing because the blinds come down in the darkness of your greed and covetousness and you will see nothing, and if that's the case the end of 23 says, "If the light that is in you is darkness, how great is that darkness!" It's just an exclamation where our Lord is saying, how total or how great is the darkness of one who should see spiritually but pulls the blinds through his own covetousness. The call then is to exclusive heavenly mindedness, devotion to God, an undivided laying up of treasure in heaven. Let me simplify the whole thing, one statement, how you handle your money is the key to your spiritual perception. That's the message of verses 22 and 23. And so you have two visions potentially, two treasuries and you make a choice.

Matthew McCraw: Where Is Your Focus?

He says the things that we gather on this earth can be destroyed. They can be taken from us. Listeners of Jesus' day would have identified greatly with this, probably better than us today because they didn't have debit cards and savings accounts. They had actual stuff. Their precious metals could tarnish, their fabrics could be eaten by moths, their herds could be stolen, their fields could be burned or suffer insect attack. These things could be taken from them. . .

Jesus is pointing out that all the things on this earth that we treasure are temporary, they are fragile, they don't last. . . (v. 19-21)

The eye helps determine what happens in the heart. We must focus our eye on the right thing so that our heart will be focused on the right thing. (v. 22-23)

If there's anything that's keeping you from seeing clearly with your spiritual eye, clear it out. Illustration: It's like when you wake up in the morning and you can't see clearly because you have that gunk in your eyes. You rub your eyes, you blink a few times, you clear up your eyes so you can see. So, also, in our spiritual eyes, we must clear out the gunk so that we can see clearly and focus clearly on where we're going.

What's the spiritual gunk that is keeping you from seeing clearly? Perhaps it's some friends that you have. Perhaps it's some sort of intake in your life like television, music, or internet. Perhaps it's an improper devotion to something like possessions, or politics, or power. Perhaps it's your own pride, or arrogance, or apathy. Perhaps it's an addiction to drugs, or acceptance, or some sort of sexual sin. Whatever it is, get the gunk out! Get it out so you can see!

Jesus has changed your life, so focus on Him and His ways!

Jesus said you cannot be completely sold-out to money and be completely sold-out to God. You can't be a good husband to two wives, you can't be a diehard fan to two college football teams, you can't have two favorite movies, you can't be devout in two different religions, and you can't be devoted to two masters. (v. 24)

Jesus says that something's gotta give. You will love the one and hate the other or you will be devoted to one and despise the other.

We must be focused in our living. We must live for God! We must be devoted to God and His good gifts. We must store up treasure in heaven. We must have our eye set to the things of light.

TEXT: Matthew 6:25-34

TITLE: KINGDOM PERSPECTIVE TOWARDS WORRY – CAN YOU TRUST GOD TO PROVIDE?

BIG IDEA:

SEEK GOD’S PRIORITIES AND TRUST HIS PROVISION RATHER THAN WORRYING

INTRODUCTION:

E. Michael Green: The worldliness that we are called to avoid can take a religious or a secular form. And so we differ from those who are not Christians both in our devotional life, which Jesus has dealt with in the first half of the chapter, and also in our ambitions. These are disclosed principally in two ways: ‘What do we really value?’ and ‘What do we worry about?’ It is to these twin areas of money and worry that Jesus now turns, as he seeks to show with embarrassing directness what it means to be a citizen of the kingdom.

Scott Harris: Anxiety, worry, fret, distress, agitation, tension, irritability. Words that describe a feeling of an inner turmoil that result in a feeling of outward uneasiness. The words describe a common feeling among humans as we consider what the future may bring to us personally and to the ones we love.

Jerry Shirley: Be honest: we all worry, don’t we?

- The ignorant worry because they don’t know enough.
- The knowledgeable worry because they know too much.

- The poor worry because they don’t have enough.
- The rich worry because they are afraid of losing what they have.

- The old worry because they are facing death.
- The young worry because they are facing life.

Daniel Doriani: Jesus’ teaching has substantial repetition. But, as he repeats key ideas, he develops them further, so they strengthen the main point: we have good reasons to trust God and stop worrying.

25a COMMAND 1 Do not worry about your life, your food, drink, and clothing.

25b Reason 1 Life is more than food and clothes.

26 Reason 2 God cares for the lower creation—the birds. You are more valuable than they.

27 Reason 3 Worry changes nothing.

28–30 Reason 4 God cares for the lower creation—even lilies and grass, short-lived as they are. We are more valuable, as even men of little faith should know.

31 COMMAND 2 Do not worry about what you will eat, drink, and wear.

32 Reason 5 The pagans (sensibly) chase these things, since they are godless. But your Father knows your needs, so that you need not chase them.

33a COMMAND 3 Seek first God's kingdom and his righteousness.

33b–34 Reason 6 All the things the Gentiles chase will be given to you.

34 COMMAND 4 Therefore do not worry.

I. (:25) ANXIETY REGARDING LIFE'S BASIC NECESSITIES REPRESENTS INCONSISTENT THINKING

A. Prohibition against Worry over Having Enough to Live

“For this reason I say to you, do not be anxious for your life, as to what you shall eat, or what you shall drink; nor for your body, as to what you shall put on.”

Scott Harris: In light of what Jesus has already said about making sure that the master you serve is God, you are now to obey the following command and then take security in promises following. The command Jesus gives in verse 25 is predicated upon the principle given in the verses prior. The command is built on the principle that. We are to serve Him and set our hearts upon heaven rather than on the things of earth God is to be our master. The promises given in the passage are predicated on obedience to the commands.

B. Rationale: God Who Gave Us Life Will Also Sustain Our Life – Argument from the Greater to the Lesser

“Is not life more than food, and the body than clothing?”

William Barclay: He begins by pointing out (verse 25) that God gave us life, and if he gave us life, surely we can trust him for the lesser things. If God gave us life, surely we can trust him to give us food to sustain that life. If God gave us bodies, surely we can trust him for garments to clothe these bodies. If anyone gives us a gift which is beyond price, surely we can be certain that such a giver will not be mean, stingy, niggardly, careless and forgetful about much less costly gifts. So, the first argument is that if God gave us life, we can trust him for the things which are necessary to support life.

II. (:26-30) TWO EXAMPLES REGARDING GOD'S PROVISION OF BASIC NECESSITIES

A. (:26-27) Example of God Feeding the Birds

1. (:26) Worry Doesn't Make Sense Since You Are More Valuable to God than Birds

“Look at the birds of the air, that they do not sow, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns, and yet your heavenly Father feeds them. Are you not worth much more than they?”

Grant Osborne: Jesus contrasts birds with human effort—they don't raise crops (“sow/harvest”) or store them away for the future (in barns), yet they always have enough to live on. The point is that they instinctively trust God (his creation) for their needs, while we who have experienced so much more of him fail to do so. If God cares and provides for the “unimportant” birds, how much more will he care for us, his children?

Scott Harris: Remember that they are sitting on the side of a mountain overlooking the sea of Galilee. Jesus is the expert of pointing out something common around Him to explain a spiritual truth, and here Jesus points out the birds that are flying around and uses them to bring home this spiritual truth. . .

Jesus is not saying that we can quit working because God will provide. He is saying that we do not have to be anxious because God will provide. The birds of the field do not sow, reap or gather into barns, but they do work constantly at finding food and eating. They are not anxious about their work for God provides. This is what Jesus is saying to us. Work, but do not be anxious about what the outcome will be. God values you much more than the birds, and He will provide for you needs. Work and plan ahead, but do not fret.

2. (:27) Worry Is Not Productive

“And which of you by being anxious can add a single cubit to his life's span?”

Matthew McCraw: No Need to Worry

Worry cannot add a single minute to your life. Worry cannot add a single dollar to your bank account. Worry cannot add a single point to your GPA. Worry cannot impress your boss. Worry cannot help your kids behave better. Worry cannot increase your church attendance or help your preaching. Worry cannot strengthen your marriage. Worry cannot help any of us.

However, did you know that worrying can have negative effects in your life? Worry can damage your health. Worry can damage your relationships. Worry can rob your joy. Worry can rob opportunities. Our worry can affect ourselves. Our worry can affect others. Our worry can affect our relationship with God.

Worry only has negative effects.

Scott Harris: Dr Charles Mayo, of the famous Mayo Clinic, wrote, “Worry affects the circulation, the heart, the glands and the whole nervous system. I have never met a man or known a man to die of overwork, but I have known a lot who died of worry.” Worry is foolish because it brings no benefit.

B. (:28-30) Example of God Clothing the Lilies of the Field

1. (:28) Lilies Are Incapable of Clothing Themselves

“And why are you anxious about clothing? Observe how the lilies of the field grow; they do not toil nor do they spin,”

2. (:29) God’s Care Surpasses Whatever the Richest Man Could Provide

“yet I say to you that even Solomon in all his glory did not clothe himself like one of these.”

Grant Osborne: Solomon’s incredible wealth is described in 1 Kgs 10:14–29; 2 Chr 9:13–28. His splendid dress was proverbial in Jewish writings (e.g., Josephus, Ant. 8:35–41). Yet it paled into drabness compared to the beauty of any one of the spring flowers, let alone a field of them. In other words, the beauty God creates is incomparably better than what even the wealthiest people can produce, so why not let God take care of your clothing? Again, this does not mean we do not work hard to provide for our family but rather that in doing so, we place our trust in and draw strength from God rather than trust in ourselves and our own profits (cf. Jas 4:13–17).

3. (:30) Worry Doesn't Make Sense Since You Are More Valuable to God than Lilies

“But if God so arrays the grass of the field, which is alive today and tomorrow is thrown into the furnace, will He not much more do so for you, O men of little faith?”

James Oakley: The birds were an example of survival; God keeps them alive. The flowers are a good example for the opposite reason; they're so transient. Here today, gone tomorrow. And yet, God clothes each of those flowers with the most exquisite beauty. If he does that, how much more will he make sure his dear children are clothed.

Scott Harris: Your anxiety level is a good indicator of how much you really trust the Lord. It seems incredible, but we seem to have an easier time trusting that God will save our souls from Hell because of what Jesus has done for us on the cross than to trust that He will provide for our daily needs. Part of that is because dealing with what will happen to our souls after death is far removed from our daily lives. That is an intangible item far in the future, or at least we live as if it is far in the future. The truth is that death could come at anytime. When it comes to what we eat and what we wear, those are tangible items we deal with daily on a personal level. They are the real indicators of your trust in the Lord.

III. (:31-34) CONCLUSION – DON'T BE ANXIOUS BUT TRUST GOD TO PROVIDE

A. (:31) Don't Worry about Present Needs

*“Do not be anxious then, saying,
'What shall we eat?' or
'What shall we drink?' or
'With what shall we clothe ourselves?’”*

Yohan Perera: Worry and Anxiety Indicate Disbelief

(A) God is already aware of our needs because he is omniscient. He meets the needs of his people in due time.

(B) Pagans don't trust God for provision. Hence their obsessions lie with acquiring enough daily commodities.

(C) Therefore worry and anxiety indicate disbelief. Security is the fruit of faith anchored in God.

B. (:32) Trust Your Heavenly Father to Provide – Not Living Like the Unsaved

“For all these things the Gentiles eagerly seek; for your heavenly Father knows that you need all these things.”

William Barclay: Jesus goes on to advance a very fundamental argument against worry. Worry, he says, is characteristic of pagans, and not of those who know what God is like (verse 32). Worry is essentially distrust of God. Such a distrust may be understandable in pagans who believe in a jealous, capricious, unpredictable god; but it is beyond comprehension in anyone who has learned to call God by the name of Father. Christians cannot worry because they believe in the love of God.

C. (:33) Seek First God's Priorities – All Will Be Provided

“But seek first His kingdom and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added to you.”

D. A. Carson: Such goals alone are worthy of one's wholehearted allegiance. For any other concern to dominate one's mind is to stoop to pagan fretting. “In the end, just as there are only two kinds of piety, the self-centered and the God-centered, so there are only two kinds of ambition: one can be ambitious either for oneself or for God. There is no third alternative” (Stott, Message of the Sermon on the Mount, 172). Within such a framework of commitment, Jesus' disciples are assured that all the necessary things will be given to them by their heavenly Father, who demonstrates his faithfulness by his care even for the birds and his concern even for the grass.

Scott Harris: Seeking first the kingdom of God and His righteousness means that the most important issue in every decision I make and in everything I do is determining God's perspective. I ask myself,

- What is most pleasing to God?
- What will best further His kingdom?
- What will best reflect His righteousness?

The answer to those questions then determines my actions.

D. (:34) Don't Worry about Future Needs

*“Therefore do not be anxious for tomorrow; for tomorrow will care for itself.
Each day has enough trouble of its own.”*

D. A. Carson: Worry over tomorrow's misfortunes is nonsensical, because today has enough to occupy our attention and because tomorrow's feared misfortunes may never happen (cf. b. Sanh. 100b; b. Ber. 9a). It is almost as if Jesus, aware that his disciples are still unsettled and immature, ends his argument by setting the highest ideals and motives aside for a moment and, in a whimsical sally, appeals to common sense. At the same time, he is implicitly teaching that, even for his disciples, today's grace is sufficient only for today and should not be wasted on tomorrow. If tomorrow does bring new trouble, there will be new grace to meet it.

Grant Osborne: The basic message of the section is obvious—earthly concerns must always be superseded by heavenly priorities. That is the only solution for anxiety. There are four stages: realize you have a heavenly Father who loves you; “cast all your anxiety on him because he cares for you” (1 Pet 5:7); refuse to worry about material needs but leave them with him; put his concerns first in your life and live kingdom priorities. These are all related yet separate issues—a loving Father, a solid trust in him, a deliberate refusal to worry, a life centered on him.

R. T. France: In speaking of “tomorrow worrying” and of “troubles” as the likely experience of each day v. 34 strikes a more pessimistic (or at least realistic) note than the preceding verses. By including it along with vv. 25–33 Matthew has perhaps deliberately put a sobering question-mark against an unthinkingly euphoric attitude which vv. 25–33 might evoke in some hearers. God's care and provision are assured, but that does not mean that the disciple life is to be one long picnic. Each day will still have its “troubles,” the preceding verses simply provide the assurance that by the grace of God they can be survived.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What type of situations cause you to worry?
- 2) How does worry impact you negatively?
- 3) What are some practical steps you can take to prioritize God's agenda in your decision making process?
- 4) How is your level of anxiety a useful barometer of your level of faith and dependency upon God?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Daniel Doriani: Let us explore how Jesus would have us seek the kingdom, drawing on his own instruction:

1. To seek the kingdom is to seek the King, to love him as Savior and Friend, to bow to him as Lord, to trust the God who has chosen us, redeemed us, and taught us to trust him.
2. To seek the kingdom is to pray for it: "Your kingdom come." We pray for kingdom causes, not just for local and personal concerns.
3. To seek the kingdom is to evangelize, that is, to bring others into the kingdom, to introduce them to our King's beneficent reign over all of life.
4. To seek the kingdom is to desire that God be known and glorified as King throughout the earth. To seek the kingdom is to submit personally to God's reign by obeying him. We seek the kingdom when we obey God at some personal cost. A Christian retailer seeks the kingdom when he closes his stores on Sunday, even though it is a good day for retail sales, so that he can worship and rest, and model the same for his employees.
5. To seek the kingdom at work means pursuing wages and profits in ways that please God, knowing that that may lead to less money, at least in the short run.
6. To seek the kingdom means to have an eye on social reform, so that society may at least approximate the justice that God desires. For example, it means that public officials should do all they can to stop the spread of state-sponsored gambling, and, if possible, reverse it.
7. To seek the kingdom is to pursue righteousness in public places and distant lands, if we can. It also means restraining something as small and personal as our tongue—checking a sarcastic remark or refusing to repeat a morsel of gossip.

The context suggests that seeking the kingdom especially means dethroning wealth and possessions as our first pursuits. We must not hoard treasures or live for pleasure, but put our treasures in heaven by giving to kingdom causes (Matt. 6:19–21). We should watch the way we think about wealth. Wealth is a lesser good—a useful servant, but a miserable master. We should even watch the way we talk about wealth. When we make a decision, we should speak in terms of God's way. We should not speak as if money makes our decisions, as if "We can afford it" or “We can’t afford it” is a sufficient guide to most purchases. Let God’s will be our guide, and let us speak that way.

To seek first the kingdom does not mean Christians lack ambition; rather, it means we have different ambitions. Everyone needs a purpose, a direction, an ambition in life. It is sad when twenty-year-olds drift in and out of college, shift from one job to another, or go from one relationship to another. It is sadder still when a mature adult drifts aimlessly.

Ambition has two sides. There is selfish ambition, the desire for success and control as an end in itself. Dictators embody ambition at its worst. For them, power is its own reward. Greedy businessmen can also acquire wealth far beyond all needs, simply to win the game of commerce. Such ambitions are evil. “Selfish ambition” is one of the works of the flesh (Gal. 5:20). It is vain, harmful to others, and disorderly (Phil. 2:3; James 3:14–16).

But there are other ambitions, including the aspiration to unfold what is strongest and best in oneself, to accomplish goals that may improve this world a little. The Bible commends such ambitions, including the ambition to preach Christ (Rom. 15:20), the ambition to lead a quiet, productive life (1 Thess. 4:11), and the ambition to please God (2 Cor. 5:9). Ambition is good, if it seeks God’s kingdom and his righteousness.

Gregory Brown: How to Overcome Worry

1. We Must Focus on Eternal Matters Instead of Temporary Ones
2. We Must Focus on Our Father’s Providential Care
3. We Must Recognize Our Great Value to God
4. We Must Recognize How Unproductive It Is
5. We Must Pursue God’s Promises
6. We Must Focus on God’s Grace for Today

<https://bible.org/seriespage/29-how-overcome-worry-matthew-625-34>

James Oakley: Question of Ambition

But behind this issue of worry is the bigger question of ambition. Our anxiety betrays our ambitions.

Ambition is about what you’re living for. None of us just lives life one day at a time with no purpose or direction. We all have things we’re aiming at, chasing after, hoping for. The question is: What?

And Jesus gets right to the heart of that in verse 31. Having said not to worry, he goes on like this: Do not be anxious, saying, ‘What shall we eat?’ or ‘What shall we drink?’ or ‘What shall we wear?’ For the Gentiles seek after all these things. The Gentiles, those who do not know God, seek after these things. That’s what they live for. It’s what their lives are about.

If that is what your ambition is focused on – food, drink, clothing, that reduces us to little more than animals. That’s what animals live for. You can talk about pets, you can talk about livestock, you can talk about wildlife – they live for their stomach, their comfort and their reproduction. . .

Verse 25 asks the question: Is not life more than food, and the body more than clothing? Is there not more to life than this? And verse 33 then tells us what that more is. Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. We don't need to live just for food, drink and clothing. There is more to life than providing for our daily needs. That more is God's kingdom, and his righteousness.

We can seek after God's kingdom. Jesus is God's king, so when he arrived so did God's kingdom. But not everybody realizes this. Not everyone knows that Jesus is the best king the world has ever known. Plenty of people try to run their own lives, and do not enjoy the forgiveness he offers either. So we can seek after the growth of God's kingdom, using our lives to see more and more people acknowledge Jesus as God's king and committing to following him. That gives you something lasting to aim your life at.

And we can seek after God's righteousness. God is perfect and just and good, but we are not. My life is full of flaws; I make mistakes every day; I don't live as Jesus would want me to. And it's not just my life; the world is full of injustice, things that aren't right. People are taken advantage of; the poor don't have enough to eat; and so we could go on. If we want to make our lives chase after something worthwhile, that could be God's righteousness. Seeking to grow more and more like Jesus in the way I live, and doing all I can to make the world a more just, a more righteous place.

That's the choice. Live for food, drink and clothing. Live for God and his righteousness. It's about our ambitions.

Jerry Shirley: Don't Worry

A good first step is confessing it as the sin that it is—Worry is not simply a weakness...it is wickedness. What a poor testimony for a Christian to display to the lost world...to have the promises of God, to be on the winning side, and still to live in the fleshly realm of worry all the time.

HOW CAN WE STOP WORRYING?

I. THINK OF HIS GREATNESS.

- A. SEEN IN THE WONDER OF HIS PROVISIONS. Vs 26, 28
- B. SEEN IN THE WORTH OF HIS PEOPLE. Vs 26b

II. TRUST IN HIS GRACIOUSNESS.

- A. WORK OF HIS GRACE. V30-31
- B. WISDOM OF HIS GRACE. V32

III. THRUST INTO HIS GOODNESS. V33-34

- A. GOODNESS OF HIS WILL. V33a
- B. GOODNESS OF HIS WARRANTY. V33b

THE CURE FOR WORRY

- Remember the "Father Factor". [V. 32].
- Remember the "Focus Factor". When worried, you are out of focus.
- Remember the "Future Factor". Don't borrow tomorrow's troubles. Live a day at a time.

TEXT: MATTHEW 7:1-6

TITLE: PROHIBITION AGAINST CENSORIOUS JUDGING BALANCED BY THE NEED TO EXERCISE DISCERNMENT

BIG IDEA:

DON'T BE OVERLY CRITICAL OF OTHERS BUT DON'T BE NAÏVE REGARDING VICIOUS OPPONENTS OF GOD'S TRUTH

INTRODUCTION:

Charles Swindoll: Jesus' rapid-fire delivery of powerful principles in Matthew 7:1-12 builds up to a profound climax in what we know today as the Golden Rule —“Treat people the same way you want them to treat you” (7:12). These unforgettable and convicting words have the same impact on our lives as they did on the lives of the original audience on the mountain by the Sea of Galilee nearly two thousand years ago. And they come to us with the same authority of the same King.

R. T. France: Vv. 1-5 address the very down-to-earth issue of unfairly critical attitudes to others, which combined with a naive lack of self-criticism threaten to disrupt a close-knit community such as that of Jesus' first disciples. A simple negative instruction (v. 1) is supported by an explanatory comment (v. 2) and by a parable which uses broad humor to show up the ludicrous inappropriateness of such behavior (vv. 3-5). Underlying the whole pericope is a principle of reciprocity such as we have noted above in 6:14-15, which will be taken up again in the summary in v. 12. We must expect to be treated as we treat other people

William Barclay: There are three great reasons why no one should judge another person.

1. We never know the whole facts or the whole person.
2. It is almost impossible for any of us to be strictly impartial in our judgment. Again and again, we are swayed by instinctive and unreasoning reactions to people.
3. But it was Jesus who stated the supreme reason why we should not judge others. No one is good enough to judge another person. Jesus drew a vivid picture showing the difficulty in trying to extract a speck of dust from someone else's eye when all the time there is a plank in our own eye. The humour of the picture would raise a laugh which would drive the lesson home.

E. Michael Green: We are not, therefore, to judge our brothers and sisters (7:1-5) but to serve them. After all, they are accountable to God, not to us. We can never know the whole story about them; but God does. And all too often what we condemn in others are the weaknesses we dare not face up to in ourselves. So it ill befits us to point out the speck of sawdust in our brother's or sister's eye when we have a great plank sticking out of our own, but are too blind to see it. Who said Jesus had no sense of humour? No, instead of the critical spirit, disciples should be known for their humility, recognizing their own shortcomings.

Daniel Doriani: Jesus gives several reasons why we should “not judge.”

- First, God is the judge of mankind. We have no right to usurp his role (7:1).
- Second, when we judge others, we invite judgment in return, both from God and from the people around us (7:2–3).
- Third, since we cannot evaluate ourselves very accurately, why should we try to critique the flaws of others (7:4–5)?

So then, instead of judging the sins of our neighbors, we should ask God for grace to remove our own sins (7:7–11).

I. (:1-2) AVOID ARROGANT CENSORIOUS JUDGMENT OF OTHERS

A. (:1) Warning of Boomerang Effect

Keith Throop: Many people misuse this verse in order to avoid being criticized or confronted with sin. In fact, I have heard not only believers, but also unbelievers say things like, “Christians aren’t supposed to judge, are they?” This is usually thought to pretty much end the argument whenever any judgment is made about a person’s views or behavior. In fact, many seem to think that this verse advocates a universal acceptance of any viewpoint or lifestyle. But when Jesus gave this command He never intended us to suspend our critical faculties or to never make value judgments about the views or actions of others. And those who take it that way are just plain wrong. (There I go judging!)

Donald Hagner: The command $\mu\eta$ κρίνετε, lit. “do not judge,” should not be taken as a prohibition of all judging or discerning of right and wrong, since elsewhere in Matthew’s record of the teaching of Jesus—indeed, already in v 6—the making of such judgments by disciples is presupposed (see 7:15–20; 10:11–15; 16:6, 12; 18:17–18). Furthermore, v 2a assumes the making of fair or charitable judgments and does not entail the avoidance of judgments altogether. The meaning here, accordingly, is that unfair or uncharitable judgments should be avoided.

Grant Osborne: It cannot refer to discerning or evaluating right and wrong. All such are valid for believers (e.g., 1 Cor 5:5; Phil 3:2; Gal 6:1; Heb 3:13; 1 John 4:1). So what does this judgmental attitude connote? It means looking down on a person with a superior attitude, criticizing or condemning them without a loving concern (the opposite of the second we-petition on forgiveness, 6:12).

D. A. Carson: Those who “judge” like this will in turn be “judged,” not by men (which would be of little consequence), but by God (which fits the solemn tone of the discourse). The disciple who takes it on himself to be the judge of what another does usurps the place of God (“Why do you judge your brother? Or you again, why do you regard your brother with contempt? For we will all stand before the judgment seat of God" - see note Romans 14:10) and therefore becomes answerable to Him. The hina me ("in order that...not"; NIV, "or") should therefore be given full telic (tending toward an end) force.

B. (:2) Warning of Principle of Reciprocity

“For in the way you judge, you will be judged; and by your standard of measure, it will be measured to you.”

Keith Throop: 2 Possible Interpretations:

1. Perhaps Jesus is warning us that we will be judged by other people in the same way that we judge them.

2. Perhaps Jesus is warning us that we will be judged by God according to the way we judge others. I think this is the correct interpretation for several reasons.
 - First, it better fits Jesus’ description of a future judgment that is certain. He says, “with what judgment you judge you will be judged” (italics mine). The only certain future judgment all of us will face is the judgment of God.

 - Second, it better fits Jesus’ apparent use of the Divine Passive in verse 2, when He says, “with what judgment you judge you will be judged” and “with the measure you use, it will be measured back to you” (italics mine).

 - Third, and finally, the interpretation that sees Jesus as referring to the judgment of God better fits the context, in which He has previously taught us to pray that we will be forgiven as we forgive others (6:12). He offered this explanation:
 - NKJ Matthew 6:14-15 For if you forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. 15 But if you do not forgive men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.

 - In other words, Jesus has already said that God’s judgment of us will reflect how forgiving we are of others. Now Jesus is asserting essentially the same principle with regard to a judgmental attitude (which is also usually an unforgiving attitude). If we judge others without recognizing first our own sin and our own need for forgiveness, then we judge in arrogance and hypocrisy. And when we are so unforgiving and lacking in proper self-examination, we will be judged accordingly.

Grant Osborne: The absence of mercy and love in the way we treat others will result in unmerciful judgment from God at the final judgment (Jas 2:13, “judgment without mercy will be shown to anyone who has not been merciful”).

R. T. France: For the warning that criticism can be turned back against the one who criticizes compare our proverb, "People who live in glass houses should not throw stones." It is this reciprocal principle which is the focus of the whole pericope, rather than a prohibition of any use of the critical faculty in itself.

Bethany Bible Church: I believe that the verse that follows these words teaches us what is being forbidden in the phrase "Judge not". Look at verse 2; "For with what judgment you judge, you will be judged; and with the measure you use, it will be measured back to you." Jesus doesn't speak here of a judgment based on God's standards revealed in His word. He speaks of a judgment made on the bases of a standard that we come up with on our own - that is, "with what judgment YOU judge", or of a measuring being made "with the measure YOU use".

Clearly, the criteria for judgment that's being used is not something from God, but something we create. Jesus is speaking of those cases in which we develop our own standard of judgment; and then evaluate someone, or discriminate against someone, or condemn someone on the basis of standards of our own making.

A word that comes to mind is "judgmentalism". Any sensible person knows that there's a difference between exercising good judgment, and acting 'judgmentally'. And what Jesus is forbidding in this command is a spirit of judgmentalism. The Bible gives some very clear examples of what this sinful "judgmentalism" would look like. The apostle James, for example, wrote;

My brethren, do not hold the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with partiality. For if there should come into your assembly a man with gold rings, in fine apparel, and there should also come in a poor man in filthy clothes, and you pay attention to the one wearing the fine clothes and say to him, "You sit here in a good place," and say to the poor man, "You stand there," or, "Sit here at my footstool," have you not shown partiality among yourselves, and become judges with evil thoughts? (James 2:1-4).

Jesus' command means that we are to "judge not" in the sense that we are not to show partiality to people based on external things. Jesus has told us elsewhere, "Do not judge according to appearances, but judge with righteous judgment" (John 7:24).

Something else that James wrote teaches us about what it means to "judge not". Unfortunately, it speaks of one of our favorite pastimes. James says:

Do not speak evil of one another, brethren. He who speaks evil of a brother and judges a brother, speaks evil of the law and judges the law. But if you judge the law, you are not a doer of the law but a judge. There is one Lawgiver, who is able to save and to destroy. Who are you to judge another? (James 4:11-12).

I saw a button once that said, "If you can't say something nice about someone . . . then sit next to me so I can hear you better." We're all guilty of this sort of judgmentalism at times, aren't we? Jesus' command is a call to stop gossiping about one another, or slandering one another. We're not to hold someone's faults up to others for review and critique and evaluate one another accordingly.

II. (:3-5) AVOID FOCUSING ON THE FAULTS OF OTHERS WHEN YOU SHOULD BE CORRECTING YOURSELF – CONVICTING PARABLE

A. (:3) Misdirected Vision

“And why do you look at the speck that is in your brother's eye, but do not notice the log that is in your own eye?”

Donald Hagner: The repeated reference in these verses to “your brother” indicates that it is primarily the Christian community that is in view. δοκός, “log,” is an intentionally ludicrous exaggeration in its contrast to the speck of sawdust. What is a tiny flaw in another is seen so clearly by a censorious person, while ironically what is an outrageously huge failure in the latter is conveniently overlooked altogether. It is the self-righteous, censorious person who is particularly eager to correct the faults of others. . . Also to be kept in mind in this analogy, however, is the familiarity of Jesus with the carpenter’s shop (cf. Matt 13:55, “the carpenter’s son”; Mark 6:3, “the carpenter”).

B. (:4) Misplaced Focus

“Or how can you say to your brother, 'Let me take the speck out of your eye,' and behold, the log is in your own eye?”

C. (:5) Misguided Priorities

“You hypocrite, first take the log out of your own eye, and then you will see clearly to take the speck out of your brother's eye.”

John MacArthur: Now, listen to me very carefully. This is fabulous, as we draw this to a close. Immediately we run into two dangers right now. You say, “I’m not going to judge. Woo-hoo, I hear that message. I’m going to go in a corner, and confess my sin, and take care of me, boy. I’m not going to get into this,” and immediately run into two dangers.

Danger number one is we will not be willing to confront a sinning brother. We’ll say, “Boy, I’m not going to. Oh, no, I’m not going to judge. Judge not, lest ye be judged. Who am I to say? We certainly don’t want to do that.” [addressed in :5b]

And danger number two, we will not discern or discriminate at all. We’ll say, “Well, we don’t want to get into that. [addressed in :6] Boy, oh, whatever you say, we’ll just take everything in.” And those are the two dangers. And we would be devastated, because if we don’t confront sin, then leaven is never put out of the lump, right? And the church is going to get corrupted. And if we don’t discriminate the true from the false, we’re all going to go waltzing down the line into heresy. So the two dangers are that we would fail to deal with a brother in sin, and we would fail to deal with a heretic, or one who would corrupt the faith, or one who would mock the faith, or blaspheme the faith; and we must do that.

He's not saying, "Don't help a sinning brother." He's saying, "Get your own act together first, because then your help is going to be the right kind. It's going to be the humble help. It's going to be the meek and quiet spirit." "If you restore a brother," – it says in Galatians 6:1, "restore him in love, in meekness and fear, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." You don't come to a sinning brother on top, you come from underneath, in humility.

III. (:6) AVOID INDISCRIMINATE PROCLAMATION OF TRUTH TO VICIOUS OPPONENTS

*"Do not give what is holy to dogs, and do not throw your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet,
and turn and tear you to pieces."*

Charles Simeon: Caution to be Used in Reproving

The words before us are connected with the prohibition respecting the judging of others. To judge others uncharitably will expose us to similar treatment from them, as well as to the displeasure of Almighty God. Before we presume to judge others at all, we ought to be diligent in searching out and amending our own faults; without which we are but ill qualified to reprove the faults of others. We ought also to consider the state of the person whom we undertake to reprove: for if he be hardened in his wickedness, and disposed to resent our well-meant endeavours, it will be more prudent to let him alone, and to wait for some season when we may speak to him with a better prospect of success. Such is the import of the caution in our text; from whence we may observe,

- I. That religious instruction is often most unworthily received—
The value of religious instruction is but little known—
Many, instead of being pleased, are only irritated and offended at it
- II. That great caution is to be used in administering it—

John MacArthur: Jesus, to His disciples, could only reveal certain things, and He had to hide other things. And to the world it says, "And He hid them from them, and revealed other things unto the babes." Jesus didn't say everything to everybody. . .

Now who are the hogs and the dogs? Look at 2 Peter 2, and I'll show you, 2 Peter 2. It says, in this chapter, that, "There were false prophets among the people; and there will be false teachers," 2 Peter 2:1. And verse 2 says, "And many will follow their pernicious ways."

Listen, many are going to follow the pernicious ways of false prophets, false teachers. So all the people who are involved in the false systems of religion; the adamant, covetous, lustful, evil, vile people such as those who were drowned in the flood, verse 5; those who were destroyed in Sodom and Gomorrah for their homosexuality; those who walk in the lust of uncleanness, who are self-willed, who mock angels, who are scabs. He calls them scabs; filth spots. . .

Now what is it saying? What is the holy thing, and what is the pearl? I believe, without a doubt, it's the Word of God. It's the truth of the Word of God, encompassing the gospel and all of the contents of the Scripture.

Bruce Hurt: We are not to continue to present the gospel to those who repeatedly mock, scorn and deride it. To be sure, this determination sometimes is obvious as in the case of rank infidels but in other situations requires God's wisdom (see role of prayer in Matthew 7:7-8-note) and Spirit controlled guidance. There is a limit Jesus says and when that time arrives, it is high time for the ambassador of Christ to depart company.

And so we see Jesus instructing His disciples "*And into whatever city or village you enter, inquire who is worthy in it; and abide there until you go away. And as you enter the house, give it your greeting. And if the house is worthy, let your greeting of peace come upon it; but if it is not worthy, let your greeting of peace return to you. And whoever does not receive you, nor heed your words, as you go out of that house or that city, shake off the dust of your feet. Truly I say to you, it will be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city." (Matthew 10:11-15)

In the same way Jesus pronounced judgment on the Galilean towns which for the most part rejected the light of His presence and His gospel "Woe to you, Chorazin! Woe to you, Bethsaida! For if the miracles had occurred in Tyre and Sidon which occurred in you, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. Nevertheless I say to you, it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon in the day of judgment, than for you. And you, Capernaum, will not be exalted to heaven, will you? You shall descend to Hades; for if the miracles had occurred in Sodom which occurred in you, it would have remained to this day." (Mt 11:21-23)

And we see Paul's reaction to the rejection of the Gospel by the Jews of Corinth "After these things he left Athens and went to Corinth. And he found a certain Jew named Aquila, a native of Pontus, having recently come from Italy with his wife Priscilla, because Claudius had commanded all the Jews to leave Rome. He came to them, and because he was of the same trade, he stayed with them and they were working; for by trade they were tent-makers. And he was reasoning in the synagogue every Sabbath and trying to persuade Jews and Greeks. But when Silas and Timothy came down from Macedonia, Paul began devoting himself completely to the word, solemnly testifying to the Jews that Jesus was the Christ. And when they resisted and blasphemed, he shook out his garments and said to them, "Your blood be upon your own heads! I am clean.

From now on I shall go to the Gentiles.” (Acts 18:1-6, see also Acts 13:44-51, 28:17-28; Ro 16:17-18).

Writing to Titus on the Isle of Crete Paul instructed him "Reject a factious (divisive, one who causes division) man after a first and second warning, knowing that such a man is perverted and is sinning, being self-condemned.” (Titus 3:10-11)

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How should you respond to non-Christians who improperly call you out for “Judging others”?
- 2) Why is it so easy to spot faults in others and so difficult to own up to deficiencies in our own life?
- 3) How should we allow mercy to triumph over judgment?
- 4) Who are the “dogs” and “swine” in today’s context?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Charles Swindoll: Exhortation must come from a position of love and humility rather than hypocritical pride. Far too many Christians, however, like to play a game I’ll call “Let’s Label,” also known as “The Judging Game.” The gameplay is pretty simple: Someone finds something they don’t like or agree with about a person, usually by quickly and superficially surveying the person’s external qualities. Then they jump to negative, critical opinions about that person. These self-proclaimed judges never take the time to dig deeply, get the facts straight, and draw fair conclusions about a person. Instead, they slap the person with a label and then interpret all that person’s words and actions through that grid. Finally —and this is key —they share their inaccurate observations and conclusions openly and freely with others. . .

What Jesus is condemning in the Sermon on the Mount is a judgmental, negative, haughty attitude that assesses others with a suspicious spirit. People who have such an attitude are always on the hunt for faults, mistakes, or imperfections in others. And they find them! There are always petty flaws and failures to be exposed. They do this out of an attitude of superiority, presumption, prejudice, and pride. The result is a destructive, condemning attitude and a blindness to one’s own faults. This is the glaring hypocrisy that Jesus emphasizes here.

David Thompson: DISCIPLES MUST STOP SELF-RIGHTEOUS, UNMERCIFUL, PREJUDICED JUDGMENTS AGAINST OTHERS WHICH ARE DETERMINED BY THEIR OWN SELF-RIGHTEOUS STANDARDS.

David Guzik: This is the Bible verse that seems to be most popular in our present day. But most the people who quote this verse don't understand what Jesus said. They seem to think Jesus commanded a universal acceptance of any lifestyle or teaching. If we see what Jesus said in Matthew 7:15-16, He commands us to know people by the fruit of their life, and some sort of assessment is necessary for that.. The Christian is called to unconditionally love. But the Christian is not called to unconditional approval. We really can love people who do things that should not be approved of. Instead, Jesus is speaking against being judgmental, that is, judging motives and the inner man, which only God can know. We can judge the fruit of a man, but we can rarely judge their motives with accuracy.

Jesus does not prohibit judgment of others. He only requires that our judgment be completely fair, and that we only judge others by a standard we would also like to be judged by. Most of our judgment in regard to others is wrong, not because we judge according to a standard, but because we are hypocritical in the application of that standard - we ignore the standard in our own life.

We judge others by one standard, and ourselves by another standard - being far more generous to ourselves than others. With the measure you use, it will be measured back to you.

John MacArthur: Stop Criticizing

Now the area of human relations goes all the way through verse 12, but we're only going to be considering the first six this morning, and we'll get to the second section, the second six verses, next time. But suffice it to say at this point that the Pharisees were so proud, and so self-styled, and so self-righteous, and so smug, and so convinced of their own superiority, that one of the natural results of that was that they became totally condemning and judgmental of everybody else. . .

What is He talking about? What He's talking about is the critical, judgmental, condemning, self-righteous egotism of the Pharisees. They weren't criticizing people because of sin, they were criticizing them because of their personality, their character, their weaknesses, their frailties; perhaps the way they looked, or the way they dressed, or the fact that they didn't do the things the way they did them. They were criticizing their motives, which they couldn't see or perceive anyway in their humanness. You don't know why a person does what he does. . .

And what the Lord here is forbidding is that officious, hasty, unwarranted, unjust, unmerciful condemnation that is spawned by self-righteous pride. We're not to do that. And then worst of all, after we've made that judgment in our heart, we go tell people about it, and we become a tale bearer or a gossip. So we're not to do that. He gives three reasons why not. And I'm going to go through these rapidly, so hang on to your seat.

Number one: To make that kind of a judgment manifests an erroneous view of God, verse 1, an erroneous view of God: "Judge not, that ye be not judged." And He simply reminds them that they are not the final court. "You do this, and you will be judged. Have you forgotten that you are not God?" That is precisely the bottom line in this sin. To judge other people, their motives and so forth, is to play God. It is to usurp the divine position. . .

Secondly: Don't judge, because it's an erroneous view of God, and also an erroneous view of others, verse 2. You see, most people think that they can judge, because they're under a different condition than everybody else is. The Pharisees thought they were exempt. They lived on some strata beyond the purview of any judgment. I mean they were up here where everything was fine, and only people down here got it. But he says in verse 2, "With what judgment you judge, you'll be judged; and with what measure you measure, it'll be measured to you again." You're going to get just what you give. . .

And so I believe it's talking about God's judgment. And what He's saying is – and I want you to see this, it's a powerful statement: "What judgment you judge, God will judge you with; and what measure you measure, God will measure to you again." In other words, God is going to evaluate you on the basis of your knowledge, your light. If you say, "All right, I know enough to judge all of you people on this," then you prove you know enough to be judged on it yourself. Right? . . .

Finally, of these three reasons not to judge: when you critically judge other people, you manifest an erroneous view of yourself. I mean are you so good that you can sit around checking out everybody else? I mean you've got nothing to work on? I mean you've got it all under control, so that you could spend your time evaluating everyone else? Some of us would do well to take the time we spend criticizing other people, and put it to action in prayer and confession of our own sin somewhere in a closet; because until we get our own life straightened out, we have little usefulness in trying to assist someone else. . .

And so the plank is self-righteousness. And as long as you're self-righteous, and you think you're all right, and you never bother dealing with your own sin, there's no way you're going to help anybody else. You're blind. It is the sin of subtle, self-righteous criticism; and it's a plank in your own eye, and you cannot help anybody else.

S. Lewis Johnson: Generally speaking, I think that the average interpretation of this text is, one must always think the best of others: judge not, that you be not judged. And therefore, it's a dangerous thing to pass judgment on anything that pertains to someone else. Or, perhaps we might, in the exposition of it, given by others in popular language, say that it is taken to mean that all judgment of others is totally forbidden. That's a serious error. It's not only a serious error, but it leads to heresy and false doctrine, and the heresy and false doctrine that might destroy the testimony of the Christian church.

In fact, it is the failure of individuals within the Christian church to exercise discipline, based on biblical, discriminating judgment that has led to a great deal of difficulties that exist in the leading churches of our day. You can, for example, trace a failure to apply the truths of holy Scripture with regard to judgment, discriminating judgment. You can trace the failure of some of the leading churches to this very fact. . .

Another question is raised in this passage. You probably noticed it as you read the 6th verse. Is the gospel that we proclaim for all the lost, or should all the lost be evangelized at all times? . . .

The lesson is that if we judge in a censorious fashion, if we develop the habit of this spiteful criticism, then we shall be judged by God. And furthermore, we shall also be judged by men. There is, in other words, a principle of mutual reciprocity in judgment, and therefore it is something that Christians should avoid. . .

Now the second lesson is that we must exercise self-criticism. Very interestingly – to me, at least, being a student of the Greek New Testament for a few years – is that in the verses 3, 4, and 5, there are four different words for “seeing” or “observation.” For example, in the 3rd verse we read, “Why beholdest thou the mote which is in thy brother's eye?” That is a Greek word that means, simply, to look at something, just as I am looking at you. It means to look without thinking, and that, of course, is applicable also to me. “Why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not?” – this is a word that means “to fasten down upon.” You look out and you see the splinter in someone else's eye, and you do not spend a great deal of time thinking about it, but you do not consider – fasten your mind down upon – the beam that is in your eye.

And then he goes on to say, “*Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, let me pull the mote out of thine eye and behold (here's the third word for seeing, and this is a word that means, in its root, “to see with perception”) a beam is in thine own eye. Thou hypocrite, first cast the beam out of thine own eye, and then thou shalt see clearly?”—and this is the emphatic form of the word translated “beholdest” in verse 3 (the first of these words for observation). So that to see clearly, one must cast the beam out of one's eye. These four words for observation illuminate the emphasis and stress of the passage. . .*

Now, I'm sure that when the Lord Jesus first said this, this must have produced a chuckle, because the idea of a person looking out and seeing a little splinter in someone else's eye, when he himself has a rafter protruding from his own eye, must have produced something of a chuckle as the Lord gave this to the disciples. But this judgment, this self-criticism, should be exercised for the good of others. Thou hypocrite, first cast the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to cast the mote out of thy brother's eye. It is possible to be critical in an approved sense. And, it is evident that the requirements for criticism in the approved sense are that we ourselves be spiritual, and that we have cast the beam out of our own eyes previous to that. . .

Well now we come to the third and final of the lessons that come from this passage. We must employ sensible criticism. “Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and lacerate you.” . . .

Why is this text given? Why, it is given to limit the range of the application of “judge not.” It is true that we are to judge not that we be not judge. But we are not thereby to assume that no criticism is justifiable. And as a matter of fact, there is a particular kind of criticism, and action that follows it, that must be carried out. Now of course, it is necessary, in order to determine who are dogs and who are swine in order to make judgments. It is impossible to do otherwise. People do not go around with a tag on them, “I am a dog.” Others do not go around saying, “I am a hog.” It is necessary for us to pass judgment in order to know who are the dogs and who are the swine. Therefore, sensible criticism is justifiable on our Lord’s own words. . .

Why, this teaches discrimination in evangelism. Discrimination in evangelism. Now I say to you, this is a teaching that is rarely, if ever, taught. I dare say that if you have taken a class in personal evangelism, you have rarely, if ever, heard a lecture on keeping quiet. And you probably have never heard a lecture on, “Do not give truth to the unsaved.” Yet that is not what our Lord says. Give not that which is holy to the dogs. Do not cast your pearls before swine. Discrimination in evangelism. . . he refers to individuals who have heard that message and have failed to respond to it, who are in a state of rebellion against the truth of God.

Ray Pritchard: Practical Checklist to assess whether one is prone to judging with a critical or condemnatory spirit:

- Blowing small things all out of proportion.
- Maximizing the sins of others—their faults, foibles and their petty ways.
- Coming to quick, hasty, negative conclusions.
- Making mountains out of molehills.
- Getting involved in situations where you should not be involved.
- Passing along critical stories to others.
- Having a strong bias to find others guilty.
- Being too harsh even when speaking the truth.
- Adding aggravating remarks when telling a story.
- Dismissing an unkind remark by saying, “I was only joking.”
- Saying something critical and then trying to cover it up.
- Being unkind and then quickly changing the subject.
- Telling too many people about what others have done to us.
- Taking pleasure in condemning others.
- Telling the truth in order to hurt, not to help.
- Putting others down in order to make yourself look better.
- Minimizing your sins while magnifying the sins of others.

TEXT: MATTHEW 7:7-11

TITLE: OUR HEAVENLY FATHER ANSWERS PRAYER

BIG IDEA:

GOOD THINGS COME TO US FROM OUR GOOD HEAVENLY FATHER IN RESPONSE TO PERSISTENT PRAYER

INTRODUCTION:

Why is our generation so weak in the area of prayer? This seems to be especially true among Christian men. Where are the prayer warriors of past ages? We must have an inflated opinion of what we can accomplish and a diminished expectation of how our heavenly Father longs to work and provide in response to our petitions. How could we invest our time more productively than in the area of prayer? This passage is a tremendous encouragement to keep persistent in our petitions.

D. A. Carson: Bonnard best exemplifies those who say there is no connection at all between vv.7–11 and the preceding verses. Yet there are, in fact, deep thematic connections. Schlatter perceives one of them when he remarks that Jesus, having told his disciples the difficulties, now exhorts them to prayer. Moreover, one of the most pervasive features of Jesus' teaching on prayer is the assurance it will be heard. But such praying is not for selfish ends but always for the glory of God according to kingdom concerns. So here: the Sermon on the Mount lays down the righteousness, sincerity, humility, purity, and love expected of Jesus' followers, and now it assures them such gifts are theirs if sought through prayer. . .

Far too often, Christians do not have the marks of richly textured discipleship because they do not ask, or they ask with selfish motives (Jas 4:2–3). But the best gifts, those advocated by the Sermon on the Mount, are available to “everyone” (v.8) who persistently asks, seeks, and knocks.

William Barclay: Everyone who prays is bound to want to know to what kind of God they are praying. So we want to know in what kind of atmosphere our prayers will be heard. Are we praying to a grudging God out of whom every gift has to be squeezed and coerced? Are we praying to a mocking God whose gifts may well be double-edged? Are we praying to a God whose heart is so kind that he is more ready to give than we are to ask?

Jesus came from a nation which loved prayer. The Jewish Rabbis said the loveliest things about prayer.

- “God is as near to his creatures as the ear to the mouth.”
- “Human beings can hardly hear two people talking at once, but God, if all the world calls to him at the one time, hears their cry.”
- “A man is annoyed by being worried by the requests of his friends, but with God, all the time a man puts his needs and requests before him, God loves him all the more.”

Jesus had been brought up to love prayer; and in this passage he gives us the Christian charter of prayer.

Grant Osborne: [This passage] pictures a dependent child asking “Father” for something needed; this fits the emphasis on Abba in the Lord’s Prayer (see on 6:9). A child expects a loving response and will get one. There was a Jewish tradition that celebrated men of God with “holy chutzpah, or boldness,” who had the power to receive great things from God. Jesus boldly promises this power to his disciples.

Donald Hagner: The passage readily divides into two major sections:

- (1) three exhortations and complementary assertions of God’s faithfulness, vv 7–8;
- (2) two examples of human faithfulness, followed by an argument a minori ad maius argument concerning the faithfulness of God to those who call upon him, vv 9–11.

Both sections involve considerable parallelism. Each of the three imperatives in v 7 is immediately followed by the result expressed in the future tense; v 8 reflects the same sequence of verbs (except for λαμβάνει, “receives,” which actively expresses the meaning of the passive δοθήσεται, “shall be given”). Furthermore, the rhetorical questions in vv 9 and 10 are almost exactly parallel in form. V 11 ends with a reference to the giving of what is asked for and thus forms an inclusio with the beginning of v 7.

I. (:7-8) THE GOLDEN HARVEST LAW OF PRAYER – THE PROMISE THAT PERSISTENCE IN PRAYER WILL PREVAIL

A. (:7) The Unlimited Promise of the Harvest Law of Prayer – requires effort over time; requires faith

“as a man sows, so shall he also reap”

Acrostic: ASK

1. Ask – and it shall be given to you

A Gift from God’s grace

Involves confessing bankruptcy and inadequacy to achieve on your own

2. Seek – and you shall find

A Treasure of priceless worth (cf. the commercials)

Involves right priorities and diligently searching for it; mining it

3. Knock – and it shall be opened to you

An Open Door to God’s blessings

Involves taking initiative in step of faith to proceed through open door

Daniel Doriani: In context, therefore, “Ask and it will be given to you” leads to the gospel. Advocates of prosperity theology think it leads to material blessing. If we ask with enough faith, they say, God will give us whatever we desire. But Jesus teaches us to seek our daily bread, not our daily caviar. Further, Jesus' topic is discipleship, not wealth. When Jesus instructs his disciples to ask, seek, and knock, he means we should seek grace to cover our sin and strength to grow in holiness. God will grant that prayer. It is said, "One may be a truly industrious man, and yet poor in temporal things; but one cannot be a truly praying man, and yet poor in spiritual things." . . .

But Jesus places the emphasis on the God who hears, not on the man or woman who asks. He says that God loves his children and knows how to give them good gifts. If we ask, the Father will give what he knows we need. He says this three ways, and each seems to build on the other:

1. "Ask" is a general term. In context, it means "Ask God in prayer."
2. "Seek" implies that we may not know exactly what we are looking for or precisely how to pray (Rom. 8:26). A child asks a mother who is close at hand, but when the mother is not visible, the child seeks her. When we seek God, we will find him and discover what we should desire.
3. "Knock" implies that we seek something that is inaccessible to us. We have tried and failed to attain something, to open a door. We cannot, but God can and will open it, if it is right for us.

J. Ligon Duncan: And I want you to notice, that though all of those three words are referring to the same thing, they are pressing towards the same end, they are said for the same purposes. You see an ascending order of emphasis in those prayers. There is an ascending force, or urgency, in those prayers. We are to ask, but more than that, we are to seek, but more than that, we are to knock. Each of those words, tell us something about prayer. They offer secrets to our own prayer life.

First of all, I want you to note the word ask. That is the word that is used for a beggar when he is asking for alms. It is also the word that is used for someone who is pleading a case before a judge. The Lord Jesus is telling us there to ask, to beg, to plead, this word refers to a petition that might be addressed from an inferior to a superior person in society. And it is designed to remind us of the humility that we ought to have and the consciousness of our own needs that we ought to have when we go to the Lord in prayer. . .

So Jesus says, we are to ask, we are to seek. There is to be a clear desire, not only should I our demeanor be humble, not only should we be conscious of our need, but there must be a single-minded focus of desire as we go to the Lord in prayer. . .

And we are to knock. This is the same word that we would use for pounding or banging on the door. We are to persevere in boldness, in the desire of obtaining favor. .

The whole thrust of Jesus' word here is to remind us that when we need discernment and when we seek for spiritual blessings, if we will ask and we will seek and we will knock, the heavenly father is ready and waiting to pour out blessing on His children. In fact, He is more ready to give than we are to receive.

B. (:8) The Universal Scope of the Harvest Law of Prayer -- No Exceptions don't doubt this – works every time

1. For everyone who asks receives

2. And he who seeks finds

3. And to him who knocks it shall be opened

Daniel Doriani: In the context of the Sermon on the Mount, the Lord wants to give us his kingdom and his righteousness. The Bible, incidentally, never shows anyone praying for happiness, never tells us to pray for happiness, and never promises that we will be happy. It does promise that God will make us holy. In Luke 11:13, Jesus says that the Father will “give the Holy Spirit” to those who ask. He grants what we need to grow in holiness, not necessarily to have a carefree life. Paul says, “Christ loved the church and gave himself up for her to make her holy, cleansing her by the washing with water through the word, and to present her to himself as a radiant church, without stain or wrinkle or any other blemish, but holy and blameless” (Eph. 5:25–27).

II. (:9-11) THE GOLDEN PRINCIPLE OF FATHERHOOD – THE ARGUMENT FROM THE LESSER TO THE GREATER -- ANY FATHER LOVES TO PROVIDE GOOD GIFTS WHEN HIS CHILDREN ASK TO HAVE THEIR NEEDS MET

Richard Gardner: Jesus assures us that God responds to those who ask, search, or knock. To support this promise, he introduces the rhetorical questions found in verses 9-10. Here it is helpful to note that a loaf of bread in Jesus' time often had the same round, flat shape that a stone had, and that there was an edible eel-like fish that resembled a snake. The obvious answer to the two questions is thus: No, no parent would mock the request of a needy child by giving the child a worthless gift that merely looks like the real thing. In verse 11, then, Jesus argues (as he has done previously) from the lesser to the greater: If you are capable of giving good gifts to children in spite of your sinful tendencies, how much more will the One who is righteous in every way give good things to his children!

A. (:9-10) Two Examples of the Responsiveness of Any Earthly Father:

(despite being essentially evil with only limited resources)

1. (:9) Loaf vs. Stone

“Or what man is there among you who, when his son asks for a loaf, will give him a stone?”

Grant Osborne: The illustration chosen by Jesus concerns a terrible practical joke played by a parent on a child who sits down for lunch, expecting a loving parent to take care of them. The type of loaf baked would resemble the shape of a smooth round stone, so the child would end up hungrily grabbing a stone instead. Satan tempted Jesus to turn a stone into bread (4:3), and here the parent reverses that, substituting a stone for bread. The form of the question with the negative particle μή expects the answer, “Of course not!” No parent would ever do such a capricious and cruel thing.

2. (:10) Fish vs. Snake

“Or if he asks for a fish, he will not give him a snake, will he?”

(cf. how Christ demonstrated in His miracles His ability to multiply the loaves and fishes and supply any need imaginable)

Fathers love to respond to the requests of their children and perform the function of Provider.

Grant Osborne: The second illustration is an even more horrible joke, for while a stone is a silly thing, a snake is actually dangerous. This was probably an eel-like fish, which resembles a snake. So as the child went to bite down on the fish, he or she was bitten in turn by the snake (or if it is assumed the snake is dead, that the child is revolted, so Nolland). Again, no parent would be so cruel. Luke 11:12 adds an even worse example, a scorpion substituted for an egg (a scorpion rolled up resembles an egg).

B. (:11) Making the Argument: Greater Responsiveness and Generosity of Our Heavenly Father

(supremely Good with unlimited resources)

1. From the Lesser

“If you then, being evil, know how to give good gifts to your children”

D. A. Carson: People are evil; they are self-centered, not God-centered. This taints all they do. Nevertheless, they can give good gifts to their children. How much more, then, will the heavenly Father, who is pure goodness without alloy, give good gifts to those who ask?

2. To the Greater

“how much more will your Father who is in heaven give what is good to those who ask Him?”

D. A. Carson: What is fundamentally at stake is a person’s picture of God. God must not be thought of as a reluctant stranger who can be cajoled or bullied into bestowing his gifts (6:7–8), as a malicious tyrant who takes vicious glee in the tricks he plays (7:9–10), or even as an indulgent grandfather who provides everything requested of him. He is the heavenly Father, the God of the kingdom, who graciously and willingly bestows the good gifts of the kingdom in answer to prayer.

Donald Hagner: The three imperatives in v 7 and three participles in v 8 refer to the same activity. No object is specified. One is not told what to request, what to seek, or that for which one knocks. The invitation is apparently as broad as the questions of vv 9–10 imply and the object thus as general as the ἀγαθά, “good things,” of v 11. These “good things” can be thought of as the eschatological blessings that accompany the presence of the kingdom (cf. Luke’s “Holy Spirit”), so that the work of the disciples in proclaiming the kingdom is primarily in view, or alternatively the more ordinary and ongoing needs of the disciples (cf. 6:32–33). Less likely is the suggestion (e.g., Carson) that the qualities of character and life demanded by the sermon (i.e., righteousness, humility, purity, love) are intended.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Is this repeated promise of Christ limited to only requests for spiritual fruit of the Spirit? (Look at the context of chapter 6-7.)
- 2) What are the main obstacles for me in persisting in prayer?
- 3) How generous was my earthly father? Does that have any impact on how easily I see my heavenly Father as generous and responsive?
- 4) What is our expectation of the desire of our heavenly Father to respond to our requests?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Donald Hagner: Jesus here invites his disciples to rely upon the faithfulness of their heavenly Father. The threefold invitation and promise of v 7, emphasized in v 8, have as their main point that the disciples may confidently trust God. Much more than parents, who reliably provide their children with what they need, will their heavenly Father provide the disciples with that for which they ask. The unlimited scope of the passage need not entail the expectation that every request will be answered positively; it points rather to the basic principle of God’s comprehensive and faithful care of the disciple. The “good things” cover certainly the ongoing needs of the disciples (cf. 6:25–33, where even the form of the argument is the same), but in the larger context of the Gospel, they suggest also the blessings of the kingdom. This passage focuses on the answering, providing Father. It is he who provides the material blessings of the present age as well as the transcendent blessings connected with the coming kingdom of God.

William Barclay: Jesus here lays down the twin facts that

- God will always answer our prayers in his way, in wisdom and in love;
- and that we must bring to God an undiscouraged life of prayer, which tests the rightness of the things we pray for, and which tests our own sincerity in asking for them.

John Kapteyn: Jesus makes a simple, clear promise. (Matt 7:1-8) To ask, seek, and knock are all repetitions of the same thing not different ways of asking. When a promise is repeated in Scripture it carries more weight. (ie. Truly, truly I say to you..). Jesus in these two verses repeats his promise SIX times. . .

In Luke's parallel, Jesus says that the Father will give the Holy Spirit to those who ask Him. It is only through the Holy Spirit that our hearts are changed. The fruit of the Spirit is Christian character or righteousness. This affirms the "what" that we are to ask for. This does not exclude asking for our daily bread, for the physical needs in our lives and other requests we may have. However, God will only give what we ask if it is to our spiritual good.

S. Lewis Johnson: Many years ago, Andrew Murray wrote, "Jesus never taught his disciples how to preach, only how to pray. He did not speak much of what was need to preach well, but much of praying well. To know how to speak to God is more than knowing how to speak to man. Not power with men but power with God, is the first thing. Jesus loves to teach us to pray." This fine Reformed minister of the word of God from South Africa has hit upon something that has some significance.

I'm not advocating that we do away with the subject of homiletics in our theological institutions, but I do think that it is a startling thing to realize that all theological institutions have courses on public speaking and homiletics, but so far as I know, there is not a single theological institution of seminary status in the whole of the United States as far as I know – in the whole of the Western World – that has a required course on the doctrine of prayer. It would seem to me that this is a great neglect, so far as the Christian church is concerned. . .

In the immediate context, the 7th verse follows the 6th—that's a very weighty comment, you'll notice -- the 7th verse follows the 6th, and in the 6th we have had, "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast your pearls before swine." It's very difficult for us, as human beings, to know with any sense of assurance, who are those dogs, and who are the swine? And just as one might expect, it would be natural for us to say, how can we possibly know who are the dogs and who are the swine? Well, the answer is through prayer.

Prayer is the indispensable necessity for making biblical judgments, so I'm not surprised, then, that the subject appears here. Let's look then, first of all, at the exhortation to prayer contained in the 7th verse. The connection by the therefore is, as I have mentioned – or rather, the connection of the section with the preceding – is as I have mentioned: “Where will I ever get the wisdom necessary to exercise judgment in a sensible and discriminating way?” . . .

And second, prayer combats lethargic passivity, a too-common condition in the lives of believers which often results in a false kind of quietism. Now many of you know that from the pulpit of Believers Chapel there has proceeded a message which has been grounded, for the most part, in the sovereignty of God. I personally, and others who have preached here, believe that God is sovereign in the affairs of men. And we believe that he is working out his purposes, and that he will accomplish his purposes, and that he cannot be frustrated in the accomplishment of them, that he is a sovereign God.

Sometimes, when individuals come into an understanding of these great doctrines of the grace of God, how he saves us in his wonderful grace, and how he keeps us, and sanctifies us, and how he will ultimately glorify us through his marvelous grace, we somehow take this doctrine and twist it and torture it to mean that therefore we have no responsibility whatsoever to listen to the exhortations of the word of God and seek, under the power of God to perform them.

Now, prayer is an effective combating of that false, extreme emphasis on the sovereignty of God that overlooks human responsibility. We do have human responsibility. We are responsible to read the exhortations of the word of God, and we are not only responsible to read them, but we are to obey them—that is our responsibility. But we do not, in our explanation of the responsibility of man, seek to water down the sovereignty of God so that it means nothing. We as Christians believe that God is working out his purpose, and he will work out his purpose to a successful conclusion. He is a sovereign God.

But we are responsible, and this evidenced by the fact that we are told to pray: ask—go on, ask him; seek—go on seeking; knock—go on knocking. You should, in Tertullian’s phrase, “with a holy conspiracy besiege heaven,” One of the great Puritans, also a believer in the sovereignty of God, said, “All three of these commands presuppose faith. A man who does not believe will not ask. A man who does not have faith will not seek, and one who does not have confidence in God will not go on knocking. These are the inevitable issue of faith, and the man who asks and seeks and knocks in the name of the Lord Jesus is exhibiting his faith in that.

John MacArthur: The summation of the law of God in the Old Testament is clear. In Deuteronomy 6, you have the first part, “Love the Lord your God with all your heart, soul, mind and strength.” In Leviticus 19:18, you have the second part, “Love your neighbor as yourself. I am the Lord.” That’s what that verse says. So, repeatedly, Old Testament and New Testament, God’s law is for a right relationship to Him as a Father and a right relationship to others as brothers in the faith. Those are the salient features of Christian truth. . .

Jesus gives us a manifesto of living in His kingdom that is totally comprehensive. It deals with animate and inanimate objects. It deals with people in the family, such as here, and people outside the family, such as earlier, in the salt and light passage. It deals with how we treat other people and perceive them: not criticizing, judging and condemning. And it deals with how we treat us: self-examining, humility.

All areas, how we treat God as a person, as a loving Father, and how we treat His Word as a revelation of His heart; all elements of the dimensions of Christian living within the kingdom are discussed in this masterpiece of a sermon. And all of them boil down to tremendous statements which are encompassing all the truth embodied in those areas, and reducing them down to these marvelous truths. . .

Now I would just remind you that the whole concept of verses 1 to 12 can be boiled back to one statement: “Love your neighbor as yourself.” That is the law and the prophets. That’s the sum of it all.

But let’s go and look at this passage specifically. People have been confused about the order of this chapter, and they think a lot of these things are just kind of little tidbits thrown in and they don’t have any connection. I don’t believe that. I think there is a masterful presentation. I think the Lord eases from 6 into 7, and from 7 into 9 and 10, and then into 11, and then into 12 in a beautiful, majestic way of flowing this whole thing together. Let me show you why I say that. . .

Listen, who is able to discriminate? Who is able to judge? Who is able to discern? Who is able to know when you’ve got somebody that you don’t want to throw your pearls to? Who is able to discern when you have someone there that you don’t want to give a holy thing to, because you know they’ll tramp it under their feet? Who is it that’s able to see sin in a believer’s life, and lovingly go and restore that believer? . . .

And so we have to ask and seek and knock, and He reveals to us. And I believe that’s the bridge that the Spirit of God would have us see there. It helps us know how to get that splinter out of a brother’s eye, and how to be careful about giving holy things to dogs, and casting pearls before swine. And so that’s how this text reaches back. But let’s see how it reaches forward to our text. . .

And why am I willing to do that? Why am I willing to live that principle [v. 12] out and to do unto others what I wish they would do to me? Because I know that whatever I may give away of myself, and whatever good things I may do to others, I know God will replenish my own supply. And so I do it not only because of the purpose of God to be obedient to the law and the prophets, but I do it because it is basically to fulfill the promise of God, that He will meet my needs. And so I not only do it out of obedience, but second word, I do it out of gratitude, gratitude. . .

And, finally, there’s a third reason. Not only does the purpose of God and the promise of God demand that I live according to verse 12, but so does the pattern of God, the pattern of God. You know something? Ephesians 5:1 puts it this way: “As dear children, we are to walk as God walked, or walks.” Tremendous statement. Walk as God walks. Conduct your life the way God does. . .

And the point is this: if evil, unregenerate, sinful fathers give their kids the basics of life, don't you think God'll do that? And the idea that I see here is that God is the absolute giving Father, who gives to all what they need, knowing full well they could never give back to Him anything in kind or measure. And if that's the way He is, then isn't that the way we, His children, should be toward others? See?

His purpose demands it. It's the whole reason for the law. His promise frees us up to do it, because He'll replenish everything that we do for others. And here we find the majesty of this thought: His pattern is this way to us. How can we say we are His children and do less for others? "Therefore," – verse 12 says – "therefore, all things, whatever you would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

TEXT: MATTHEW 7:12

TITLE: GOLDEN RULE OF RELATIONSHIPS

BIG IDEA:

KINGDOM ETHICS SUMMED UP IN THE GOLDEN RULE CONSISTENT WITH THE LAW AND THE PROPHETS = LOVING OTHERS

INTRODUCTION:

William Barclay: This is probably the most universally famous thing that Jesus ever said. With this commandment, the Sermon on the Mount reaches its summit. This saying of Jesus has been called “the capstone of the whole discourse”. It is the topmost peak of social ethics, and the Everest of all ethical teaching. . .

In its negative form, this rule is in fact the basis of all ethical teaching; but no one but Jesus ever put it in its positive form. Many voices had said: “Do not do to others what you would not have them do to you,” but no voice had ever said: “Do to others what you would have them do to you.” . . .

To take a very simple analogy – if we own a car, the law can compel us to drive it in such a way that we do not injure anyone else on the road, but no law can compel us to stop and give a lift to someone who is obviously in need of help. It is quite a simple thing to refrain from hurting and injuring people; it is not so very difficult to respect their principles and their feelings; it is a far harder thing to make it the chosen and deliberate policy of life to go out of our way to be as kind to them as we would wish them to be to us.

Grant Osborne: This simple principle would by itself revitalize human relationships if people everywhere were to begin to live by it. It not only summarizes the OT law but also provides a capstone for Jesus’ new covenant principles, setting the standard for the “greater righteousness” of 5:20, i.e., righteousness in action in human relationships. It builds on the “good gifts” we receive from God (v. 11), so that we in turn do only good to one another as well.

Note that the whole emphasis is on what we do for others; there is no expectation of getting something back in return (it is “do to others what,” not “do to others so that”). So the kingdom comes both in the advent of the Messiah, the Son of God, and in a new level of ethical commitment on the part of the new covenant people. This is not a radical humanism (as some have said), for it is completely dependent on the relationship with God implied in vv. 7–11. We can only be good to our neighbor if we have truly experienced God’s goodness to us. Then we have a proper model to follow and a proper source of strength.

Donald Hagner: It is from this saying and that of 22:37–40 that love became the dominant and summarizing theme of the Christian ethic. To act in this manner, in constant deeds of love, is to bring to expression that to which the law and the prophets pointed. That is, a world where only good is done to others involves by definition eschatological fulfillment, a return to the paradise of the Garden of Eden. To do good to others is to mirror the activity of the Father (7:11), which of course finds its supreme manifestation in the eschatological fulfillment brought by the Son. If the ethics of the kingdom of God anticipate the coming future in the present, then this is especially true of the ethic of the golden rule, which is the distillation of kingdom ethics. If this teaching of Jesus were to be lived out in the world, the whole system of evil would be dramatically shaken. Even if it were to be manifested seriously in the Church, its impact would be incalculable. In this sublime command, so simple and yet so deep, we encounter a challenge central to the purposes of God and therefore one that is also eschatological in tone. No other teaching is so readily identified with Jesus; no other teaching is so central to the righteousness of the kingdom and the practice of discipleship.

J C Ryle: In this part of the sermon on the mount (Mt 7:12-20) our Lord begins to draw His discourse to a conclusion. The lessons He here enforces on our notice, are broad, general, and full of the deepest wisdom. Let us mark them in succession. He lays down a general principle for our guidance in all doubtful questions between man and man. We are "to do to others as we would have others do to us." We are not to deal with others as others deal with us. This is mere selfishness and heathenism. We are to deal with others as we would like others to deal with us. This is real Christianity. This is a golden rule indeed! It does not merely forbid all petty malice and revenge, all cheating and over-reaching. It does much more. It settles a hundred difficult points, which in a world like this are continually arising between man and man. It prevents the necessity of laying down endless little rules for our conduct in specific cases. It sweeps the whole debatable ground with one mighty principle. It shows us a balance and measure, by which every one may see at once what is his duty. Is there a thing we would not like our neighbor to do to us? Then let us always remember, that this is the thing we ought not to do to him. Is there a thing we would like him to do to us? Then this is the very thing we ought to do to him. How many intricate questions would be decided at once, if this rule were honestly used!

I. CONNECTIVITY TO THE CONTEXT

“Therefore”

Not just a string of isolated teachings

John Nolland: That the linking οὕτως (‘then’) functions to introduce a summary (and generalisation) is suggested by the inclusio with 5:7 created by “the Law and the Prophets”. It will, then, be important to read the Golden Rule as used here closely with what has already been said.

Daniel Doriani: The Golden Rule is widely cited and widely abused. An adult twist on the Golden Rule says, “Whoever has the gold makes the rules.” A child’s version says, “Do one to others before they do one to you.” But a proper understanding of the Golden Rule begins with its context. . .

Once again, therefore, Jesus’ laws lead us to see our sin and our need for grace. We simply cannot keep his law. We cannot stop judging others for their failings. We cannot keep even the simplest summary of his teaching: “Do to others what you would have them do to you.” What then shall we do? We return to the first word in our passage. We must ask God for mercy to forgive and ask him to make us new.

Charles Swindoll: This capstone serves as a fitting summation of the previous three principles.

1. Treating people the way we want to be treated would mean not judging others unjustly —because to the degree we judge others, we ourselves will be judged (Matt. 7:1-5).
2. Treating people the way we want to be treated would also mean not dumping our declaration of the message on those whom God has not prepared; to do so could sour them to the truth and cause them to treat the things of God with hardened contempt (7:6).
3. Further, treating others the way we want to be treated would mean modeling for others the rich, loving benevolence God the Father has poured out on us (7:7-11). In other words, because of the inexpressible, unconditional grace God bestows upon us, we ought to show the same kind of unconditional grace toward others.

II. CONDUCT DESIRED

“however you want people to treat you”

We all know how we would like to be treated

“by your standard of measure, it will be measured to you” (Matt. 7:2)

Donald Hagner: The emphatic πάντα ὅσα, lit. “everything whatsoever,” and the present tense of ὑμεῖς ποιεῖτε αὐτοῖς, lit. “you be doing to them,” presents a high challenge to the Christian in his or her relations to others, involving both unlimited scope and faithful persistence.

III. CONDUCT COMMANDED

“so treat them”

“Beloved, let us love one another, for love is from God; and everyone who loves is born of God and knows God.” (1 John 4:7)

Not just about how we feel towards them . . . but primarily how we act towards them. This requires an investment of our resources in the lives of others.

IV. CONNECTIVITY TO THE OT

“for this is the Law and the Prophets.”

This is what it is all about – what Christ has been trying to sum up in the Sermon on the Mount as He gives the divine interpretation of the OT law.

“But the goal of our instruction is love from a pure heart and a good conscience and a sincere faith” (1 Tim. 1:5)

D. A. Carson: The rule is not arbitrary, without rational support, as in radical humanism; in Jesus’ mind its rationale (“for”) lies in its connection with revealed truth recorded in “the Law and the Prophets.” The rule embraces quantity (“in everything”) and quality (houtōs kai, “[do] even so”). And in the context of fulfilling the Scriptures, the rule provides a handy summary of the righteousness to be displayed in the kingdom.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What is the connection, if any, between verse 12 and the preceding verses?
- 2) What is the difference between the negative expressions of similar proverbial sayings in other ancient cultures and with the positive command given here by Jesus?
- 3) How does this general principle prove to be more effective than trying to legislate a wide range of specific case situations?
- 4) Why is the Golden Rule ineffective as a guideline to reform society in general?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Hendriksen: Is there a connection between these verses and verses 1-6? There are those who see no connection at all. This, however, would be strange. In the entire sermon up to this point we have witnessed a very logical development of ideas, an easy thought transition from one paragraph to the next. . . After a detailed examination of the entire preceding paragraph (verses 1-6) the question cannot be suppressed, “And who is sufficient for these things?” (II Cor. 2:16 A.V.). This question Jesus answers by urging the necessity of persevering prayer accompanied by earnest effort. . . it refers to asking for the fulfilment of every need, particularly ever spiritual need. . . .

As a very appropriate conclusion not only of 7:1-11 but of the entire large division beginning at 5:17 (and see also 5:5, 7, 9, 13-16) Jesus now presents his own version of The Golden Rule. . .

“How much more will your Father in heaven give good things to those who ask him.”

Therefore – that is, out of gratitude for the Father’s continuing gifts – you should love your neighbors even as you desire that they love you, in order that the stream of love toward the undeserving may flow on and on, not only to your hearts, but also through and from your hearts until it reaches even the most unworthy. “Thus, indeed, you will be sons of your Father who is in heaven, who causes his sun to rise on evil (people) and good, and sends rain on righteous and unrighteous” (5:45). This, indeed, and this alone, is The Golden Rule.

Martin Lloyd-Jones: Perhaps we can go further and say that our danger is to think of the law as being something negative, something prohibitive. Of course there are aspects of the law which are negative; but what our Lord is emphasizing here is – as He has said at great length in the fifth chapter – that the law which God gave to the children of Israel through the medium of angels and of Moses is a very positive thing, is a spiritual thing. It was never meant to be mechanical, and the whole fallacy of the Pharisees and the scribes, and all who followed them, was that they reduced something that was essentially spiritual and living to the realm of the mechanical, to something that was an end in itself. They thought that as long as they had actually not murdered somebody they had kept the law concerning murder, and that as long as they had not committed physical adultery they were all right in a moral sense. They were guilty of complete failure to see the spiritual intent, to see the spiritual character of the law, and above all to see the great end and object for which the law had been given.

Here, our Lord puts all that in this perfect summary. Why does the law tell us not to covet our neighbour’s good and possessions, or his wife, or anything else? Why does the law tell us “Thou shalt not kill”; “Thou shalt not steal”; “Thou shalt not commit adultery”? What does it mean by all this? Is it designed simply that you and I should uphold these things as rules and regulations, or as sub-sections in acts of parliament which govern and control us and keep us within certain limits? No, that is not the object at all. The whole purpose and the real spirit behind it all is this, that we are to love our neighbour as ourselves, that we are to love one another. . .

So the failure of man to live by, and to keep, the golden rule is due to the fact that he is self-centred. That, in turn, leads to self-satisfaction, self-protection, self-concern. Self is in the forefront the whole time, for man wants everything for himself.

Hoke: When Jesus calls us to love our neighbor and to live by the golden rule, He is calling us to be people who care. The Sermon on the Mount is all about caring. You cannot live by the Sermon on the Mount and refuse to care about others. . .

But if we are seeking Him and His Kingdom first, then our desires will be controlled by His life in us. We will find ourselves desiring and asking for the things that are in concert with His will. And we read in 1 John 5:14, "This is the confidence which we have before Him, that, if we ask anything according to His will, He hears us." God hears and answers the prayers of those who ask for what He wants to give us. This is His promise. . .

We must not only see that the promises of God are ours, we must also see that they are ours because God loves us so. . .

And Jesus has given us the motivation to care by revealing to us the Father's heart and the Father's provision. We are freed to care for others because God has revealed His care for us. Knowing that our needs will be met as we ask, seek, and knock frees us to reach out to help meet the needs of others. Being recipients of the father's love frees us to love.

Lenski: Among the good gifts for which the Father's children pray daily is the power to overcome the promptings of their flesh so that by grace for Christ's sake they may love their neighbor with a truly spiritual love and thus heap upon him all the kindness they themselves would like to receive. Christ's Golden Rule has appealed to many, yet only true believers have understood it and have found the power to translate it into life in an ever-increasing degree.

Michael Wilkins: The moral maxim that has come to be known as the "Golden Rule" is one of the commonly accepted bases of human civilization. It occurs in both positive and negative forms. The ancient Roman philosopher and statesman Seneca (4 B.C.–A.D. 65) expressed the principle positively, "Let us show our generosity in the same manner that we would wish to have it bestowed on us" (De Beneficiis 2.1.1), while the Chinese philosopher Confucius (551–479 B.C.) stated it negatively, "Do not do unto others what you would not want others to do unto you!" (Analects 15:23).A-49

The precept appears to have been a common theme in Judaism of the time of Jesus. Tobit gives a negative form of the principle, "Watch yourself, my son, in everything you do, and discipline yourself in all your conduct. And what you hate, do not do to anyone" (Tobit 4:14b–15). Hillel the Elder (c. 70 B.C.–A.D. 10) supposedly had as his motto, "What is hateful to you, do not do to your neighbor." In the only text in the whole of rabbinic literature that attributes the saying to Hillel, the Elder goes on to say, "That is the whole Torah. The rest is commentary. Go and learn!" (b. Šabb. 31a).

For Jesus, the kingdom life that he is inaugurating fulfills the deepest inclination of humans, who are created in the image of God. Kingdom life now enables his disciples to live life the way God intends it to be lived. As such it "sums up the Law and the Prophets" (cf. 5:17–20).

R. T. France: The common description of this saying as the "Golden Rule" is traditionally traced to the Roman Emperor Alexander Severus (AD 222–235) who though not a Christian was reputedly so impressed by the comprehensiveness of this maxim of Jesus as a guide to good living that he had it inscribed in gold on the wall of his chamber. Its influence in Victorian Britain is illustrated by the name given by Charles Kingsley in The Water Babies to the good fairy “Mrs Do-as-you-would-be-done-by” (in contrast to Mrs Be-done-by-as-you-did). As a guide to how unselfish love should work itself out in our relations with other people, this simple principle would be hard to improve on.

Warren Wiersbe: This great truth is a principle that ought to govern our attitudes toward others. It only applies to believers, and it must be practiced in every area of life. The person who practices the Golden Rule refuses to say or do anything that would harm himself or others. If our judging of others is not governed by this principle, we will become proud and critical, and our own spiritual character will degenerate.

Practicing the Golden Rule releases the love of God in our lives and enables us to help others, even those who want to hurt us.

But remember that practicing the Golden Rule means paying a price. If we want God’s best for ourselves and others, but others resist God’s will, then they will oppose us. We are salt, and salt stings the open wound. We are light, and light exposes dirt.

J. Ligon Duncan: The Justice of the Kingdom – The Golden Rule

I. Christians are to be deliberately and conscientiously concerned for our neighbors’ best interests.

The ‘therefore’ is very interesting. What does the ‘therefore’ refer to? What is Jesus referring back to, when He says in light of this, or so, or therefore, treat one another as you want others to treat you. He has just been speaking about prayer. What does prayer have to do with the way we treat one another. Well, as we have said before, Christ has been speaking about judgment, about correction, and about prayer in this passage. As we go to the Lord for wisdom about judgment, and correction and anything else that we go to the Lord, the Lord gives us wisdom and guidance. He walks us along the way, according to the principles of His word, and gives us the moral resolution to do what we know to be right in accordance with His will.

But another benefit that we get in prayer is that it puts us in a humble posture. For when we go to the Lord in prayer, we remember that we ourselves are beggars to His grace. We have not earned our position of inheritance in the kingdom. We have received it by a donation of His free grace and mercy. And therefore, we too, ought to have a charitable spirit towards all men, even those who have hurt us, and even those that we do not know. For He has shown mercy in our own experience. Sinclair Ferguson has said this, “Only the person who sees that he is a beggar before the Lord, and has nothing to offer, but has discovered that he is the heir of the grace of God, will be sufficiently set free from self-centeredness of character to put others first, and to do to them, what he would appreciate receiving from them.” Only the person who has bowed before the Lord and humbled himself, herself before the Lord in prayer, realizing that all that He has given us is of His grace, is able to get out of that native self-centeredness, which captures us all and is enabled to be other centered. Christ is here, pressing on His followers their duty of righteousness to all men. This, He sees, as part of true religion.

II. Christians are to deal with their neighbors according to God's standard of righteousness.

You see, the Golden Rule is based on the law's principle of neighbor love, which is found in the last six commandments of the Ten Commandments, and is expounded in all the writings of Moses and the prophets. The Lord Jesus is calling us to treat others as we would wish to be treated on the basis of the law of neighbor love.

III. The Golden Rule is not the gospel.

Chuck Smith: Sermon Notes on 7:12

I. "THEREFORE"

A. Links necessity with power. "Ask, seek, knock."

II. DO UNTO YOUR NEIGHBOR WHAT YOU WOULD HAVE YOUR NEIGHBOR DO TO YOU.

A. Similar to other statements.

1. Hillel, "Do not do to your neighbor what is hateful to yourself."
2. Socrates, "What stirs you to anger when done to you by others, do not do to others."
3. Aristotle, "We should bear ourselves toward others as we would desire they should bear themselves toward us."
4. Confucius, "What you do not want done to yourself, do not do to others."
5. These are negative and passive.

B. Christ's command is positive and active.

1. You care not to just refrain from doing him harm, you are to do him good.
2. It is not that you aren't to rob him, you are to give to him.

C. Selfish, self respect might refrain us from harming him, but the higher thing cannot be done without power.

D. Summation on matter of judgment.

1. Summation also of law and prophets.
 - a. Calls attention to misunderstanding of God's law.
 - b. We are prone to think law is just rules we must keep and we forget spirit.
 - c. Think of law as something negative or prohibitive.

E. Modern view of golden rule.

1. Praised not practiced.
2. Sermon on the mount preached not that we should comment on it, but follow it.

F. Why do men forsake golden rule?

1. Theological and Biblical.
 - a. Some say they dislike theology.
 - b. Love Sermon on the mount, practical and simple, not theology.
 - c. Just put this before people and they will see its merits and put it into practice.
2. Why is this so?
 - a. Man is sinful.
 - b. So bound by evil - cannot practice golden rule.
 - c. "The carnal mind is enmity against God, it is not subject to the Law of God." Rom. 8:7.
 - d. Useless to hold law before him, he hates it.
3. Self is worst problem, we are too self-centered.
 - a. Labor disputes.

G. How is it possible to put golden rule into practice?

1. You must start with God.
 - a. What is greatest commandment?
 1. You cannot love your neighbor until you first love God.
 - b. To come into presence of God gives us new view of ourselves.
 1. We also get new view of others.
 2. Victims of sin.
 - c. We see perfect order of Sermon on the Mount. Ask, seek, knock - brings the power to do unto others.

Bryce Morgan: Ruled by the Golden Rule

"...Treat people the same way you want them to treat you..." There you have it. "Relationships 101", with your instructor, Jesus. In general, no matter the individual, Jesus reveals here that responding to others, interacting with others, relating to others, working with others should be guided by this very simple principle: the way we would like others to treat us, is the way we should treat them. . .

Jesus is speaking to what all of us already know: deep within every person (even those with unhealthy desires), there is a longing to be loved; a longing to be respected; a longing to be heard; a longing to be treated in fairness, with kindness, with patience and understanding, with compassion... with grace. These longings are universal. That's precisely why we find some version of this same Matthew 7:12 principle in culture after culture, throughout history. . .

But within the context of the entire 'mountain message', this reference to "the Law and the Prophets" also reminds us to look back, not simply to the OT, but also to the beginning of Jesus' discourse. Look back for a moment to 5:17. Jesus told his disciples: “Do not think that I have come to abolish the Law or the Prophets; I have not come to abolish them but to fulfill them.” Why is the verse important? Because it explains what Jesus goes on to do in the rest of chapter 5 in terms of true kingdom righteousness. And He carries that explanation on into chapter 6, and... into the opening verses of chapter 7.

Therefore, when Jesus mentions “the Law and the Prophets” in both chapter 5 and chapter 7, what he's given us are 'bookends' to his teaching. And that means, what we have in this 'mountain message' are the specifics of what a life ruled by the “Golden Rule” looks like. It means, for example, we do not respond to others in anger because we do not want to be responded to in that way. It means we do not look at others with lust, because we do not want to be objectified in that way. It means we do not condemn with a critical spirit. Why? Because we do not want to be treated that way.

In the same way, as we talked about before, even when we are behaving badly, we ultimately want understanding and forgiveness. Even when we are acting like someone's enemy, deep down, if we were able to, we would choose a loving response over a hostile response; gentle correction over harsh retaliation. Therefore, we should hear the “Golden Rule” when Jesus teaches us to “love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you” (5:44).

What do we find in Matthew 7:12? We find a simple but powerful summary of the kingdom righteousness that Jesus is describing for us throughout this 'mountain message'.

TEXT: Matthew 7:13-29

TITLE: CHALLENGES TO IMPLEMENT KINGDOM RIGHTEOUSNESS

BIG IDEA:
COMMIT TO OBEYING THE TEACHING OF JESUS

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: Jesus has now finished giving his new kingdom principles, and he draws his Sermon to a close by removing any possibility of neutrality and demanding a response. The Sermon on the Mount has been all about the ethical obligation to live a superior righteousness. This involves the thought life as the key to relationships in the new community (5:17–48), the priority of God in every aspect of our religious life (6:1–18) as well as in our relation to material possessions (6:19–34), and in our social relationships inside and outside the community (7:1–12). Now is the time of decision, and Jesus wants us to realize the seriousness of our choices. The path to God is narrow and hazardous, but it is the only path to take.

There are only two paths in responding to the kingdom demands in the Sermon—unquestioning obedience/commitment to God or going the way of the world—and Jesus illustrates this by using a common Jewish metaphor on “the two ways” (Deut 30:15–19; Ps 1:6; Prov 28:6, 18; Jer 21:8; 4 Ezra 7:3–9; Did. 1–6; Barn. 18–20) and illustrating it in three separate warnings. All three warn about the terrible danger of playing games with our eternal destiny. There is only one path to eternal salvation, and all other attempts will travel the broad road to ruin.

Craig Blomberg: “Wide” versus “narrow” may refer not only to the majority versus the minority but also to relative levels of difficulty or ease.

Donald Hagner: We are at a major turning point in the sermon; no more ethical teaching is given. What follows are warnings and a concluding parable, all involving, as in the present passage, the use of strong contrasts.

Richard Gardner: The final group of sayings in Matthew 7 constitutes the section of the Sermon identified earlier as an epilogue. It is customary in an epilogue for the speaker to sum up the major issue(s) of a speech and to challenge the hearers to take appropriate action. That is clearly what Jesus is doing in 7:13–29, and doing it in a typical manner.

R. T. France: The Golden Rule of 7:12 concludes the substantive content of the discourse on discipleship. What follows is a series of four short sketches which underline the importance of an existential response to what has been heard and warn of the consequences of failing to respond. There is no uniformity in their literary form (unlike for instance the six examples of the greater righteousness in 5:21–47 or the three examples of misdirected piety in 6:1–18), but each in a different way draws out the contrast between a right and a wrong response, between the true and the false, the saved and the lost. This is, then, a rhetorical conclusion to the discourse, aiming to motivate the hearers to take appropriate action. A key word which runs through the last three of the four sections is poieō, “to do,” though English idiom does not allow the repetition of the same verb in translation: it is represented above by “produce” (fruit) in vv. 17, 18, 19, by “do” (the will of God) in v. 21, by “perform” (miracles) in v. 22, and by “put into practice” (Jesus’ teaching) in vv. 24, 26. In each case except v. 22 it is those who “do” who are commended; in v. 22 the wrong sort of “doing” is contrasted with the right sort in v. 21. In vv. 24 and 26 both men are described as “hearing” Jesus’ words but only the first “does” them; the message is clear, that those who have now “heard” Jesus’ teaching receive no benefit from it unless they also put it into practice. . .

The resultant four sections therefore press increasingly closer to home:

- the first is a simple contrast between saved and lost,
- the second concerns outsiders who merely pretend to be insiders,
- the third looks at those who think they are insiders but are not,
- and the fourth draws a line even within the group of insiders (who hear Jesus’ words) between those who respond and those who do not.

In each of the four cases, the result of a failure to respond is catastrophic: “destruction” (v. 13), “cut down and burned” (v. 19), excluded from the kingdom of heaven (vv. 21, 23), and the total collapse of the house (v. 27).

Charles Swindoll: Secrets of an Unshakable Life

As we conclude our exploration of the Sermon on the Mount, we realize that Jesus saved His most passionate words for the finale. Matthew 7:13-27 expresses the Lord’s most intense feelings of the sermon. We could call this part the application section of His sermon. In light of everything He preached leading up to this point, Jesus says, essentially, “Now that you’ve heard all this, what are you going to do about it?” As He drove His audience to application, Jesus presented His listeners with four paired alternatives:

- two gates —the narrow one leading to life or the wide one leading to destruction (7:13-14)
- two trees —the good one bearing good fruit or the bad one bearing bad fruit (7:15-20)
- two responses —the genuine disciple who does the will of God or the hypocritical hearer who only gives lip service (7:21-23)
- two foundations —the one built on rock or the one built on sand (7:24-27)

Jesus’ call to a decision in response to His message is really a call to faith for unbelievers and a call to discipleship for believers. It’s a call to repentance, to trust in and obey the King, the long-awaited Messiah and only rightful Lord.

I. (:13-14) ENTER BY THE NARROW GATE – CONTRAST BETWEEN THE NARROW GATE AND THE WIDE GATE

A. (:13a) Exclusivity of Salvation

“Enter by the narrow gate;”

Daniel Doriani: First, the gate is narrow because Jesus’ commands are restrictive. Eight of the ten commandments begin with “You shall not.” When the law forbids certain actions, it narrows our options. But the law is not the restricting principle. The character of God is the pattern for our character, and that restricts us too. God is faithful, therefore we must be faithful and keep our promises. God is generous, therefore we should be generous. God is kind, therefore we should be kind. The indulgence of bad moods that leads to meanness or cruelty simply is not an option. Disciples resist the temptation to break the law and to ignore God’s character.

Second, the gate is narrow because the Bible teaches truths—doctrines—that we must believe. The Bible says that God created the world out of nothing, that Jesus is truly God and truly man, that this age will end when Jesus returns and calls mankind before him for judgment. The Bible directs us to think in these ways, not in others, and that restricts us. We cannot plausibly claim to be Christians and reject the cardinal truths of the faith.

Third, the gate is narrow because we can miss it. We miss it if we do not believe in Christ. We miss it if we deny that we are sinners, in need of a Savior. Jesus' way is hard. The word translated "hard" comes from a family of words that refers to suffering and persecution. This reminds us that Jesus' way is also narrow in the sense that it can lead to opposition. We enter the kingdom after passing through many hardships (Acts 14:22).

B. (:13b-14) Explanation of Why So Few People Find Salvation

1. (:13b) The Wide Gate Leads to Destruction

"for the gate is wide, and the way is broad that leads to destruction, and many are those who enter by it."

John Nolland: At this point the imagery expands to include a "way", which is best seen as the way that leads to the gate in question. Having been initially told to enter by the gate, the reader now faces the question of the way to get to the gate. To get to the right gate, one must first choose the right way. The imagery of a way introduces the idea of the duration of the time of a journey and therefore adds the notion of tenacity to that of choice. To the wide gate corresponds the broad way. We are to think of a main roadway, not able to be missed, constructed to carry large numbers comfortably, implicitly claiming to be going somewhere important; perhaps we are to think of easy travelling conditions.

2. (:14) The Narrow Gate Leads to Life

"For the gate is small, and the way is narrow that leads to life, and few are those who find it."

Grant Osborne: The true gate to salvation (articular τὴν ζωὴν, "the [eternal] life") is quite narrow, and the road is as well. "Confined" is a good translation for τεθλιμμένη, from the cognate θλίψις, "trouble, persecution." There well may be the idea of hardship and persecution, as in Acts 14:22, "We must go through many hardships to enter the kingdom of God." The persecution of the saints is a major Matthean motif (5:10–11, 44; 10:16–23, 35–36; 13:21; 23:34–35; 24:9–13, 16–21) and is likely implied here.

There is also the difficult ethical path demanded in 5:17–7:12; such a life in this evil world will be nigh impossible without the power of the Spirit and the love of God in the life of the believer. Only a "few" will be willing to travel that difficult road, but the final result will be eternal "life." Jesus has made the options crystal clear: take the easy way and find destruction, or walk the difficult path and attain true life.

Warren Wiersbe: Since there are false prophets in the world, we must be careful of deception. But the greatest danger is self-deception. The scribes and Pharisees had fooled themselves into believing that they were righteous and others were sinful. It is possible for people to know the right language, believe intellectually the right doctrines, obey the right rules, and still not be saved. Jesus used two pictures to help us judge ourselves and others.

The two ways (vv. 13–14). These are, of course, the way to heaven and the way to hell. The broad way is the easy way; it is the popular way. But we must not judge spiritual profession by statistics; the majority is not always right. The fact that “everybody does it” is no proof that what they are doing is right.

Quite the contrary is true: God’s people have always been a remnant, a small minority in this world. The reason is not difficult to discover: The way of life is narrow, lonely, and costly. We can walk on the broad way and keep our “baggage” of sin and worldliness. But if we enter the narrow way, we must give up those things.

Here, then, is the first test: Did your profession of faith in Christ cost you anything? If not, then it was not a true profession. Many people who “trust” Jesus Christ never leave the broad road with its appetites and associations. They have an easy Christianity that makes no demands on them. Yet Jesus said that the narrow way is hard. We cannot walk on two roads, in two different directions, at the same time.

The two trees (vv. 15-20).

The second test is this: Did my decision for Christ change my life?

Donald Hagner: Although the “few” is clearly hyperbolic, it remains true that the majority of the people (πολλοί, v 13) do not receive Jesus’ message (cf. 11:20–24; 12:41–42); they go down the broad path to destruction. Those who do follow Jesus and his summons to the righteousness of the kingdom are comparatively few (ὀλίγοι). That those who follow Jesus are a minority and that their path is a demanding one should come as no surprise, nor should it be discouraging. For from another perspective it may be said that “the harvest is plentiful” so that many more laborers are needed (9:37–38). . . The deliberate choice of οἱ εὐρίσκοντες, “who find,” to replace the οἱ εἰσερχόμενοι, “who go in,” of the parallel in v 13, has the effect of pointing to the privilege of the disciples. There is an echo of joy and fulfillment in the reference to the finding of this path to life. Again the call to righteousness occurs in the context of the reality of grace.

II. (:15-20) BEWARE OF FALSE PROPHETS – FALSE PROPHETS CAN BE DETECTED BY EXAMINING THEIR FRUIT

Warren Wiersbe: These show that true faith in Christ changes the life and produces fruit for God’s glory. Everything in nature reproduces after its kind, and this is also true in the spiritual realm. Good fruit comes from a good tree, but bad fruit comes from a bad tree.

A. (:15) Warning Regarding False Prophets – Deceitful Appearance and Destructive Mission

“Beware of the false prophets, who come to you in sheep’s clothing, but inwardly are ravenous wolves.”

Donald Hagner: Despite their outward appearance and profession, these persons are in fact the mortal enemies of those who belong to the flock. As the wolf, known for its ferocity (hence “ravenous”), is the natural enemy of the sheep (cf. Isa 11:6; 65:25; Sir 13:17; John 10:12), so these deceivers are natural enemies of the truth and the true people of God. (cf. the similar metaphor in Acts 20:29; Ign. Phil. 2:1–2; Did. 16:3.) The disciples must therefore be wary of these false prophets. Following their way will lead only to the destruction of the flock.

John Nolland: Presumably one is to beware of false prophets because their influence may distort one's own embrace of the teaching of Jesus. Since they disguise themselves as sheep, their falseness is not necessarily immediately apparent. Though "sheep" here points in the first instance to harmlessness over against the predatory nature of the wolves, we should almost certainly understand that the disguise is, more precisely, to enable free movement among the flock of sheep, which is thus implicitly identified as the prey. Thus an allusion to the image of Israel as the flock of God is probably involved.

D. A. Carson: Warnings against false prophets are necessarily based on the conviction that not all prophets are true, that truth can be violated, and that the gospel's enemies usually conceal their hostility and try to pass themselves off as fellow believers. At first glance, they use orthodox language, show biblical piety, and are indistinguishable from true prophets (cf. 10:41). Thus it is vital to know how to distinguish sheep from wolves in sheep's clothing. Jesus does not explicitly say who will have the discernment to protect the community but implies that the community itself, by whatever agency, must somehow protect itself from the wolves.

B. (:16-20) Key to Identifying False Prophets – Examine Their Fruit which They Cannot Hide

1. (:16a) Discernment of False Prophets

"You will know them by their fruits."

Grant Osborne: "Fruit" in the NT is more than just the deeds of people but everything they are (e.g., the "fruit of the Spirit" in Gal 5:22–23), including what they say as well as how they act.

Craig Blomberg: v. 16 suggests that outward behavior may enable one to distinguish between true and false Christians. Like inspecting vegetation, which inevitably discloses fruit in keeping with its species and state of health, so also one can look for good or bad (literally, rotten or worthless) spiritual fruit (vv. 17–20). Verse 21 further equates this fruit with doing "the will of my Father who is in heaven," precisely what the Sermon on the Mount is elaborating. Of course, any individual action can prove insincere, but those who have detailed opportunities to scrutinize both the private and public behavior of people who claim to be Jesus' followers (and particularly who can watch how those people respond after sinning) will have the best chance of evaluating the genuineness of professed commitments to Christ. It is worth emphasizing, however, that one can never know with absolute certainty the spiritual state of any other individual.

2. (:16b-18) Distinctive Bad Fruit of False Prophets

a. (:16b) The Source of the Fruit Determines the Fruit

"Grapes are not gathered from thorn bushes, nor figs from thistles, are they?"

Daniel Doriani: Jesus compares false teachers to thornbushes (Matt. 7:16). Thornbushes bear small, dark berries that resemble grapes at a distance. But if you examine them closely, you see what the berries are. So too with false prophets. We distinguish true from false by examining the fruit of their ministry and the patterns of their life. As Jesus says, "Every good tree bears good fruit, but a bad tree bears bad fruit" (7:17).

b. (:17) Good Will Always Produce Good and Bad Will Always Produce Bad

"Even so, every good tree bears good fruit; but the bad tree bears bad fruit."

- c. (:18) Good Can Never Produce Bad and Bad Can Never Produce Good “A good tree cannot produce bad fruit, nor can a bad tree produce good fruit.”

Robert Gundry: So strong is the link between inward condition and outward behavior, in other words, that a true prophet doesn't even have the capacity to pervert and disobey Jesus' teachings; nor does a false prophet have the capacity to uphold and obey them. So you can be sure in your distinguishing of false prophets from true.

3. (:19) Destiny of False Prophets

“Every tree that does not bear good fruit is cut down and thrown into the fire.”

4. (:20) Discernment of False Prophets

“So then, you will know them by their fruits.”

John Nolland: After the explanation and development of vv. 16b-19, we are brought back to a restatement of v. 16a. The central point has been the need to recognise in order to avoid the influence of those who would represent a different vision from that proposed by Jesus. By watching their deeds one is likely to expose their identity more quickly than simply by listening to their words.

Bruner: The test of their reality is not how they come on but how they come off; not how they appear but what they produce; not how they seem but the theological and moral influence of their teaching and life in the community. Thus the prayer at the end of the Lord's Prayer, “deliver us from evil,” also means “deliver us from false prophets and their amoral, immoral, or supermoral messages.”

III. (:21-23) DON'T DECEIVE YOURSELF WHEN YOU HAVE NO RELATIONSHIP WITH JESUS – FALSE PROFESSORS WILL BE REJECTED BECAUSE OF THEIR DISOBEDIENCE

R. T. France: Some interpreters treat the third scene, vv. 21–23, as a subsection of the second dealing with false prophecy. Apart from a single use of the verb “prophecy” as one of a series of charismatic activities claimed in v. 22, however, the two sections have little in common, and v. 20 with its repetition of v. 16a looks like the conclusion of a section, after which a new group is introduced in v. 21. As we shall note below, the nature of the deception in vv. 21–23 is quite different from that in v. 15. Whereas that was deliberate deception of disciples by those outside the group, the people of v. 22 are, at least in their own understanding, insiders; they are not so much deceivers as self-deceived. Their situation is closer to that of the non-practising hearer of v. 26 than to that of the wolves dressed up as sheep. . .

Whereas v. 15 warned the insiders against interlopers who would pretend to belong to the group, here there is apparently no pretense. We meet people who profess their allegiance to Jesus as “Lord,” and who can back up that claim with impressive spiritual achievements (“fruits”?) all carried out explicitly “in his name.” Unlike the consciously fraudulent prophets of v. 15, these people are apparently themselves more surprised than anyone when they find themselves rejected from the kingdom of heaven. They really thought they had made the grade; like the “goats” of 25:44 they are quite unaware of where they have failed. But the basis of their rejection is expressed not in terms of what they have done or not done, still less in terms of the allegiance they professed, but in the poignant words, the more desolating when addressed to professed disciples, “I never knew you.” . . .

even these spiritual activities can apparently be carried out by those who still lack the relationship with Jesus which is the essential basis for belonging to the kingdom of heaven.

Charles Swindoll: In the third set of paired alternatives, Jesus described two different responses to His teaching. He thus moved from unsound teachers (7:15-20) to unsound hearers (7:21-23). These verses can easily be misunderstood unless we read them very closely and consider them very carefully. Here we see the danger of a merely verbal profession of faith that lacks substance in reality. Some people may say things believers say and do things believers do—but it can all be fake.

A. (:21) Mark of Genuine Discipleship

1. Not Profession

“Not everyone who says to Me, 'Lord, Lord,' will enter the kingdom of heaven;”

2. But Obedience

“but he who does the will of My Father who is in heaven.”

Craig Blomberg: Verses 21-22 enumerate some of the ways in which individuals can masquerade as Christians. They may verbally affirm that Jesus is their Master, perhaps even with great joy and enthusiasm, but such claims must issue in lives of obedience (an important qualification of Rom 10:10-13). Some may be preachers. Others perform exorcisms (see comments under 8:28-34), and some work various kinds of miracles (see comments under chaps. 8-9 passim). We are reminded that signs and wonders can come from sources other than God, including both the demonic world and human manufacture (cf. Acts 19:13-16; Rev 13:13-14).

Grant Osborne: The message here is that mere confession is useless unless accompanied by action. One can make a profession, but without a changed life, such an affirmation is without merit. So living under obedience to “the will of [the] Father” (this is especially God’s will as unfolded in the Sermon itself = the love commandments of 22:37-40) is not an option but a necessity for entering the kingdom. A life of obedience (present tense “do” [ποιῶν] for continuous action) to his will is, in fact, the definition of the “greater righteousness” of 5:20 (cf. also 3:15; 5:6, 10; 6:1, 33).

B. (:22-23) Exposure of Ultimate Accountability

1. (:22) False Facade

*“Many will say to Me on that day,
'Lord, Lord, did we not prophesy in Your name,
and in Your name cast out demons, and in Your name perform many miracles?”*

Donald Hagner: These persons are thus not criticized for their charismatic activities but for their dependence upon them as a substitute for the righteousness taught by Jesus. We may conclude that charismatic activities, done apart from this righteousness, have no self-contained importance and are in themselves insufficient for entry into the kingdom of heaven. . .

Perhaps no passage in the NT expresses more concisely and more sharply that the essence of discipleship, and hence of participation in the kingdom, is found not in words, nor in religiosity, nor even in the performance of spectacular deeds in the name of Jesus, but only in the manifestation of true righteousness—i.e., the doing of the will of the Father as now interpreted through the teaching of Jesus. Relationship with Jesus is thus impossible apart from doing the will of God. For Matthew all is narrowed down to this one necessity. Neither good, important words (“Lord, Lord”) nor good, random deeds of mercy (e.g., casting out demons) can substitute for the full picture of righteousness the evangelist has given in the sermon. Religion can never take the place of actual obedience to the teaching of Jesus.

2. (:23) Damning Dismissal

*“And then I will declare to them,
‘I never knew you;
depart from Me, you who practice lawlessness.’”*

Robert Gundry: “Depart from me” implies that Jesus is the locus of the kingdom of heaven, and therefore of salvation, and that he’ll determine who’ll enter and not enter that kingdom.

Grant Osborne: In other words, these people like Judas pretended to be disciples and probably even acted like disciples (indeed, possibly thought they were disciples) but were never actually committed to him. They were committed to the power Jesus represented and to the status they thought they had, but they never allowed the will of God to control their actions. This is not an anti-charismatic saying but rather means that such actions will never suffice in and of themselves apart from a life committed to doing God’s will.

R. T. France: That these professed disciples did not even realize their religious failure, and would no doubt have rejected the term “law-breakers” with indignation, only makes the verdict the more poignant.

Daniel Doriani: “I never knew you” means “I never knew you as my child, as a member of my covenant family” (cf. Amos 3:2). Jesus says, “I am the good shepherd; I know my sheep and my sheep know me” (John 10:14). Paul says, “The Lord knows those who are his” (2 Tim. 2:19).

IV. (:24-27) BUILD YOUR LIFE ON THE RIGHT FOUNDATION -- CONTRAST BETWEEN THE HOUSE BUILT ON THE ROCK AND THE HOUSE BUILT ON THE SAND (WISE AND FOOLISH BUILDERS)

E. Michael Green: The final way Jesus presses his claim brings us to the end of the Sermon. In this age of permissiveness and pluralism (which we forget was much the same in Jesus’ own day), his claims stand out sheer and stark. He does not agree that it does not matter what you believe in so long as you are sincere. He does not allow that we are all climbing up to God by the route of our choice. He does not fit in with our shallow pluralism. Instead he says there are only two ways we can build. Not many ways, just two. We can either build on him and his teaching, which we will find is as solid as rock; or else we can build on any other religion or philosophy in the world, and we will find that it is sand, and in the last day it will spell ruin. . .

So, we must build on the Rock. How? Jesus' reply to that question is the heart of Old Testament religion. We must hear and obey. Not just hear, but obey. The theological and religious world is full of hearing; it is overloaded with God-talk. What will thrill the heart of God and make the pagans realize that the gospel is true is practical, generous obedience --

- obedience that transforms our characters (5:11–12),
- affects our influence (5:13–16),
- shows itself in practical righteousness (5:17–48),
- touches our devotional life (6:1–18),
- radically alters our ambitions (6:19–34),
- transforms our relationships (7:1–12)
- and marks us out as totally wholehearted servants of the King (7:13–27).

That is what Jesus is looking for. That is the mark of the disciples he calls. That is the kingdom manifesto detailed with immense authority at the outset of his public ministry.

A. (:24-25) House Built on the Rock

1. (:24) Life Decisions of the Wise Man

“Therefore everyone who hears these words of Mine, and acts upon them, may be compared to a wise man, who built his house upon the rock.”

Craig Blomberg: It is not enough simply to hear Jesus' call or even to respond with some temporary flurry of good deeds. Rather, we must build a solid foundation that combines authentic commitment to Christ with persevering obedience. Jesus graphically illustrates his point with a parable.

Robert Gundry: “Therefore” makes the story of the prudent and foolish builders illustrate both the final doom of false prophets and their followers, whose lawless conduct exempts them from persecution now, and the ultimate security of true disciples, though they're presently persecuted because of their obedience to the Law as interpreted by Jesus. The two occurrences of “everyone” stress the inescapability of eternal doom on the one hand and the certainty of eternal life on the other hand.

2. (:25) Life Destiny of the Wise Man

“And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and burst against that house; and yet it did not fall, for it had been founded upon the rock.”

B. (:26-27) House Built on the Sand

1. (:26) Life Decisions of the Foolish Man

“And everyone who hears these words of Mine, and does not act upon them, will be like a foolish man, who built his house upon the sand.”

2. (:27) Life Destiny of the Foolish Man

“And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and burst against that house; and it fell, and great was its fall.”

Warren Wiersbe: The foundation in this parable is obedience to God's Word—obedience that is an evidence of true faith (James 2: 14ff.). The two men in this story had much in common. Both had desires to build a house. Both built houses that looked good and sturdy. But when the judgment came (the storm), one of the houses collapsed. What was the difference? Not the mere external looks, to be sure. The difference was in the foundation: The successful builder “digged deep” (Luke 6:48) and set his house on a solid foundation.

A false profession will last until judgment comes. Sometimes this judgment is in the form of the trials of life. Like the person who received the seed of God’s Word into a shallow heart (Matt. 13:4–9), the commitment fails when the testing comes. Many people have professed faith in Christ, only to deny their faith when life becomes spiritually costly and difficult.

But the judgment illustrated here probably refers to the final judgment before God. We must not read into this parable all the doctrine that we are taught in the Epistles, for the Lord was illustrating one main point: Profession will ultimately be tested before God. Those who have trusted Christ, and have proved their faith by their obedience, will have nothing to fear. Their house is founded on the Rock, and it will stand. But those who have professed to trust Christ, yet who have not obeyed God’s will, will be condemned.

Donald Hagner: This last point receives great emphasis with the deliberate breaking of the symmetrical parallelism of the passage in the brief, ominous concluding words: καὶ ἦν ἡ πτώσις αὐτῆς μεγάλη, “and its fall was great,” the last word receiving an additional emphasis. This conclusion is analogous to that of v 23.

D. A. Carson: The sermon ends with what has been implicit throughout it—the demand for radical submission to the exclusive lordship of Jesus, who fulfills the Law and the Prophets and warns the disobedient that the alternative to total obedience, true righteousness, and life in the kingdom is rebellion, self-centeredness, and eternal damnation.

Daniel Doriani: Why does Jesus end the Sermon on the Mount with the words “a great crash” (7:27)? This is hardly the upbeat way in which preachers typically end their sermons. But Jesus is making a point. It is not enough to study or applaud the words of Jesus. We must do what he says. Otherwise, we are in danger of hypocrisy, in danger of facing a great crash.

(:28-29) EPILOGUE – AMAZEMENT AT THE AUTHORITATIVE TEACHING OF JESUS

A. (:28) Amazed Crowd

“The result was that when Jesus had finished these words, the multitudes were amazed at His teaching;”

Robert Gundry: This comment forms a bridge from this first of Jesus’ five, Pentateuch-like sermons in Matthew to the following narrative (compare 11:1; 13:53; 19:1; 26:1).

Craig Blomberg: Not surprisingly, the crowds marvel and contrast Jesus’ teaching with that of the scribes. For them the difference was one of authority. Of course the scribes and Pharisees were religious authorities, but their right to speak was always based on their ability to quote Scripture or subsequent Jewish teachers and tradition. Strikingly, Jesus quotes Scripture in his sermon only to reinterpret it, he cites no human authorities or tradition, and he speaks with directness and confidence that he himself is bringing God’s message for a new era in human history. Such preaching reflects either the height of presumption and heresy or the fact that he was a true spokesman for God, whom we dare not ignore.

B. (:29) Authoritative Teacher

“for He was teaching them as one having authority, and not as their scribes.”

Donald Hagner: The teaching of the Sermon on the Mount was radical both in content and in the unique authority that undergirded its forthright, confident delivery. Matthew will not miss the opportunity here at the end of a masterful distillation of the teaching of Jesus to call his readers’ attention to the supreme authority of this Teacher. Jesus is not one among other rabbinic teachers; his authority centers not on the tradition of the Fathers, nor even on the Torah, but somehow, mysteriously and remarkably, it centers in himself. As the final and authoritative exposition of the meaning of the righteousness of the Torah, this teaching has an incomparable authority that can be accounted for by only one fact: the unique person of Jesus, the one teacher, the one master, the Christ (23:8–10). Only such personal authority can support the radical and surprising teaching and its exclusive claims (cf. John 7:46). This authority is in fact inseparable from the newness of the gospel and the presence of the Agent of that gospel.

D. A. Carson: The central point is this: Jesus’ entire approach in the Sermon on the Mount is not only ethical but messianic—i.e., christological and eschatological. Jesus is not an ordinary prophet who says, “Thus says the Lord!” Rather, he speaks in the first person and claims that his teaching fulfills the OT, that he determines who enters the messianic kingdom, that as the Divine Judge he pronounces banishment, that the true heirs of the kingdom will be persecuted for their allegiance to him, and that he alone fully knows the will of his Father. . . Jesus’ authority is unique (see comments at 5:21–48), and the crowds recognized it, even if they did not always understand it. This same authority is now to be revealed in powerful, liberating miracles, signs of the kingdom’s advance (chs. 8–9; cf. 11:2–5).

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How does this passage refute the commonly held position of religious pluralism?
- 2) What kind of fruit should we expect a true Christian to produce?
- 3) How is it that counterfeit religion can sometimes look so outwardly impressive and seem to perform actual amazing works?
- 4) Why did the amazement of the crowd fall short of submission to the lordship of the Messiah?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

William Barclay: The basic fault of false prophets is self-interest. True shepherds care for the flock more than they care for their own lives; wolves care for nothing but to satisfy their own gluttony and their own greed. False prophets are in the business of teaching not for what they can give to others, but for what they can get out of it for themselves.

There are three ways in which teachers can be dominated by self-interest.

- (1) They may teach solely for gain.
- (2) They may teach solely for prestige.
- (2) They may teach solely for prestige.

What are the false effects, the evil fruits, which a false prophet may produce?

- (1) Teaching is false if it produces a religion which consists solely or mainly in the observance of externals.
- (2) Teaching is false if it produces a religion which consists in prohibitions.
- (3) Teaching is false if it produces an easy religion.
- (4) Teaching is false if it divorces religion and life.
- (5) Teaching is false if it produces a religion which is arrogant and separatist.

E. Michael Green: The Purpose of the Sermon

There is only one solution. The tree must be made good if the fruit is to be good. Only belief in the necessity and possibility of a new birth can keep us from reading the Sermon with foolish optimism or hopeless despair. It is all of a piece with the ethical teaching of the whole of the New Testament, which can be summed up in the phrase, “Become what you are.” Disciples are called by their Master to become in practice what they already are in the election and calling of God. Christian ethics is inextricably tied to Christian beginnings. You cannot have the fruit of righteousness without the root of relationship with the Righteous One.

And so, as A. M. Hunter suggests, we have here an ethic which has five characteristics.

1. It is a religious ethic, for the imperative is based on an indicative. What we do springs from what we are.
2. It is a disciples’ ethic, given to the new Israel—to the church and not to the world. It is how disciples should behave.
3. It is a prophetic ethic, not a new law. It is revolution, not legislation.
4. It is a comprehensive ethic, pointing to the working out, in all aspects of life, of that agapē love which has grasped us.
5. And it remains an unattainable ethic, which we must nevertheless strive to attain. “A man’s reach should exceed his grasp, / Or what’s a heaven for?”

It remains before citizens of the kingdom as a standard. It is a spur for those who possess the Spirit of Jesus, who laid it down.

Michael Wilkins: The religious establishment of Jesus’ day advocated a form of surface righteousness that masked an unstable foundation of religious hypocrisy. Jesus gives the bedrock invitation to true life in the kingdom of heaven, but it will be the unpopular way, the hard way, because those who follow him will leave behind the way of comfort found in identifying with the popular religious establishment.

As always, the wise person shows he or she has carefully viewed the shifting sands of life’s teachings and understands that Jesus is the only secure truth in life. The wise person thinks ahead to when there will be storms, and he sacrifices the enjoyment of the present good weather for the sake of building his or her life on the rock of Jesus’ words about reality. The foolish man thinks only of the present convenient situation and does not plan for storms of life or eternity. The choice is no less stark in our own day. Wise men and women build their lives on Jesus, regardless of cultural weather.

Richard Gardner: How does Matthew want us to hear and understand Jesus' ethic? The following seven theses attempt an answer to that question:

(1) Jesus' ethic is an ethic of the kingdom. From beginning to end, Jesus' message in Matthew is a message of God's reign. Jesus calls us to reorder our lives in light of the rule of God that will encompass history at the end, and that is already drawing near to us in Jesus' ministry.

(2) Jesus' ethic is an ethic for the community. As Jesus teaches on the mountain, he envisions a community of followers who will embody his word and be a light to the world. To put it another way: Jesus' teaching is an ethic for those who welcome God's rule and who seek to live by its vision.

(3) Jesus' ethic is more than a community code. Because the kingdom is wider than the church, the ethic of the kingdom relates to life outside the church. It both defines the way believers are called to live in society and reveals the will of God for all life throughout the world.

(4) Jesus' ethic holds act and attitude together. As the antitheses indicate, Jesus calls for righteousness in our total being, not merely correct performance. At the same time, Jesus calls us to do what he teaches, and he indicates some of the points at which our righteousness must be concrete.

(5) Jesus' ethic is an ethic of provocation. When Jesus redefines the law, he does not go the route of prescribing detailed legislation. Instead, he sets a new direction—and then uses stories and language that provoke us to discover new and appropriate ways to act.

(6) Jesus' ethic is an ethic of love. Although the word love does not occur until 5:43-48, Jesus is teaching what love requires throughout the six antitheses. He calls for love that makes peace, love that honors boundaries, love that keeps commitments, love that speaks the truth, love that endures evil, and love that includes all.

(7) Jesus' ethic is rooted in spirituality. As we discovered at several points, obedience to Jesus' word does not occur in a vacuum. Rather, it grows out of a life of trust and prayer. To put it another way: It is those who seek God who will seek first God's kingdom, and who will find the strength and courage to live for its coming.

TEXT: Matthew 8:1-17

TITLE: THREE HEALING MIRACLES TO CONFIRM HIS AUTHORITY – FEATURING THE POWER OF JESUS AND UNIVERSAL SCOPE OF HIS MINISTRY

BIG IDEA:

DESPERATE SITUATIONS SHOULD PROMPT EVEN THE OUTCASTS OF SOCIETY TO REACH OUT TO JESUS FOR THE POWER OF HIS HEALING TOUCH

INTRODUCTION:

Richard Gardner: The most adequate proposal on Matthew's design in this section [8:1 – 9:34] is that he has organized the collection in terms of alternating sections on miracles and discipleship (cf. Meier, 1980:79-80; Gundry, 1982:138). What we have then are three groups of miracle stories, each containing three narratives (8:1-17; 8:23—9:8; 9:18-34), and two sections of material on discipleship which serve as interludes (8:18-22; 9:9-17). Through this arrangement of material, Matthew portrays the disciples as apprentices in mission, who will soon be called to perform mighty works in Jesus' name (9:35 - 10:42). . .

In compiling this material, Matthew has left his imprint in several ways.

- First, he has constructed a new geographical framework for the stories, in which Capernaum serves as the hub for Jesus' movements.
- Second, he has rearranged the order of several Markan accounts, so that they fit better in the new framework.
- Third, he has greatly compressed most of the narratives, focusing on essentials. More specifically, Matthew (cf. Bornkamm, Barth, Held: 225):
 - (1) Uses compact, stock phrases to tell his stories.
 - (2) Gives little attention to secondary characters or actions.
 - (3) Repeats certain catchwords to link and unify his material.
 - (4) Lets Jesus' dialogue with supplicants stand out as central.
 - (5) Gives special prominence to the theme of faith.

D. A. Carson: Certainly these chapters cannot legitimately be broken down in some simplistic fashion. Though Matthew's pericopes cohere nicely, he intertwines his themes, keeping several going at once like a literary juggler. Thus these chapters are best approached inductively; and one can trace emphases on faith, discipleship, the Gentile mission, a diverse christological pattern, and more. At the same time, these chapters prove that Jesus, whose mission in part was to preach, teach, and heal (4:23; 9:35), fulfilled the whole of it. . .

One cannot fail to observe that of the many healing miracles Matthew could have related in the first half of this chapter, he has focused on a leper, a Gentile, and a woman. The leper was ceremonially unclean and therefore an outcast; the Roman centurion, though a man of status within Roman legions, was a Gentile and therefore without religious status in this Jewish context; as a woman, Peter's mother-in-law would have been excluded from some privileges and responsibilities open only to males. But they are the ones whose healing Matthew reports.

Richard Gardner: From the outset, therefore, Matthew wants us to appreciate the inclusive character of Jesus' mission. His mighty works break through social barriers of every sort.

R. T. France: The first group of three miracle stories seems to be treated as a connected whole, in that here, unlike in the following two groups, there is a concluding general summary of Jesus' work of healing (v. 16) which then prompts Matthew to add a formula-quotations (v. 17) encapsulating the motif of deliverance which underlies these healings. Matthew's rearrangement of the traditional order of the healings recorded in Mark 1:29–45, so that the story of the leper comes first, is perhaps also designed to highlight Jesus' work of deliverance by putting up front a more striking instance of Jesus' restoration of the distressed and excluded than the relatively mundane fever of Peter's mother-in-law.

(:1) TRANSITION: FROM AUTHORITY IN TEACHING TO AUTHORITY IN HEALING

“And when He had come down from the mountain, great multitudes followed Him.”

D. A. Carson: The introductory kai idou (lit., “and behold”; also in Luke, absent from Mark, untranslated in NIV) does not require that this healing immediately follow the sermon. In Matthew, kai idou has a broad range, sometimes serving as a loose connective, sometimes introducing a startling thought or event, and sometimes, as here, marking the beginning of a new pericope.

Grant Osborne: The “large crowds followed” (here “followed” [ἀκολουθέω] does not connote discipleship but interest in Jesus) repeats 4:25 and 7:28, showing the Sermon had relevance not just for the disciples but even for the uncommitted crowds.

I. (:2-4) HEALING THE LEPER – CLEANSING THE UNCLEAN – ENGAGING WITH SOCIAL OUTCASTS (HELPLESS SINNERS)

Donald Hagner: The unique authority of Jesus, just previously heard in his exceptional words, is now to be seen in a series of exceptional deeds. The first of them is recounted briefly and directly. There is a sense in which leprosy is an archetypal fruit of the original fall of humanity. It leaves its victims in a most pitiable state: ostracized, helpless, hopeless, despairing. The cursed leper, like fallen humanity, has no options until he encounters the messianic king who will make all things new. His simple confidence in the ability of Jesus to cure his disease is impressive. If only he wills to do it! But this precisely is the work of the Messiah: to restore the created order from its bondage to decay: “I do want to do it!” The very presence of Jesus represents God's “Yes!” to the request of this poor man and to all who suffer. As Jesus reached out to the leper, God in Jesus has reached out to all victims of sin. The leper was cured immediately by only a word from Jesus. This same Jesus cures his people, the Church, from a whole host of maladies stemming from the fall, both spiritual and physical. Indeed it is the ultimate purpose of Jesus, as part of the future eschatological consummation, to heal every malady without exception.

A. (:2) The Approach of a Hopeful Leper

“And behold, a leper came to Him, and bowed down to Him, saying, ‘Lord, if You are willing, You can make me clean.’”

William Barclay: Leprosy might begin with the loss of all sensation in some part of the body; the nerve trunks are affected; the muscles waste away; the tendons contract until the hands are like claws. There follows ulceration of the hands and feet. Then comes the progressive loss of fingers and toes, until in the end a whole hand or a whole foot may drop off. The duration of that kind of leprosy is anything from twenty to thirty years. It is a kind of terrible progressive death in which the sufferer dies by inches.

The physical condition of the leper was terrible; but there was something which made it worse. The Jewish historian Josephus tells us that lepers were treated ‘as if they were, in effect, dead men’. Immediately leprosy was diagnosed, the leper was absolutely and completely banished from human society. ‘He shall remain unclean as long as he has the disease; he is unclean. He shall live alone; his dwelling shall be outside the camp’ (Leviticus 13:46). Lepers had to go with torn clothes and dishevelled hair, with a covering upon the upper lip, and, as they went, they had to cry: ‘Unclean, unclean’ (Leviticus 13:45). In the middle ages, if anyone contracted leprosy, the priest donned his stole and took his crucifix, and brought the leper into the church. He then read the burial service over the person, who for all human purposes was dead.

In Palestine in the time of Jesus, lepers were barred from Jerusalem and from all walled towns. In the synagogue, there was provided for them a little isolated chamber, ten feet high and six feet wide, called the Mechitsah. The law enumerated sixty-one different contacts which could defile, and the defilement involved in contact with a leper was second only to the defilement involved in contact with a dead body. A leper did not even have to enter a house, but need only look in across the threshold for that house to become unclean even to the roof beams. Even in an open place it was illegal to greet a leper. No one might come nearer to a leper than four cubits – a cubit is eighteen inches. If the wind was blowing towards a person from a leper, the leper must stand at least 100 cubits away. One Rabbi would not even eat an egg bought in a street where a leper had passed by. Another Rabbi actually boasted that he flung stones at lepers to keep them away. Other Rabbis hid themselves, or took to their heels, at the sight of a leper even in the distance.

There never has been any disease which so separated one human being from another as leprosy did. And it was just such a man whom Jesus touched. To a Jew, there would be no more amazing sentence in the New Testament than the simple statement: ‘And Jesus stretched out his hand and touched the leper.’

Daniel Doriani: The leper displayed great audacity when he cut through the crowd, but he showed great reverence when he approached Jesus. He knelt down, in the posture of adoration. He also kept his distance, due to his leprosy. He called Jesus “Lord” out of respect. He could not yet know the whole truth about Jesus, but he did take steps toward full discipleship.

Robert Gundry: “If you’re willing” sets out an unsure possibility. “You are able” sets out a sure fact. Thus the leper expresses uncertainty about Jesus’ willingness but certainty about Jesus’ ability.

Craig Blomberg: The leper reveals an astonishing confidence in Jesus’ power (“you can”), especially in light of the Jewish belief that cures of lepers were as difficult as resurrections from the dead (based originally on 2 Kgs 5:7). At the same time, the leper defers to Jesus’ sovereignty (“if you are willing”). These twin thrusts are crucial in all Christian prayers for healing.

B. (:3) The Healing by the Compassionate Touch of Jesus

*“And He stretched out His hand and touched him, saying, ‘I am willing; be cleansed.’
And immediately his leprosy was cleansed.”*

Charles Swindoll: Jesus’ response to the man’s plea for cleansing teaches something vital about His character. In this snapshot, we witness not only a confirmation of Jesus’ divine power and authority but also a clear example of His compassion, grace, mercy, and love. Unlike a normal person who feared the hideous disease of leprosy, Jesus didn’t take a step back to avoid accidental contact. Instead, He condescended to the man’s deplorable condition, reached out His hand, and touched him. Jesus touched him! I can imagine the gasps from the crowd. Maybe at that moment the Lord even lost a few disgusted hangers-on who couldn’t follow somebody who would sink so low.

With His merciful action came words of divine power: “I am willing; be cleansed” (8:3). Just as light came into existence in obedience to the word of God (Gen. 1:3), the man’s leprosy obeyed Jesus’ word and left him instantly.

Among the inevitable oohs and aahs of the crowd, Jesus leaned in and instructed the former leper to follow the required protocols of the Law regarding leprosy described in Leviticus 14. Instead of telling everyone about the miracle, the cleansed leper was to fulfill the requirements before the priest and make the required offering (Matt. 8:4). Though Matthew doesn’t recount what happened to the former leper, we can imagine the astonishment of the priest who examined him and heard that Jesus had healed the man instantly, demonstrating not only His divine power but also His divine goodness. This man of Nazareth was surely the long-awaited Messiah, the King of Israel . . . but also so much more!

C. (:4) The Command to Follow the Procedure Required by Moses

“And Jesus said to him, ‘See that you tell no one; but go, show yourself to the priest, and present the offering that Moses commanded, for a testimony to them.’”

Daniel Doriani: Jesus says, “Tell no one but a priest,” for two reasons (8:4).

- The report to the priests testifies that God is at work and authenticates the healing as genuine.
- Examination by the priests also lets the man return to home and family, to work and friends.

E. Michael Green: A testimony to what? To the fact that one greater than Moses had come; to the fact that what Judaism could not do, in cleansing from leprosy and from the disease of sin that it represented, the fulfiller of Judaism was doing. Here was no intrusion: it was the completion of all that Judaism pointed to. What a frontispiece for the book of miracles!

Donald Hagner: Jesus desires simply to avoid inflaming popular, but mistaken, messianic expectations that looked for an immediate national-political deliverance. . .

Craig Blomberg: The leper will bear witness to his healing, however, precisely by making it public when he appears before the priest. “As a testimony to them” should not be taken as a sign of Matthew’s conservatism regarding the law, as if the phrase meant to prove to others that Jesus was not a law breaker. Rather, Jesus implies that the man should testify to what he has done for him. Jesus’ healings will disclose his unparalleled authority over sickness, matching the unique authority his preaching and teaching has already illustrated (7:28-29). The identical phrase recurs in 10:18 and 24:14, where the testimony clearly refers to the good news of Jesus himself. In Mark 6:11 it even carries the sense of a testimony against them, and there may be slight overtones of such hostility here too. Jesus does what the religious leaders cannot do and in a way that often alienates them.

II. (:5-13) HEALING THE CENTURION'S SERVANT – MERCY FOR GENTILES – RESPONSE TO ETHNIC “UNCLEANNES” -- DEMONSTRATION OF AUTHORITY – EXAMPLE OF GREAT FAITH

Donald Hagner: The second miracle performed by Jesus in this section is indeed remarkable in its own right: the healing of a terribly ill child at a distance and by the speaking of a word. The story in itself stresses the sovereign authority and uniqueness of Jesus, though Matthew draws no special attention to the Christological significance of the story. Indeed he focuses on the faith of the gentile centurion, faith that put Israel to shame. In Matthew's insertion of vv 11–12, Jesus declares that in the future Israel will be displaced by believing Gentiles, an emphasis that comes to sharp expression later in the parables of 21:33–44 and 22:1–10. The kingdom brought by Jesus is by its nature undeniably universal in scope. The centurion's faith is the first fruit of a ministry that will be designed to “make disciples of all nations” (28:19; cf. 24:14). What is anticipated here and commanded at the end of the Gospel finds its fruition in the course of the events narrated by the Acts of the Apostles. According to Paul's outline of events in Rom 11, the failure of the Jews made possible in God's wisdom the opportunity of the Gentiles. And Israel, not excluded from the great commission (28:19), “if they do not persist in their unbelief” (Rom 11:23), will yet take her proper place at the banquet of the table, together with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the Gentiles, whose faith (cf. Rom 11:20) is ultimately made possible by Israel herself (cf. Rom 9:5; 11:18).

E. Michael Green: The apostolic gospel was “first for the Jew, then for the Gentile”. That is exactly what we find prefigured in the Gospels. To be sure, Jesus concentrated on Israel during his ministry, but there are a number of pointers to the Gentile mission that would later develop. This is one of them. Jesus reaches out to this Gentile army officer. His concern is universal. We never read of him entering a Gentile home, but we do find him saying the word (8), and that word of Jesus is mighty to heal. The word of the risen and ascended Jesus was mighty both to transform lives and to heal bodies, in the Gentile mission as well as among those Jews who were responding to their Messiah. A story like this would be an enormous encouragement to those Gentile believers (many of them, no doubt, in Matthew's own congregation) who had never seen Jesus, but who had trusted his word and felt his power in their lives. And the attitude of this pagan centurion was a great example of the proper approach to Jesus. For it spoke of simple, profound faith. That was what brought Abraham to experience the power of God. Abraham believed God and it was credited to him as righteousness. But in Israel in Jesus' day there was not too much of that living trust in God's power to heal.

William Barclay: The centurion was a Gentile, and therefore strict orthodox Jews would have said that he was merely fuel for the fires of hell; he was the servant of a foreign government and of an occupying power, and therefore nationalistic Jews would have said that he was a candidate for assassination and not for assistance; the servant was a slave, and a slave was no more than a living tool. Here we see the love of God going out to help the man whom everyone hated and the slave whom everyone despised.

A. (:5-7) The Approach of a Hopeful Centurion

1. (:5-6) The Pleading Request of the Centurion

“And when He had entered Capernaum, a centurion came to Him, entreating Him, 6 and saying, ‘Lord, my servant is lying paralyzed at home, suffering great pain.’”

Daniel Doriani: This miracle takes place in Capernaum, a town on the northern tip of the Sea of Galilee. Jesus adopted Capernaum as his new hometown and the center of his ministry in Galilee. Capernaum was a trading city that stood at a crossroads, so it was logical for the Romans to have a tax station there and to support it with a garrison of imperial troops.

The leader of that garrison was a centurion. A centurion commanded the basic fighting unit of the Roman army. The most talented soldiers became centurions. They were the backbone of the army, maintained discipline, and gave orders. Central players in the alien occupation of Israel, centurions were roughly equivalent to a Nazi captain in the Netherlands or France in World War II. Why would Jesus help such a man?

William Barclay: It is quite clear that this centurion was an extraordinary man, for he loved his slave. It may well be that it was his totally unusual and unexpected gentleness and love which so moved Jesus when the centurion first came to him. Love always covers a multitude of sins; those who care for others are always near to Jesus Christ.

2. (:7) The Positive Response of Jesus

“And He said to him, ‘I will come and heal him.’”

Grant Osborne: The emphasis once more is on the compassion of Christ, now willing to help even a despised Roman.

B. (:8-9) The Authority of Jesus Recognized by the Centurion

1. (:8) Effectiveness of the Word of Jesus – Reasoning from the lesser to the greater

“But the centurion answered and said, ‘Lord, I am not worthy for You to come under my roof, but just say the word, and my servant will be healed.’”

D. A. Carson: The centurion’s reply opens with “Lord,” implying tenacity and deference (cf. v.6; 7:21–23). As John the Baptist felt unworthy to baptize Jesus, so this centurion felt unworthy to entertain him in his home. The feeling of unworthiness did not arise from an awareness that the centurion might render Jesus ceremonially defiled (contra Bonnard); race had nothing to do with it. Hikanos (“sufficient,” “worthy,” GK 2653) here as elsewhere (3:11; 1Co 15:9; 2Co 2:16) reveals the man’s sense of unworthiness (NIV, “do not deserve”) in the face of Jesus’ authority (cf. TDNT, 3:294; France, “Exegesis in Practice,” 258). “Here was one who was in the state described in the first clauses of the ‘Beatitudes,’ and to whom came the promise of the second clauses; because Christ is the connecting link between the two” (Edersheim, Life and Times, 1:549; emphasis his). . .

Precisely because Jesus was under God’s authority, he was vested with God’s authority, so that when Jesus spoke, God spoke. To defy Jesus was to defy God; and Jesus’ word must therefore be vested with God’s authority that is able to heal sickness. This analogy, though not perfect, reveals an astonishing faith that recognizes that Jesus needed neither ritual, magic, nor any other help; his authority was God's authority, and his word was effective because it was God's word.

Grant Osborne: This sense of unworthiness happens throughout Scripture (Gen 18:27; Job 42:6; Isa 6:5; Luke 5:8) when people come face to face with their own fallenness. The centurion is not a follower at this point but might recognize the presence of God in Jesus and thus realize how little he deserves his help. The first is definitely present, and there may be a hint of the latter.

2. (:9) Effectiveness of the Word of the Centurion

“For I, too, am a man under authority, with soldiers under me; and I say to this one, 'Go!' and he goes, and to another, 'Come!' and he comes, and to my slave, 'Do this!' and he does it.”

C. (:10-12) The Amazement of Jesus over Such Great Faith in a Gentile

1. (:10) Commendation of the Gentile Centurion for His Faith

“Now when Jesus heard this, He marveled, and said to those who were following, 'Truly I say to you, I have not found such great faith with anyone in Israel.'”

Warren Wiersbe: Twice in the Gospels it is recorded that Jesus marveled: here, at the great faith of the Gentile centurion, and in Mark 6:6, at the great unbelief of the Jews. Matthew recorded two “Gentile” miracles: this one and the healing of the daughter of the Syrophenician woman (Matt. 15:21–28). In both cases, the Lord was impressed with their great faith. This is an early indication that the Jews would not believe, but the Gentiles would. Also, in both of these miracles, our Lord healed from a distance. This was a reminder of the spiritual position of the Gentiles “far off” (Eph. 2:12–13).

Grant Osborne: The faith of this military man is indeed remarkable. Such men were normally the ones who most mistreated the Jews and looked down on them with contempt. That one of the very people most mistrusted by the Jewish people would be the one who showed them what faith really was is astounding.

2. (:11-12) Contrast in Final Destiny between Accepted Gentiles and Rejected Jews

a. (:11) Accepted Gentiles

“And I say to you, that many shall come from east and west, and recline at the table with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven;”

R. T. France: The imagery of reclining at table with the Hebrew patriarchs would inevitably speak to Jewish readers of the messianic banquet which was a popular way of thinking of the ultimate blessedness of the true people of God. In popular Jewish thought it would be taken for granted that, while not every Jew might prove worthy of a place at the banquet, it would be a Jewish gathering, while non-Jews would find themselves outside in the darkness; to be the people of God meant, for all practical purposes, to be Jewish. Jesus' saying dramatically challenges this instinctive assumption, both by including “many” others from foreign parts (“east and west”) on the guest list, and also daring to exclude those who were assumed to have a right to be there, the “sons of the kingdom.” To add insult to injury, the fate of these “sons of the kingdom” is described in the terms traditionally used in Jewish descriptions of the fate of the ungodly (and therefore, predominantly, the Gentiles), “darkness outside,” “weeping and gnashing of teeth.” The reason they are rejected is not explicit within this saying, but in the context in which Matthew has placed it it must be linked with the fact that Jesus has not found in Israel faith like that of the centurion. Thus belonging to the kingdom of heaven is found to depend not on ancestry but on faith.

Robert Gundry: Jesus' Authority in Pronouncing Believing Gentiles Accepted and Unbelieving Israelites Rejected –

That believing Gentiles will recline on cushions to eat with the sainted patriarchs at the banquet of salvation, commonly called “the messianic banquet,” strikes an astoundingly happy note for the Gentiles and a dreadfully ominous note for unbelieving Jews, called “the sons of the kingdom” in the sense that but for disinheriting themselves through unbelief, as God’s chosen people they should inherit the kingdom.

Their destiny to be “thrown out into the darkness farther outside” refers to darkness outside the brightly lit hall where the festivities of the banquet will take place. “Farther outside” stresses the distance of that darkness from the banqueting hall. Such a distance will preclude any hope of late entry. Sorrow over exclusion from the kingdom will lead to weeping and gnashing of teeth.

b. (:12) Rejected Jews

“but the sons of the kingdom shall be cast out into the outer darkness; in that place there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.”

Charles Swindoll: Jesus then used this remarkable faith —from a Gentile, no less —as evidence that God’s plan of redemption would ultimately include believers not only from Israel but also “from east and west” —that is, from among the Gentiles. They would find a place at the table with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven, while the natural “sons of the kingdom” —Jews —would be cast far away if they remained in their unbelief (8:11-12).

Richard Gardner: For Matthew’s community, the saying in verses 11-12 is a sobering reminder that the kingdom is open to all but guaranteed to none. Only those who believe as the centurion believed will sit at table with Jesus and Abraham.

Grant Osborne: “Outermost darkness” (τὸ σκότος τὸ ἐξώτερον) is that darkness that is completely “outside” the light of God, namely, the place of final punishment. It is in complete contrast with the light and joy of the banquet scene.

John MacArthur: Some people are confused, because it says that hell is a place of darkness, and also a place of fire, and they wonder how you can have fire without having light. And that’s part of the supernatural quality of hell, that there will be fire, fire of torment, and along with it, total darkness, a phenomenon created by God for eternal punishment. Outer darkness, that’s a place; just like heaven is a place. And the horror of that place can be seen in the phrase at the end of verse 12: “There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.” That’s the effect of the darkness: the loss of all happiness, the loss of all joy, the rage of helpless despair, the excruciating torment of eternal darkness, weeping, and gnashing of teeth.

D. (:13) The Announcement of the Healing Accomplished Remotely in Accordance with the Centurion’s Faith

1. Petition Granted

“And Jesus said to the centurion, ‘Go your way; let it be done to you as you have believed.’”

Daniel Doriani: Matthew also wants us to grasp the extent of Jesus' authority. Without stating the doctrine in theological terms, Matthew shows us who Jesus is. His power extends wherever his will ordains it. He is omnipotent and can project his power wherever he wishes, since he is also omnipresent. He partakes of the distinctive attributes of God, for he is God.

2. Punctual Miracle of Healing

“And the servant was healed that very hour.”

Craig Blomberg: Matthew concludes the passage by narrating the miracle almost as an afterthought. Jesus' healing nevertheless verifies the appropriateness of the man's faith, and it occurs at a time and in a way which confirms that supernatural power has been at work.

III. (:14-15) HEALING PETER'S MOTHER-IN-LAW – DEALING WITH INFIRMITIES AND GENDER “UNCLEANNES” – RESTORATION TO SERVICE

Donald Hagner: A third miracle is reported by Matthew with deliberate brevity. With a touch, Jesus cures the fever of Peter's mother-in-law, and again the incomparable authority of Jesus becomes apparent. The passage thus has a basically christological character. Even the concluding words that suggest the proper response of the disciple point again to Jesus himself. The miracle summary passage has the same effect. With a word, Jesus casts out demons; he heals all the sick who come to him. The particular miracle stories chosen by Matthew for his narrative are thus but representatives of the vast healing ministry Jesus had among the people. This is an important part of the story for Matthew and is designated specifically as the fulfillment of OT prophecy. It is a sign of the reality of the presence of the kingdom of God announced by Jesus. . .

These single stories, these specific healing narratives, are not the heart of the gospel. Disease is not the true enemy that must be overcome: that enemy is sin, for the fallen world produced by sin lies ultimately behind the suffering and sickness of this age. This is the enemy to be conquered by the end of the story (cf. 26:28). Properly perceived, these healings are most important as symbols of the much greater “healing” that is at the heart of the gospel, the healing of the cross. At the same time, they foreshadow the fulfillment of the age to come when all suffering and sickness are finally removed (cf. Rev 21:1–4). During his ministry, the healings performed by Jesus were the fulfillment of prophecy; but Isa 53:4 guarantees no one healing in the present age. What is guaranteed is that Christ's atoning death will in the eschaton provide healing for all without exception. The healings through the ministry of Jesus and those experienced in our day are the first-fruits, the down payment, of the final experience of deliverance.

A. (:14) Reacting to a Critical Illness

*“And when Jesus had come to Peter's home,
He saw his mother-in-law lying sick in bed with a fever.”*

Charles Swindoll: In the next snapshot of Jesus' power, we move from a display of His divine authority among the religiously remote and physically distant to a close, personal act of healing—a member of Peter's own family in Peter's own home.

D. A. Carson: Peter was married (1Co 9:5) and had moved with his brother Andrew from their home in Bethsaida (Jn 1:44) to Capernaum, possibly to remain near Jesus (Mt 4:13). His mother-in-law's fever (v.14) may have been malarial; fever itself was considered a disease, not a symptom, at that time (cf. Jn 4:52; Ac 28:8). Jewish halakah forbade touching persons with many kinds of fever (Str-B, 1:479–80). But Jesus healed with a touch (v.15). As in v.3, the touch did not defile the healer but healed the defiled.

Robert Gundry: That she was “thrown” on a bed portrays the fever as a malevolent force, just as in 8:6 a servant's having been “thrown” on a bed by some disablement portrayed the disablement as a malevolent force. In both cases, Jesus' conquest of the force exhibits lordly authority.

B. (:15a) Responding with a Healing Touch

“And He touched her hand, and the fever left her;”

William Barclay: Jesus was never too tired to help; the demands of human need never came to him as an intolerable nuisance. Jesus was not one of these people who are at their best in public and at their worst in private. No situation was too humble for him to help. He did not need an admiring audience to be at his best. In a crowd or in a cottage, his love and his power were at the disposal of anyone who needed him.

C. (:15b) Restoring Her to Health and Service

“and she arose, and waited on Him.”

Richard Gardner: She typifies the way all those restored by Jesus should serve him.

Warren Wiersbe: Women did not hold a high position in Israel, and it is doubtful that a Pharisee would have paid much attention to the need in Peter's home. Jesus healed her with a touch, and she responded by serving Him and the other men.

This seems like a “minor miracle,” but the results were major, for after sundown (when the Sabbath ended), the whole city gathered at the door that the Lord might meet their needs (Mark 1:32–34). Blessing in the home ought to lead to blessing in the community. The change in one woman's life led to miracles in the lives of many people.

(:16-17) -- EPILOGUE – GENERAL HEALING IN FULFILMENT OF OT PROPHECY

A. (:16) General Healing

*“And when evening had come, they brought to Him many who were demon-possessed;
and He cast out the spirits with a word, and healed all who were ill”*

Grant Osborne: News of Jesus' miracles traveled fast, and now many are brought to Jesus. Matthew centers on the “demon-possessed” here and mentions such in three summaries (4:24; 7:22; 8:17) and five exorcism stories (8:28–34; 9:32–34; 12:22–24; 15:22–28; 17:14–20). Jesus' authority extended not only to nature and physical illness but to the spirit world as well. This is the second occurrence of “demon-possessed” (δαίμονιζομένου) in Matthew, and it will become a major theme in terms of Jesus' authority and victory over the cosmic powers (of nature as well as of the satanic realm; see 4:24; 8:28–34; 9:32–34; 10:8; 11:18; 12:22–29; 15:21–28; 17:14–23 for demons; and 8:23–27; 14:22–33 for storms).

B. (:17) Fulfilment of OT Prophecy

“in order that what was spoken through Isaiah the prophet might be fulfilled, saying, ‘He Himself took our infirmities, and carried away our diseases.’”

Daniel Doriani: Jesus took all our brokenness on himself when he suffered and died for our sins. Isaiah 53 says he did this by covering the sin that causes grief and disease.

Matthew’s great insight is this: Jesus’ healings also flow from his death on our behalf, as a substitute for our sins. The substitution offers healing because it removes the sin that is the root of disease. So atonement and healing belong together. When Matthew speaks of sin one minute and disease the next, he follows Jesus, who came to cure sin and all its effects. For Jesus links salvation and healing. When Jesus met a paralyzed man, first he said, “Your sins are forgiven.” Then he said, “Get up, take your mat and go home” (Matt. 9:2, 6).

When we believe in Jesus, God begins to deliver us from all the consequences of sin. Some day, he will restore all that we lost because of sin, but that process is never complete in this life. The Lord will fully vanquish sin and disease when he comes again and restores the earth. But we have the right to expect real and substantial healing now.

Richard Gardner: The quotation from Isaiah 53:4 concludes the narrative and attests Matthew’s creative use of the OT. In the Hebrew text of Isaiah, sickness or infirmity is a metaphor for suffering related to sin, which the Servant takes upon himself and bears vicariously (cf. Isa. 53:4-6; 1 Pet. 2:24). As cited by Matthew, however, Isaiah’s words describe physical diseases or infirmities, which Jesus removes through his ministry of healing. This too is a part of Jesus’ fulfillment of the biblical promise.

E. Michael Green: But here the Isaiah passage seems to be used with a secondary application. It is related not to the death of Jesus but to his healing ministry. And it seems to say that so costly was this healing that Jesus took up our infirmities on himself, and carried our diseases (17). He bore our sicknesses as well as our sins. There is no suggestion of Calvary here. There is no justification for the claim of some charismatics that Jesus bore our sicknesses as well as our sins upon the cross. But Matthew does see the healing ministry of Jesus as part of the pain and hardship which Isaiah foresaw for the Servant of the Lord in chapters 40–55 of his book. Of course, sickness is related (though not, according to Scripture, directly related) to sin, and so it is not possible entirely to dissociate the healing ministry from the vicarious suffering in this picture of the Servant. But Matthew sees him here coming from the mountain of revelation (chs. 5–7) and entering into the valley of the shadow, where sickness and demonic forces held sway. And he was willing to carry the burden of the pain, ostracism and defilement of broken humankind, just as he would later bear its sin. Here is a fulfillment of the prophet’s words deeper than he could ever have imagined.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

1) Do you believe that Jesus still heals physical infirmities today when He wants to?

- 2) Is there any defilement that is too severe for Jesus to be willing to engage and offer deliverance?
- 3) What prevents you from exhibiting the same type of “great faith” that we see here from the Roman centurion?
- 4) How can you be confident that Jesus is concerned about all of the minute trials and difficulties and infirmities experienced in your inner circle of family and friends?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Daniel Doriani: As a first-century Jew viewed affairs, many of Jesus’ healings restored the sick to the community of Israel. A maimed person could not enter the assembly of the Lord’s people (Deut. 23:1). A leper had to live alone, outside the camp of Israel (Lev. 13:45–46). In Jesus’ day, there is evidence that the blind, lame, deaf, and mute were not considered full Israelites. Many believed that their disease or deformity proved that they were far removed from God, who had perfect life in himself.

So when Jesus healed the body of maimed, leprous, or blind Israelites, he did two things. He granted them physical health, and he publicly restored them to the family of God. This renewed sense of belonging to the people of God was a great blessing that attended many miracles. These restorations are essential to Jesus’ ministry to the whole person. Jesus healed the body, the spirit, and the social life of the sick. This was part of his larger plan to welcome outcasts and outsiders of every kind into the family of God. . .

What then is a miracle? Let me offer a definition that we will explore as we study Matthew. A miracle is a direct act of God in the external world, in which he works outside (not against) the common course of events to reveal himself, authenticate his servants, and manifest his nature and redemptive purposes. By this definition, childbirth is not a miracle because it is not a direct act of God and it does follow the common course of events. A sense of calm during a time of great stress is not a miracle because it does occur in the external world. Miraculous events are manifestly extraordinary, whether the witness is a believer or a skeptic.

A miracle is more than an amazing turn of events. Certain experts studying the Red Sea believe that thousands of years ago, when Moses led the Israelites across it as they escaped from Egypt, there was a place where a very strong, sustained wind could have blown all the water away, exposing the sea bed. Now Exodus says, “The LORD drove back the sea by a strong east wind all night and made the sea dry land” (Ex. 14:21 ESV). But the miracle is not simply that the wind blew, but that it blew when it had to, at God’s command, to deliver his people, as he had promised.

Thus, amazing events are not, by themselves, miracles. Amazing events are miracles when they fulfill God’s word and accomplish his purposes. Our text leads us to the purposes of Jesus’ miracles. It shows how miracles reveal God’s redemptive plan and call us to discipleship.

Charles Swindoll: We’ve all faced desperate situations we lack the ability to change. You know the feeling —making the change you want is humanly impossible. You would if you could, but you have no supernatural power. Maybe you've tried everything to help yourself or to help somebody you love deeply. You've cared, reached out, and expended a lot of effort, but some situations simply defy human intervention. There are no steps toward a solution. You can't unravel it. It's too complicated.

You may see yourself in one of the snapshots of desperate need recorded in Matthew 8:1-17. A physician may have told you it's terminal. Remember, the power of Jesus is limitless. It may be a day-in, day-out struggle with deep emotional scars. Remember, the authority of Jesus is unfathomable. It may be an issue that surfaces in moments of shame when you reflect on the past and realize you can't change it. Remember, the mercy of Jesus is immeasurable.

The three snapshots of desperate need in this passage can help you turn to the Lord Jesus and cling to Him, whether He chooses to deliver you instantly here on earth or ultimately in heaven, and whether He does so through a gentle touch or a distant word. Perhaps you're like the leper (8:1-4) or those afflicted with deep spiritual oppression or physical torment (8:16). You've got it bad, and it feels like there's no way out, no hope. Remember, Jesus' power is awesome. Don't think your need is too extreme for Him —“He Himself took our infirmities and carried away our diseases” (8:17). Whether He chooses to deliver you from your affliction sooner or later, in this life or in the glorious, miraculous resurrection, His will is ultimately to deliver you. Turn to Him.

Or perhaps you're like the centurion. You're doing okay, but you're caring for somebody who's at the brink. You're worn out. You're desperate. You can't stop thinking about them and praying for them, hoping for a solution, a recovery, an answer. Maybe it's a relationship that's broken, and you just can't rebuild the bridge. Maybe there's spiritual distance; a friend or family member needs the Lord or has wandered from the right path, and you can't seem to say or do anything to bring them around. Take these needs to the Lord too. Commit that person or that situation — whatever the distance —to Him. Leave it with Him, like the centurion did. Know that the Lord can say a word and bring a change. Let it be. Leave it with Him.

Finally, perhaps you're like Peter's mother-in-law. Who knows how long she was on that bed with a high fever? Maybe you, too, are simmering in agony, wasting away in the dark — spiritually, emotionally, or physically. Lonely, depressed, silent, cut off from the world, and shut in, you need the Lord's touch, and it hasn't come. Don't be afraid to ask the Lord to reach out through the body of Christ on earth —through His people commissioned to be His arms and legs, to extend comfort, love, and kindness toward their brothers and sisters. And count on Him to take care of you, in His way, at His time, as He pleases. Don't be afraid to ask.

We need to live our lives in light of this promise: The Lord is for us, not against us. He is full of compassion and understanding. He's not some distant deity simply frowning and judging us. The Lord is intimately interested in the details of our lives —disfigured lepers, anonymous servants of pagans, family members of believers, and all those who are spiritually and physically afflicted. He cares for them; He cares for you, too. The Lord is capable of handling whatever we're struggling with. The love and power of Jesus is like nothing you've ever heard of or seen before. It's inexhaustible. And He's ready to hear us when we call. Rather than living your life behind the shades of depression, discouragement, doubt, and denial, open the blinds. Focus on the power of Jesus Christ, and let that power give you the strength to get up each morning and take on the day, whatever it may involve.

Warren Wiersbe: Purpose of the Miracles of Jesus

Before we survey these miracles, however, we must pause to answer the obvious question: Why did our Lord perform miracles? Certainly He wanted to meet human needs. God is concerned about the temporal well-being of His creatures as well as their eternal happiness. It is wrong to separate ministry to the body and ministry to the soul, since we must minister to the whole person (see Matt. 4:23–25).

Certainly our Lord's miracles were additional credentials to prove His claim as the Messiah of Israel. "The Jews require a sign" (1 Cor. 1:22). While miracles of themselves are not proof that a man has been sent by God (even Satan can perform miracles [2 Thess. 2:9]), they do add weight to his claim, especially if his character and conduct are godly. In the case of Jesus Christ, His miracles also fulfilled Old Testament prophecies (see Isa. 29:18–19; 35:4–6). Matthew 8:17 refers us to Isaiah 53:4, and Jesus Himself in Matthew 11:1–5 referred John the Baptist to the Old Testament promises. These same "signs and wonders" would be the credentials of His followers in their ministries (Matt. 10:8; Heb. 2:1–4).

Along with His compassion and credentials, there was a third reason for miracles: His concern to reveal saving truth to people. The miracles were "sermons in action." Even Nicodemus was impressed with them (John 3:1–2). It is worth noting that five of these miracles were performed at Capernaum, and yet the city rejected Him (Matt. 11:21–23). Even the rejection by the nation of Israel fulfilled Old Testament prophecy (see John 12:37–41). Like the judgments against Egypt in Moses' day, the miracles of the Lord were judgments in Israel, for the people had to face facts and make decisions. The religious leaders decided that Jesus was working for Satan (Matt. 9:31–34; 12:24).

One thing is certain: Jesus did not perform miracles to "get a crowd." He usually avoided the crowd. Time after time, Jesus instructed those whom He had healed not to talk too much (Matt. 8:4, 18; 9:30; Luke 8:56). He did not want people trusting Him simply on the basis of spectacular deeds (see John 4:46–54). Faith must be based on His Word (Rom. 10:17).

Grant Osborne: While faith is central in the first two healings here, it is not in every healing, and definitely faith does not create the healing. Paul was not healed of his "thorn in [the] flesh" (2 Cor 12:7–10), and he stated in Rom 8:26–28 that we do not know how to pray in accordance with the will of God; only the Spirit does. It is due to the Spirit's intercession that "in all things God works for the good of those who love him," and in this instance that means whether we are healed or not. God alone is sovereign, not our faith. When we are not healed physically, God is doing what is best for us, and his very refusal to heal us physically becomes the means of healing us spiritually, so that God's healing presence is always involved.

John MacArthur: It's so refreshing and so exciting to see Jesus walking through the world, touching human need and human life. It's different than studying the vast, sweeping prophecies of Daniel. It's not like the logical, theological treatises of the apostle Paul. It's not like the historical, covenantal approach of the writer of Hebrews. There's just something fresh and living and practical about seeing Jesus walk through the world; and that's exactly what we have the privilege of doing, beginning in this eighth chapter.

Now particularly in the eighth chapter, we noted to you last time that our Lord expresses His authority. Having preached this monumental sermon in chapters 5 through 7, He faced the inevitable question: "What gives You the right to speak like that? Who do You think You are?"

Where did You come from? What is Your authority?” And so that is the question to which the following chapters are the answer.

In effect, what chapter 8 and 9 says is, “I’m God. I came from heaven, and I have all authority.” That’s the answer. And Jesus demonstrates His deity. He demonstrates His heavenly supernatural power in a series of incredible miracles that could be explained no other way than that God was present among men. So Matthew very carefully continues in his presentation of the kingship of Christ, here giving us the credentials of the King, showing us that He has a right to say what He said, He has a right to do what He did because of who He is. He is God, and no other explanation fits these series of miracles.

Now let me give you just a little bit of background. You have to understand how really dramatic the whole scene was. In the day of Jesus Christ, disease was rampant throughout the world. The world was literally filled with disease; and, frankly, medical science was, for all intents and purposes, well nigh nonexistent. So disease could not be dealt with properly, and so you just sort of let it run its course, and you always had the sick and the dying in your midst perennially.

There was a tremendous fear of disease. There was the pain and the suffering and the anguish that goes along with disease, and there were no miracle drugs to alleviate that. There were plagues that wiped out cities, wiped out countries, and were greatly feared. There were more incurable diseases than we have now, and so that was a world literally filled with disease. People didn’t live very long. They died very young. It was not abnormal to die in your 20s from disease. . .

It’s important to note how different He is than the contemporary so-called healers. I’ve incorporated a chapter in my book on The Charismatics on the subject of healing, and I noted there how Jesus healed. And let me just remind you of those major points.

First of all, He healed with a word or a touch. There were no gimmicks, no exercises, no folderol, no fanfare, no nothing; just a word and a touch. Just say the word, just touch.

Secondly, He healed instantaneously, instantaneously; that very hour, it says. And the woman with the bleeding problem in Mark was healed immediately; and the ten lepers were healed instantaneously. And in Luke 5, immediately the leprosy departed from him. And the crippled man at the pool of Bethesda immediately became well. And the blind man, when he washed his eyes, saw instantly.

Thirdly, He healed totally. There was never a recuperation. Can you imagine that you were thirty five years and never taken a step, and Jesus made your legs whole and told you, “Get up and walk?” Why even if your legs were whole, you couldn’t walk. There would be rehabilitation. There is never rehabilitation in any miracle Jesus ever performed, never. It was instant, it was total, immediate.

Fourthly, Jesus healed everybody. He didn’t have to screen out the tough cases, He healed everybody, everybody. He didn’t send away long lines of disappointed people like the so-called healers of today, He healed everybody. Luke 4:40 says, “And while the sun was setting, all who had any sick with various diseases brought them to Him; and laying His hands on every one of them, He was healing them.”

Fifthly, Jesus healed organic disease, the real stuff: crippled legs, withered hands, blind eyes, paralysis, the kind of healings that would show a miracle beyond doubt. He didn't heal low back pain or some supposed functional disorder.

And sixthly – and this is where Jesus really departs from everybody else – Jesus raised the dead. In the process of all of this, people, you've got to understand: this has never happened in the history of the world. And what the Jewish people are seeing with this miraculous work of Christ is something for which there is only possible a divine explanation. And that's what makes the Pharisees' unbelief so utterly incredible, and it shows the depth of the sin in their hearts. They would not believe in the face of incredible, inexplicable evidence. Nonetheless, Matthew indicts them again in this section by pointing up the credentials of Jesus; and out of the thousands of miracles, he picks three for this chapter. . .

1) And remember, I pointed out to you, there were four things that were so wonderful about the man? First of all, he came with confidence. In other words, he didn't care if he was a leper. He got rid of the social stigma. He got rid of the embarrassment, and he came because he was desperate. And then he came with reverence; it says he worshiped. And then he came with humility; he said, "If You will." And then he came with faith: "You can make me clean; I believe it." And when a person comes to Christ in desperation, worshiping in humility and in faith, that person can be really redeemed; and so the healing of the leper became, for us then, an analogy of salvation. . .

2) What a beautiful scene this man; this is a man's man. You didn't become a centurion by going from a desk job into this, you became a centurion by working your way up through the troops, through the ranks. This was a guy who was tough. He had to lead a hundred men, that's what a centurion did. He handled a hundred men. He was a drill sergeant, tough, combat oriented. But what a gentle, humble, meek, sensitive, loving tenderness; and all this for a sick slave?

A true, God-fearing Gentile like Cornelius; and now his faith becomes evident at the end of verse 8. Listen to what he says: "You don't need to come under my roof. Speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed." . .

3) Now just in case the Jews might completely come apart at the seams, He adds one more healing in the next two verses – very brief. I'm just going to mention it. Look at it: "And when Jesus was come into Peter's house," and the other Gospels tell us it was on the Sabbath, and they had been to the synagogue. In fact, all of these, as I said, may have happened the same day.

"And they went over to Peter's house." You know, they do what we do: they go to synagogue or church, and then they go home and have dinner. But they were having a problem there, and the other writer, Mark it is, tells us that Andrew was there, and James was there, and John was there. So you got Peter, Peter's wife, James, John, Andrew, and Jesus. You got six people, and they got a real tragedy. How can you have Sabbath dinner when mother-in-law is sick, right? That's what mother-in-law's for, right? How can you possibly have a decent meal? Plus it puts a damper on the whole operation. . .

You know, there's something wonderful about that. I think the reason that you have the little miracle here about the mother-in-law, she's Jewish. And it might have been hard for the Jew to accept the leper. But then to accept a Gentile, and then to hear the words of Jesus that they're going to be shut out of the kingdom. And so Jesus immediately drops back in this healing of a Jew, almost as if to say, “Yes, I’ve turned to the Gentiles; yes, the kingdom will embrace the Gentiles; but I’ll never turn aside My people Israel. There’ll be healing for them, too.” Isn’t that right?

TEXT: Matthew 8:18-22

TITLE: THE DEMANDS OF DISCIPLESHIP

BIG IDEA:
DISCIPLESHIP DEMANDS RADICAL COMMITMENT

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: Shallow Christians are not accepted by Jesus as disciples until they have counted the cost and deepened their commitment. Both of these men are more sincere than many who attend church regularly but are unwilling to get involved. Yet Jesus still sends them away with a curt, startling demand for a deeper surrender to him. Too many think they can get into heaven on the basis of a basic “faith” while clinging to the world. Yet James says clearly that “faith without deeds is dead” (Jas 2:26); unless we show by the way we live our lives that Christ is first, we are not disciples. We are saved by grace apart from works (Eph 2:8–9), but our good works are a necessary proof that we have found faith.

R. T. France: In this situation two potential followers declare their intention to go with him. But the interest of the story is not in these two men in themselves (we are told nothing about them, not even whether they in fact joined Jesus or not), but in Jesus’ remarkable responses to them both which raise an abrupt challenge to any easy understanding of discipleship. They express both the uncompromising authority of the demand Jesus makes on his followers and also the radical change of life-style which such following must involve.

Van Parunak: So in these two individuals, the Lord warns us against two errors of discipleship:

- premature enthusiasm, and
- distraction by the cares of the world.

Charles Swindoll: Because of His supernatural discernment, Jesus often responded to people in ways that seem strange to us at first glance. As we journey with Jesus through this section of Matthew’s account of His earthly ministry, we’ll be able to see how He responded to people in four separate settings. If we pay close attention along the way, we’ll learn how not to follow Jesus.

Leon Morris: The paragraph brings out the necessity of wholeheartedness in following Jesus. There were people who were well disposed to him and apparently recognized that his teaching was outstanding, but who were not prepared to make the sacrifices necessary to be real disciples. Matthew leaves his readers in no doubt that Jesus demanded wholehearted loyalty.

William Barclay: Jesus did not want followers who were swept away by a moment of emotion, which quickly blazed and just as quickly died. He did not want those who were carried away by a tide of mere feeling, which quickly flowed and just as quickly ebbed. He wanted disciples who knew what they were doing. He talked about taking up a cross (Matthew 10:38). He talked about setting himself above the dearest relationships in life (Luke 14:26); he talked about giving away everything to the poor (Matthew 19:21). He was always saying: ‘Yes, I know that your heart is running out to me, but – do you love me enough for that?’

John MacArthur: Impressive words of affirmation are easy to make, especially when one does not know the cost of commitment involved. The Lord knew that the initial declared faith of many of His followers was shallow and superficial. When Jesus was in Jerusalem during the first Passover after He began His ministry, “many believed in His name, beholding His signs which He was doing.” Yet, John goes on to say, “Jesus on His part, was not entrusting Himself to them, for He knew all men, and because He did not need anyone to bear witness concerning man for He Himself knew what was in man” (John 2:23–25). The Lord had no faith in their faith because He knew it was not genuine. Those people were only committed to the wonder and excitement that accompanied His work, not to Him as Lord or to the work of the gospel itself. Jesus repeatedly refused to take advantage of temporary popularity, which He knew would soon turn to permanent rejection.

Craig Keener:

- First, following Jesus may cost a disciple even the most basic security such as a place to live (8:18–20). ...
- Second, following Jesus takes precedence over all social obligations, even those family obligations one’s society and religion declare to be ultimate (8:21–22).

(:18) TRANSITION

*“Now when Jesus saw a crowd around Him,
He gave orders to depart to the other side.”*

D. A. Carson: Perhaps Jesus’ imminent departure to the east side of the lake prompted certain people to beg him to include them in the circle of disciples going with him. Discipleship in the strict sense required close attachment to the master’s person.

J. Ligon Duncan: We don’t know exactly why the Lord Jesus determined at that point to cross to the other side of the sea and continue His ministry there, but it may well be like in other places; He wanted a break from the attention. We know times in which the crowds pressed around Him, and the Lord Jesus would withdraw to a solitary place, sometimes to pray. It may well be that He wanted a solitary time on that boat crossing to the other side so that the crowds couldn’t be pressing in on Him. There could have been other reasons. It may well have been to keep the enthusiasm of these crowds who had already seen His miracles from going too high. The Lord Jesus knew that He had certain things that He had to accomplish during His ministry, and these people had seen Him perform miracles, and no doubt their enthusiasm for His message and His work would have been spreading around Galilee by this time, and it may well be that the Lord Jesus didn’t want that enthusiasm to get out of hand, and so He withdrew to another place to minister. It could have been that He withdrew in order to test the zeal of the more faithful of those who were following and listening to Him. We know that huge crowds gathered and listened to Jesus’ ministry in Galilee, but it would have been relatively easy to walk outside of one’s village and hear Him preach just outside of that village. It would have been rather more difficult to follow Him when he had gone to the other side of Galilee, into the land of Gad, to preach. You would really have had to be a devoted follower of the Lord Jesus Christ to make that hike to hear Him preach! He may well have intended that as a test of those who were truly committed to Him, to see if they would follow. Or, it may simply have been that it was the Lord Jesus’ job to preach the gospel in all the land, and as He had preached on that side of Galilee, now he was going to Gad, on the other side, so that the word of God would have been heard at every place throughout the land of Israel. We don't know exactly why. The text doesn't give us anything, but to tell us that when that crowd crushed in on Christ, He told the disciples to 'get in the boats, we're going to the other side.' And so they began to make their way.

I. (:19-20) DISCIPLESHIP DEMANDS COSTLY COMMITMENT AND FORSAKING OF EARTHLY COMFORTS AND SECURITY

A. (:19) A Scribe Volunteers for Discipleship

“And a certain scribe came and said to Him, ‘Teacher, I will follow You wherever You go.’”

E. Michael Green: In response to the enthusiastic ‘I will follow you wherever you go’ (19), Jesus points out the cost of commitment. To follow him will involve hardship, insecurity and homelessness. That was his lot. It would be the lot of his disciples too. It is remarkable that a teacher of the law should honour Jesus as highly as is reported here, for Jesus had not been educated at the scribal schools. But admiration will not suffice. Discipleship demands sterner stuff: blood, toil, tears, sweat. Is he prepared for the cost?

B. (:20) Jesus Confronts Him with Discipleship Demands

“And Jesus said to him, ‘The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man has nowhere to lay His head.’”

Walter Wilson: During his time on earth, this exalted figure lacks the sort of refuge available even to humble creatures such as birds and foxes (cf. Ps 84:3), his existence being defined instead by displacement and deprivation. To be a disciple, then, entails more than an initial decision to follow Jesus. It entails also a willingness to follow him specifically in his capacity as the Son of Man (cf. 20:28), the assumption being that Jesus's vagrant existence establishes a pattern for those who would follow him. Accordingly, his disciples will have to substitute conventional sources of human security with Christ's protection (cf. 23:37, also with avian imagery).

Grant Osborne: Jesus speaks of his itinerant ministry and lifestyle (cf. 2:13–14; 12:15; 15:21; 16:1–5), as does Paul when he notes the “homeless” nature of the apostolic ministry (1 Cor 4:11, cf. Heb 11:13–16). There will be no comfortable, settled life for one who truly follows Jesus. To the man's “wherever you go” Jesus adds, “OK, will you go this far?” Jesus does not want shallow commitments but demands that the one who truly “follows” him count the cost (cf. Luke 14:25–35) and make a radical commitment.

R. T. France: Here in 8:20 the reference [“Son of Man”] is to Jesus' current status, but whereas in 9:6 and 12:8 the title will denote a figure of unique authority, here it speaks paradoxically of a state of earthly deprivation which is sharply contrasted with the heavenly glory of Dan 7:13–14. As Matthew's gospel progresses it will be the future, heavenly authority of the Son of Man which will be increasingly in focus, but this first use of the title brings out the contrast between its literal meaning and its specifically Danielic connotations: the one who is to rule over all first shares with his disciples in all the insecurity of their human condition.

Charles Swindoll: Jesus called the scribe's bluff. He was all talk but no follow-through. The principle here is again simple: Don't follow Jesus full of yourself. Don't be a person with lots of words but who's short on humility. There's a saying among the seasoned ranchers in West Texas when they meet up with a kid with a big mouth and a lot of ambition but no scars or experience —“The kid’s all hat and no horse.” That was the scribe. He was all books, but no wisdom; all knowledge, but no courage.

John Nolland: Thus far in Matthew’s story all that offers itself is the leaving behind involved in the call of the four fishermen in 4:18-22 and the pattern of itineration in 4:23. But as the story unfolds, Jesus will soon be unwelcome in “the country of the Gerasenes” (8:33), and the disciples will be warned to anticipate (sometimes) not being welcomed (10:14), judicial persecution (vv. 16-20), and family and wider hostility (vv. 21-22, 34-36) and will be advised to flee from their persecutors (v. 23). And these isolating experiences are to be linked with taking up the cross and following Jesus (v. 38), a concept which will gradually become clear as Jesus announces his coming Passion and then goes through the experience (chaps. 26–27). Deprivation plays its part in what Jesus is speaking of, but the main focus is on being made unwelcome by others. The scribe is offering to join what is to become an outcast group.

S. Lewis Johnson: Since we have become believers, this world is not our home. The foxes have holes. The birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head. And the disciple of Jesus Christ, who intends to truly follow him wherever he goes, can never be at home in this world. The world is not my home. We are passing through, on the way, to our true home, for our citizenship is in heaven.

Donald Hagner: Discipleship, as Jesus will suggest, involves more than just willingness to follow in the sense of accompanying someone, or even willingness to listen to and learn from someone and to live with that person as did students with their rabbis; it involves at bottom a total lifestyle. It is important to note (with Kingsbury, NTS 34 [1988] 45–59) that although the scribe reflects good Jewish practice in choosing his teacher, in the Gospel narrative it is consistently Jesus who initiates the disciple-master relationship by his sovereign choice of disciples. This perhaps explains the coolness of Jesus’ response in the next verse.

Leon Morris: “Laying the head” here stands for owning a place where one may rest; Jesus cannot claim a place of his own where he can sleep. As Schweizer puts it, he was “devoid of all middle-class security.” If the scribe wished to follow him, he must bear this in mind. Jesus sat loose to possessions, he had no secure job, and he owned very little. To be the disciple of such a man might well be interesting, but it would be far from comfortable. The scribe’s reaction is not given, but certainly the cost of discipleship is brought clearly before him. . .

“Son of Man” -- Why did Jesus use the term? I have suggested elsewhere that that was

1. firstly because it was a rare term and one without nationalistic associations. It would lead to no political complications....
2. Secondly, because it had overtones of divinity....
3. Thirdly, because of its societary implications. The Son of man implies the redeemed people of God.
4. Fourthly, because it had undertones of humanity. He took upon Him our weakness.

John Broadus: Frequently journeying far and wide over the country, even as now he was about to cross the lake into a wild, inhospitable region, his life was one of peculiar trial and self-denying toil, and if the Scribe proposed to follow him wherever he went, he must make up his mind to follow a homeless wanderer, and so to endure many hardships.... We see from this incident how careful our Lord was to warn men beforehand what they were to expect in entering upon his service as in Luke 14. And although it is not now the duty of all his followers to spend their lives in wandering labors, it is still the duty of every one to “renounce himself, and take up his cross,” and in the highest sense to “follow” Jesus

II. (:21-22) DISCIPLESHIP DEMANDS URGENCY OF COMMITMENT AND PRIMACY OF ALLEGIANCE IN PURSUING KINGDOM PRIORITIES

A. (:21) A Potential Disciple Volunteers for Discipleship

“And another of the disciples said to Him, ‘Lord, permit me first to go and bury my father.’”

R. T. France: The potential disciple’s words are usually understood of the immediate and pressing responsibility of arranging the funeral for his father who had just died. Burial took place within 24 hours of the death, so he would not be asking for a long postponement, though subsequent ceremonies could last up to a week. The arrangements were the responsibility of the eldest son (Gen 50:5–7; Tob 4:3; 6:15; 14:11–12; Sir 38:16), and Jewish custom and piety demanded that they take priority over all other commitments, even the most essential prayers (Lev 21:1–3; m. Ber. 3:1). The request would thus be entirely reasonable, indeed essential. If his filial duties prevented him from joining the group in the boat just now, he could catch up with Jesus as soon as his responsibilities had been discharged; the word “first” implies that was his intention. No Jew, especially one who took religious obligations seriously, could have expected him to do otherwise. Jesus’ refusal to allow so essential a filial duty would then be profoundly shocking.

But K. E. Bailey, drawing on the insight of Arabic commentators and on his own experience of cultures and idioms of the Middle East, insists that such a scenario results from a “western” reading of the text and is culturally impossible. If the father had just died, the son could hardly be out at the roadside with Jesus; his place was to be keeping vigil and preparing for the funeral. Rather, to “bury one’s father” is standard idiom for fulfilling one’s filial responsibilities for the remainder of the father’s lifetime, with no prospect of his imminent death. This would then be a request for indefinite postponement of discipleship, likely to be for years rather than days. In that case Jesus’ reply would be less immediately shocking—the man’s proposed “discipleship” was apparently not very serious.

Charles Swindoll: The man had a situation at home regarding his aging father. Evidently, he was the eldest son of his family, and thus responsible for his father’s eventual burial. Contrary to what many readers assume, the father was not dead yet. If the man’s father had already died and was awaiting burial, it’s highly doubtful the son would have been out among the crowd of Jesus’ followers, especially since burial generally took place the same day a death occurred. The expression “bury my father” (8:21) thus likely referred to staying at home for the remainder of his parent’s life so he could settle the family estate. The man hoped that he could indefinitely defer enlistment among the ranks of Jesus’ close disciples until his father died and he received his inheritance. Perhaps then, being fully funded from his family estate, he would be able to provide for himself and serve Jesus in style. . . The only reason the man wanted a rain check from discipleship was because he wanted a piece of the pie back home!

B. (:22) Jesus Confronts Him with Discipleship Demands

“But Jesus said to him, ‘Follow Me; and allow the dead to bury their own dead.’”

Michael Wilkins: Jesus will later rebuke the Pharisees and teachers of the law for not rightly honoring father and mother (15:1–9), so he is not advocating the contravening of the Old Testament prescription. Trying to understand Jesus' response has led to a number of explanations.

- Some think that the person's father has not yet died and that he wants to stay with him until then.
- Or perhaps he is returning to fulfill the second stage of burial by the transfer of the bones of his father a year after death to an ossuary.
- Others look for explanation in a metaphorical allusion in Jesus' language, so that he intends to mean something like "let those who are spiritually dead bury the physically dead."

In any case, Jesus perceives the real problem with this disciple: He had not yet understood clearly the place that Jesus must have as the primary allegiance of his life.

Allen Browne: So, did Jesus lose this disciple? Probably. Surely we could do a better job of selling people the gospel message. How about some popular music, with a good light show to load up people's senses? Then get a motivational speaker to convince them they could fulfil their potential much better with faith. Then reel 'em in with a moment of decision, where they can buy in simply by raising their hand. We could make it so easy, with no expectations or demands on their life. We could even ask the crowd to close their eyes, since it's just a personal decision and we wouldn't want them publicly embarrassed.

Yep. In the last 200 years, we've finally developed what Jesus was missing: a response mechanism that's sophisticated, slick and sensitive. It's so much easier to get results now than with his approach.

I mean, we wouldn't want people to go away with the idea that following Jesus would so change their priorities that they could end up homeless. We wouldn't want people to think following Jesus would take priority over every other duty in life.

When Jesus spoke of lacking accommodation, he meant it literally: he and his followers slept rough as they travelled from place to place. Perhaps his comments about death also reflected awareness of the final battle they would face in Jerusalem.

There's something honest about Jesus' picture of discipleship as suffering and struggle. He called people to give their lives for the kingdom of God.

<https://allenbrowne.blog/2017/07/12/the-decision-moment-with-jesus/>

Robert Gundry: False disciples find supposedly legitimate reasons not to meet the rigorous demands that Jesus makes. Again the present tense in "Jesus says to him" underlines Jesus' command to follow him and to let the dead bury their own dead, which probably refers to secondary burial, the custom of boxing up the bones of dead people after the decomposition of their flesh. The custom made room for further corpses on burial shelves in tombs. In the present passage, if the father had just died his son would have been already engaged in the initial burial of his father rather than talking to Jesus. But if the father was already buried, his son might want to delay following Jesus till the father's remains were ready for secondary burial, a filial duty just as the initial burial was. "The dead" who should "bury their own dead" then refers to family members already dead and secondarily buried in the same tomb with the father: they should take care of his secondary burial since he's already in their midst. As though they could! But Jesus is speaking ironically. His point is that an immediate following of him takes precedence over all else, even over the duty of a son to take care of his father's bones (compare 1 Kings 19:19–21).

S. Lewis Johnson: Isn't this an outrageous claim? The Lord Jesus claiming that he himself should have implicit obedience even above our responsibilities to our families? Why if he were only a man, this is an outrageous claim. But if he is more than a man, then it's the only wise and right claim for God to make.

E. Michael Green: At all events it is a warning against missing the boat, and a challenge to respond and begin discipleship while opportunity knocks.

D. A. Carson: In this inquirer he detected insincerity, a qualified acceptance of Jesus' lordship. And that was not good enough. Commitment to Jesus must be without reservation. Such is the importance Jesus himself attached to his own person and mission.

Daniel Doriani: Jesus replies, "Follow me, and let the dead bury their own dead" (8:22). This is a metaphor. The dead, by definition, cannot do anything. He means let the spiritually dead care for the spiritually dead, for matters of this world, such as burials and aging parents. True disciples follow Jesus now.

In a way, therefore, Jesus' challenge is milder than it initially seems. He is not interrupting funeral proceedings. Yet in a way the challenge is stronger than it seems. For Jesus is asking the man to give him greater honor and service than his parents. There is only one person, in that culture, who deserves greater honor than our parents: God. Jesus is telling the man, "I deserve your supreme honor and attention." In our culture, self-development commands supreme loyalty for many of us. Jesus tells us the same thing: "I deserve your supreme loyalty and attention."

Donald Hagner: Disciples are therefore in a sense always learners who are discovering more about discipleship as they attempt to live in obedience to Jesus. But the key point is that the call is radical; so too must the responding commitment be radical. It would be as much a mistake to take the statement of v 22 quite literally (unless in fact the proposed delay was to be a long one) as it would be to dismember oneself for the sake of righteousness (thus Carson rightly). But, despite the hyperbole, there is a fundamental principle here about the radical character, urgency, and uncompromising nature of discipleship that is to be heard with every invitation to, or volunteering of, discipleship to Jesus and the cause of the kingdom.

William Barclay: The tragedy of life is so often the tragedy of the unseized moment. We are moved to some fine action, we are moved to the abandoning of some weakness or habit, we are moved to say something to someone, some word of sympathy, or warning, or encouragement; but the moment passes, and the thing is never done, the evil thing is never conquered, the word is never spoken. In the best of us, there is a certain lethargy and inertia; there is a certain habit of procrastination, there is a certain fear and indecision; and often the moment of fine impulse is never turned into action and into fact.

Jesus was saying to this man: 'You are feeling at the moment that you must get out of that dead society in which you move; you say you will get out when the years have passed and your father has died; get out now – or you will never get out at all.'

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why are we so scared of making Christian discipleship sound difficult and challenging?
- 2) How has our commitment to Jesus proven to be costly and required sacrifice on our part?
- 3) When have we had to put allegiance to Jesus above allegiance to family or close friends?
- 4) Why does Jesus prefer to use the title “Son of Man” to refer to Himself?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Michael Wilkins: The expression “Son of Man” would strike a relatively ambiguous chord with the scribal teacher of the law. In Ezekiel, God refers to the prophet with the expression “son of man” over ninety times, pointing to Ezekiel’s frailty as a human before the mighty God revealed in the vision. But “Son of Man” is also used in Daniel’s prophecy to refer to a glorified Sovereign, the apocalyptic messianic figure who rules forever with the Ancient of Days (Dan. 7:13–14). This latter sense of the expression found its way into use in Judaism, in the pseudepigraphal writings 1 Enoch and 2 Esdras 13 (or 4 Ezra 13). The reference in 1 Enoch is particularly interesting because it precedes the time of Jesus: “... pain shall seize them when they see that Son of Man sitting on the throne of his glory. [These] kings, governors, and all the landlords shall [try to] bless, glorify, extol him who rules over everything, him who has been concealed. For the Son of Man was concealed from the beginning, and the Most High One preserved him in the presence of his power; then he revealed him to the holy and the elect ones” (1 En. 62:5–7).

With such a general ambiguity, “Son of Man” is convenient for Jesus to use to give instruction about his true identity. It does not have popular associations attached to it, such as were attached to titles like “Messiah,” “Son of David,” or even “Son of God.” Instead, he can teach the meaning of his true identity by referring to himself with the expression, which indeed is his favorite self-designation. With a general threefold progression, Jesus uses the expression to clarify exactly who he is and what is his ministry.

1. The Son of Man is the humble Servant, who has come to forgive sins of common sinners in his earthly ministry.
2. The Son of Man is the suffering Servant, whose atoning death and resurrection will redeem his people.
3. The Son of Man is the glorious King and Judge, who will return to bring the kingdom of heaven to earth.

Jesus’ mission is not always understood because of the misperceptions and faulty expectations of the people, the religious leaders, and even his own disciples. But at the end, it is perfectly clear that he is claiming to be the divine Messiah of Israel (cf. 26:63–68).

Van Parunak: Development of the Title “Son of Man”

John MacArthur: What Keeps Men from Christ?

Now there were many Pharisees who hated, turned, and walked away. They loved their sin. They loved darkness rather than light. But then there were others who were attracted to Him, the magnetism of His personality: the thrill seekers. And they came. But in each case, something kept them from genuine conversion. Let's see what it was. Three classic, classic cases.

Number one: Personal comfort. Personal comfort. Verse 18: “Now when Jesus saw great multitudes about Him, He gave commandment to depart to the other shore.” They were on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee. The crowd was becoming so massive; the Lord was weary in His physical body. In fact, on the boat ride across, He fell asleep down in the hole of the boat on the wood planks. He needed time for prayer and refreshment. He needed time for respite, for meditation. And the crowd could put pressures on Him that were not necessarily in the plan of God. And so He said, “I think we’d better leave, go to a new place,” commanded them to depart to the other side.

Now when He did that, immediately it pressed the issue of commitment with certain people, because by then He had a lot of people following Him. In fact, Mark tells us that when He went on His little boat, a bunch of other little boats went behind Him like a little flotilla, following along. So some people were at the very crux of decision: “Do I get in the boat and go, or do I stay? What do I do?” And we meet these three people in our lesson this morning.

The first man was so interested, but he never came to true salvation, because he wanted personal comfort more than he wanted Christ. Verse 19: “And a certain scribe came, and said unto Him, ‘Master, I will follow Thee wherever Thou goest.’” Oh man, that sounds good, doesn’t it? Oh, you could sing that song: “Follow, I will follow Thee every passing day.” Wonderful. “Hey, we’ve got a live one, Lord. And guess what; he is a scribe.” . . .

Well, you say, “Why did He bring that up?” [vs. 20] Because He could read his mind, and He knew what the guy’s hang-up was. The guy was saying, “Man, my life is full and rich, and I got all I want, and my lifestyle satisfies me, and I just want to add You to my lifestyle. I just want to take my whole gig, and drag it along, and follow You.” Jesus refuses to cash in on a moment’s popularity. . .

There's a price to pay to be a Christian. This guy wasn't willing to pay the price, he just wanted to add excitement to his life. He was a potential Judas, and nobody needs more than one of those. So, Jesus drove him away. . .

The second one wanted personal riches, verse 21. Now watch this: "And another of His disciples." Now the word "disciple" is not an official word with a capital D. It simply means learner, follower. And at this particular point, He's got a lot of people following Him of all different levels. And another one of these followers said to Him, "Lord, permit me to go first and bury my father." . . .

He's not saying Christians are forbidden to go to funerals. He's not saying if you're a Christian, you're not supposed to make sure your father or mother gets buried. It's a proverb, and what he means is the world's passing affairs, the coming and going of people, the passing of fortunes from one to another is all part of a dead system. "You are called to a living kingdom: go and preach the kingdom."

You see, the man's priorities are fouled up. Secular matters belong to the people who are secular. The human system takes care of itself. But this young man, what does it say he did? It's not there either. He left somewhere between verse 22 and 23. He disappeared. Why? Personal possessions were the big thing to him. He had waited a long time for his piece of the action, he wasn't bailing out now. Hey, he liked the thrill and the charisma and the wonder and the miracles, and this was fabulous stuff, and he wanted to get on the bandwagon. But there was no commitment there; he wanted his money.

Matthew McCraw: Jesus as Number One

Matthew is going to tell us today about two short conversations that Jesus had with two men who wanted to follow Him. Jesus will tell them that it takes sacrifice and it will involve them living by different standards.

I. Following Jesus requires uncommon sacrifice (18-20) --

One of the challenges in the American church is that so many people have been duped into thinking that following Jesus is no big deal, that it takes no commitment, and that it involves no sacrifice. Not so, says Matthew 8:19-20!

II. Following Jesus requires unusual standards (21-22) --

You see, it doesn't matter if the man has to miss his funeral, or delay the completion of the family burial, or miss out on taking care of his aging father, following Jesus is more important than any and all of that!

There is nothing in this world that should take precedence over following Jesus! Nothing! That's the point of verses 21 and 22!

Don't let anything get in the way of you following Jesus.

Followers of Jesus don't have the standards of the world when it comes to what is most important to us. Jesus has unusual standards. You should want the usual standards.

<https://fbcbartow.org/sermons/jesus-as-number-one-matthew-818-22/>

J. Ligon Duncan: What are the evidences of Christ's Lordship in our lives? Do we desire to read His word, to study His word, to hear His word, to feast on His word? Do we desire to be conformed to His image? Do we desire to be filled afresh with His spirit? Do we desire to love His people, to serve His people? Are His people our people? Even though they are different promised culturally, even though they are different promised economically, even though they're different promised in so many ways? Are His people our people? Do they take priority in our lives? Do we desire to serve them? Today we have an opportunity to show His Lordship in another way. We have an opportunity to show His Lordship with our money in the year to come. What does our giving say about the Lordship of Christ in our lives. Where does our giving say our priority is? Do we look at what we have from God and say, "Lord, this is from You. It's Yours. You have graciously, You've generously, You've even extravagantly given to me and now I want to use what You've given to me strategically for the kingdom. It's yours. It will not be my master. I will master it and I will use it for Your cause." Our Lord made discipleship hard and lost many prospective followers, because He called them to a pilgrimage, not to a parade. He called them to a fight, not to a frolic. Christ's disciples have been called to the fight. Are you there with him as your Lord?

BIG IDEA:

THE MANIFESTATION OF THE AUTHORITY OF JESUS STIRS UP REACTIONS OF BOTH AWE AND REJECTION

INTRODUCTION:

Leon Morris: For the second time in this section of his Gospel Matthew brings three miracles before his readers. He is emphasizing the authority and the power that were manifest throughout Jesus' ministry.

Charles Swindoll: The Bible is filled with amazing scenes and stories that almost take our breath away. When we picture ourselves being there, seeing through our own eyes the incredible events as they take place and wondering how everything will turn out, we're held in the grip of our imagination. The disciples of Jesus occupied front-row seats throughout His earthly ministry. How often they must have stared in amazement at what they saw and heard —mouths wide open, shocked beyond words!

R. T. France: The second group of miracles are linked both geographically and thematically. Geographically they are grouped around the crossing of the lake, which was signalled in v. 18. The first miracle takes place during the crossing, the second on arrival on the other side, and the third on their return to Capernaum. The explicit mention of the boat in 8:23 and 9:1 reinforces this connection. . .

The thematic connection between these three miracles is in the unparalleled authority displayed by Jesus, which is the explicit focus of the third (9:6–8), but is also expressed in the reaction of the disciples to the first (8:27) and of the people of the Decapolis to the second (8:34). The miracles in the first group were physical healings (though exorcisms were also included in the general summary in 8:16). In this group the third (9:1–8) is also a physical healing, but that is not the main focus of the pericope which contains it. Rather we now see Jesus' authority revealed in three new ways, different from one another but all equally astounding. He has authority to quell wind and water, to expel demonic spirits, and to forgive sins. The question "What sort of person is this?" (8:27) thus becomes ever more insistent.

Warren Wiersbe: The persons involved in these three miracles all had a need for peace, and Jesus provided that peace.

1. Peace in the storm (8:23–27).
2. Peace in a community (8:28–34).
3. Peace in the conscience (9:1–8).

Richard Gardner: What the three stories in this unit do have in common is their focus on the dramatic scope of Jesus' power or authority. In one instance Jesus demonstrates authority over the elements. In another it is authority to destroy demonic powers. And in the third account Jesus confronts us with his authority to forgive sin. The question that all three stories raise for the reader is the question found in 8:27: What sort of person is this, who commands such authority?

I. (8:23-27) AUTHORITY OVER NATURE -- CALMING OF THE STORM

William Barclay: When the cold, bleak wind of sorrow blows, there is calm and comfort in the presence of Jesus Christ. When the hot blast of passion blows, there is peace and security in the presence of Jesus Christ. When the storms of doubt seek to uproot the very foundations of the faith, there is a steady safety in the presence of Jesus Christ. In every storm that shakes the human heart, there is peace with Jesus Christ.

Grant Osborne: There is in general a four-part development:

1. the appearance of the storm (vv. 23–24),
2. the interaction between Jesus and the disciples (vv. 25–26a),
3. the stilling of the storm (v. 26b),
4. and the shocked reaction of the disciples (v. 27).

Still, the chiastic outline of Davies and Allison has merit:

Jesus boards (v. 23a)

The disciples follow (v. 23b)

A storm arises (v. 24a-b)

Jesus is sleeping (v. 24c)

The disciples address Jesus (v. 25)

Jesus addresses the disciples (v. 26a)

Jesus arises and rebukes the storm (v. 26b)

The storm calms (v. 26c)

The disciples are amazed (v. 27)

Jesus disembarks (v. 28)

A. (:23) Setting

“And when He got into the boat, His disciples followed Him.”

B. (:24-25) Crisis

1. (:24a) Agitated State of Nature

“And behold, there arose a great storm in the sea, so that the boat was covered with the waves;”

Warren Wiersbe: The storm came because they obeyed the Lord, and not because (like Jonah) they disobeyed Him.

Michael Wilkins: The lake’s low elevation (at least 636 feet [212 meters] below sea level) provides it with relatively mild year-round temperatures. However, encompassed with mountain ranges to the east and west that rise over 2,650 feet from the level of the lake, especially infamous is an east wind that blows in over the mountains, particularly during the spring and fall (cf. 14:19, 24; John 6:1–4). The lake’s low-lying setting results in sudden violent downdrafts and storms (cf. Mark 4:37; Luke 8:23; John 6:18) that can produce waves seven feet and more, easily able to swamp a boat.

William Barclay: On the west side, there are hills with valleys and gullies; and, when a cold wind comes from the west, these valleys and gullies act like gigantic funnels. The wind, as it were, becomes compressed in them, and rushes down upon the lake with savage violence and with startling suddenness, so that the calm of one moment can become the raging storm of the next. The storms on the Sea of Galilee combine suddenness and violence in a unique way.

John Nolland: Matthew identifies the cause of the problem as a σεισμός. This word means ‘a shaking’, and is normally applied to an earthquake rather than a storm. He has most likely chosen the word because its generality allows readers to think in terms of the many kinds of disturbance that may threaten their own lives. The choice of the word may also make it possible, retrospectively, to see anticipated here the eschatological turmoil of the period through which the disciples will be called upon to live out their discipleship (24:7). It is further possible that the general language allows the evocation of mythical images of the sea as a frightening monster, once roused. The sea is being shaken up, and so there are large waves; but only with the mention in 8:26 of the presence of the wind will it become clear that the likely cause is a storm. The danger is that the boat will be swamped and sunk. . .

There is a curious relationship between the present account and the story of Jonah’s sea voyage. The strongest verbal links are between v. 24 and Jon. 1:4-5. But there are also verbal links between Mt. 8:25 and Jon. 1:6, 14; Mt. 8:27 and Jon. 1:16 (much stronger for the Markan account at this point). Further content parallels can be noted between Mt. 8:23 and Jon. 1:3; Mt. 8:26 and Jon. 1:15. . . In very different ways Jonah and Jesus are both presented as figures through whom God manifests his power over nature.

2. (:24b) Peaceful State of Jesus
“but He Himself was asleep.”

Leon Morris: But has adversative force and introduces what is contrary to what might have been expected. And it is certainly surprising that in a storm of the magnitude of that described by Matthew anyone could stay asleep. But Jesus had had a very heavy day with healing and teaching, and dealing with potential disciples. Wearied as he was with all his labor, he fell asleep and remained asleep despite the magnitude of the storm.

Grant Osborne: In the OT sleep in difficult situations symbolized a deep trust in God (Job 11:18–19; Ps 3:5–6; Prov 3:24–26); that is the likely message here, as the calm of Jesus is in absolute contrast with the deep anxiety of the disciples.

3. (:25) Agitated State of the Disciples
“*And they came to Him, and awoke Him, saying,
‘Save us, Lord; we are perishing!’*”

Daniel Doriani: All-consuming dread is another matter. Irrational fear resists comfort. It forgets the power and goodness of God. It extinguishes faith. Godly fear recognizes the threat at hand, but it is tempered by confidence in God. When dangers loom, we should remember that God masters storms. We should remember the story of Jonah. Although Jonah was in a state of rebellion and the Lord had a different agenda with him, he raised the storm, placed Jonah in it, and delivered Jonah from it, all for his good. He will do the same for us.

C. (:26) Miracle = Calming the Winds and the Sea

1. Rebuke of the Disciples
“And He said to them, ‘Why are you timid, you men of little faith?’”

John Nolland: The situation may be terrible, but the disciples' terror is a mark of little faith. It indicates that they have lost sight of the reality of the power and presence of their Lord. When this happens, appropriate action on the basis of faith becomes impossible. The present episode illustrates, however, the point already made in 6:30, that God does not withhold help even from those whose faith is small.

R. T. France: A significant contrast with Mark's telling of the story is the different order of events: in Mark the appeal is immediately followed by Jesus' remedial action, only after which does he comment on their fear and lack of faith, whereas in Matthew the comments immediately follow the appeal—Jesus deals with the disciples before he deals with the storm. This order is perhaps intended to underline Jesus' control of the situation (there is no need for panic action), but also serves to highlight the significance of the disciples' failure in trust.

Grant Osborne: Jesus, who so trusted God that he slept through the storm, is aghast at the low level of faith on the part of the disciples. Matthew uses "you of so little faith" (ὀλιγόπιστοι) often (6:30; 14:31; 16:8) to describe the inadequate God-centeredness of the disciples. It is always the result of a basic self-interest and an earth-centered perspective, thus producing fear. It must be remembered that they cry out to Jesus for help and so at the deepest level do have a basic trust, but they also feel they are about to perish, and so it is terror rather than faith that drives them.

2. Rebuke of Nature

"Then He arose, and rebuked the winds and the sea; and it became perfectly calm."

Walter Wilson: When Matthew reports how Jesus "rebuked" the winds and the sea in 8:26, he employs a verb (ἐπιτιμάω) found elsewhere in accounts of exorcisms. Within the author's cultural context, such a tactic would have made sense, given the common belief that demonic forces ("the spirit of the wind," "the spirit of the sea," etc.) were responsible for violent weather. In this respect, 8:23–27 anticipates 8:28–34, which is itself an exorcism story. Looking at the stories in terms of genre, it appears that a nature (or sea) miracle with exorcistic features segues into an exorcism story with a feature borrowed from nature (i.e., the sea), the implication being that the same godlike power that informed Jesus's quelling of the demonic sea is now manifested in his subjugation of demonic men. An important item linking the two stories rhetorically, then, is their shared adversarial dynamic. In both narratives, Jesus overcomes active demonic opposition, which (as such) is associated with the power of death, symbolized in the former by an adversary that emerges from the sea and in the latter by adversaries who emerge from tombs, only to be destroyed in the sea.

Leon Morris: Jesus turned to the boisterous winds and the troubled sea and rebuked them (for addressing the waves of the sea cf. Job 38:11). This is a somewhat surprising verb and perhaps indicates that Jesus saw an evil force in the tempest that put him and his disciples in peril. He deals with that force as sovereign over it. The result of the rebuke was a great calm ("it became perfectly calm," NASB). Matthew does not describe a gradual diminution of the force of the winds and the waves, but a sudden cessation of all the storm's activity, so that everything was peaceful. We are not to think that the storm had blown itself out, but that Jesus had power over the elements and replaced tempest with calm.

D. (:27) Response to Manifest Authority of Jesus over Nature

“And the men marveled, saying,

‘What kind of a man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey Him?’”

Craig Blomberg: There are implications for discipleship here, to be sure; we must turn to Jesus as the one to trust in all circumstances of life. But the focus of this passage remains squarely Christological—on who Christ is, not on what he will do for us. One who has this kind of power can be no less than God himself, worthy of worship, irrespective of when and how he chooses to use that power in our lives. Sometimes he leaves storms unstilled for good and godly ends (cf. 2 Cor 12:7-8).

II. (8:28-34) AUTHORITY OVER DEMONIC SPIRITS -- EXORCISM OF TWO DEMON-POSSESSED MEN

A. (:28a) Setting

“And when He had come to the other side into the country of the Gadarenes,”

Michael Wilkins: The “other side” is often a reference to the movement from a Jewish to a Gentile region. “Gadarenes” refers to both the village of Gadara, located about five miles southeast of the Sea of Galilee, and to the surrounding region, which probably included a little village that lay on the eastern shore of the Sea of Galilee called Gerasa (modern Khersa or Kursi), the traditional site of the exorcism.

Warren Wiersbe: This dramatic incident is most revealing.

- It shows what Satan does for a man: robs him of sanity and self-control; fills him with fears; robs him of the joys of home and friends; and (if possible) condemns him to an eternity of judgment.
- It also reveals what society does for a man in need: restrains him, isolates him, threatens him, but society is unable to change him.
- See, then, what Jesus Christ can do for a man whose whole life—within and without—is bondage and battle. What Jesus did for these two demoniacs, He will do for anyone else who needs Him.

B. (:28b-29) Crisis

1. (:28b) Agitated State of Demon-Possessed Men

“two men who were demon-possessed met Him as they were coming out of the tombs; they were so exceedingly violent that no one could pass by that road.”

John Nolland: Coming out from the tombs probably represents a connection with the aberrantly supernatural, but it may also suggest a hiding place from which to emerge and attack travellers.

Walter Wilson: Matthew is alone in stating that the demoniacs “were so fierce that no one could pass that way [ὀδός]” (8:28; cf. Mark 5:2). According to b. Pesah. 109b–112a, in a passage that explains how pairs of different kinds can be associated with demonic activity, the need for wariness in dealing with such phenomena is said to arise “especially when one is setting out on the road” (110a). This concern, in turn, reflects the notion, common in Jewish folklore, that demons can often be found lying in wait to ambush travelers, a belief that may be applicable to the scenario depicted in our text, where Jesus encounters a pair of demoniacs while abroad in a strange land.

William Barclay: The ancient world believed unquestioningly and intensely in evil spirits. The air was so full of these spirits that it was not even possible to insert into it the point of a needle without coming against one. Some said that there were 7,500,000 of them; there were 10,000 of them on a person's right hand and 10,000 on the left; and all were waiting to do harm. They lived in unclean places such as tombs, and places where no cleansing water was to be found. They lived in the deserts where their howling could be heard. (We still speak of a howling desert.) They were specially dangerous to the lonely traveller, to the woman in childbirth, to the newly married bride and bridegroom, to children who were out after dark, and to travellers by night. They were specially dangerous in the midday heat, and between sunset and sunrise. The male demons were called shedim, and the female lilin after Lilith. The female demons had long hair, and were specially dangerous to children; that was why children had their guardian angels (cf. Matthew 18:10). . .

We must try to visualize what happened. The men were shouting and shrieking (Mark 5:7; Luke 8:28). We must remember that they were completely convinced that they were occupied by demons. Now it was normal and orthodox belief, shared by everyone, that when the Messiah and the time of judgment came, the demons would be destroyed. That is what the men meant when they asked Jesus why he had come to torture them before the proper time. They were so convinced that they were possessed by demons that nothing could have rid them of that conviction other than visible demonstration that the demons had gone out of them.

Grant Osborne: There are two important aspects of the message: demons always torture the people they possess, and they are entirely under Jesus' control. There is a spiritual battle here, but it is one-sided. . .

When the demons add the title "Son of God" (Mark/Luke—"Son of the Most High God"), they are not acting as Jesus' PR team, telling everyone who he is. In the ancient world it was believed that everyone had a hidden name that expressed their true essence. To discover that name was to gain a certain power over a person. Twelfree notes that "the demons attempted to disarm Jesus by exposing his allegiance and special relationship with God (Ps 106:16; Sir 45:6; b. Pesah. 112b)." At the same time, they knew his absolute lordship as God's Son and had to acknowledge his superiority. Throughout the gospels the highest Christology occurs in the mouth of demons; they know who Jesus is! Realizing the absolute authority of Jesus as Son of God, the demons realize they have already lost.

2. (:29) Agitated State of the Demons

*"And behold, they cried out, saying,
'What do we have to do with You, Son of God?
Have You come here to torment us before the time?'"*

John Nolland: The demons know themselves to be doomed, but the time has not yet arrived. However, since with the coming of Jesus the forces of the kingdom of God are freshly stirring, we might expect action that is anticipatory of the final judgment of the demons. The demons ask not to be tormented, but they will be. βασανίσαι ('torment') has a literal sense of 'torture in judicial examination (to establish the truth)'. That is not quite what we have here, but the discomfiting of the demons in being sent into the pigs (though there is also an element of concession in this) will reveal their utter destructiveness. Jesus has come to 'torment them before the time', but not with the full intensity of what will come afterwards.

Craig Blomberg: To the demons his arrival seems premature; Judgment Day has not come. They overlook the “already” of the “already-not yet” equation. The end times were breaking into human history with Jesus' exorcisms, demonstrating the inauguration of God's kingdom (cf. 12:28), even if he still granted the demons limited freedom for a time.

C. (:30-32) Miracle = Casting Out the Demons into the Swine

1. (:30-31) Entreaty of the Demons

“Now there was at a distance from them a herd of many swine feeding. And the demons began to entreat Him, saying, ‘If You are going to cast us out, send us into the herd of swine.’”

John Nolland: What are we to make of the affinity between demons and pigs? We could think in terms of the role of pigs as sacrificial animals in the wider world beyond Judaism and make a link here with the Jewish conviction reflected in 1 Cor. 10:20 that worship of pagan gods is worship of demons. We could content ourselves with a link between the Jewish ritual uncleanness of pigs (Lv. 11:7; Dt. 14:8) and the uncleanness of demons (reflected in the designation ‘unclean spirit’).

Grant Osborne: Mark 5:9, 13 tells us that their name was “Legion” (many spirits—a Roman legion contained six thousand soldiers) and that the herd numbered two thousand, probably the combined herds of an entire village.

2. (:32) Exorcism Performed by Jesus

“And He said to them, ‘Begone!’ And they came out, and went into the swine, and behold, the whole herd rushed down the steep bank into the sea and perished in the waters.”

Grant Osborne: Jesus speaks for the first and only time in this story. It was normal for exorcists to prattle on and on, finding out the name of the demon and its territory of operation, and using various incantations to try to get it to leave. Jesus’ great authority is forcefully presented, for he needs only one word, “Go” or “Be gone” (BAGD), and the demons must instantly obey.

Craig Blomberg: Readers concerned about the destruction of animal life and the loss of the farmers' livelihood exhibit a contemporary sentimentality not shared by a Jewish audience who knew these pig farmers should not have been raising animals whose meat was forbidden to eat. Human sanity and salvation, moreover, must always take priority over financial prosperity.

Daniel Doriani: The story of the demoniac teaches that even if a life is far out of control, Jesus can bring restoration. This episode is a miracle, a direct, immediately effective act of God. Our restoration usually is not so rapid. But Jesus is the same and his power is the same. He has power over demons because he has power over all the forces of evil, over Satan, and over our sins.

E. Michael Green: The destruction of the herd of pigs served as a graphic assurance to the men in question that they really were free at last and that the evil spirits would never return. Jesus is Lord over all the forces of Satan.

D. (:33-34) Response to Manifest Authority of Jesus over the Spirit Realm

1. (:33) Shock and Fear

“And the herdsmen ran away, and went to the city, and reported everything, including the incident of the demoniacs.”

2. (:34) Separation and Opposition

“And behold, the whole city came out to meet Jesus; and when they saw Him, they entreated Him to depart from their region.”

Leon Morris: For the third time in this story and the fifth time in this chapter Matthew has his vivid And look. It is a good story, and he does not let his readers miss its dramatic force.

William Barclay: Here is human selfishness at its worst. It did not matter to these people that two men had been given back their reason; all that mattered to them was that their pigs had perished. It is so often the case that people in effect say: ‘I don’t care what happens to anyone else, if my profits and my comfort and my case are preserved.’ We may be amazed at the callousness of these people of Gadara, but we must take care that we too do not resent any helping of others which reduces our own privileges.

R. T. France: Whereas Mark gives a touching account of the rehabilitation of the former demoniac, of his wish to join Jesus’ party and of his commission instead to tell his own people about Jesus, Matthew is concerned rather with the impression left on the local population by Jesus’ awesome authority. This is not a story about mission but about power. But whereas among the Jews his miracle-working power has attracted people to follow Jesus, here in the Decapolis they want to get rid of him. For them he is not a messianic figure, but a wandering Jewish “holy man” whose activities have already caused a great deal of damage; he will be safer back among his own people. It is a strangely unflattering ending to the story, but it has reinforced Matthew’s message that Jesus is not like other people. Before long we shall hear of similarly unflattering reactions to Jesus’ exorcistic activities even among his own people: his power is not doubted, but its source is called into question (9:34; 12:24).

D. A. Carson: This ending of the pericope bears significantly on its total meaning. If the story shows once more that Jesus’ ministry was not restricted to the Jews but foreshadowed the mission to the Gentiles, it likewise shows that opposition to Jesus is not exclusively Jewish. To this extent it confirms earlier exegesis that showed that opponents in Matthew are not selected on the basis of race but according to their response to Jesus.

III. (9:1-8) AUTHORITY TO FORGIVE SINS -- HEALING OF THE PARALYTIC

Richard Gardner: To appreciate the story, one must keep in mind two tenets of Jewish faith that govern the discussion.

- One is the belief that sin and sickness are connected in some way (cf. John 9:2; 5:14).
- The other is the belief that only God can forgive sin (cf. Mark 2:7).

Grant Osborne: All the action revolves around the central aspect, the forgiveness of sins, showing that spiritual healing has precedence over physical healing and that the two are indissoluble. Behind it all, of course, is the authority of Jesus to provide both spiritual and physical healing. The conflict is part of the rejection of God’s new work by the leaders.

A. (:1) Setting

“And getting into a boat, He crossed over, and came to His own city.”

Walter Wilson: The introductory verse (9:1) links the pericope to the preceding narrative by explaining how Jesus returned from his journey to the Decapolis, thus completing the sequence that had begun in 8:18. As for the healing story itself (9:2–8), Matthew follows a familiar pattern, both abbreviating the Markan account and doing so in a way that makes the element of dialogue more pronounced.

Michael Wilkins: Jesus “crosses over,” which marks the transition from the Gentile to the Jewish regions surrounding the Sea of Galilee. He comes back to the town explicitly named Capernaum in Mark’s narrative (cf. Mark 2:1; 5:18), which is now “his own town,” the home base of Jesus’ ministry in the Galilee region (cf. 4:17; 8:5; 11:23).

Charles Swindoll: As we work through this next section, we witness a strange phenomenon, already foreshadowed back on the other side of the lake in the response of the Gadarene pig herders. Some people’s reaction to Jesus’ miraculous power was negative: They didn’t want Jesus around, disrupting their everyday “normal,” as mundane as it was. They preferred the status quo to bowing to the intrusive power of the Lord God.

When we travel with Jesus back to the other side of the lake, we see the same kind of simmering resentment by the “powers that be.” As Jesus continues to perform miraculous healings, bring spiritual restoration, and provide deliverance from unrighteous living, some rejoice in the Savior, but others harbor feelings of jealousy and lash out in criticism. As those who presumed to have a monopoly on righteousness and a cornered market on spirituality, the scribes and Pharisees slowly begin turning against Jesus, seeing Him as a threat to their illegitimate claim on the hearts and minds of the people.

B. (:2a) Crisis

“And behold, they were bringing to Him a paralytic, lying on a bed;”

Grant Osborne: Matthew moves straight to the main event, skipping Mark’s details (Mark 2:4) about lowering the man through the flatbed roof, with “look” (ἰδοὺ) pointing to a dramatic turn in the action. Jesus has already healed paralyzed people (4:24), so a group of men feel he can do the same for their friend. The man cannot move, so they have to bring him on a mat or stretcher, probably something like a modern bedroll.

C. (:2b-7) Miracle = Healing of Paralytic

1. (:2b) Greater Miracle = Spiritual Healing of Paralytic / Forgiveness of Sins

“and Jesus seeing their faith said to the paralytic, ‘Take courage, My son, your sins are forgiven.’”

Leon Morris: Then Jesus said, “your sins are forgiven,” words that must have astounded everybody. It is interesting that Jesus begins by ignoring the man’s physical need and grants him forgiveness. The tense points to a gift now: Jesus is not pointing to a future time when the forgiveness would take place. Sins is a comprehensive term, including all the man’s departures from the way of righteousness. Now the man has nothing to fear — all his sins are gone. In the early part of this Gospel we were told that Jesus would save his people from their sins (1:21), but this is the first occasion when we read of his giving anyone forgiveness. Indeed, it is the only occasion in this Gospel when Jesus forgives a specific individual.

2. (:3-7) Lesser Miracle = Physical Healing of Paralytic

a. (:3) Charge of Blasphemy

*“And behold, some of the scribes said to themselves,
‘This fellow blasphemes.’”*

John Nolland: The NT uses ‘blasphemy’ much more loosely than does later Jewish discussion. Here the objection is to Jesus’ declaration of forgiveness of sin. While Judaism had clear provision for forgiveness with temple sacrifice and more broadly, in an ultimate sense God was thought to have reserved to himself the declaration of forgiveness on the day of judgment. The expectation of eschatological forgiveness was built up on the OT promises of forgiveness linked to the assurance of restoration beyond the period of the Exile. Forgiveness at the human level was always possible, but only God could have the last word on the matter. Here the scribes see Jesus as claiming to speak from God in this ultimate manner.

b. (:4-5) Challenge of Jesus

1) (:4) Exposing Their Evil Thoughts

*“And Jesus knowing their thoughts said,
‘Why are you thinking evil in your hearts?’”*

Craig Blomberg: Jesus simply stresses that their objections issued from evil hearts (cf. 7:15-20). Their internal disposition is rebelling against God’s will.

Grant Osborne: Their hearts are guilty of “evil thoughts” (πονηρά), which connotes an attitude of malice toward Jesus. It was important to test teachers/leaders to see if they were truly from God (1 Thess 5:21; 1 Cor 14:29; 1 John 4:1), but the scribes were not concerned to find out the truth. They had already rejected Jesus and so wanted only to condemn him; that is where the malicious “evil” lay. In turning against Jesus, they were turning against God.

2) (:5) Exposing Their Malicious Condemnation

“For which is easier, to say, ‘Your sins are forgiven,’ or to say, ‘Rise, and walk?’”

Grant Osborne: In reality, of course, forgiving sins is much more difficult than healing the sick, for only God can do it. But from an earthly perspective, it is easier to pronounce forgiveness, the effects of which can neither be seen nor authenticated. So Jesus is speaking from the human perspective of the scribes. So Jesus offers apologetic proof of his power and authority, something that can be empirically confirmed, something they can “know” has happened.

Walter Wilson: We encounter yet another interpretive puzzle. This is because the appropriate answer to the question varies depending on one’s point of view. From the perspective of external proof, it is easier to declare that a person’s sins have been forgiven than to declare that a person’s illness has been cured, because the latter is subject to observable verification in a way the former is not. In this case, Jesus is making an argument from the greater to the lesser: if he can accomplish something that is demonstrably more difficult (healing the paralytic), then logically he can accomplish the easier task as well (forgiving his sins). The ensuing healing, then, serves as visible proof and public validation of the claim that Jesus makes in 9:2.

From the perspective of internal actuality, it is easier to cure someone's illness than to forgive someone's sins, since the former conceivably falls within the scope of human ability (Jesus, after all, was not the only charismatic healer), while the authority to absolve individuals of their guilt belongs to God alone. Thus the act of forgiving the paralytic represents the more difficult and momentous accomplishment, since it is something that could be accomplished only if Jesus were acting on God's behalf.

c. (:6) Crux of the Controversy

"But in order that you may know that the Son of Man has authority on earth to forgive sins" -- then He said to the paralytic—"Rise, take up your bed, and go home."

John Nolland: Though Jesus' authority has been central to the three linked miracle accounts, the word 'authority' now occurs for the first time since 7:29; 8:9. 'The Son of Man' picks up language from 8:20 (see there). Where the emphasis there was on the human marginalisation of this figure of dignity and authority, here his authority as such is in focus. The Son of Man in Dn. 7:13-14 is given authority (ἐξουσία in the Greek texts as in Matthew); the Daniel links for Matthew's use of Son of Man will become clear as the story progresses.

R. T. France: Jesus is not arguing that it is not God's prerogative to forgive sins, but rather than he himself, uniquely, shares it. The Son of Man, who according to Dan 7:13-14 will be enthroned in heaven to share God's sovereignty over all peoples, is already during his earthly ministry (hence the addition of "on earth," in distinction from his future heavenly sovereignty) authorized to dispense God's forgiveness. The forgiveness of sins as such was not, of course, a part of Daniel's vision of the authority of the Son of Man. Jesus is not expounding Daniel 7, but boldly extrapolating from that vision to make a claim for his present status, as he will do again in 12:8.

d. (:7) Conclusion of the Interaction

"And he rose, and went home."

D. (:8) Response to Manifest Authority of Jesus over Forgiveness of Sins and Disease

"But when the multitudes saw this, they were filled with awe, and glorified God, who had given such authority to men."

John Nolland: As with the two preceding miracle accounts, the unit ends with a collective response to what has happened. The interest is sharply focussed on Jesus' authority to forgive, not on the physical restoration.

Leon Morris: The effect of the miracle on them was that they were awe-struck. They reacted as in the presence of God. The healing of a man who had to be carried by four others was not to be taken as commonplace, and the crowds recognized this. They recognized the hand of God in it all, and they glorified him. They saw that the power that had raised the man from his bed was divine, not human. But they also recognized that God had given this authority to men.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) When do we allow our fears and panic to interfere with our faith in the Lord? How severe must this storm have been to terrify even seasoned fishermen and experienced boaters?
- 2) Why did Jesus risk the ire of this Gentile region by allowing this large herd of pigs to stampede over the cliff?
- 3) Do we place more importance on physical healing or spiritual healing?
- 4) How are we responding to the authority of Jesus Christ?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Charles Swindoll: Excursus: Demonology 101

Popular portrayals of Satan and demons range from the cute and comical to the ghastly and horrifying. You can buy little red demons as stuffed plush toys or pay homage to them in heathen religions. You can reject their existence or run in fear of their influence. But mark my words: Demons are neither funny nor phony. They are real, and understanding just what they are and what they aren't—and what they can and can't do—is important for dealing with demons in a way that is biblical.

When it comes to demons, people often go to extremes. Some totally deny their existence. Even those who believe in a personal God and angelic beings will often reject other dimensions of the supernatural world—especially Satan and demons. Others treat the demonic in a lighthearted way, making jokes about spirits of wickedness or playing games with the occult, magic, or sorcery as if they were harmless hobbies. Still others nurture an inordinate preoccupation with the subject of demons, seeing Satan and his minions behind every mishap, every temptation, and every sin or sickness. Each of these distorted perspectives can be damaging to Christian living.

- Denial leads to lack of preparation for demonic attacks.
- Lack of seriousness leads to careless flirtation with things of spiritual wickedness.
- And obsession leads to blaming demons even for our own weaknesses and sins.

The Bible presents a clear picture of demons and what they can and can't do. Demons are invisible, angelic beings in the service of Satan (Matt. 25:41; Rev. 12:9), and they are actively engaged in evil objectives through relentless deception (Matt. 4:1-11; 1 Cor. 10:20; 2 Cor. 11:13-15; 2 Thes. 2:8-10; Rev. 16:13-14). Demons clearly have supernatural powers, but as finite, created beings, they are not all-powerful, all-knowing, or omnipresent. They are limited by the sovereign power of God and are subject to His plan and purpose (Job 1:12; Dan. 10:12-13; Rev. 12:7-9). Because they crave worship and adoration, they inhabit temples and associate with idols; involvement with such pagan worship can result in communion with demonic forces (1 Cor. 10:14, 19-21). We also know that demons can sometimes inhabit living beings, both animals and humans, taking control of their victims' bodies and wreaking great havoc on their physical, mental, emotional, and especially spiritual well-being (Gen. 3:1; Matt. 8:16, 28).

A short summary of Demonology 101 will help put things in perspective: “While God’s good angelic beings are spirits ministering on behalf of His people (Heb. 1:14), the wicked spirits attempt to undermine God’s kingdom and the salvation of His people. And although, for His own purposes and according to His own plan, God allows evil spirits to continue to operate in this world, one day He will vanquish them forever, and never again will they inflict evil on His creation (Rev. 20:10).”

E. Michael Green: In these three stories, then, Jesus is laying claim to divine authority. The claim is explicit. It is superbly documented. It challenges the hearers to the roots of their being.

- Some, like the disciples, are awed (8:27).
- Some, like the people of Gadara, do not want anything to do with him (8:34).
- Some, like the scribes, are scandalized (9:3)—the first indication of the Jewish opposition that will eventually send him to his death.
- Some, like the crowd who had witnessed the healing of the paralytic, praise God (9:8).

But none of these is an adequate response. Nothing less than complete and immediate obedience to such a call and allegiance to such a person will suffice. And this, therefore, is the precise moment for the call and response of Matthew to be recorded. There is a deep inner logic in it. ‘If Jesus Christ be God and died for me, no sacrifice can be too great for me to make for him,’ said England cricketer and missionary pioneer C. T. Studd many centuries later. Matthew had no such clear light as Studd, but the three preceding stories demonstrate that Jesus was no mere human. He was bringing in God’s kingdom. Matthew was challenged to respond.

Grant Osborne: The Primary Human Dilemma: Not Sickness but Sin

Sin is the origin of all sickness and suffering. Here we are at the heart of the human equation and the basic question in all God-talk: How can a loving, all-powerful God allow the innocent to suffer? In an ultimate sense, there are no innocents. It is clear in Scripture that we are all conceived and born in sin (Ps 51:5). We have inherited our sin condition from Adam (Rom 5:12–21), and we therefore live in a sin-sick world. In fact, all creation “groans” with us, longing to be released from what we have brought upon God’s creation (Rom 8:19–22). Thus, when tsunamis, mudslides, avalanches, plane crashes, and the like happen, we cannot help but ask, “Where is God?”

Yet we must also realize that we have brought such things on ourselves. Through our trespass sickness and death have entered this world, and we must live with the consequences. It is not God; we have brought it on ourselves! Yet at the same time, the kingdom of God has entered this world through Christ, and the solution is in process of being realized. God is sovereign over these tragedies, and through the Spirit’s intercession “in all things God works for the good” of God’s people, even in tragedies (Rom 8:26–28).

TEXT: Matthew 9:9-13

TITLE: CALLING ALL SINNERS

BIG IDEA:

THE MISSION OF MAKING DISCIPLES REQUIRES CONSORTING WITH SINNERS WITH HEART OF COMPASSION

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: The first discipleship segment centered on the radical demands of Jesus (8:18–22). This one centers on the reality and meaning of that new kingdom presence. It means a new social paradigm, as Jesus has come not for the elite or the superficially pious but for the true sinners, the downtrodden, and the despised (9:9–13). The forgiveness of sins in the previous pericope (9:1–8) now leads to Jesus’ ministry to sinners. Here Jesus goes beyond just reaching out to these despised people. He invites one of them to join his apostolic band!

One of the major themes of Jesus’ ministry is here introduced—his scandalous (to the leaders) preoccupation with reaching out to sinners. This leads to a major confrontation with the leaders, leading to the key pronouncement of Jesus regarding a major mission principle—namely, that the ministry of the church is not so much to those who believe they are right with God but to those who know they are sinners.

R. T. France: Matthew the tax-collector represents a wider group of “undesirables” who are also interested in Jesus and his message and who join him and his disciples at a meal in Matthew’s house. Their interest, and Jesus’ acceptance of them, even to the extent of sharing table-fellowship, give rise to some pungent comments of Jesus in response to Pharisaic criticism (vv. 11–13), which sharply characterize the sort of people Jesus is looking for as his followers. Discipleship is not for the comfortable and respectable, but for those whom conventional society would rather keep at arm’s length. The Pharisees can see only their failures, but Jesus sees their need, and the fact that they acknowledge it themselves gives him the opportunity to fulfill his calling to “save his people from their sins.” (1:21)

Leon Morris: Matthew inserts a little section on discipleship, starting with his own call to be a disciple of Jesus. That leads to a meal that he apparently gave for Jesus and his disciples at which a question of the Pharisees leads to an important saying about Jesus’ calling of the disreputable. Discipleship means something very different from anything the Pharisees had imagined.

John MacArthur: The kingdom of God is for

- the spiritually sick who want to be healed,
- the spiritually corrupt who want to be cleansed,
- the spiritually poor who want to be rich,
- the spiritually hungry who want to be fed,
- the spiritually dead who want to be made alive.

It is for ungodly outcasts who long to become God’s own beloved children.

I. (:9) CALL OF MATTHEW – A SINNER PAR EXCELLENCE

A. Authoritative Command to Follow Jesus

“And as Jesus passed on from there, He saw a man, called Matthew, sitting in the tax office; and He said to him, ‘Follow Me!’”

D. A. Carson: The locale is probably the outskirts of Capernaum. Matthew was sitting “at the tax collector’s booth,” a customs and excise booth at the border between the territories of Philip and Herod Antipas. . . Having demonstrated his authority to forgive sins (vv.1–8), Jesus now called to himself a man whose occupation made him a pariah—a sinner and an associate of sinners (cf. 1Ti 1:15).

S. Lewis Johnson: When we look at men, we look at their position. We see their position, their influence, their personality. We see the way they look. We notice their age, we notice their sex, we notice various other things about people which are, generally speaking, outward things. When the Lord Jesus looks upon a person, he has faculties and capacities that you and I do not have, and he sees beneath the outward to the man. He saw a man named Matthew. He sees the real being within. Something we cannot see. And evidently, by the Holy Spirit’s direction, for he ministered in the power of the Holy Spirit, he sensed that this man was a man in whom God had been working, and his heart was ready for a call from him. So he understands it. He sees what is transpiring. He recognizes that the field is white to harvest before he gives his command.

Grant Osborne: In Mark 2:14 he is named “Levi son of Alphaeus,” and it is debated why he is named “Matthew” here, a name that in Hebrew means either “gift of Yahweh” (Mattatyâ) or “faithful” (if from ‘emet). It was common for people to have two or even three names (a Hebrew, Greek, or Latin name or even two Hebrew names, as here) as with Saul/Paul or Simon/Peter. That is undoubtedly the case with Levi/Matthew. Why Matthew uses this name is unknown; perhaps like Peter he later became known more by this name. . .

The Jewish people had an especially onerous situation because they had to pay in effect three taxes:

- Jewish males over the age of twenty had to pay the annual half-shekel (one day’s wage) temple tax;
- non-Roman citizens had to pay the tribute or “direct tax,” including the land tax (for those who owned property) and head tax (one denarius or day’s wage per year);
- and everyone had to pay “indirect taxes,” such as sales tax, customs duty, tolls, etc.

Tax collectors like Matthew sat in booths at the gates of the city to collect tolls and customs duties on goods coming from Herod Philip’s territory into that of Herod Antipas. They were part of organizations to which Rome farmed out (to the highest bidder) the responsibility. For customs duties they did not pay Rome but the municipal government, yet still they could charge extra for “commissions” on the taxes, which became their pay.

Needless to say, dishonesty was rampant, and they were among the most despised workers in the ancient world. Matthew would have collected taxes under Herod Antipas either at the lake where ships brought trade goods (if they were collecting taxes from fishermen) or more likely along the Via Maris, the major trade route from the north that passed by Capernaum. The taxes would have been paid on trade goods as well as on fish caught by the commercial fishermen in the lake (two different groups of tax collectors).

Donald Hagner: Since Jesus' mission is predicated upon mercy and not merit, no one is despicable enough by the standards of society to be outside his concern and invitation. . .

Everyone whom Jesus called to follow Him for discipleship in the Gospels responded positively to that call (including Judas Iscariot). This is an indication of irresistible grace. Jesus' calling was efficacious: it was successful in obtaining the desired and intended result—effective. Likewise, all whom He calls to Himself for salvation will be saved (cf. John 15:16; Rom. 8:30; Eph. 1:4-5).

William Barclay: The problem for the Roman government was how to devise a system whereby the taxes could be collected as efficiently and as cheaply as possible. They did so by auctioning the right to collect taxes in a certain area. The man who bought that right was responsible to the Roman government for an agreed sum; anything he could raise over and above that, he was allowed to keep as commission.

Bruce Hurt: Follow Me is not a suggestion and not even an "invitation" per se (invitations usually don't come as commands!), but is actually a command in the present imperative. Follow Me and keep on following Me as a way of life, with the implication of doing so for the rest of your life. Given that our fallen human flesh does not seek after God, one has to propose that in some way the Holy Spirit was actively working in Matthew's heart to give him both the desire and the power to leave everything and follow Jesus.

B. All-In Commitment to Follow Jesus

“And he rose, and followed Him.”

R. T. France: By working for an unpopular government sanctioned by Rome a telōnēs incurred the hatred and disdain of Jewish patriots, quite apart from any economic grievances resulting from their reputation for exacting more than was officially necessary. The conventional pairing “tax-collectors and sinners” (v. 10; cf. 11:19; Luke 15:1; 18:9–14) shows how society regarded them; cf. also 5:46; 18:17; 21:31 – 32.12 For Jesus to call such a man to follow him was a daring breach of etiquette, a calculated snub to conventional ideas of respectability, which ordinary people no less than Pharisees might be expected to balk at. Fishermen may not have been high in the social scale, but at least they were not automatically morally and religiously suspect; Matthew was. Almost as remarkable as Jesus' decision to call him is Matthew's confident response; he does not seem to have felt uncomfortable at being included in a preacher's entourage, though we are not told what the other disciples thought.

Leon Morris: He concentrates on the one central thing: Jesus called him with the words “Follow me”; the present imperative seems to indicate a continuing following, and there is no doubt that Matthew is describing a call to discipleship with all that that means. And Matthew obeyed: he got up and followed him. He says no more, but concentrates on that one decisive action. Luke brings out a little of its meaning by telling us that he left everything (Luke 5:28), and this is implied here. Matthew left a whole way of life to follow Jesus. Tax collectors were usually wealthy men, for there was ample scope for profit in their business, so Matthew was probably making a great material sacrifice when he walked out of that office. And the action was final. They would surely never take him back again if he later decided he wanted to return. The fishermen might go back to their fishing, but the tax collector would not be able to return to the levying of customs duties. Anyway, his lucrative post would soon be filled. And if he tried to get another job, who would want to employ a former tax collector? Matthew's response indicated a thoroughgoing trust in Jesus.

II. (:10-13) CONFRONTATION WITH THE PHARISEES OVER CONSORTING WITH SINNERS

A. (:10-11) Helping Sinners Requires Spending Time with Them

1. (:10) Farewell Dinner Hosted by Matthew brought Jesus into Contact with Sinners

“And it happened that as He was reclining at the table in the house, behold many tax-gatherers and sinners came and were dining with Jesus and His disciples.”

William Hendriksen: This may be considered a kind of farewell banquet, arranged by Matthew and at his house, in honor of Jesus, bidding farewell to the old life, ringing in the new, and beckoning all to become spiritual followers of the Lord.

R. T. France: In the ancient world generally a shared meal was a clear sign of identification, and for a Jewish religious teacher to share a meal with such people was scandalous, let alone to do so in the “unclean” house of a tax-collector.

John Nolland: “Sinners” here should be understood primarily “sociologically as identifying those publicly known to be unsavoury types who lived beyond the edge of respectable society”. But the presence of the term creates a link back to 9:2, 5, 6.

Daniel Doriani: Matthew brought his friends to Jesus. Everyone who knows and loves Jesus wants to bring their friends to him. No one can make any other person a Christian, but we can bring our friends to the Lord. Some people have the gift of evangelism. I once stood in a line with a friend in an empty business establishment. While we finished our simple transaction, this friend struck up a conversation with our clerk. Within five minutes, he had learned the essentials of her beliefs and her spiritual journey and had warmly invited her to our church. Few people have the tender boldness to do such things. But disciples find ways to bring their friends to Christ, his church, and his people.

2. (:11) Phony Pharisees Separated from Sinners by Hiding behind their Self-Righteousness

“And when the Pharisees saw this, they said to His disciples, ‘Why is your Teacher eating with the tax-gatherers and sinners?’”

Bob Deffinbaugh: God delights in those who seek relationship with Him, not in those who keep their distance and trust in their ritualistic law-keeping. Jesus delights in the presence of these sinners, whose joy is to be in His presence. He does not delight in those who choose to keep their distance, from sinners and the Savior. If these Pharisees would enjoy salvation, they must desire fellowship with the Savior, along with sinners, like themselves.

J. Ligon Duncan: Now the Pharisees are scandalized by the fact that the Lord Jesus is spending time with these tax collectors in the house of Matthew. And they bring a charge against Jesus' disciples. They don't go to Jesus, by the way, they go to the disciples. Their aim is to cause the disciples to question Jesus' judgment, and their logic would go something like this: “Well, you disciples who esteem this man so highly. You follow Him as your master, as your rabbi. Why would He be violating the teaching of the first Psalm which says that the man is blessed who does not sit and stand with sinners? Why, this man is not only standing with sinners, He's reclining with sinners at the dinner table. What kind of man is this man that you're following? Why would you want to follow Him?" Notice that these Pharisees don't go to Christ to rebuke Him, they go to His more immature disciples hoping to cause those disciples to question Jesus' character, to question His judgment, to question the rightness of His actions. They hope to cause His disciples to doubt Him. Perhaps they even hope that His disciples will fall away from Him and return to following in their teaching.

B. (:12-13) Helping Sinners Must be the Goal of Gospel Evangelism

1. (:12) Our Mission Must be Focused on Those Who Admit their Need

"But when He heard this, He said, 'It is not those who are healthy who need a physician, but those who are sick.'"

R. T. France: Jesus' first response is in the form of a proverb which uses physical illness as a metaphor for spiritual need. Plutarch quotes a similar saying of the Spartan king Pausanias when he was criticized for neglecting his own people: "It is not the custom of doctors to spend time among people who are healthy, but where people are ill." The philosopher Diogenes is quoted as saying that as a doctor must go among the sick so a wise man must mix with fools. The point is obvious: any effective "healer" must expect to get his hands dirty.

William Barclay: Jesus' defence was perfectly simple; he merely said that he went where the need was greatest. It would be a poor doctor who visited only houses where people enjoyed good health. The doctor's place is where people are ill; it is a doctor's glory and task to go to those who need healing. . .

This is a highly compressed saying. Jesus was saying: "I did not come to invite people who are so self-satisfied that they are convinced they do not need anyone's help; I came to invite people who are very conscious of their sin and desperately aware of their need for a saviour." He was saying: "It is only those who know how much they need me who can accept my invitation."

2. (:13) Our Motivation Must be to Show Compassion to Sinners

"But go and learn what this means, 'I desire compassion, and not sacrifice,' for I did not come to call the righteous, but sinners.'"

Van Parunak: Like the other seventh century prophets (Isaiah, Micah, Amos), Hosea records the Lord's displeasure with superficial ritual from insincere worshipers. The scribes were more concerned with ceremonial purity and avoiding defilement from an unclean person than they were with the covenant responsibilities of Jews to care for one another.

Grant Osborne: "Go [for this circumstantial participle, see on v. 9] and learn" was a rabbinic expression for Torah study, and in the context of the Pharisees who prided themselves on their knowledge of Scripture, it is a particularly powerful comeback. Since they call Jesus "teacher" (9:11), he will give them a "learning" assignment! Jesus takes his text from Hos 6:6 (quoted again in 12:7). In Hosea the apostate nation still followed the letter of the law (sacrifice) but had forgotten the heart of the law (mercy and love). Jesus is saying the Pharisees are recapitulating the same terrible error.

Thomas Constable: The last part of verse 13 defines Jesus' ministry of preparing people for the messianic kingdom. Compassion, or mercy (NIV, Heb. hesed), was what characterized His mission. He came to call (Gr. kalesai) or invite people to repentance and salvation. Paul used this Greek word in the sense of efficacious calling, but that is not how Jesus used it. If someone does not see himself or herself as a sinner, that person will have no part in the messianic kingdom, because he or she will not respond to God's call.

Craig Blomberg: Jesus is dealing the Pharisees a double rebuke by treating them first as learners rather than teachers and second as beginners who have yet to learn Scripture correctly. His logic is impeccable; the Pharisees have no reply. “I have come” hints at his prior existence in heaven, from which he was sent.

Leon Morris: The attitude of the Pharisees was such that these people were left far from God; they made no attempt to bring them near. Since they were ready to let these people die in their sins, their attitude lacked compassion and thus failed to comply with the standards taught by the prophet they professed to honor so highly. This failure meant that in fact the Pharisees belonged among the people Hosea condemned — a startling accusation for these so outwardly religious people! Luke tells us that Jesus came to call the sinful people “to repentance” (Luke 5:32), but Matthew lets this be understood. He leaves his emphasis on the fact that the people Jesus came to call were sinners. Later we find that he came to die for them (20:28). Jesus never said that the people in question were anything other than sinful. But that was not the point. The point was that he came to save sinners.

E. Michael Green: He charged the Pharisees with being immaculate in their pattern of sacrifices, but devoid of mercy. They despised people like Matthew, and God will not tolerate it. The divine mercy welcomes sinners like Matthew when they repent and follow Jesus. But the Pharisees choose to exclude themselves from the party. Here we see among the Pharisees a tendency, which will reappear more strongly as the story unfolds, to judge Jesus rather than revel in the mercy he offers, and to pride themselves on their own fancied goodness instead of recognizing his. The Pharisees could not tolerate the generosity of God to the paralysed man, to Matthew or to his crooked friends. Those who think they are healthy do not need a doctor: ironic words. There are, of course, no ‘healthy’ under God’s expert examination, but there are lots of people who think they are. Such people do not see their need of a doctor, although they harbour germs of the same fatal disease of sin which they condemn in its cruder forms in others. There is no room for the Pharisee spirit in the kingdom. The word means ‘separated ones’, proud that they stand out from the crowd and are good people. Such an attitude stinks in God’s nostrils. The kingdom is a one-class society—for sinners only.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why do we see instant obedience when Jesus calls one of His disciples (like Matthew here) compared to some type of confrontation over the cost of discipleship when someone tries to volunteer?
- 2) How much time do we spend interacting with the unsaved in social settings?
- 3) Is it futile to present the gospel to those who are confirmed in their own self-righteousness? (Does this fall into the category of casting pearls before swine?)

4) Where have we prioritized religious activities over showing compassion and mercy to those who are vulnerable and in need?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

John MacArthur: Edersheim states that there were two categories of publicani. The first, whom the Jews called gabbai, collected general taxes, which included those on land and other property, those on income, and those referred to as poll, or registration, taxes. The basic land tax (the amount paid to Rome) was a tenth of one's grain and a fifth of one's fruit and wine. Income tax amounted to one percent of one's earnings, and the amount of the poll tax varied. The second type of tax collector was called a mokhes, who collected a wide variety of use taxes—taxes similar to our import duties, tollway fees, boat docking fees, business license fees, and the like. The mokhes had almost unlimited latitude in their taxing powers and could attach a tax to virtually any article or activity. They could, for instance, levy a tax on a person's boat, on the fish he caught with it, and on the dock where he unloaded it. They could tax a traveler's donkey, his slaves and servants, and his goods. They had authority to open private letters to see if a taxable business of some sort might be related to the correspondence. There were two kinds of mokhes. One kind, called the great mokhes, hired other men to collect taxes for them and, by virtue of partial anonymity, protected at least some of their reputation among their fellow countrymen. The other kind, called small mokhes, did their own assessing and collecting and therefore were in constant contact with members of the community as well as with all travelers who passed their way. The gabbai were despised, the great mokhes were more despised, and the small mokhes were despised most. Matthew was obviously a small mokhes, because he himself was sitting in the tax office as Jesus passed through the outskirts of Capernaum.

Charles Swindoll: These self-righteous, ever-judging, grace-killing elitists couldn't see the redemption of lives that was taking place before their very eyes. Instead, they complained to the disciples of Jesus, "Why is your Teacher eating with the tax collectors and sinners?" (Matt. 9:11). Driven by jealousy over Jesus' sudden popularity and their loss of influence among the masses, they were probably trying to plant little seeds of doubt and discord among the disciples. They probably hoped that Jesus' followers would be ashamed of His new associations with the "scum of Capernaum" and would turn their backs on Him.

But Jesus was again one step ahead of them. He made three stinging points, aimed directly at the faultfinding Pharisees. First, He pointed out that physicians deal with people who are sick, not with the healthy (9:12). How could tax collectors and sinners ever get the spiritual therapy they needed if the One with the cure avoided them? It didn't take an expert in the Law to read between the lines: Jesus was calling Himself the true Physician, who cared enough to reach out to the sick with a cure —while the selfish and self-righteous Pharisees were avoiding the ones who most needed spiritual help!

Second, Jesus argued that, in terms of spiritual priorities, God demanded compassion shown through grace, mercy, and love far more than sacrifices —especially "sacrifices" that were man-made like the (flaunted) public purity of the Pharisees. Jesus turned the tables on the Pharisees, who were the renowned teachers of the Law, by quoting Hosea 6:6 and sending them away to do their homework —"Go and learn what this means: 'I desire compassion, and not sacrifice'"

(Matt. 9:13). There, in front of everybody, Jesus schooled them in Bible 101! How humiliating and offensive it would have been to the Pharisees to be given homework assignments from Jesus—who seemed to be just a common carpenter.

Finally, Jesus showed that His mission stands in contrast to the actions of the Pharisees. Rather than seeking to cozy up with the so-called righteous as a member of the “Holy Club,” Jesus’ mission is to reach out to sinners and call them to repentance. Jesus’ heart went out to the outcasts—those who lived in the muck and mire of shame and disgrace. He stepped into their lives to extend forgiveness and grace so that they could start over on a new path of faith and righteousness.

William Barclay: Those scribes and Pharisees had a view of religion which is by no means dead.

(1) They were more concerned with the preservation of their own holiness than with the helping of another’s sin. They were like doctors who refused to visit the sick in case they themselves became infected. They shrank away in fastidious disgust from sinners; they did not want anything to do with people like that. Essentially, their religion was selfish; they were much more concerned to save their own souls than to save the souls of others. And they had forgotten that that was the surest way to lose their own souls.

(2) They were more concerned with criticism than with encouragement. They were far more concerned to point out the faults of other people than to help them conquer these faults. When doctors see some particularly unpleasant disease, which would turn the stomach of anyone else to look at, they are not filled with disgust; they are filled with the desire to help. Our first instinct should never be to condemn sinners; our first instinct should be to help them.

(3) They practised a goodness which issued in condemnation rather than in forgiveness and in sympathy. They would rather leave people in the gutter than give them a hand to get out of it. They were like doctors who were very much concerned to diagnose disease but not in the least concerned to help cure it.

(4) They practised a religion which consisted in outward orthodoxy rather than in practical help. Jesus loved that saying from Hosea 6:6 which said that God desired mercy and not sacrifice, for he quoted it more than once (cf. Matthew 12:7). We may diligently go through all the motions of orthodox piety, but if our hands are never stretched out to help those in need, we are not really religious people.

Matthew McCraw: Health and Sickness, Righteousness and Sin

God had been saying for centuries that He wanted true devotion, not fake formalities. Jesus is calling the Pharisees out.

He’s saying that they think that they have it all figured out when it comes to worshipping God, but they are really just pretending.

Jesus is following up on this theme, which we have come to time and time again: God desires faithful followers, not fakers.

Jesus put it very simply in verse 12: “It is not those who are well who need a doctor, but those who are sick.” Again in verse 13, He says, “I didn’t come to call the righteous, but sinners.” Jesus was telling the Pharisees that they had it all wrong.

They thought they were well. They thought they were righteous. Jesus is basically saying, “I didn’t come for people like you who think they have it all figured out and everything is good. I came for those who know that they are messed up and know that they need help. I came for the sick. I came for sinners.”

Think about it: if you’re not sick, you don’t need a healer. If you’re already righteous, you don’t need to be made righteous.

Jesus is calling sinners to Himself. Matthew understood this. He followed Jesus and he took his friends to Jesus.

Are you faithfully following Jesus? Are you doing so with the knowledge that you were a sinner who desperately needed to be healed? Are you doing so realizing that you must take other sinners to Him as well?

Ray Fowler: Calling Sinners

Today’s passage has to do with sin and associations and relationships. There’s a right way to view sin and sinners. And there’s a wrong way.

I. Jesus calls sinners (9)

A. Jesus calls you as you are

First of all, Jesus calls you as you are. Now Matthew was an unlikely person for Jesus to call because he was a tax collector. Matthew most likely collected taxes on goods that people were bringing into town. That’s why he was sitting at the tax collector’s booth. Think toll booth nowadays, except there were no set fees, which meant Matthew could charge a little extra here and there and skim a nice profit for himself.

So, Matthew was a Jew working for the Romans against his own people and likely stealing from his own people to line his own pockets. Doesn’t sound like the kind of person you want on your team. And yet Jesus still called him.

And where was Matthew when Jesus called him? Sitting right there at the tax collector’s booth! Matthew didn’t need to leave the tax collector’s booth before Jesus called him. Jesus calls him while he is still sitting there. Jesus doesn’t wait for Matthew to change first. He calls him as he is, while he is still sitting at the tax collector’s booth.

Now here’s the important part for us. Jesus does the same thing for you and me. He doesn’t wait for you to clean up your act or get your life together first. He calls you as you are.

B. Jesus calls you to follow him

Jesus calls you as you are, but he doesn’t leave you as you are. He doesn’t call you to stay where you are. He calls you while you are still in your sin, but he also calls you out of your sin. He calls you to follow him. He calls you to be his disciple, to walk as he walked, and to live as he lived. As we read in Ephesians 4: “You were taught, with regard to your former way of life, to put off your old self, which is being corrupted by its deceitful desires; to be made new in the attitude of your minds; and to put on the new self, created to be like God in true righteousness and holiness.” (Ephesians 4:22-24)

II. Jesus associated with sinners (10-11)

It’s important to understand what Matthew means by the word ‘sinners’ here. He’s not saying that some people are sinners and some people are not. We’re all sinners. But the general populace used this word for those people who participated in what they felt were the very worst of sins – the tax collectors and drunkards and prostitutes in town. They called them ‘sinners,’ because they felt that these particular sins were so much worse than their own sins.

A. Don’t avoid those who need Christ

B. Be prepared to receive criticism

You see, the Pharisees did avoid sinners. In fact, one of their sayings was this: “Keep far from an evil neighbor and do not associate with the wicked.” (Aboth 1:7) That was one of the principles they lived by. The Pharisees did not associate with the wicked. They stayed far away from the tax collectors, the drunkards and the prostitutes. They did not want to be “contaminated” by those whom they deemed sinners, and so they avoided them like the plague.

III. Jesus came to help sinners (12-13)

A. It is not the healthy who need a doctor, but the sick

B. God desires mercy, not sacrifice

Now the reason the Pharisees didn’t get it is because their attitude was wrong. So, the second thing Jesus tells them is this: “But go and learn what this means: ‘I desire mercy, not sacrifice.’” (Matthew 9:13) Jesus is quoting from Hosea 6:6. Why does he choose this particular quote? Because we cannot help people if we do not have mercy on them. Our attitude towards sinners should not be acceptance or avoidance but rather mercy. As followers of Jesus we neither accept the sin nor avoid the sinner. Rather in mercy we seek to lead them to Christ who can help them.

C. Jesus did not come to call the righteous, but sinners

Think about it. The only qualification you need for Jesus to call you is that you are a sinner. You know what that means? We all qualify! We all qualify, because we are all sinners. And we’re all really bad sinners, too. We should all be able to echo what Paul said to Timothy in 1 Timothy 1:15: “Here is a trustworthy saying that deserves full acceptance: Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners – of whom I am the worst.” (1 Timothy 1:15) I’m the worst sinner I know. How about you?

TEXT: Matthew 9:14-17

TITLE: THE QUESTION OF FASTING CONTRASTS THE OLD WITH THE NEW

BIG IDEA:

JESUS BRINGS THE INWARD RIGHTEOUSNESS OF THE MESSIANIC AGE THAT CANNOT MESH WITH FORMER EXTERNAL SYSTEMS OF RELIGIOUS RITUAL

INTRODUCTION:

Richard Gardner: The point that both metaphors make is that the new thing God is doing through Jesus cannot simply be tacked onto or poured into existing structures. On the contrary, the reign of God present in Jesus' ministry calls for a radical transformation of life and worship. For the reader, the sayings in verses 16-17 raise a critical question about the direction the story is going: Can Israel itself be sufficiently transformed to receive what God is doing through Jesus? Or do fresh wineskins hint at the formation of a new community of God's people? Matthew's answer to that question will come in chapter 16.

Grant Osborne: Jesus continues to challenge the old traditions. He not only freely associates with sinners, but also he and his disciples do not even observe a key religious practice like fasting (see on 6:16-18). The reason is that Christ is bringing with him a new era, a kingdom reality that cannot be simply immersed into the old ways of Judaism. . . In 5:17-20 Matthew stresses Jesus' continuity with the past; here he expresses the discontinuity. . .

Jesus has not come to amalgamate Judaism with Christianity. New forms are needed. The OT has not been annulled but fulfilled, and this requires the Torah of the Messiah, a new set of ethical norms and gospel practices established by Jesus. The early Palestinian church did not realize the fullness of what Jesus meant and considered themselves the new messianic sect of Judaism. It was not until the Gentile movement had begun that they gradually understood the enormity of this truth.

Donald Hagner: It is becoming clear in the progress of the narrative that despite the emphasis found in Matt 5:17-20, Jesus possesses a rather different concept of righteousness than do the Pharisees. He associates with tax collectors and sinners, even banqueting together with them, and now as the disciples of John point out, he and his disciples do not fast. What in fact is the position of Jesus concerning the accepted standards of righteousness? In this pericope that subject is addressed directly, and a very important summary of the situation is given by Jesus.

Louis A. Barbieri Jr.: Jesus, however, was not out to patch up an old system, like sewing a new unshrunk cloth on an old garment, which would then tear, or pouring new wine into old wineskins which would then burst. His purpose was to bring in something new. He had come to lead a group out of Judaism into the kingdom based on Him and His righteousness. True righteousness is not built on the Law or on Pharisaic traditions.

I. (:14) RAISING THE QUESTION OF FASTING? WHAT HAS CHANGED?

“Then the disciples of John came to Him, saying,

‘Why do we and the Pharisees fast, but Your disciples do not fast?’”

Robert Gundry: Appropriately, a question about fasting follows a question about eating (9:10–13).

John MacArthur: The three major expressions of the Judaistic traditions of that time were fasting, alms giving, and prayers. And they had their little routine during the day, when they said prayers at so many intervals, and they would stand on the corner, in the middle of the street, and do it. And they had their little alms giving routines. And they also had their routine fasts. And they would look like they were fasting, with a drawn face, and they would decorate themselves so everyone would know they were fasting.

Well, these external, outward rituals were the substance of their religion. And what they're really saying is, "How come You don't do what we do? How come Your approach is so different?" That's really a very important question. You see, they don't see religion as a matter of humility, sinfulness, repentance. They see religion as a matter of ceremony, as a matter of ritual. . .

You know what the Lord is saying? Listen to this; if you go through any religious exercise apart from an honest attitude in the heart, it is ritual and nothing more. If you fast just to fast, pray just to pray, go to church just to go to church, read the Bible just to read the Bible, sing a song just to sing a song, you've missed it.

He's saying, "Look, we're saying we have an internal, vital, real relationship with the living God, and what we do is a result of what's happening in that relationship. And right now," He says, "the Bridegroom is here, and the wedding is going on. You don't cry at a wedding; you cry at a funeral. You're happy at a wedding. I'm here with them. This is not a time for mourning."

Bruce Hurt: All three synoptic accounts include the fact that the Pharisees were fasting, which is very important in interpreting this section. As we have seen, the Pharisees were practicing a religion of ritual, a religion of externals, a religion based on law, a religion of works aimed at promoting self-righteousness, all of which was in diametric contrast to the "religion" which Jesus brought, which was one of relationship (with God), of internals (heart change), of grace (not law), and of faith in Jesus (not works) trusting in imputation of His righteousness. The Pharisees ceremonial practice was "bad news," while Jesus had come to introduce a "religion" of "good news." One is reminded of the statement in Hebrews 8:13 "When He said, 'A new covenant,' He has made the first obsolete. But whatever is becoming obsolete and growing old is ready to disappear." The ritualistic practices of the Pharisees were about to disappear!

Charles Swindoll: We often get the impression that when Jesus began His ministry and John was imprisoned by Herod, all of John's disciples simply transferred allegiance to the One to whom John had been pointing—the Lamb of God. Not so. For whatever reason, some disciples were still loyal to John, unwilling or unready to turn to Jesus. In fact, such a group seems to have endured even into the apostolic church (Acts 18:24 – 19:7).

Stan Toussaint: John belonged to the old age; Jesus was the One who was bringing a new dispensation. They should therefore leave the forerunner and join themselves to the King. Unless they did, they could not partake of any new dispensation which Jesus might bring.

Richard Gardner: The question they raise is not who eats with Jesus, but the more fundamental question of why Jesus and his companions are more inclined to feast than to fast! In this respect, Jesus' practice differed both from that of the Pharisees (who fasted twice a week) and from the ascetic lifestyle of John and his followers (cf. 11:16-19).

Craig Blomberg: Neither the Pharisees nor John's disciples were wrong in fasting as a prelude to the reception of spiritual blessings, but now those blessings are present. Jesus' inauguration of the kingdom stimulates celebration and rejoicing, as at wedding festivities.

II. (:15-17) RESPONDING TO THE QUESTION OF FASTING – EVERYTHING HAS CHANGED! 3 ILLUSTRATIONS HIGHLIGHTING THE RADICAL TRANSFORMATION USHERED IN BY JESUS

A. (:15) Primary Illustration – Bridegroom Metaphor – It's All About Jesus

1. Presence of Jesus Now Makes This a Time for Joy, Not Mourning

“And Jesus said to them, ‘The attendants of the bridegroom cannot mourn as long as the bridegroom is with them, can they?’”

William Barclay: It tells us that to be with Jesus is a thing of joy; it tells us that in the presence of Jesus there is a sheer, thrilling effervescence of life; it tells us that a gloom-encompassed Christianity is an impossibility. Those who walk with Christ walk in radiance of joy.

D. A. Carson: In exonerating his disciples' eating, Jesus used messianic-eschatological terms. In the OT, the bridegroom metaphor was repeatedly applied to God (Isa 54:5–6; 62:4–5; Hos 2:16–20); and Jews sometimes used it of marriage in connection with Messiah's coming or with the messianic banquet (cf. Str-B, 1:500–518; in the NT, cf. Mt 22:2; 25:1; 2Co 11:2; Eph 5:23–32; Rev 19:7, 9; 21:2). Thus Jesus' answer was implicitly Christological: he himself is the messianic bridegroom, and the messianic age has dawned.

Donald Hagner: In his answer Jesus turns to the idea of messianic jubilation expressed specifically in the imagery of the bridegroom and his attendants. The announcement of the presence of the messianic kingdom is similar to being present at a great wedding banquet (cf. Feuillet). This imagery is elsewhere particularly appealing to Matthew (cf. 22:1–14; 25:1–13). The phrase οἱ υἱοὶ τοῦ νυμφῶνος, “the sons of the bridal chamber,” means those in relation to, belonging to (cf. BAGD, 834, s.v. υἱός 1δ; 545), or hence, attending to, the bridegroom (cf. 8:12, “sons of the kingdom”). Whereas the bridegroom image in the OT refers to God (cf. Isa 62:4–5; “husband”: Isa 54:5–6; Hos 2:16–20), in the NT it is applied to Christ (2 Cor 11:2; cf. Eph 5:22–27; Rev 19:7).

2. Crucifixion of Jesus Will Make Fasting Appropriate for a Season

“But the days will come when the bridegroom is taken away from them, and then they will fast.”

R. T. France: This is the first hint that Jesus will be “taken away” (the verb suggests a violent and unwelcome removal, with a possible echo of Isa 53:8), a theme which will become dominant after 16:21. No details are yet given, but in a response to John's disciples it would naturally be taken as linking his fate with that of John, already imprisoned for his opposition to the authorities (4:12; 11:2) and soon to be unjustly executed (14:1–12); in 17:12–13 Jesus will explicitly say that he is to be executed “by them” as John has been. The agents and the circumstances will in fact be different, but the principle of official suppression is the same.

B. (:16-17) Two Supporting Illustrations – Transition from Old to New Covenant Times

R. T. France: Two little parables pick up the theme of a new and joyful pattern of religion which is incompatible with the old traditions represented by the fasting régimes of the Pharisees and the followers of John.

Grant Osborne: The next two analogies (Luke 5:36 calls them “parables”) expand on Jesus’ point regarding the appearance of the new covenant reality and its incompatibility with the old covenant. Just as the joy of the new covenant cannot cohere with the mourning of the old ways, so the new kingdom as a whole cannot be forced into the old one, lest both be destroyed. This first analogy is clear. The old garment has long ago shrunk, but the new cloth has not. To sew a new piece of cloth onto an old robe to repair it is foolish, for as soon as the new patch is washed it too will shrink, pulling the threads from the old robe and ripping it anew.

John Nolland: Once again the image is clearer than the application, but the idea commends itself that what is being asserted is that the new does not need to be constrained by the old, and that only in this way can the new be welcomed and the abiding value of the old be preserved.

Donald Hagner: If fasting has lost its fixed place in the fabric of righteousness because of a new reality now present in and through the ministry of Jesus, then a question mark can be raised over the whole body of inherited practice, and even that stipulated in Torah. How, in fact, is the newness represented by the presence and message of Jesus to be combined with previous conventional modes of conduct? And Jesus replies with two analogies (Luke alone introduces them with the word παραβολή, “parable” [5:36]) that illustrate vividly that the new cannot simply be superimposed upon or contained within the framework of the old.

1. (:16) Not Appropriate to Mesh New Patch with Old Garment

for the patch pulls away from the garment, and a worse tear results.”*

John MacArthur: Now, in those days, the garments were cotton or wool, and both would shrink. If you had an old robe, and you got a big hole in it – right? – and you take a piece of brand new cloth, stick it in that hole and stitch it all around, then as soon as you washed that garment, that new cloth shrinks, and the old fibers are going to be ripped by the strength of the new cloth, and all you’re going to get is a bigger hole. You keep doing it, and it just gets bigger and bigger. You can’t put a new one in an old robe. Anybody who knows knows that if you’re going to patch an old robe, you’ve got to use an old piece of material. What Jesus is saying is this, “There is no way that what I teach can fit into your system. No way. There is no way that the message that I am giving of an internal holiness, of a real repentance, of a hard attitude can ever fit in the ritualistic system that you hold. No way. Not only won’t it connect, but secondly, your system can’t contain it.” . . .

that is not to say that the Old Testament is disconnected. Oh, no. He came to fulfill the Old Testament. Their religion was not the religion of the Old Testament. It was a rabbinic tradition that denied the very truth of the Old Testament as He made abundantly clear in the Sermon on the Mount.

So, Jesus said, “Look, your system says you’re righteous. Mine says you’re vile and sinful. No way to match those two together. If you hang onto yours, that’s it.”

I really believe, people, that when someone comes to Christ, they have to say goodbye to a ritual system. Now, there are people in ritualistic systems, and they'll confess Christ. I think if it's genuine, eventually they're going to come out of that ritualistic system to the freedom of Christ, to the expression of an inward relationship.

2. (:17) Not Appropriate to Pour New Wine into Old Wineskins

“Nor do men put new wine into old wineskins; otherwise the wineskins burst, and the wine pours out, and the wineskins are ruined; but they put new wine into fresh wineskins, and both are preserved.”

D. A. Carson: Skin bottles for carrying various fluids were made by killing the chosen animal, cutting off its head and feet, skinning the carcass, and sewing up the skin, fur side out, to seal off all orifices but one (usually the neck). The skin was tanned with special care to minimize disagreeable taste. In time, the skin became hard and brittle. If new wine, still fermenting, were put into such an old skin, the buildup of fermenting gases would split the brittle container and ruin both bottle and wine. New wine was placed only in new wineskins still pliable and elastic enough to accommodate the pressure.

Donald Hagner: It is not unwarranted allegorizing to draw out the following symbolism, which is inherent in the passage. The new wine is the newness of the gospel (cf. John 2:1–11), personified in Jesus; the old wine skins are the established patterns of conduct regarded as exemplifying the righteousness of the Torah. The former is too dynamic to be contained by the traditional framework of obedience. The proposal to combine the two may well have been a temptation to Matthew's Jewish-Christian readers. But the new reality of the gospel requires instead “new skins,” i.e., new patterns of conduct based on the ethical teaching of Jesus as the true exposition of the meaning and intent of the Torah. Here Matthew's special interests and viewpoint (and conservatism too, compared to Mark) become obvious: “both are preserved,” that is, the new wine of the reality of the kingdom and the new skins (not the old skins!) of faithful obedience to the law, but as expounded by Jesus. For Matthew, gospel and law (not Christianity and Judaism; contra Fenton, A. Kee) are held together in the Church, but the standard of interpretation of and obedience to the latter is always solely the authoritative teaching of Jesus.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Is fasting a spiritual discipline that you practice? Why or why not?
- 2) Why weren't these disciples of John the Baptist on the same page as the disciples of Jesus?
- 3) How can religious people get bogged down in their traditions and external religious rites?
- 4) Why can't people just append Jesus to their former life without any type of radical transformation?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

E. Michael Green: But Jesus is clear that his coming marks a discontinuity with all that. The old skins cannot contain the new wine he is bringing. Old regulations about ceremonial defilement cannot stand before the joy of forgiveness, fellowship, excitement and new direction which the coming of the kingdom inaugurates. How can the guests of the bridegroom mourn while the bridegroom is with them? At a Jewish wedding, open house was maintained for a week. It was a time of great rejoicing and hospitality, dancing and fun, such as might rarely come into the lives of poor people. And it was all paid for by the bridegroom's family. It was free to all comers. What a description of the kingdom Jesus came to usher in! And there may be the hint that Jesus plays the bridegroom role that was ascribed to God in the Old Testament. Jesus brings joy. But there is clear prediction of sorrow too, as he looks ahead to his death: 'then they will fast' (15). Joy and sorrow are inextricably wound together in the lives of disciples as they were in the life of the Master.

One thing is clear as the claims of Jesus are brought before us: here is something new. It simply is not tolerable to make Jesus a patch in the garment of Judaism to cover a threadbare area. No, for as soon as that garment goes to the wash the new piece will shrink, and the tear will get worse. It is the same with new wine and new wineskins. Old wineskins are shrivelled hard, and cannot cope with effervescent new wine. New wineskins, new garments are needed.

Walter Wilson: By this point, it is apparent that Jesus is not only responding to the question posed in 9:14 but also looking back at the events of 9:1–14 as a whole, asserting the incompatibility of the “old” (represented by the scribes, the Pharisees, and John) with the “new” (represented by the Messiah and his followers). In order to appreciate the implications of this incompatibility, it is necessary to recognize the level of violence implicit in the symbolism to which Jesus resorts in his response. To begin with, the bridegroom of 9:15 is not simply absent. Rather, he is “taken away” (ἀπαρθῆ ἀπό) from his guests, a possible allusion to Isa 53:8: “For his life is taken away (αἴρεται ἀπό) from the earth” (cf. Gen 5:24; 2 Kgs 2:10; Prov 24:11; Jer 11:19). The verbal correlation between 9:15 and 9:16 provides additional insight into how Matthew may have understood the meaning of Jesus's death:

the bridegroom is taken away from [ἀπαρθῆ ἀπ'] them....

for the patch pulls away from [αἴρει ... ἀπό] the cloak.

The old order will “take away” Jesus because what he represents “takes away” from its very fabric (cf. 21:43). Jesus goes on in 9:16 to describe how this pulling away creates in the garment a “tear” (σχίσμα), a word that, as Marcus observes, is used elsewhere in the New Testament of “schisms” between different groups. Given the allusion in 9:15b to Jesus's death, a more compelling analogy comes from an event with which his death coincides: “Jesus cried out again with a loud voice, and yielded up his spirit. And then the veil of the temple was torn [ἐσχίσθη] in two from top to bottom” (27:50–51). The tearing of the old garment in 9:16 foreshadows the tearing of the temple's veil in 27:51, the implicit violence in both cases being linked to the violent end of Jesus himself. Viewed from this perspective, the veil can be seen as a symbol of the “old” order that opposes Jesus, its rending a portent of its demise (cf. 24:2; 27:40).

The symbolism of violence extends into the final verse of the pericope (9:17). The reference to wine in the context of a meal scene would have been natural enough, especially insofar as it was traditionally included among the items served at the messianic banquet. In 9:17b, however, the reference to wine is employed to depict not a scene of fulfillment but a scene of destruction.

the wine will burst the wineskins and the wine is destroyed [ἀπόλλυται] and the wineskins as well. (Mark 2:22)

the wineskins burst and the wine pours out [ἐκχεῖται] and the wineskins are destroyed [ἀπόλλυνται]. (Matt 9:17)

The verb ἀπόλλυμι is found scattered throughout the First Gospel to describe both efforts to “destroy” Jesus (2:13; 12:14; 27:20) and the fate awaiting those who murder the righteous (21:41; 22:7). The imagery of wine being “poured out,” meanwhile, which Matthew has added to the pericope (cf. Mark 2:22), recalls another meal scene, one in which Jesus uses the imagery of wine being poured out to interpret the eschatological significance of his death: “this is my blood of the covenant, which is poured out [ἐκχυννόμενον] for many for forgiveness of sins” (26:28). Within the symbolic world of the gospel, the imagery of wine being poured out signifies the blood that will be poured out of Jesus’s body at his death, the blood of a sacrifice that inaugurates a new covenant and a new era, one defined by the forgiveness of sins. The relevance of this signification for the interpretation of 9:17 is increased by the fact that Jesus has just alluded to his death (9:15b), employed imagery suggesting the violence attending that death (9:16), and utters these words in the presence of “many” sinners (9:10). The imagery of 9:15b–17 serves as a reminder that the grace and redemption conveyed by Jesus’s act of dining with such people will be fully realized “for many” (26:28) only through his death.

Leon Morris: The two illustrations effectively make the point that Jesus was not simply bringing in a revised and updated Judaism, or even founding a new sect within Judaism. What he was teaching and doing were such that they could not be contained within the accepted Jewish system; to attempt to confine his followers within the limits of the old religion would be to invite disaster. This did not mean that he was rejecting the Old Testament; he came to fulfil the law and the prophets, not to reject them (5:17). What he repudiated was not Scripture, but the current religious practices allegedly based on Scripture. He did not even repudiate those practices all at once and call on his followers to forsake Judaism. But he did repudiate the suggestion that they should remain confined within the accepted understanding of the old system. His new approach could not be fitted into those old forms. His followers must find new forms or there would be religious disaster. Much the same point is, of course, made in the Fourth Gospel with its account of the changing of the water of Jewish purification into wine (John 2).

John Piper: When the Bridegroom is Taken Away, They Will Fast – with New Wineskins
John Calvin, in the 16th century, said,

Let us say something about fasting, because many, for want of knowing its usefulness, undervalue its necessity, and some reject it as almost superfluous; while, on the other hand where the use of it is not well understood, it easily degenerates into superstition. Holy and legitimate fasting is directed to three ends; for we practice it either as a restraint on the flesh, to preserve it from licentiousness, or as a preparation for prayers and pious meditations, or as a testimony of our humiliation in the presence of God when we are desirous of confessing our guilt before him. (Institutes, IV.12, 14, 15)

Martin Luther wrote,

Of fasting I say this: It is right to fast frequently in order to subdue and control the body. For when the stomach is full, the body does not serve for preaching, for praying, or studying, or for doing anything else that is good. Under such circumstances God's Word cannot remain. But one should not fast with a view to meriting something by it as by a good work. . .

But then Jesus said, "But the days will come when the bridegroom is taken away from them, and then they will fast." This is the key sentence: "Then they will fast." When is he referring to?

Some have suggested he was referring just to the several days between his death and resurrection. They would fast just for those days. But that is very unlikely. For several reasons. One is that the early church fasted after the resurrection, as we have seen in Acts 13:1–3 (cf. Acts 14:23; 2 Corinthians 6:5; 11:27). The other is that in Matthew 25:1–13 Jesus pictures his second coming as the arrival of the bridegroom. In other words, the Bridegroom is taken away until the second coming of Christ. . .

The patch of unshrunk cloth and the new wine represent the new reality that has come with Jesus—the kingdom of God is here. The Bridegroom has come. The Messiah is in our midst. And that is not merely temporary. He is not merely here and then gone. The kingdom of God did not come in Jesus and then just vanish out of the world.

Jesus died for our sins once for all. He rose from the dead once for all. The Spirit was sent into the world as the real presence of Jesus among us. The kingdom is the reigning power of Christ in the world subduing hearts to the king and creating a people who believe him and serve him. The Spirit of the Bridegroom is gathering and purifying a bride for Christ. This is the new wine. . .

The new wine demands new fasting. Years ago I wrote in the margin of my Greek Testament beside this text, "The new fasting is based on the mystery that the Bridegroom has come, not just will come. The new wine of his presence calls for new fasting."

In other words the yearning and longing and ache of the old fasting was not based on the glorious truth that the Messiah had come. The mourning over sin and the yearning in danger was not based on the great finished work of the Redeemer and the great revelation of himself and his grace in history. But now the Bridegroom has come. In coming he struck the decisive blow against sin and against Satan and against death.

The great, central, decisive act of salvation for us today is past, not future. And on the basis of that past work of the Bridegroom, nothing can ever be the same again. The wine is new. The blood is shed. The Lamb is slain. The punishment of our sins is executed. Death is defeated. The Bridegroom is risen. The Spirit is sent. The wine is new. And the old fasting mindset is simply not adequate. . .

The newness of our fasting is this: its intensity comes not because we have never tasted the wine of Christ's presence, but because we have tasted it so wonderfully by his Spirit and cannot now be satisfied until the consummation of joy arrives. We must have all he promised. And as much now as possible.

J. Ligon Duncan: You see, Jesus gives a subtle rebuke to John's disciples. John was a rigorous man. We know that he took Nazarite vows. He did not drink, he abstained from certain types of foods, he lived in the wilderness a very aesthetic kind of life, and he demanded a very rigorous spirituality of his disciples. But the Lord Jesus reminds John's disciples that there is no command for that in the Old Testament. You know the only fast commanded in the Old Testament is connected with the day of atonement in the Book of Leviticus. It's the only fast commanded. There is much fasting described in the Old Testament, but it was left up to the liberty of the believer's conscience as to when and how to do it. And so the Lord Jesus reminds John's disciples that though it may be a good idea to fast two days a week, I'm not going to bind my young disciples consciences to what you think is helpful. You see, we must not impose our way of doing things on others when we have no biblical warrant. No matter how useful and helpful a particular practice may be to us, if we have no biblical warrant where the bible is silent, we must not impose our conscience, and that's precisely what John's disciples were doing. They were attempting to impose John's practices on Jesus' disciples. And Jesus reminds them that you can't do that. The new wine that He is bringing, the new cloth and garment that He is bringing cannot be constrained by the old man-made regulations and rituals, certainly of the Pharisees but not even John's disciples. No man-made regulations can foster the spirituality that will be fostered by the work of the Holy Spirit in the message that the Lord Jesus is bringing.

David Thompson: When Jesus was here on earth, He was God and He came to save sinners. He came to transform lives. Of course the problem was that most of Israel refused to admit that they were sinners who needed saving. As soon as He started saving some sinners, He ran smack dab into a self-righteous religious world of Phariseeism with all of its legalistic laws and rituals. Jesus did not fit the system. He came to present real righteousness found in a relationship with Him and that rubbed the religious crowd the wrong way.

JESUS CHRIST DEMONSTRATES THAT THE REAL RIGHTEOUSNESS OF GOD IS NOT DETERMINED BY RELIGIOUS TRADITIONS OR JUDAISTIC LEGALISM; IT IS DETERMINED BY A NEW RELATIONSHIP WITH JESUS CHRIST.

Jesus Christ was not interested in appeasing the self-righteous religious crowd. . .

John's disciples question Christ's association to fasting. 9:14-17

Fasting was a rigid, legalistic, religious feature of Judaism.

(Statement #1) - Fasting is not necessary when I am here in person on earth. 9:15

Jesus is the bridegroom come to Israel. Israel does not need to fast while He is on the scene. This is God in person. The point of fasting is to draw near to God. God is in the flesh.

(Statement #2) - I did not come to patch up an old religious legalistic system. 9:16

The old garment is law, Judaism and legal righteousness. Jesus Christ came to bring new clothing and a new system of grace, not to patch up the old stuff. He came to bring a new dispensation, a better righteousness that could take away sin. He did not come to patch up old religion.

(Statement #3) - I came to present a new system of grace . 9:17

The new wine is the Gospel of grace. The old skins include the Law and the Levitical institutions. A new system belongs in new skins. You do not put a new system of grace into an old skin of legalism.

Try to mix grace with law, grace with legalism and grace with Judaism and you ruin grace.

If a person wants a real relationship with God, it is found in a real relationship with Jesus Christ.

Stanley P. Saunders: In Jesus' day (and in many parts of the world today), people reckoned time not as an abstract, linear, measurable commodity, as North Americans do, but in terms of "what kind of time" (Gk: kairos) it was and what actions, behaviors, experiences, and relationships were expected or appropriate. The kairos when God's reign draws near is associated with perspectives and actions such as repentance. Jesus does not disagree with John or John's disciples about what kind of time it is, but he offers two analogies that suggest he understands the practical implications of the "time" differently than they do. First, mourning in the presence of the bridegroom would be inexplicable, a denial of the kind of time it is and the behavior appropriate to it. Fasting is appropriate when the bridegroom is gone. This image lends itself nicely to allegorization: Jesus is the bridegroom, his ministry is a time of celebration, but he will be "taken away" (crucified). The bridegroom image also foreshadows Jesus' parables about the "wedding banquet" (cf. 22:1–14) and the age of watchfulness just before the bridegroom comes (25:1–13). But it is not necessary to allegorize the image for it to work. The analogy simply affirms that fasting is not appropriate for the kairos in which Jesus and his disciples now minister. God's reign is not only near, as it was during John's ministry, but already present in Jesus as light for those in darkness (cf. 4:12–25). The greatest party ever has begun and everybody's invited—but no mourning or fasting allowed.

Two more sayings (9:16–17) affirm Jesus' line of reasoning. Sowing an unshrunk patch on an old garment would be silly, creating a worse tear when the patch shrinks. Likewise, putting new wine in old skins results in the loss of both. New wine must be put into new wineskins. Both sayings concern what fits a given container or setting. Jesus thus clarifies why he and his disciples do not fast. Between John and Jesus a corner has been turned: fasting that was appropriate for John's time is no longer fitting for Jesus' ministry. Jesus' ministry, in other words, does not fit the container that was John's mission, or the container that is the world of the Pharisees. It's a question of knowing what time it is and conforming one's behavior rightly.

David Thomas: The Principles of the This New Religion of Christ Require to Be kept Distinct from All Other Systems –

We make two remarks here, --

First: That there has ever been a tendency in man to connect some of his old forms with Christianity. These disciples of John now wished Christ to enjoin on His followers the rite of fasting. You see the tendency on the side, both of the Jew and the Pagan, in the first ages. The Jewish convert was anxious to bring as much of Judaism as possible into his new religion, and the Pagan convert sought to bring as much of heathenism as possible. From these two sources the corruptions of Christianity have come. The Greek and the Romish church are illustrations of this huge evil. In both you see new wine in old bottles; new cloth upon old garments. Indeed, Christianity has been dealt with in this fashion in every age. How often do we see men endeavouring to patch their old dogmas to some of its glorious doctrines, to put its new wine into the rotten bottles of their old institutions and creeds. Men do not like to take Christianity in its naked simplicity. They are anxious to combine it with something else – some old notions, rites, or ceremonies.

Secondly: That against this tendency we must strive, as against a tremendous evil. The new wine is lost by putting it into old bottles. The new cloth which would clothe and adorn the spirit, becomes worthless by being cut into pieces, and attached to old worn-out garments. How its doctrines have been injured by being worked into old creeds and systems of theology!

TEXT: Matthew 9:18-34

TITLE: IMPRESSIVE HEALING MIRACLES EARN JESUS A MIXED REPUTATION

BIG IDEA:

WHILE JESUS DEMONSTRATES COMPASSION IN HEALING AND VALUES EVEN WEAK FAITH, THE RESPONSE TO HIM BEGINS TO REFLECT POLARIZATION

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: This final set of three miracles continues the emphases in the others on Jesus' authority and compassion for the marginalized in society (8:16–17; 9:2, 22) as well as on the faith of those healed (8:10, 13; 9:2, 22, 28–29). The contrast between Jesus' popularity with the crowds (8:1; 9:8, 26, 31, 33) and the opposition of the leaders is again noted (9:3, 11, 34), who for the first time attribute his exorcisms to Satan (9:34; cf. 12:22–32). The contrast between the simple faith of the ruler of the synagogue in 9:18 and the radical rejection of the Pharisees in 9:34 is stark.

David Thomas: We take these four cases together, because they contain so much that is common to one another, and the general meaning of each will gain power and prominence by the combination.

Craig Blomberg: Verse 33 contains the strongest statement to date of the crowds' positive response to Jesus' healing, but v. 34 immediately follows with the strongest statement to date of the Jewish leaders' opposition. A polarization is beginning which Matthew will develop more explicitly as his Gospel unfolds. And a progression may be discerned within these three passages—from a completely positive response in 9:26, to hints of possible trouble in 9:30-31, to overt hostility in 9:34.

Richard Gardner: In 9:18-34 Matthew concludes the collection of stories that began at 8:1. Like the first trilogy of stories (in 8:1-17), the three narratives included here focus on Jesus' power to heal: A chronic disease is finally cured. A dead child is raised up. The blind receive the gift of sight. A deaf mute begins to speak.

For the author, the deeds reported in these stories are significant at two levels.

- First, they anticipate the catalogue of miracles ascribed to Jesus in 11:1-5, illustrating some of the deeds for which we have not yet had examples.
- Second, they provide further evidence that the coming age of salvation is drawing near in Jesus' work. Together with the healing of the paralytic reported earlier, these deeds fulfill the promise of Isaiah 35:5-6: "Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf unstopped; then the lame shall leap like a deer, and the tongue of the speechless sing for joy."

R. T. France: With this final triad of miracle stories Matthew brings to a close his comprehensive collage of the authoritative activity of the Messiah in chapters 8–9, both in his unquestioned power over a wide variety of threatening forces, natural and supernatural, and in the uncompromising demand which he makes on those who are called to follow him. But the overriding note is not one of hard power but of deliverance and joy, as people are set free from danger, disease, demonic powers and death, and called to share with Jesus in enjoying the new wine of the kingdom of heaven.

William Barclay: People can come to Jesus from different motivations:

- Desperation drove the synagogue ruler (everything else had failed);
- Superstition (at least inadequate faith) drove the woman with the issue of blood;
- Blind men came to Jesus with a very inadequate conception of who he was;

Here is an astonishing thing. The ruler came to Jesus with an inadequate motive; the woman came to Jesus with an inadequate faith; the blind men came to Jesus with an inadequate conception of who he was, or, if we like to put it so, with an inadequate theology; and yet they found his love and power waiting for their needs. Here we see a tremendous thing. It does not matter how we come to Christ, if only we come. No matter how inadequately and how imperfectly we come, his love and his arms are open to receive us.

There is a double lesson here. It means that we do not wait to ask Christ's help until our motives, our faith and our theology are perfect; we may come to him exactly as we are. And it means that we have no right to criticize others whose motives we suspect, whose faith we question and whose theology we believe to be mistaken. It is not how we come to Christ that matters; it is that we should come at all, for he is willing to accept us as we are, and able to make us what we ought to be.

John Nolland: The present unit is the first of the three miracle episodes which Matthew gathers under the rubric: 'new wine into fresh wineskins' (see at 9:14-17). Jesus does not mourn the dead but raises them; he breaks the shackles of a perpetual menstrual uncleanness. . . The headline theme of the final set of three miracle stories: the newness of that which comes with the presence of Jesus.

Daniel Doriani: Their stories begin the third set of miracles described in Matthew 8-9. Each one breaks new ground.

- In the first three, Jesus healed diseases such as leprosy and a fever (8:1-17).
- In the next group, he exercised his power over nature by calming a storm, and he exercised his power over spirits by casting out demons (8:18-9:8).
- In the last set of miracles, Jesus addresses new problems: He raises the dead and heals the blind and the mute (9:18-34).

Matthew's lesson has two elements.

- First, Jesus' miracles are designed to lead people to genuine faith and discipleship.
- Second, Jesus is worthy of such faith; in the final miracles, he completes the signs of the Messiah described in Isaiah 35:1-10.
 - Restoring nature (35:1-2)
 - Giving strength to the weak and restoration to the lame (35:3, 6)
 - Giving sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, speech to the mute (35:5-6).

I. (:18-26) HEALING A WOMAN WITH CHRONIC BLOOD FLOW AND RAISING A YOUNG DAUGHTER OF A SYNAGOGUE OFFICIAL

Stanley Saunders: Matthew here tells a story within a story. Both episodes feature interactions with females, one a woman who has been suffering from hemorrhages for twelve years and the other a young girl who has died. In both stories the healing involves touch: first the woman touching the hem of Jesus' clothes (9:20), and then Jesus taking the little girl by the hand (9:25). Both situations suggest a risk of defilement, the woman because of her flow of blood and the girl because she is "dead." Jesus' willingness to touch and be touched by women demonstrates how God's power pushes back the barriers that divide male from female. The wineskin of God's empire includes women and men alike.

A. (:18-19) Urgent Crisis – Appeal to the One Who Has Power over Death

1. (:18) Desperate Appeal by the Synagogue Ruler

"While He was saying these things to them, behold, there came a synagogue official, and bowed down before Him, saying, 'My daughter has just died; but come and lay Your hand on her, and she will live.'"

Craig Blomberg: this influential religious leader believes that Jesus can miraculously reclaim his daughter's life. The faith to which Jesus will explicitly point in v. 22 is implicitly present here already. As before (8:7), Jesus and his troupe go at once to help.

2. (:19) Compassionate Response of Jesus

"And Jesus rose and began to follow him, and so did His disciples."

B. (:20-22) Intruding Crisis – Appeal to the One Who Can Heal and Cleanse

1. (:20-21) Desperate Approach by the Woman with Chronic Blood Flow

"And behold, a woman who had been suffering from a hemorrhage for twelve years, came up behind Him and touched the fringe of His cloak; 21 for she was saying to herself, 'If I only touch His garment, I shall get well.'"

Robert Gundry: ("Hemorrhage" is too strong a term, for she couldn't have survived twelve years of suffering the amount of blood loss usually connoted by that term.)

D. A. Carson: Having heard of others who had been healed at Jesus' touch, this woman decided to touch even a tassel of Jesus' cloak (v.21). Moved in part by a superstitious view of Jesus, she struggled through the crowd, which, because of her "unclean" condition, she should have avoided.

Leon Morris: He speaks of a woman who had severe bleeding over a period of twelve years (the same span of time as the life of the ruler's little girl; Mark tells us that she was twelve years old, Mark 5:42). The woman's disability was not only a physical malady but one that had significant social implications; she would have been ceremonially unclean (Lev. 15:25-27), and therefore cut off from the ceremonial observances of the community. She could not join in worship, and her contact with other people would have been restricted because even a touch from her would make people unclean (Lev. 15:27). It was probably this that made her take the approach she did. She was convinced that one touch of Jesus would bring her healing, and she managed to effect this without drawing anyone's attention. With a crowd of people thronging around Jesus she was able to come up behind him and touch just the tassel of his cloak. . .

There seems to be an element of superstition mingled with the faith of the woman, but Jesus did not reject her; he responded to the faith that he discerned. She certainly had the deep conviction that Jesus could cure her. If only she could get close enough to touch him, she would be free forever from her terrible disability.

Richard Gardner: In a bold and presumptuous act, she comes up behind Jesus and touches the fringe of his cloak.

William Barclay: These fringes were four tassels of hyacinth blue worn by a Jew on the corners of his outer garment. They were worn in obedience to the injunction of the law in Numbers 15:37–41 and Deuteronomy 22:12. Matthew again refers to them in 14:36 and 23:5. They consisted of four threads passing through the four corners of the garment and meeting in eight. one of the threads was longer than the others. It was twisted seven times round the others, and a double knot formed; then eight times, then eleven times, then thirteen times. The thread and the knots stood for the five books of the law.

The idea of the fringe was twofold.

- It was meant to identify a Jew as a Jew, and as a member of the chosen people, no matter where he was;
- and it was meant to remind a Jew every time he put on and took off his clothes that he belonged to God.

2. (:22) Compassionate Response of Jesus

“But Jesus turning and seeing her said, ‘Daughter, take courage; your faith has made you well.’ And at once the woman was made well.”

Craig Blomberg: The reader wonders if Jesus deliberately delays his journey to Jairus's home so as to be able to perform not just a healing but a restoration of life (as with Lazarus in John 11:6), but Matthew leaves no clues. Instead he shifts his focus immediately to this second woman, who also believes in Jesus' power to heal.

C. (:23-26) Dramatic Resurrection

1. (:23-24) Repudiation of the Dominion of Death

“And when Jesus came into the official's house, and saw the flute-players, and the crowd in noisy disorder, 24 He began to say, ‘Depart; for the girl has not died, but is asleep.’ And they began laughing at Him.”

Donald Hagner: When Jesus comes to the ruler's house, he encounters a gathering of people readying themselves for the funeral that would take place the same day, as was the custom in that culture. τοὺς αὐλητάς, “the flute players,” were professional musicians (cf. for festive occasions, 11:17; Rev 18:22) who were apparently hired to play at funerals. Matthew's ὄχλον θορυβούμενον, lit. “crowd in an uproar,” represents the loud wailing, typical in that culture, of those mourning the death of the girl (cf. Jer 48:36; Mark 5:38; Jos. J. W. 3.9.5 §437 and Str-B 1:521–23 [m. Ketub. 4.4; m. Šabb. 23.4]). All of this indicated that the girl had died. For Jesus, who is about to bring the girl back to life, the lamenting is inappropriate, and so the mourners are told to “go away.” They are not needed because the girl ἀλλὰ καθεύδει, “is but sleeping.” Death for Jesus is not the final word; the dead can be brought back to life. This expectation causes the Church ultimately to use the same verb, καθεύδω, for those who have died: they are but “asleep” (1 Thess 5:10; Eph 5:14; cf. κοιμᾶσθαι: 27:52; John 11:11–14; 1 Cor 15:6, 20; 1 Thess 4:13–18; for OT background, see Dan 12:2). Jesus does not deny the girl's death but rather the finality of that death.

William Barclay: The music of the flute was especially associated with death. The Talmud lays it down: ‘The husband is bound to bury his dead wife, and to make lamentations and mourning for her, according to the custom of all countries. And also the very poorest among the Israelites will not allow her less than two flutes and one wailing woman; but, if he be rich, let all things be done according to his qualities.’ Even in Rome, the flute-players were a feature of days of grief. There were flute-players at the funeral of the Roman emperor Claudius, and Seneca tells us that they made such a shrilling that even Claudius himself, dead though he was, might have heard them. So insistent and so emotionally exciting was the wailing of the flute that Roman law limited the number of flute-players at any funeral to ten.

D. A. Carson: Jesus was about to reverse funeral symbolism of the finality of death. The “noisy crowd” was made up of friends mourning, not in the hushed whispers characteristic of our Western funerals, but in loud outbursts of grief and wailing augmented by cries of hired mourners. Jesus’ miracle not only brought a corpse to life (v.24) but hope to despair.

2. (:25) Raising of the Dead Girl

*“But when the crowd had been put out,
He entered and took her by the hand; and the girl arose.”*

Grant Osborne: The Authority of Jesus at a Climax --

Jesus progresses from healing a serious illness to raising the dead. Every kind of supernatural miracle has occurred in this section—nature miracle, exorcism, healing miracle, and now the ultimate occurs as a harbinger of the climax that becomes the center point of history, the resurrection of Christ himself. The one who has the power to raise a little girl has the power also to conquer death himself.

John MacArthur: The miracles of Jesus were the verification of His power to reverse the curse, the verification of His power to establish the kingdom. For He had said in John chapter 5, you remember, that He would someday raise from the dead all that were in the graves. And if He’s going to do that, He’s going to have to demonstrate that He has the power to do that. And so, miracle upon miracle did He do to verify His power.

3. (:26) Reputation of Jesus Spread Widely

“And this news went out into all that land.”

Robert Gundry: The anonymity of the land into which went the report of Jesus’ raising the girl foreshadows the proclamation of the gospel in “the whole inhabited [earth]” (24:14).

Richard Gardner: Together, the stories of the woman and the girl establish that

- (1) Jesus’ power to restore life is total, and
- (2) faith that reaches out to Jesus lets us receive that power.

II. (:27-31) HEALING TWO BLIND MEN

A. (:27) Pathetic Plight

“And as Jesus passed on from there, two blind men followed Him, crying out, and saying, ‘Have mercy on us, Son of David!’”

Leon Morris: There are no miracles of the giving of sight in the Old Testament, nor in the New after the Gospels (the restoration of sight to Saul of Tarsus, Acts 9:17-18, is not of the same order). But in Jesus' ministry there are more miracles of the giving of sight than of any other single category. The giving of sight is a divine activity (Exod. 4:11; Ps. 146:8), and it has messianic significance (Isa. 29:18; 35:5; 42:7). Matthew has a story very similar to this one in 20:29-34 (with parallels in Mark 10:46-52; Luke 18:35-43). In both of Matthew's stories the blind men cried out, "Have mercy on us, Son of David," in both Jesus touched their eyes, and in both their eyes were opened. But this story is located in Galilee, while the later one takes place near Jericho; here the men follow Jesus whereas there they sit by the way. In the later story people told the blind men that Jesus was passing and then rebuked them for crying out, Jesus called the blind men to him (here they follow him into the house), he asked what they wanted (here he questions them about their faith), and the story ends with the blind men following him (here with them spreading the story throughout the region). It seems plain enough that Matthew regarded the two stories as distinct, and that it is the later one that is paralleled in the other Synoptists.

Craig Blomberg: Matthew's twin themes of Jesus' rejection by official Judaism and acceptance by outcasts reappear here and set the stage for an increasing polarization of response to Christ.

Charles Swindoll: As we recall the packed itinerary thus far in Matthew 9, I can imagine Jesus and His disciples were exhausted:

- the paralytic lying on the bed —healed (9:2-8)
- Matthew the tax collector —redeemed (9:9-13)
- the woman with incurable bleeding —cured (9:20-22)
- the daughter who had died —resurrected (9:23-26)

If anybody had earned a breather, it was Jesus. But as He made His way back to where He was staying —likely Peter's home —two blind men followed Him, crying out, "Have mercy on us, Son of David!" (9:27).

B. (:28) Focused Faith

"And after He had come into the house, the blind men came up to Him, and Jesus said to them, 'Do you believe that I am able to do this?' They said to Him, 'Yes, Lord.'"

R. T. France: Faith has been mentioned as a key factor in previous healings, but this is the first time (and the only time in Matthew; he does not have a parallel to Mark 9:23-24) when it is explicitly set before the suppliant as a condition of healing. The centurion voluntarily declared his faith in Jesus' authority to heal (8:8-10; so also the leper in 8:2, the official in 9:18 and, secretly, the woman in 9:21), but these men are required to do so. There is no obvious reason why this additional element should be present in this case, since it does not occur in the similar story of the healing of blind men in 20:29-34. But the faith, once declared, is made the basis of their healing, as Jesus uses another third person imperative as a "performative utterance" (see on 8:13, and cf. 15:28).

John MacArthur: And I'm struck by the utter lack of privacy that our Lord had, the relentless pressure, the barrage of unrelenting people who dogged His footsteps. He went in the house, and they went right in the house after Him. I don't think any of us can even begin to fathom what it must have been like to have these tragic people just clinging to Him all through His ministry, knowing no moments of privacy, unless late in the night He were to go away to some private place of prayer.

C. (:29-30a) Marvelous Miracle

*“Then He touched their eyes, saying, ‘Be it done to you according to your faith.’
30 And their eyes were opened.”*

Grant Osborne: Faith is an appropriating force, not a meritorious deed. The blind men were healed not on the basis of the quality of their faith but because they threw themselves on the mercy of Jesus. By faith we enter into God’s sovereign deeds and experience them spiritually; faith turns an event into a relationship, as we experience God as well as his work.

John MacArthur: Archbishop Trench in 1902 wrote this. I think it’s a marvelous thing. He was writing on this very same account in Matthew, and he said this, “The faith which in itself is nothing is yet the organ for receiving everything.” Now listen to this. “It is the conducting link between man’s emptiness and God’s fullness, and herein lies all the value faith has.” Now listen – “Faith is the bucket let down into the fountain of God’s grace without which the man could never draw water of life from the wells of salvation. For the wells are deep and of himself man has nothing to draw with. Faith is the purse which cannot of itself make its owner rich, and yet effectually enriches by the wealth which it contains.” That’s a great statement about faith. Faith is the bucket that dips into the wells of salvation. Faith is the purse which in itself is not the riches, but contains the riches. It is that by which we receive what God graciously gives. And He says your purse is big enough to receive all that I have to give. Your bucket is big enough to gather the waters of the wells of salvation. “‘According to your faith, be it unto you.’ And their eyes were opened.” What an incredible thing.

D. (:30b-21) Wasted Warning

*“And Jesus sternly warned them, saying, ‘See here, let no one know about this!’
31 But they went out, and spread the news about Him in all that land.”*

Grant Osborne: The “messianic secret” is better known in Mark than in Matthew but appears here often as well (see on 8:4, cf. also 12:16; 16:20; 17:9). Jesus did not want his messianic nature bandied about because the Jewish people expected only a messianic king but not a suffering Servant (Jesus’ disciples made the same mistake). The language here is particularly strong, with ἐνεβριμήθη (meaning “filled with anger” in John 11:33, 38) a stern admonition here, almost a rebuke. Jesus could not be more direct; he wanted no one to know. . .

The emphasis is on Jesus’ desire to avoid publicity and the impossibility of remaining silent when touched by Jesus. So as in 9:26, the news spreads throughout Galilee.

III. (:32-34) EXORCIZING A DEMON FROM A DUMB MAN

Donald Hagner: Again Jesus performs a messianic sign that points to his identity and his power and authority. The crowd marvels, for nothing like this had been seen in Israel. This reaction points to the newness of what Jesus represents. The direct, unmediated healing of the man’s inability to speak symbolizes the fulfillment and joy of the kingdom announced by Jesus. The image of the mute being given the gift of speech is itself again suggestive of the gospel. The readers of Matthew know that they participate in the good experienced by the mute demoniac.

And those who have been healed in the most fundamental sense of the word—who have experienced salvation—are now themselves liberated to speak the good news of the kingdom. The response to that proclamation will be mixed, as it was to the ministry and message of Jesus. While some will respond positively, others like the Pharisees will be all too ready to find only evil in Jesus and his disciples (cf. 10:25).

A. (:32) Subjugation

“And as they were going out, behold, a dumb man, demon-possessed, was brought to Him.”

B. (:33a) Transformation

“And after the demon was cast out, the dumb man spoke;”

C. (:33b-34) Polarization

1. (:33b) Reaction of the Multitudes

“and the multitudes marveled, saying, ‘Nothing like this was ever seen in Israel.’”

2. (:34) Reaction of the Pharisees

“But the Pharisees were saying, ‘He casts out the demons by the ruler of the demons.’”

Stanley Saunders: The Pharisees also recognize Jesus’ power, but offer an alternative appraisal of the source of Jesus’ power: “He casts out demons by the prince of demons” (9:34; cf. 12:24). They are more willing to admit the reality of demonic power in the world than God’s power, even when the results are liberative. We are left wondering who is really deaf and dumb.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Do we treat inconvenient interruptions as divine appointments?
- 2) How were these specific miracles confirmation of the messianic claims of Jesus?
- 3) How does Jesus demonstrate His compassion today to those who are in desperate situations?
- 4) How can witnessing the same display of compassion and power evoke such opposite responses?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Donald Hagner: In a real way these miracle narratives point beyond themselves to realities at the heart of the Church’s confession and experience. The raising of the dead to life is a basic symbolism of the gospel (e.g., Rom 4:17; Eph 2:1, 5; Col 2:13). What Jesus did for the dead girl he has done for all in the Church who have experienced new life. There is too, beyond this life, the Church’s confidence that Jesus will literally raise the dead (cf. 1 Thess 4:16; 1 Cor 15:22–23). In a similar way in the healing of the hemorrhaging woman, the repeated use of σώζειν (lit. “save”) for her healing points beyond itself to the greatest healing experienced by the Church, the “healing” of salvation. For the Church is saved primarily not from the experience of limited ills here and now but from the deadliest enemy of all, the curse of sin. Thus while enjoying the stories of what Jesus did in his ministry and rejoicing in the power and authority of Jesus displayed in these miraculous deeds, the Church at the same time—Matthew’s readers together with Christians from every era—sees in these narratives something of its own personal history and hopes, something of the power of the risen Jesus in their lives here and now. Thus these narratives concern not simply past history but present experience. The present faith of the Church thus receives considerable encouragement in this passage.

Richard Gardner: What is unique in the Gospel accounts is not so much the deeds they report as the way these deeds are understood. For Matthew and the other evangelists, Jesus’ miracles find their meaning in the acts and promises of God in the story of Israel. There God is revealed as one who intervenes to deliver those in need. One strand of this story is Israel’s witness to the exodus, where God works signs and wonders through Moses and Aaron (cf. Deut. 26:8; 34:10-12; Ps. 105:26-27).

Another facet of the story, to which we have already referred, is the promise of salvation linked to Israel’s return from exile (cf. Isa. 35:5-6; 65:17-19). Both the earth and its people will one day be restored to the wholeness God intends. All of this is in the background as Jesus travels through Galilee and performs his mighty works. To those who behold these deeds with eyes of faith, he demonstrates the rule of God which frees creation from sin and suffering (cf. Matt. 12:28) and makes the healing of the age to come a reality here and now (cf. 11:2-6; 8:17).

A striking feature of miracle stories is the way they address the theme of boundaries (cf. Theissen, 1983:75-80; 129-152). In accounts of healing, the fundamental boundary is sickness or suffering. It is a barrier that stands between wholeness and the one who is ill. As a typical story unfolds, other obstacles emerge (boundary-stressing motifs) which further compound the problem. Thus in the stories of Matthew 8–9, we find obstacles such as ritual uncleanness, being a Gentile, sin, skepticism, unholy ground, religious objections, demon possession, and even death. To overcome such boundaries seems difficult if not impossible. But that is precisely what happens in the boundary-crossing actions described in the stories.

On the part of those in need, these actions include touch, worship, cries for help, and, above all, faith. On Jesus’ part, there are words of assurance, reasoned argument, a healing touch, and decisive commands. In each case these actions lead to healing, a crossing of the boundary of suffering in which the power of God prevails.

In the context of Matthew’s narrative, miracle stories play a double role. Their function within the story line of the Gospel is to highlight Jesus’ messianic authority. It is not that Jesus’ miracles correspond to a traditional view of what the Messiah would do. What they do, however (together with Jesus’ preaching), is fulfill the promise of God to transform life in the age to come. For this reason, Jesus’ deeds may be called the deeds of the Messiah (11:2; cf. 12:23), even though the power displayed is therapeutic rather than military.

The second function of the miracle stories relates to their hearing in Matthew’s community. In addition to reminding the church of what Jesus did in Israel, the stories serve as paradigms or parables of salvation (cf. Kingsbury, 1978:568-573). They invite members of the church to approach Jesus with petitions for help in the face of their own crises. And they assure those who do so that Jesus' power can deliver all who reach out in faith (cf. 14:28-33!). For a community facing boundary situations of its own, whether distress within the church or persecution from the outside, the miracle stories offer a resource for strengthening faith and hope.

Charles Swindoll: If you had been standing in the crowd of onlookers in Capernaum during that nonstop day of miracles, you would have been presented with an intellectual dilemma that would call for a decision of your will. Whatever choice you made that day would have a lasting impact on your life. The choice facing first-century eyewitnesses of the Lord's words and works has been classically summed up by C. S. Lewis's "trilemma." Eric Metaxas puts it this way:

C. S. Lewis rather famously said that when it came to deciding who Jesus Christ was, we really only had three choices.

- First, we could say he was a liar, that all of the things he said were simply lies.
- Second, we could say he was not a liar but a lunatic, so he couldn't be held responsible for saying the things he said.
- And third, we could say he was actually who he said he was, the Lord of Heaven and Earth.

If they had their heads on straight, every Jacob, Reuben, Miriam, or Sarah standing anywhere near Jesus that day could have come to the rational conclusion. Jesus couldn't have been insane or a deceiver—how could a madman or a mesmerizer perform those miracles? They weren't simple sleights of hand or entertaining parlor tricks. Jesus wasn't pulling coins out of children's ears or making handkerchiefs disappear. He was healing paralytics, restoring sight to the blind, conquering conditions that medical doctors had only made worse, casting out demons, and raising the dead! All the while, He was claiming to have authority to forgive sins, was demonstrating an ability to see into people's hearts and minds, and was answering to the messianic titles "Son of David" and "Son of God."

But these facts didn't stop the hardheaded and hard-hearted Pharisees from claiming that Jesus' ability to do miracles came directly from Satan himself. This was a spiritual problem, not an intellectual problem. And it's a problem people still have today. In spite of the evidence, people deny the existence of God. And in spite of the compelling claims of Christ, they willfully reject Him as their Savior and Lord. The solution to this spiritual blindness, then, is not another book that presents the evidence or another verbal bludgeoning that tries to argue people into the kingdom. The only One who can soften hearts and break down wills is the Holy Spirit.

William Barclay: There are few passages which show better than this the impossibility of an attitude of neutrality towards Jesus. Here we have the picture of two reactions to him. The attitude of the crowds was amazed wonder; the attitude of the Pharisees was virulent hatred. It must always remain true that what the eye sees depends upon what the heart feels.

The crowds looked on Jesus with wonder, because they were simple people with a crying sense of need; and they saw that in Jesus their need could be supplied in the most astonishing way. Jesus will always appear wonderful to those with a sense of need; and the deeper the sense of need, the more wonderful Jesus will appear to be.

The Pharisees saw Jesus as one who was in league with all the powers of evil. They did not deny his wondrous powers; but they attributed them to his complicity with the prince of the devils. This verdict of the Pharisees was due to certain attitudes of mind.

(1) They were too set in their ways to change. As we have seen, as far as they were concerned not one word could be added to or subtracted from the law. To them, all the great things belonged to the past. To them, to change a tradition or a convention was a deadly sin. Anything that was new was wrong. And when Jesus came with a new interpretation of what real religion was, they hated him, as they had hated the prophets long ago.

(2) They were too proud in their self-satisfaction to submit. If Jesus was right, they were wrong. The Pharisees were so well satisfied with themselves that they saw no need to change; and they hated anyone who wished to change them. Repentance is the gate whereby we all must enter the kingdom; and repentance means the recognition of the error of our ways, the realization that in Christ alone there is life, and the surrender to him and to his will and power, whereby alone we can be changed.

(3) They were too prejudiced to see. Their eyes were so blinded by their own ideas that they could not see in Jesus Christ the truth and the power of God.

Those who have a sense of need will always see wonders in Jesus Christ. People who are so set in their ways that they will not change, people who are so proud in their self-righteousness that they cannot submit, people who are so blinded by their prejudices that they cannot see, will always resent and hate and seek to eliminate him.

E. William Green: These three stories stress several points in common. Yes, the new has come, but it is accessible only to faith. That is the clear burden of all three of these miracles. In each one, faith is the hand that grasps the astonishing new thing presented in Jesus. Faith is what brings us into contact with Jesus. It was so with the woman in the crowd, and with the father of the little girl: both touched, and so experienced, his power. It was the same, too, with the demonized man who could not speak. It was when he was brought face to face with Jesus that he was set free. Faith is not an intellectual construct: it is a primary means of cognition, like touch.

Even if it is full of error and inadequacy, faith can avail, so long as it is located in Jesus. As a matter of fact, the evangelist draws attention to the imperfect faith of all three people in these stories. . .

However, the power of Jesus is not displayed in the climate of unbelief. The crowd round the woman did not believe, and they received nothing. The professional mourners round the girl did not believe, and they were ejected (24–25). The Pharisees did not believe (34) and, like the crowd they despised, they too received nothing. It is possible to jostle Jesus in the crowd and still remain utterly unchanged. It is possible to see miracle after miracle and ascribe them to the devil's activity. It is not the case, as people sometimes say, that 'If only I'd been there I would have believed.' No, there were plenty of people there who did not believe although unimpeachable evidence was spread repeatedly before their eyes. The human heart is capable of profound resistance and deep self-deception. It is only when we trust that we find salvation. The faith may be a last resort, it may be superstitious, it may be theologically deficient, but if it is placed in Jesus, it binds the sinner and the Saviour together. And that is what he came to bring about.

David Thompson: While Jesus Christ was here on earth presenting Himself as King of the Jews, He did spectacular things. There never had been anyone or anything like Him in Israel's history (9:33). The purpose of the miracles was to authenticate that He was Israel's Messiah. He was Immanuel— God with us. He was the Son of God and He was God. Christ's primary purpose, however, was not physical healing but spiritual healing. He came to give Israel the righteousness she needed to get into the kingdom. But the religious leaders did everything they could to keep Israel from understanding this. Faith in Jesus Christ could give a sinner the righteousness one needed to gain entrance into the kingdom, so the religious leaders tried to keep people from believing on Him.

JESUS CHRIST PERFORMED MANY SUPERNATURAL HEALING MIRACLES, WHICH HAD NEVER BEEN SEEN IN ISRAEL, TO ESTABLISH THAT HE WAS THE MESSIAH AND SAVIOR; BUT THE PHARISEES WERE DOING EVERYTHING THEY COULD TO DISCREDIT HIM AND KEEP ISRAEL FROM FOLLOWING HIM.

Grant Osborne: This miracle closes the important section of 8:1 – 9:34, and it is time to provide a general summary of the themes covered in it. This final triad of miracles functions as a conclusion to the section and contains all of the themes:

1. Jesus Has Authority as the Healing Royal Messiah --

The primary motif throughout is the authority of the Lord Messiah. Every type of miracle is found here—power over nature, healing, exorcism, raising the dead. Never before had anything like this been seen, both in the quantity and the quality of the miracles. Jesus cast out demons with just a word, and he healed with a touch. Gone are the lengthy incantations and the elaborate ritual. He is indeed the Son of David, the Messiah who heals the ills of the nation. As in John 5:36; 10:25; 14:11, Jesus' miracles are witnesses to the reality that he is indeed "God with us" (Matt 1:23).

2. Jesus Calls for Faith in Those He Heals --

Faith is not a necessary ingredient in Jesus' healing, but it turns "healing" (θεραπέω) into "salvation" (σώζω) and brings the person into the process. Faith that in the OT was in Yahweh is now in Jesus as the divine agent of God. God has now decisively intervened in salvation history and brought salvation and spiritual (as well as physical) healing to the world.

3. In Jesus the OT Promises Have Been Decisively Fulfilled --

In the last two miracles of this section Isa 35:5–6 has come to fruition (preparing for 11:5) and further demonstrates Matthew's theme of OT fulfillment (see 1:1–17; 22–23; 2:15, 17–18, 23; 4:14–16; 8:17). Christ is the Messiah who completes the OT promises and relieves the experiences of Israel. For Matthew the OT looked forward to Christ and prepared the way for him. As Davies and Allison write:

So while the OT gives meaning to Matthew's story of Jesus, it is not less true that Matthew's story of Jesus gives meaning to the OT. The Matthean perspective can be illustrated and put this way: when reading 9:27–34 one should think of Isa 35:5–6, and when reading Isa 35:5–6 one should think of Matt 9:27–34.

4. No Neutrality When Encountering Christ --

The crowds increasingly hold Jesus in awe, while the leaders increasingly reject and oppose him.

It is common to think that “seekers” are neutral, interested yet not ready to make a commitment. This is somewhat true, but we must remember that every service or Christian activity they attend, they leave having rejected Christ again. As such they grow increasingly hardened to the gospel, gradually shifting from a crowdlike attitude to a leaderlike attitude. Neutrality is not an option!

5. Miracles Are Deeds as Well as Transparent Parables of Jesus’ Relationship with Humanity –

Luz speaks of two ways this transparency works out.

- (1) These stories are indirectly transparent as the “church’s foundation story,” since the events relate to the way God has established the kingdom community as the new Israel.
- (2) They are directly transparent as “the basis of personal experience,” since the church is also given authority to perform miracles (10:1, 8).

So the work of Jesus in these chapters is constitutive of the church’s new walk with God and power to perform great works for God.

TEXT: Matthew 9:35 – 10:4

TITLE: MISSION OF JESUS DELEGATED TO THE APOSTLES

BIG IDEA:

THE MISSION OF JESUS REPRODUCES ITSELF BY THE VISION CASTING, AND THE CALLING AND COMMISSIONING OF GOSPEL WORKERS

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: Matthew's editorial brilliance continues in this section. The opening verse (9:35) parallels 4:23 and frames chs. 5–9 with a summary of Jesus' missionary activity and healing power. It also parallels 11:1 and establishes a two-step process that draws the section together around Jesus' authority and compassion in his mission.

E. Michael Green: (9:35 – 10:42) -- It is difficult to miss the skill in Matthew's writing and arrangement. Just as the first section of his Gospel had found its climax in the Sermon on the Mount, informing us what the kingdom of heaven is about, so now the second section finishes with the mission charge, informing us that disciples must spread the good news of the kingdom. This section needs to be read at two levels.

- It primarily describes the historical mission of the Twelve in the time of Jesus. He did not merely preach, teach and heal by himself, or even by taking his disciples out with him. He also sent them out to further his mission.
- But there can be little doubt that this material was also cherished by Matthew and other Christian leaders because of what it had to say about the continuing mission of the church in Matthew's own day.

Richard Gardner: Throughout the major section that begins at 4:17, Jesus is preparing for others to share in his mission. The direction is set in the call stories, in which Jesus invites persons to follow him as disciples (4:18-22; 8:18-22; 9:9). As followers, these persons receive instruction from Jesus (5:1-2), behold Jesus' power and authority (8:23-27), and learn the meaning of Jesus' mission as they sit at Jesus' table (9:10-17).

The vocation of the disciples to which all of this is leading is spelled out in 9:35 - 10:42. Here Jesus commissions his twelve disciples in a formal way and gives them a discourse on mission as he sends them out. What is impressive in this presentation is the extent to which Jesus' mission and that of the disciples are one and the same. As Jesus' emissaries, the twelve will go forth with his authority, adopt his itinerant style, preach the message he preaches, perform the deeds that he performs, and share the fate that awaits him too.

Daniel Doriani: In our study of the life of Christ, we have thus far met Jesus (Matt. 1–4), heard his teaching on discipleship (Matt. 5–7), and seen the mighty deeds that demonstrate his power as he heals the sick, expels demons, and raises the dead (Matt. 8–9). So far, all attention has fallen upon Jesus. But like a great player who then becomes a coach, Jesus trains others in his skill. Like an entrepreneur whose business is growing, it is time to add workers to his team. In Matthew 10, the work of Jesus expands. He begins to train and commission his team. He prepares them to take his message, his power, and his cause to the world. He tells them—and us—to fulfill the mission God gives in the way Jesus shows.

Charles Swindoll: It's also easy to forget that the Twelve were often nearby, partly because their presence isn't always obvious in Matthew's narrative. They were by Jesus' side throughout His earthly ministry, always watching, frequently learning, occasionally responding. Their training remained at the forefront of His agenda, even though He didn't frequently call attention to it. At times, however, He paused to address them and pass along specific information they were expected not only to remember but also to put into practice after He left them.

The time had come for the disciples to step up and move out into the real world, to face settings similar to those Jesus had been facing and to engage in a ministry similar to that of their Master. Like baby birds being coaxed out of their nest, it was time for the Twelve to spread their wings and face their own struggles in ministry. Next we'll see Jesus delegate authority and empower His handpicked ministry team (10:1-4). He'll prepare them with vital information before sending them out and set forth specific instructions regarding what they could expect and how to accomplish their mission (10:5-15). Though the authority and specific mission of the Twelve was unique and is distinct from ours in the twenty-first century, we can still gain some important principles and insights regarding our own calling and mission today.

I. (9:35-38) THE CALL FOR WORKERS – HELP WANTED FOR THE MISSION

Grant Osborne: Matthew 9:35–38 functions as a theological primer to the Mission Discourse. Jesus begins by telling his disciples that the mission is a part of his ministry (9:35) and a result of his compassion (v. 36). . .

The disciples' mission continues Jesus "teaching" and "preaching" the gospel (9:35); moreover, by repeating the themes of 4:23, it shows that this mission is the very one Jesus has been doing all along. Through his teaching (chs. 5–7) and miraculous deeds (chs. 8–9), the harvest has been readied, and it is time to get to work. So the disciples are called on to intercede with God for more workers and then commissioned to become those very workers.

R. T. France: This transitional paragraph serves both as a summary of the ministry in word and deed which has been depicted in chs. 5–9 and as an introduction to the theme of mission which follows. Its first verse closely echoes the language of 4:23 which introduced the Galilean ministry, thus forming a framework around the anthology of words and deeds which Matthew has put together. Its closing verses provide the basis for the sending out of the Twelve as "workers in the harvest." The paragraph as a whole could thus with equal appropriateness be bracketed either with what precedes it or with what follows, but I have chosen the latter because it provides the necessary justification for the sending out of the Twelve, and thus together with that pericope (10:1–4) provides the setting and the audience for the discourse that follows, in much the same way that 4:23 – 5:2 introduces the first discourse. Note too the repetition in the following discourse of the imagery of sheep (9:36; 10:6, 16) and of workers (9:37–38; 10:10).

John MacArthur: Now the text marks a transition point in Matthew's planning. Systematically, Matthew has moved through the writing of this gospel to present all of the salient elements of the Kingship of Jesus Christ. He began with the ancestry of the King, the genealogy in chapter 1; then the arrival of the King, the virgin birth; then the anticipation of the King, the fulfillment of all of those Old Testament prophecies; then came the announcer of the King, John the Baptist; and then the approval of the King in His baptism, as the Father said, “This is My beloved Son in Whom I am well pleased;” then the attack on the King as Satan met Him in temptation; then the affirmations of the King as He taught in chapter 5, 6, and 7 and affirmed the authority of the Word of God. And then most recently we’ve been looking at the attestations of the King. The miracles in chapters 8 and 9 that attest to His deity.

And now, as we look at chapter 10, we meet the associates of the King, as He calls into service the twelve and sends them out with the message of the kingdom. But between the attestation and the miracles and the section on the disciples is this very small transition taking us out of His miracle ministry and into His discipling ministry, away from the multitudes and toward the individual discipling of His apostles. And that transition is very important. Jesus sees the vastness of the task and realizes that He has to have some help. And so in chapter 10, we begin an entire section on the discipleship process; and we’ll be getting to that in our next study. But for now, we look at this most significant section in the transition.

We see three things as we look at the Lord here.

1. First of all, His ministry in verse 35.
2. Then His motives, verse 36 and the first part of verse 37.
3. And then His method, the last of verse 37 and through the first verse in chapter 10.

A. (:35) The Pattern for Mission Outreach – The Threefold Ministry of Jesus

“And Jesus was going about all the cities and the villages,”

1. Teaching Ministry

“teaching in their synagogues,”

2. Proclaiming the Gospel of the Kingdom

“and proclaiming the gospel of the kingdom,”

3. Healing Ministry

“and healing every kind of disease and every kind of sickness.”

B. (:36-38) The Prayer for Mission Workers – Vision Casting

1. (:36) The Need for Shepherding

“And seeing the multitudes, He felt compassion for them, because they were distressed and downcast like sheep without a shepherd.”

Grant Osborne: As Jesus ministered to the “crowds,” he “had compassion” (ἐσπλαγγίσθη), a strong verb that literally refers to “visceral emotions” and here connotes “filled with compassion” for a person’s plight. The reason for Jesus’ great pity is that the people were essentially rudderless because their “shepherds,” the leaders of Israel, had failed them. Two verbs describe their position: ἐσκυλμένοι, meaning to be “harassed, weary, beaten, troubled,” and ἐρριμμένοι, meaning to be “thrown down, helpless, confused.”

R. T. France: Jesus sees the ordinary people of Israel as similarly in need of direction and leadership. Chapter 23 will make explicit the criticism of their current leadership which this implies. Cf. the similar implication in Jesus’ offer of relief to those who are “toiling and heavily loaded” in 11:28–30.

His response is described by the strongly emotional Greek verb splanchnizomai, which speaks of a warm, compassionate response to need. No single English term does justice to it: compassion, pity, sympathy, fellow-feeling all convey part of it, but “his heart went out” perhaps represents more fully the emotional force of the underlying metaphor of a “gut response.” A further feature of this verb appears through a comparison with its other uses in Matthew (14:14; 15:32; 18:27; 20:34): in each case there is not only sympathy with a person’s need, but also a practical response which meets that need; emotion results in caring and effective action, in this case the action of sending out his disciples among the people. It is a verb which describes the Jesus of the gospel stories in a nutshell.

Craig Blomberg: Despite Jesus' extensive ministry, many in Israel, no doubt even in Galilee, remain unreached with his message. Jesus' human emotions reflect a deep, gut-level “compassion” (a reasonable, idiomatic English equivalent for a term [from Greek splanchnos] that could refer to bowels and kidneys) for this sea of humanity. His compassion increases because Israel lacks adequate leadership, despite the many who would claim to guide it. The Twelve begin to fill that vacuum, foreshadowing the institution of the church. The language of “sheep without a shepherd” echoes Num 27:17 and Ezek 34:5, in which the shepherd is most likely messianic (cf. Ezek 34:23). Similar sentiments will well up in Jesus again at the feeding of the five thousand (Mark 6:34). As in the days of the prophets, the rightful leadership of Israel had abdicated its responsibility, as demonstrated by its inability or unwillingness to recognize God's true spokesmen. “Harassed and helpless” literally means torn and thrown down (cf. Berkeley, “mangled and thrown to the ground”). Predators, and possibly even unscrupulous shepherds (Zech 10:2-3; 11:16) have ravaged the sheep. Verse 36 provides a stinging rebuke to the Pharisees, scribes, and Sadducees.

2. (:37-38) The Deployment of Workers

- a. (:37) Crop is Vast and Ready to be Harvested, but the Workers Are Few “*Then He said to His disciples,
‘The harvest is plentiful, but the workers are few.’*”

Craig Blomberg: Shifting the metaphor from flock to field, Jesus now envisions a vast crop of ripe grain in need of harvesters. The unreached people of his world need more preachers and ministers of the gospel. Jesus can personally encounter only a small number, so he will commission his followers to begin to reach the rest. Even then many more will be needed (cf. his sending of the seventy-two in Luke 10:1-12). Verses 37-38 have rightfully led Christians in all ages to pray for, call, and send men and women into all kinds of ministries. The need remains as urgent as ever, with billions who have not heard the gospel or seen it implemented holistically. “Send out” (from ekball —recall under 9:25) could also be translated thrust out, and it could even refer to workers already in the field who “need to have a fire lit under them to thrust them out of their comforts into the world of need.”

- b. (:38) Calling Must Come from the Lord “Therefore beseech the Lord of the harvest to send out workers into His harvest.”

John Nolland: In the present imagery God has become the owner-manager of the farmland who employs farm workers to harvest the crop. There is an urgent need for sufficient workers to be able to harvest the crop before it spoils. No specific identity should be given to the ‘few’ existing workers: the focus is on the need for additional resources. The coming commissioning and direction of the Twelve will indicate something of what is involved in ‘harvesting’ (but we have also been seeing Jesus do it). The challenge to prayer, however, implies the need to call others beyond the Twelve into this task as well.

Richard Gardner: At least two things are noteworthy in this picture.

1. First, an event usually linked with the final judgment is beginning to happen in the present hour.
2. Second, God is entrusting to human laborers the task of harvesting traditionally reserved for himself or assigned to angels (cf. 3:12; 13:30, 41-43)!

The mission for which Jesus invites the disciples to prayer, therefore, is indeed an awesome one.

II. (10:1-4) THE COMMISSIONING OF THE TWELVE – KEY LEADERSHIP POSITIONS FILLED

Grant Osborne: The mission movement anticipated in 4:19 and 9:38 now comes to fruition as Jesus commissions his followers as “apostles” (agents “sent” from God) and gives them authority over demons and illness. They now become “the Twelve” (the first time this term is used in Matthew), the righteous remnant who represent the twelve tribes in the new Israel, the church.

John MacArthur: Three elements of the commissioning of the twelve,

1. first their initiation, and we'll talk a lot about that,
2. then their impact, and we'll talk briefly about that,
3. and then their identity, and we'll talk about that next time.

But we see their initiation in verse 1, their impact in verse 1, and then their identity is given in verses 2 through 4 as He names all twelve of them.

A. (:1) Delegation of Authority to the Twelve Apostles for the Mission

“And having summoned His twelve disciples, He gave them authority over unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal every kind of disease and every kind of sickness.”

John Nolland: Up to this point all that has come of Jesus’ declared intention ‘I will make of you those who fish for people’ (4:19) has been the disciples’ witnessing of Jesus’ own practice of ‘fishing’. Jesus’ own authority is introduced as a motif in 7:29; now Jesus gives the Twelve the possibility of a share in his own authority.

Warren Wiersbe: A “disciple” is a learner, one who follows a teacher and learns his wisdom. Jesus had many disciples, some of whom were merely “hangers-on,” and some who were truly converted (John 6:66). From this large group of followers, Jesus selected a smaller group of twelve men, and these He called “apostles.” This word comes from the Greek word apostello, which means “to send forth with a commission.” It was used by the Greeks for the personal representatives of the king, ambassadors who functioned with the king’s authority. To make light of the king’s envoys was to be in danger of insubordination.

A man had to meet certain qualifications to be an apostle of Jesus Christ. He must have seen the risen Christ (1 Cor. 9:1) and fellowshiped with Him (Acts 1:21–22). He had to be chosen by the Lord (Eph. 4:11). The apostles laid the foundation of the church (Eph. 2:20) and then passed from the scene. While all believers are sent forth to represent the King (John 17:18; 20:21), no believer today can honestly claim to be an apostle, for none of us has seen the risen Christ (1 Peter 1:8).

These apostles were given special power and authority from Christ to perform miracles. These miracles were a part of their “official credentials” (Acts 2:43; 5:12; 2 Cor. 12:12; Heb. 2:1–4). They healed the sick (and note that this included all kinds of diseases), cleansed the lepers, cast out demons, and even raised the dead. These four ministries paralleled the miracles that Jesus performed in Matthew 8 and 9. In a definite way, the apostles represented the King and extended His work.

Christ’s commission to these twelve men is not our commission today. He sent them only to the people of Israel. “To the Jew first” is the historic pattern, for “salvation is of the Jews” (John 4:22). These twelve ambassadors announced the coming of the kingdom just as John the Baptist had done (Matt. 3:2) and Jesus Himself (Matt. 4:17). Sad to say, the nation rejected both Christ and His ambassadors, and the kingdom was taken from them (Matt. 21:43).

E. Michael Green: It is noteworthy that Jesus passes on to them the authority he has wielded so powerfully in word and deed since chapter 5. Their ministry is carefully presented as parallel to his own. The words of 4:23, describing Jesus’ mission as one of teaching, preaching and healing, are almost repeated of his disciples in 10:7–8. They are to go and preach, to heal every disease. The evangelist is making it plain that the disciples of Jesus share his calling, his authority and his mission. They are to do and to preach what Jesus did and preached.

B. (:2-4) Designation of the Twelve Apostles

“Now the names of the twelve apostles are these:”

D. A. Carson: In the NT, the term can mean merely “messenger” (Jn 13:16) or refer to Jesus (“the apostle and high priest whom we confess,” Heb 3:1) or elsewhere (esp. in Paul) denote “missionaries” or “representatives”—i.e., a group larger than the Twelve and Paul (Ro 16:7; 2Co 8:23). Nevertheless, the most natural reading of 1 Corinthians 9:1–5; 15:7; Galatians 1:17, 19 et al. is that even Paul could use the term in a narrow sense to refer to the Twelve plus himself (by special dispensation, 1Co 15:8–10).

R. T. France: The listing of their names is clearly a matter of some importance since both Mark and Luke also do so in their gospels (Mark 3:16–16; Luke 6:14–16), and Luke again in Acts 1:13. With the exception of Thaddeus the names are the same in all these lists, though the order of the names and the descriptions of the individuals vary a little. Matthew’s list has two distinctive features: it is arranged in pairs (perhaps reflecting the tradition that they were sent out in pairs, Mark 6:7 cf. Luke 10:1), the first two being pairs of brothers, the others apparently arbitrarily grouped for literary effect; and Simon (Peter), who comes first in all the lists and whose leading role among the twelve is clear in all the gospels, is explicitly designated in Matthew as “first,” even though no further numbering follows. This is consistent with Matthew’s emphasis on the special importance of Peter, 16:16–19.

William Barclay: There are two facts about the Twelve which are bound to strike us at once.

- (1) They were very ordinary men. They had no wealth; they had no academic background; they
- (2) They were the most extraordinary mixture.

1. (:2a) Peter and Andrew

“The first, Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother;”

D. A. Carson: Impulsive and ardent, Peter’s great strengths were his great weaknesses. . . . James was probably the older (he almost always appears first). But as he became the first apostolic martyr (Ac 12:2), he never achieved his brother’s prominence. The brothers were sons of Zebedee the fisherman, whose business was successful enough to employ others (Mk 1:20) while his wife was able to support Jesus’ ministry (Mt 27:55–56). His wealth may help account for the family’s link with the house of the high priest (Jn 18:15–16), as well as for the fact that he alone of the Twelve stood by the cross. The brothers’ mother was probably Salome (cf. Mt 27:56; Mk 15:40; 16:1), and her motives were not unmixed. Perhaps the sons inherited something of her aggressive nature; whatever its source, the nickname “sons of thunder” (Mk 3:17; cf. also Mk 9:38–41, Lk 9:54–56) reveals something of their temperament. John may have been a disciple of John the Baptist (Jn 1:35–41). Of James we know nothing until Matthew 4:21–22. John was undoubtedly a special friend of Peter (Lk 22:8; Jn 18:15; 20:2–8; Ac 3:1–4:21; 8:14; Gal 2:9). Reasonably reliable tradition places him after the fall of Jerusalem in Ephesus, where he ministered long and usefully into old age, taking a hand in the nurture of leaders like Polycarp, Papias, and Ignatius.

Craig Blomberg: “Andrew” comes from the Greek for manliness. Like Peter, his brother, Andrew was originally a fisherman from Bethsaida (John 1:44). He was the first-known disciple of John the Baptist to begin to follow Christ (John 1:40).

2. (:2b) James and John

“and James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother;”

Craig Blomberg: “James” comes from the Hebrew Jacob, meaning he who grasps the heel (see Gen 25:26). Another Galilean fisherman and son of Zebedee (4:21–22), he was executed by Herod Agrippa I not later than A.D. 44 (Acts 12:2). He is therefore to be distinguished from the James who wrote the epistle of that name and who was the leader of the church in Jerusalem after Peter’s departure.

“John” in Hebrew means the Lord is gracious. He was James’s brother. Like Peter and James, he formed part of the inner circle of the three disciples closest to Jesus (see comments under 4:21–22). The Fourth Gospel, three Epistles, and the Book of Revelation are all attributed to him, the last of these while he was exiled for his faith on the island of Patmos, probably under the emperor Domitian in the mid-90s. Strong, early church tradition associates his ministry with Ephesus, combating the Gnostic teacher Cerinthus. Reasonably strong, though sometimes conflicting tradition maintains that he was the only one of the Twelve not to die a martyr’s death for his faith. He would thus have lived to quite an old age—at least into his eighties or nineties.

3. (:3a) Philip and Bartholomew

“Philip and Bartholomew;”

D. A. Carson: Philip. Like Peter and Andrew, Philip’s home was Bethsaida (Jn 1:44). He too left the Baptist to follow Jesus. For incidents about him, see John 6:5–7; 12:21–22; 14:8–14. In the lists he invariably appears first in the second group of four. Polycrates, a second-century bishop, says Philip ministered in the Roman province of Asia and was buried at Hierapolis.

Bartholomew. The name means “son of Tolmai” or “son of Tholami” (cf. Jos 15:14 LXX) or “son of Tholomaeus” (cf. Josephus, Ant. 20.5 [1.1]). Many have identified him with Nathanael on the grounds that

- (1) the latter is apparently associated with the Twelve (Jn 21:2; cf. 1:43–51),
- (2) Philip brought Nathanael to Jesus (Jn 1:43–46), and
- (3) Philip and Bartholomew are always associated in the lists of apostles.

The evidence is not strong, but if it is solid, we also know he came from Cana (Jn 21:2). He is remembered for Jesus’ tribute to him (Jn 1:47).

Craig Blomberg: “Philip” comes from the Greek for horse lover. With Simon and Andrew, he was one of Jesus’ earliest disciples. He too was from Bethsaida (John 1:43–48) and is to be distinguished from Philip the “deacon” of Acts 6:5 and 8:26–40.

“Bartholomew” comes from the Hebrew for son of Talmi. Probably he is the same person as Nathanael, Philip’s companion in John 1:45–49. His home would then have been Cana (John 21:2). Matthew likewise groups Philip and Bartholomew together.

4. (:3b) Thomas and Matthew

“Thomas and Matthew the tax-gatherer;”

D. A. Carson: Thomas. Also named “Didymus” (Jn 11:16; 21:2), which in Aramaic means “Twin,” Thomas appears in gospel narratives only in John 11:16; 14:5; 20:24–29. Known for his doubt, he should also be known for his courage (Jn 11:16) and his profound confession (Jn 20:28). Some traditions claim he went to India as a missionary and was martyred there; others place his later ministry in Persia.

5. (:3c) James and Thaddaeus

“James the son of Alphaeus, and Thaddaeus;”

Craig Blomberg: James, son of Alphaeus, is also called ho mikros in Mark 15:40 (the small one or “the younger”), presumably to distinguish him in age or size from James, son of Zebedee. Little else is known for sure about him.

Thaddaeus is also called Lebbaeus in some textual variants and Judas son of James in Luke 6:16. The first two are probably nicknames of devotion or endearment, coming from the Hebrew taday (breast) and leb (heart).

6. (:4) Simon the Zealot and Judas Iscariot

“Simon the Zealot, and Judas Iscariot, the one who betrayed Him.”

R. T. France: Judas’ betrayal of Jesus will be fully narrated later (26:14–16, 21–25, 47–50; 27:3–10); here it is mentioned only because it is the one thing about him every Christian would remember. He comes, appropriately, at the end of all the gospel lists (just as Peter comes first in all of them)—and is of course absent from the list in Acts 1:13. His second name, “Iscariot,” is usually included, partly to distinguish him from the other Judas of John 14:22, but also because his notoriety made his full name familiar. Many derivations of “Iscariot” have been proposed, including the suggestion that it is a corruption of sicarios, a member of the most notorious of the revolutionary groups (which would make for an interesting collocation with Simon the “zealot”), but perhaps more likely is the traditional notion that it derives from ’iš-qerîyôt, “man of Kerioth;” if so, this raises the interesting possibility that Judas was the one non-Galilean among the Twelve, since the only two towns called Kerioth that we know of are in Moab and in southern Judea. But that too is speculation, and since Hebrew qiryâ (“town”) occurs in several other place names it cannot be relied on.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Are you moved to compassion as you contemplate the plight of the unreached and the magnitude of the task of reaching the harvest?
- 2) Do you find that the church emphasizes prayer that the Lord initiate the calling and sending of gospel workers or does the church rely more on emotional pleas for people to volunteer for service?
- 3) What do you find ordinary and what do you find extraordinary about this collection of twelve apostles?
- 4) Why did Jesus send out the apostles in teams of two?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Richard Gardner: Matthew’s purpose in this composition is basically twofold. At one level he is writing as the narrator of a story of God’s faithfulness to Israel. Jesus’ mission is first and foremost a mission to Israel (cf. Rom. 1:16), and that task must be completed before the mission can be broadened. So it is that twelve disciples are chosen and sent out, symbolizing the twelve tribes of Israel in earlier days. Thus also, until a greater commission is given later (cf. 28:19), these twelve will restrict their work to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

At another level Matthew is writing as the member of a community that is itself called to mission. Although the words limiting mission to Israel no longer apply, the church inherits the commission Jesus gives to the twelve. It represents Jesus in the world, faces rejection and persecution, and needs encouragement for its task. Accordingly, Matthew 10 includes sayings on Christian witness before Gentile rulers. And everything that Jesus says to warn and strengthen the twelve warns and strengthens their successors. . .

The emphasis in the text before us is not on apostolic stability but apostolic mobility! To be a follower of Jesus is to be sent out as a representative of Jesus. . . In keeping with this emphasis, Christian movements stressing faithful discipleship have frequently assigned high priority to mission and evangelism. Such was the case with a number of groups in the left wing of the Reformation, including the early Anabaptists, Quakers, and Pietists (cf. Durnbaugh, 1968:226-241). For us, the commissioning of the twelve is a reminder that our own calling as disciples cannot be a closet affair. Whatever form our sending may take, we are called to be part of a centrifugal community, moving outward as Christ’s witnesses and demonstrating his power in the world.

Daniel Doriani: Christian leaders must perennially consider how to motivate people to kingdom service. One day I was speaking to some church leaders on this very topic. I said we should never seek to motivate people to serve Jesus through guilt. We should not say, “If you don’t go, if you won’t serve, no one will. If you don’t volunteer as an usher, as a bus driver, a nursery worker, we may have to close the ministry down.” We should not say, “If you don’t share the gospel with family, friends, and neighbors, no one will. If you don’t, they will call your name on the last day, as they plunge to eternal doom, crying, ‘Why didn’t you tell me?’” As I finished my point, someone from the front row blurted out a question: “Don’t motivate by guilt? What else is there?” Immediately, a voice came from the back of the room, “Fear!”

Jesus uses neither guilt nor fear. He motivates three ways:

1. He describes the situation: the flock of God is torn and thrown down (9:36).
2. He asks God to send laborers out into his harvest (9:37–38).
3. He calls disciples and grants them authority to act on his behalf.

Jesus described, then prayed, then acted. Luke says Jesus prayed all night the day before he called the twelve disciples (Luke 6:12). There were more than twelve candidates. Others had known Jesus and witnessed his work from the beginning (Acts 1:21–23). The process of prayer led some to seek the Lord even as he sought them. After he prayed, “He called his twelve disciples to him and gave them authority to drive out evil spirits and to heal every disease and sickness” (Matt. 10:1).

He gave them authority. Authority is rightful power, the power that is justified by a public position bestowed on those who have the right experience and character for it. Jesus granted the disciples experience, godliness, and an official position so they had the right to act, to lead, on his behalf.

Stanley Saunders: Mission emerges from Jesus’ authoritative call, from the perception of need, and from prayer for God to send forth workers for the mission. The mission is also rooted in the perception that the time for harvest has arrived, the eschatological time and space embodied already in Jesus’ own ministry. The disciples’ mission clearly continues Jesus’ own, manifesting the same powers to heal and to cast out demonic powers, as well as to teach and proclaim the good news. For congregations at the beginning of the twenty-first century, the sense of God’s eschatological presence and power may have grown dim or dull. Are we “seeing” the crowds, as Jesus did? Are we praying for discernment of God’s call and power? Have we lost touch with the reality of God’s presence and power in our midst? Do we embody the kind of diversity present among Jesus’ own disciples?

Here, as throughout the Gospel, Matthew carefully juxtaposes and interweaves images of God’s mercy and God’s judgment. How do we make sense of the singular image of Jesus as both merciful shepherd and eschatological judge? How does the church itself continue faithfully to embody this dual identity and calling? What kind of leadership—what kind of church—is required in order to realize at once both mercy and judgment? Another way to ask this question is to focus on the nature of Jesus’ own leadership, especially his embodiment of what it means to be “king,” which stands in marked contrast to the kind of leadership provided by the Roman and Jewish authorities of his day. The leadership patterns we take for granted in our day, even in the church, also stand in contrast to the kind of power—and its effects—that Jesus demonstrates and here shares with his disciples. How do we best nurture “disciple” leaders for God’s empire and mission? How do such leaders faithfully demonstrate God's mercy for the "harassed" and "tormented" while also announcing God's judgment against those who wield self-serving power, in their own interests?

J. Ligon Duncan: The Lord Jesus never sends anyone into the field of ministry that He does not first, in some measure, equip and prepare for that ministry, and it is one of the tragedies of the church today, that so many are sent into the fields of labor with no preparation, tangible or experiential. The Lord prepares these men in two ways.

1. First, by taking them to be with Him,
2. and secondly, by teaching them.

There were many who heard the Lord Jesus' teaching, and these men heard that public teaching as well, but the Lord Jesus also offered them private opportunities for teaching. He taught them, they learned from Him. Before you can be a teacher, you first have to sit at the feet of a master. Before you can be a teacher, you first must be a learner. And so these men had learned at the feet of the Master. But more important than the teaching, even, was the very presence that they had with Christ, the fellowship they had with Christ. Matthew Henry once said, "The best preparation for the work of the ministry, is acquaintance and communion with the Lord Jesus Christ." Later, in the Gospel of John, people would say of these men, "They perceived that these men had been with Jesus." What greater compliment could be given to ministers of the word, that people perceive that they had been with Jesus. . .

Jesus vested His apostles with His own authority

He transfers that power to His representatives and tells them to minister in that power, and it was so vital that He give them that kind of authority and power. There are many reasons, but three of them immediately come to mind why it was so vital that the Lord Jesus give these disciples this power.

First of all, these disciples were called to bear witness to a message that was going to be very hard for Israel to swallow.

There's another reason why it was so vital for the Lord to give them this authority. These men lacked earthly credentials.

There's a third reason why they needed this power from the Lord Jesus Christ, this authority, because the establishment of God's kingdom always entails the destruction of Satan's kingdom. When the kingdom of God is built up, correspondingly the kingdom of Satan must be torn down. In their manifestation of miracles, and in the casting out of demons and in the healing of sicknesses, these men manifested the kingdom of God has come with power, and that the kingdom of Satan and the results of the Fall are going to be defeated and reversed. The establishment of Christ's kingdom means the tearing down of Satan's kingdom, and so their power, given to them by Christ, is leveled against Satan himself. In all these ways, we see the reasons why Christ gave them power and authority.

TEXT: Matthew 10:5-15

TITLE: INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE JEWISH PRIORITIZED MISSION

BIG IDEA:

FAITHFULNESS TO THE PATTERN OF CHRIST, DEPENDENCE ON GOD AND PROPER RESPONSE TO REJECTION OR RECEPTION MUST CHARACTERIZE EVANGELICAL MISSIONS

INTRODUCTION:

Richard Gardner: The instruction of the disciples that begins in 10:5 and continues through 10:42 makes up the second of the five discourses of Jesus in Matthew. Linked as it is to the sending out of the twelve, it is frequently called the mission discourse. The first part of this discourse contains Jesus' charge to the twelve and describes their mission (10:5-15). In the sayings that follow (10:16-42), Jesus offers counsel on the opposition his messengers will encounter, underscoring the cost (and reward) of discipleship.

Outline:

1. Restricted to Israel, 10:5-6
2. Rules for the Road, 10:7-10
3. Reception and Rejection, 10:11-15

R. T. France: The pericope covers three aspects of their mission:

1. to whom they are to go (vv. 5-6);
2. the nature of their mission in both word and deed (vv. 7-8);
3. and how they are to be fed and housed (vv. 9-15, developing the principle of v. 8b, "Give without cost").

The last section, which raises the possibility of rejection as well as a hospitable welcome, leads naturally into the consideration of hostility to Jesus' messengers which will follow in vv. 16-39.

Stanley Saunders: Jesus' preparation of his disciples for mission now focuses on the recipients, the content, and the manner of engagement. The mission is not to "go out into the way of the nations" (or "Gentiles"), nor to any city of the Samaritans (10:5). At the end of the Gospel the call to go to the nations (28:18-20) will supercede the mission that is here so carefully limited. The focus on "the lost sheep of the house of Israel" corresponds with Jesus' identity as the one who "will save his people from their sins" (1:21). Popular Jewish expectation for the last days anticipated the restoration of Israel prior to the gathering of the nations. Matthew's presentation of Jesus' mission here follows that scenario: first Israel will be restored, then the nations (Gentiles) will gather. At this stage in the Gospel, the mission of Jesus and his disciples is clearly focused on the realization of God's faithfulness to the "house of Israel," the "lost sheep."

The disciples' primary task is to proclaim and demonstrate that God's empire has drawn near (10:7-8; cf. 3:2; 4:17). The kingdom's proximity is sometimes given a primarily temporal cast, as if the hour of its coming is near, but it is not yet present. Jesus may, rather, be saying that the empire of the heavens is spatially within grasp of the audience, having already drawn near (past tense, suggesting something already accomplished), alongside the disciples and those to whom they will preach, jostling with and displacing the reality they have known. The four imperatives that follow in quick succession—heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse lepers, and cast out demons—link the disciples’ mission with that of Jesus (4:23–24; 8:1–4; 8:16; 8:28–34; 9:32–34). The power he has demonstrated so far, even power to raise the dead, is also available to the disciples.

The disciples should pursue their mission expecting nothing in return except hospitality (10:8b, 11). Like laborers, the disciples deserve to be fed (10:10), but they will be dependent on others for sustenance. . . . Their mission is to be conducted in complete dependence on God to provide them with security, food, and other needs for each day. This lifestyle is an integral element of their proclamation of God’s faithfulness (cf. Matt. 6:25–34). The means and message of the kingdom are one. The disciples’ poverty, defenselessness, and utter dependence on God are “prophetic-symbolic actions,” enactments of the empire of heaven that challenge the existing order, point toward God’s power and presence, and subvert the presuppositions and values associated with imperial systems of power.

I. (:5-10) INSTRUCTIONS ON PERFORMING THE MISSION AFTER THE PATTERN OF CHRIST

“These twelve Jesus sent out after instructing them, saying,”

A. (:5-6) Target Jews

1. (:5) Not Gentiles or Samaritans

a. Not Gentiles

“Do not go in the way of the Gentiles,”

b. Not Samaritans

“and do not enter any city of the Samaritans;”

John Nolland: The separate mention of the Samaritans has no independent significance: these people considered to be of doubtful Israelite extraction are introduced only as a way of insisting with considerable tightness of definition on a restriction of mission to ethnic Israel.

John Broadus: SAMARIA was the district lying between Judea and Galilee. The dislike between the Jews and the Samaritans had its beginnings as far back as the earliest times of Israel in the jealousy existing between the tribes of Judah and Ephraim, which finally led to the division into two kingdoms. When the people of the Northern Kingdom (who came to be called Samaritans from the capital city, Samaria, 1 Kings 16:24), were carried into captivity by the Assyrians, the country was partly occupied by Mesopotamian colonists, who were idolaters. These gradually coalesced with the dregs of the Israelites who had been left in the land, and with the fugitives who returned from surrounding countries, into a half-heathen nation, attempting to unite idolatry with the worship of Jehovah. When the people of the Southern Kingdom, the Jews, returned from their captivity in Babylon, and undertook to rebuild the temple at Jerusalem, the Samaritans proffered to help them; and being repulsed, as not of pure Israelitish descent, they then did all in their power to hinder the building of the temple, and the fortification of the city. A brother of the Jewish high-priest, having married a Samaritan woman, and being unwilling to put her away as required, went over to the Samaritans, and was made priest in a temple built for him on Mount Gerizim (Jos. “Ant.,” 11, 8, 2), which the Samaritans from that time began to contend was the proper place for the worship of Jehovah, rather than Jerusalem. (John 4:20.) These causes naturally led to bitter hatred between Jews and Samaritans, and they were constantly attempting to injure and insult each other, while under the dominion of the Greek kings of Syria. John Hyrcanus conquered the Samaritans, destroying their temple and capital (about B. C. 125). Pompey established their independence (B. C. 63). At the time of our Lord's public ministry, Judea and Samaria were governed by the same Roman procurator, but as distinct administrative districts; and the hatred between the two nations, cherished through centuries, and combining all the elements of race jealousy, religious rivalry, political hostility, and numerous old grudges, had become so intense that the world has probably never seen its parallel. The theory of some writers that the Samaritans were of purely heathen origin, would suppose that the entire population of the Northern people was deported by the Assyrians—a thing extremely improbable; would render the frequent claim of the Samaritans to be Jews an absurdity; and would make it difficult to account for the Samaritan Pentateuch, and the Samaritan expectation of Messiah. For the Samaritans, like the Jews, expected the Messiah (John 4:25, 29), and something like a year before this mission of the Twelve our Lord's preaching among them at Sychar was warmly received, and many believed on him. (John 4:39–42.) Some time after this mission he also went twice through Samaria, and spoke and acted kindly towards them. (Luke 9:51 ff.; 17:11 ff.) Why, then, might not the Twelve go into their cities? It is enough to reply that the Twelve had not then such feelings towards that people as would qualify them to do good there. The proposal of James and John to call down fire from heaven upon a Samaritan village (Luke 9:52 ff.) shows that there would have been bitter controversies, with the old national hate ever ready to burst out (Comp. Bruce, "Training of the Twelve.") In Acts 1:8, Samaria is expressly included in the field of their appointed labors after the ascension. (Comp. Acts 8:5.)

2. (:6) Lost Jews

"but rather go to the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

Grant Osborne: The sent disciples are not to follow the road north or east to the Gentile areas, nor are they to go south to the land of the Samaritans. So on this mission they are restricted to Galilee and to the Jewish people there.

D. A. Carson: The most important consideration, however, was not pragmatic but theological. Jesus stood at the nexus in salvation history where as a Jew and the Son of David he came in fulfillment of his people's history as their King and Redeemer. Yet his personal claims would offend so many of his own people that he would be rejected by all but a faithful remnant. Why increase their opposition by devoting time to Gentile ministry? His mission, as predicted, was worldwide in its ultimate aims (see comments at 1:1; 2:1; 3:9–10; 4:15–16; 5:13–16; 8:1–13; 10:18; 21:43; 24:14; 28:16–20), and all along he had warned that being a Jew was not enough. But his own people must not be excluded because premature offense could be taken at such broad perspectives. Therefore, Jesus restricted his own ministry primarily (15:24), though not exclusively (8:1–13; 15:21–39), to Jews. He himself was sent as their Messiah. The messianic people of God developed out of the Jewish remnant and expanded to include Gentiles. The restriction of vv.5–6, therefore, depends on a particular understanding of salvation history (cf. Meier, Law and History, 27–30) that ultimately goes back to Jesus. Paul well understood that both salvation and judgment were for the Jew first, then for the Gentile (Ro 1:16), and this conviction governed his own early missionary efforts (e.g., Ac 13:5, 44–48; 14:1).

B. (:7-8) Testify to the Coming Kingdom

1. (:7) Ministry of Authoritative Preaching

"And as you go, preach, saying, 'The kingdom of heaven is at hand.'"

Richard Gardner: They go as representatives of the Messiah. Verses 7–8 carefully repeat both the message and the activity of Jesus as we have been told of them in chapters 5–9; the disciples are to say and do what he has already said and done. At the end of the discourse (vv. 40–42) it will be made clear that how people respond to them reveals also their response to Jesus the Messiah. That is why the welcome or lack of it which they will encounter in the villages of Galilee is so strongly emphasized in vv. 11–15; the villagers will be welcoming or rejecting their Messiah. The “peace” which will rest on the “worthy” is not just a social formality, but a real mark of God’s blessing or judgment. This is a moment of spiritual decision, however little some of the people of Galilee may yet recognize it as such.

Charles Swindoll: We shouldn’t be surprised that the essence of their message was the same as Jesus’ —“The kingdom of heaven is at hand.” This was probably shorthand for a fuller message similar to what Jesus had been teaching in greater detail, perhaps including the call to repent in anticipation of the coming messianic age and to respond with water baptism (see John 3:22; 4:1). The disciples were to present a true extension of Jesus’ own preaching ministry, repeating His message and not coming up with their own.

John Nolland: The nearness of the kingdom of heaven will become visible in the accompanying acts which manifest the powers of the kingdom of heaven.

Grant Osborne: As stated in those passages, this meant that the longed-for final kingdom of God (for “kingdom of heaven,” see on 3:2) is both imminent and has indeed arrived in Jesus. In Jesus, God’s future kingdom is already active and present in this world. Gnilyka says it well: their preaching concerned “the universal, worldwide liberating and saving reign that comes from God to us, a rule that is in its essence and in its completion a reality of the future, indeed the future itself, but a reign that can already be experienced in the present as it is proclaimed and pronounced.”

2. (:8a) Ministry of Confirmatory Healing

“Heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse the lepers, cast out demons;”

Charles Swindoll: By virtue of His own divine authority, Jesus gave them power to do the kinds of miracles that He had been doing up until that point. They were to heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse lepers, and cast out demons —freely, without the thought of charging for their miraculous acts of mercy. These signs and wonders would be proof that their message was true —the kingdom of the Messiah was imminent!

3. (:8b) Ministry Performed without Financial Compensation

“freely you received, freely give.”

Richard Gardner: Paul makes a point of not having charged for his missionary labors (dōrean, 2 Cor 11:7), in contrast with the common practice of itinerant philosophers and teachers who expected not just board and lodging but fees as well; Paul himself refused even free board (dōrean, 2 Thess 3:8; cf 1 Cor 9:3–18). So Jesus’ disciples, having received the message of the kingdom of God “free of charge” through Jesus himself, are to offer their services in both teaching and healing without expecting any material reward. The following verses show, however, that unlike Paul they are to accept board and lodging, since they are to take no money with them to pay for it, and “the worker earns his keep.”

D. A. Carson: Jesus expected the Twelve to be supported by those to whom they were to minister (cf. vv.9–13; 1Co 9:14), but they needed to understand that what they had received—the good news of the kingdom, Jesus’ authority, and this commission—they had received “freely” (not “in large bounty”—though that was true—but gratis). Therefore it would have been mercenary to charge others (NEB: “You have received without cost; give without charge”; cf. Did. 11–13; Pirke Avot 1:13). The danger of profiteering is still among us (cf. Mic 3:11).

Grant Osborne: The disciples were not to profit from their ministry but use it the same way Jesus did—to help others. Salvation is a free gift of grace; ministry should reflect the same selfless concerns. This is a principle that deserves more discussion among Christian leaders today. Perhaps it is so convicting that the only alternative is to act as if Jesus never said it.

C. (:9-10) Travel Lightly

1. (:9-10a) Reject Security – Total Reliance on God

“Do not acquire gold, or silver, or copper for your money belts, 10 or a bag for your journey, or even two tunics, or sandals, or a staff;”

Bruce Hurt: Did Jesus command that the disciples take a staff or not?

PROBLEM: In Matthew, Jesus seems to say that the disciples should not take a staff, but in Mark it appears that He allows them to have one.

SOLUTION: A closer examination reveals that the account in Mark (6:8) declares that the disciples are to take nothing except a staff, which a traveler would normally have. Whereas the account in Matthew states that they are not to acquire another staff. There is no discrepancy between these texts. Mark’s account is saying that they may take the staff that they have, while Matthew is saying that they should not take an extra staff or tunic. The text reads “Provide neither ... two tunics, nor sandals, nor staffs” (plural: vv. 9–10). It does not say that they should not take a staff (singular). So there is no contradiction.

2. (:10b) Expect Provision from the Lord

“for the worker is worthy of his support.”

Van Parunak: for the workman is worthy of his meat.—Paul quotes Luke’s version (10:7) of this saying as “scripture” in 1 Tim 5:18, giving evidence for the early existence of the gospels.

The word “for” is important. The Lord tells them not to make extensive provision for their trip, because the one for whom they work will provide for them. The question is: for who are they working?

It is commonly supposed (e.g., Gill’s comment on this verse) that this verse addresses the responsibility of those who receive ministry to pay for it. But this sense would be in tension with v. 8, “Freely ye have received, freely give”. More likely he is reminding them who their true master is. Those who are worthy workmen for the Lord need not fear for his provision. They need not be preoccupied about their purse, or their store of food. They know that he will provide. Conversely, those who insist on elaborate logistical preparations for their ministry are showing that they do not really trust in the Lord. The restrictions he imposes force them to rely on the Lord, and filter out those who would seek to minister, not out of devotion and obedience to him, but to advance themselves.

D. A. Carson: What is clear is that the Twelve must travel unencumbered, relying on hospitality and God's providence. The details ensure that the instructions were for that mission alone (cf. Lk 22:35–38) and confirm Matthew's consciousness of the historicity of this part of the discourse.

Grant Osborne: The point seems to be that they are to depend on God through the hospitality of others. Rather than earning a wage, they accept hospitality and so express full dependence on God. Their trust must be in God, and their purpose must not be worldly profit but heavenly reward (6:19–21).

Donald Hagner: Subsistence, but not profit, was the rightful expectation of those who preached the gospel (cf. 1 Cor 9:18), a point that needs reemphasis for some mass-media evangelists of the late twentieth century for whom preaching the gospel has become a business (cf. 1 Tim 6:6–10; Titus 1:11; 1 Pet 5:2).

II. (:11-15) INSTRUCTIONS ON SEEKING HOSPITALITY AND RESPONDING TO RECEPTION OR REJECTION

Richard Gardner: Building on the final phrase in verse 10, verses 11–15 focus on the issue of hospitality. Hospitality to visitors was an important part of Semitic culture, all the more so when visitors came as messengers from God (cf. Gen. 18:1–15; Heb. 13:2). The worthy home that Jesus' messenger is urged to seek out, then, is a receptive home, one ready to hear the word of the kingdom and offer hospitality.

Finding such a home, the messenger is to greet it, to proclaim God's blessing of peace upon it (cf. Luke 10:5). The greeting reflects the Hebrew shalom, which here signifies the peace of the kingdom, the wholeness of life that comes with God's reign. So closely is God identified with this word of peace that blessing occurs as blessing is pronounced (cf. Isa. 55:11), though only where it is welcomed.

If rejected, the blessing returns to Jesus' messenger, who must then communicate a message of judgment. The graphic act by which this is done is shaking the dust from one's feet as one leaves (cf. Acts 13:51), a gesture saying in effect that God is abandoning this house or town. Such a town, Jesus says, is in a worse position than Sodom or Gomorrah, cities that epitomized evil and judgment (cf. Isa. 1:9–10; Jer. 23:14; 2 Pet. 2:6; Jude 7). Behind this unfavorable comparison lies the inhospitable behavior of Sodom toward the messengers who visited Lot in Genesis 19:1–11. As John Meier puts it: "Sodom and Gomorrah showed disrespect to the angels, the Old Testament messengers of Yahweh; worse still is the disrespect shown to the apostles, the New Testament messengers of Christ" (1980:108).

A. (:11) Seek Optimal Hospitality (Room and Board)

"And into whatever city or village you enter, inquire who is worthy in it; and abide there until you go away."

Craig Blomberg: The disciples must remain with such worthy people to avoid accusations of favoritism or the jealousies of competition among potential hosts.

B. (:12-13) Strategically Extend or Retract Your Greeting

1. (:12) Unconditional Initial Extension of Greeting

“And as you enter the house, give it your greeting.”

2. (:13) Conditional Continuation of the Greeting

a. Situation Where the House Is Found Worthy

“And if the house is worthy, let your greeting of peace come upon it;”

John MacArthur: The implication is that truly receptive listeners were to be ministered to in the fullest way. Their open hearts to the Lord's work earned them God's richest blessing. “He who receives a prophet in the name of a prophet,” Jesus explained a short while later, “shall receive a prophet's reward; and he who receives a righteous man in the name of a righteous man shall receive a righteous man's reward” Matt. 10:41.

b. Situation Where the House Is Found Unworthy

“but if it is not worthy, let your greeting of peace return to you.”

C. (:14-15) Symbolically Prophecy Judgment against Opponents

1. (:14) Depart and Shake the Dust Off Your Feet

“And whoever does not receive you, nor heed your words, as you go out of that house or that city, shake off the dust of your feet.”

D. A. Carson: What was true for the home applied equally to the town. A pious Jew, on leaving Gentile territory, might remove from his feet and clothes all the dust of the pagan land now being left behind (Str-B, 1:571), thus dissociating himself from the pollution of those lands and the judgment in store for them. For the disciples to do this to Jewish homes and towns would be a symbolic way of saying that the emissaries of Messiah now view those places as pagan, polluted, and liable to judgment (cf. Ac 13:51; 18:6). The actions, while outrageously shocking, accord with 8:11–12; 11:20–24.

Grant Osborne: Note that the response is twofold: rejection and refusal to listen. There is the welcome into the home and there is the openness to the message; it is these that define the “worthy” individual. The response of the rejected missionary is also twofold: leave that place and shake the dust off the feet. Both are prophetic parables of rejection in turn. When Jesus “withdrew” from a place, it often was a sign that God had rejected them (15:21; 19:1).

2. (:15) Degrees of Punishment

“Truly I say to you, it will be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city.”

Donald Hagner: In a judgment oracle strengthened by ἀμήν, “verily, truly,” Jesus asserts that the culpability of those who reject the gospel of the kingdom will be greater on the day of judgment than that of Sodom and Gomorrah. The sins of Sodom and Gomorrah were notorious, and the cities suffered destruction for their sins (Gen 19:24–28). Accordingly they became symbolic of catastrophic judgment (see Rom 9:29; 2 Peter 2:6; Jude 7). ἐν ἡμέρᾳ κρίσεως, “in the day of judgment,” refers to the day of eschatological judgment (cf. the same phrase in 11:22, 24; 12:36). The final penalty will be greater for those who have refused the gospel. The same analogy, but mentioning Sodom only, is made later in reference to the unbelief of Capernaum (11:23–24). The gravity of refusing the message and mission of Jesus could hardly be made more emphatic.

Bruce Hurt: Jesus is clearly teaching that there will be degrees of punishment in Gehenna (Lake of fire, Hell, but not "hades") even as He teaches there are greater rewards in heaven (Rev 22:12). In other words Hell will be more horrible and "hotter" (in some way) for some than others! Sodom and Gomorrah were indescribably wicked (Jude 1:7) and yet less overtly evil cities of Israel would be more culpable because they rejected greater light of the Gospel presented by the Savior Himself! The principle is rejection of greater spiritual light results in greater eternal punishment! The writer of Hebrews rightly says "It is a terrifying thing to fall into the hands of the living God." (Heb 10:31+)

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Charles Swindoll: From Jesus' instructions throughout Matthew 10, we learn some important principles we can apply to our own callings and ministries today. However, not everything Jesus said to His disciples applies to us. Two significant differences between the first-century context of the original disciples and our twenty-first-century context need to be underscored.

First, those original disciples had unique apostolic authority (10:1). Jesus gave them special power over unclean spirits and the ability to heal diseases, to raise the dead, and to cleanse lepers (10:8). The Gospel of Luke tells us that at the same time Jesus also extended this same kind of authority to seventy others (Luke 10:1-20). The apostle Paul indicated that he was the "last" and "least" of the apostles (1 Cor. 15:8-9), given special authority to perform "the signs of a true apostle . . . by signs and wonders and miracles" (2 Cor. 12:12).

Second, the mission of those original disciples had a unique scope. They were given a temporary itinerant ministry specifically and exclusively to Jews, not to Samaritans or Gentiles (Matt. 10:5-6). The itinerant nature and limited scope of their mission thus involved elements that appear extreme to us today. They went out with nothing —no planning, no preparation, no supplies, no money (10:9-10). But after Jesus' death and resurrection, the scope of the mission changed for the disciples. Immediately prior to His ascension, Jesus said, "You shall be My witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and even to the remotest part of the earth" (Acts 1:8).

So, although we can gain some principles from Jesus' instructions to those original, first-century disciples, we need to recognize that He wasn't speaking directly to us. We must carefully think through the implications and applications of this passage for our twenty-first-century context. . .

How do we apply the very specific sending in Matthew 10 to our own twenty-first-century context?

First, remember that we have similar motives and methods. Like Jesus and the disciples, we are to be moved by compassion for the lost and to pray to the Lord of the harvest (9:36-38). At the same time, we need to recognize that, like the disciples, we may become the answers to those prayers. When we realize this, we get motivated to step out and reach out to others.

Second, remember that the reaping of the harvest is done by all believers. There are those who are called to be "goers" and those who are called to be "givers" The goers need the givers. If you're not called to be one of the workers of the field in the form of vocational Christian service, then you can give of your resources, just like those unnamed supporters of the disciples' ministry who contributed to the cause (10:9-12).

Third, remember what we're to model – the character and commitment of Christ. We need to reflect His authenticity, simplicity, and integrity. We're to be real, not phony – free from hypocrisy, suffering hardship without complaining, and serving with pure motives. That's authenticity. Beyond this, we should live simple lives. We shouldn't engage in ministry for the money or the fame or the pride. We shouldn't pursue an agenda. Finally, we should be men and women of integrity as we're going and serving. Trustworthiness, unselfishness, morality and ethics – these are the things of integrity.

May we be moved by compassion to pray that the Lord will send people into the harvest. May we constantly seek His will for how He wants us to be involved in the project – either as a goer or a giver. And may we always emulate Jesus in authenticity, simplicity, and integrity in everything we do for the advancement of His kingdom.

Daniel Doriani: The principle is that we should organize ministry in the best way to advance the gospel. If a task or journey is short and relatively safe, we should not plan long at all. Jesus' word is "Trust God and get going." But if a journey is long and dangerous, we take money, supplies, a staff, even a sword.

The pattern of Paul's ministry verifies this principle. Paul generally supported himself as he traveled and preached. He made and sold tents part of the day; he taught and preached the rest of the day. In this way, he avoided the impression that he preached for personal gain. But he insisted that the apostles and other ministers had the right to be paid for their work: "Those who preach the gospel should receive their living from the gospel" (1 Cor. 9:14). Sometimes Paul did accept money—when he was in jail, for example (Phil. 4:10-19). These gifts gave him a modicum of peace, even in prison, and gave him freedom to continue his ministry by writing letters. Paul would use any legitimate method if it advanced the gospel.

Taking money grants freedom to minister full-time. It also makes the preacher accountable to his supporters. Refusing money grants independence and avoids any doubts about the preacher's motives. Each method is legitimate. Each has advantages and weaknesses. Those who receive payment may lose their boldness and tailor their message to suit their benefactors. Those who take nothing may shun accountability and become too independent. Paul uses whatever advances the mission. The principle remains: we organize ministry in the way that will best advance the gospel.

J. Ligon Duncan: The Ambassadors of the Kingdom, Go and Preach

In Matthew 10:5-15, Christ gives explicit instructions to His disciples about this specific mission on which He is about to send them. I want to remind you that this is not the same commission that He gives to them when He sends them out into the world. Their work here will have to do specifically with bearing witness to Israel and will specifically be contained over a short period of time. The Lord Jesus' instructions have some particulars in them that are very specific for the situation. They are not universally transferable. There are instructions here that are not to be applied to every missionary that has ever gone out. This is not a prohibition, for instance, about missionaries raising support. Jesus' words cannot be interpreted that way. He's speaking to a specific situation. There is no universal prohibition on missionaries taking a little extra clothing with them when they go to the mission field, even though the Lord Jesus makes the most Spartan restrictions upon His own disciples here. And remembering that will keep us from misapplying the instructions of the Lord Jesus Christ. But even though there are some things that are specific for the apostles as He sent them out in this first mission, there are many principles in this passage that are equally applicable to us today. There is much that we learn about the kingdom of heaven and our service in it from this passage, and I'd like to direct your attention to a few of those things.

I. The Messiah has come in search of His lost sheep! (:5-6)

The Messiah came for the sake of establishing the remnant of Israel in righteousness. The promises of God had been given in the Old Testament to Abraham and His descendants. The children of Israel had strayed. They had been sent into exile, and in the midst of their misery God through the prophets promised them that one day He would send a Messiah to them who would call them back to God, who would reunite them in faith and in fellowship with the living God and the Lord Jesus Christ by sending His disciples out to the Jewish people of Judea is fulfilling the promises of God in the Old Testament to Israel. It will not be all Israel who will respond to these disciples as they preach the gospel of the kingdom. The Lord Jesus is aware of that. That's why in verses 11-15 of this passage, He makes it clear that they are going to be some who reject the message and there are going to be some who accept the message. But it will be to those lost sheep of the house of Israel that the disciples will be sent.

And there are at least two good reasons why Jesus' ministry would be done this way. One of them is theological and the other is practical. It's nice how those go together. The theological reason is because God had made His covenant of grace and His promises to Abraham to the descendants of Abraham and so the Lord Jesus Christ sends His disciples to Israel because of the special place that Israel has in God's plan. Christ has a particular love and concern for the lost sheep of the house of Israel. They are beloved as Paul says in Romans 11:28. For their Father's sake, because of the covenant which God has made with Abraham and because of that special role that Israel plays in the plan of God, God sends His apostles, the Lord Jesus sends His disciples to the Jews first.

There's a practical reason as well. We know from the gospels, especially Luke, that there were many godly people in Israel who were waiting for the Messiah to come. Simeon and Anna are just two examples of godly Jewish folk who believe the Old Testament and they were waiting for the Messiah to come. What better place to send the apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ in order to make the foundation for the Christian Church, which will break across national and ethnic lines, which will go to the ends of the earth. What better place to build a core group of followers of the Lord Jesus Christ than those who already embraced the word of God in the Old Testament and who already embraced the promises that the Messiah was coming. And so the Lord Jesus Christ sends the disciples out first to the Jewish people. . .

II. The Messiah's ministers go forth to bring good news (:7-8)

Note the difference in emphasis of that message. Compare that message to Jonah's message. Jonah goes to Nineveh, and what is his message: Ruin is near, but there is a chance of salvation if you'll repent. There is a different thrust in Jesus' message: Salvation is near. Do not be ruined by rejecting that salvation.

The positive thrust of the message of salvation preached by the disciples is apparent, and I would mention that this is the same message that was preached by John and it's the same message that was preached by the Lord Jesus at the beginning of His ministry which He is now giving to the disciples to preach. Good truth, good truth always ought to be repeated in preaching, because we need to be reminded of those truths that we have once learned before. And so the apostles go out preaching that message. They are sent out confirming that message with miracles to do good. They are sent out as public blessings to show the love and the goodness that are of the gospel and so they take that message out as a fulfillment of prophecy again. . .

III. The Messiah's ministers must learn to trust in Him (:9-10)

Notice also in verses nine and ten that we see the providence of God, that the disciples are to trust and the Messiah's ministers must learn to trust in Him in their mission. He says, "Do not acquire gold or silver or copper coins for your money belts." The disciples are not to prepare in that way for this particular mission. They are not to take a bag for their journey or even two coats or sandals or a staff. The Lord Jesus Christ, because of the shortness of the journey, but probably more important because of the urgency of the mission that He is sending His disciples out on, tells them, 'Don't take time, don't encumber yourself with trying to collect all these other things. You just trust that the Lord will provide for you on this particular mission.' The disciples are told to travel light, and that forces them to trust in God's provision, and it forces them to trust in Jesus' promise that God would provide. And they learn a great lesson in that. . .

IV. The Messiah's minister's message is of eternal significance (:11-15)

And now He gives them the procedures that they are to follow in verses 11-15. And there He makes it clear that the message they are going to take to Israel is of eternal significance. . .

The disciples are called upon to display in this mission an extraordinary balance of generosity and discernment. They are to be generous in the sense that everywhere they go, if they are received, they are to pronounce their blessing on that place. They are to pronounce the peace of God upon those who receive them into their homes. But they are also to be discerning because those who reject their message are to be rejected. In fact, He tells them, 'You shake the dust off your feet.' That was a symbol from ancient Israel. When one was outside the land of Israel one was on Gentile territory, pagan land. And when you came back, before you came back into Israel, you shook the dust off your feet so that you would not bring pagan soil into the holy land. And the Lord Jesus is saying, "If someone rejects the message of the kingdom, you shake the dust off your feet as a testimony against them, that you're not going to bring that pagan soil back into the holy land."

We must recognize the gravity of the message that Christ entrusted the disciples. It divides the world, doesn't it, into those who accept Him and those who reject Him.

Van Parunak: Who?

*Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: 6
But go rather to the lost sheep³ of the house of Israel.*

This command is puzzling. Later the Lord will tell them to “make disciples of all nations” (28:19). Even this chapter anticipates their testimony to the Gentiles:

Mat 10:18 And ye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them and the Gentiles.

How should we understand this constraint? Here are some approaches that have been taken. The question is important, because it determines whether we understand this chapter as relevant to us or not.

Temporal: some suggest that the restriction applies only during the Lord's earthly ministry. But the description of persecution in vv. 16-23 does not apply to the disciples during the Lord's earthly ministry, and fits the book of Acts better.

Dispensational: some claim that the methods are appropriate to the life of Christ and again the tribulation, but not the church age. But:

- The apostles in fact follow the instructions of this chapter in Acts.
- Isaiah anticipates a Jewish outreach to the nations, not just to other Jews:

Isa 66:19 And I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, that draw the bow, to Tubal, and Javan, to the isles afar off, that have not heard my fame, neither have seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles.

- Even in the tribulation, the ministry of the two witnesses (Rev 11:10) extends beyond Israel to “them that dwelt on the earth.”

Personal: The focus of the twelve is to be on the Jews. Others will take care of the Gentiles. There is some truth to this: God raised up Paul to lead the Gentile mission, while Peter focused on the Jews:

Gal 2:7 the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto me, as the gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter; 8 (For he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, the same was mighty in me toward the Gentiles:)

But the charge to go to “all nations” (28:19) was given to these men; Peter initiated the Gentile outreach with Cornelius; and there is a strong tradition that Thomas evangelized India.

Priority: The Lord's words describe the starting point of their ministry, but are not intended to limit its development. At this point they are to focus on Jews, but it is clearly understood that he will later expand their scope. Thus understood, they are reflected in our Lord's command upon his ascension.

Act 1:8 ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judaea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth.

They also may lie at the root of Paul's policy of going first to the Jew, and then to the Gentiles, in each town that he visits:

Rom 1:16 For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek.

TEXT: Matthew 10:16-23

TITLE: PERSECUTION IN THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION – WOLVES, SHEEP, SNAKES & DOVES

BIG IDEA:

IN THE PROCLAMATION OF THE GOSPEL EXPECT PERSECUTION THAT WILL INTENSIFY IN THE END TIMES (FROM WOLVES OF FALSE RELIGION, GOVERNMENT, FAMILY AND SOCIETY) – SO AS SHEEP BE SNAKES AND DOVES

INTRODUCTION:

Stanley Saunders: Jesus has earlier described the people of Israel as sheep without a shepherd (9:36; 10:6), but now it is the disciples of Jesus who are like sheep surrounded by wolves (10:16). For Jesus, “wolves” denotes primarily the leaders of Israel and the Gentiles (10:17–18), but in the time of mission even one’s family members may reveal lupine tendencies (10:21). Jesus’ advice to his disciple-sheep is paradoxical: they are to combine the cunning of serpents with the purity and innocence of doves. Subtlety, prudence, clear thinking, and practical wisdom here join with purity, vulnerability, and transparency. The goal is not merely to elude opposition, but to nurture faithful, creative, enduring witness in the face of inevitable opposition.

Grant Osborne: On their mission, which will begin with Israel but extend to the Gentile lands, the disciples should expect arrest, persecution, and even death. Yet their response must not be in kind; they are to be shrewdly “innocent” and trust the Lord to give them the proper response when hauled before the courts. Moreover, the entire mission of the church, from the Jewish mission of the disciples (v. 17) to the later Gentile mission of the church (v. 18), stems from the commissioning and sending of Jesus.

David Thompson: Disciples of Jesus Christ must exist in a hostile environment among those who are out to persecute them and harm them, and they must constantly be on guard concerning what they do and say.

Brian Evans: So, there is this evil, satanic resistance to Jesus and His message and our Lord tells His early disciples and us that He is sending His people right into the middle of that resistance.

Our Lord explains something else that is very important to see as we begin. The resistance and persecution does not take place because of social, economical, racial or any other reason no, the persecution Jesus tells us is and you will be hated by all for my name’s sake. You will be hated not because you’re a Steelers fan or live on the wrong side of the tracks, you will be hated because of Jesus. In that verse, Jesus gives us the scope of the hatred, doesn’t He? He tells us the truth when He declares all will hate us. Make no mistake when push comes to shove the lost hate Christians because of Jesus. We cannot believe otherwise. Jesus tells us the truth, the lost world hates believers. You can talk about anything under the sun but don’t mention Jesus because then there’s trouble. That’s how it works in this world. That’s how it’s always worked.

John MacArthur: There is a telescoping effect. If you look at verse 23, you will notice that it ends with the coming of the Son of Man. That is an eschatological term used by Matthew to refer to the return of Christ. And so, what He teaches her as immediate import for the Twelve as they go out, such as the statement of verse 6 in chapter 10, “Go only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.” That is a very dispensational statement related to a very specific time in which they lived. But it begins from there to telescope, and it touches the time in which they will fully be sent, and it touches all of those who were ever sent by our Lord, even those who will be sent against the terrible opposition of the great tribulation prior to the return of Christ.

And so, what we see here is a span and a sweep of all of the history of God’s people, from Jesus the first time He came, to Jesus the second time He comes. He sees the Twelve on this first mission. But with His marvelous, omniscient, prophetic eye, He sees the Twelve again in their full mission. And then He sees all those who represent Him. And then He finally sees those who will be in the great holocaust known as the great tribulation and the terrible opposition they will face. . .

Very commonly, in the prophetic literature, predictions have an immediate fulfillment and a future fulfillment, and that is what our Lord is doing. He is predicting the role and the place of the apostles, and has in mind the ultimate sense that this will sweep clear through history to the time of the great tribulation.

Richard Gardner: Jesus’ witnesses should be shrewd enough to avoid their persecutors where possible (wise as serpents; cf. v. 23a). At the same time, they should live in such a way that their conduct testifies in their favor if they are apprehended (innocent as doves; cf. Romans 16:19; 1 Peter 3:14-16). As noted earlier, warning is coupled with encouragement in the sayings we find here. Jesus’ messengers are assured that judicial hearings provide an opportunity to bear witness (v. 18), that the Holy Spirit will guide them in their testimony (vv. 19-20), and that those who endure suffering now will enjoy salvation at the end (v. 22).

Walter Wilson: The body of the unit is comprised of two parallel sequences (10:17–20, 21–23a), in which Jesus warns the Twelve of the persecutions they will face (10:17–18, 21–22) and then instructs them about how to respond (10:19–20, 23a). As the concluding prediction implies (10:23b), these tribulations will end only with the parousia. Persecution, then, will be not only unavoidable but also unending. Introducing the segment is the sending announcement in 10:16, which both corresponds functionally to the opening verses of the first unit (10:5–6) and functions as a heading for what follows. The people are like wolves when they initiate such persecutory actions against the envoys, and the envoys are like sheep as they endure them.

Donald Hagner: The end of the preceding passage makes it clear that some will reject the message of the kingdom. There the focus was on the plight of those who reject the message. Now the discourse moves to the effect of rejection and hostility upon the messengers. Rejection of the message will entail hostility and persecution directed against those who proclaim it.

John Nolland: The focus in the mission charge now moves from a concern with the nature of the mission initiatives to be taken by the disciples to the negative response to be expected, and how to deal with that. It pictures hostility as moving to an eschatological crescendo leading to the coming of the Son of Man.

I. (:16) RESPOND WISELY TO DANGEROUS PERSECUTION

A. Missions = Danger Zone

“Behold, I send you out as sheep in the midst of wolves;”

R. T. France: The rejection of the Twelve at this stage in Galilee is unlikely to have been sufficiently violent to justify the vivid simile of sheep among wolves. It acts rather as a pointer to the eventually more serious vulnerability of disciples confronting a hostile world. For sheep threatened by wolves see 7:15, but here there is no pretense: the threat is real and open. As in John 10:12; Acts 20:29, the sheep are helpless in the face of an attack by wolves. It is an image of the Christian presence in the world which sits uncomfortably alongside much of the subsequent history of the church, as a power structure and itself often the agent of persecution.

B. Methodology = Wisdom

1. Shrewdness

“therefore be shrewd as serpents,”

2. Innocence / Purity

“and innocent as doves.”

Daniel Doriani: We must show craft, cunning, and guile, as snakes do. Snakes know they are not beloved, therefore they hide themselves. Like snakes, we must use our heads and avoid unnecessary danger. We do not overestimate the kindness of wolves. Yet Jesus introduces a second image, to limit the first: a disciple must be as innocent as a dove. Doves are famous for their naïve fearlessness. They are the last bird to flee when humans approach.

Grant Osborne: As Wilkins says, “Without innocence the keenness of the snake is crafty, a devious menace; without keenness the innocence of a dove is naïve, helpless gullibility.” So the Christian is to interact with outsiders with a practical wisdom and a behavioral innocence so the kingdom truths go out with divine power without hindrance. If persecution comes, it must be unearned. Yet come it will, as we will see.

R. T. France: Disciples under threat are not to be helpless and gullible, but must maintain the initiative. Cf. the shrewd self-preservation of the steward in Luke 16:1–8, also described as phronimos. But in popular thought snakes are feared rather than admired (cf. 3:7; 7:10), and it is as a threat to God’s people that they appear more often in biblical literature. So Jesus here offsets that more obvious connotation of snakes by a balancing animal image, the harmlessness of doves; the disciples’ cunning is to be directed not to harming their opponents, but to their own survival and the commendation of the gospel. They need the cunning of snakes without the venom. Cf. Paul’s instructions not to repay evil with evil and to overcome evil with good (Rom 12:17–21; and cf. Rom 16:19 for a close parallel to this saying).

Charles Swindoll:

SHREWD AS SERPENTS	INNOCENT AS DOVES
Alert	Gentle
Sharp-minded	Pure
Relevant	Honest
Cautious	Winsome
Discerning	Peaceful

John Nolland: The wisdom called for from the disciples will involve anticipating danger and avoiding it wherever possible, but not in such a way as to undercut their mission priorities. The innocence called for will involve a consistent integrity that is prepared to suffer rather than compromise and which is careful to give no grounds for legitimate legal objection to the action of the disciples.

II. (:17-22a) REALMS OF PERSECUTION

A. (:17) False Religion

“But beware of men; for they will deliver you up to the courts, and scourge you in their synagogues;”

Grant Osborne: Most local “sanhedrins” or councils had a court of three judges that tried cases, and the law said that for a first offense the person was to be warned and released, but at the second offense they should be beaten (see Acts 4:18–21; 5:40). That is the situation Jesus is envisaging. Paul says in 2 Cor 11:25 that he had been beaten with rods three times (cf. Acts 16:22); while μαστιγῶω often means a “scourging” like Jesus suffered, the beating here likely refers to the flogging decreed in Deut 25:1–3.

R. T. France: We have no evidence of such judicial proceedings against Jesus’ disciples before his death. Jesus’ words here are looking further into the future.

Craig Blomberg: With v. 17 Jesus shifts to predictions that were not fulfilled in the immediate mission of the Twelve. The events of vv. 17-22 took place only during the postresurrection ministry of the disciples.

John MacArthur: We want to keep a balance, but realize that the enemy’s going to attack you through human agencies. Don’t be surprised, then, when you’re criticized. Don’t be surprised, then, when you’re fired for articulating your faith. Don’t be surprised when people won’t invite you to the parties or the activities. Don’t be surprised when some girl dumps you, or some guy dumps you because of your faith. Don’t be surprised, because human agents represent the kingdom of darkness. . .

Who are the wolves? And if you notice verse 17, it says, “Beware of men.” And if you notice verse 22, it says, “You’ll be hated of all men.” The wolves are our own kind. Though it is true that we wrestle against spiritual wickedness in the heavenlies, principalities, and power, rulers of the darkness, it is true that we wrestle against demonic enemies, they find their form in the world through human agencies so that men become the dupes and the pawns, and the agents of demons so that we will find our enemy attacking us through the human system. The wolves then are men. . .

Now, what he’s saying is that one thing is for sure, false religious systems have made themselves drunk on the blood of the saints. And that has been true; that is true; and that will ultimately be true as they slaughter and massacre the believers even in the time of the tribulation. We shouldn’t be surprised, in Matthew 7:15, our Lord said that there would be wolves dressed as shepherds. And they would be ravenous wolves coming in the name of religion.

B. (:18-20) Oppressive Governments

1. (:18) Opportunity to Testify in Tense Situations

“and you shall even be brought before governors and kings for My sake, as a testimony to them and to the Gentiles.”

Grant Osborne: Jesus appeared before the Roman governor Pilate, and Paul appeared before Sergius Paulus (Acts 13), Felix (Acts 24), Festus (Acts 25), and the emperor Nero himself. This was a reality, not just a mere possibility. But this will be done “for my sake” (ἐνεκεν ἐμοῦ), and the authority of Christ will be evident throughout, as seen in the fact that this dangerous situation will be “as a witness to them” (εἰς μαρτύριον αὐτοῖς), which means that Christ will turn the situation around as an opportunity for the gospel (cf. esp. Acts 24:124–16; 26:19–23, 28–29). This does not mean “a witness against them” (dative of disadvantage) but a positive “witness to them” (dative of advantage). In fact, not only the rulers but also all “the Gentiles” would receive the witness of such events, as exemplified in Paul’s reflections on his own Roman trial in Phil 1:12–14. This is part of the “Gentile mission” theme in Matthew (cf. 1:5–6; 2:1–12; 4:14–16, 25; 8:5–13).

John Nolland: The Roman justice system and the local Jewish justice system sat side by side. Submission to the Jewish authority was a choice (but a necessary concomitant of membership in the Jewish community); submission to the Roman authority was mandatory. More severe penalties, including the death penalty, were available through Roman justice than through the Jewish legal system. So the stakes are now raised.

R. T. France: The local opposition which the Twelve can expect in Galilee is thus a foreshadowing of the more serious and official hostility which Jesus’ followers will meet in the wider world.

2. (:19-20) Promise of Empowerment by the Holy Spirit

“But when they deliver you up, do not become anxious about how or what you will speak; for it shall be given you in that hour what you are to speak. 20 For it is not you who speak, but it is the Spirit of your Father who speaks in you.”

Walter Wilson: With 10:19, Jesus moves from warning to reassurance. Whereas the appeal not to “worry” in 6:25–34 addressed anxieties over material needs, here attention is fixed on the performance anxiety disciples may experience over what to say when they are handed over.

Stanley Saunders: But here Jesus mixes a hint of opportunity into his warning: being dragged before governors and kings—as Jesus himself will be—provides an occasion for testimony. Opposition and persecution are inevitable, but they also provide new opportunities for faithful witness. Just as the disciples are to be defenseless against attacks and dependent on God’s care (10:9–10), when they stand before the legal authorities they are not to worry about what to say. “The Spirit of your Father” will provide the words at the very moment they are needed (10:19–20). God’s presence is powerful, especially in times of conflict and threat.

Daniel Doriani: This is not a promise for public speakers who fail to prepare. Rather it promises aid to witnesses who cannot prepare. When preparation is impossible, then God himself will empower his witnesses for their defense of themselves and their gospel. As the book of Acts abundantly shows, the Lord was good to his word (Acts 4:7–14; 5:27–32).

John MacArthur: In the Olivet Discourse, He says it's especially how it's going to be during the time of the tribulation. The time of the tribulation is going to see the revealing of the same thing. We're to be persecuted. The world reacts. Religion reacts, because it's generated by Satan. Government reacts because it's in the control of the prince of the power of the air, the ruler of this world. And families react because they cannot tolerate a righteous individual in the midst of their unrighteousness. The wolves are going to do all they can to slaughter the sheep.

C. (:21) Hostile Family Members

1. Brother Betraying Brother

“And brother will deliver up brother to death,”

2. Father Betraying Child

“and a father his child;”

3. Children Betraying Parents

“and children will rise up against parents, and cause them to be put to death.”

John Nolland: This verse expands on the theme introduced in v. 17 and represents an intensification: among those who will seek to use the legal system to stop the missionary witness will be members of one's own family; and the legal redress will go all the way to capital punishment.

D. (:22a) Society in General

“And you will be hated by all on account of My name,”

III. (:22b-23) REMEMBER THE END POINT OF PERSECUTION

A. (:23b) Persevere to the End

“but it is the one who has endured to the end who will be saved.”

John Nolland: Where practical wisdom might suggest that to abandon one's profession in the time of persecution is the way to secure one's future, quite the opposite is insisted on here. The end point for the need of endurance will be the coming of the Son of Man, and this will be the subject of v. 23.

B. (:23) Proclaim the Gospel by Strategically Advancing (While Retreating) until the End

1. Keep Moving On

“But whenever they persecute you in this city, flee to the next;”

Daniel Doriani: Flight is not cowardice; it is fidelity to the mission. If necessary, we will die rather than renounce the faith. But it is better to withdraw to fight—by preaching—another day.

2. Anticipate the Return of Christ

“for truly I say to you, you shall not finish going through the cities of Israel, until the Son of Man comes.”

Walter Wilson: As the following verse (10:23) makes plain, the promised reward does not entail rescuing the envoys from persecution. Indeed, endurance is required because they will continue to be persecuted until “the end,” that is, until the appearance of the Son of Man (cf. 16:27–28;

24:29–31). The envoys are not to retaliate (cf. 5:38–48) or seek martyrdom but to evade danger in one city (cf. 23:34) by fleeing to the next (cf. 10:11+14–15), not unlike Jesus himself, who in 12:15 and 14:13 evades potential threats to his life by withdrawing from the scene (cf. 2:13–14). In so doing, they also honor Jesus’s original charge that they should “go” to Israel (10:6–7). Efforts intended to eradicate the movement, then, have the effect of spreading the gospel (cf. Acts 8:2–4), though, as the second part of the logion indicates, this work will be ongoing, the mission to Israel being a determinant of the apostles’ experience until the parousia (cf. Matt 16:28 || Mark 9:1). In other words, it is neither the missionaries nor their persecutors whose agency will usher in the new age but that of Jesus himself. Presumably, “finishing” (τελέω) the cities of Israel in 10:23 includes both exhausting them as (temporary) sanctuaries from persecution and completing the task of evangelism. The reassurance conveyed at this juncture to the missionaries includes the expectation that the Son of Man will return specifically to avenge himself and the disciples for their suffering (cf. 16:27).

John Nolland: ‘Son of Man’ has been established as a mode of self-reference for Jesus at 8:20; 9:6. The link of the present statement to Dn. 7:13 is evident. What is odd, however, about the present statement is its talk about a coming of the Son of Man, set on the lips of Jesus at a point where there is nothing to signal that he contemplates a departure that would make such a coming necessary. This feature points strongly to the drawing of this material from a Mk. 13–like context, where, with the Passion imminent, just such a departure is readily implied. In fact, the Son of Man saying in Mk. 13:26 plays a quite similar role in its context to that of Mt. 10:23. Matthew does not notice the anticipation of a coming in v. 23 when there has been no departure in sight as a difficulty because, though he is reporting mission instructions to the Twelve, he very much has in mind the mission of the early church in the post-Passion context.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why should we not be surprised at either the scope or intensity of persecution against Christians involved in proclaiming the gospel?
- 2) How have we prepared ourselves to be both shrewd and innocent?
- 3) What type of opposition (or hard times) have you experienced from false religion? From oppressive government? From hostile family members? From society in general?
- 4) What features in this passage give indication that the events of the tribulation right before the return of Christ might be in view?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Stanley Saunders: Jesus’ teaching here raises a host of questions. Is it possible to pursue mission without the risk of opposition and persecution? Do we understand suffering as an essential component of the missionary experience? What has God’s mission to do with our notions—so pervasive in the current context—of success and prosperity? How can we nourish the complete trust and dependence on God that attends Matthew's sense of mission? How do disciples learn not to flinch at the prospect of suffering and death, yet know when to flee to the next town? What does God's mission, finally, have to do with the growth and success of the church, or with the preservation of its institutional structures? What are we to make of mission in a culture where the gospel message increasingly seems to generate indifference rather than opposition?

Warren Wiersbe: The "atmosphere" of this section is different from that in the previous section. Here the Lord spoke of persecution, but we have no record that the Twelve suffered during their tour. Jesus also spoke of a ministry to the Gentiles (Matt. 10:18). The Holy Spirit had not been given, yet Jesus talked about the Spirit speaking in them (Matt. 10:20). Matthew 10:22 seems to indicate a worldwide persecution, yet the apostles were ministering only in their own land. Finally, Matthew 10:23 speaks about the return of the Lord, which certainly moves these events into the future. It is difficult to escape the conclusion that these instructions apply to witnesses at some future time.

But what time? To some degree, some of these events took place in the book of Acts, yet Jesus Christ did not return at that time. And the ministry in Acts was not limited to "the cities of Israel" (Matt. 10:23). It seems that the period described in this section closely parallels the time of tribulation that Jesus described in His "Olivet Discourse" (Matt. 24—25). In fact, the statement "He that endureth to the end shall be saved" (Matt. 10:22) is definitely a part of our Lord's prophetic discourse (Matt. 24:13; Mark 13:13). It does not refer to a person keeping himself saved, but rather enduring persecution and being faithful.

If, then, these instructions apply to that future time of tribulation, we can easily understand why Jesus said so much about hatred and persecution. The tribulation period will be a time of opposition. God's servants will be like sheep in the midst of wolves. They will need to be "tough-minded but tenderhearted." This opposition will come from organized religion (Matt. 10:17), government (Matt. 10:18), and even the family (Matt. 10:21). . .

But the tribulation period will also be a time of opportunity. The believers will be able to witness to governors and kings (Matt. 10:18). Their enemies will try to trip them up, but the Spirit of God will teach the witnesses what to say. Believers today must not use Matthew 10:19–20 as an excuse not to study the Word in preparation for witnessing, teaching, or preaching. These verses describe an emergency situation; they are not God's regular pattern for ministry today. Even during the days of the apostles, the Spirit gave them their messages when they faced their enemies (Acts 4:8). This unusual ministry of the Spirit will be evident during the tribulation period.

The tribulation will be a time of opposition and opportunity, but it will also be a time of obligation. The ambassadors of the King must "endureth to the end" (Matt. 10:22) and faithfully perform their ministry, even if it costs them their fore leaders, the servants must remain true to their Lord. Their witness will be used by Golives. In spite of scourging, rejection by their families, persecution from city to city, and trials bed to win others. Revelation 7:1–8 indicates that 144,000 Jewish witnesses will carry God's Word throughout the world during the tribulation, and as a result, great multitudes will come to Christ (Rev. 7:9ff.).

No doubt these words in Matthew 10 will become very precious and meaningful to witnesses during that time. We, today, can learn from these words, even though their primary interpretation and application are for God's servants at a future time. No matter how difficult our circumstances may be, we can turn opposition into opportunities for witness. We can trust the Spirit of God to help us remember what the Lord has taught us (John 14:26). Instead of fleeing and looking for an easier place, we can “endureth to the end,” knowing that God will help us and see us through.

John MacArthur: 6 Responses to Persecution by False Religion, Government and Families:

1) Be wise (:16)

The ancients saw a serpent as wise, keen mind, cunning, smart, prudent, always, using great skill and caution to avoid danger. The idea speaks of shrewdness, cautiousness, wariness, having a circumspect perspective.

2) Be harmless as doves (:16) – gentleness, purity, innocence

3) Beware (:17); Be alert; Be on your guard. Be watchful. Be Perceptive.

4) Be calm (:19).

Now, in addition, when you’re arrested, to feeling shame and other emotions, you immediately would worry about your defense. How am I going to defend myself? So, He says to the apostles - now listen very carefully to what I say – He says to them, “You just go about your business ministering. You don’t worry about what’s going to happen. You be wise and be harmless and beware and minister. And if it comes to the point where you’re hauled before the councils, I’ll take care of that. So, you’re free. You don’t have to have your hip pocket defense all ready. You just relax and be calm.

5) Be real (:22). endurance through persecution is the hallmark of genuine salvation.

So, He says, “If you’re going to get in the heat, be real. Be genuine. Be a true Christian. And you’ll endure to the end and be delivered. Hang on.” You almost could say this is “be patient.” Be patient, because in the end, you’re going to be delivered. The word “saved” means delivered. Just to go through it and you’ll be delivered.

6) Keep moving (:23). Just keep moving till He gets here.

Ross Layne: Hostility in the Harvest

If Jesus wants us to know that living life as a follower of Christ in general is challenging, he certainly wants us to know that obeying his charge to carry the gospel to the nations is difficult as well. In fact, the endeavor to which Christ calls his followers can involve incredible pain and suffering flowing from a world that is outright hostile. This becomes quite clear in the text we are studying this morning. Jesus had painted a picture of the lost world as a plentiful harvest. He then called to himself the twelve, and he sent them out into that harvest. . .

Wolves are predators. Sheep are prey. Sheep eat grass. Wolves eat sheep. Wolves are fast and stealthy and vicious. Sheep are dumb, clumsy, slow, and defenseless. About the only defense a sheep has is to run away, but they cannot even run fast. Jesus is telling his disciples that as they go out into the world to preach the gospel and gather in new believers, they are going to encounter people who will look at them as wolves eye-ball their next meal. They will want to consume them. They will see themselves as superior. They will be their mortal enemy. And as sheep, the disciples will be vulnerable to attack. They will not be able to escape. They will not have the strength or the wits to be able to do so. Not only will the enemy hunger for the death of the sheep, they will attack. Sheep will be at best wounded and in some cases brought to death. . .

And so the power displayed when people do embrace the gospel and come into the kingdom is not the power of the preachers or the witnesses or the ones who share, but it is the power of God. The Apostle Paul spoke directly to this fact. In his second letter to the Corinthians chapter 4 he explained: “But we have this treasure in jars of clay, to show that the surpassing power belongs to God and not to us. We are afflicted in every way, but not crushed; perplexed but not driven to despair; persecuted but not forsaken; struck down but not destroyed; always carrying in in the body the death of Jesus, so that the life of Jesus may also be manifested in our bodies. For we who live are always being given over to death for Jesus’ sake, so that the life of Jesus also may be manifested in our mortal flesh.” . . .

John Piper: Sheep, Wolves, Snakes, and Doves

Go among wolves and be vulnerable as you preach the gospel, but when they lunge at you, step aside. When they open their mouths, don’t jump in. And not only that, be as innocent as doves. That is, don’t give them any legitimate reason to accuse you of injustice or immorality. Keep your reputation as clean as you can.

So both the snake-intelligence and the dove-innocence are both designed to keep the sheep out of trouble. Jesus does not mean for us to get ourselves into as much difficulty as possible. He means: Risk your lives as vulnerable, non-combative, sheep-like, courageous witnesses, but try to find ways to give your witness in a way that does not bring down unnecessary persecution.

Jacob Whitaker: Persecution is part and parcel to the Christian life, and Jesus doesn’t want us to be caught unaware of that reality, he cares for his disciples. It’s one of the many things that I love about Jesus, that he’s upfront about what it’ll mean for us to follow him. It’s why he tells the crowds in Luke’s Gospel to count the cost before following him. He doesn’t spring anything on us after we’ve committed our lives to him like some kind of dishonest salesman. He offers us the good news of the Gospel, the forgiveness of sin through his work on the cross, but tells us that while the reward of eternal life far surpasses anything we could ever hope for, that it’ll cost us our lives, that we’ll have to lose our lives to gain eternal life, which includes among other things, persecution. There’s a cost associated with following Jesus, but it’s worth it.

Scott Harris: Sheep among Wolves

Why does Jesus, the Good Shepherd, send defenseless sheep out into this ungodly world among the wolves? Because that is where He can use them best in their service for Him. They will have to trust Him as they go. The Shepherd knows what He is doing and the purpose He has for each sheep. In John 10 Jesus specifically claims that no one can take away any of the sheep the Father has given Him.

This promise does not mean the sheep will not be persecuted, tormented and even killed, but it does mean that Jesus will gather each one to Himself in heaven and give to them eternal life. The sheep are subject to persecution, torment and martyrdom because the Shepherd, who is also the “lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world” was persecuted, tormented and martyred by the world. The Scriptures are clear that those who live godly lives will be persecuted. Jesus said it many times (Matthew 5:10-12; 23:24; 24:9; John 16:33). Paul stated this directly in 2 Timothy 3:12, and it is a theme in both of Peter’s epistles. The world hated Jesus and so it will hate His followers (John 15:18-21).

Jesus warns the Apostles that they will face serious opposition. They will be sheep among wolves. Jesus warning here is specific to the apostles, but it is clear that it also applies to us since the principle is repeated in so many other places as a general truth to all Christians. Yet, this truth is very seldom included when people are told the gospel, and it is very seldom mentioned from the pulpits across our nation. . .

We are to be uncompromising in proclaiming God’s truth, but that does not mean being abrasive, inconsiderate, belligerent, hostile, or rude. Wise and innocent, cunning and gentle, perceptive and pure – these describe discretion. . .

We need to beware of wolves in religion, in government, in our families and in society in general. “And you will be hated by all on account of My name, but it is the one who has endured to the end who will be saved.” This does not mean that every person will hate you, but that all people in general will hate you. There are people from every nationality, every class, and every walk of life that hate God and anyone that reflects Him. That can add up to a lot of pressure on a believer to become like them, but the true mark of Christianity is conformity to Christ and not the world (Romans 12:1-2).

Donald Hagner: [Argues for the position that the end in view in vs. 23 is the destruction of Jerusalem]

A final possibility, and the best one, is that the phrase refers to the coming of the Son of Man in judgment in the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. Three important points argue in favor of this conclusion:

- (1) the destruction of Jerusalem foreshadows and is typologically related to the final judgment and hence can also be seen as the work of the Son of Man (cf. 24:27–31);
- (2) the destruction of Jerusalem symbolizes the rejection of the gospel by the Jews and thus the shift of salvation-history from the Jews to the Gentiles, the former losing their priority; and
- (3) the abundant evidence of Jewish persecution of Christians prior to (as well as after) A.D. 70.

According to this interpretation, the meaning of v 23b becomes the following: this exclusive mission of the twelve to Israel, which reflects their salvation-historical priority over the Gentiles, will not reach its completion before it is interrupted by the coming of the Son of Man in judgment upon Jerusalem, thereby symbolizing the time frame shift wherein the Gentiles, rather than the Jews, assume priority in the purpose of God. This mission to the Jews, reflecting their place in salvation-history, thus has a time limitation, the end of which (but not the end of Jewish evangelism) will be marked by the coming of the Son of Man in judgment upon Israel.

TEXT: Matthew 10:24-31

TITLE: REASSURANCE REGARDING PERSECUTION

BIG IDEA:
PERSECUTION SHOULD BE EXPECTED BUT NOT FEARED

INTRODUCTION:

Charles Swindoll: How easy it would have been for the disciples to just opt out at this point. Persecution? Suffering? Rejection? Scourging? Death? No way! Knowing the human tendency toward fear rather than faith, Jesus ministered to His disciples with encouraging words. Three times He told them, “Do not fear” (10:26, 28, 31). Why not fear in this mission of being sheep among wolves? Jesus gave three main reasons.

1. First, God wants His message revealed, not concealed (10:26-27). Therefore, He would see to it that they were protected and that His word would be proclaimed.
2. Second, even if the enemies of the gospel succeeded at putting His witnesses to death, they would continue on to eternal life (10:28). It is the persecutors who should be afraid – of God’s eternal judgment!
3. Third, God never ceases to love and care for His disciples even in the midst of great trials and tribulations. God is sovereign and providentially cares for even the sparrows (10:29). God is omniscient and knows even the number of hairs on a person’s head (10:30). Because of God’s omnipotence, omniscience, and benevolence, the disciples could have confidence that He will never abandon or forsake His own (10:31).

Grant Osborne: There are four reasons why one need not fear in the face of universal persecution.

1. As disciples, they are to be like their Master and so should expect persecution and not be surprised by it (vv. 24–25).
2. The time is coming when everything will be disclosed, so God’s servants must boldly proclaim what Jesus has taught them (vv. 26–27).
3. Those who can only kill the body are not worth fear; that must be reserved for the one who is Judge at the final judgment (v. 28).
4. God knows every part of his creation, and human beings are at the apex of that creation, so he will watch out for us (vv. 29–31).

Stanley Saunders: Fear is a primary cause for the failure of discipleship. Fear is also the primary motivation for our obeisance to human powers and our conformity to the structures and assumptions of a fallen world. Faithful proclamation of the gospel puts disciples on a collision course with the very powers that foment this fear. The primary tools at the disciples’ disposal include knowledge of God’s loving and merciful presence in the world, recognition of the facades of human power that are rooted in fear of death, awareness that the gospel produces division, and ongoing practices of hospitality and welcoming, especially with those at the margins of this world. These constitute both the mission itself and the means of persevering in mission.

I. (:24-25) RELATIONSHIP OF TEACHER AND DISCIPLE CREATES REALISTIC EXPECTATION OF PERSECUTION

Craig Blomberg: Even as they do not seek persecution and in fact actively shun it, all Christians can at times expect it. Promises of exemption from persecution offer false hope. People who have never experienced it probably have not sufficiently witnessed to their faith. But Jesus' words here must be balanced with the principles of 1 Tim 3:7 and 1 Pet 2:12; 3:15-16. To the extent that it is possible, Christians and their leaders should try to get along with and gain the respect of unbelievers in their communities.

Donald Hagner: Teacher and disciple, master and servant, stand together because of their respective responsibility and allegiance. Jesus and his chosen disciples stand preeminently together. In the present discourse Jesus is instructing them to extend his ministry to Israel with the same words and deeds that characterized his own ministry, that is, with the good news of the fulfillment and the dawning of the kingdom. But if Jesus suffers hostility and rejection, so must his disciples be prepared for the same. Thus, almost by definition, with discipleship to Jesus and the witness of the gospel comes an unavoidable suffering. A large incongruity exists between the content of the message and the current experience of Jesus and the disciples; no doubt the latter had trouble assimilating the announcement of Jesus at this point, although they probably connected them with the messianic woes preceding the eschatological age itself. Nevertheless, though these words are ominous, the disciples can be comforted that Jesus will have preceded them in the experience of suffering and rejection and in turn can sustain them in the midst of it. This has been the testimony of the Church throughout the ages.

B. (:25a) Disciples Must Emulate Their Teacher

“It is enough for the disciple that he become as his teacher, and the slave as his master.”

William Barclay: In this saying of Jesus, there are two things:

1. There is a warning. There is the warning that, as Christ had to carry a cross, so also the individual Christian must carry a cross. The word that is used for members of a household is the one Greek word oikiakoi. This word has a technical use: it means the members of the household of a government official, that is to say, the official's staff. It is as if Jesus said: 'If I, the leader and commander, must suffer, you who are the members of my staff cannot escape.' Jesus calls us not only to share his glory but to share his warfare and his agony; and we do not deserve to share the fruits of victory if we refuse to share the struggle of which these fruits are the result.
2. There is the statement of a privilege. To suffer for Christ is to share the work of Christ; to have to sacrifice for the faith is to share the sacrifice of Christ. When Christianity is hard, we can say to ourselves not only: 'We are treading where the saints have trod'; we can also say: 'We are treading where the feet of Christ have trod.'

C. (:25b) Disciples Will Be Vilified Like Their Teacher

“If they have called the head of the house Beelzebul, how much more the members of his household!”

Grant Osborne: The point here is that if the teacher is maligned, why should the student expect to be accepted? I tell my students regularly to read 2 Cor 11:16–33 every six months and ask, “Am I better than Paul? Should I expect everything always to go well in my ministry?” Christian leaders today do not know how to handle adversity!

The meaning has been disputed. It has been common (even in the NIV, but corrected in TNIV) to label this “Beelzebub” (“lord of the flies”), an ancient insult to the Canaanite deity; but the Greek has “Beelzebul,” which could mean “lord of the dung” (bā ‘ēl zibbûl), but is better “lord of the heights”—in fact a play on words with the “lord of the house” in v. 25a. He was the chief God of Ekron (2 Kgs 1:2) but here is the “prince of demons,” Satan (9:34; 12:24), a being who had several other names in Jewish circles—Azazel, Belial, Beliar, the Dragon, Mastema. The leaders are accusing Jesus of gaining control over demons by allying himself with Satan. The disciples should expect at least as much.

Richard Gardner: Since the name itself means “head of the house” or “lord of the dwelling,” Jesus is actually making a pun in 10:25b. If persons call the head of (God’s) house the head of (Satan’s) house, how much more will they discredit the rest of the household?

John MacArthur: We are to be like our Teacher. We are to be like our Master and our Lord and our King. That is our commitment. We are called to be like Him. That’s what it means to have His values, to have His commitments, to have His priorities, to be given utterly over to His will and His purposes and His kingdom. We are to be like Him.

Now, we said last time that if we are like Him, we will be also treated like him.

II. (:26-31) 3 REASONS NOT TO FEAR PERSECUTION

Walter Wilson: In addition to creating a frame around the next unit (10:26–31), the parallel formulations μή οὐν φοβηθήτε (10:26a) and μή οὐν φοβεῖσθε (10:31a) express its main theme, with καὶ μή φοβεῖσθε in 10:28 bringing the number of “fear not” imperatives up to three. Despite the prominence of this feature, in terms of its rhetorical posture, 10:26–31 is better described as encouragement than exhortation, with Jesus offering the Twelve arguments meant to reassure them—even in the midst of suffering and persecution—of their place in God’s plan.

Donald Hagner: Wherever the gospel of the kingdom is proclaimed there will be opposition. When that opposition escalates into open hostility, the messengers of the good news are not to be afraid. The message must be proclaimed, and God will surely look after the ultimate welfare of his servants. Even death itself is not to be feared, for the person is more than the body. Life after death is assumed here as a fact, as is the reality of judgment. In short, God, the “Father,” who watches over the sparrows and knows the number of hairs on a person’s head, will care for his disciples through all that they may have to experience in the service of the gospel. In difficult times the disciples and the witnessing Church of every age have been able to take courage from these words (cf. 8:31).

A. (:26-27) Because God Has a Vested Interest in Open Proclamation of Kingdom Truth

1. (:26) Goal of Disclosure of God’s Truth

“Therefore do not fear them, for there is nothing covered that will not be revealed, and hidden that will not be known.”

William Barclay: The meaning of that is that the truth will triumph. ‘Great is the truth,’ ran the Latin proverb, ‘and the truth will prevail.’ When James VI threatened to hang or exile the reformer Andrew Melville, Melville’s answer was: ‘You cannot hang or exile the truth.’ When Christians are involved in suffering and sacrifice and even martyrdom for their faith, they must remember that the day will come when things will be seen as they really are; and then the power of the persecutor and the heroism of Christian witness will be seen at their true value, and each will have its true reward.

John MacArthur: Your enemies cannot prevent your vindication. That’s what He’s saying. Look, people. Look. You’ve got to live with an eternal perspective. You see? That’s what He’s saying. If you’re stuck on worrying about what the world is going to say, you’re looking at the wrong thing. What you want to be looking at is what God’s going to say in the end. Right?

2. (:27) Goal of Dissemination of God’s Truth

“What I tell you in the darkness, speak in the light; and what you hear whispered in your ear, proclaim upon the housetops.”

Walter Wilson: The relevance of the proverbial assertion in 10:26 to the argument is then clarified by the command in 10:27, which has the effect of reinforcing the correlation motif. Through their ministry, the disciples reveal what Jesus has revealed to them (cf. 13:11, 52), which in turn reflects what the Father has revealed to him (11:25, 27; cf. 16:17). By extension, the disciples’ ministry constitutes a revelatory action of God and as such can be assigned eschatological significance (cf. 24:14). The new epoch of revelation inaugurated by the birth of the Messiah continues in the time of the church (cf. 17:9; 28:19–20), culminating in the final disclosure that takes place at the last judgment (cf. 10:28, 32–33, 39, 41–42). From this perspective, even the experience of persecution is properly understood as an occasion for disclosure and dissemination, tasks whose execution is understood to be guided by divine necessity (cf. 10:19–20).

Grant Osborne: The time of “darkness” when Jesus’ teaching was “whispered in your ears” refers to his private instruction of the disciples. But they in a sense have graduated, with 10:1–4 being their ordination service, so now they must proclaim these truths “in the light ... from the rooftops.” In the first century important public announcements were given from the flat rooftops. So Jesus is saying this mission is to be one of fearless proclamation, public and powerful in its intensity.

William Barclay: Christian preachers and teachers are men and women who listen with reverence and who speak with courage, because they know that, whether they listen or speak, they are in the presence of God.

D. A. Carson: The truth must emerge. The gospel and its outworkings in the disciples may not now be visible to all, but nothing will remain hidden forever. And if the truth will emerge at the end, how wise to declare it fully and boldly now. Flat rooftops of Palestinian houses provided excellent places for speakers (cf. Josephus, J.W. 2.611 [21.5]). In a sense, the apostles were to have more of a public ministry than Jesus himself. He told them things in private, some of which they did not even understand until after the resurrection (see Reflections, p. 252; cf. Jn 14:26; 16:12–15). But they were to teach them fully and publicly.

B. (:28) Because Physical Death Does Not Determine Your Ultimate Destiny

1. Negative Description – Don't Fear Those Whose Power Is Limited

“And do not fear those who kill the body, but are unable to kill the soul;”

Grant Osborne: Jesus is not drawing an absolute distinction between the two parts of a human being, body and soul, as if we are a dualistic being rather than a whole person. Still, he is saying that if all a person can do is destroy your mortal body, that is nothing to fear. The most important part of a person, the soul, will live on. Moreover, we all look forward to a new “spiritual body” (1 Cor 15:44) anyway, to be received at the parousia.

Warren Wiersbe: Martin Luther caught this truth when he wrote,

*Let goods and kindred go,
This mortal life also;
The body they may kill:
God's truth abideth still;
His kingdom is forever.*

R. T. France: Fear of God is balanced by trust in God as the disciple's heavenly Father; the God who can destroy in hell is also the God who cares for the smallest bird. Within his fatherly care, there is nothing to fear from human hostility.

2. Positive Description – Only Fear God Who Controls Ultimate Destiny

“but rather fear Him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell.”

John Nolland: The ultimacy of death is relativized by the image of a more fearful ‘death’ experience. Talk of killing ‘the body’ already implies that there is more to a person than the body, but the presence of the body again in the post-death state warns against a division along the lines of mortal body and immortal soul. . . . There is no better word with which to render it with here than ‘soul’, but it means more the essential person than an ontologically separable component of a person. Matthew's point is not that the soul is deathless, but that only God has power over it. Death is a dreadful reversal, but not the most extreme one possible. Fear of God is to displace fear of death-dealing persecutors. The stakes are higher with God.

C. (:29-31) Because Your Heavenly Father Values You

1. (:29) Have Confidence in God's Omnipotence

“Are not two sparrows sold for a cent?”

And yet not one of them will fall to the ground apart from your Father.”

John MacArthur: Thirdly, finally, the third reason we need not fear is because of what I call valuation. Vindication, veneration, and valuation.

Grant Osborne: Sparrows were by far the cheapest food (considered food for the poor), as a “penny” (ἀσσαπίου, genitive of price, cf. BDF §179) was the smallest coin in the Roman world, worth one-sixteenth of a denarius, so less than an hour's wage.

D. A. Carson: The third reason for not being afraid is an a fortiori argument: If God's providence is so all-embracing that not even a sparrow drops from the sky apart from the will of God, cannot that same God be trusted to extend his providence over Jesus' disciples?

2. (:30) Have Confidence in God's Omniscience

"But the very hairs of your head are all numbered."

Daniel Doriani: Jesus says God even numbers the hairs on our heads. Experts say humans typically have 100,000 to 500,000 hairs. These numbers do not necessarily follow our wishes. For many men, hairs disappear from the forehead and crown while they multiply on the ear, the nose, and eyebrow, where we do not want them. God numbers even the erratically proliferating hairs on our head. We should not fear because he cares about the details of life more than we do.

3. (:31) Have Confidence in God's Great Love

"Therefore do not fear; you are of more value than many sparrows."

Walter Wilson: The image of God the destroyer (10:28) is then juxtaposed with the image of God the Father (10:29–31), a claim regarding divine sovereignty over the future segueing into a claim regarding divine sovereignty over the present. In terms of its logic and structure, the unit exhibits features of sapiential argumentation, the rhetorical question in 10:29a drawing an example from everyday experience, while 10:29b appeals to the concept of God's solicitude for the world's creatures, and 10:30 has the appearance of a proverb.

William Barclay: Matthew says that two sparrows are sold for a penny and yet not one of them falls to the ground without the knowledge of God. Luke gives us that saying of Jesus in a slightly different form: 'Are not five sparrows sold for two pennies? Yet not one of them is forgotten in God's sight' (Luke 12:6). The point is this – two sparrows were sold for one penny. (The coin is the assarion, which was one-sixteenth of a denarius; a denarius was the average day's pay for a working man.) But if the purchaser was prepared to spend two pennies, he got not four sparrows but five. The extra one was thrown into the bargain as having no value at all. God cares even for the sparrow which is thrown into the bargain, and which by human reckoning has no value at all. Even the forgotten sparrow is dear to God.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What types of situations stir up in us the fear of man?
- 2) Why does emulating the character and behavior of Jesus necessarily involve sharing in His rejection and suffering?
- 3) How can we increase our boldness to opening proclaim God's truth?
- 4) How secure are you in God's knowledge of what you are facing and His love and power to take care of you?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Grant Osborne: This is a remarkable passage and shows two things: God is sovereign over all human affairs, and the believer need never worry. Regarding whatever happens we can "cast all

[our] anxiety on him because he cares for [us]" (1 Pet 5:7). Within this framework, there are several issues worth discussing further:

1. The Believer to Emulate Christ in Every Area
2. The Time of Intense Disclosure of Eternal Truths
3. A Deep Faith in God's Providential Care
4. God's Care for His Own

Daniel Doriani: Publicity is a blessing for all that is good and true. Schemers and evildoers love darkness. The truth loves the light. God makes the truth known and so should we. To do so, we must listen to God as he speaks in the Bible. We must also test our thoughts lest we wrongly think they are God's. And if an idea passes the test, we must be brave enough to speak it.

Hugh Latimer was a leader of the English Reformation. On one occasion, he had the daunting privilege of preaching before the sometimes violent King Henry VIII. Latimer was about to say something the king might dislike and fell into an audible dialogue with himself as he stood in the pulpit: "Latimer, Latimer! Be careful what you say. The king is here." Then he paused and said, "Latimer, Latimer! Be careful what you say. The King of Kings is here." Another Reformer, John Knox, was even more famous than Latimer for boldness in the face of danger. When he died, they said, "Here lies one who feared God so much that he never feared the face of any man."

This knowledge is the source of boldness, both for preachers and for ordinary men and women. If Jesus says it, even at a whisper, we should shout it from the rooftops. If we have amplifiers, we should crank up the volume.

Brian Evans: The Key to Enduring to the End – Fear God Not Man

The main thrust of this entire section, last week and today, is that we would stand strong when faced with persecution for the name of Jesus. Our Lord is concerned with our endurance through trying times of hardship resulting from our faithfulness to Jesus. He knows that as we follow Him in obedience the lost world will hate us and persecute us as a result of our commitment to Jesus and because we are not committed to the things they are. When you don't worship the same idols they do you will be hated. . .

It's important here that we see that even in times of non-persecution the fear of man is one of our great enemies. Because of our sin nature we have misappropriated fear of God to the fear of man. Jesus knows this and is here to help us overcome the sin of the fear of man. . .

Vs. 26 -- We do not need to fear man because God is fully aware of the truth. When lost people slander us and speak to us like we are stupid for believing what we do it's okay because God knows. When we are maligned and treated badly God knows and He will make all things right in the end. . .

Does the fact that as His people, He knows us intimately, will never forget about us, cares for us and has even our deaths in His hands give you confidence to endure to the end and be saved even if that end means our death?

As hard as these sayings of Jesus are for us to hear and think through they should bring us confidence, God has everything in control.

So, the question of whom to fear really becomes very clear as Christians. Fear God not man because God has control over all things. God alone has power over your soul. Men can only kill us they cannot touch our souls.

Scott Harris: Confidence for Disciples (:24-33)

The grammar of Jesus' instruction changes from being mostly specific to the apostles to more general statements that apply to believers of every age. He begins to use the indefinite third person (a disciple, a slave, everyone, whoever, etc.) along with the second person (you, your) which clearly indicates that He is speaking about every true believer and not just the apostles. What we will examine this morning applies directly to us!

We have already seen in the past weeks that persecution will come to those that live righteously. The world hates Jesus and therefore anyone else that is truly reflective of Him. Jesus will point that out again in this morning's text, but at the same time He also points out the great hope that is given to His followers. The disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ can be confident. We do not need to fear the future regardless of the strength and intensity of any persecution that may come upon us because God has given us eternity. There is no cause for us to worry about our Savior's love, for God is personally and intimately involved with us. His love for us is infinite in keeping with His own character.

Those who are true disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ can have confidence in five areas:

1. Confidence in the purpose of their life,
2. Confidence in being used by the Lord,
3. Confidence in the midst of persecution,
4. Confidence in God's intimate care for them, and
5. Confidence when they stand before God.

TEXT: Matthew 10:32 – 11:1

TITLE: COST AND COMPENSATION OF DISCIPLESHIP

BIG IDEA:

DISCIPLESHIP INVOLVES CONFESSION, CONFLICT, COST BUT ALSO REWARD

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: Jesus finalizes his Mission Discourse by demanding fearless confession in the midst of conflict. As such it acts as a concluding summary of the themes in the rest of this passage. Confessing Jesus is not an option; every believer who refuses to acknowledge Jesus before the world will be disowned by Christ, with judgment the result (vv. 32–33). Since the presence of the final kingdom in Christ will drive a sword even between family relationships (vv. 34–36), the only solution is to place Christ even above family in your life and to lose all for him (vv. 37–39). But at the same time, you are now identified completely with Christ, and whatever people do to you they are doing to Christ (vv. 40–42).

Matthew McCraw: One fishing trip that I've really enjoyed is an inshore fishing trip I went on near the 10,000 islands off the coast of Collier County, Florida. I went on that fishing trip with a friend of mine from a previous church in order to catch some species of fish that I had not caught that were the prized fish for inshore fishing. On that trip, we caught trout, sharks, tarpon, snook, and redfish. It was a great trip.

I said to my friend, that I wish I could find and catch fish like he did. He said that it was easy to do so. All you had to do was be a third generation Collier County fisherman, purchase a $60,000 boat, and fish there your whole life, and then you could fish like he did.

You see, my friend was committed to being a great fisherman. He had put in the work, he was passionate, and he had spent the money. He had really given himself to that work.

All the greats in this world are committed to whatever it is that makes them great. Great athletes practice thousands of hours in order to achieve a high level in their sport. Great doctors have done hundreds of surgeries and seen thousands of patients. They've studied and consulted hours upon hours. To be the best at something, that something has to have priority in your life.

Today, we're going to learn that if we want to be great at faithfully following the Father, Jesus must have absolute priority in our lives.

John Heil: Like the disciples, the members of the audience are to publicly confess Jesus before people, including in their communal worship, so that Jesus will confess them before his Father in heaven in the final judgment (10:32–33). They must endure opposition to Jesus even in their families, and be more devoted to Jesus than to their family members (10:34–37). They are to follow Jesus to the point of performing the ethical self-sacrificial worship of taking up their cross and losing their lives for his sake in order to find them (10:38–39). Those who receive and extend merciful care ("a cup of cold water," 10:42) for them as disciples, who are to be like prophets and righteous people, are actually receiving Jesus and the God who sent him. This adds another dimension to the way that Jesus is present and an object of worship as "God with us"

(1:23). Those who extend merciful care to disciples of Jesus are thus performing ethical worship (“I desire mercy, not [simply] sacrifice” [9:13; cf. Hos 6:6]) for which they will receive a heavenly reward (10:40–42).

I. (:32-38) DISCIPLESHIP INVOLVES CONFESSION, CONFLICT AND COST

A. (:32-33) Confessing the Messiah as Lord

1. (:32) Confession

*“Everyone therefore who shall confess Me before men,
I will also confess him before My Father who is in heaven.”*

John Nolland: Perhaps the basis for vv. 32-33 is to be found in the prospect of persecution of v. 25 coupled with the calls not to fear it in vv. 26-31.

Grant Osborne: The term “confesses” (ὁμολογέω) is used of confessing Jesus as Messiah (John 9:22) or Lord (Rom 10:9) and here has the idea of public proclamation of allegiance to Jesus.

Charles Swindoll: Loyal disciples openly acknowledge Christ before the world.

R. T. France: The context of judgment before God gives added urgency to the choice which this saying demands, between the short-term advantage of preserving human approval and the humanly risky but ultimately sound course of maintaining a prior loyalty to Jesus in the face of human opposition. The use of the broad term “people” (see on v. 17) here has the effect of contrasting human with divine approval. The issue is not merely obedience to Jesus’ teaching, but the explicit “acknowledgement” of him as Lord before a hostile world. The saying, which Matthew introduces with an inferential “So,” thus appropriately follows on not only from vv. 26–31 about fearing God rather than people, but also from vv. 17–22 about the need to maintain a faithful witness to Jesus even when it means suffering “because of me.” It provides the ultimate basis for the disciple’s willingness to proclaim Jesus from the rooftops (v. 27). What ultimately decides a person’s destiny is what Jesus himself will have to say about them “before my Father who is in heaven.” Cf. 7:21–23 for a similar statement of Jesus’ personal role in final judgment; the christological implications are as startling here as there. His verdict will be on a reciprocal basis: acknowledgement or denial depending on whether they have acknowledged or denied him. The later experience of Peter (26:69–75) is an object-lesson in denying Jesus under the pressure of public opinion, but Peter’s subsequent rehabilitation adds a reassuring suggestion that the stark verdict of this saying may be understood to refer to a settled course of acknowledgment or denial rather than to every temporary lapse under pressure.

2. (:33) Denial

*“But whoever shall deny Me before men,
I will also deny him before My Father who is in heaven.”*

Grant Osborne: It is clear that our status before God is completely tied to our relationship with Christ. Our eternal destiny depends on our acceptance or renunciation of Christ. Further, he along with God will be the Judge at the final judgment (cf. 7:21–23), and his witness about us will be the determining factor in where we spend eternity. At the same time, this is not just speaking of the apostate but also of the weak Christian who tries to remain anonymous, i.e., refuses to stand up for Christ at school or in the workplace. Such a one is, in effect, “ashamed” of Christ, and in another saying of Jesus on this same topic, he will be “ashamed” of that person (Mark 8:38) on the day of judgment.

Donald Hagner: Jesus stands at the center of the message of the kingdom, not only announcing it but bringing it through his ministry of word and deed. In the final analysis, therefore, one’s relation to Jesus is all important. Relation to God is only possible through relation to him, and to reject him is in effect to reject God (cf. v 40). The importance of Christology for Matthew is plainly evident in this passage. Jesus is both the object of commitment and the sole mediating subject on behalf of others to the Father. No middle ground or “neutrality” is envisioned here. One is either for Jesus or against him. The boundaries of Judaism are broken here, for no prophet, teacher, or rabbi is capable of such words. Matthew continually keeps before us the uniqueness of Jesus.

William Barclay: It is still possible to deny Jesus Christ.

(1) We may deny him with our words.

As Christians, we can never escape the duty of being different from the world. It is not our duty to conform to the world; it is our duty to be transformed out of it.

(2) We can deny him by our silence.

There can be a menace of things unsaid in the Christian life. Again and again, life brings us the opportunity to speak some word for Christ, to utter some protest against evil, to take some stand, and to show what side we are on. Again and again on such occasions, it is easier to keep silence than to speak. But such a silence is a denial of Jesus Christ. It is probably true that far more people deny Jesus Christ by cowardly silence than by deliberate words.

(3) We can deny him by our actions.

We can live in such a way that our life is a continuous denial of the faith which we profess. Those who have given their allegiance to the gospel of purity may be guilty of all kinds of small-scale dishonesties and breaches of strict honour. Those who have undertaken to follow the Master who bade us take up a cross can live a life which is dominated by attention to their own ease and comfort. Those who have entered the service of him who himself forgave and who bade his followers to forgive can live a life of bitterness and resentment and variance with others. Those whose eyes are meant to be on that Christ who died for love of men and women can live a life in which the idea of Christian service and Christian charity and Christian generosity are conspicuous by their absence.

John MacArthur: The negative side of Jesus' warning is sobering: But whoever shall deny Me before men, I will also deny him before My Father who is in heaven. This warning applies to a person who makes an outward profession of Christianity but turns away when hard testing comes. It is possible to deny Christ before men by silence, by failing to witness for Him and trying to be an unnoticed Christian—whose friends and neighbors, and perhaps even family, would never suspect of being a believer. It is also possible to deny Christ by actions, living like the rest of the world lives, with no higher standards or values. It is possible to deny Christ by words, using the world's profanity, vulgarity, and blasphemy. It is possible to deny Christ in many ways that are short of verbally and publicly renouncing Him. The future tenses in verses 32-33 tell us that Jesus is speaking of future judgment. In that day, those who confess Him, He will also confess, and those who deny Him, He will also deny. The difference between true and false discipleship is a much-repeated theme in Matthew. Near the beginning of the Sermon on the Mount Jesus said, "Unless your righteousness surpasses that of the scribes and Pharisees, you shall not enter the kingdom of heaven" (5:20). Later during the sermon He distinguished between false disciples, who go in the wide gate and travel the broad way, and true disciples, who enter by the narrow gate and walk in the narrow way (7:13-14). He spoke of those who bear good fruit and those who bear bad fruit (7:16-20) and then said, "Not everyone who says to Me, 'Lord, Lord,' will enter the kingdom of heaven; but he who does the will of My Father who is in heaven. Many will say to Me on that day, 'Lord, Lord, did we not prophesy in Your name, and in Your name cast out demons, and in Your name perform many miracles?' And then I will declare to them, I never knew you; depart from Me, you who practice lawlessness" (vv. 21-23). Immediately after that He distinguished between the person who builds his religious house on the sand of man's wisdom and is destroyed and the person who builds on the rock of His Word and is saved (vv. 24-27).

B. (:34-36) Considering the Conflict in Family Relationships

1. (:34) Principle

*"Do not think that I came to bring peace on the earth;
I did not come to bring peace, but a sword."*

Donald Hagner: The form of the statement not to expect Jesus to bring peace (μὴ νομίσητε, "do not imagine"; cf. 5:17) suggests that this would have been the natural inclination of the disciples. Was not the gospel a message of peace (cf. 5:9; 10:13)? Would not the age of the kingdom of God bring peace (εἰρήνη) with it (cf. Luke 1:79b; Isa 9:6; 11:9)? The answer must clearly be yes in its final realization and even in some sense in the present (cf. John 14:27). But in the peculiar and unexpected interim period of the proclamation of the kingdom, as has already been shown, strange things may be expected by the disciples and later messengers of the kingdom. The hostility now in view—that between otherwise close family members—is described with the metaphor of a "sword" (μάχαιραν; cf. Luke's διαμερισμόν, "division").

Norman Geisler: We must distinguish between the purpose of Christ's coming to earth and the result of it. His design was to bring peace—peace with God for unbelievers (Rom. 5:1) and eventually, the peace of God for believers (Phil. 4:7). However, the immediate consequence of Christ's coming was to divide those who were for Him and those who were against Him—the children of God from the children of this world. But, just as the goal of an amputation is to relieve pain, so the immediate effect is to inflict pain. Likewise, Christ's ultimate mission is to bring peace, both to the human heart and to earth. Nonetheless, the immediate effect of His message was to divide those in the kingdom of God from those in the kingdom of Satan.

R. T. France: Already in 5:11–12 Jesus has made it clear that the good life will indeed result in hostility and persecution, and now he is in no mood to compromise. These are not just some unfortunate side-effects of a basically acceptable mission. The very purpose of Jesus' coming is "not peace but a sword," because the message of God's kingship is one which always has and always will lead to violent response from those who are threatened by it (11:12). As 5:11–12 has already reminded them, this has been true in the experience of God's prophets even before Jesus came, and a sobering quotation from Micah 7:6 underlines the point. To represent Jesus is to accept their share in the way he is treated by a hostile world (vv. 24–25), and now the lethal nature of that opposition is made explicit by the first reference in this gospel to the "cross." And it comes on the scene, startlingly, not only as his eventual fate, but as theirs. To follow Jesus is to embrace martyrdom. . .

The “mission statement” here is meant to shock. Not only is peace a basic human aspiration, but it was understood to be the purpose of the Messiah’s coming (e.g. Isa 9:6–7; Zech 9:10) and the defining characteristic of God’s eschatological rule (e.g. Isa 11:6–9). Matthew will draw attention in 21:4–5 to how Jesus presented himself as the messianic king who brings peace, and his non-confrontational style will be commented on in 12:15–21 and demonstrated in chs. 26–27 in the story of his quiet acceptance of unjust accusation and condemnation. His coming was proclaimed as the dawn of “peace on earth” (Luke 2:14), and it is “peace” which the disciples are being sent out to offer (v. 13). Peace-making is an essential part of the good life (5:9). But the way to peace is not the way of avoidance of conflict, and Jesus will be continuously engaged in robust controversy especially in chs. 21–23, while his whole experience will be the opposite of a “peaceful” way of life. His followers can expect no less, and their mission to establish God’s peaceful rule can be accomplished only by sharing his experience of conflict. The “sword” can hardly be understood literally, as the literal use of the sword is explicitly forbidden in 26:51–52; it is a metaphor for conflict and suffering, as in Luke 2:35.

John Nolland: The ‘sword’ stands as an image of destructive hostility. Though the sword is quite a common image for divine judgment, that does not appear to be how it is used here.

2. (:35-36) Particulars

a. (:35) Specific Examples

*“For I came to set a man against his father, and a daughter against her mother,
and a daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law;”*

Charles Swindoll: Loyal disciples willingly accept rejection, even from their own families. When we openly acknowledge our identity as Christ followers through words and actions (10:32–33), we shouldn’t be surprised when social conflict ensues. When Christ returns and sets everything right, peace will reign across the globe. All nations will acknowledge the kingship of Jesus. But until then, our expressed commitment to Christ will not result in increasing peace and harmony. Instead, it will bring division, disharmony, misunderstanding, and the harshest kinds of rejection and persecution. In His first coming, Christ did not come to immediately usher in the messianic age of peace and prosperity (10:34). Rather, during His time on earth – and during the subsequent age of the church – spiritual warfare would ensue, manifested in godless cultures and in conflict among those in even the closest relationships.

b. (:36) Summary

“and a man's enemies will be the members of his household.”

William Barclay: He offers a choice; and we have to choose sometimes between the closest ties of earth and loyalty to Jesus Christ.

John Bunyan knew all about that choice. The thing which troubled him most about his imprisonment was the effect it would have upon his wife and children. What was to happen to them, bereft of his support? ‘The parting with my wife and poor children hath often been to me in this place, as the pulling the flesh from my bones; and that not only because I am somewhat too fond of these great mercies, but also because I should have often brought to my mind the many hardships, miseries, and wants that my poor family was like to meet with, should I be taken from them, especially my poor blind child, who lay nearer my heart than all I had besides. O the thought of the hardship I thought my blind one might go under, would break up my heart to pieces ... But yet, recalling myself, thought I, I must venture you all with God, though it goeth to the quick to leave you; O I saw in this condition, I was a man who was pulling down his house upon the head of his wife and children; yet thought I, I must do it, I must do it.'

Once again, this terrible choice will come very seldom, in God's mercy to many of us it may never come; but the fact remains that all loyalties must give place to loyalty to God.

C. (:37-39) Counting the Cost of Following Jesus

1. (:37) In Terms of Relationships

a. Parents

"He who loves father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me;"

b. Children

"and he who loves son or daughter more than Me is not worthy of Me."

Charles Swindoll: Loyal disciples sacrificially choose their essential priorities. Fidelity to Christ will be neither easy nor popular. In Matthew 10:37-39, we see that it calls for a complete reversal of the world's priorities, passions, and pursuits. The world tells us to be concerned about ourselves, our own lives, our own interests, our own identities, our own families, our own peace and security, and our own possessions.

Grant Osborne: In one sense the family disowns the believer (vv. 35–36) and in another sense the believer sets aside allegiance to the family (v. 37). The key term is "worthy" (ἄξιος, discussed in 10:10–11); one is "worthy" or "deserving" of Jesus only if he is placed ahead of all earthly attachments, even family ties. The use of "loves" (φιλεῖν) points to both affection and loyalty. Jesus, of course, recognizes the deep love between parents and children (15:4–6; 19:19), but he demands the deeper commitment. This is the core of discipleship; if Jesus is not first, we do not "deserve" to be his disciple.

2. (:38) In Terms of Life Itself

"And he who does not take his cross and follow after Me is not worthy of Me."

Grant Osborne: True discipleship involves both a death to self and a willingness to die for Jesus (cf. also Mark 8:34; Luke 9:23, 14:27; John 12:26).

Donald Hagner: The radical statement of v 37, with its stress on uncompromising loyalty to Jesus, is now exceeded by two remarkable descriptions of the nature of discipleship in absolute terms. The attachment and loyalty to Jesus referred to in the preceding verse are now seen to involve even greater demands: absolute obedience and thus self-denial. . .

Taking up one's cross refers not to the personal problems or difficulties of life that one must bear, as it is sometimes used in common parlance, but to a radical obedience that entails self-denial and, indeed, a dying to self. To take up one's cross is to follow in the footsteps of Jesus, who is the model of such radical obedience and self-denial (cf. 4:1–11). Thus in a real sense v 39 is a kind of exegesis of v 38.

John MacArthur: Committing your life to follow Jesus Christ means you would not only forsake your family, if need be, the people closest to you that you love the most; you'd lose your life.

That's the mark of genuineness. And you're never to be intimidated by the world; you'd confess Christ in the most hostile environment. It's the mark of your genuineness.

And they understood that He meant death. They understood that to take up the cross means abandoning myself to the lordship of Christ if it means I pay with my life. You see, the love of Christ has to overrule the normality of family love. And the love of Christ has to overrule the instinct of self-preservation.

Bruce Barton: Death on a cross was a form of execution used by Rome for dangerous criminals. A prisoner carried his own cross to the place of execution, signifying submission to Rome's power. Following Jesus, therefore, meant identifying with Jesus and his followers, facing social and political oppression and ostracism, and no turning back. Christians follow their Lord by imitating his life and obeying his commands. To take up the cross meant to carry your own cross to the place where you would be killed. Many Galileans had been killed that way by the Romans. Applied to the disciples, to take up the cross meant to identify completely with Christ's message, even if death were to result. We must deny our selfish desires to use our time and money our own way and to choose our own direction in life without regard to Christ. Following Christ is costly now, but we are promised true victory and eternal rewards.

Adrian Rogers: Somebody asked Tozer, "What does it mean to take up your cross?" and Tozer told a story of an old man, and here's what he said. "One time, a young man came to an old saint who taught the deeper life, the crucified life, and said, 'Father, what does it mean to be crucified?' The old man thought for a moment and said, 'Well, to be crucified means three things.'" Now, listen to this, folks. Here's what it means to take up a cross. "First, the man who is crucified is facing only one direction." That's good. When you're crucified, you're only facing one direction. "The old man scratched his scraggly head and said, 'One thing more, son, about the man on the cross. He is not going back. He has said his final goodbyes. Thirdly, he said, the man on the cross has no further plans of his own.'" Did you get that? He's facing one direction. He's not going back. He said goodbye. And he has no further plans of his own.

3. (:39) In Terms of Self-Actualization

"He who has found his life shall lose it, and he who has lost his life for My sake shall find it."

Donald Hagner: The way of the world—well illustrated in the incessant quest for “self-actualization” in contemporary pop psychology—leads only to a shallow and temporary fulfillment. The seeking of “life” at this level has left many in frustration and disappointment. On the other hand, and strangely, those who give up this useless quest, who instead yield themselves fully to the service of God and the kingdom—who willingly follow in the steps of Jesus—these are the ones who paradoxically find life, i.e., fulfillment and deep, abiding joy. And though the best of this fulfillment awaits the eschaton, it is already experienced proleptically in the present. Thus those who do not seek self-actualization as understood by the world, who love Jesus and the kingdom more than themselves (and in that sense alone “hate” their own life [Luke 14:26]), are alone the ones who realize true and lasting self-actualization and obtain personal fulfillment and the goal of their existence.

William Barclay: There is no place for a policy of safety first in the Christian life. Those who seek first ease and comfort and security and the fulfilment of personal ambition may well get all these things – but they will not be happy; for we were sent into this world to serve God and one another. It is possible to hoard life if we wish to do so. But that way, we will lose all that makes life valuable to others and worth living for ourselves. The way to serve others, the way to fulfil God's purpose for us, the way to true happiness is to spend life selflessly, for only thus will we find life, here and hereafter.

William Hendriksen: Christ's words may be paraphrased as follows: "The person who, when the issue is between me and what he considers his own interests, chooses the latter, thinking that by so doing he is going to 'find' himself, that is, secure a firmer hold on the full life, will be bitterly disappointed. He will lose rather than gain. His happiness and usefulness will shrink and shrivel rather than increase. At last he will perish everlastingly. On the other hand, the one who, confronted with the choice, give himself away, that is, denies himself out of loyalty to me, being willing if need be to pay the supreme sacrifice, will attain to complete self-realization. He will have life and will have it more abundantly until at last he will share with me the glory of my return and of the new heaven and earth." Among the passages in which the same or at least a similar thought is expressed, and which shed light on the meaning of Matt. 10:39, are (in addition to Luke 9:23, 24): Matt. 16:26; Mark 8:34-38; Luke 17:32, 33; and John 12:25, 26.

II. (:40-42) DISCIPLESHIP ALSO INVOLVES REWARD

William Barclay: The Jews always felt that to receive a person's envoy or messenger was the same as to receive that person. To pay respect to an ambassador was the same as to pay respect to the king who had sent him. To welcome with love the messenger of a friend was the same as to welcome the friend. The Jews always felt that to honour a person's representative was the same as to honour the person who had sent the representative. This was particularly so in regard to wise men and to those who taught God's truth. The Rabbis said: "He who shows hospitality to the wise is as if he brought the first fruits of his produce unto God." "He who greets the learned is as if he greeted God." If people are truly of God, to receive them is to receive the God who sent them.

Charles Swindoll: Loyal disciples experience the blessing of union with Christ.

Stanley Saunders: Jesus began this sermon by sending the disciples out, vulnerable and dependent on hospitality, which he equated with "worthiness" (10:11-15). He closes by returning to the theme of "welcoming." Welcoming others in the name of Jesus is both the foundational practice of discipleship and a primary means of discovering and maintaining familial bonds with the members of God's household (10:40-42).

William Hendriksen: "He who receives a prophet because he is a prophet..." The meaning, then, is this: He who welcomes a prophet—not necessarily one of The Twelve but anyone who has the right to proclaim God's truth—and does this not merely out of considerations of politeness or cordiality but very definitely because he regards this messenger to be a prophet indeed, and therefore in welcoming him wishes to welcome his Sender, shall receive the same reward as if he, the welcomer, were himself a prophet. Lest there be any misunderstanding, as if the reward of grace and glory would be granted only to those who welcomed a specially commissioned messenger, Jesus adds, and he who receives a righteous person because he is a righteous person shall receive a righteous person's reward. Here again for "because he is" the original has "in the name of." The explanation is similar. The reward is promised because in the man who knocks at his door the welcomer recognizes "a righteous person," that is, one who practices the true religion. The man who devotes his life to the performance of the urgently necessary and eminently noble task of providing lodging for, cooperating with, and encouraging God's traveling children is promised the same reward as are those whom he befriends.

Homer Kent: To conclude this charge Jesus shows that those who risk persecution shall be appropriately rewarded.

A. (:40) General Principle of Representation Based on Union of Ambassador with Sender

“He who receives you receives Me, and he who receives Me receives Him who sent Me.”

Look at how close the connection is between the Father and the Son (whom He has sent). Then consider how close the connection is between Christ and His disciples (whom He has sent).

R. T. France: Underlying such sayings, with their repeated reference to being “sent”, is the principle later enshrined in the Jewish legal institution of the šāliḥ, the “one sent,” an ambassador or representative who was understood to have the full authority of the one who sent them. It is those who recognize such authority in the disciples who will welcome them, just as it is those who recognize Jesus as God's representative who will welcome him. The unspoken corollary (but spelled out in Luke 10:16) is that those who reject the disciples on their mission are guilty of a far graver fault than merely lack of hospitality to a fellow human being; they are rejecting God.

John Nolland: The role here of equivalence between Jesus and the missionary links back to the expectation of equivalent treatment established in the beginning of the unit at v. 24, while the role of welcome here refreshes the focus on being sent out, which was strong in the opening two units of the discourse but has lost visibility thus far in this final part of the mission charge. The verse provides assurance that no ‘dilution’ is involved in encountering at one step removed what Jesus stands for and brings, but, more than that, it probably extends the recognised range of the presence of God anticipated in 1:23. In a mission charge such a statement offers great confidence of empowerment, and assurance of the significance of the task undertaken. A tie is generally claimed here with Jewish notions of the ‘authorised representative’ (šāliḥ) whose presence is to be treated as equivalent to that of the one who has sent him or her. A connection is certainly possible, but issues of legal authorisation are not particularly in focus here. In light of 10:11 and vv. 41-42 to come it is likely that receiving is intended to embrace welcoming and accepting for oneself the ministry of the disciple, and also supporting the ministry of the disciple.

B. (:41-42) Specific References to Various Rewards

1. (:41a) Reward of a Prophet

“He who receives a prophet in the name of a prophet shall receive a prophet's reward;”

2. (:41b) Reward of a Righteous man

“and he who receives a righteous man in the name of a righteous man shall receive a righteous man's reward.”

Daniel Doriani: But Jesus continues down a line to people who are ever less prominent:

- To receive an apostle is to receive Christ.
- To receive a prophet is to receive Christ.

- To receive a righteous man is to receive Christ.
- To receive a little one—the smallest member of the kingdom—is to receive Christ.

Tasker: Levertoff's understanding of these verses would seem most probable. "The passage", he writes, "seems to imply that as of old kindness shown to a prophet because he represented God (e.g. Elisha and the widow), and to a righteous man because he was righteous, was rewarded by God according to the measure of the merit of the prophet or the righteous man; so now even the simplest kindness shown to the most insignificant disciple of Christ, because he is a disciple of His, will be rewarded according to the merit of Christ himself." It is unlikely that there is any reference to a class of Christian prophets or any group of Christians known as "righteous men."

3. (:42) Reward for Any Work of Kindness

"And whoever in the name of a disciple gives to one of these little ones even a cup of cold water to drink, truly I say to you he shall not lose his reward."

Grant Osborne: So Jesus is speaking of the smallest of services to the weakest of people, yet an act noticed and rewarded by God.

Bob Utley: We can share in the reward of God's servants by supporting them in their work. Even seemingly insignificant works of kindness (a cup of cold water) performed for God's people are meaningful in God's eyes.. What could seem more insignificant than giving a person a cup of cold water? In a short time, they will be thirsty again. Yet even such a small gesture will always be remembered and rewarded by God. They shall by no means lose their reward. "Again it is not philanthropy which is in view, but reception of a disciple because he is a disciple (again literally 'in the name of')."

Donald Hagner: The supreme importance of the messengers and their message is made very clear. Reception of the message and the messengers amounts to reception of Jesus and, in turn, the one who sent him, God. For Matthew, this applies not merely to the twelve but to the messengers of the kingdom in his community and thus to those of the Church in every era. Here is the beginning of the NT teaching concerning the mediatorship of Jesus, bridging between humanity and God (1 Tim 2:5; cf. Heb 9:15; 12:24). Thus the reception accorded the messengers of the kingdom is nothing short of the reception accorded God himself! If the messengers are that important, then the hospitality accorded the representatives of the kingdom will not go unrewarded. And one's kind treatment of even a disciple will not be forgotten. Treatment of a disciple will later be described as equivalent to such treatment of Jesus, a point very much in accord with the present passage (cf. 25:40). All of this points finally to the extreme importance of the mission and therefore of the messengers themselves. The gospel must be proclaimed, and those who aid that proclamation, however indirectly, are performing an important, praiseworthy function.

Daniel Doriani: Why does God so notice? First, a small act—such as a timely word—can do great good. A timely word brings "healing to the bones." An apt word is like "apples of gold in settings of silver" (Prov. 15:23; 16:24; 25:11; Eccl. 10:12; 12:11). A kind word is as small as a cup of cold water, yet it can change a life.

Adelaide Proctor:

It isn't the thing you do, dear,
It's the thing you leave undone,
Which gives you the bitter heartache
At the setting of the sun;
The tender word unspoken,
The letter you did not write,
The flower you might have sent, dear,
Are your haunting ghosts at night.
The stone you might have lifted
Out of your brother's way,
The bit of heartsome counsel
You were hurried too much to say;
The loving touch of the hand, dear,
The gentle and winsome tone,
That you had no time or thought for,
With troubles enough of your own.
These little acts of kindness,
So easily out of mind,
These chances to be angels,
Which even mortals find—
They come in night and silence,
Each chill reproachful wraith,
When hope is faint and flagging,
And a blight has dropped on faith.
For life is all too short, dear.
And sorrow is all too great,
To suffer our slow compassion
That tarries until too late.
And it's not the thing you do, dear,
It's the thing you leave undone,
Which gives you the bitter heartache,
At the setting of the sun.

(11:1) CONCLUSION TO MISSION DISCOURSE -- TRANSITION

“When Jesus had finished giving instructions to His twelve disciples, He departed from there to teach and preach in their cities.”

Grant Osborne: This verse concludes the Mission Discourse. Like the previous discourse, it ends with “it happened that when Jesus had finished” (see on 7:28; cf. 13:53; 19:1; 26:1), which provides a transition to the action narrative that follows in chs. 11–12.

R. T. France: “Teaching and preaching” summarizes the general nature of Jesus' mission, which has been more fully described in 4:23; 9:35. The disciples' role in this mission, which has been so carefully spelled out in ch. 10, is surprisingly not now mentioned. We are not told anything about what happened during their mission (nor even explicitly that they went at all, though 10:5 says they were “sent”), nor when they returned from it, and Matthew does not even include their report back to Jesus (contrast Mark 6:30; Luke 9:10; 10:17). In 12:1 we shall find the disciples still accompanying Jesus in his travelling ministry, and there is nothing in ch. 11 to indicate that they were not with Jesus during the events there recorded. Clearly Matthew is more interested in the principles underlying the disciples' mission (and therefore that of his readers) than in any contribution it makes to his narrative of Jesus' Galilean period; the only time we shall hear of any of the disciples operating independently of Jesus is in 17:16, where it was not a success. The mission which has been that of Jesus from the beginning continues in the same vein despite its theoretical extension to the disciples in ch. 10. It will be only after Jesus' resurrection (28:19–20) that Matthew's narrative will envisage the disciples actually going out on their own.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How would you define the choice involved in following Jesus in terms of the challenges discipleship presents?
- 2) What are some of the ways in which we can deny Jesus in our everyday lives?
- 3) What are some of the wrong ways people today apply the phrase of "taking up your cross"?
- 4) What type of support are you providing for today's ambassadors of Jesus Christ?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Matthew McCraw: Jesus is hitting on this theme that He originally talked about when He told the apostles to go from town to town. He's saying that people who accept the apostles will be rewarded. Remember, He said it would be bad for those who rejected the message of the apostles. Now, He says He will reward those who welcome the message and welcomes those sent out.

He says even a cup of water given to a disciple of Jesus will not go unrewarded.

This passage should encourage us on two levels.

First, we should be encouraged that God will reward those who support us in the proclamation of God's message.

We have help in the mission. God has supernaturally and providentially orchestrated helpers along the way to encourage us, aid us, support us, and sustain us in our faithfulness to the proclamation of the Gospel!

How cool is that? God is involved in our lives and the lives of others to make this beautiful display of obedience and sacrifice play out.

Secondly, we should be encouraged to know that God will use us in the encouragement of those who are proclaiming God's message.

We can also be used by God to support each other, and others as the Gospel is proclaimed. Every little prayer you pray, every little email or note of encouragement you write, every dollar you give is seen by God. As you do it for disciples of Jesus it is as if you are doing it for Jesus Himself. Jesus sees you and you will be rewarded. Pray with confidence and joy! Support with confidence and joy! Encourage with confidence and joy! Give with confidence and joy!

Your faithfulness to accomplish the mission matters and your faithfulness to support the mission matters.

Jesus is so important, He is such a priority, that when you support those who serve Him, you are remembered and rewarded by God. It's all about Jesus and His work.

If you welcome a prophet of God, or a righteous person of God, or one of the disciples of God (or little ones as Jesus calls them), you will be rewarded by God.

Show how much a priority He is in your life by being a faithful disciple and supporting faithful disciples.

Scott Harris: Who Is a Disciple?

In recent years there has been a bit of a controversy among evangelicals over the nature of discipleship. Zane Hodges, a professor at Dallas Theological Seminary, began to promote the idea that there was a separation between salvation and being a disciple of Jesus. That notion has been picked up by others and promoted widely. However, the thesis is a false one. There is no separation between salvation and being a disciple because as I have pointed out before, a disciple is simply a student, a learner, someone that attaches themselves to a teacher in order to learn from them and become like them. There are those that read the Bible and think highly of Jesus and even try to imitate some of His character qualities, yet they do not know Him personally, they have not repented from their sins, they have not placed their faith in Him alone, they are not regenerate. There are pseudo-disciples of Jesus and they are not saved. But when it comes to those who are saved, there is no such thing as a saved person who is not a disciple. Romans 8:29, among other passages, makes it very clear that the purpose of our salvation is to become like Jesus Christ. Thus we can say that you can be a disciple without being saved, but you cannot be saved without being a disciple. Every true believer in Jesus Christ is also His follower.

Hallmarks of Genuine Disciples of Christ:

- THEY CONFESS CHRIST – Matthew 10:32, 33

This confession is to be "before men," so it is public in nature. Remember the context here contains persecution. It is the willingness to confess that Jesus is your Lord and to continue to do so even when that will cost you, possibly even your life. Jesus says here that for those who will do that, He will in turn confess them before the Heavenly Father.

- THEY VALUE CHRIST – Matthew 10:34-39
 - More than family
 - More than themselves

- THEY RECEIVE A REWARD – Matthew 10:40-42

To summarize these verses, any service done to any of God's people in Jesus' name amounts to service to Him and will be rewarded. When you go representing Christ bringing the whole gospel message to someone and they receive you and the message, they receive Jesus, and the person who receives Jesus receives God the Father as well. When we help out those that are serving the Lord we share in their reward even to the point of giving a cup of cold water to believers who seem insignificant and unimportant. When we are a blessing to others we are also blessed, and when other believers are a blessing to us they too are blessed. In God's work the lowliest believer can share in the blessings of the greatest. True disciples gain reward.

Brother Rory: The Choice – Cost and Compensation of Discipleship

I. THE COST OF DISCIPLESHIP (Matthew 10:34-38)

- Jesus says we must choose who we love.
- Jesus says we must choose who we want a relationship with.
- Jesus says we must choose where we want comfort.

And the reality is that if you choose anything over Jesus, then you don't get Him. It is the epitome of what God meant when He said, "I am a jealous God..." In other words to choose something over Him is the equivalent of denying Him. A disciple must choose Jesus over every other thing.

And then Jesus gives THREE THINGS that routinely cause people to deny Him.

1) SEPARATION FROM FAMILY

"He who loves father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me; and he who loves son or daughter more than Me is not worthy of Me."

2) THREAT OF SUFFERING

(38) "And he who does not take his cross and follow after Me is not worthy of Me."

Just before Jesus time, there was a Jewish insurrection against Rome by a zealot named Judas. The Romans easily stopped the insurrection, but to make a statement, the Roman general Varus ordered over 2,000 Jews to be crucified. It is said that the crosses lined the roads of Galilee from one end to the other.

When Jesus said take up your cross, they knew what it meant. They had to be willing to suffer for Him. They had to be willing to endure the harshest of treatment.

3) LOSS OF LIFE

(39) "He who has found his life will lose it, and he who has lost his life for My sake will find it."

Now certainly that could refer to physical death.

(the cross certainly would be)

But there is more to losing your life than just physical death.

A Christian is called to die to self. Paul said, "I die daily"

- It can be your occupation (like Matthew)
- It can be your reputation (like Paul)

There are many ways in which following Jesus will cost us life as we know it.

- Many have confessed Christ, and then moved across the world on mission.
- Many have confessed Him and very quickly changed occupations.
- Many have confessed and accepted a dramatic change in income.
- Many have confessed and as a result given up their fame or popularity.

Confessing Jesus costs you your life. And many aren't willing to follow that far.

II. THE COMPENSATION OF A DISCIPLE (Matthew 10:39-42)

Persecution is a real consequence of living for Jesus.

However, so is Heavenly Compensation.

If you choose to keep your life on earth, you have forfeited life for eternity.

If you choose to sacrifice your life, then you will receive your life for eternity.

"Losers finders, Keepers weepers"

Jim Elliot – "He is no fool who gives what he cannot keep to gain what he cannot lose."

You cannot lose anything, that God will not reward you.

Now, I know that Jesus is speaking directly to the twelve disciples, but if you'll notice, He extends this offer to all who hear this message.

(40) "He who receives you receives Me, and he who receives Me receives Him who sent Me."

If we will but surrender our life in this world, we will gain it come eternity.

AND NOT EVEN THE SMALLEST SACRIFICE WILL GO UNREWARDED

"And whoever in the name of a disciple gives to one of these little ones even a cup of cold water to drink, truly I say to you, he shall not lose his reward."

A disciple will be compensated.

Mark 10:28-30 "Peter began to say to Him, "Behold, we have left everything and followed You." Jesus said, "Truly I say to you, there is no one who has left house or brothers or sisters or mother or father or children or farms, for My sake and for the gospel's sake, but that he will receive a hundred times as much now in the present age, houses and brothers and sisters and mothers and children and farms, along with persecutions; and in the age to come, eternal life."

So that is it, very clearly and simply.
Do you choose the present or the future?
Do you follow Christ, or silently deny?

The notion that we can have this world and the next is just not a part of the gospel that Jesus preached. I know it is popular on television today, but Jesus never offered it. Jesus was very clear.

- Lose this life and find life for eternity.
- Keep this life and lost it for all eternity.
- You must be willing to surrender all to Jesus.

Matthew 10:32-33 “Therefore everyone who confesses Me before men, I will also confess him before My Father who is in heaven. But whoever denies Me before men, I will also deny Him before My Father who is in heaven.”

TEXT: Matthew 11:2-19

TITLE: DON'T LOOK FOR SHORTCUTS TO THE ARRIVAL OF THE KINGDOM

BIG IDEA:

FELLOWSHIP WITH CHRIST'S SUFFERINGS MUST PRECEDE ENJOYMENT OF KINGDOM EXALTATION – NO BYPASSING THE CROSS

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: Matthew 11:2 indicates a turning point in Matthew. There has been sporadic opposition (mainly 9:3–4, 11, 14, 34), but primarily a positive atmosphere as Jesus showed his authority and called for faith. The success of his ministry caused astonishment (7:28; 8:27; 9:8, 33), and the news went everywhere (4:24–25; 8:34; 9:26, 31). In the Mission Discourse he prophesied great trouble for future missions (10:14, 17–22, 25, 28, 35–36), and that begins here as the opposition intensifies in chs. 11–12. Of the nine pericopae in 11:1–12:50, six deal with rejection and judgment (11:2–19, 20–24; 12:1–8, 9–14, 22–37, 38–42), and the section begins with the doubt even of John the Baptist (11:3). Then Matthew adds to the parables of Mark 4 the parables of the weeds (13:24–30, 36–43) and of the net (13:47–52), both centering on the harvest that leads to final judgment. The section ends with Jesus rejected even in his own hometown (13:53–58).

I want to quote the mindset of the great Apostle Paul – what was his great passion in life:

Phil. 3:10-11 “that I may know Him and the power of His resurrection and the fellowship of His sufferings, being conformed to his death, in order that I may attain to the resurrection from the dead.”

He suffered greatly throughout his ministry and had many opportunities to be frustrated and doubt his calling – but he was in strong in faith – knowing that his call to ministry had included the promise of fellowship in the sufferings of Christ – remember God’s instructions to Ananias to help him overcome his hesitation to commission the former persecutor of the church of Jesus Christ:

Acts 9:1-16 “Go, for he is a chosen instrument of Mine, to bear My name before the Gentiles and kings and the sons of Israel, for I will show him how much he must suffer for My name’s sake.”

Today we are going to look at the frustration of an OT prophet whom Jesus himself labeled as greater even than the prophet Isaiah --

[Many other comparisons and contrasts in this deep passage –

- Comparison between John the Baptist and Elijah – the prophesied prophet who must come before the day of the Lord
- Comparison between John the Baptist and Christ – the people rejected both – different style of presentation, but same message of repentance from sin
- Comparison between the disciples of John the Baptist and the disciples of Christ – a new era has dawned in God’s program of redemptive history

- Comparison between the wickedness of past cities like Sodom and Gomorrah and the wickedness of this present generation who were privileged to witness the very miracles of Christ – they had the King Himself present to preach to them and convict them of sin and offer salvation -- and yet still rejected Him]

We are going to focus on what this passage teaches us with respect to the frustration felt by John the Baptist

Richard Gardner: Outline

1. Who Is Jesus? 11:1-6
2. Who Is John? 11:7-15
3. How Were They Received? 11:16-19

Donald Hagner: In chap. 11, the glorious character of the kingdom of God comes into view and then in turn the reality of judgment for those who reject it, a theme that will become increasingly prominent. John’s question enables the summarizing description of Jesus’ deeds, which corresponds to the sketch of chaps. 8–9 and to the commission given to the disciples in their missionary activity (cf. 10:8).

I. (:2-6) WORRISOME QUESTION FROM A FRUSTRATED SERVANT OF GOD

A. (:2-3) Frustrated Confusion in the Question of the Imprisoned Prophet

“Now when John in prison heard of the works of Christ, he sent word by his disciples, 3 and said to Him, ‘Are You the Expected One, or shall we look for someone else?’”

Donald Hagner: John’s doubts should not appear unreasonable, since he was obviously expecting an imminent end of the age involving the judgment of the wicked (3:12). And though he had heard rumors of messianic-like deeds performed by Jesus, his wicked captors had not yet been judged and he had not yet experienced the fulfillment of the messianic promise of “liberty to the captives” (Isa 61:1; and even more vividly, Isa 42:7). He continued to sit in the prison of Herod Antipas (in the fortress of Machaerus, east of the Dead Sea, according to Jos. Ant. 18.5.2) and thus could only send his disciples (cf. 9:14; 14:12) to Jesus with his question.

Grant Osborne: Jesus had come to be the suffering Servant who conquered sin, not the conquering King who came to destroy the enemies of God’s people. Neither John nor Jesus’ followers were ready for this type of Messiah.

If anyone deserved to be frustrated in ministry, it was certainly John the Baptist. If anyone was ever justified to have his faith overshadowed by troubling doubts, it was certainly John the Baptist. [You know the Scriptures never teach that the doctrine of Eternal Security – once saved always saved – means an experience of Zero doubts.] No one had sacrificed more or shown more commitment to the cause of Christ than that great forerunner who announced the message of Repentance in preparation for the ushering in of the great kingdom of God.

But where was that kingdom? John found himself in prison for courageously delivering God’s message to King Herod like a faithful prophet should ... condemning him for his immorality to take his brother Philip’s wife. Matt. 14:3-12 recounts his upcoming execution. John had been in prison for about a year. John certainly felt like he deserved better. Do you ever feel that way? Do you feel that your little service for Christ ... insignificant by contrast to the prophet John the Baptist or that great Apostle Paul ... yet nevertheless very painful .. Do you feel that you deserve better?

John Walvoord: John had been imprisoned in the fortress of Machairus, the royal house of Herod, facing the Dead Sea, because of his fearless attack upon the immorality of Herod, who was living in adultery with Herodias, his brother Philip's wife (Mt 14:3-4). Significantly, the Jewish leaders had been silent concerning this public scandal. . . It is most significant that Jesus did not attempt to answer the real question of John, of why judgment on the wicked was not being inflicted and why the people of Israel had not yet been delivered. Instead, Jesus pronounced a blessing on those who would not be offended by the apparent delay in fulfilling predictions of divine judgment.

John wanted Christ to ascend to the throne and usher in the kingdom. He wanted His Savior to come and deliver him from prison and exalt him for his loyal service. He wanted vindication before his enemies. He wanted to see proud King Herod judged and rendered speechless before the righteousness of the King of Kings. Yet Jesus seemed to be going about His ministry with no concern for his desperate plight. So in his frustration, John sends a couple of his disciples with this very sad question.

You can imagine how Christ must have felt upon hearing these words of doubt and self-pity. What about the suffering that lay ahead for the sinless Lamb of God? No one knew better than Christ that the road to the Cross could not be avoided. No one knew better than Christ that there were no shortcuts to kingdom exaltation.

John Nolland: It is not clear how we are to relate John's confidence about Jesus' identity implicit in 3:14 with the present questioning, but a certain discomforting tension between John's expectations and what Jesus did is common property to Mt. 3:14, 9:14, and 11:3.7 John needed to come to terms with the fact that the one of whom he had now been hearing such remarkable things was, despite the quite unexpected form of his ministry, the one whom he had heralded as eschatological judge and deliverer — 'the one coming after' John (Mt. 3:11).

B. (:4-6) Focused Certainty in the Response of Jesus Regarding His Messianic Identity

1. (:4) Eyewitness Testimony to the Identity of the Messiah

*"And Jesus answered and said to them,
'Go and report to John what you hear and see: '"*

2. (:5) Extensive, Irrefutable Proof from the Ministry of Jesus

*"the blind receive sight and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed and the deaf hear,
and the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them."*

Look at how Jesus responded to John's disciples. The Messiah is busy doing the will of God as prophecied in the OT. We will study some of these prophecies as we get to them in the book of Isaiah.

You haven't picked the wrong horse. You got it right. My miracles speak for themselves. How could you even raise such a question about my identity? And if you understand Who I am .. then how can you question the timing of what I am doing or the ultimate fulfillment of all of the promises? But we question those two things all the time:

- “How long, O Lord?” . . .
- “Is your grace really going to prove sufficient for me in my present difficult circumstances??”

3. (:6) Exhortation Not to Make Any Mistake about the Identity of Jesus

“And blessed is he who keeps from stumbling over Me.”

Jesus here seems to be less than sympathetic to the plight of John the Baptist and his concerns for his own deliverance – Instead He delivers what sounds like a mild rebuke and a warning: “make sure that you don’t stumble or be offended by your association with Me;” it’s not all about your situation and what you want to see happen to improve your lot in life

R. T. France: [John the Baptist] has heard much in Jesus’ favor, but he would have liked to hear more. Jesus’ reply does not change the agenda, but offers further evidence along the same lines (“the deeds of the Messiah”), with the additional element of a clear echo of OT prophecies of eschatological salvation. He expects such evidence to convince John, and the “rebuke” of v. 6 does not require us to believe that John’s expectation was on the wrong lines, but only that he was slow to read the evidence.

Richard Gardner: Speaking to all potential followers and not merely to John, Jesus urges persons not to stumble over the fact that he doesn’t fit their preconceptions of messiahship: Blessed are those who do not wait for another, but who in faith accept what God is doing through Jesus.

Donald Hagner: In short, John is meant to understand that he was correct in his recognition of Jesus as the promised one but that he must also be prepared to accept the fact that the kingdom Jesus brings does not, for the time being anyway, entail the judgment of the wicked. Indeed, on the contrary, the message of the kingdom goes precisely to the unrighteous (cf. 9:13). The personal consequences for John were to be significant: not only continued imprisonment but eventually a martyr’s death. These too were not incompatible with the reality of the kingdom brought by Jesus.

II. (:7-10) WORD OF COMMENDATION OF JOHN THE BAPTIST FOR HIS FAITHFUL FELLOWSHIP WITH CHRIST’S SUFFERINGS

R. T. France: [These verses] define John’s position as the last and greatest of the prophets, fulfilling the role of the eschatological forerunner foretold in Mal 3:1 and 4:5–6, and as such ushering in the time of salvation to which he himself nonetheless remains to some degree an outsider. It is a role of high honor, but it remains that of a herald. . .

Verses 7–9 present a series of three matching questions with suggested answers which clearly belong together and build up to the climactic declaration of John’s prophetic status. Verse 10 undergirds that declaration with a scriptural text more closely defining John’s role as the eschatological forerunner. Verse 11 then summarizes the paradox of John’s salvation-historical position.

(:7a) Balancing Word of Commendation Introduced

“And as these were going away, Jesus began to speak to the multitudes about John,”

But now Jesus wanted to balance his soft rebuke with words of appreciation for John the Baptist Jesus defends the character and ministry of John the Baptist before the crowd – correcting their possible false conclusions . . .

But this message is delivered after the disciples of John the Baptist have left; this message was delivered to the crowds – Why wasn’t this commendation delivered to John himself? It’s not all about John Jesus agreed with John’s assessment that John must decrease and Christ must increase – it is all about how people respond to Jesus Christ

3 CATEGORIES ON THE SCORECARD FOR FAITHFUL SERVANTS OF GOD – 3 ESSENTIALS FOR THE MESSENGER OF GOD --

(cf. Mike Preston grading the Ravens after each game – let’s grade ourselves as we study these three characteristics – How faithful are we?)

Both John the Baptist and Christ grade out with A+s in these 3 categories --

A. (:7b) Man of Conviction – Not Shaky or Wishy-Washy – Faithfully taking a stand for what is right and pleasing to God

“What did you go out into the wilderness to look at? A reed shaken by the wind?”

τί ἐξήλθατε εἰς τὴν ἔρημον θεάσασθαι; κάλαμον ὑπὸ ἀνέμου σαλευόμενον;

See, look at, behold

D. A. Carson: “A reed [probably a collective singular referring to cane grass, found in abundance along the Jordan] swayed by the wind” suggests a fickle person, tossed about in his judgment by the winds of public opinion or private misfortune. Figure of speech to suggest vacillation.

Spoke strong, bold words of the necessity of repentance; he did not back down from the Jewish religious leaders; nothing spineless about John the Baptist; even difficult circumstances should not shake our confidence in the Word of God and His promises; should not cause us to question or alter our message of biblical conviction

Isaiah 42:3 “A bruised reed He will not break, And a dimly burning wick He will not extinguish; He will faithfully bring forth justice.”

Matthew 12:20 “A battered reed He will not break off, And a smoldering wick He will not put out, Until He leads justice to victory.”

James 1:6 “the one who doubts is like the surf of the sea, driven and tossed by the wind”

Ephes. 4:14 “we are no longer to be children, tossed here and there by waves and carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the trickery of men, by craftiness in deceitful scheming”

Our culture does not value a man of conviction; they tar him with derogatory characterizations: narrow-minded; intolerant; etc.

The more I study ... the more convictions I develop; the more I follow my convictions, the more isolated I become ... so why study??

John MacArthur: He was a man who knew what William Penn said, William Penn said: "Right is right even if everyone is against it and wrong is wrong even if everyone is for it." That's simple but true. He was a man of great conviction. He was so great because he faced his weakness and overcame it and because he was strong in his conviction and nobody could intimidate him. He knew what was right and he would do it.

Phil Newton: Convictions are strong, unbending positions that one holds because of his understanding of truth and law.

Thomas Carlyle: Conviction is worthless unless it is converted into conduct.

Eleanor Roosevelt: When you have decided what you believe, what you feel must be done, have the courage to stand alone and be counted.

Martin Luther: Unless I am convicted by Scripture and plain reason. I do not accept the authority of popes and councils, for they have contradicted each other - my conscience is captive to the Word of God. I cannot and will not recant anything, for to go against conscience is neither right nor safe. Here I stand, I cannot do otherwise. God help me. Amen.

How do you grade yourself in terms of following biblical convictions??
Or do you live your life based on the decisions of expediency – what do I think will work out the best for me?

Look at how Christ spoke with such authority and conviction that people marveled; so different from the other rabbis of the day

Sometimes even those closest to you will counsel you to abandon your convictions ... why pay the price? Do what is convenient ... Does God really care? Why study the Scriptures if we are not going to commit ourselves to obedience – regardless of the cost

Dare to be a Daniel,
Dare to stand alone!
Dare to have a purpose firm!
Dare to make it known.

Standing by a purpose true,
Heeding God's command,
Honor them, the faithful few!
All hail to Daniel's band!

B. (:8) Man of Calluses – Not Soft and Indulgent – Toughness
Faithfully living a life of discipline with his priorities in line with his mission

“But what did you go out to see? A man dressed in soft clothing? Behold, those who wear soft clothing are in kings' palaces.”

ἀλλὰ τί ἐξήλθατε ἰδεῖν; ἄνθρωπον ἐν μαλακοῖς ἡμφιεσμένον; ἰδοὺ οἱ τὰ μαλακὰ φοροῦντες ἐν τοῖς οἴκοις τῶν βασιλέων εἰσίν.

John the Baptist was not found enjoying the life of ease in the palace of the king; he was locked away in the dungeon on Death Row

Soft, luxurious, effeminate – by way of contrast to his rugged attire

Not an advocate of the Dress for Success mantra

No valet dressing him in fancy clothes for dinner as on Downtown Abbey

Matt. 3:4 “Now John himself had a garment of camel’s hair and a leather belt around his waist”

Knew how to live a life of discipline and self-denial; lived in the wilderness, not in the palace; a rugged man’s man; would have made a good soldier

2 Tim. 2:1-4 “Suffer hardship with me as a good soldier of Jesus Christ”

John MacArthur: Did you go out there just to see another typical guy who is a courtier, who operates in the palace, who favors the king, who does whatever you need to do to get the royal favors? A man who lives a life of luxurious self-indulgence ... did you go out there to see a guy who plays to the court, who seeks the favors because he wants to pad his seat?

We live in a soft society – probably this point of evaluation strikes home with us more than any other

C. (:9-10) Man of Commission (of Calling) – Not Self Appointed or Self Willed – Forerunner faithfully announcing the coming Messiah and fulfilling his calling

“But why did you go out? To see a prophet? Yes, I say to you, and one who is more than a prophet. This is the one about whom it is written, ‘Behold, I send My messenger before Your face, Who will prepare Your way before You.’” [Quote from Mal. 3:1] ἀλλὰ τί ἐξήλθατε ἰδεῖν; προφήτην; ναι λέγω ὑμῖν, καὶ περισσότερον προφήτου. ¹⁰ οὗτός ἐστιν περὶ οὗ γέγραπται· ἰδοὺ ἐγὼ ἀποστέλλω τὸν ἄγγελόν μου πρὸ προσώπου σου, ὃς κατασκευάσει τὴν ὁδόν σου ἔμπροσθέν σου.

John 1:6 “There was a man sent from God whose name was John”

Barclay: The prophet is the man with God’s wisdom in his mind, God’s truth on his lips, and God’s courage in his heart.

Amos 3:7 “the Lord God does nothing unless He reveals His secret counsel to His servants the prophets”

Phil Newton: There had not been a prophet in Israel for several hundred years.

How are we doing in terms of obeying the Great Commission?

How are we doing in terms of aggressively using our spiritual gift for the kingdom of God?

III. (:11) WORD OF CONTRAST BETWEEN THIS DAY OF ANTICIPATION WHICH INVOLVES SUFFERING (EXEMPLIFIED BY THE MOST FAITHFUL = JOHN THE BAPTIST) AND THE DAY OF FULFILLMENT FOR GOD'S KINGDOM PROMISES (EXPERIENCED BY THE LEAST OF KINGDOM SAINTS)

Contrast between John the Baptist and his disciples and the disciples of Christ

R. T. France: The contrast is between two eras, that of preparation, culminating in John, and that of fulfillment, the arrival of the kingdom of heaven which Jesus has now inaugurated. John had proclaimed it (3:2), but he apparently remains outside while even the less important (cf. 5:19 for “least” and “great” in the kingdom of heaven) of those whom Jesus has now welcomed into the kingdom of heaven enjoys a privilege beyond that even of John himself.

Michael Wilkins: The contrast is not between human accomplishments but between eras. The arrival of the kingdom of heaven ushers in an incomparably greater era than any preceding it.

A. Greatness of John the Baptist

“Truly, I say to you, among those born of women there has not arisen anyone greater than John the Baptist;”

Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν· οὐκ ἐγήγερται ἐν γεννητοῖς γυναικῶν μείζων Ἰωάννου τοῦ βαπτιστοῦ·

- Arrived on the scene in fulfillment of prophecy
- Filled with the Holy Spirit
Luke 1:15 “for he will be great before the Lord. And he must not drink wine or strong drink, and he will be filled with the Holy Spirit, even from his mother’s womb.”
- Preached a message of repentance from sins
Luke 3:7-8 “He said therefore to the crowds that came out to be baptized by him, “You brood of vipers! Who warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bear fruits in keeping with repentance. And do not begin to say to yourselves, ‘We have Abraham as our father.’ For I tell you, God is able from these stones to raise up children for Abraham.”
- Identified Jesus as the Messiah
- Exemplified Humility – “He must increase but I must decrease”
- Leadership ability to continue to motivate loyal disciples even while in prison

B. Exalted Greatness of Kingdom Believers – Privileged Position

“yet he who is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he.”

ὁ δὲ μικρότερος ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τῶν οὐρανῶν μείζων αὐτοῦ ἐστίν.

A new era dawned with the completed work of Christ on the cross and the beginning of the church on the Day of Pentecost; a new day yet even greater will dawn as Christ returns in victory to judge His enemies and rule from the throne of David over His kingdom on earth

Would you rather be living under the OT law or with the full realization of grace and truth that came with Christ?

Do you understand the privilege of being a kingdom of priests with direct access to God through the one Mediator, our Lord Jesus Christ vs. living under a religious system with strict guidelines for Levitical priests?

Do you see the limitations of living in the days of types and shadows rather than in the blazing light of the fulfillment of God's promises in the person of His Son?

Heb. 1:1-2 “God, after He spoke long ago to the fathers in the prophets in many portions and in many ways, in these last days has spoken to us in His Son”

S. Lewis Johnson: I'm more inclined to think that what is meant is that the position of John, before the time of the cross and before the institution of the kingdom of God, that John's position is less than that of the position of the simplest believer who is in the kingdom of the heavens. There is going to come a kingdom of God upon the earth, and compared with the position of John outside the kingdom at that time with the position of the person who is in the kingdom, the state or position of that man is greater than John the Baptist. And every man who has believed upon the Lord Jesus and who eventually reaches the kingdom of God will be in a situation or in a position that is greater than John the Baptist's position at the time this was spoken.

Phil Newton: And so we see that the greatness of the kingdom citizen is not found in some achievement of that particular believer but it is found in the greatness of the King, who has bestowed His great love, favor, and relationship upon the most insignificant person. Can we find the world's applause to count anything in light of the greatness belonging to a kingdom citizen through Christ?

William Barclay: So John had the destiny which sometimes falls to an individual; he had the task of pointing men and women to a greatness into which he himself did not enter. It is given to some people to be the signposts of God. They point to a new ideal and a new greatness which others will enter into, but into which they will not come. It is very seldom that any great reformer is the first person to toil for the reform with which his or her name is connected. Many who went before glimpsed the glory, often laboured for it, and sometimes died for it.

IV. (:12-19) WISDOM IS VINDICATED BY HER DEEDS

A. (:12-15) Understand the Times

1. (:12) Context of Violent Opposition against God's Kingdom

*“And from the days of John the Baptist until now
the kingdom of heaven suffers violence, and violent men take it by force.”*

R. T. France: If, however, we translate harpazō in its more normal sense of “seize,” it might refer to a take-over bid aimed at the Jesus movement by people with an agenda of violence (against Rome?) rather than of spiritual salvation. The phrase remains obscure. . .

Michael Wilkins: Since the announcement of the kingdom of heaven in John's ministry, it has received opposition from the religious establishment of Israel. Now John has received opposition from Herod Antipas, a violent man who will put John to death violently.

William Barclay: It is likely that we will get the full meaning of this difficult saying by putting together the recollection of Luke and Matthew. What Jesus may well have said is: ‘Always my kingdom will suffer violence; there will always be antagonism and people will try to break up the kingdom, and snatch it away and destroy it; and therefore only those who are desperately in earnest, only those in whom the violence of devotion matches and defeats the violence of persecution, will in the end enter into it.’ It may well be that this saying of Jesus was originally at one and the same time a warning of violence to come and a challenge to produce a devotion which would be even stronger than the violence.

Donald Hagner: For all its greatness, the kingdom suffers violence and violent men plunder it. The kingdom involves suffering. In the same way, Matthew continues, so must the Son of Man suffer.

2. (:13) Crescendo Point of God’s Historic Revelation

“For all the prophets and the Law prophesied until John.”

R. T. France: Until the time of John the Hebrew scriptures (with the prophets unusually placed in the foreground) were pointing forward to a time of fulfillment (“prophesying”); after John that fulfillment has come. We noted in the comments on 5:17 how this little statement helps to explain the “fulfillment of the law” as it is expounded in 5:17–48. It was not only the prophets who pointed forward to what was to come; the law too had this function, preparing the way for a fuller revelation of the will of God which was to come in the time of fulfillment, and which Matthew now finds present in the ministry of Jesus. Thus not only the prophets but even the law itself “prophesied.” With the coming of John, the last and greatest of the prophets, that forward-pointing role is complete.

3. (:14) Comparison to Elijah

“And if you care to accept it, he himself is Elijah, who was to come.”

Richard Gardner: In any case, the advent of the kingdom begins with John, who sets in motion the events that fulfill the hope of all the prophets and the law. More specifically, John fulfills Israel’s hope in the return of Elijah (vv. 14-15, cf. 17:10-13; Mal. 4:5-6; Sir. 48:10). Elijah’s role was to call the people back to covenant relationship with God. To accept John as Elijah requires an act of faith (just as faith plays a part in receiving Jesus as the Christ). And Jesus calls for such faith when he appeals to the crowd to hear what he has revealed (cf. 13:9; 19:12d).

4. (:15) Challenge to Listen Carefully

“He who has ears to hear, let him hear.”

William Barclay: The old proverb has it that you can take a horse to the water, but you cannot make it drink. God can send his messenger but men and women can refuse to recognize him, and God can send his truth but they can refuse to see it. God’s revelation is powerless without our response. That is why Jesus ends with the appeal that those who have ears should use them to hear.

B. (:16-19a) Unrepentant Will Always Find Excuses to Reject God’s Truth

1. (:16-17) Inconsistent Complaints about Ministry Methodology

“But to what shall I compare this generation?”

It is like children sitting in the market places, who call out to the other children,

*17 and say, 'We played the flute for you, and you did not dance;
we sang a dirge, and you did not mourn.'"*

William Barclay: The plain fact is that when people do not want to listen to the truth, they will easily enough find an excuse for not listening to it. They do not even try to be consistent in their criticisms; they will criticize the same person, and the same institution, from quite opposite grounds. If people are determined to make no response, they will remain stubbornly unresponsive no matter what invitation is made to them. Grown men and women can be very like spoiled children who refuse to play no matter what the game is.

2. (:18-19a) Inconsistent Complaints about Personal Behavior

"For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, 'He has a demon!'"

The Son of Man came eating and drinking, and they say, 'Behold, a gluttonous man and a drunkard, a friend of tax-gatherers and sinners!'"

Donald Hagner: John and Jesus, central figures in the salvation being effected by God, are nevertheless rejected by the populace. The mystery becomes even greater when, as the Gospel proceeds, each is killed. Those who oppose God will always seem to have reasons to resist. At one level the arguments can seem plausible. But at bottom they reflect unreceptive and unbelieving hearts. John is too holy; Jesus is not holy enough. And Jesus in particular does not conform to the accepted standards of righteousness. Can either be what they claimed? The opponents of John and Jesus will in fact accept fulfillment of the promises only on their own terms. Whatever fails to match that preconception, regardless of all other evidence and arguments, is automatically rejected. Yet ultimately John and Jesus, the forerunner and the Messiah, can only be vindicated, for they constitute the turning point and heart of salvation-history.

C. (:19b) Ultimate Verdict Will Vindicate Christ and His Followers

"Yet wisdom is vindicated by her deeds."

John Nolland: ἐδικαιώθη then refers to the vindication of Wisdom over against those who make the accusations of vv. 18-19. The process of vindication is perhaps best illustrated by returning to vv. 2-6: for those prepared to see, what is going on points transparently to its significance. (In the Lk. 7:35 parallel, Wisdom is vindicated, rather, by the impact of the ministries of John and Jesus on those who see that God's marvellous purposes are here being worked out.)

William Barclay: Then comes Jesus' final sentence in this section: 'Wisdom is shown to be right by her deeds.' The ultimate verdict lies not with the cantankerous and perverse critics but with events. The Jews might criticize John for his lonely isolation, but John had moved the hearts of men and women to God as they had not been moved for centuries; the Jews might criticize Jesus for mixing too much in ordinary life and with ordinary people, but in him people were finding a new life and a new goodness and a new power to live as they ought and a new access to God.

It would be well if we were to stop judging people and churches by our own prejudices and perversities, and if we were to begin to give thanks for any person and any church who can bring people nearer to God, even if their methods are not the methods which suit us.

Richard Gardner: Whether by deeds done or disciples made, Wisdom leaves a witness that vindicates God in spite of Israel's unbelief.

Grant Osborne: It seems clear that Jesus identifies himself with the work of Wisdom, so that Wisdom's deeds are Jesus' deeds (and those of his followers). So this means that Jesus himself is ἐδικαιώθη, "justified" or "vindicated" on the basis of the deeds named in 11:1, 5. In other words, Jesus is proven right by his works (both word and deed) as well as the works of John the Baptist and his disciples in ch. 10, so that the indifference and outright rejection of Jesus' contemporaries will simply bring divine judgment on them (see the next section). . .

God's Vindication of Truth: God's messengers should never seek popularity and acceptance. We need the boldness of John and Jesus and must allow God to justify our ministry; we must refuse to play the numbers game of worldly popularity. John and Jesus did not worry about what people thought or even how people reacted. They proclaimed truth the way God led them, and so must we. Will our vindication come from the world (even from members of our church) or from God? We need more fearless proclaimers and fewer shallow popularizers!

CONCLUSION:

Back to the mindset of the Apostle Paul in Philippians chapter 3 – keep pressing forward – seeking after a deeper knowledge of Jesus Christ and a richer experience of the power of His resurrection working in me right now ... so that I don't live in a state of frustration ... Yes, I experience fellowship in His sufferings in fulfilling my calling of following Jesus ... but His grace and power are sufficient for now and we will reign with Him in the coming Kingdom ... There are no shortcuts to kingdom exaltation!

Acts 14:22 “encouraging them to continue in the faith, and saying, Through many tribulations we must enter the kingdom of God.”

“violent men take it by force”

James 5:7-11 “Therefore be patient, brethren, until the coming of the Lord. . . As an example, brethren, of suffering and patience, take the prophets who spoke in the name of the Lord ...”

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What should have been the mindset of John the Baptist while in prison?
- 2) Why did this generation both reject the presentation from John and the presentation from Jesus – as if they always wanted the opposite?
- 3) Where have we exhibited a life of conviction?
- 4) How have the comforts of this life made us soft and distracted us from fulfilling our calling?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

William Barclay: So John had the destiny which sometimes falls to men; he had the task of pointing men to a greatness into which he himself did not enter. It is given to some men to be the signposts of God. They point to a new ideal and a new greatness which others will enter into, but into which they will not come. It is very seldom that any great reformer is the first man to toil for the reform with which his name is connected. Many who went before him glimpsed the glory, often labored for it, and sometimes died for it.

S. Lewis Johnson: Sometimes Christians obtain the idea – I don't know where, really, they obtain it – that a strong believer in the Lord Jesus Christ never has any doubts. But that is not true to Christian experience, and it is really not true to the word of God. If you turn to the Old Testament and read the Psalms, for example, you'll discover that even in the same Psalm, the Psalmist often expresses great confidence in God, and then in the next verse or two, he is expressing in the words that he utters that his own faith has begun to waver and fluctuate, so that it is entirely possible and really true to our experience for us to have a fluctuation in our trust in God. . . So I think I can understand how John, in the course of being in prison, looking at the course of the Messianic ministry, seeing no real manifestation of the power of the Messiah, should become disturbed and begun to ask questions arising from his inner man: is it really true that he's the Messiah after all?

J. Ligon Duncan: More Than a Prophet

First of all, he's reminding us that He, Himself, represents a transition point in the history of God's dealings with His people. Jesus says that the Law and the Prophets were until John. All the things that lead up to the Messiah came to their culmination in John. With the coming of the Messiah, with Calvary and with Pentecost, the people of God are ushered into a new era. They experience a new fullness of the Spirit, a new fullness of His indwelling, a new universal proclamation of the gospel, a greater depth of spiritual experience than was normally experienced by those believers under the Old Covenant.

The Lord Jesus is saying that John - though he is the Joshua, though he is the Moses to point you to the promised land - John does not experience himself the blessings of the promised land realized. He is not unlike Moses, is he? Moses' job was to take the children of Israel into the land, and yet, Moses had to peer from Pisgah into the land. Moses never entered into the land. He was buried outside the land. His whole life was devoted to bringing the children of Israel into the land; but he, himself, did not go in. Joshua took the people of Israel in. So, also, John the Baptist. He would die in prison. John never got to see Jesus' incredible miracles with his own eyes. Can you imagine if you were like Simeon, holding that little baby in his arms and imagining the things that this child was going to do for God and for His cause and yet, he, himself, never saw our Lord do His great deeds. John never saw Calvary. He never saw Pentecost. His whole life was devoted to preparing the way for the Lord Jesus Christ and he never saw those things with his own eyes. You and I have been given those things in this book. We have been given a heritage that John was never even allowed to see. And, you know, the sad thing is that we discount it. We overlook it. We don't realize the privilege that is ours. That's precisely what the Lord Jesus is saying here. He is saying that 'those who were children of the kingdom - My kingdom that I've inaugurated now in a fullness that had never been experienced before under the days of the Old Testament - My people are greater even than John the Baptist; even the least of them are more blessed, more privileged and have more benefits.'

Alan Smith: Forceful Men [telling illustration from Pilgrim's Progress]

Early in the book, Pilgrim is led up to the doors of a grand palace. Outside the palace sits a recorder who is ready to write down the names of those who enter the palace. Many people are standing around waiting to go in, but they are afraid of the armed men who block the entrance. Then Pilgrim saw a man with a "very brave countenance" come near. He said to the recorder, "Set down my name, sir!" And then armed with a sword and a helmet, the brave man fought his way into the palace of glory.

Let me raise a question to you this morning: Do you think this is an accurate portrayal of the Christian life, or was John Bunyan just being overly dramatic? Is it the case that we must fight our way into the Celestial City tooth and toenail, or is it possible that we can stroll into heaven with our hands in our pockets?

There are many people who evidently believe that the pathway to heaven is an easy one.

Stanly Saunders: Who and what are we looking for as we await the coming Messiah? Does he fit our hopes and expectations? Will we even recognize him when he comes? John the Baptizer's disciples have already expressed some doubts about Jesus' piety (cf. 9:14), and now John's patience may be waning as he sits in Herod's prison, facing eventual death (14:1-12). Is Jesus really the Christ, the one who will set the captives free? The designation "[he] who is to come" (11:3) echoes John's own proclamation concerning "the one coming after," who uses his winnowing fork to "gather his wheat into the granary" and will "burn" the chaff "with unquenchable fire" (3:11-12). John may be looking for the fire, while Jesus seems more clearly focused on gathering. But Jesus' ministry actually accomplishes both tasks at once; the acts by which Jesus gathers also generate resistance and judgment.

Jesus invites the audience to focus on the concrete signs of God's power at work among them, signs that will tell them what time it is and whether Jesus is the one coming: the blind see, the lame walk, lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and good news is proclaimed to the poor (11:5). These signs correspond to Isaiah's vision of the time when God redeems and restores Israel (e.g., Isa. 29:18-19; 35:5-6; 42:18; 61:1). Blessing comes to those who do not stumble (or take offense) over these irruptions of divine power (cf. 16:17, 23), but judgment to those who turn away.

John himself is a sign of God's presence and power (11:7-15). He is a prophet who, like Elijah, announces judgment against the king and his advocates. Jesus describes John in terms that also mock Herod, who minted coins bearing the image of reeds (11:7) and dressed in the soft clothes of the elite (11:8). Herod is indeed violent and fearsome, but in the end really more like a reed in the wind, or a dandy (cf. 14:1-12). The people have come to the wilderness, recalling the exodus from Egypt, to be set free from slavery to rulers like Herod. The image of reeds blowing in the wind also evokes the memory of Israel crossing the Sea of Reeds as God delivered them from Pharaoh's hand (Exod. 13:18). Just as the images Jesus uses mean more than one thing, so too John himself, though bound in Herod's prison, is more than he seems. He is the prophetic forerunner, come to announce liberation, judgment, and the advent of God's empire (11:10; cf. Mal. 3:1; Exod. 23:20; Isa. 40:3). John is, in fact, the greatest of those yet born, greater even than his captor. He is overshadowed only by the least one—the servant—in God’s empire (11:11).

Jesus’ comments in 11:11–12 subtly distinguish three eras: the time until John, the time from John until “now” (a time when the violent attempt to seize the rule of God by force), and the time when one greater than John is present. Reading the signs rightly helps one know what time it is, just as knowing what time it is helps us know what the signs mean. The latter two “times” are not ordered in linear sequence, but overlap, for this is both the time when the signs of God’s presence and power are abundant, the time of repentance, and the time when the violent seek to turn God’s power to their own will. This is the time of salvation and of judgment.

John’s ministry, like Jesus’ own, is not violent, but nonetheless generates violent responses (cf. 14:1–12). Herod Antipas is one of the political and religious leaders who employ violence to seize the empire of heaven (11:12), as the prophets before John had warned (11:13). The powers of this world seek to bend religion to their own purposes, to baptize their violence in the language of divine will, destiny, and holy order, or to destroy it. God’s rule suffers these attacks no less than any other.

TEXT: Matthew 11:20-24

TITLE: WOES AGAINST UNREPENTANT PRIVILEGED CITIES

BIG IDEA:
GREATER OPPORTUNITY AND REVELATION BRING MORE SEVERE JUDGMENT FOR FAILURE TO REPENT

INTRODUCTION:

Daniel Doriani: Jesus warns three cities—Korazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum—that their resistance to his ministry is culpable. Each has the same pattern:

1. Jesus calls out the word of woe and warning.
2. Jesus explains why the city is liable to judgment.
3. He compares the cities of Israel to infamous pagan cities.

Richard Gardner: Each pronouncement contains:

- (1) A woe statement or its equivalent (21a, 23a).
- (2) An if... then statement (21b, 23b).
- (3) An I tell you statement drawing the consequences (22, 24).

To appreciate the force of these unfavorable comparisons, we must remember that Tyre, Sidon, and Sodom were all foreign cities. What Jesus is saying, then, is that Gentiles repent more readily than Israel (cf. 12:41-42), and that accordingly they will fare better than God's own people at the judgment.

Craig Blomberg: Jesus employs the common Old Testament form of a woe (cf., e.g., Num 21:29; 1 Sam 4:8; Isa 3:9-11; Jer 13:27; Ezek 24:6-9)—an exclamation of “how greatly one will suffer,” mingling doom with pity. Jesus laments God's coming judgment on the cities in which many of his miracles occurred.

Ray Fowler: In these verses we learn five things about those who do not repent:

- 1) Jesus denounces those who do not repent.
- 2) Jesus mourns for those who do not repent.
- 3) Jesus looks for sincerity and sorrow in those who do repent.
- 4) Jesus warns of coming punishment for those who do not repent. And
- 5) Jesus urges you to repent now rather than later.

R. T. France: Even in Galilee, including Jesus' “own” town of Capernaum, the honeymoon period is apparently over. And when those who have been privileged to witness Jesus' ministry in their own communities fail to respond, they must expect to face a more serious judgment than the notorious pagan cities which had no such special revelation.

Walter Wilson: The vista presented in the previous segment continues to unfold here, as Jesus is seen further denouncing the people for their failure to receive the kingdom. Such refusal, we now see, is especially damnable for those who have witnessed public demonstrations of kingdom power. As in 11:2-5, the miracles Jesus performs are presented as manifestations of his identity, in which case the people's rejection of the miracles constitutes rejection of Jesus himself a.

With great irony, the fate of biblical places notorious for their wickedness is compared favorably to the end awaiting cities that experienced the Messiah's ministry firsthand, including his own hometown. We then learn that the rejection of the Messiah accords with a divine pattern in which truth is concealed from the powerful and revealed to unlikely recipients. As the embodiment of Wisdom (cf. 11:19), Jesus confounds human expectations, even as he continues to invite humanity to participate in the grace and compassion that the kingdom offers.

Charles Swindoll: After mentioning the irreverent and irrational mocking of the critics who had rejected His preaching and miracles (11:16-19), Jesus decided it was time to denounce the passivity of those places that had received maximum exposure to the words and works of the Messiah. They were without excuse. The three cities he explicitly mentioned were Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum – His own ministry base. Though we aren't given any specific details of Jesus' ministry in the first two cities mentioned, we can assume these were included among the cities where Jesus preached after departing from Capernaum (11:1). While the disciples made longer and farther trips in their preaching mission, Jesus likely stayed closer to His home base. Evidently, the reception of His message had been lukewarm to downright chilly in those cities (11:20).

Allen Ross: What is interesting in this section is that Jesus hints that there will be degrees of punishment in the judgment based on the amount of "light" or revelation people had. People like the Sodomites may have been wicked and idolaters, but it will go easier on them in the judgment because they did not have the amount of light Capernaum did. Capernaum had a lot of revelation, and since they rejected it, the judgment will be severe on them. This shows us that God is very much aware of how much information people had of the truth and will take that into account. Judgment will be fair. But it will be the most severe on those who had the most information and refused it. People who live in a region which is filled with churches and religious communications will have no excuse if they choose not to respond to the message.

I. (:20) CONDEMNATION OF CITIES FOR FAILURE TO REPENT IN SPITE OF THE ABUNDANCE OF OPPORTUNITY

"Then He began to reproach the cities in which most of His miracles were done, because they did not repent."

D. A. Carson: The many miracles again remind us of the extent of Jesus' ministry (cf. 4:23; 8:16; 9:35; Jn 20:30; 21:25) and of the depth of responsibility imposed on those with more light.

Donald Hagner: Now the extent of the rejection of Jesus comes into full light. With the unbelief of Israel, a turning point in the narrative has been reached (cf. Comber). For the first time we encounter the mysterious fact of the failure of Jesus' mission to Israel. Jesus rebukes the largely unreceptive cities (i.e., villages) of Galilee, particularly since they had been privileged to see the mighty deeds, indeed αἱ πλεῖστα δύναμεις, "most of the miracles," of Jesus. This word δύναμεις, "mighty deeds," occurs like a refrain in vv 21 and 23. Although they had witnessed these deeds of power, they did not respond to Jesus' proclamation of the kingdom (cf. John 12:37): they did not "repent" (μετενόησαν). The same verb occurs in v 21 and is implied in v 23. This indicates that Jesus' message about the kingdom (cf. 4:23; 9:35; cf. 10:7) was accompanied, as from the beginning (4:17), by a call to repentance.

Walter Wilson: The vindication of wisdom is accompanied by the punishment of those who reject it. In this sense, the scenarios of judgment in 11:20–24 (based on Q/Luke 10:12–15) follow logically after the polemic of 11:16–19 (based on Q/Luke 7:31–35). Having completed his reproof of “this generation,” Jesus now singles out some of its most culpable representatives, specifically the cities in which he had performed most of his δυνάμεις (“miracles”), a term that recalls ἔργα (“works”) in 11:2+19 and the enumeration of Jesus’s deeds of power in 11:5. If those who accept the one performing such deeds are blessed (11:6), those who fail to do so are condemned. Presupposed throughout is the idea that the miracles performed by Jesus are to be understood as eschatological signs, that is, as portents of impending judgment.

Leon Morris: It is clear that Jesus had performed a number of miracles, mostly works of healing, and he expected those who saw them to recognize them for what they were, signs that God was at work in their midst. Jesus was not looking for amazement and admiration, but for repentance. That was the first note he struck in his preaching (4:17), and it remained a constant.

II. (:21-22) CHORAZIN AND BETHSAIDA WORSE OFF THAN TYRE AND SIDON

D. A. Carson: Three large theological propositions are presupposed by Jesus’ insistence that on the day of judgment (cf. 12:36; Ac 17:31; 2Pe 2:9; 3:7; 1Jn 4:17; Jude 6), when he will judge (7:22; 25:34), things will go worse for the cities that have received so much light than for the pagan cities.

1. The first is that the Judge has contingent knowledge: he knows what Tyre and Sidon would have done under such-and-such circumstances.
2. The second is that God does not owe revelation to anyone, or else there is injustice in withholding it.
3. The third is that punishment on the day of judgment takes into account opportunity. There are degrees of felicity in paradise and degrees of torment in hell (12:41; 23:13; cf. Lk 12:47–48), a point Paul well understood (Ro 1:20–2:16).

The implications for Western, English-speaking Christendom today are sobering.

A. (:21) Miracles without Repentance Bring Condemnation on Chorazin and Bethsaida

1. Calling Out the Cities for Failure to Repent

“Woe to you, Chorazin! Woe to you, Bethsaida!”

Daniel Doriani: Jesus calls out, “Woe,” to them. “Woe” suggests both anger and lamentation, both pity and doom. It announces impending judgment: Woe, for “it will be more bearable for Sodom on the day of judgment than for you” (11:24). Yet the woe implies that there is still time to repent. The end is almost, but not quite, here. “Woe” calls out judgment, yet it also offers a shred of hope for the penitent.

Grant Osborne: Chorazin was a medium-sized town noted for its wheat production and identified with modern Khirbet Karazeh about two miles north of Capernaum. Bethsaida was on the northern tip of the lake just on the western side of the Jordan River in Gaulanitis (but geographically part of Galilee) and was the original home of Simon and Andrew as well as Philip (John 1:44, 12:21). Jesus had two mission trips through Galilee in Matthew (4:23; 9:35), walked on the water on the way there in Mark 6:45, and healed a blind man there in Mark 8:22 and many others in Luke 9:10.

Michael Wilkins: Korazin (Khirbet Kerazeh) is only 2–1/2 miles (4 kilometers) north of Capernaum. Little evidence from the time of Jesus remains, but by the third to fourth centuries it was described in rabbinic literature as a “medium-size town.” The black basalt ruins of a large synagogue from that later era have been excavated, with the famous “seat of Moses” (cf. 23:2) discovered in the ruins. The city was destroyed by an earthquake and rebuilt in the fifth century, only to be destroyed again in the seventh or eighth century.

Bethsaida (Aram. “house of fishermen”) was the birthplace of Peter, Andrew, and Philip (John 1:44; 12:21), and possibly others of the disciples including James and John, the sons of Zebedee. It is mentioned more often in the New Testament than any city except Jerusalem and Capernaum. It is located four miles northeast of Capernaum at the northernmost tip of the Sea of Galilee at the place where the Jordan River enters the sea. The city was built by Herod Philip (cf. 16:13), son of Herod the Great and half-brother of Herod Antipas, and lay in the region under Philip’s governance. During Jesus’ time the Jordan delta extended further inland at that point (perhaps as much as 1–1/2 miles further than presently), giving it one of the largest harbors on the Sea of Galilee and making it an important fishing center.

Walter Wilson: The inclusion of Chorazin and Bethsaida (11:21) among the cities in which “most of his miracles had happened” (11:20) comes as a surprise, since no mention has been made of Jesus’s activity in either place. Perhaps the reader is meant to understand these localities as being representative of the various cities and villages throughout Galilee in which he performed wonders, as indicated by the summary statements in 4:23 and 9:35 (cf. 11:1).

2. Contrast with Tyre and Sidon

“For if the miracles had occurred in Tyre and Sidon which occurred in you, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes.”

Richard Gardner: The Phoenician cities of Tyre and Sidon, with which Chorazin and Bethsaida are unfavorably compared in verses 21b-22, were famous for their wealth and power, but condemned by the prophets for their pride (cf. Isa. 23; Ezek. 27-28).

John Nolland: Sackcloth is a rough cloth made of goats’ hair and worn over the naked body in token of mourning or penitence. In the Greek world the meaning of the word is wider (coarse hair cloth for bags and sacks), but the penitential use of the material was known. The link with ashes is found in several OT texts. One covered oneself with sackcloth and either dusted oneself down with or sat in the ashes.

B. (:22) More Severe Judgment than for Tyre and Sidon

“Nevertheless I say to you, it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon in the day of judgment, than for you.”

III. (:23-24) CAPERNAUM WORSE OFF THAN SODOM

A. (:23) Miracles without Repentance Bring Condemnation on Capernaum

1. Calling Out the City for Pride

“And you, Capernaum, will not be exalted to heaven, will you? You shall descend to Hades;”

Grant Osborne: Capernaum, a town of about 1,500 population, was the leading city in the area, well-situated geographically and economically.

2. Contrast with Sodom

“for if the miracles had occurred in Sodom which occurred in you, it would have remained to this day.”

Donald Hagner: Capernaum was the headquarters of Jesus’ Galilean ministry (4:13; 8:5; 9:1; 17:24; cf. Mark 2:1). It must have been particularly distressing that Capernaum was in the main unreceptive to Jesus’ ministry (cf. 13:57). Capernaum was apparently proud and ambitious, as the question “Will you be exalted to heaven?” suggests (cf. Isa 14:13). Yet her fate would prove to be the opposite: she would go down to “Hades” (ἄδου; Heb. šē’ōl), i.e., the unseen realm of the dead (used by Matthew elsewhere only in 16:18). This is an allusion to the LXX of Isa 14:15: εἰς ἄδου καταβήσῃ (cf. 14:11, which has only a slightly different word order). It is difficult to make the application of the first rhetorical phrase to Capernaum more precise, but it seems to refer to an unwarranted, prideful confidence in an exceptional degree of eschatological blessing. The imagery of v 23 is clearly borrowed from Isa 14:13–15 (for šē’ōl, see too Ezek 26:20–21). The comparison with Sodom makes Jesus’ indictment of Capernaum all the sharper. Sodom’s wickedness and consequent destruction were notorious from the OT record (Gen 18:20–19:29; cf. Isa 1:9; Rom 9:29; 2 Peter 2:6; Jude 7). Had the miracles of Jesus been performed in Sodom, even Sodom would have repented and the city would not have been destroyed: it would have “remained until today” (ἔμεινεν ἄν μέχρι τῆς σήμερον). But in the last judgment, Sodom, like Tyre and Sidon compared to Chorazin and Bethsaida, will fare better than unbelieving Capernaum.

R. T. France: Capernaum has been hitherto a place of revelation and response (4:13–16; 8:5–17; 9:1–34), but woven into those accounts has been an undercurrent of opposition and rejection (8:10–12, with special reference to its Jewish inhabitants over against the Gentile centurion; 9:3, 11, 34) provoking Jesus’ comment that the old wineskins cannot accommodate the new wine (9:16–17). Capernaum, as the base of Jesus’ operations, has received more of the light (4:16) than the other towns, and so its unresponsiveness deserves a greater condemnation. The comparison with Sodom (cf. 10:15) is therefore even more wounding than that with Tyre and Sidon, since at least the Phoenician cities, though captured by Alexander the Great, were still standing, whereas Sodom was the classic example of total destruction, its remains now buried under the waters of the Dead Sea. Even worse is the unmistakable echo in v. 23 of Isaiah’s taunt (Isa 14:13–15) against the ambitions and downfall of the king of Babylon, the traditional enemy and destroyer of Judah. . . . The example of the king of Babylon is apparently being used not because of any specific equivalence, but as a proverbial example of pride going before a fall, the pride in this case being Capernaum’s failure to recognize any need to respond to Jesus’ call to repentance. Hades is the place of the dead rather than a place of punishment; here, as in 16:18, its only other use in Matthew, it symbolizes destruction.

B. (:24) More Severe Judgment than for Sodom

“Nevertheless I say to you that it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for you.”

Stanley Saunders: Jesus reserves his most solemn judgment for Capernaum, the home base of his ministry. If the people of Capernaum imagine that the divine power manifested among them implies that they don’t need to repent, they are mistaken. The powers that Jesus has demonstrated are not meant to elicit a sense of triumph or complacency; they are a call to discern the time, to repent of the ways that enslave, and turn toward God. Every generation that witnesses the signs of God's presence and power but continues on its way joins the ranks of "this generation."

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How can a loving Jesus issue such harsh words of condemnation and divine judgment?
- 2) Are these towns being upbraided for gross immorality and deviant behavior or for their indifference to the message of the kingdom and the call to repentance?
- 3) Is it fair for God to provide differing levels of knowledge and opportunity to respond to His message of salvation?
- 4) How does this passage refute the view of annihilism?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Donald Hagner: This passage vividly illustrates the simple truth that the greater the revelation, the greater the accountability. This is a principle encountered elsewhere in the NT, for example, in Rom 2:12–16. The cities of Galilee were especially privileged. A great light had shone in their midst (cf. 4:15–16), yet they refused to acknowledge that light. They accepted neither the message of the kingdom nor the messenger of the kingdom. They are accordingly more culpable than those who, though very wicked, had less clear evidence of the will of God. The reality of their future judgment points inescapably to the supreme importance of the mission and message of Jesus. This is the true center of the passage. The meaning of the failure of Jesus' mission to Israel will remain unclear until his disciples are forced to grapple with the problem of the failure of their mission to Israel (see esp. Rom 11:11–12, 25).

Daniel Doriani: Lessons:

Several important lessons rise from these verses.

First, God is the one truly competent Judge, for he alone knows all things. Every human judgment is based on imperfect knowledge. We make every decision on insufficient evidence. Not so with God. He knows all that is, was, and shall be. But he also knows hearts so well that he has contingent knowledge, knowledge of what might have been.

Second, God is sovereign. He does not owe anyone his revelation; he is not unjust to give more light to Israel. But he does judge people according to the light they have. There are degrees of joy in heaven and degrees of misery in hell (Matt. 12:41; 23:14—"twice as much a son of hell"). The more knowledge one has, the more accountable he or she is.

Third, there is corporate as well as individual responsibility. Whole societies harden their hearts to God, and they fall into certain sinful patterns for decades, even for generations. For example, today Americans have the highest divorce rate on earth, and by a large margin. Meanwhile, couples cohabit, outside of marriage, ever more often. We have learned to abuse the institution of marriage. Let us pray for our generation and speak to our generation, so it does not become hard to God's truth.

Fourth, those who claim to be religious are often the most hardhearted of all. The religious often think they have everything worked out. They know their doctrines, their duties, and are pleased with their knowledge and virtue. Meanwhile, they despise others (Matt. 23:13–36; Luke 18:9–14). Tyre, Sidon, and Sodom would have repented had they seen Jesus' miracles. Capernaum saw but, for a while, remained unmoved. I say "for a while" for Capernaum was a center of Christianity by A.D. 50–55. That is, Jesus' plain speech, his "woe," his word of judgment was effective.

Fifth, we should not shy away from Jesus' teaching on judgment and hell, even if it seems unpopular. Heaven and hell are eternal realities, and it is both right and helpful to tell people so. If someone is in danger of hell, we must say so. Even religious people can be in danger. If we tell the truth, people may hear, repent, believe, and escape God's judgment. Indeed, if any reader is not certain he is ready for the judgment day, then do not delay. Let the warning be effective for you. Ask God for his mercy today, so you can be sure you are right with God.

Sixth, let us labor wisely in our missional work. Jesus said Tyre, Sidon, and Sodom—unlikely places all—could come to faith. Other unlikely cities—Alexandria, Ephesus, and Rome—became centers of the early church, along with Capernaum. So follow the movement of the Spirit, not our guesses, and follow him to those places where he is working.

J. Ligon Duncan: The Lord Jesus does not use these hard words to be mean. He doesn't use these words to tear people down. He is trying to shake them out of their indifference because He loves them so much. He loves them so much He doesn't care whether they get angry with him. And we need folks who will care about us more than they care about what we think about them. We need those folks who will administer to us the wounds of a friend. That's a scary thing to have to do. Counselors and ministers and friends have to do it all the time. After many hours of patient listening, of empathetic understanding, of coming along side, there may come that time when we have to say to our friend, "There is a glaring flaw that I must tell you about in your life if I am to be a real friend to you." And we know that it may cost us our friendship to do it, but we do it because we love one another; not because we're mean spirited; not because we want to tear someone down; but because we love them so much we're willing to risk losing their love for us. That's how much we love them. The Lord Jesus Christ is trying to shake these people awake, spiritually, in the words that He says to them. . .

And the Lord Jesus uses this language to shake them into awareness of their condition, and secondly to emphasize the seriousness of the matter. The Lord Jesus is not trifling with them and He doesn't expect to be trifled with. He is using this language deliberately and pastorally to teach them of the urgency of their situation. . .

I want you to notice at least three things which raise the issue of God's sovereignty and man's responsibility in verses 20 through 25.

- First of all, isn't it interesting that Jesus reminds us here that not everyone has the same exposure to the gospel. The folks in Bethsaida and Chorazin and Capernaum had more exposure to gospel inducements than did the people in the Old Testament in Sidon and Tyre, and in Sodom and Gomorrah. They had more opportunities in these cities where Jesus was preaching to hear the gospel than did these people to hear the prophets of the Old Testament. “That’s not fair,” somebody says. Jesus said it. I didn’t say it. I didn’t write it. Calvin didn’t write it. Jesus said it. That’s the way it is. They had more opportunities. Listen to what Matthew Henry says, “Some places enjoy the means of grace in greater plenty, power, and purity than others.” That is just the way it is.

- Secondly, notice that Jesus indicates that some would have repented if they had more light. Now, boy, if that isn’t a mental tongue twister, I don’t know what is. Get what Jesus is saying here. He is not saying that there would have been, that the reason that some people don’t repent is because they don’t have as much light. He’s not saying that. He is, however, saying, as a figure of speech, He’s raising the question, “Why do some people repent and others don’t?” Now that again, is a question that involves the sovereignty of God and the responsibility of men.
- And then finally, in verse 25, you’ll see thirdly that the Lord Jesus suggests that God the Father has actually hidden repentance from some people, even though Jesus invites all to come to Him. Now let me just stress again, Calvin didn’t write that passage. Jesus spoke that passage. The issues of sovereignty and responsibility are just there in the Bible, and we only ignore them if we want to ignore the Bible. We’re not ignoring somebody’s manmade theology when we ignore those words, we’re ignoring the Lord Jesus Christ.

S. Lewis Johnson: But the question is very hard for common sense. If Tyre and Sidon would have repented, and if Sodom would have repented, then why did they not have opportunity? And I don’t think anyone can answer that who does not believe in the sovereign grace of God. And if the question remains, it’s a question that we shall find ultimate answer upon when we get to heaven. But we can be sure that so far as God is concerned, he has stated plainly in his word that he “hardens who he wills and he exercises mercy on who he wills.” These are the words of God. And if we don’t like them, if we thrash about seeking to escape their force, then our argument is not with men. Our argument is ultimately with the word of God.

John MacArthur: Treating Christ with Criticism (:16-19) and Indifference (:20-24)

The gentleness is gone when you hit verse 20. There’s almost a line of demarcation between those two verses. Something dramatic changes, and judgment begins to come with fury in verse 20. And this, of course, accelerates the events that lead to the people crucifying Christ. But there is definitely an open flow of the wrath of God that comes in the next section. Now, we’ve seen the response of criticism, what men did: they criticized. Now, I want you to see the response of indifference: what men didn’t do. . .

Verse 20, “Then began He to upbraid” - it means to reproach, or to speak condemnation against - “the cities in which most of His mighty works were done, because they repented not.” The gentleness of verse 19 is gone now. I mean, they’ve had ten chapters of revelation. They’ve had the fullness of the Galilean ministry, with all of its myriad of miracles - He banished disease from Palestine. I mean, they’ve seen enough to know - forgiving sin, casting out demons, raising the dead, you name it.

And now, they have not repented, and so He moves to the statement of His judgment. This is, if you will, the wrath of the Lamb; as gracious as the Son of God is in His friendship with sinners, so fierce is He in His denunciation of those who will not acknowledge their sin. It is holy anger; it is holy fury that you see in this passage. Now, he mentions the cities - Matthew does - in which most of His mighty works were done. Now, this would be the Galilean cities, where His Galilean ministry had taken place. . .

Now, listen to this: when men have that kind of privilege and do not repent, what happens is their guilt becomes aggravated, and they are more severely guilty than if they never heard at all, or saw at all, a miracle. It is far better, my friend, for you to know nothing about Jesus Christ, than to know anything about Him and reject Him. For there is greater punishment - Hebrews 10:26 - to the one who knows of Christ, and tramples His blood under his feet, than the one who never knew. . .

They had a languid interest in His teaching. His miracles entertained them, and nothing more. His providential goodness never touched their hearts. His doctrine produced no change in their lives. Self-satisfied, complacent, whether in the form of Pharisaic self-righteousness or popular indifference, is condemned by Christ as the grossest of evils. On the outside, they were eminently respectable, but hell will be hotter for them than for Sodomites.

TEXT: Matthew 11:25-30

TITLE: SOVEREIGN REVELATION BUT UNIVERSAL INVITATION

BIG IDEA:

ESSENTIAL DIVINE REVELATION IS TARGETED BUT UNIVERSAL DISCIPLESHIP INVITATION IS EXTENDED TO ALL

INTRODUCTION:

Craig Blomberg: The language of these verses (“hidden,” “revealed,” “your good pleasure”) is incontrovertibly predestinarian in nature, but the language of free will appears equally clearly in vv. 20-24, in which people are judged for their rejection of Jesus, and in vv. 28-30, in which Jesus offers salvation to those who will respond more positively. Scripture in fact regularly and without sense of contradiction juxtaposes the themes of divine sovereignty and human responsibility (e.g., Gen 50:19-20; Lev 20:7-8; Jer 29:10-14; Joel 2:32; Phil 2:12-13).

Grant Osborne: Jesus traces several themes here.

- (1) God’s own elect sovereignty is made known in revealing the kingdom truths not to the so-called “wise” but to “infants,” i.e., the “little ones” (10:42), Jesus’ followers (11:25–26).
- (2) The intimate union of Father and Son is demonstrated in their unique knowledge of each other and in the revelation Jesus has provided (v. 27).
- (3) Jesus invites all who will to become followers and find rest in him by taking his easy “yoke” upon themselves (vv. 28–30).

The progression of thought is this: Jesus thanks God for his sovereign will in revealing salvation, then takes on himself that authority as the Son, and finally uses that authority to invite the weary to enjoy salvation and rest in him. In all of this Jesus is God’s Wisdom, the voice and presence of God in this world and the true authoritative interpreter of God’s truth.

David Thompson: Dr. Stanley Toussaint said that Matthew chapter 11 presents three main evidences that Israel had rejected Jesus Christ as King:

- 1) Israel was antagonistic to the King (11:2-19);
- 2) Israel was indifferent to the King’s message (11:20-24);
- 3) Christ’s invitation for all to come to Him indicates Israel has rejected the King (11:25-30).

This section of Scripture presents a major turning point in the book of Matthew. There is a major turn from the national to the individual. There is a major change from promoting an announcement of a national kingdom to an announcement of personal salvation.

Notice how verse 25 begins—“at that time.” The Greek emphatically stresses that this turn occurred in the time when Jesus was concluding His words of condemnation against the Galilean cities that had seen His miracles but refused to repent.

There is a wonderful, gracious invitation that is presented in this great passage of Scripture:

ANY PERSON WHO WANTS A RELATIONSHIP WITH GOD AND DESIRES A HEART AND SOUL THAT IS AT REST WILL COME TO CHRIST IN CHILDLIKE FAITH AND LEARN FROM HIM.

I. (:25-27) GOD'S SOVEREIGN ROLE IN REVELATION

A. (:25-26) Praise for God's Sovereignty in Revelation

1. (:25) Grandiose Praise

a. Praise for God's Sovereignty

*“At that time Jesus answered and said,
‘I praise Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth,’*

Grant Osborne: Jesus' prayer flows out of the condemnation of the Galilean cities and prepares for another rejection scene in 12:1–8. Thus the “answering” probably means Jesus is responding to the Jews' refusal to accept his message.

D. A. Carson: While exomologoumai soi (“I praise you”) can be used in the sense of “I confess my sins” (cf. 3:6), the basic meaning is acknowledgment. Sins truly acknowledged are sins confessed. When this verb is used with respect to God, the person praying “acknowledges” who God is, the propriety of his ways, and the excellence of his character. At that point, acknowledgment is scarcely distinguishable from praise (as in Ro 14:11; 15:9; Php 2:11; cf. LXX of Ps 6:6; 7:18; 17:50 et al.).

Here Jesus addresses God as “Father” and “Lord of heaven and earth” (cf. Sir 51:10; Tob 7:16). These are particularly appropriate titles, because the former indicates Jesus' sense of sonship and prepares for v.27, while the latter recognizes God's sovereignty over the universe and prepares for vv.25–26. God is sovereign, free to conceal or reveal as he wills. God has revealed “these things”—the significance of Jesus' miracles (cf. vv.20–24), the messianic age unfolding largely unnoticed, the content of Jesus' teaching—to nēpiois (“little children,” “childlike disciples,” “simple ones,” GK 3758; see Jeremias, New Testament Theology, 111; cf. Jn 7:48–49; 1Co 1:26–29; 3:18); and he has hidden them from the “wise and learned.”

b. Praise for God's Revelation Program

“that Thou didst hide these things from the wise and intelligent and didst reveal them to babes.”

D. A. Carson: Many restrict the “wise and learned” to the Pharisees and teachers of the law, but the context implies something broader. Jesus has just finished pronouncing woes on “this generation” (v.16) and denouncing entire cities (vv.20–24). These are “the wise and learned” (better, “the wise and understanding”) from whom the real significance of Jesus' ministry is concealed. The point of interest is not their education, any more than the point of interest in the “little children” is their age or size. The contrast is between those who are self-sufficient and deem themselves wise and those who are dependent and love to be taught. . .

We must not think that God's concealing and revealing are symmetrical activities arbitrarily exercised toward neutral human beings who are both innocent and helpless in the face of the divine decree. God is dealing with a race of sinners (cf. 1:21; 7:11) whom he owes nothing. Thus to conceal “these things” is not an act of injustice but of judgment—the very judgment John the Baptist was looking for and failed to find in Jesus. The astonishing thing about God’s activity is not that God acts in both mercy and judgment but who the recipients of that mercy and judgment are: those who pride themselves in understanding divine things are judged; those who understand nothing are taught. The predestination pattern is the counterpoint of grace.

Craig Blomberg: You hid does not mean that God completely concealed the things in question from the world’s wise ones, but rather that it is in his plan that the way to knowing them is not the way of human excellence or wisdom (cf. 1 Cor. 1:18-19; 2:6-8). As far as human excellence in itself is concerned, these things are hidden, and that by the divine plan. Jesus does not define these things, but the expression “must refer, in one way or another, to the secret of the presence of the Kingdom which was the burden of Jesus’ preaching.” Some interpret it as speaking of eschatological happenings, and others of the knowledge the Son received from the Father and which he passes on to his followers. Or there may be a reference to the mighty works Jesus did and which the Jews in general were unable to understand as signs of kingdom. But all such views surely point to “the presence of the Kingdom,” and we will do well to take this as our starting point. . .

Their self-sufficiency means that they do not easily come to trust God for salvation. This does not mean that none of the world’s wise and clever people will come to know it. In every age there have been wise and clever people who have rejoiced in the revelation Jesus has made known. But the point is that they came to know it by their simple trust in Jesus, not by their intellectual skills and their knowledge of abstruse research methods. And that simple trust is open to the humblest of us all, to the babies among us.

Daniel Doriani: The spiritual question of the hour was this: Why did Israel respond so poorly to Jesus? The answer is twofold.

- First, Jesus says, it was their fault. Some were hard to please—fickle and spiritually lazy. Others had an academic consensus about the proper interpretation of Scripture and its laws. They were quite convinced of their orthodoxy and rectitude.
- But second, God hid the truth from those who claimed to be wise and revealed it to infants. He chose to turn the world upside down.

By this Jesus commends a childlike attitude. Some people think the commendation of children means that Jesus does not want us to bother with doctrine or with deep things of the faith. They say we must simply trust God and live by his commands. Anything more is superfluous. But this confuses the metaphor. Children are not thoughtless or foolish. Children think very hard about things that affect them, and so should we. Christians should have a child’s heart and an adult’s head.

Richard Gardner: Here the knowledge to be disclosed is the meaning of Jesus’ messianic deeds; the infants to whom God reveals these things are the disciples; and the wise and the intelligent from whom this knowledge is hidden are the scribes and the Pharisees. All of this, Jesus says, is a matter of God’s own choosing.

Donald Hagner: God’s mysterious sovereignty lies behind both belief and unbelief, yet without obviating the culpability of those who fail to believe. That some believed and others did not believe the message of Jesus can be described from this perspective as God either concealing or revealing the truth of that message.

Grant Osborne: God reveals his truths only to those who open themselves up to him with a childlike simplicity and receptivity, not to those who in their pride and self-sufficiency feel no need for it.

2. (:26) Governing Principle of God's Sovereign Revelation

"Yes, Father, for thus it was well-pleasing in Thy sight."

B. (:27) Primary Role of Jesus as the Revealer of the Father

1. Authority for Revelation Delegated to Jesus

"All things have been handed over to Me by My Father;"

Richard Gardner: According to verse 27, Jesus plays a pivotal role in the process of revelation. Note the formula of authorization in 11:27a, which appears again at the end of the Gospel (28:18a). There Jesus announces that he has been given dominion over all. Here the claim is that Jesus has been granted knowledge of all, which he in turn shares with others: God alone knows the divine purpose at work in Jesus' mission; and Jesus alone has access to this divine understanding.

2. Access to Revelation Determined by Jesus

"and no one knows the Son, except the Father; nor does anyone know the Father, except the Son, and anyone to whom the Son wills to reveal Him."

D. A. Carson: The reciprocal knowledge of Son and Father where the Father is God presupposes a special sonship indeed. And this unique mutual knowledge guarantees that the revelation the Son gives is true. . . There is a self-enclosed world of Father and Son that is opened to others only by the revelation provided by the Son. . .

What is made clear in this passage is that sonship and messiahship are not quite the same. "Sonship precedes messiahship and is in fact the ground for the messianic mission" (Ladd, Theology of the New Testament, 165–67, esp. 167).

Donald Hagner: Jesus is the unique agent of the Father—the one fully known by the Father alone. He is the sole mediator simultaneously of the knowledge of the Father and of his salvation purposes, for the Father and his will are fully known to Jesus. Jesus reveals this knowledge only to those who will receive it. Yet the invitation remains open to "all" (cf. πάντες in v 28).

Grant Osborne: The main idea is that God has shared his authority and his wisdom with his unique Son, and Jesus alone can truly reveal his Father (cf. John 1:18).

II. (:28-30) MAN'S ACTIVE ROLE IN RESPONDING TO UNIVERSAL SALVATION INVITATION

A. (:28) Come to Jesus and Find Rest

1. Essence of the Invitation

"Come to Me,"

Walter Wilson: Having established his intimate and exclusive role in relation to divine knowledge, Jesus issues an invitation to participate in the scheme of revelation just articulated (11:28).

Warren Wiersbe: “Come.” The Pharisees all said “Do!” and tried to make the people follow Moses and the traditions. But true salvation is found only in a person, Jesus Christ. To come to Him means to trust Him. This invitation is open to those who are exhausted and burdened down. That is exactly how the people felt under the yoke of pharisaical legalism (Matt. 23:4; Acts 15:10).

2. Targets of the Invitation

“all who are weary and heavy-laden,”

3. Promise of the Invitation

“and I will give you rest.”

Craig Blomberg: The rest Jesus offers his disciples enables them to overcome a certain measure of “fear, anxiety, uncertainty, and meaninglessness in the joy and peace of God's very presence in Jesus Christ.” By way of contrast, most Jews found the interpretations of the law imposed on them by their leaders increasingly burdensome (23:4; cf. Acts 15:10, which uses the identical “yoke” imagery).

Donald Hagner: What Yahweh promised in the Jeremiah passage [6:16], Jesus now promises to those who come to him and follow him in discipleship: he will give them rest for their souls, i.e., a realization of a deep existential peace, a shalom, or sense of ultimate well-being with regard to one's relationship to God and his commandments (cf. the “rest,” κατάπαυσις, of Heb 4:3–10).

Grant Osborne: In the Hebrews passage as here, the rest is both present and future, both the present relationship with God and the eternal rest in heaven. In coming to Jesus, the disciple enters the rest of God (Heb 4:3, “we who have believed enter that rest”).

B. (:29-30) Commit to Discipleship and Find Rest

1. (:29) Discipleship Involves a Learning Process with Eternal Benefits

a. Essence of the Invitation

“Take My yoke upon you, and learn from Me,”

Grant Osborne: The essence of true discipleship is hearing and doing all that Jesus teaches (cf. 28:19, “teaching them to keep everything I have commanded you”). This in fact is the meaning of “righteousness” in Matthew, living life by God's (and Jesus') rules (see on 3:15; 5:6, 10, 20; 6:1, 33). For Jesus (indeed, for the NT as a whole) to “hear” is to “obey,” to “learn” is to “do.”

Leon Morris: To be a follower of Jesus is to be a disciple and therefore a learner. It is not enough to indicate that one would like to be a follower of Jesus; to commit oneself to him means to commit oneself to a learning process. This is not meant to scare people or make them think that the way Jesus teaches is much harder than that of the rabbis. Jesus affirms that he is gentle and humble in heart. This taking of a lowly place is noteworthy. Leaders and teachers have always tended to take a superior place, but Jesus has no need of such gimmicks. He left his place in heaven and on earth took the form of a slave (Phil. 2:7). In heart locates these qualities at the center of his being. It was not that he pretended to be humble and made a show of being lowly: he really was lowly, and that at the very center of all that he was. Because of what he is in his innermost being, meek and lowly, those who come to him find rest.

b. Characterization of the Master

“for I am gentle and humble in heart;”

Charles Swindoll: Before entering a permanent relationship, such as a marriage, you need to know the one to whom you’re committing. If you’re going to “yoke up” and share with someone both the direction and pace of life, you need to know that person’s character, convictions, personality, and passions. Hence, Jesus offers a description of Himself – “gentle and humble in heart.”

c. Promise of the Invitation

“and you shall find rest for your souls.”

Grant Osborne: As elsewhere this rest is inaugurated, present in the sense that the believer has peace in the midst of life’s troubles, and future because final vindication is promised for Jesus’ lowly followers (Rev 7:13–15; 21:3–4).

D. A. Carson: The “yoke” (zygos, GK 2433), put on animals for pulling heavy loads, is a metaphor for the discipline of discipleship. If Jesus is not offering the yoke of the law (Pirke Avot 3:6, cf. Sir 51:26), neither is he offering freedom from all constraints. The “yoke” is Jesus’ yoke, not the yoke of the law; discipleship must be to him. In view of v.27, “learn from me” cannot mean “imitate me” or “learn from my experience” (contra Stauffer, TDNT, 2:348–49) but “learn from the revelation that I alone impart” (cf. Josef Schmid, Das Evangelium nach Matthäus [Regensburg: Pustet, 1959]).

The marvelous feature of this invitation is that out of his overwhelming authority (v.27) Jesus encourages the burdened to come to him because he is “gentle and humble in heart.” Matthew stresses Jesus’ gentleness (18:1–10; 19:13–15). Apparently the theme is connected with the messianic servant language (Isa 42:2–3; 53:1–2; cf. Zec 9:9, cited in Mt 21:5) that recurs in 12:15–21. Authoritative revealer that he is, Jesus approaches us with a true servant’s gentleness. . .

The implicit contrast between Jesus’ yoke and that of others is not between antinomianism and legalism, for in a deep sense his demands (5:21–48) are far more radical than theirs; nor between salvation by law and salvation by grace (contra Barth, “Matthew’s Understanding of the Law,” 148 n. 2); nor between harsh attitudes among Jewish teachers of the law and Jesus’ humane and humble approach (Klostermann). No, the contrast is between the burden of submission to the OT in terms of Pharisaic regulation and the relief of coming under Jesus’ tutelage as under the authority of gentle Revealer to whom the OT, the ancient paths, truly pointed (cf. H. D. Betz, “The Logion of the Easy Yoke and of Rest [Matthew 11:28–30],” JBL 86 [1967]: 10–24).

2. (:30) Discipleship Demands Are Challenging But Not Burdensome

“For My yoke is easy, and My load is light.”

Michael Wilkins: Jesus’ easy yoke is in stark contrast to the burden of Pharisaic Judaism. The Pharisees spoke of 613 commandments, and their halakot (binding interpretations) produced an overwhelmingly complicated approach to life. In our quest to know God's Word it is good to remember that we can turn Jesus' yoke into an equally unbearable burden unless we consciously recognize that discipleship to Jesus is not essentially a religious obligation. Rather, ours is an intimate relationship with the One who calls, "Come to me" and "learn from me." As complicated as life may become, discipleship at heart simply means walking with Jesus in the real world and having him teach us moment by moment how to live life his way.

William Barclay: He says: 'My yoke is easy.' The word easy is in Greek chrēstos, which can mean well-fitting. In Palestine, ox-yokes were made of wood; the ox was brought, and the measurements were taken. The yoke was then roughed out, and the ox was brought back to have the yoke tried on. The yoke was carefully adjusted, so that it would fit well, and not chafe the neck of the patient animal. The yoke was tailor-made to fit the ox.

There is a legend that Jesus made the best ox-yokes in all Galilee, and that from all over the country people came to him to buy the best yokes that skill could make. In those days, as now, shops had their signs above the door; and it has been suggested that the sign above the door of the carpenter's shop in Nazareth may well have been: 'My yokes fit well.' It may well be that Jesus is here using a picture from the carpenter's shop in Nazareth where he had worked throughout the silent years.

Grant Osborne: The rules of the Pharisees never stopped burdening the Jews with endless regulations over every area of life. The so-called "freedom" of the libertine world of our time functions in the opposite direction, yet burdens even more terribly. Note the summary of Doug Webster:

... for those who live under the yoke there is absolutely no other way to live. Who in their right mind would go back to the gods of Self, Money, Lust and Power? Who would return on bended knee to the shrines of pious performance and judgmentalism? Is not love better than hate, purity better than lust, reconciliation better than retaliation? And is not "better" really "easier" when measured in character rather than convenience, rest for the soul rather than selfish pride?

Charles Swindoll: As Solomon once wrote, "The way of the treacherous is hard" (Prov. 13:15). Looking at those around Him who were overwhelmed with guilt and shame—even the hard-hearted unbelievers from the cities of Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum—Jesus urged them to come to Him, to trade their rebellion for submission, their burdens for belief, their heavy yoke of sin and guilt for His light yoke of peace and joy. Jesus ended His harsh condemnation of the unbelieving Jews with an open invitation to come!

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) What type of individuals are the "babes" or childlike ones to whom God graciously and sovereignly reveals Himself?
- 2) Why is Jesus the exclusive revealer of God the Father?
- 3) Is coming to Jesus different than taking His yoke and following after Him?

4) What type of rest have you experienced in your personal relationship with Jesus Christ?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Allen Ross: Jesus makes His appeal to people who have spiritual needs, not to the learned religious teachers who did not think they had any spiritual needs. Jesus' double designation "weary and burdened" covers both sides of human misery, those who have undertaken burdens themselves and are weary (the active sense) and those who have had burdens laid upon them (the passive sense). Based on other teachings of Jesus we may say that this burden included the teachings of the scribes and Pharisees: "They tie up heavy loads and put them on men's shoulders, but they themselves are not willing to lift a finger to move them" (Matt. 23:4). It was hard enough to try to keep the Law; but the Pharisaical regulations made it a complete burden.

His invitation was with promise: "Come to me . . . and I will give you rest." When rest is rest for the soul, burdens become light. In all probability Jesus was referring to the promise of the New Covenant in Jeremiah that the LORD would refresh the people (31:25); for those who followed Jesus by faith the rest would be both a present reality through the forgiveness of sin and relief of the burden of guilt, and a future guarantee of complete redemption. The important thing to note is that He, Jesus, and not the Father, gives this rest. He is claiming to be the LORD, Yahweh, of Jeremiah 31. His words are emphatic, "I Myself," and they underscore the previous declarations (vv. 25, 27) and affirms that He can and most assuredly will give this rest.

The call is for people to come to Him. This is ultimately a figure of speech, comparing believing in Him to the act of coming to Him. It indicates that one must believe in Jesus and seek forgiveness and salvation from Him. The act of faith would not be a momentary response, but it would be a whole new orientation to the spiritual life. Genuine faith will find expression in learning from Jesus, or taking His yoke. . .

The call of Jesus was a more involved call for faith than a simple acceptance of Him. It was a call for people to exchange yokes. In those days to take Christ's yoke would have meant to submit to Him as the religious authority in the place of the current Jewish leaders. To accept Jesus meant to turn away from the current religious authorities who were not meeting their spiritual needs. The yoke of Pharisaism was a heavy obligation; but the yoke of Jesus was light. Jewish piety often made the yoke heavy by taking on as many obligations as possible (an approach some Christian groups have followed by making their many additional rulings binding laws). But Jesus offered a yoke that was "easy," meaning, good, comfortable or well-suited. Just as a yoke had to be tailor-made for oxen, the Lord's yoke fits well the needs and abilities His people. Essentially, Christ would bear the burden, and those who took His yoke by faith would find rest for their souls. . .

This is the call to faith that has gone out to the whole world, namely, that whoever would find rest for their weary souls must trust in Jesus Christ and not in their religious efforts or works of righteousness, for only He can give spiritual rest and well-being to the troubled soul. Some religions can give temporary rest for a time in this life through various spiritual disciplines. But the rest that Jesus promises last for eternity. It is a re-entry into the Sabbath Rest that was begun at Creation. And such a commitment to Christ, will not only bring rest but will inevitably lead to righteousness because those who follow Him will learn from Him.

Daniel Doriani: God relates to a world of sinners to whom he owes nothing except judgment. When he conceals his truth, it is not as though he erases a trail from honest hikers who hoped to climb God's mountain. Quoting the Psalms, Paul says, "There is no one righteous, not even one; there is no one who understands, no one who seeks God. All have turned away" (Rom. 3:10–12; Ps. 14:1–3). Therefore, it is no marvel that Jesus hides his truth from some. The marvel is that he reveals it so clearly to win so many. . .

God certainly has the right to build diversity into his creation. We ought to respect his work and give thanks for the variations that make life spicy. He also has the right to grant his favors as he pleases. God says, "I will have mercy on whom I have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I have compassion" (Rom. 9:15; Ex. 33:19).

God has the right to reveal his truth as he pleases. He has revealed his power and attributes to mankind in the pages of nature, but mankind has suppressed and perverted his truth (Rom. 1:18–25). He has the right to hide "these things from the wise and learned" and to reveal "them to little children" (Matt. 11:25–26). If we object to this, we object to the power and deity of the Lord. God is good and powerful and has knowledge we cannot fathom. He does as he pleases, and he always acts in a manner that expresses his eternal moral excellence.

Donald Hagner: Because of Jesus' identity and because of the reality he brings, an authoritative path can be cut through the thicket of elaborate human rules and regulations. Jesus invites all to come to him, to enter into relationship with him, and to follow him in discipleship. It is his yoke to which he calls; it is he who gives rest. That he places himself so much at the center is astonishing and separates him from all other Jewish teachers, who would only call others to obedience to the Torah. Jesus too in a way calls his disciples to righteousness in obedience to Torah. Yet there is a world of difference between the burdensome and tiring way of the Pharisees and the kind yoke and light burden of Jesus. The way of Jesus promises the confident rest and peace that anticipate eschatological blessing. The only explanation for this is the new era brought by Jesus. The fact that Jesus' yoke is kind and his burden is light must not be misunderstood to mean that the discipleship and righteousness to which Jesus calls are easy and undemanding. Discipleship demands nothing less than life commitment and comprehensive self-denial. The righteousness described in the Sermon on the Mount penetrates to the inner world of thought and motive. For Jesus, "the way that is easy" (7:13) leads to destruction, not to rest. In the last analysis it is only because of the dawning of the new era of grace and salvation, in Matthew's language "the kingdom of heaven" of realized eschatology, that the possibility exists of a kind yoke, a light burden, and thus rest for those who have toiled in frustration. In these new circumstances, and here alone, "his commandments are not burdensome" (1 John 5:3).

John MacArthur: What is the Rest promised in this passage?

In verse 11, most interestingly, he says, "Let us labor therefore to enter into that rest." You cease from works in one sense, and yet, you labor to enter in, you strive to enter into that rest. And not to fall by the wayside, after the example and illustration of the people in the wilderness, who died because of unbelief. Now, that's just a little look at Hebrews that I hope will help you. Go back to Matthew 11. What is rest, then? And I believe you have the same concept here. Jesus says, "Come unto Me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I'll give you rest."

“You shall find rest for your souls.” I think He is offering them salvation; saving rest. Now, just to take this a step further, I looked up in the dictionary, and you really don’t want to do Bible study out of a dictionary, but just to kind of deal with the - the English concept of rest, I looked it up and found there are five definitions given for rest, and they marvelously parallel what salvation rest is. Number one: the dictionary says that rest is to cease from action or motion; to cease from action or motion, to stop labor and exertion.

And that is a marvelous parallel to, I believe, the rest that our Lord offers. To enter into God’s rest means no more self-effort to earn God’s favor, no more fleshly works to seek His mercy. All works-righteousness systems end as a way to God. We rest from legalism, from self-righteousness. We rest in His consuming grace. Secondly, the dictionary says that rest is to be free from whatever wearies or disturbs. Sometimes you’ll hear somebody say, “You kids don’t give me any rest.” It’s just relief from whatever wearies or constantly disturbs.

In the spiritual sense, to enter God’s rest means to be at peace with God, to possess not only peace with God, but the peace of God which passes understanding. To have your heart totally calm in the midst of a storm, to have no more frustration and no more anxiety over life and destiny, no need to worry; sin is forgiven, no guilt is there. To be free from whatever wearies or disturbs. Thirdly, the dictionary says to rest is to be settled or fixed. Something rests somewhere. It’s fixed there, it’s settled there.

And I believe in a spiritual sense that’s a wonderful analogy as well. To enter God’s rest means to be positionally secured in God; to end the running from philosophy to philosophy, religion to religion, guru to guru; the vacillating that comes from terrible insecurity in not knowing the truth. But now, in Christ, we are settled, unmovable, firm, rooted and grounded in Him. Fourthly, to rest means to remain confident or trustful. And to enter into God’s rest means to enjoy faith without fear, to enjoy security, to have perfect trust that our time and eternity is in His care, and He loves us.

And fifthly, the word rest means to lean on, or to repose, or to depend on. And to enter God’s rest means from now on, we depend on Him for everything, and He supplies our needs. Now, what is rest? To cease from action, to be free from whatever disturbs, to be fixed and settled, to be confident and trustful, to lean on, to repose, to depend. All of that is embodied in our salvation. And now, you can go back and look at verse 28 again. When our Lord says, “I will give you rest,” He is encompassing all of that, and infinitely more than that.

Now, let me take it a step further. Rest was also a Jewish term for the Kingdom. The Kingdom is called the time of rest, or the time of refreshing. Rest is also a term for heaven, for in the Revelation it says, “She shall rest from her labors, and her works do follow.” So, when the Lord says you will enter into rest, He means personal, immediate, eternal salvation, with its Kingdom relationship, and its heavenly relationship as well. The fullness of all that God can give to calm the troubled soul; rest. And this is what the Lord offers.

Jesus came into the world to give rest to those who would come to Him. And what did we say the word come means? To believe. For those who believe in Him, there is salvation; that is the simple gospel invitation that our Lord gives. But in its simplicity, there is profundity, for as you look at those verses - six choice verses - you find the five essential elements in a genuine invitation to salvation; five essential elements in a genuine invitation to salvation.

TEXT: Matthew 12:1-14

TITLE: TWO SABBATH CONTROVERSIES

BIG IDEA:

SHOWING LOVE AND MERCY DEMONSTRATES THE SUPERIOR AUTHORITY AND MERCIFUL PRIORITIES OF JESUS OVER LEGALISTIC FORMALISM

INTRODUCTION:

R. T. France: Three areas of controversy stand out in this chapter:

1. Jesus' attitude to the sabbath (vv. 1–14),
2. his exorcisms (vv. 22–37), and
3. the basis of his authority as it is challenged in the demand for an authenticating “sign” (vv. 38–45).

At each point we meet people in positions of religious leadership who confront Jesus and challenge his authority to act as he has been doing, “the Pharisees” in vv. 2, 14 and 24 and “some of the scribes and Pharisees” in v. 38. For them Jesus is a law-breaker (vv. 1–14), an agent of Satan (vv. 24–32) and a self-appointed “teacher” with no proper authorization (vv. 38–42). As a result already at this relatively early point in the story we hear of a formulated plan to eliminate Jesus (12:14), even though it will not in fact be in Galilee and under Pharisaic auspices that Jesus will eventually be executed, but under the priestly régime of Jerusalem. Matthew will have more to say of Galilean opposition to Jesus in 13:53 – 14:2; 15:1–20; 16:1–4, but already by the end of ch. 12 the main lines have been laid down. . .

Jesus' disagreement with this Pharisaic approach centers on two considerations.

- The first (which is in view in vv. 3–6 and 8) is that of authority: who has the right to declare what is and is not forbidden on the sabbath? For the christological implications of Jesus' claim to such authority see introductory comments on 12:1–45 above.
- The second (developed in vv. 11–12, and cf. v. 7) is the issue of priorities: as in 5:21–48, Jesus is concerned to get behind the regulations to the original spirit and intention of God's law.

Jesus' key pronouncements on these two issues are

- v. 8, “The Son of Man is the Lord of the sabbath” and
- v. 12b, “It is permissible to do good on the sabbath.”

The effect of these two positive principles together is to call in question the whole scribal industry of sabbath-regulation; no wonder they wanted to get rid of him.

John Nolland: Here we see the disciples operating under the yoke of Jesus, who declares them guiltless when they satisfy their hunger on the sabbath in a manner deemed contrary to the Law by the Pharisees. But with its fresh introduction of conflict with the Pharisees, this unit also looks forward: conflict with the Pharisees will be the unifying motif of chap. 12.

Daniel Doriani: In the present passage, two contrasting views of Sabbath law become the catalyst for conflict between Jesus and some Pharisees. The Pharisees act like parents with excessively rigid rules. Jesus uses the occasion to teach two important lessons. First, he is Lord of the Sabbath. As its Lord, he designs it as a day for worship and service, for love of God and neighbor. Second, Jesus uses the dispute to teach us something about his identity and character. .

When the Pharisees charged Jesus with doing something illegal on the Sabbath, it was no friendly comment. They thought they caught him red-handed in serious sin. Their accusation, and Jesus' answer, lead to several lessons. First, God designed the law to promote mercy and love, not to be an end in itself. When people view the law as an end in itself, it can become their god. Second, Jesus is Lord and Master of the Sabbath. While he accepts the traditional view that the Sabbath is for worship and rest, he adds that it is also a good day for acts of kindness.

Stanley Saunders: The primary focus throughout these episodes is on Jesus' identity, the congruence of his words, actions, and mission, and the irony that his manifestation of God's mercy generates such resolute and violent resistance.

I. (:1-8) CONTROVERSY #1 = HARVESTING GRAIN ON THE SABBATH – WHO IS LORD OF THE SABBATH? SUPERIOR AUTHORITY OF JESUS

A. (:1-2) Accusation by the Pharisees

1. (:1) The Circumstances – Hungry Disciples Plucking Grain on the Sabbath

“At that time Jesus went on the Sabbath through the grainfields, and His disciples became hungry and began to pick the heads of grain and eat.”

Grant Osborne: As in 11:25, “at that time” (ἐν ἐκείνῳ τῷ καιρῷ) provides a transition from one event to the other. . . Galilee had particularly fertile land and contained many farms, with wealthy people buying large tracts of land and breaking it up into tenant farms . . . The σπορίμων were the “grain fields” and στάχυας the heads of wheat, which came ripe in March/April. Unlike today, when roads go around properties, in the ancient world roads went right through the fields, so that grain was growing right up to the walkway on both sides.

John Nolland: Though it is the behaviour of the disciples which will come under scrutiny, it is Jesus who heads into the grainfields; and he will take responsibility for the subsequent action of the disciples.

Craig Blomberg: The ripening of the grain suggests springtime, perhaps a few weeks after Passover. Matthew does not explain why the group was out traveling on a Sabbath, where they were going, or why they were hungry, merely that Jesus' disciples pluck some grain to satisfy their appetites.

Charles Swindoll: Definition given by Charles Ryrie for legalism: “a fleshly attitude which conforms to a code for the purpose of exalting self.” The code is man-made, often part of a system of traditional practices going back several generations. . .

The strangest thing about this account, though, is that the Pharisees were watching. Think about how close they had to be to see those tiny kernels going from the disciples' hands to their mouths. They were spying on Jesus, just longing for a glimpse of even a minor infraction of their man-made laws! As soon as they saw the disciples snacking, they pounced: “Look, Your disciples do what is not lawful to do on a Sabbath” (Matt. 12:2). The way the statement is phrased in Greek gives the impression that they were standing right there, pointing at something the disciples were doing at that very instant. How bizarre! But how typical of legalists.

It is interesting that the disciples didn't even think twice about what they were doing. They didn't ask permission from Jesus, nor did Jesus give any indication that the disciples might want to refrain from snacking so as not to offend the sensitive Pharisees. The disciples had been around Jesus long enough and had heard enough of his teachings to know the difference between the Mosaic Law and man-made traditions.

2. (:2) The Charge = Breaking the Sabbath Laws

“But when the Pharisees saw it, they said to Him, ‘Behold, Your disciples do what is not lawful to do on a Sabbath.’”

Grant Osborne: The OT only stipulated that the Sabbath was to be holy and a day of rest from work (Exod 20:8–11 = Deut 5:12–15), but the Jewish people needed directions on what constituted work on the Sabbath, so the Mishnah developed thirty-nine rules on what could or could not be done then (m. Šabb. 7:2).⁷ They were strict enough that a mishnaic tract said, “The rules for the Sabbath are like mountains hanging by a hair, for Scripture is scanty and the rules many (m. Hag. 1:8).”

Leon Morris: Plucking the grain was reaping, rubbing it to separate the grain from the husks (Luke tells us that they did this) was threshing, blowing away the husks may well have been interpreted as winnowing, and for good measure they may have seen the whole as preparation of food, which they also regarded as prohibited (all food eaten on the Sabbath had to be prepared on the previous day).

B. (:3-5) Two OT Examples of Mitigating Circumstances

1. (:3-4) Example #1 – David Eating Showbread Intended for the Priests

“But He said to them, ‘Have you not read what David did, when he became hungry, he and his companions; 4 how he entered the house of God, and they ate the consecrated bread, which was not lawful for him to eat, nor for those with him, but for the priests alone?’”

Grant Osborne: The story comes from 1 Sam 21:1–6, when David was fleeing from Saul and was hungry. This occurred at Nob just a couple miles south of Jerusalem. . .

Jesus is making another qal wahomer argument (from the lesser to the greater; see those at 6:25–26 and 10:29–30): If David and his men could break the Torah for the sake of hunger, how much more could Jesus and his disciples?

Daniel Doriani: David told them he left the king in such haste that he had no food. David asked what they could give him (1 Sam. 21:1–7). The priests said they had nothing but “the consecrated bread.” That bread came from the grain offerings of the people. From their gifts, the priests offered twelve loaves of bread to God to represent the gifts of the twelve tribes of Israel. Whenever the priests removed the bread, the law required that a priest eat that bread.

The priests faced a decision. The bread belonged to the priests, yet it also belonged to God, and David was God's anointed servant. The priests deliberated, then gave the bread to David, to keep the Lord's anointed king from going hungry. Technically speaking, everyone knew this was illegal. The law clearly stipulated that none but a priest could eat the consecrated bread. But the priests understood the true purpose of the law: to lead the people to love and worship God.

As the Lord's anointed, David led the people in their spiritual service. He was God's agent, just as the priests were. Which was better: to feed God's anointed servant or observe a rule about priests and bread while sending the hope of Israel away hungry? The priests gave David the bread; Jesus approved and drew a lesson from the event. Just as the needs of God's king and his servants outweighed sacrificial regulations in David's day, so the needs of King Jesus and his servants outweigh Sabbath regulations. The needs of God's ordained leaders take precedence over ritual law. The king's men have a right to eat, whether those men belong to David or to Jesus. Jesus says the Pharisees should have seen this as they read the Old Testament and considered Jesus' work as Israel's true king.

Craig Blomberg: Jesus' point is not that analogous circumstances exist to warrant exceptional practices but that “one greater than the temple is here” (v. 6). By implication the point of v. 4 is therefore also that “one greater than David is here” (cf. 22:41-45). It is not, therefore, the particular situation in which Jesus finds himself that justifies his disciples' behavior but his very nature and authority which can transcend the law and make permissible for his disciples what once was forbidden.

S. Lewis Johnson: In other words, our Lord refers to the incident, points out that even in the Scriptures themselves, we have indications of the relative significance of the ceremonial and cultic laws as over against the laws of right and wrong: mercy, things of necessity for the preservation of life. And in addition, if we remember that David the King is a type of our Lord Jesus – he is in rejection; he is seeking food; and he is fed by the priesthood – all of this has application to our Lord who is in rejection with his disciples, hungry and seeking food, on a secret mission from heaven.

2. (:5) Example #2 – Priests Performing Work on the Sabbath

“Or have you not read in the Law, that on the Sabbath the priests in the temple break the Sabbath, and are innocent?”

Donald Hagner: Technically the priests desecrate (βεβηλοῦσιν, a particularly strong word) the sabbath commandment, yet they remain ἀναίτιοι, “guiltless” (John 7:23 gives a similar instance). This is yet another special instance. The priests are about the work of God and thus are not bound by the normal regulations concerning the sabbath. So too it is implied by an a fortiori argument (or in rabbinic idiom, qal wāḥōmer) that Jesus and his disciples constitute a special instance and thus are not bound. They preeminently are about the work of God. Although this point is implicit and not explicit, the next saying depends on just such a conclusion.

C. (:6-8) Justification Provided by Jesus – Don't Fight against the Supremacy of Jesus

1. (:6) Superior Access to the Presence of God

“But I say to you, that something greater than the temple is here.”

Grant Osborne: Jesus points to himself as not just “greater” than the priests but even “greater” than the temple (note the emphatic position of “the temple” [τοῦ ἱεροῦ])! The neuter (rather than masculine) “greater” (μείζον) is significant, pointing to the kingdom ministry and messianic office of Jesus and not just his person. The point is that if the temple service took precedence over the Sabbath, then Jesus and his ministry have even greater authority over the Sabbath, for he supercedes the temple.

2. (:7) Superior Understanding of the Intent of God's Law

"But if you had known what this means, 'I desire compassion, and not a sacrifice,' you would not have condemned the innocent."

Grant Osborne: Jesus is saying that mercy rather than legal observance is the heart of God's will and that he has correctly exemplified this with respect to his disciples, who are thereby "guiltless" before God.

Yang: (Jesus and the Sabbath) -- By quoting Hos 6:6 in v. 7, Jesus shows what God's original intention for the sabbath was—that is, the sabbath was instituted for the benefit of the people and was presented not as a burden but as an expression of mercy; that intention is now fulfilled by Jesus himself, the merciful one, under whose authority the disciples are guiltless because they rightly understood and behaved according to the true meaning and intention of the sabbath.

Daniel Doriani: Jesus cites the priests because they work hard on the Sabbath. They teach, pray, slaughter animals, and drag them to altars for sacrifice. It is hard work, physically and mentally. If the true meaning of the Sabbath is "You shall never work," the priests work so hard that we can only call it desecration. But, of course, the law itself requires the priests to work on the Sabbath.

Clearly then, the law knows priorities. David's case shows that human need supersedes Sabbath regulations. The priests show that worship and service to the Lord do too. Jesus continues, "Something greater than the temple is here" (12:6 ESV). That is, if priests may work to serve God in the temple, the space that represents the presence of God, then the disciples may work to assist Jesus, for he is the presence of God. . .

The temple merely represents the presence of God. Jesus is greater than the temple because he is the presence of God with us. Again, the temple represents the sacrifices that reconcile us to God, whereas Jesus is the sacrifice that reconciles us to God. The disciples are free to reap on the Sabbath, because, like the priests in the temple, they must be free to serve him.

D. A. Carson: Jesus' argument, then, provides an instance from the law itself in which the Sabbath restrictions were superseded by the priests because their cultic responsibilities took precedence: the temple, as it were, was greater than the Sabbath. But now, Jesus claims, "something" greater than the temple is here. And that, too, takes precedence over the Sabbath. This solution is entirely consistent with what we have perceived to be Jesus' attitude to the law in this gospel. The law points to him and finds its fulfillment in him (see comments at 5:17–48). Not only, then, have the Pharisees mishandled the law by their halakah (vv.3–4), but they have failed to perceive who Jesus is. The authority of the temple laws shielded the priests from guilt; the authority of Jesus shields his disciples from guilt. It is not a matter of comparing Jesus' action with the action of the priests; nor is it likely that Jesus is suggesting that all his disciples are priests (contra Lohmeyer). "Rather, it is a question of contrasting [new emphasis] [Jesus'] authority with the authority of the priests" (Carson, "Jesus and the Sabbath," 67).

3. (:8) Superior Authority of the Son of Man

"For the Son of Man is Lord of the Sabbath."

Grant Osborne: Everything said thus far has moved to this point. The “for” (γάρ) establishes both the reason for vv. 7–8 and the conclusion to all that has happened. The “Lord” (κύριος) is in the emphatic position and stresses the fact that Jesus has absolute authority over the Sabbath as cosmic Lord and the final interpreter of Torah (see on v. 6). “The Sabbath” (τοῦ σαββάτου) is an objective genitive, meaning that Jesus exhibits supreme lordship/authority over the Sabbath and its regulations. The use of the title “Son of Man” centers on the “one like a son of man” who is the glorified Lord of the universe in Dan 7:13–14.

In the OT God is master of the Sabbath, and here Jesus has that authority, continuing the high Christology of Matthew. Jesus is greater than the temple (that had precedence over the Sabbath) and thus is also Lord over the Sabbath. The Sabbath rest is embodied in Jesus, who offers “rest for your souls” in 11:28–30. As in 5:17–20 Jesus has not abolished the Sabbath but has fulfilled it and now provides the true parameters for the people of God to experience the Sabbath rest.

D. A. Carson: The Sabbath conflicts are not the cause of the plotting but its occasion. Therefore, Sabbath disputes were not mentioned at Jesus’ trials; in themselves they were never as much an issue as Jesus’ claim to be Sabbath’s Lord.

Donald Hagner: As the promised one, the Messiah, Jesus is the authoritative and definitive interpreter of the Torah. Thus the demands of the sabbath commandment, however they be construed, must give way to the presence and purpose of Jesus, and not vice versa.

II. (:9-13) CONTROVERSY #2 = HEALING THE MAN WITH THE WITHERED HAND ON THE SABBATH – MERCIFUL PRIORITIES

A. (:9-10) Accusation by the Pharisees

1. (:9) Home Turf for the Religious Leaders

“And departing from there, He went into their synagogue.”

Daniel Doriani: The Pharisees had an array of detailed laws about the right way to observe the Sabbath. Although their laws were extrabiblical, the Pharisees put them on the same plane as the written law of God. Their tradition said:

- No one can travel more than eleven hundred paces on a Sabbath.
- It is illegal to spit on the ground on the Sabbath. If the moisture dents the soil, the spitter is guilty of plowing. If a seed should be there, he is also guilty of sowing.
- It is permitted to write a short word on the Sabbath, but not a long one.

Among the Pharisees’ laws, one said healing is permitted only in life- and-death situations. If someone is merely sick, the healing must wait until the day after the Sabbath. This law soon led to another conflict between Jesus and the Pharisees.

2. (:10a) Huge Opportunity for a Dramatic Showdown

“And behold, there was a man with a withered hand.”

Grant Osborne: Luke 6:6 tells us it was the right hand, emphasizing the seriousness of the situation. ξηράν means “dried up” and could be either shriveled or paralyzed. The main thing is the sad condition of the man; since in that world everyone worked with their hands, he would have been especially handicapped.

3. (:10b) Healing Is Not the Issue on the Minds of the Pharisees

“And they questioned Him, saying, ‘Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath?’—in order that they might accuse Him.”

Grant Osborne: The issue here is the real meaning and purpose of the Sabbath. The Pharisees had removed the joy and rest from the Sabbath by their detailed regulations; Jesus wants to return its true essence by doing good on it. The Sabbath is a time for healing and saving, not for hating and plotting. . .

By now the leaders have already made up their minds that Jesus is a false prophet who is dangerous to their cause. So they are not testing him but rather gathering evidence to be used against (“accuse”) him in a court of law (note how unconcerned they are with the situation of the man, in contrast to Jesus in vv. 12–13).

Donald Hagner: It is quite clear that the Pharisees did not believe it was lawful to heal on the sabbath, except in extreme cases of life or death (see m. Yoma 8:6: “Every case where life is in danger supersedes the sabbath”; cf. Mek. Exod. 22:2; 23:13). From their point of view, a man who had had a withered hand for some time could surely have waited one day more to be healed.

B. (:11-12) Common Sense Illustration of Mitigating Circumstances

1. (:11) What Would You Do?

“And He said to them, ‘What man shall there be among you, who shall have one sheep, and if it falls into a pit on the Sabbath, will he not take hold of it, and lift it out?’”

2. (:12a) What Do You Value More?

“Of how much more value then is a man than a sheep!”

3. (:12b) What Is Your Conclusion?

“So then, it is lawful to do good on the Sabbath.”

Grant Osborne: Jesus’ point is that the “good” must benefit people, not the religious establishment and its legal structure. It is the individual person that is of supreme value to God, so when a law allows an afflicted situation to continue, it is an inadequate law. As Mark 2:27 says, “The Sabbath was made for people, not people for the Sabbath.” So Jesus was not breaking the law but fulfilling it (Matt 5:17) and allowing it to be an expression of God’s love rather than legalistic requirements.

D. A. Carson: Was the Sabbath a day for maleficent activity—such as their evil intentions in questioning him—or for beneficent action, such as the healing about to be done?

R. T. France: The corollary that “it is permissible to do good on the sabbath” goes far beyond the specific issue under discussion. Its very lack of specificity is in striking contrast to the rabbinic desire to leave nothing to individual judgment. As a guide to sabbath observance it could result in widely divergent practice, and it lends itself to use as a convenient self-justification for any chosen course of action. What especially distinguishes it from the rabbinic rulings, and indeed from most of the OT laws themselves, is that it is positive rather than prohibitive. Like Jesus' version of the Golden Rule (7:12) it puts the onus on the individual to decide what is "good" and how it may or may not be squared with the equally "good" aim of the sabbath law, to provide a day of holiness and rest.

C. (:13-14) Confrontational Healing

1. (:13) Performing the Healing by the Mercy of Jesus

"Then He said to the man, 'Stretch out your hand!'

And he stretched it out, and it was restored to normal, like the other."

R. T. France: As in several other healing stories (8:5–13; 9:1–8; 15:21–28), the actual cure is related quite briefly; the focus of interest is on the dialogue which leads up to it rather than on the healing in itself—or, to use the terms of traditional form-criticism, this is a pronouncement-story rather than a miracle story. But the dialogue has set up a dramatic tension, and Jesus' decisive command resolves that tension in favor of "doing good" over against the Pharisaic rules. The healing, as usual with Jesus, is instantaneous. It is also purely verbal, so that no visible "work" is involved. It results from the man's obedience to Jesus' command. How far that obedience is a sign of faith depends on the nature and extent of the paralysis: if it was the whole arm that was paralyzed, Jesus has told him to do something impossible in stretching it out, but if it was only the hand the stretching out was not in itself remarkable. Matthew does not satisfy our curiosity on this point.

S. Lewis Johnson: We affirm man has a will, but he does not respond until God gives him power to respond. He does make the decision, but it's a decision initiated by God – that's the important thing. There is no such thing as human volition of itself, able to make a decision for God. Nobody's will ever makes a decision for Jesus Christ, until God, as Dr. Barnhouse used to say, "Jiggles the willer." . . .

Someone says, well why preach to the dead? They are dead in sin, they are totally unable – why preach to them at all? If someone ever asked me that, I would say, well, don't do it. It's obvious if you believe that way, God has not called you to preach. God does not say because men are dead in their sins, and because they are unable, we should not preach the gospel to them. He says because men are dead in sins, and because they are unable, we must preach the gospel to them. And he works as the word is preached.

Charles Swindoll: The Pharisees had their opinion of the right interpretation of the Law. Jesus had His opinion. The Pharisees claimed higher authority as trained experts in the law. Jesus claimed to be Lord of the Sabbath. They couldn't both be right. But there they stood in that synagogue, face-to-face, toe-to-toe, in a sort of stalemate . . . until Jesus turned the theoretical into the practical. He turned to the man with the withered hand and said, "Stretch out your hand!" Instantly the man's hand was restored (12:13).

Think about it. With those four words, Jesus won the debate. The legalistic quibbling about the Sabbath that had spanned generations was tossed to the trash heap when the Lord of the Sabbath proved that He and he alone had the final authority in all matters of doctrine and practice. The rabbis could reason their way into condemning anybody who disagreed with them and could claim to be enforcing God's laws, but when the Author of Scripture Himself stepped into history and corrected their flawed interpretation, all arguments were over.

2. (:14) Plotting to Kill Jesus by the Hatred of the Pharisees

“But the Pharisees went out, and counseled together against Him, as to how they might destroy Him.”

Grant Osborne: This is a shocking conclusion after the miracle and is meant to climax the growing theme of rejection (cf. 8:10–12; 9:3–4, 11, 14, 34; 10:17–19, 21–22, 28, 34–36; 11:11–12, 18–19, 20–24, 25; 12:2, 10)—a terrible reaction that will increase to the passion itself (12:24; 15:2; 21:23; 22:15; 26:4). . .

The Jewish leaders were threatened by his popularity and repulsed by his messianic authority. It is not that there was little basis for their conclusion; rather, their hardness of heart is the emphasis. Jesus’ mercy is in complete contrast with their lack of it.

S. Lewis Johnson: Now as a result of this we read that they sought the death of the Lord Jesus. You see the result of unbelief is that it leads to a kind of callous ceremonialism. Incidentally, the reason that frigidity leads to formalism is that the cooler we become to the things of the Lord, the more we like to cover it up. And so, if we can cover up the fact that we do not have a vital relationship to the Lord Jesus by ceremony and ritual, by the repetition of prayers or other means by which we make our service appealing to the eye, if we do that, then we cover up the fact that we don’t really have that right relationship with the Lord. That is usually – I do not say always – but usually the origin of ceremonialism and ritualism, and particularly in our churches today. And this incident reveals the fact that this frigidity, which leads to formalism, provokes the fury of Jesus Christ.

Donald Hagner: The authority of Jesus thus supplants the authority of the scribal tradition of the Pharisees. But since the debate comes down finally to the person of Jesus, the Pharisees know intuitively that he must be removed if their system is to remain intact. The tragedy is not the failure to accept Jesus’ argument but the failure to be receptive to Jesus as the one who brings the kingdom.

R. T. France: They are determined to silence him, to put an end to his influence on the people, but how that might be achieved would probably not yet be clear, though the intention to “bring a charge against” Jesus (v. 10) indicates one possible way forward. When eventually Jesus is “got rid of” in ch. 27, it will not be by these particular enemies, though their reports to their colleagues in Jerusalem may have helped to start the process.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) When do we exalt legalism over showing mercy and love to meet the practical needs of others?
- 2) Why did Jesus’ claims to be greater than the temple and to be Lord of the Sabbath infuriate his religious opponents?

3) Why did Jesus go out of his way to stir the Sabbath controversy with His opponents when He could have waited an extra day before healing the man with the withered hand?

4) If someone has a disposition to find fault with Christianity and the Bible, is there any value in trying to reason with them using Scriptural arguments and examples?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Daniel Doriani: Our passage leads us beyond the example of Christ to the person of Christ. Our eyes can see Jesus and worship him, for he is the merciful God. The whole passage points to mercy—for the hungry disciples, for the crippled man. But the whole passage also leads us to Jesus. He is greater than David; anyone who helps him is caught up in the cause of God. He is greater than the temple; anyone who is with him stands in the presence of God. He shows the power and the mercy of God; he is the merciful and powerful God. What he did for that crippled man is one more manifestation of his mercy toward all who know him as Lord. Whether we see it or not, we all are wounded or withered in some way. The healing power Jesus showed long ago is the same power that he possesses and wields even today.

Warren Wiersbe: Jesus gave a threefold reply to their accusation.

(1) He appealed to a king (vv. 3–4). The consecrated bread was to be eaten only by the priests, yet David and his soldiers ate it. Certainly the Son of David had a right to eat His Father’s grain from the field! And if David broke the law and was not condemned, surely Jesus could break man’s traditions and be guiltless (see 1 Sam. 21:1ff.).

(2) He appealed to the priests (vv. 5–6). The priests had to offer a given number of sacrifices on the Sabbath (Num. 28:9–10) and yet were not condemned. In fact, their service was in obedience to the law given by God. This suggests that man’s traditions about the Sabbath were wrong, for they contradicted God’s own law.

(3) He appealed to a prophet (v. 7). The quotation is from Hosea 6:6, one that Jesus had already quoted (Matt. 9:13). The Sabbath law was given to Israel as a mark of her relationship to God (Ex. 20:9–11; 31:13–17; Neh. 9:12–15). But it was also an act of mercy for both man and beast, to give them needed rest each week. Any religious law that is contrary to mercy and the care of nature should be looked on with suspicion. God wants mercy, not religious sacrifice. He wants love, not legalism. The Pharisees who sacrificed to obey their Sabbath laws thought they were serving God. When they accused Christ and His disciples, they thought they were defending God. How like religious legalists today!

Note that Jesus appealed to prophet, priest, and king, for He is Prophet, Priest, and King. Note too the three “greater” statements that He made: As the Priest, He is “greater than the temple” (Matt. 12:6); as Prophet, He is “greater than Jonah” (Matt. 12:41); and as King, He is “greater than Solomon” (Matt. 12:42).

Donald Hagner: The religious restrictions elaborated by human beings into calcified codes of conduct often paradoxically fight the purposes of God. It is particularly grievous when insistence on the letter of the law results in the neglect of genuine human need and thus hinders the expression of love. A commandment-centered system such as that of the Pharisees, however well intentioned, was bound to make this error. The issue in the present passage seems initially to be the question of exegesis of the sabbath commandment, the very sort of thing that the rabbis themselves would debate. But as we move through the passage, we see again that what is being asserted is not that Jesus' exegesis of the commandment is better than the rabbis (although such argumentation is provided) but that something (and someone with that something) dramatically significant is present, forcing the discussion to a completely different level. Jesus makes the astounding assertion that something greater than the temple is present. The Son of Man is with his people as sovereign Lord and messianic king and acts as the final and infallible interpreter of the will of God as expressed in Torah and sabbath commandment. The rest and rejoicing symbolized by the sabbath find fulfillment in the kingdom brought by Jesus.

R. T. France: This time the logic is explicit: "something greater than the temple is here." It is hard to overestimate the shock value of this pronouncement. The tabernacle set up under God's directions in the wilderness, and the fixed temple which had succeeded it, were understood to be the focus of God's relation with his people. The temple was more than a place of worship. It was a symbol of nationhood (and the more so since political power had been assumed by Rome). Its priestly establishment was the nearest thing Israel still possessed to a government of its own. To threaten the temple, as Jeremiah had discovered long ago, was to commit unpardonable treason. As the story of Jesus unfolds, his negative attitude to the temple and its activities (21:12–16, 18–22; 23:38; 24:1–2) will become the central symbol of his challenge to the status quo (see 21:23–27), and the issue which above all will unite the people against him. At his trial it will play a central role (26:60–61) and on the cross it will still be thrown against him (27:40). But in the discourse of ch. 24 Jesus will explain how the coming destruction of the temple symbolizes the end of the old order, and in 27:51 the tearing of the temple curtain shows that that time has now come. This preliminary comment in 12:6 is a pointer to a recurrent and disturbing theme in Matthew's portrayal of what the coming of the kingship of God must mean for Israel and for the sacred institution which lies at its ideological heart.

John MacArthur: The Lord of the Sabbath

Now as this chapter begins by recording for us the crystallizing of their rejection, it does so by relating to us a very particular incident, and the key is in verse 1. "At that time, Jesus went on the Sabbath Day," and you can stop at that point. This is a Sabbath Day issue. The crystallizing of their rejection of Christ occurred because He violated their Sabbath; that was the last straw. Because the Sabbath Day, to them, was the absolute epitome of their legalistic system. Everything in their legalistic system ultimately focused in on that one day, and when He violated their rabbinical traditions on the Sabbath, He was striking a blow at the heart of their system. And that becomes the final straw that brakes the camel's back, as it were. . .

Now you want to know what the Sabbath was? A pain in the neck. I mean it was impossible to rest. You couldn't do anything. No wonder they were laboring and heavy-laden. No wonder they were sick to death of the system that had been imposed on them by the legalists. The Sabbath was the focus of everything. Edersheim says if a woman were to roll wheat to take away the husk, she would be guilty of sifting. If she were rubbing the ends of the stalk, she would be guilty of threshing. If she were cleaning what adheres to the side of a stalk, she would be guilty of sifting. If she was bruising the stalk, she would be guilty of grinding. If she was throwing it up in her hands, she would be guilty of winnowing. And the people were under this incredible burden. Now do you understand what it meant when Jesus said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy-laden and I will give you rest"? That's what the Sabbath was supposed to be, but as far as rest was concerned, it was a joke. And so Jesus came along and paid absolutely no attention to any of that stuff, and it infuriated the religious leaders. This became the final act that crystallized their rejection. . .

God wants an obedient heart. The Pharisees were a million miles from that. He wanted mercy, but they hadn't got a clue. But especially on the Sabbath, wouldn't you think the Sabbath would be of all the days, the you would meet needs? Wouldn't you think? Wouldn't you think the Sabbath, of all days, would be the day to serve the Lord? Here they were, walking along serving the Lord, preaching the kingdom, reaching people, and they had to eat on the way. They were serving the Lord. Their needs had to be met. God wanted to be merciful to them. Wouldn't you think the Sabbath would be the perfect time for that? The whole point is a shocking thing. They indicted Him, and when He was done with His instruction, He had indicted them as hard-hearted, external legalists who didn't even know the heart of God. They were the violators of the Sabbath, because the Sabbath was for meeting needs, serving God, and showing mercy. . .

Jesus connected the Sabbath with the heart of God – benevolence, mercy, kindness, goodness. And that is the purpose of it all. Jesus came that we might enter into a relationship with God in which He pours out to us grace and goodness and mercy and kindness and peace and benevolence and tenderness. The Pharisees had absolutely obliterated that illustration in the Sabbath. Jesus' lesson is very clear: We broke a ceremonial law to meet our need. That's the heart of God. We broke a traditional law, not going more than so many feet to serve God. That's the heart of God. Because God wants mercy to be shown, not ritual. The only function that ceremony ever has is as an illustration of a right attitude. And if you stop and corrupt the illustration and never get to the right attitude, you miss the whole purpose.

J. Ligon Duncan: The Lord of the Sabbath

But the Pharisees were there looking for an opportunity to attack Jesus' teaching and His practices. It's clear from the very beginning of this passage, that these men's intentions were evil. These folks were not looking to uphold God's law, they were looking to tear down the messiah. And so we learn from this passage that even divinely appointed religious means, like the Lord's day, like the Sabbath, can be misused. Evil men can hold to the outward form, and yet miss the whole point, the inner spirit of the law. And so their attack gives Jesus an opportunity to respond to their formalism. He accuses them of misunderstanding and of misusing the law of God later in this passage. And passage, this attack, gives Him the opportunity to convey His positive teaching about the Lord's Day, and even to make a singular manifestation of His own divine authority. . .

strict observation of the ceremonial law is no excuse for ignoring neighbor love. In other words, you cannot ignore the love of your neighbor under the pretense of being so concerned about the observation of God's ceremonial law that you don't have time to love your neighbor. . .

In the third section of this passage in verses 6-8 we learn another truth. Not only that even divinely appointed religious means can be abused, not only that deeds of necessity are lawful on the Lord's day, but we learn in verses 6-8 that Jesus asserts His divine authority as the fulfillment of the Old Testament ceremonial system and as the Lord of the Old Testament ceremonial system. Jesus asserts His divine authority in this passage.

TEXT: Matthew 12:15-21

TITLE: MESSIAH CHARACTERIZED AS THE BELOVED SERVANT OF THE LORD

BIG IDEA:

AS THE SPIRIT-EMPOWERED SERVANT OF THE LORD, THE CHOSEN MESSIAH WILL BRING JUSTICE TO THE GENTILES WITH COMPASSION AND POWER

INTRODUCTION:

Grant Osborne: Thus far we have seen Jesus in the power and boldness of his miraculous ministry and prophetic preaching. Now we see the other side of Jesus, stated first in 11:28–30. He is the meek and humble Messiah who is here to serve God and humankind. This is exemplified especially in the cross, when he becomes the atoning sacrifice for Jew and Gentile alike.

D. A. Carson: But even within this chapter, the twin themes of Spirit and Gentiles are programmatic (Cope, Matthew, 32ff.; Hill, “Son and Servant,” 10–11). God has poured out his Spirit on his Servant; so the exorcisms he performs by the Spirit constitute proof of the kingdom’s inauguration (v.28). Therefore, blasphemy against that Spirit cannot be forgiven.

Scott Harris: As we examine this text this morning, we are going to find in Jesus the example we need to follow. Success for the Christian does not come through attaining positions of worldly power, though God often does put Christians in those positions, for success for the Christian is not in having power, but in being a faithful servant of the omnipotent God. Jesus never attained any position of worldly power. He never sought such a position; instead He was God’s gentle servant. He was merciful, meek, chosen of God; quiet, sympathetic and unlimited in whom He would minister to as God’s representative.

Stanley Saunders: Because he is aware of the Pharisees’ murderous intent, Jesus withdraws but heals all who follow him. “Withdrawal” in Matthew is nearly always followed by healing (4:12, 23–25; 14:13–14; 15:21–31). Jesus’ flight and subsequent admonition to his followers not to make him known (12:15–16) do not signal fear. His calling is to bring healing, not to become captive to the conflicts the healing generates. Matthew uses the withdrawal and call to silence to make a christological assertion, by means of a fulfillment citation based on Isaiah 42:1–4, the opening portion of the first of Isaiah’s “Servant Songs” (Isa. 42:1–9; 49:1–7; 50:4–11; 52:13–53:12). Isaiah 40–55 concerns God’s promise to return the exiles from Babylon. God has chosen a servant, either an individual or Israel itself, to bear witness, to be a light to the nations. In contrast to the force and violence of the powers that have enslaved Israel, this witness demonstrates God’s power through care and healing for the people. The analogy between Jesus’ ministry and God’s servant is clear, not only here in Matthew 11–12, but throughout the Gospel. The citation recalls language from Jesus’ baptism (12:18; cf. 3:16–17): Jesus is God’s chosen one, upon whom God pours the Spirit. He will announce justice, or judgment, to the nations (perhaps anticipating 28:18–20). The remaining clauses of the citation emphasize the gentle, merciful character of the servant’s work: he does not quarrel or shout, and preserves both the damaged and worthless reed and the light of a flickering lamp until God’s justice is victorious (12:19–20).

Michael Wilkins: Matthew identifies Jesus with the messianic Servant of Isaiah 42:1–4. The identity of the Servant in Isaiah is perplexing, because it vacillates between the nation Israel as the Servant and an individual who leads the nation. Jesus emerges as the Servant Messiah who has a ministry and mission both to Israel and the nations and who is the gentle Spirit-endowed Servant with a mission of justice to the nations.

(:15-16) PROLOGUE – WITHDRAWAL OF JESUS

A. (:15) Continuing His Ministry of Healing

“But Jesus, aware of this, withdrew from there. And many followed Him, and He healed them all,”

Daniel Doriani: Jesus had to reckon with leaders, the Pharisees, who had the disease [of legalism] and had no interest in recovery. Jesus was not afraid to die, but he had to die at the right time. Therefore he withdrew from the hostile Pharisees to avoid provocation, for it was not yet the time for him to die.

Grant Osborne: Every time Jesus goes somewhere, the people enthusiastically follow (esp. 4:25; 8:1 with similar language). There is no hint of discipleship in “followed” (unless one sees here potential disciples).

Donald Hagner: Further healings by Jesus, apparently large in number, are now reported briefly in a summarizing fashion together with a paradoxical warning concerning the spreading of the news of his presence. The “messianic secret” motif is then supported by a long quotation—Matthew’s longest—from Isa 42 that indicates how far this Messiah is from the popular expectation. In the present context of hostility and rejection, this passage takes on special significance. The unexpected side of the messianic deliverer as servant is but the fulfillment of the OT promise.

Robert Gundry: As in 4:25; 8:1, the “many crowds” that “followed” Jesus stand for his professing disciples. Here they follow him in his exemplary withdrawal from mortal danger. That he “healed them all” displays his mercy, also exemplary, especially against the backdrop of the Pharisees’ lack of mercy.

B. (:16) Continuing to Guard against Revolutionary Populism

“and warned them not to make Him known, in order that what was spoken through Isaiah the prophet, might be fulfilled, saying,” [Is. 42:1-4]

Charles Swindoll: He also continued to downplay his identity as the Messiah (12:16). Why would He do that? Think about it. There were a lot more followers of Jesus than credentialed scribes and committed Pharisees. Aware that many in the crowd had in their minds a false image of a battle-ready Messiah, Jesus knew that too much talk of his legitimate kingship in the wrong way or at the wrong time could have incited the crowd to band together against the establishment and revolt.

R. T. France: Jesus has withdrawn in the face of hostility and is anxious to prevent people forcing the issue of his Messiahship by inappropriate publicity. Controversies will continue in vv. 22–45, and the atmosphere will become even more highly charged, but by inserting this quotation here Matthew helps his readers to put the confrontation in context: it is not of the Messiah's choosing. . . Jesus' withdrawal reflects the instruction he has already given to his disciples to move on when they meet a hostile reception (10:14, 23).

Grant Osborne: The fulfillment formula is unique to Matthew and found ten times (1:22–23; 2:15, 17–18, 23; 4:14–16; 8:17; 12:17–21; 13:35; 21:4–5; 27:9–10) to indicate Jesus' fulfillment of OT messianic expectations. The emphasis is on God's sovereign control of salvation history in such a way that Jesus is the culmination of his plan.

Craig Blomberg: As part of the first of the suffering servant songs which culminate with chaps. 52-53, Isa 42:1-4 points to what Matthew will have Jesus make increasingly clear: his cross must precede his crown. He comes first to suffer before returning in splendor. His disciples must often follow a similar path (16:24). Still, Christians are not called to quietism and inaction in the face of injustice but to patience, prayer, and a prophetic voice that denounces evil. But they await ultimate vindication from God, to whom alone belongs vengeance and the ability fully to right the wrongs of this world (cf. Jas 5:1-11).

John Nolland: In some important sense Matthew sees the quotation as offering a cameo of the ministry of Jesus and thinks that now, just over a third of the way through his story, is a suitable time to make use of it.

Donald Hagner: Again we are made aware of the paradoxical character of Jesus' messiahship. Matthew has deliberately portrayed Jesus as powerful in both word and deed. And yet this is not the essence of Jesus' ministry, which is to be found not in power but in servanthood expressed through humility, meekness, and gentleness. Matthew identifies Jesus and the nature of his ministry directly with the servant described in the first of Isaiah's songs. The story of Jesus narrated in Matthew agrees exactly with Isaiah's portrayal of the servant. And thus the unusual, apparently unassertive Messiah, who fails to bring judgment to the enemies of God's people and justice to the earth and who accordingly was unacceptable to his contemporaries, is shown to have been prophesied by the prophet. The one who was uniquely related to God as his chosen and beloved, upon whom the Spirit uniquely rested, came also as a servant who was ultimately to die, in agreement with Isaiah's last Servant Song (52:13 -- 53:12). This strange sequence of events and this paradoxical Messiah are central to the gospel as Matthew relates it.

5 CHARACTERISTICS OF THE SERVANT OF THE LORD

I. (:18a) DIVINE APPROVAL OF THE SERVANT

*“Behold, My Servant whom I have chosen;
My Beloved in whom My soul is well-pleased;”*

Matthew McCraw: Whereas Israel failed to live as a faithful servant of God, Jesus the Messiah would succeed as God's faithful servant.

Jesus the Messiah was God's beloved servant, who was chosen by God for this purpose, who was beloved by God, in whom God delighted, and on whom God's Holy Spirit would rest. This moment, this man, this mission was prophesied long ago and Jesus is living it out in Matthew 12.

By the way, you can notice all three members of the Trinity present in this prophecy. The Father is speaking about the Son, on whom the Holy Spirit will rest.

II. (:18b) DIVINE EMPOWERMENT OF THE SERVANT TO PROCLAIM WORLDWIDE JUSTICE

*“I will put My Spirit upon Him,
And He shall proclaim justice to the Gentiles.”*

III. (:19) MEEKNESS OF THE SERVANT DESPITE MALICIOUS OPPOSITION

*“He will not quarrel, nor cry out;
Nor will anyone hear His voice in the streets.”*

Grant Osborne: The Isaianic Servant will not “open his mouth” (Isa 53:7). Jesus’ reaction to the loud, insistent opposition of the Pharisees will not be to retaliate verbally. As the humble messianic Servant, Jesus refuses to “retaliate” or “make threats” but rather “entrusts himself to him who judges justly” (1 Pet 2:23). This hardly means Jesus will not speak at all. He will “proclaim justice,” but he will not respond to his opponents. The public proclamation will be positive, not negative, related to the good news rather than defending himself against the leaders (the “hypocrites” who in Matt 6:5 pray loudly “on the street corners [to] be seen by others”).

John Nolland: It is this verse that justifies Matthew’s location of the quotation. Jesus’ handling of the hostility of the Pharisees illustrates the fact that he is not strident or disputatious; his approach is not aggressive or self-assertive. ἐρίζειν means to quarrel or wrangle. κραυγάζειν means simply ‘to call out’, but in the context here it must have overtones of verbal violence. Matthew clearly does not intend to insist that Jesus never disagreed with others or disputed their opinions. Attitude and approach are in view.

Walter Wilson: The Son of David and lord of the Sabbath, then, is also a gentle and humble servant, one who cares for those bearing heavy burdens through his ministries of teaching and justice. Insofar as it draws attention to the servant’s demeanor in facing verbal confrontations, the description in 12:19 accords with the narrative context provided in 12:1–14 in another way as well.

IV. (:20) COMPASSION AND POWER OF THE SERVANT IN ACCOMPLISHING JUSTICE

*“A battered reed He will not break off,
And a smoldering wick He will not put out,
Until He leads justice to victory.”*

Grant Osborne: There is general agreement that the two are metaphors for the weak and helpless, the “harassed and helpless” of 9:36, the “weary and burdened” of 11:28. Reeds were proverbially noted for their frailty, and the flame of the wick was weak and about to go out. The gentle Servant would handle them delicately and make certain they were not lost or destroyed. He would not increase their burden but would instead give them rest.

John Nolland: What are these images to be applied to? In the context of Deutero-Isaiah the application would seem to be to the exiles as displaced and devalued people. In Matthew the shortest bridge is to the tax collectors and sinners, valued by Jesus but marginalised in their own community (9:10-13). After 12:1-8, the poor in their neediness may also be in view (and perhaps even the sick in their suffering after vv. 9-14).

V. (:21) ULTIMATE DOMINION OF THE SERVANT AS A BEACON FOR HOPE

“And in His name the Gentiles will hope.”

Matthew McCraw: The Jewish people were not only wrong about what type of Messiah Jesus would be, they were also wrong about the scope of His Messiahship, and praise God that they were wrong!

Jesus not only brought hope for the people of Israel; He brought hope for the nations!

John Nolland: That the God of Israel might be the hope of nations (beyond the Jewish) went far beyond normal Jewish thought. The claim is being made that the action of God now initiated through the Isaianic servant has goals as wide as humanity. The universal mission to invite people to participate in this hope is anticipated in 24:14 and established in 28:19-20 (the ‘name’ language used in 12:21 to express allegiance to Jesus recurs in 28:19). The language of hope is suggestive of a process underway, which fits well with the way the kingdom of God is conceived in Matthew.

Charles Swindoll: Matthew’s quotation also explains Jesus’ ministry methods. Instead of engaging His adversaries with swords, He engaged them with words. And His words were well chosen, terse, and few. This, too, was in keeping with the messianic prophecy of Isaiah. The mission of the chosen Servant was to be

- well-pleasing to God (12:18)
- accomplished through proclamation (12:18)
- free from quarreling or crying out (12:19)
- without ruckus or riot (12:19)
- considerate of the weak and vulnerable (12:20)
- focused on the goal of justice (12:20)

Daniel Doriani: The Messiah’s ministry will have four traits:

- He will proclaim and bring justice to the earth (12:18, 20).
- He will be quiet and humble, not a loud demagogue (12:19).
- He will be gentle to the weak and the bruised (12:20).
- The nations will hope to be saved through him (12:21).

Chiastic structure:

- a He is beloved of God (12:18a).
- b He proclaims justice (12:18b).
- c He has a gentle voice (12:19).
- c' He is gentle to the weak (12:20a).
- b' He leads justice to victory (12:20b).
- a' He is the hope of the nations (12:21).

The Bible teaches us to take each calamity as a call to get right with God. In the vision of Revelation 8–9, trumpets announce a series of disasters—lightning, fire, volcanic eruption, and a poisoning of ocean waters. The point of these, Revelation says, is to call people to repent. In true repentance, we turn away from sin, but we also turn to something, or someone, that is, Christ. It sounds overconfident to some Americans, but the Bible is clear. Christ is the hope of the nations. No one fully understands why disasters strike nations and individuals. No one can infallibly, exhaustively interpret history. But the Bible gives us glimpses into history’s meaning and here is one. Every disaster shows that humans are bruised reeds, smoldering wicks. Jesus is willing to strengthen and to heal every broken one who comes to him.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How does Christ as the merciful servant of God, extending hope to the Gentiles, not fit the expectations of the Jews of His day?
- 2) How can we participate in the mission of Christ to bring hope to the Gentiles?
- 3) How does Jesus demonstrate that there is no middle ground when it comes to making a decision about allegiance to His Lordship?
- 4) How can we be more careful in the words we speak?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Walter Wilson: Insofar as its contents are attributed to the voice of God, the quotation presents the reader with an opportunity to view the identity and ministry of Jesus from a divine perspective, one that is accordingly broad in scope. This observation applies especially to the claim that in his capacity as the Spirit-endowed servant, Jesus will proclaim justice to the gentiles (12:18), who for their part will have hope in his name (12:21). This declaration, somewhat surprising in light of 10:5 and 15:24, has several components, all of which correlate with other passages in the gospel.

The scenario of proclamation to the gentiles, to begin with, is presented elsewhere in 10:18, 24:14, and 28:19–20, though the agency ascribed in those passages to Jesus’s followers is here ascribed to Jesus himself. The last of these passages (28:19–20) is of special interest insofar as part of what is communicated to the gentiles there is the “name” of Jesus (cf. 1:21, 23, 25; 7:22; 10:22; 18:5; 19:29; 24:5, 9). Comparison can also be made with 4:12–16, where the withdrawal motif (4:12) is elucidated by an Isaian fulfillment quotation that speaks of the gentiles as beneficiaries of Jesus’s ministry (4:14–16; and note how 4:14 matches 12:17). In both cases, the Messiah’s interactions with gentiles are projected into a realm of biblical fulfillment.

The scenario of accomplishing κρίσις (a term that here seems to encompass both “justice” and “judgment”) in 12:18 and 12:20, meanwhile, brings to mind 25:31–32, in which the Son of Man (cf. 11:19; 12:8) sits in judgment over all the ἔθνη, and, more proximately, the warnings of 11:22–24 and 12:41–42, in which gentiles are compared favorably to Israelites in situations of κρίσις (cf. 12:36). The reference to πνεῦμα (12:18), finally, supplies a scriptural foundation for the assertion made in 12:27–28 (cf. 12:31–32): Jesus casts out demons not by Beelzebul but by the Spirit bestowed upon him by God (cf. 3:16–17, alluding to Isa 42:1). His campaign against the realm of Satan (12:25–29), then, can be understood as an extension of his ministry as the chosen servant of God’s kingdom, whose “victory” (12:20) is assured.

J. Ligon Duncan: Christ’s Anonymity

In this passage Jesus’ character comes through clearly. Matthew is relating to us something of Jesus’ heart here. He really began that in Matthew chapter 12, verse one, when He told you the story of the meeting between the Pharisees and the Lord Jesus. He’s showing you what Jesus is like. He’s revealing Jesus’ character to you and He’s providing, for contrast, the religious leaders of Jesus’ day. Now remember, the Pharisees have had a bad name for about 2000 years amongst Christians, but these were very well-respected religious leaders. These were lay people, part of a movement designed to revitalize religion in Israel. They were highly exalted in the eyes of the people, and yet Matthew contrasts their hearts and their desire to destroy the Lord Jesus Christ to the Lord Jesus’ compassion for the sick, for the downcast, for the marginal, and so we see Christ’s character in stark contrast to the Pharisees. Matthew Henry says, “As in the midst of Christ’s greatest humiliations, there were proofs of His dignity. So in the midst of His greatest honors, He gave proofs of His humility.” And so even as He does these works – these miracles – and speaks words of grace, He had opportunity here in this passage to show His humility.

And that’s precisely what Matthew points us to.

I. (:14-16) Jesus’ actions reveal His character.

There are many truths that we learn in this passage before us but even as we contemplate Jesus’ character revealed by His actions, we are taught the truth that actions reveal the heart. You can see the hearts of the Pharisees by the way they act in this passage. Their desire is not to see the saints built up. Their desire is to see the Messiah torn down. The heart, the meanness, the wickedness, the evil of the Pharisees is seen in their action. You can’t see through to their hearts, but you can see what they’re doing. So, also, you can see the heart of Jesus by His compassion. When He is obstructed by the Pharisees, He continues ministering to those in need. His heart of love, His heart of kindness, His heart of sympathy, is so apparent. And Matthew provides bold relief, stark contrast, between the heart of the hearts of the Pharisees and the heart of Jesus.

II. (:17-21) Jesus’ character is revealed in Old Testament prophecy.

The focus of this passage and the reason that Matthew quotes it in the main you find in verses 19 and 20. There, the character of the Messiah is given. And Matthew wants to contrast the character of the Messiah with the character of these people who claim to be followers of God. And so He quotes for us verses 19 and 20. Look at those words: “He will not quarrel nor cry out, nor will anyone hear His voice in the streets. A battered reed He will not break off and a smoldering wick He will not put out, until He leads justice to victory.”

First of all, we’re told that the Messiah will not be found shouting in the streets. Certainly the Lord will not be out there drawing attention to Himself in the streets. The shouting spoken of is not religious shouting, by the way, it’s quarreling; almost like you would hear after a team has lost a game and the fans are out in the streets arguing and haranguing about that particular matter. And we're told by Matthew in verse 19 that the servant of the Lord will carry out His work without ostentation, without drawing attention to Himself, with humility, with self-denial, with unpretentiousness. This is how the servant of the Lord will be and Matthew is saying, "Look, that's exactly like Jesus is. He's humble. He's unpretentious. He's not simply trying to draw attention to Himself. He is doing the will of the heavenly Father and He's looking out for your best spiritual interests. He's not wondering what He can get out of you. He's wanting to give you something that the heavenly Father has sent Him to give.

Notice also in verse 20, that Jesus' ministry and the Pharisees' ministry are contrasted: "A battered reed He will not break off, a smoldering wick He will not put out," as opposed to the Pharisees, who were quick to censure, who were quick to dismiss and judge. The Lord Jesus Christ is patient. The Pharisees are cruel. They are plotting His destruction. They are vain. They pretend to be righteous but they're actually empty. They are interested in displaying righteousness. They pray on the street corners. Jesus, by contrast is kind, He is reserved, He is meek. The servant of the Lord will carry out His work, Isaiah says, without severity or rigor. He will be tender with those who are weak and as opposed to censoring and judging them will gently build up the spiritual life in them, and stoke it into a flame, caring for them, showing compassion.

Matthew's main point is that Jesus will treat with profound sympathy and tender concern the very people that the Pharisees despised. Jesus will show tender concern for those who are weak and will ask Him for help. He will help the sick. He does in verse 15. He heals them. He will show kindness and compassion to tax collectors and sinners. Matthew has already told us that, in chapter 9. He will comfort mourners. He will help those who are fearful. He will aid those who are doubting, those who are famished. He will be tender and compassionate. The Lord Jesus' tenderness and compassion is designed to draw sick sinners to Himself. They fear that they will be judged by God because they know that they ought to be judged by God, and yet they are met with the visit of the Savior who is tender and compassionate and will hold them and build them up.

David Anderson: Matthew is deliberately showing the difference between Jesus and the Pharisees.

The differences:

1. The Pharisee cared about externals. Jesus cares about internals—the heart.
2. The Pharisees were public and wanted attention for their deeds. Jesus retreats, and tells people to keep quiet.
3. The Pharisees were merciless, and created all kinds of extra rules for people. Jesus merciful and offers rest for the soul.
4. The Pharisees yoke is heavy and burdensome. Jesus yoke is easy and light.
5. The Pharisees are conspiring how to kill; Jesus is conspiring how to save.
6. The Pharisees are plotting how to bring injustice; Jesus is bringing justice.

David Thompson: When Jesus Christ first showed up on the scene as King of Israel, things were exciting. However, as time went on things became much more difficult. Yet every move of Jesus Christ was in precise conformity with the eternal program of God. Everything Jesus Christ did while He was here on earth was perfectly consistent with the will and program of God. It didn't matter if He were slamming over tables in the temple, healing people or hiding out—every move was precise.

Now this passage of Scripture is absolutely amazing because it establishes that not only does Christ know what is happening with Israel, but that the animosity aimed against Jesus Christ was within the sovereign program of God so His program could swing to the Gentiles.

EVERYTHING THAT HAPPENED TO JESUS CHRIST, EVEN THE NEGATIVE THINGS, WERE NOT ONLY FULLY KNOWN BY JESUS CHRIST, BUT WERE ACTUALLY A FULFILLMENT OF THE PROGRAM OF GOD.

Nothing was happening by chance. No matter how negative things became, God was still sovereign and His program was still operative.

PART #1 – The response of Jesus to the Pharisees. 12:15a

Jesus Christ was completely aware that the Pharisees were plotting to destroy Him. He knew what these Sabbath controversies were all about—they were plots to destroy Him. His response was to withdraw from the area. Now this is a critical point as we will see in a moment for this is a point in time when Jesus begins to withdraw from Israel. This is a key turning point in the program of God. God only lets people reject Him for so long and then He withdraws from them. When God convicts, His conviction only lasts so long and then it is gone. The program of God does not last forever with any group or any individual. God, in His grace, gives people time to respond; but when His Word and will are abandoned, He shuts His program down.

PART #2 – The response of the people to Jesus. 12:15b

The people were still following Jesus, many of whom had diseases and sicknesses, and Jesus healed them all. Even though things were hostile and hateful against Him, He still kept ministering. Their motive for following Him was mostly because He was a miraculous healer, not because they believed He was the Messiah. It is not easy to keep at it when you know there are people against you. The tendency can be to throw up your hands and say forget about ministry. But it is very Christ-like to keep ministering even when your own world is negative.

PART #3 – The response of Jesus to the people. 12:15c-21

(Response #1) - The physical response.

Christ physically healed everyone. Not one disease was left out. The power of God can heal every kind of disease and illness. What is so sad is that many experienced the healing power of God, but not the spiritual power of God. Their sicknesses were healed but they still had their sin. People today receive many blessings from God, but they still do not deal with their sin.

(Response #2) - The verbal response.

Verbal Response #1 - Jesus warns people not to make Him known. 12:16

To publicize Him would be to invite more opposition at the present time and it was not time yet for Christ to go to the cross. Jesus must have looked like a common Jew, for apparently He could mingle among people and had to be pointed out.

Verbal Response #2 - Jesus informs people that this is a fulfillment of prophecy. 12:17-21

The rejection of Jesus Christ by Israel did not take God by surprise. In fact, this is precisely what Isaiah predicted would happen. Now the quote is from Isaiah 42:1-4. I doubt seriously that most who read these verses see the Messianic importance of them, but the truth is these verses in Isaiah are a series of Messianic prophetic predictions.

John MacArthur: (:14-21) -- God's Beloved Servant – 9 Characteristics

- 1) Now let's look, to begin with, at verse 14, and we see the first characteristic of Christ. The beloved servant of God is, number one, condemned by false servants – condemned by false servants. . .
- 2) Now this brings me to the second characteristic of Christ: He was conformed to God's plan.
- 3) That brings me to a third characteristic of the Beloved Servant. He was concerned for the needy. . .
- 4) But it brings us to a fourth characteristic of Christ. He is commended by the Father – commended by the Father. Look at verse 18. . .
- 5) Fifthly, commissioned by the Spirit. It says there in verse 18, "I will put My Spirit upon Him." That was a promise in Isaiah 42, that when the Messiah came, the Spirit would be upon Him. Now we know that that happened for certain in a unique way at His baptism, because it says the Spirit of God descended like a dove. We know that. But I don't believe that's when it started; I believe Jesus Christ was indwelt by the power of the Spirit of God from the time He was conceived. It says of John the Baptist in Luke 1 that he was filled with the Spirit from his mother's womb. And if that was true of a human being, believe me, that must have been true of the God-Man. It also says in Matthew 1:20 that He was conceived of the Holy Spirit. Now what does this mean? I mean, if He's already God, and the Father and the Son and the Spirit are already one in Him, what does it mean to have this special putting of the Spirit on Him? The only way we can understand it is to see it in a twofold manner.
 - First of all, it was a granting of power to His human nature. . .
 - But there was a second feature, and I believe that's tied to His baptism, and I think that was the unique anointing of the Spirit at that point for His royal service.
- 6) here's another one – communicating the message. The end of verse 18, "He will show justice" – or rightness – "to the heathen." The Hebrew in Isaiah says, "He will bring out right." He will bring out what is right. He's going to give the right message.
- 7) There's a seventh principle – and this is where we come right to the heart of the passage. He was committed to meekness.
- 8) And then eighth, He is characterized by comforting the weak. Verse 20 – beautiful statement – "A bruised reed shall He not break and smoking flax shall He not quench." What does that mean? Reeds were used for a lot of things, and once a reed was bruised, it wouldn't stay straight. I don't know if you've ever had a straw like that. Once it gets soft somewhere, it just doesn't straighten. You crunch it and throw it away and get a new one. Shepherds and people out in the fields used to like to pick reeds and make them into little flutes and play them. And after they played them for a while, of course, their fingers and their saliva and all would cause them to get soft in a place and they wouldn't stay straight and they couldn't be played right. And they'd just crush them and throw them away.

And then there was the smoking flax. They used to take flax and make a wick out of it. And it's smoldering flax that you see here. In other words, the fire is just about out. It's just kind of smoldering on the edge of the wick. What is this picture? This picture is the hurting people, the people everybody else steps on, discards, throws away; the bruised reeds that don't play the tune anymore, the smoking flax that can't give any light; they can't illuminate the situation; their light is almost out. The weak, the powerless, the helpless, the ones destroyed by sin and suffering, the people who are bowed down with care, the unworthy, the ones with no spiritual resources, the whole world of trampled, despised, ignored people, suffering people, hurting people. The kind of people that human conquerors have no time for, the kind of people that the Pharisees just walked all over, the broken people. But those are the kind of people the Lord goes to; He doesn't break those kind of bruised reeds and He doesn't put out what's left of the smoldering.

9) at last, consummating the victory. The end of verse 20, the day will come when "He sends forth justice unto victory." What that's saying is simply that ultimately the right will win. In spite of all the persecution and in spite of all of the difficulty and in spite of all of the rejection, in the end, He will win the victory. At the great consummation, sin will be banished forever. And as Amos said, justice shall roll down like waters, and as Isaiah said, the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the ocean is full of its own water. Great promise – ultimately, He shall win the victory. He shall consummate the victory. Oh, what a Savior is mine.

Van Parunak: Isaiah's original oracle has three paragraphs that mention "judgment." Matthew quotes the first two, but not the third. v. 21 is the end of Isa 42:4, but the first half of the verse is missing (see chart below).

This passage has two central themes: judgment and the Gentiles.

The word "judgment" משפט appears three times, and divides the text into three paragraphs. The word is derived from the verb שפט, usually translated "to judge." However, this translation is misleading because of our modern separation of government into legislature, executive, and judiciary. This distinction would not make sense to the ancients. In Israel's history, the judges שפטים described in the seventh book of the OT are not just a judiciary. They exercise all the functions of government. In many cases, we can translate the word, "government."

Isaiah only uses the word "Gentiles" גוים "nations" once, in the first paragraph. However, the word "isles" in v. 4 refers to the coastlands around the Mediterranean, which Matthew correctly interprets as Gentile lands. In addition, we will see that the bruised reed and smoking flax are images of the Gentiles. So the second theme of the passage, also repeated in each paragraph, is that the Messiah comes for the sake of the nations, not just of Israel. When Israel's spiritual leaders, the Pharisees, have decided to destroy him (v. 14), Matthew reminds us that the promise of the Messiah was for the Gentiles as well.

We can summarize the three paragraphs in Isaiah's original text.

1. The agent of God's judgment: Back in ch. 11 Isaiah promised the coming of a descendant of David who would rule in the power and under the direction of God's Spirit. These ancient promises are fulfilled in the Lord Jesus.

2. The purpose of God’s judgment: to promote the truth. He will bring forth judgment unto, or for the sake of, truth. This is very different from the objective of most governments, which is to extend their power, not to promote truth. In general, we don’t expect truth from politicians, but our Lord’s ministry promoted truth over power.

3. The effect of God’s judgment: He will set judgment in the earth. That is, his government will be realized in the physical world. Ultimately he will destroy evil-doers and establish his rule over all. This has not yet happened, but will take place when the Lord returns.

Matthew’s Application of Isaiah 42

Matthew omits the third paragraph, except for the final reference to the “isles,” the coastlands, which he uses to reinforce the initial emphasis on the Gentiles. At our Lord’s first coming, he did not establish judgment, did not carry out its requirements. This will happen when he returns, but Matthew omits that paragraph because it was not fulfilled in the first advent.

	Isaiah 42	Matthew 12
Agent	1 Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth;	18 Behold my servant, whom I have chosen; my beloved, in whom my soul is well pleased:
	I have put my spirit upon him: he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles .	I will put my spirit upon him, and he shall shew judgment to the Gentiles .
Purpose	2 He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street.	19 He shall not strive, nor cry; neither shall any man hear his voice in the streets.
	3 A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench: he shall bring forth judgment unto truth.	20 A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, till he send forth judgment unto victory.
Effect	4 He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law.	21 And in his name shall the Gentiles trust.

Table 2: Matthew's Citation of Isaiah 42

By retaining this last line of Isaiah’s quotation, Matthew reinforces to us what is going on. The Jews are rejecting their own Messiah, but he is turning that rejection into an opportunity to shift his focus to the Gentiles.

TEXT: Matthew 12:22-32

TITLE: THE UNPARDONABLE SIN

BIG IDEA:

ATTRIBUTING WORKS OF JESUS TO DEMONIC POWER UNLEASHES A POWERFUL REFUTATION DENOUNCING THIS UNPARDONABLE SIN

INTRODUCTION:

R. T. France: After the brief respite of Jesus' withdrawal, the confrontation with the Pharisees is resumed. The trigger in this case is not an act which can be criticized in itself, but the demonstration of Jesus' authority over demonic possession leads to polarized opinions, the crowd in general discussing whether Jesus is the Messiah, but the Pharisees, unable to deny his power, questioning its source. It is their outrageous allegation which provokes Jesus into a withering response, in part consisting of reasoned argument (vv. 25–29), but leading on to a quite melodramatic warning of the possible consequences of their entrenched refusal to recognize his divine authority for what it is. . .

The accusation of complicity with the devil is not only extremely offensive, but is intended to destroy Jesus' credibility in the eyes of a God-fearing public. It is also potentially extremely serious, since sorcery was, according to the Mishnah, a capital offense. But it is a step too far, as Jesus' reply will warn them. Not only is the accusation in itself patently ridiculous (vv. 25–29); it also indicates a fundamental choice to take sides against Jesus (v. 30) and, even more seriously, against the Spirit of God by whose authority he acts (vv. 31–32); by making this accusation they have revealed their true character, and will be judged for it (vv. 33–37). The Pharisees are playing with fire.

Matthew McCraw: The power of Jesus is on full display throughout His ministry, yet some, such as the Pharisees, doubt and critique His power.

In this passage, Jesus has a strong response to those who doubt His power. He not only logically defends His power, but He also issues a dire warning about where this doubt and lack of repentance may lead. . .

Jesus was proving time again that He really was sent by God, that He really was ushering in the kingdom of God, and that He really was doing the work of God.

D. A. Carson: The NT reveals how close one may come to the kingdom - tasting, touching, perceiving, understanding. And it also shows that to come this far and reject the truth is unforgivable. So it is here. Jesus charges that those who perceive that his ministry is empowered by the Spirit and then, for whatever reason - whether spite, jealousy, or arrogance - ascribe it to Satan, have put themselves beyond the pale (of forgiveness). For them there is no forgiveness, and that is the verdict of the one who has authority to forgive sins.

Scott Harris: Matthew 12:22-32 not only marks an irreversible point in Jesus' relationship with the Scribes and Pharisees, but it also marks a change in His presentation of Himself. Up to this time His major method of teaching the people was direct with illustrations to make the point.

After the confrontation that is recorded in this passage, Jesus' major method of teaching will be in parables. Why? Matthew 13:11-14 tells us specifically that it is so the truths of the kingdom can be revealed to those who belong to it, while at the same time those truths will be hidden from those that do not belong to the kingdom. A person can only understand the parables if they have the Holy Spirit.

The rejection of Jesus by the religious leaders of Israel marks a change in the offer that Jesus was presenting to the people. Up to this point, it has been "repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." It was a real offer of the kingdom of God to be established. From this point on it will still be "repent," but the kingdom is now in their midst. The offer of the physical kingdom is gone, but the spiritual kingdom is present. This is a major theme of the parables of Matthew 13.

What precipitated such an event that would result in such a confrontation and then end with such far reaching results? Remember that we have been seeing the relationship between Jesus and the Scribes and Pharisees deteriorate for some time. Starting in Matthew 11, the strain in their relationship with one another declines at an even faster rate. They accused Jesus of being a glutton and a drunkard and the friend of tax-gatherers and sinners (Matthew 11:19). They ignored the many miracles that Jesus did including healing every manner of disease and sickness, casting out demons, power over nature, and even raising people from the dead (Matthew 11:20-22). They accused Him and His disciples of breaking the Sabbath when in fact all Jesus and His disciples had done was to follow the Mosaic Law and refused to follow their legalism (Matthew 12:1-8). They became so incensed when Jesus proclaimed that He was Lord of the Sabbath and healed a man with a withered hand on the Sabbath (which was in direct violation of their legalistic rule that compassion could only extend on the Sabbath to keeping a person from getting worse) that they began to plot in conjunction with their arch foes, the Herodians, to find a way to kill Jesus (Mark 3:6; Matthew 12:14).

As we saw two weeks ago as we looked at Matthew 12:15-21, Jesus came as a gentle servant of God the Father. In His deity, He is God Himself. In His humanity, Jesus was filled with the Holy Spirit which was the means by which His humanity was able to be in complete accord with His deity. He came to offer hope to all people – both Jew and Gentile. He came and proclaimed the truth of God's kingdom, but He did not quarrel and shout in anger. He had compassion on sinful men including those most rejected by society, the battered reed and smoldering wick of verse 20, and offered them hope of redemption as well.

Jesus kept his priorities in order and did things according to God the Father's plan for Him. He did not seek out confrontation with the religious leaders over their falsehood in order to put them down and gain their power. We find times when Jesus walked away from them because to argue with them would not serve the Kingdom of God (Matthew 12:15). We find instead that Jesus would simply proclaim the truth, sometimes in a very direct and powerful manner, and then let the truth do the work. When an escalation of the confrontation would serve the kingdom of God, Jesus was not shy to do so. Such is the case we find in this morning's text.

I. (:22-30) CONFRONTATION REGARDING THE SOURCE OF JESUS' POWER

A. (:22-24) Reactions Differ to the Miraculous Exorcism and Healing

1. (:22) Healing / Exorcism Accomplished by Jesus

"Then there was brought to Him a demon-possessed man who was blind and dumb, and He healed him, so that the dumb man spoke and saw.”

J. Ligon Duncan: in verses 22 and 23 you will see an amazing healing, and you will see an amazing response from the crowd. There in those verses, we see that Christ’s deeds and doctrine show him to be the messiah. In that passage Matthew gives a testimony to us that Christ is indeed the Messiah. He shows us His messiahship by the deeds that He does. Christ is brought a man who is demon-possessed, and the physical manifestation of that demon-possession is that he is blind and speechless. Now we know that Christ makes a distinction. He does not say that all physical manifestations are the result of demon-possession, but in this case these physical manifestations are the result of the work of demonic activity. And the Lord Jesus Christ does a great sign in connection with that demon’s possession of the man. He casts out the demon. The man is instantaneously healed. And the miracle again shows the heart of Jesus.

Matthew is once again showing you the compassion of Christ towards those who are not merely physically disabled, but those who are spiritually in the bondage of Satan. Christ loves them and has compassion for them and longs for them to be freed from the conquest of Satan. We also see here the power of the Lord Jesus Christ in a test that He is sovereign, that He is the Son of God, that he is the Messiah, that He has the power to bind Satan, and to release those who are under the control of demons. And the crowd is absolutely astonished. The Lord Jesus has done miracles like this before even in the gospel of Matthew, but apparently the people who were witnessing this one had not seen Jesus do a miracle like this for they were amazed.

S. Lewis Johnson: Now this was, I think, a final, climactic Messianic sign because, in the next chapter the Lord begins to speak of Israel’s blindness and of the necessity of judgment upon them.

So it would seem, then, that this is the final test posed the nation concerning their response to the Messiah. He says in the 28th verse, “But if I cast out demons by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you.” This is the final proof that the Lord Jesus is the Messiah, and the kingdom has come with the King.

2. (:23) Amazed Reaction of the Multitudes – Speculation Regarding Identity of Jesus

*“And all the multitudes were amazed, and began to say,
‘This man cannot be the Son of David, can he?’”*

R. T. France: They are beginning to draw the conclusion which Jesus had expected John the Baptist to draw from his miracles (11:2–6). The immediate juxtaposition of this acclamation with the Pharisees’ accusation suggests that the latter have recognized the dangerous state of public response to Jesus, and decide to stamp on it before it is too late.

3. (:24) Hostile Reaction of the Pharisees – False Accusation

*“But when the Pharisees heard it, they said,
‘This man casts out demons only by Beelzebul the ruler of the demons.’”*

The miraculous healing accomplished by Jesus obviously required supernatural power. There are only two possible sources of such power. Here the Pharisees choose to malign the work of the Holy Spirit and attribute the miracle to the power of Satan. Jesus immediately refutes this false accusation.

B. (:25-29) Refutation of the False Accusation

1. (:25-26) Absurdity of the Accusation

a. (:25) General Principle = Division Leads to Kingdom Destruction

“And knowing their thoughts He said to them, ‘Any kingdom divided against itself is laid waste; and any city or house divided against itself shall not stand.’”

Daniel Doriani: The charge is that Jesus’ miracle was nothing but a satanic trick, designed to delude the people. Watch carefully how Jesus replies.

- First, he refutes the charges. He dismantles them, at a logical level. He appeals to the mind and teaches everyone about the true source of his power.
- Second, he preaches to the Pharisees and other doubters. He appeals to the heart and the will and calls them to faith.

b. (:26) Specific Application to Kingdom of Satan

“And if Satan casts out Satan, he is divided against himself; how then shall his kingdom stand?”

Richard Gardner: It is absurd to think that the one who rules the forces of evil would invite someone to attack those forces (vv. 25-26). Such a course would lead to the collapse of Satan’s kingdom.

R. T. France: Jesus’ first counter-argument is the common-sense point that it is absurd to imagine that the demon king would attack and defeat his own demonic forces. This would mean civil war in the demonic kingdom, and that can only be a recipe for disaster, as human experience of divided loyalties illustrates. Note that Satan is assumed to have a “kingdom,” which we will hear in v. 28 is under attack from the “kingdom of God.” The term “kingdom” here carries its normal dynamic sense of “rule.” Satan cannot for long remain king if his forces are divided. For Satan’s claim to kingship in the world see on 4:8–9; cf. also Rev 2:13, where Satan has a “throne.”

2. (:27-28) Inconsistency of the Accusation

a. (:27) Double Standard of Their Reasoning

*“And if I by Beelzebul cast out demons, by whom do your sons cast them out?
Consequently they shall be your judges.”*

Richard Gardner: Jesus suggests that the position of his critics leaves them vulnerable: If my power over demons comes from the devil, Jesus says, what does this say about the exorcists among your own ranks.

Grant Osborne: Jesus’ logic is irrefutable. He takes the opposite tack: “Let’s say you are correct and my power over demons comes from Satan himself. Then what does that say about your own followers?” The phrase “your sons” (οἱ υἱοὶ ὑμῶν) could mean either Jewish exorcists in general or, more likely, the Pharisees’ own followers. Rabbi/disciple relations were often spoken of as “father/son.”

Exorcism in the first century was a thriving business, both in pagan and Jewish societies. Those performing it would employ complex incantations (which they said came from Solomon), magical charms, and even visual effects (cf. Josephus, Ant. 8:45–48; Tob 8:2–3), so Jesus is saying that their practices would be endangered as well. There is an implicit contrast between Jesus (“I”) and the “sons” of the Pharisees, for Jesus needed only an authoritative word. Jesus’ deeds are superior to theirs, as seen in 9:33 when the crowd said, “Nothing like this has ever been seen in Israel.” If Jesus’ superior power comes from Satan, how much more their inferior authority? “They will be your judges” means that the practices of the Pharisees prove them wrong about Jesus.

“They would ‘judge’ them for ascribing to Satan what they, the exorcists, knew came from God.” The future “they will be” (ἔσονται) may point to the final judgment, but there is a realized aspect as well. The very presence of such exorcisms in their own ranks proves them wrong.

S. Lewis Johnson: So, the Pharisees, evidently, were linked with people who claim to be performing mighty miracles. Now that’s a very interesting thing, because it illustrates just exactly what we have today in Christendom. For, we have whole groups of people today who claim to be working mighty miracles. So, I think we can learn from this that there are claims for the miraculous that are not necessarily genuine claims.

- b. (:28) Divine Presence Revealed by Exorcism
“But if I cast out demons by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God has come upon you.”

Grant Osborne: Now he points out the true source of his ministry, saying that his power actually comes “through [instrumental ἐν in both cases] the Spirit.” It is not demonic power but divine presence that has led to the authoritative demonstrations.

3. (:29) Proof that Jesus is Opposed to Satan and More Powerful
“Or how can anyone enter the strong man's house and carry off his property, unless he first binds the strong man? And then he will plunder his house.”

Craig Blomberg: Jesus now illustrates the correct interpretation of his exorcisms with an analogy or short parable. One cannot attack a well-protected home without first rendering the guard powerless. So, too, Jesus must first bind Satan before he can plunder (carry off or rob, from the same verb stem as “lay hold of” in 11:12) his house, i.e., cast out his demons. The exorcisms demonstrate that God in Christ is decisively defeating the devil. As has often been noted, D-Day has come, though not yet V-Day. Satan is in his death throes. His last flurry of activity, to change the metaphor, is like that of a chicken (or perhaps better a snake!) with its head cut off.

Daniel Doriani: When Jesus enters this world with power, God enters the world with power. The process of restoration and renewal has begun. With this, the logical argument is complete. Now the preaching begins.

D. A. Carson: The argument has thus advanced: if Jesus’ exorcisms cannot be attributed to Satan (vv.25–26), then they reflect authority greater than that of Satan. By this greater power Jesus is binding “the strong man” and plundering his “house.” So the kingdom of heaven is forcefully advancing.

C. (:30) Revelation Always Demands a Response – Application: No Possibility of Neutrality Towards Jesus

“He who is not with Me is against Me; and he who does not gather with Me scatters.”

Craig Blomberg: The point here is that Christ leaves no room for neutral ground. If people cannot accept his teaching and work, they are in danger of God's judgment.

Warren Wiersbe: Jesus was able to cast out demons because He had first defeated Satan, the prince of the demons. Jesus entered Satan's kingdom, overcame his power, and claimed his spoils. His victory was through the Spirit of God (“the finger of God,” Luke 11:20) and not in the power of the evil one. This means that God is Victor over Satan, and that men must decide on whose side they will stand. There can be no compromise. We are either with God or against God.

Matthew McCraw: Jesus has no room for neutrality. You are either with Him or against Him. If you're against Him, you are rejecting the work of the Spirit and you are on dangerous ground because you may soon move beyond your ability to repent.

II. (:31-32) CONDEMNATION OF THE UNPARDONABLE SIN OF BLASPHEMY AGAINST THE HOLY SPIRIT

A. (:31) Uniqueness of the Sin of Blasphemy against the Holy Spirit

“Therefore I say to you, any sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven men, but blasphemy against the Spirit shall not be forgiven.”

Charles Swindoll: So the prospect of this unpardonable sin, from which there was no opportunity for repentance, was unique to the eyewitnesses of Jesus' miracles and message – those who rejected it knowingly, willingly, and persistently. In that narrow sense, such blasphemy against the Holy Spirit is no longer possible because Jesus' earthly ministry is over. However, in a more general sense, the sin for which there is no hope today would be to persist in the rejection of Christ throughout one's life and then die in that state of rejection. There is no biblical support for the idea of a second chance after death. But until that moment, anybody can believe and be saved.

Craig Blomberg: Probably blasphemy against the Holy Spirit is nothing more or less than the unrelenting rejection of his advances. Jesus' teaching thus parallels Acts 4:12. If one rejects the Spirit of God in Jesus, there is no one else in all the cosmos who can provide salvation. But we dare never label anyone as having committed this sin. Only God knows human hearts, and we would often make the wrong guess. Moreover, professing believers who fear they have committed the unforgivable sin demonstrate a concern for their spiritual welfare which by definition proves they have not committed it.

D. A. Carson: The distinction between blasphemy against the Son of Man and blasphemy against the Spirit is not that the Son of Man is less important than the Spirit, or that the first sin is prebaptismal and the second postbaptismal, still less that the first is against the Son of Man and the second rejects the authority of Christian prophets. Instead, within the context of the larger argument, the first sin is rejection of the truth of the gospel (but there may be repentance and forgiveness for that), whereas the second sin is rejection of the same truth in full awareness that this is exactly what one is doing—thoughtfully, willfully, and self-consciously rejecting the work of the Spirit, even though there can be no other explanation of Jesus' exorcisms than that. It thus becomes a declaration that one is against God (see Verseput, Rejection of the Humble Messianic King, 236–38). For such a sin there is no forgiveness, “either in this age or the age to come” (cf. 13:22; 25:46)—a dramatic way of saying “never” (as in Mk 3:29).

B. (:32) Unforgivable Nature of This Sin Emphasized Again

1. Contrasted with Rejection of Jesus

“And whoever shall speak a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him;”

2. Condemnation of Rejection of the Holy Spirit

“but whoever shall speak against the Holy Spirit, it shall not be forgiven him, either in this age, or in the age to come.”

Richard Gardner: Interpreters differ on the meaning of this distinction. According to some, the saying distinguishes between rejection of Jesus during his ministry to Israel and rejection of Jesus’ work as risen Lord through the Holy Spirit. It is more likely, however, that the saying distinguishes between rejection of Jesus as God’s messenger and rejection of the One who empowers Jesus. To criticize the messenger is a forgivable offense, but to discredit the power of God by which the messenger frees and heals is an offense without pardon.

Daniel Doriani: Blasphemy against the Spirit is the sober, clear-minded, deliberate rejection of Jesus—as a very agent of evil—despite full knowledge of his work and in the face of the Spirit’s full testimony to him. This blasphemer has heard the gospel proclaimed with clarity and power. He has watched Christians live good lives. Yet he hates Jesus and Christianity and views it as wickedness and deceit. He hears, understands, and despises. We see why this sin is unpardonable: How can one turn to Christ and be saved, when he has seen all the evidence and rejected it as a terrible evil?

Donald Hagner: To blaspheme against the Spirit was in this case to attribute the work of God’s Spirit to Satan and so in the most fundamental way to undercut the very possibility of experiencing the reality of God’s salvation. In other words, this blasphemy by its very nature makes forgiveness impossible (in that sense, it is analogous to apostasy; cf. Heb 6:4–6). . .

The failure to understand Jesus is yet forgivable but not the outright rejection of the saving power of God through the Spirit exhibited in the direct overthrow of the kingdom of Satan. The only unforgivable sin is that of deliberately denying God in a fundamental way, one which goes against plain and obvious evidence. Such hardheartedness is the result of one’s own deliberate insensitivity and cuts one off from forgiveness.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Where does our society call Good, Evil . . . and Evil, Good?
- 2) What does this passage teach us about the importance of unity in the local church?
- 3) How does Jesus demonstrate that there is no middle ground when it comes to making a decision about allegiance to His Lordship?

4) What is different about the particular sin committed by the Pharisees in this context that makes it unpardonable? Can people commit a similar sin today (cf. the references in the book of Hebrews)?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

John MacArthur: Re So they were poisoning the people, and they were saying, “He does this by the power of Beelzebub.” Now I want to give them credit. They really saw the issue clearly, and there was no question in their mind. They saw the issue clearly. What He did obviously took supernatural power. There was no way they could avoid that. They knew that. Now let me tell you something people, that is a monumental apologetic for the life of Christ, when His enemies who hated Him the most could do nothing but conclude that what He did He did by supernatural power. That’s His enemies. There was no way to argue that. And a person who comes along and tries to argue that is a fool. You not only have the testimony of His friends, but you have the testimony of His enemies, that He was doing things that were beyond human capability. You can’t come along with any of that patronizing stuff about His a good man, nice guy, good teacher. His friends won’t let you and neither will His enemies. That is a category of information that Jesus does not allow you to stand in.

You must conclude that He’s supernatural. Then it becomes an issue of whether you think it’s God or Satan, because those are the only two supernatural kingdoms that exist. Now obviously, they weren’t going to assign Him to God, so they only had one alternative. You see, they see the issue very clearly. And the Pharisees, then, from my standpoint, become some of the greatest defenders of the supernatural character of Christ. . .

So we go from the activity to the amazement to the accusation. Let’s look at the answer, and this is marvelous. Jesus answers their accusation by telling them that there are three things wrong with it. Number one, it is absurd. Okay? It is absurd. That means illogical, unreasonable, stupid, inane. Watch verse 25, “He said to them, ‘Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation, and every city or house divided against itself will not stand.’” Now that’s what we call a truism. You don’t have to be a Phi Beta Kappa to figure it out. You don’t have to have a PhD to know that. A kingdom divided against itself is going to fall. A house divided against itself is going to fall. A city divided against itself is going to fall. You can’t have civil war and survive. You can unify one against another and survive, but you can’t destroy the one. You can’t have chaos in a house, chaos in a city, chaos in a nation, without having the whole thing begin to fall apart. A kingdom divided against itself can’t stand; that’s simply a truism. I mean, anybody can understand that, and so they should understand it. And he makes the application in verse 26, “If Satan casts out Satan, then he is divided against himself. How then shall his kingdom stand?”

Secondly, it is prejudiced. It is prejudice. It shows the rotten, evil bias of your own hearts. Verse 27, He says, okay, “If I, by Beelzebub, cast out demons, by whom do your sons cast them out?” Now what do you mean by that. Well, in other words, “Don’t your sons do the same thing?” Who are our sons? Well, it’s simply a reference to the sons of the Pharisees, a way of saying the disciples of the Pharisees, such as in 2 Kings chapter 2 verse 3 were it talks about the sons of the prophets. There were certain people who sat at the feet of the Pharisees to learn their system, their legalism, their approach to life. They became known, as it were, as the sons or the disciples of the Pharisees. And among those were groups of the sons of the Pharisees she were involved in exorcisms. They were going around – Josephus talks about them – with strange incantations and strange activities, trying to cast out demons. . .

Thirdly, His answer says you are rebellious. And this is just the climax. You're rebellious. Not only is your accusation absurd and biased and inconsistent, but it shows your rebellion against the kingdom. Verse 28, "But if I cast out demons by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you." Oh, man. What a statement. Now the truth is that He does cast out demons by the power of the Spirit of God. Right? Anything else would be absurd. So we know it is God's power. And by the way, Jesus, in His incarnation as a servant, restricted the use of His own prerogatives, was obedient to the Father, and energized by the Spirit. So the Spirit was doing this through Him. Underline that in your Bible. That's the key to understanding the unpardonable sin, which we'll get into next time. . .

And so the activity led to the amazement, which led to the accusation, which led to the answer. And Jesus says, "You are absurd; you are prejudiced; and you are rebellious." Then He adds the anathema. And that word means a curse. And this is the sum of it that we want to look at in verses 31 and 32, the anathema. And this is a passage that has confused many people and has been interpreted in all kinds of ways. I hope we can get some good understanding of it as we look at its simplicity in the context of Matthew 12.

They had cursed the Spirit of God, and now God through Christ is going to curse them. They have committed a sin that is unforgivable – unforgivable. Verse 31, "Wherefore" – in other words, based on all that He has said and all that has gone on – "I say to you, all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven men." Now stop there. "All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven men." That is a very simple statement. Sin and blasphemy are, in a sense, distinct. Although blasphemy is sin. Sin is an act. Sin is a large category of evil deeds or thoughts or attitudes. Blasphemy is one kind of sin within that broad category. Blasphemy is the unique sin of speaking evil against God, of saying things about God that are not true about Him, of speaking of God in a derogatory manner. That is blasphemy. It is a defiant irreverence. It is to speak evil of. . .

"But" – watch this – "when you speak against the Holy Spirit, that will not be forgiven you, not in this time period or in the other time period to follow." Because when you begin to speak against the Spirit, then you are saying, "I recognize the supernatural, I see the supernatural, only I think it's hell, not heaven." For that, you won't be forgiven. If you're looking on the human plane and that's all you perceive and that's all you've understood, you could be brought along to believe and to understand. But if, when you have seen the supernatural and the ministry of the Spirit of God through Christ and you conclude that it is of the Devil, you can't be forgiven. Because now you are speaking against the Spirit of God, the power of God, the energy of God, as made manifest through Christ. And so, in a real sense, you're speaking against His deity, His divine nature, and calling it satanic.

S. Lewis Johnson: He calls it blasphemy against the Holy Spirit in verse 31. What is blasphemy? Well, blasphemy is slander. To blaspheme God is to slander God, to affirm of him things that are not true. For example, if we were to say God is not wholly holy, we would be blaspheming God. We would be slandering him. If we were to speak of him in a way in which we denied his attributes, we would be slandering him. It is blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, that is one thing that is said.

And the second thing is that it is sin against the Holy Spirit, specifically. Not sin against the Son of Man. Not sin against the Father, specifically. But sin against the Holy Spirit. It's blasphemy and it's against the Holy Spirit.

Now specifically, in the light of the context, it is the testimony of the Holy Spirit to the king and his kingdom. In the 28th verse we read, "But if I cast out demons by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come upon you." It is evident that the reason the Holy Spirit performed these miracles through the Lord Jesus was to give the unshakeable testimony to the kingship, the Messianic kingship of the Lord Jesus.

And that is evident by the words he speaks in verse 29, "Or else, how shall one enter into the strongman's house and spoil his goods except he first bind the strongman." He is testifying to the fact that he is able to enter into the house of Satan and spoil his goods, and only the Messianic king can do that.

So to sum it up, then, it is the sin of blasphemy. It is sin against the Holy Spirit, and it is specifically his testimony to the king. And we may sum it by saying that it is the sin of refusing the kingdom and the king, brought about through the clear testimony of the Spirit in the miracles performed through the Lord Jesus.

It is something like this. To the presentation of the credentials of the King, through the ministry of the Holy Spirit, Israel the nation is saying, "These are not the credentials, they are the credentials of hell." And in that they slander the Holy Spirit. In that, they refuse the testimony to the kingdom and the king.

There is a text in the Old Testament which is very much of an admonition and warning that speaks of the same thing we have here. Isaiah says, "Woe unto them that call evil good and good evil; that put darkness for light and light darkness; that put bitter for sweet and sweet for bitter." Or it's like those who say with the witches in MacBeth, "Fair is foul and foul is fair." What they're doing is they have finally come to the place where in the light of the plain testimony of God through the supernatural miracles of the Spirit, they reject them – not only reject them – but say that they really come from Satan and not from God. . .

What we have here in this climactic miracle is this final evidence of opposition after a lengthy period of rejection by him, so that what we're seeing is the operation of a fixed attitude of rejection of the testimony of God through Christ, and so that we have finally reached a kind of climax, and this sin precludes forgiveness because it precludes repentance. That is, these individuals, by rejecting the truth of the word of God for so lengthy a period of time have now become the recipient of the hardening ministry of the Holy Spirit. . .

Let me conclude. What is, then, the unpardonable sin? The unpardonable sin is blasphemy of the Holy Spirit's supernatural work of performing miracles prevalent in the days of the supernatural miracles. It may be committed by hardened, impenitent men.

But now having said that, two other things ought to be said. In the first place, there is an unpardonable sin today. It is not the unpardonable sin to which our Lord refers, but it is the unpardonable sin of rejecting Jesus Christ. In John chapter 3 and verse 18, the Lord Jesus in the continuation of the passage in which he has had his interview with Nicodemus says, "He that believeth on him is not condemned, but he that believeth not is condemned already because he hath not believed already in the name of the only begotten Son of God,” so that personal faith in Jesus Christ – if it does not come – sin is unpardonable.

There is such a thing as the unpardonable sin, historically, and there is such a thing as an unpardonable sin throughout this present age. And it is possible for us to commit unpardonable sin in that sense. And furthermore, it is possible for there to exist a prolonged rebellion that leads to retributive judgment and hardness of heart. That is still possible today. It is my own opinion that that is what is referred to in Hebrews chapter 6, when we read that it is impossible to bring certain people to repentance, who have had great privilege but have turned away from them. They apostasized from the apprehensive sense of truth that they possessed, and there is no hope.

In the Old Testament, we read that God sent the prophets to Israel, and they ministered to them and ministered to them, but they rejected them and rejected them, and then we read “til there was no healing.” Retributive judgment must set in.

Walking Together Ministries: In 1942 C.S. Lewis made his famous argument concerning the identity of Jesus that is known today as “The Lewis Trilemma.” Here it is:

I am trying here to prevent anyone saying the really foolish thing that people often say about Him: I'm ready to accept Jesus as a great moral teacher, but I don't accept his claim to be God. That is the one thing we must not say. A man who was merely a man and said the sort of things Jesus said would not be a great moral teacher. He would either be a lunatic—on the level with the man who says he is a poached egg—or else he would be the Devil of Hell. You must make your choice. Either this man was, and is, the Son of God, or else a madman or something worse. You can shut him up for a fool, you can spit at him and kill him as a demon or you can fall at his feet and call him Lord and God, but let us not come with any patronising nonsense about his being a great human teacher. He has not left that open to us. He did not intend to... Now it seems to me obvious that He was neither a lunatic nor a fiend: and consequently, however strange or terrifying or unlikely it may seem, I have to accept the view that He was and is God.

Christians and non-Christians alike have argued about the validity of Lewis' argument since he first made it on BBC radio and then again when it appeared in his classic work Mere Christianity. The debate is over the logical cohesion and force of the argument. That particular issue is not my concern here. What is my concern here is the fact that Jesus, in our text, appears to offer something similar. I am not saying that the Lewis Trilemma is in the New Testament. Rather, I want to show that Jesus shows the Pharisees that if He was not who they alleged He was then He must be the one that they did not want to admit He was! In this way, there is a parallel between the Lewis Trilemma and Matthew 12:22-32.

In this passage, we see three proposals offered concerning who Jesus might be.

Proposal #1: Jesus is a King Who Restores Israel

It is possible, then, that “the people” were close to the truth and even possibly saw a part of the truth—that Jesus was the Messiah—but that their understanding was flawed by the idea that the Messiah would be a national political figure that would cast off the fetters of Rome and restore national Israel. But Jesus the Messiah turned out to be quite different than their understanding of what the Messiah would be: the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world.

This, then, is our first proposal: the Messiah/Restorer of Israel. At least the possibility of it was suggested by “the people” in their question, “Can this be the Son of David?”

Proposal #2: Jesus is a Demon-possessed Deceiver

The second proposal was an obscene proposal. It came from the Pharisees. . . the blasphemous idea that Jesus was operating with satanic power.

Proposal #3: Jesus is the King of Kings

Argument #1: If Jesus is operating under the influence of Satan then the realm of Satan is collapsing (v.25-26).

Argument #2: The Pharisees’ own followers cast out demons but have not received this kind of skepticism (v.27).

Argument #3: For Jesus to cast out demons He must be stronger than the devil, and this would mean that His exorcisms are evidence that God has come among them (v.28-29).

TEXT: Matthew 12:33-37

TITLE: EXPOSING THE SOURCE OF EVIL -- SPEECH MATTERS

BIG IDEA:

SPEECH REVEALS ONE'S INNER CHARACTER AND WILL BE JUDGED

INTRODUCTION:

Walter Wilson: Sins such as blasphemy and slander warrant particular scrutiny in meting out judgment because speech reveals a person's true character, a point illustrated by three examples of causal correspondence, namely,

- the correspondence between a tree and its fruit (12:33),
- the correspondence between a person's heart and his or her mouth (12:34), and
- the correspondence between a treasure and the "things" its owner brings out of it (12:35)

If the structure of 12:31–32 relies especially on parallelism, the cluster of sayings in 12:33–37 is noteworthy for its use of antithesis.

Brian Evans: According to recent research done in the UK, Working men average 2000-3000 words per day, females from 10,000-20,000. However, both average about 500-700 words of actual value (i.e. words which have intent to communicate to another person an item of importance to both).

I'm not going to make any comments on this data except to say we all probably speak too much especially in light of the fact that we are going to give an account of every careless word we say.

Donald Hagner: The pericope can be outlined thus:

- (1) the tree and the fruit, consisting of
 - (a) the good tree/fruit and
 - (b) the bad tree/fruit, these in perfectly symmetrical parallelism, and
 - (c) the conclusion of knowing by fruit (v 33);
- (2) the relation between the heart and words of the mouth, consisting of
 - (a) a question directed to the Pharisees and
 - (b) the concluding point (v 34);
- (3) the speech of good and bad persons, consisting again of two perfectly symmetrical clauses (v 35);
- (4) the danger of careless words (v 36); and
- (5) a concluding and summarizing principle, stated in two perfectly symmetrical clauses (v 37).

As the metaphor of the tree and its fruit was used in 7:16–20 to refer to works, so the same metaphor is used here in relation to words. Both works and words reveal the true nature of a person. The words of the Pharisees revealed their failure to receive the good news of the kingdom proclaimed by Jesus. It is in this sense that they were bad and they spoke bad things; indeed, they blasphemed the Holy Spirit (v 32). This passage calls attention to the importance of all speech; it warns of irresponsible or thoughtless speech as well as bad speech. It reminds the Christian readers of Matthew that on the day of judgment they will be held accountable for all the words they speak as well as the deeds they do. Righteousness consists always of both word and deed (cf. Col 3:17).

R. T. France: The Pharisees' malicious charge now provides the setting for some further reflections on the power and significance of words (vv. 33–37); this complex of sayings is clearly applicable to what the Pharisees have said, but may also be more widely applied, and may originally have been preserved independently of this particular narrative setting.

The imagery of the tree and its fruit recalls 7:16–20 (using the same terms “good” and “rotten”), but this saying is much more concise, and is expressed as a second-person imperative (“make the tree good/rotten”) which probably reflects a popular proverbial style, as in our “Give him an inch and he’ll take a mile” or “Give a dog a bad name.” It can hardly be intended as an actual command in view of the second clause: are we exhorted to create a rotten tree? The point of the proverb is the same as in 7:16–20: a person’s true nature is perceived by how they behave. The relevance of this piece of proverbial wisdom in context will be drawn out in the following verses with special reference to words, whereas in 7:16–20 it was probably more concerned with actions.

Bruce Hurt: Axiomatic means evident without proof or argument, self-evident, self-explanatory. If something is axiomatic, it seems to be obviously true. What Jesus is doing in this section is pointing out the root of the Pharisees' problem, beginning with the axiom that a tree produces after its nature and is easily recognized by its fruit. Given the fact that the Pharisees have just uttered the most damning words a human being can speak, Jesus launches into a discussion of the tongue in Mt 12:33-37, concluding in verse 37 “by your words you will be justified, and by your words you will be condemned.” Thus it behooves us to pay careful attention to this section so that we come to understand the importance of our words and how they relate to our eternal destiny!

I. (:33-35) ASSOCIATION OF SPEECH WITH HEART CONDITION

A. (:33) Correspondence between Tree and Fruit – Speech Reveals the Nature of the Heart

*“Either make the tree good, and its fruit good; or make the tree bad, and its fruit bad;
for the tree is known by its fruit.”*

Scott Harris: The verb “make” here is in the sense of “consider to be” in the same way we might say that “so and so is not the genius that some people make him.” The tree and its fruit must be considered either good or bad together. In effect Jesus is saying, “Either consider me and what I do as good, or consider me and what I do as bad. What I am will be known by what I do.” Who Jesus is must be determined by what He says and does regardless of personal feelings. Jesus’ words and works point undeniably to His goodness and Divine power.

Grant Osborne: Challenges the crowd to judge carefully between the Pharisees and Jesus. The “good tree” is Jesus, who proclaims God’s truths, and the “bad tree” is the leader who opposes God in Jesus and speaks against him. “A tree is known by its fruit” (cf. 7:20) challenges the hearers to differentiate between the evil talk/blasphemy of the Pharisees and the kingdom truths of Jesus. The point is that the Pharisees have “made” (double meaning) themselves evil, and so their proclamations have become evil.

John Nolland: It is from the fruit that the quality of a tree is finally to be discerned. Despite their pretensions to religious righteousness, these Pharisees have given themselves away by their reaction to what they have experienced.

William Hendriksen: Fruit and tree belong together. They must not be separated. Therefore to say that while the deeds of Jesus, such as demon-expulsion, healing the sick, etc., may be beneficial, yet he himself is bad, being a tool of Beelzebul, makes no sense. Who Jesus is must be determined by what he does: a tree is judged by its fruit.

Bruce Hurt: Ultimately their words put them in a bind as He pointed out in Mt 12:27. Why so? Because if they said what He was doing was evil, then their own sons were doing evil. But they considered what their own sons did as good. So He boxed them in a corner. They were trapped by their own words. Jesus is commanding them to be consistent because the character of His own life (GOOD) should have been clear to them from the good fruit He accomplished (healings and exorcisms were “good fruit”). Thus they should have called Him a “good tree” instead of a “bad tree.”

Brian Evans: The dynamic is that doing good things doesn’t make you good, doing good things shows you already are good through the work of the Holy Spirit has made you righteous so the righteous person does righteous things. The healthy tree produces healthy fruit.

B. (:34) Correspondence between Heart and Speech – Speech Reflects the Overflow of What Fills the Heart

*“You brood of vipers, how can you, being evil, speak what is good?
For the mouth speaks out of that which fills the heart.”*

Walter Wilson: In the current context, the emphasis falls on bad fruit, that is, the evil speech of the Pharisees, and as we know from 3:10, any tree that does not produce good fruit “is cut down and thrown into the fire” (cf. 13:30; 21:19, 43). That being the case, challenge (12:33) gives way to reproof (12:34), the latter formulated as an invective (12:34a), an ironic question (12:34b), and a supporting aphorism (12:34c). The last of these elements drives home the main point: sooner or later the mouth will disclose the content of one’s heart, that is, one’s true nature. Being evil themselves, the Pharisees are incapable of speaking anything that is good, blasphemy being among the sins that proceed from the heart, thereby defiling the entire person (15:18–19; cf. Jas 3:6).

Stanley Saunders: Adopting John the Baptizer’s epithet (cf. 3:7), Jesus calls the Pharisees “a brood of vipers” (cf. 23:33). Like the serpent in the garden, they are cunning orators, but their words deceive and destroy. They may sound “wise” and “intelligent” (cf. 11:25), but they will be held to account for their “useless,” “fruitless” words, uttered in order to discredit Jesus and deny God’s power. Whether by their actions or their words, the Pharisees demonstrate what tree they have fallen from.

C. (:35) Correspondence between Treasure and Product – Speech Reflects Consistency with the Moral Condition of the Heart and the evil man out of his evil treasure brings forth what is evil.”*

D. A. Carson: It is the mouth that reveals what is in the heart. How, then, can those who are evil say anything good? What is needed is a change of heart.

Daniel Doriani: The people must have marveled at this dispute. Jesus healed a man who bore terrible burdens and suffered terrible bondage. His act was so obviously good; how could anyone criticize it? Jesus explained that the heart drives such antagonism. Words are hostile or mean-spirited when hearts are full of such thoughts: “You brood of vipers, how can you who are evil say anything good? For out of the overflow of the heart the mouth speaks. The good man brings good things out of the good stored up in him, and the evil man brings evil things out of the evil stored up in him” (12:34–35). Those who have an evil heart speak evil; those with a good heart declare good things. The Pharisees slandered Jesus because there was slander in their hearts. We must have good hearts if we hope to say good things. . .

Jesus says humans act according to their nature. If the heart is full of hate, the mouth says hateful things. The Pharisees slandered Jesus because there were slander and hatred in their hearts. Today, we gossip and criticize others because our hearts desire to promote self by condemning others. Cursing and insults, judgment and condemnation are the same. We speak from the abundance of the heart.

John Nolland: The point is probably that one’s actions (here one’s words) reveal what one most deeply values; they are what one brings out from one’s treasure trove to give to others.

D. A. Carson: It is the mouth that reveals what is in the heart. How, then, can those who are evil say anything good? What is needed is a change of heart.

Brian Evans: In Jesus’ day this word meant treasure house or storehouse. It also has in mind our definition a storehouse of words or a treasure chest of words.

Our Lord is telling us that when we speak it’s as if we go into our storehouse of words and pick from the treasure chest of words. The evil person only has evil words to pick from. Their treasure chest only has evil in it. Their speech comes from their deposit of words...slander, complaining, gossip, lying, manipulation and deceit. That’s what they say because that’s all they have.

The righteous person who is born again also has a treasure chest of words. We speak using words from our thesaurus.

II. (:36-37) ACCOUNTABILITY FOR SPEECH

A. (:36) Words Will Be Judged

“And I say to you, that every careless word that men shall speak, they shall render account for it in the day of judgment.”

John Nolland: ἀργός means idle, unemployed, lazy, useless, or unproductive.

Warren Wiersbe: The phrase “idle word” in Matthew 12:36 means “words that accomplish nothing.” If God is going to judge our “small talk,” how much more will He judge our deliberate words? It is by our conversation at unguarded moments that we reveal our true character.

R. T. France: The point is not the casualness of the utterance, but its fallaciousness: “not ... ‘thoughtless’ words, such as a carefree joke, but deedless ones, loafers which ought to be up and busy about what they say, the broken promise, the unpaid vow, words which said, ‘I go, sir’ and never went (Matt. 21:29).” The Pharisees’ charge against Jesus, which was far from “casual” or “thoughtless,” is such an utterance, purporting to be a defense of God’s truth but all the time working against his saving purpose. Reading this saying in its context therefore helps to avoid the excessive rigorism which a literal rendering of these words out of context can promote, and which can easily turn conscientious disciples into humorless pedants who are afraid to relax or to join in social banter. . .

What we say about Jesus and his miracles reveals who we are, and we are judged accordingly. This is Jesus’ diagnostic for our soul. He asks, “What do you say about me? What do you say in your most casual words to others?”

B. (:37) Words Determine Justification or Condemnation

“For by your words you shall be justified, and by your words you shall be condemned.”

Brian Evans: Their words did not sentence them to hell. Their words exposed a person who was already bound for hell. The charge that Jesus was really doing these miracles by the power of Satan shows what sort of blasphemers these people really were. The Holy Spirit was working through the ministry of Jesus and they were blaspheming His work.

Grant Osborne: This is a key passage in Matthew, the high point so to speak of opposition in the book. At the same time, the authority of Jesus is never more clear, and we see here that Satan is already defeated and bound by Jesus. Further, there is a stress not only on the Pharisees but also on the accountability of all of us before God for the words we speak. . .

What we say shows the kind of person we are. Jesus in vv. 33–35 shows how the mouth reflects the heart, i.e., the true person within us. James 1:19 states this well: “Everyone should be quick to listen, slow to speak and slow to become angry.” In other words, “watch your mouth,” for as in Jas 3:5 the tongue is a small spark that sets a great forest ablaze. We must weigh our words carefully, avoid rudeness, and make certain that we edify rather than tear down others. James 3:1 – 4:12 especially concerns slander, but we must realize that gossip is passive slander and in some ways worse than slander, for slander at least is honest, wanting to hurt another person (cf. 2 Cor 12:20). Gossip doesn’t care enough to worry who is hurt but turns slander into entertainment!

Richard Gardner: In the final two verses, Jesus warns of the consequences for those who utter careless words, words that fail to serve a worthy end. Because the words we speak reveal who we are (cf. 15:18-19), God will acquit or condemn us on the basis of our words. For Matthew, this warning applies not only to Jesus’ contemporaries, but to later generations as well. It rebukes rabbinic critics of Jesus’ community in Matthew’s day. And it admonishes the community itself, especially those called to teach (cf. 5:19; James 3:1-12).

Robert Gundry: The traditional translation, “every idle word,” leaves the misimpression that Jesus is talking about random remarks. A truer translation is “every deedless word.” It goes without saying, at least for the moment, that in the Day of Judgment people will give an account of all their deeds (see 7:22–23, for example). Jesus is saying here that in the Day of Judgment people will give an account of their words as well as, and even apart from, their deeds—that is, whether or not their words had issued in deeds. “Every” individualizes the words and takes in all that’s spoken, whether good or evil. Whether or not followed up by a corresponding deed, speaking against the Holy Spirit examples an evil word that will lead to conviction. But a word of repentance, as in the confession of sins (see 3:6 with 3:2), that produces good deeds (“fruit in keeping with repentance” according to 3:8)—now there’s a basis for justification in the Day of Judgment!

William Hendriksen: The judgment passed upon the individual in the final day (see verse 36) is going to be “by,” in the sense of “in conformity with,” “in accordance with,” “in harmony with,” his words, considered as mirrors of the heart. These words will reveal whether he was a professed believer or an unbeliever; if a professed believer, whether his faith was genuine or faked. To be sure, a man is saved by grace alone, through faith, apart from any works considered as if they have earning power. Nevertheless, his works – this includes his words – supply the needed evidence showing whether or not he was and is a child of God. Moreover, if this judgment turns out favorably, the works, reflecting the man’s degree of loyalty to his Maker and Redeemer, figure in the determination of his degree of glory. They figure similarly in establishing the degree of punishment for those who perish. Jesus wants each individual to meditate upon this important truth, that he may be justified (declared righteous in the sight of God) and not condemned.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Can we be deceived by a person’s external words and works so that we fail to rightly discern the condition of their heart?
- 2) In what sense were the Pharisees a “brood of vipers”?
- 3) Understanding that our heart is deceitful and we tend to judge ourselves in a more favorable light than deserved, how can our words serve as a barometer of our spiritual condition?
- 4) How can we be more careful in the words we speak and what types of sins of the tongue do we need to guard against?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

John MacArthur: First there was doubt, then there was criticism, then there was indifference, then open rejection, and finally blasphemy. They’re no longer just wondering, they’re no longer indifferent, they’re no longer just rejecting Him, they are turning on Him in overt vile blasphemy. And that is what we read in Matthew 12:22-32. That is the record of the blasphemy of the Jewish leaders against Jesus Christ. And the substance of their blasphemy is in Mt 12:24, and it is really the key to understanding our passage for today. For in that they say, “This fellow,” referring to Christ, “doeth no cast out demons but by Beelzebub, the prince of demons.” And of course that is a name for Satan. So they watched Jesus cast the demons out of a man who was blind and dumb and no doubt deaf, in Mt 12:22. They saw the amazement of the people in Mt 12:23, and the people began to wonder if Jesus might not be the Messiah, the Son of David. And they were immediately threatened by the musings of the people. They were threatened by the thought that they might assume Jesus to be the Messiah, so they hurriedly and publicly affirmed that He did what He did by the power of the Devil – by the power of the Devil. And thus they spoke against Jesus Christ the most terrible words that have ever been spoken in human history, the most terrible words that ever fell from human lips, to have called Jesus Christ satanic, to have said of the lovely spotless gift of heaven that He was from hell. They had concluded the very antithesis of the truth and they had blasphemed the Lord and the Holy Spirit who worked through Him. They had committed a crime unequalled in human history. Now that conclusion leads us to the next passage. Jesus has condemned them in Mt 12:31-32. He told them that that kind of blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, who was at work through Christ, could never be forgiven. In other words, if you have all of the revelation there is to have – you’ve seen the miracles, you’ve heard His teachings, you’ve seen the quality of His life, you’ve seen His attitude, you’ve been able to be exposed to everything there is about Him - and your conclusion is that He is from the Devil, you are unredeemable. Because you have concluded the very opposite with the fullness of revelation. They were lost and they could never be saved; they were lost forever. And their words became that which ultimately damned them. Now may I hasten to say, they were not so much damned by their words as their damnation was made evident by what they said. It was clear they were to be damned by the words that came out from within them. It is not that you are damned by your words; it is that you are damned because your words will reveal the corruption of your heart. That is the issue. That is the substance of the passage. So they were, in effect, rendered hopeless in Mt 12:31-32 because of the blasphemy against the Holy Spirit as He ministered through Christ, but their words became the mark of their hopelessness. The words that they spoke were the objective external evidence of their corrupt and vile and wretched, wicked hearts.

Charles Swindoll: Up to this point, Jesus had been addressing the visible manifestation of deep depravity, not its invisible source. He confronted the results, not the causes; the actions, not the reasons. However, as a follow-up to His strong warning about blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, He dug deeper to the core of the problem. When we understand the root of a problem, we’ll better understand the nature of its solution.

Jesus was still directly addressing the Pharisees, now focusing on the source of their wickedness. This wasn’t just a superficial, easily changeable faux pas they had committed. They didn’t misstep or experience a slip of the tongue. They didn’t momentarily lose their tempers and lapse into a temporary fit. Their problem was deep-seated. As fruit is to a tree, their actions were to the condition of their eternal souls. If the fruit of a tree is bad, it means the tree itself is diseased. And if the fruit of a tree is good, then the tree itself is healthy: “The tree is known by its fruit” (12:33).

By their external words and actions, then, the Pharisees revealed their true inner natures. They were a “brood of vipers” who, being evil, could only speak what came from their hearts – evil (12:34-35). The results of their lives were reliable indicators of the inner condition of their souls. By contrast, the “good man” produces good things from the treasure of his heart. The contrast in the immediate context was between Jesus Himself and the Pharisees. His words and works promoted and resulted in nothing but good –healing, deliverance from wickedness, repentance, good works, and righteousness. But if people followed the dictates of the Pharisees, the results would be wickedness, oppression, division, dissension, and yes, even murderous plots against an innocent man!

The truth is, the heart is like a well of values, priorities, thoughts, and attitudes deep within us. The tongue is like the bucket that draws from that well. Until others actually drink from that invisible well, they won't know whether the water is good or bad, life-giving or toxic. The Pharisees' hidden well of wickedness had been revealed by their words of blasphemy. Jesus' warning to them was severe: "Every careless word that people speak, they shall give an accounting for it in the day of judgment" (12:36).

There are consequences for our words and actions. And while some people are justified by their right words, which manifest true, believing hearts, so, too, will some be condemned by their wicked words, which reveal sinful, unrepentant hearts (12:37). As Paul said, "If you confess with your mouth Jesus as Lord, and believe in your heart that God raised Him from the dead, you will be saved; for with the heart a person believes, resulting in righteousness, and with the mouth he confesses, resulting in salvation" (Rom. 10:9-10).

Clearly, the Pharisees had neither believed in their hearts nor confessed with their mouths that Jesus was Lord. Rather, they believed in their hearts and confessed with their mouths that He was worse than a liar or lunatic; He was, they said, the devil! And now they had to face a terrible truth: Nobody attributes the works of God to the power of the devil and gets away with it.

R. V. G. Tasker: The Pharisees for all their religious pretensions were fundamentally evil, a generation of vipers, as Jesus now calls them, following the example of John the Baptist (see iii. 7). Their words were evil, because they overflowed from an evil heart (34). What the mouth utters is often what has been occupying the thoughts for so long that it must now find vocal expression. It was while he was musing, the psalmist said, that the fire kindled, and at last he spake with his tongue (see Ps. xxxix. 3). If therefore the affections and thoughts of men are evil, their utterances must also be evil (35). And if speech is such an unfailling indication of character, it is very natural that it is by men's words, no less than by their deeds that they will be either acquitted or condemned on the day of judgment (36, 37).

J C Ryle: There are few of our Lord's sayings which are so heart-searching as this. There is nothing, perhaps, to which most men pay less attention than their words. They go through their daily work, speaking and talking without thought or reflection, and seem to imagine that if they do what is right, it matters but little what they say. But is it so? Are our words so utterly trifling and unimportant? We dare not say so, with such a passage of Scripture as this before our eyes. Our words are the evidence of the state of our hearts, as surely as the taste of the water is an evidence of the state of the spring. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks." The lips only utter what the mind conceives. Our words will form one subject of inquiry at the day of judgment. We shall have to give account of our sayings, as well as our doings. Truly these are very solemn considerations. If there were no other text in the Bible, this passage ought to convince us, that we are all "guilty before God," and need a righteousness better than our own, even the righteousness of Christ. (Phil. 3:9.) Let us be humble as we read this passage, in the recollection of time past. How many idle, foolish, vain, light, frivolous, sinful, and unprofitable things we have all said! How many words we have used, which, like thistle-down, have flown far and wide, and sown mischief in the hearts of others that will never die! How often when we have met our friends, "our conversation," to use an old saint's expression, "has only made work for repentance." There is deep truth in the remark of Burkitt, "A profane scoff or atheistical jest may stick in the minds of those that hear it, after the tongue that spoke it is dead. A word spoken is physically transient, but morally permanent." "Death and life," says Solomon, "are in the power of the tongue." (Prov. 18:21.) Let us be watchful as we read this passage about words, when we look forward to our days yet to come. Let us resolve, by God's grace, to be more careful over our tongues, and more particular about our use of them. Let us pray daily that our "speech may be always with grace." (Coloss. 4:6.) Let us say every morning with holy David, "I will take heed to my ways, that I offend not in my tongue." Let us cry with him to the Strong for strength, and say, "Set a watch over my mouth, and keep the door of my lips." Well indeed might James say, "If any man offends not in word, the same is a perfect man." (Psalms 39:1, 141:3; James 3:2.)

Scott Harris: Salvation – justification – is not produced by either words or deeds, but the words and deeds are clear manifestations of salvation. They are the objective, observable evidence of a person's spiritual condition whether it be good or bad.

We are not saved by good works, but we are saved for "good works, which God prepared beforehand, that we should walk in them" (Ephesians 2:10). In the same way, true salvation also produces good words. Romans 10:10, "With the heart man believes, resulting in righteousness, and with the mouth he confesses, resulting in salvation." In Romans 15:18, Paul's praise to the Lord was that the gospel resulted in "the obedience of the Gentiles in word and deed."

Salvation includes regeneration of the heart in which the individual is transferred from the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of light. What was once dead in trespasses and sin is made alive unto God. The treasury of the heart is changed, and thus salvation will result in good words, words that confirm the reality of what has taken place in the heart.

By the same token evil words, bad words, careless words mark what is really in the heart of that individual, and so it is by them that they will be judged. They are the confirming evidence of an evil heart. God is a holy God and that is why judgment must come. God is also a just God and He will judge fairly and accurately by the very words that people say. He will not need witness to verify the truth, the words of the individual himself will verify along with record of the person's deeds the truth of what his heart is like. Revelation 20:11-15 records the Great White Throne Judgment in which all who have not received the redemption from sin that is offered in the Lord Jesus Christ will stand before Him and be judged "from the things which were written in the books, according to their deeds." Revelation 20:15 adds, "And if anyone's name was not found written in the book of life, he was thrown into the lake of fire."

For the true Christian there will be an accounting as well. Paul writes in 2 Corinthians 5:10, "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may be recompensed for his deeds in the body, according to what he has done, whether good or bad." Of course these judgments will not be in condemnation, for Paul had already written in Romans 8:1 "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." The condemnation is gone, but there will still be an accounting for what we have said and done whether it be "wood, hay, and stubble" which will be burned up, or "gold, jewels, and precious stones" which will reap rewards in heaven (1 Corinthians 3:12-15).

What are these “careless words” Jesus speaks of? The basic meaning of the word is “useless, barren, unproductive, that which does no useful work and is therefore ineffective in producing any good result.” These would include flippant speech, irresponsible speaking, inappropriate talk, as well as words of hypocrisy. The Scriptures are full of warning about our speech and include as evil words those that express lust, “For the lips of a strange woman drop [as] an honeycomb, and her mouth [is] smoother than oil: But her end is bitter as wormwood, sharp as a two edged sword” (Proverbs 5:3,4), deceit, “Their tongue [is as] an arrow shot out; it speaks deceit: [one] speaks peaceably to his neighbor with his mouth, but in heart he lies in wait” (Jeremiah 9:8 AV), cursing and oppression, “His mouth is full of cursing and deceit and fraud: under his tongue [is] mischief and vanity” (Psalms 10:7 AV), lying, “A worthless person, a wicked man, walks with a perverse mouth” (Proverbs 6:12). “Lying lips are an abomination to the LORD: but they that deal truly are his delight” (Proverbs 12:22 AV), destruction, “By the blessing of the upright the city is exalted: but it is overthrown by the mouth of the wicked” (Proverbs 11:11 AV), vanity, “For when they speak great swelling [words] of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, [through much] wantonness, those that are just escaping from them who live in error” (2 Peter 2:18), flattery, “A lying tongue hates those who are afflicted by it; and a flattering mouth works ruin” (Proverbs 26:28) foolishness, “The tongue of the wise uses knowledge aright: but the mouth of fools pours out foolishness” (Proverbs 15:2 AV), verbosity, “A fool also is full of words: a man cannot tell what shall be; and what shall be after him, who can tell him?” (Ecclesiastes 10:14 AV), falsehood, “Whose mouths must be stopped, who subvert whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for the sake of dishonest gain” (Titus 1:11 AV), pride, “There they cry, but none gives answer, because of the pride of evil men” (Job 35:12 AV), vulgarity, “But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth” (Colossians 3:8 AV), hatred, “They surrounded me also with words of hatred; and fought against me without a cause” (Psalms 109:3), and gossip, “Where no wood is, [there] the fire goes out: so where [there is] no talebearer, the strife ceases” (Proverbs 26:20 AV),

Careless speech is anything that does not fit the injunction in Ephesians 4:29 to “Let no unwholesome word proceed from your mouth, but only such a word as is good for edification according to the need of the moment, that it may give grace to those who hear.”

How careful are you about what you say? This should be a sobering passage for all of us, but especially for non-believers who will face a judgment of condemnation and their very words. Their words, both those evil by deliberate design and those evil just by carelessness, will testify against them. But believers should also be serious about this as well. Are we careful about what we say? And are we careful for the right reason? You see, some of you may be bothered by Jesus’ words here, but it is for the wrong reason. But on the other hand, some of you may not think this applies to you at all. The problem is one of Legalism and License.

Legalism & License

In the past couple of months I have talked about legalism several times, but I have not mentioned its opposite which is license. Today I want to use this passage to show you the nature of the way the Lord wants you to live and why both legalism and license are wrong.

Legalism is what entrapped the Pharisees into a system of false religion. The essence of legalism comes from the thought that God will approve of me if I do certain things and do not do certain other things. Usually the particular things that are either done or not done start with a basis in Scripture, but since Scripture, especially the New Testament, is more a compilation of principles and precepts rather than a series of specific rules and regulations, man quickly fills in the specifics and comes up with his own list of what is and is not acceptable before God. Man’s law replaces God’s precepts.

Legalism says, “I am good, I have gained God’s approval because I have done thus and so and not done thus and so.” It views spirituality from the outside and judges itself and others based on what it thinks is or is not godly. Legalism results in attitudes which are self-righteous and condemning. And before anyone here gets proud about not being a legalist – take warning. This is an extremely simple error to slip into and I dare say that every person in this room has fallen into this at some point and may still have some views that are legalistic.

Now the opposite of Legalism is License. License results from an overemphasis on the grace of God to the exclusion or near exclusion of His holiness. The basis of thinking is, “I am good, I have gained God’s approval because Jesus has forgiven me, and it does not really matter that much what I do.” It views spirituality as being inside and therefore indiscernible to anyone else. Generally a person with such a view would pride themselves on their ability to tolerate sinful behavior in others. These are those that are quick to partially quote Matthew 7:1, 2 with “judge not lest you be judged.” Such a person will stress their liberty in Christ to the point that they needlessly offend their Christian brothers (see Romans 14 or 1 Corinthians 8), and open themselves up to practicing clearly sinful behavior which brings open shame to the name of Jesus Christ.

What is the truth? Is spirituality outside or inside? Look again at what Jesus says here in Matthew 12:33 and 35, “. . . for the tree will be known by its fruit . . . The good man out of his good treasure brings forth what is good; and the evil man out of his evil treasure brings forth what is evil.” True spirituality is both inside and outside!

The Libertine needs to understand that a person’s behavior and words do reveal what is on the inside and that toleration of sin is an affront to God’s holiness. In addition, though Christians are not under the Law of Moses, they are under the Law of Christ (1 Corinthians 9:21). The Great Commission includes, “teaching them to observe all that I commanded you.”

The Legalist needs to remember that “all our righteous deeds are like a filthy garment” before Him. We are not good because of what we do or do not do; we are good because of what Jesus Christ has done for us and in us. We are good because the Holy Spirit has regenerated us and given us new hearts. Out of an evil heart come evil deeds. A person may be able to fake it for awhile and play Christianity talking the talk and walking the walk outwardly, but eventually the truth will come out. We do good, not to gain God’s approval, but out of our love for Him and desire to please Him.

What is it that marks true righteousness? What makes a good tree? Good fruit that comes out of the treasure of a heart that is good. True spirituality is both inside and outside. The person truly walking with Christ cares about pleasing Him instead of conforming to the opinions of other people.

REJECTION OF MANIFEST TRUTH LEADS TO SEVERE JUDGMENT WHILE TRUE DISCIPLES PRIORITIZE SPIRITUAL FAMILY RELATIONSHIPS

INTRODUCTION:

The emphasis in this passage on “this evil generation” reinforces the interpretation of the unpardonable sin as applying to the present generation who witnessed and rejected the awesome works performed by Jesus by the power of the Spirit.

Richard Gardner: The dispute over Jesus’ power in 12:22-37 finds its sequel in the controversy in 12:38-50. In fact, the two units share a common narrative setting. It is the same Pharisees who accuse Jesus of being in league with Satan in 12:24 who, along with the scribes, insist that Jesus show them a sign in 12:38. Unfazed by Jesus’ words condemning blasphemy against the Spirit, they challenge him to prove his claim that he acts with divine authority. Does God really stand behind Jesus’ work, or is Jesus only an imposter (cf. 21:23)?

In constructing this unit, Matthew draws on several pieces of material from his sources. One of the pieces presents the debate over a sign, including Jesus’ sayings about this generation (vv. 38-42). For this core material, Matthew is indebted both to Mark 8:11-13 and to a saying also found in Luke 11:29-32 (cf. 11:16). The second component is a saying about the return of the unclean spirit (vv. 43-45). In the Lukan parallel (Luke 11:24-26), the saying is included in the dispute over Jesus casting out demons. Matthew uses it, however, to expand Jesus’ critique of this generation.

To complete the unit, Matthew turns to a Markan story linked to the dispute over casting out demons (vv. 46-50, cf. Mark 3:31-35). In this story Jesus’ relatives come looking for him, and Jesus uses the occasion to identify his “true” family. What we have then in the unit is a “gallery of contrasting attitudes” (Senior, 1977:130), much like the two panels in 11:20-30. The larger canvas depicts an evil and adulterous generation, faithless Israel as represented by the leaders who reject Jesus. But alongside this dismal picture is a portrait of the disciples, who accept Jesus’ claims and do the will of God.

Walter Wilson: The Pharisees continue their assault on Jesus (cf. 12:1-24), this time accompanied by the scribes, who we see join them in asking for a “sign,” presumably referring not simply to another exorcism (cf. 12:22-24) but to an extraordinary wonder that will authenticate the claims he has been making about himself and his agency on behalf of God’s kingdom. Jesus counters with a portrayal that likens his contemporaries to the faithless wilderness generation and himself to the prophet Jonah, who spent three days and nights in the belly of a whale, a veiled allusion to the time between Jesus’s death and resurrection, the latter constituting the ultimate “sign” of his messianic identity. Because his contemporaries have failed to recognize the something “greater” in their midst, the day of judgment will for them be a day of condemnation. Indeed, in an ironic twist of fate, even gentiles and outsiders will rise up to condemn them. This dire picture is then elaborated by an extended image that shows how the unresponsiveness of “this generation” resembles the predicament of a house that is initially plagued by a single unclean spirit but eventually is inundated by a host of them, thus ending up in a worse state than it was before. The arrival of members from his biological family then provides Jesus with an opportunity to draw a contrast between this corrupted “house” and his own, messianic household, the membership of which is determined by obedience to the will of the heavenly Father.

Grant Osborne: Rejection governs every aspect of this passage. First Jesus’ enemies reject him in their demand for a sign; then Jesus rejects them in his proclamation of their future judgment by Nineveh and the Queen of the South. At the same time, Jesus is also proclaiming his exalted status by saying he is “greater than Jonah” and “greater than Solomon.” Finally the parable of the return of the demons shows the true nature of “this evil generation” as under the control of Satan (a reversal of their charge in 12:24).

I. (:38-42) THIS EVIL GENERATION CONDEMNED BY TWO OT WITNESSES FOR THEIR REJECTION OF MANIFEST TRUTH

A. (:38) Disingenuous Desire to Witness Some Special Miraculous Sign

“Then some of the scribes and Pharisees answered Him, saying, ‘Teacher, we want to see a sign from You.’”

D. A. Carson: A sign was usually some miraculous token to be fulfilled quickly, or at once, to confirm a prophecy. The Jews were not asking for just another miracle, since they had already persuaded themselves that at least some of those Jesus had performed were of demonic agency (v.24); they were asking for a “sign” performed on command to remove what seemed to them to be the ambiguity of Jesus’ miracles.

Robert Gundry: Since the Pharisees have charged that Jesus was casting out demons by Beelzebul/Satan (12:24), now they’re asking for a sign not subject to interpretation as satanically aided. In effect they’re saying, “You deny you’re casting out demons by Beelzebul. Show us that you’re not. We want evidence, not assertion.”

Richard Gardner: The problem with the demand for a sign in Matthew 12 is not that signs have no place in what Jesus is doing (on the contrary, cf. 11:2-6). The problem is, rather, that this particular demand is the product of unfaith. To put it another way: Signs are for those who seek to discover, not dispute.

Charles Swindoll: In their hypocrisy, the religious leaders were feigning honor for Jesus in front of the crowd. They reinforced this ruse by addressing Jesus with the seemingly respectful title “Teacher,” which in Aramaic would have been Rabbi. But as A. B. Bruce notes, we readers should realize what’s going on: Their demand for a sign “was impudent, hypocritical, insulting.”

Why would they ask for a sign, then? Maybe the Pharisees thought that if they could just get Jesus to do enough of His “signs,” which they regarded as fake, they would be able to figure out how He really did them. It would be like telling a magician, “Do it again . . . do it again . . . do it again” in order to expose the sleight of hand. In any case, we know Jesus’ opponents weren’t coaxing Him to do more signs so that more of the crowd would believe, though that’s what would inevitably happen. Nor were they interested in the healing benefits of the miracles; after all, they had not cared enough about people to allow a man to be healed on the Sabbath. No, the scribes and Pharisees wanted to set Jesus up as a phony. They had already made up their minds that Jesus was a tool of the devil; now they just wanted to see exactly what it was about His “signs” that would give Him away.

R. T. France: The idea of an authenticating “sign” (cf. John 6:30) has a good OT pedigree. Moses, in the expectation that his God-given authority would be challenged, was given miracles to perform (Exod 4:1–9, 29–31; 7:8–22); Gideon requested and received a sign to confirm God’s promise (Judg 6:36–40); Elijah called down fire from heaven (1 Kgs 18:36–39); Ahaz and Hezekiah were offered signs to authenticate Isaiah’s prophecies (Isa 7:10–14; 38:7–8). All these signs took the form of miraculous or otherwise inexplicable events.

Donald Hagner: Now they ask to see a sign, presumably a miracle performed just for them, something that would amaze them while presenting irrefutable evidence that his claims were true (cf. particularly John 6:30). Yet this is precisely the kind of miracle—a demonstrative display of power for the purpose of impressing—that Jesus would not perform. His miracles were never done for the sake of creating an effect or of overpowering those who witnessed them; they were much more a part of his proclamation and thus designed solely to meet human needs. Even if Jesus had performed some astonishing sign for them, such was their unbelief, it is implied, that they probably would have charged Jesus with sorcery and thus have used it against him.

Van Parunak: Why does asking for a sign show that they are “evil and adulterous”? Because they are presuming that they have the right to sit in judgment on whether he is or is not the Messiah. By coming to Jesus in this way, they are offering him acceptance in their club. Similarly, Nicodemus in John 3 is inviting the Lord to join the Pharisees, based on his criticism of the Sadducees’ temple market in John 2. Like the Jews in Matthew 12, he and his colleagues thought that they were the ones to decide whether Jesus was legitimate. But the creature has no right to sit in approval over the creator. . .

We live in an age that is more Greek than Jewish. People are more likely to ask us for “wisdom” (logical proofs of Christianity) than for “signs.” But both are inappropriate. God’s way is neither signs nor wisdom, but simple preaching—the proclamation of the truth. If his Spirit is working in a needy heart, preaching is all that is needed—and if his Spirit is not working, all the signs and arguments in the world will have no effect.

B. (:39-41) The Condemning Witness of the People of Nineveh

1. (:39) Sign of Jonah the Prophet

“But He answered and said to them, ‘An evil and adulterous generation craves for a sign; and yet no sign shall be given to it but the sign of Jonah the prophet;’”

D. A. Carson: “Adultery” was frequently used by OT prophets to describe the spiritual prostitution and wanton apostasy of Israel (e.g., Isa 50:1; 57:3; Jer 3:8; 13:27; 31:32; Eze 16:15, 32, 35–42; Hos 2:1–7; 3:1). Here Jesus applies it to his contemporaries, as did his brother James later on (Jas 4:4). Israel had largely abandoned her idolatry and syncretism after the exile. But now Jesus insists that she is still adulterous in heart. In the past God had graciously granted “signs” to strengthen the faith of the timid (e.g., Abraham [Ge 15]; Gideon [Jdg 6:17–24]; Joshua [Jos 10]). Here, however, Jesus says that signs are denied “this wicked and adulterous generation,” because they are never to be performed on demand or as a sop to unbelief (cf. 1Co 1:22).

John Nolland: The generation is being likened to those sent into exile. ‘Generation’ here alludes back to 11:16 (see discussion there of ‘this generation’ as the generation privileged to experience the initiative of God in salvation and judgment) and will be picked up with ‘this generation’ in Mt. 12:41-42, 45. The Pharisaic scribes here take on a representative role, speaking for their generation in its unbelief. . .

Why is seeking a sign thought to characterize an evil and adulterous generation? It can hardly be that such a request is always and everywhere considered to be an evil. The difficulty must be the request in the context of Jesus’ ministry as readily available for scrutiny. Given what is visibly present, such a request amounts to nothing more than evasion.

Craig Blomberg: Jesus refuses to play their game. He does not work wonders on demand and especially not for skeptics. Their request reveals their evil intent and lack of faith (as in vv. 34-35).

R. T. France: Their demand for a sign after so much clear evidence (note especially v. 28) betrays their fundamental opposition to God’s purpose as it is now focused in the ministry of Jesus. If they have not been convinced by what has already happened, what sort of sign can hope to persuade them?

J. Ligon Duncan: Their problem is not, however, that Jesus had not supplied them with enough evidence, or even with enough spectacular evidence. Their problem was in their heart. They did not want to believe and so no amount of proof could convince them. Have you ever seen the sad picture of a mother outside a courtroom when a son has been clearly and evidently convicted of a crime. And you’ve seen that mother crying in disbelief, “No, no, no, it’s not true, it’s not true.” And you’ve seen the evidence, and the jury has seen the evidence, and the judge has seen the evidence, and it’s true. But she doesn’t want to believe it. The Lord Jesus is saying the hearts of the Pharisees don’t want to believe My claim. It’s not that the evidence is not there. It’s not that the truth is not clear. It’s not that there’s insufficient proof. It’s that they do not want to believe. The problem is with their hearts. Their hearts are opposed to God. That is the root of their problem. The evidence is enough to convince them, but they have no wish to be convinced.

2. (:40) Significance of Death, Burial and Resurrection of Jesus

“for just as Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the sea monster, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.”

D. A. Carson: It is the sign that Jonah himself was, not the sign given him or presented by him. This interpretation commonly accepts the view that the Ninevites learned what had happened to Jonah and how he got to their city. Jonah himself thus served as a “sign” to the Ninevites, for he appeared to them as one who had been delivered from certain death.

Van Parunak: It may be useful to digress here for a moment to counter an argument that is being made by Islamic apologists who attack the notion that our Lord truly died. They cite this verse and say, “See, Jesus’ “death” was like Jonah’s, but Jonah didn’t really die. He was alive while he was in the fish. So Jesus didn’t really die, either.” Should you encounter this argument, please call people’s attention to what the book of Jonah actually says:

Jon 2:1 Then Jonah prayed unto the LORD his God out of the fish's belly, 2 And said, I cried by reason of mine affliction unto the LORD, and he heard me; out of the belly of hell שאול cried I, and thou heardest my voice. ... 6 I went down to the bottoms of the mountains; the earth with her bars was about me for ever: yet hast thou brought up my life from corruption שחת] the pit], O LORD my God.

Jonah did not pray for deliverance from the fish's belly. His prayer is a prayer of thanksgiving, reporting an earlier prayer for deliverance. That prayer came not from the belly of the fish, but from Sheol, in the grave. Jonah did indeed die. We know from the history of Lazarus in Abraham's bosom (Luke 16) that people are conscious after death, and in that state he cried to the Lord, who brought him back to life and sent a great fish to snatch him from the bottom of the sea. When he finds himself alive again, in the fish, he prays a prayer of thanksgiving and praise, and the Lord gives him a second chance.

Craig Blomberg: "Three days and three nights" represents a Semitic idiom for any portion of three calendar days.

Richard Gardner: But what is this sign? According to Luke 11:30, the sign consists of someone coming to preach a message of repentance. Jonah served as such a sign to the people of Nineveh, and Jesus played the role of Jonah in his ministry to Israel.

Matthew, however, relates the sign to a different feature in the Jonah story. According to verse 40, the sign consists of a miraculous deliverance from death. Just as Jonah was delivered from the belly of a great fish (Jon. 1:17; 2:10), so Jesus will be delivered from entombment in the earth. This will be God's way of validating Jesus' work (although it too will be disputed; cf. 28:11-15). Whatever meaning is assigned to the sign of the prophet Jonah, it is a sign that judges those who refuse to repent.

Daniel Doriani: This recapitulation of Jonah's life clarifies what the sign of Jonah is. Jonah performed no signs, he simply spoke. But the presence of Jonah in Nineveh is significant, for Jonah was as good as dead, expected to be dead, and considered dead for three days. But after three days, he showed himself alive. The "sign of Jonah," therefore, will not be a miracle that resembles a miracle Jonah performed. Rather Jonah himself is the sign. The very fact that Jonah was alive—and preaching—after spending three days in the belly of a huge fish was the sign that God was active in Nineveh. The sign consisted of Jonah himself. The man was the sign. Just so with Jesus. The sign that will lead Jesus' adversaries to believe will not be a sign Jesus performs. The sign will be Jesus, alive and visible three days after his death (12:40). His life will indicate that he is the Lord and the Savior, who gives eternal life.

Consider how Jesus is greater than Jonah:

- Jonah went to enemies, whom he hated; Jesus went to his people, whom he loved.
- Jonah came without preparation to a hostile people; Jesus came to the people of God, after he had long prepared them to receive their Redeemer.
- Jonah declared impending judgment; Jesus preached the gospel.
- Jonah came with words; Jesus came with words and with deeds that verified them.
- Jonah was a man of God; Jesus is the Son of God.
- Jonah preached reluctantly, hoping his audience would not repent and taste God's grace; Jesus was willing to pay any price to impart God's grace.

3. (:41) Supremacy of Person and Preaching of Jesus over Jonah

“The men of Nineveh shall stand up with this generation at the judgment, and shall condemn it because they repented at the preaching of Jonah; and behold, something greater than Jonah is here.”

D. A. Carson: The first point of comparison between Jonah and Jesus is that they were both delivered from death—a deliverance that attested the trustworthiness of their preaching. The second point of comparison is the different responses of the hearers. The men of Nineveh repented. But even though “something [neuter, as in 12:6; NIV, ‘one’] greater than Jonah is here”—the reference is to Jesus, not his deliverance, because the comparison is with Jonah, not his deliverance—the people of Jesus’ day—“this generation” (cf. v.39)—did not repent. Therefore men of Nineveh (the nouns are anarthrous) “will stand up with” this generation at the final judgment; i.e., they will rise to bear witness against them.

C. (:42) The Condemning Witness of the Queen of the South

“The Queen of the South shall rise up with this generation at the judgment and shall condemn it, because she came from the ends of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and behold, something greater than Solomon is here.”

John Nolland: The two examples nicely balance a prophetic figure and a royal figure, a figure who went to his hearers with one who was visited by one from afar, and possibly the negative judgment preaching of Jonah and the positive availability of wisdom with Solomon. Jesus and his ministry correspond to all of these in a that-much-more manner. After 8:11-12, the Gentile identity of the Ninevites and the queen of the South should probably be taken as a quiet pointer to the place for non-Jewish people in the future that Jesus’ ministry is forging, as by and large this generation of Jews abandon the place that is naturally theirs.

R. T. France: If “something more/greater” than all these key authorities is now present, and if moreover all their functions have now been brought together into a single person, Jesus’ questioners have a thought-provoking basis on which to consider the question of his authority. Temple and priesthood, prophet, king and wise man—something greater is now here.

GotQuestions.org: Jesus mentions the Queen of the South in the context of Israel’s rejection of their True King. Though she was a Gentile, she traveled a long distance to hear Solomon, and the treasures she brought showed her respect for him and the wisdom he possessed. In contrast, the Jews of Jesus’ time were unwilling to travel any distance to hear the King of kings. The Queen of Sheba’s lavish respect for Solomon stood in stark contrast to Israel’s flat-out rejection of Christ. Yet Christ is greater than Solomon (Matthew 12:42). Solomon was a son of David, but Jesus is the Son of David. Solomon was rich, but Jesus is the Creator of all riches. Solomon possessed the gift of wisdom, but Jesus is wisdom personified.

Donald Hagner: If Jonah and Solomon were respectively persuasive and thus elicited an appropriate response, Jesus and his message should all the more have elicited a positive response from the scribes and Pharisees. . . . That the Pharisees did not respond positively to such conspicuous evidence as Jesus had given them makes them all the more culpable. Jesus and his kingdom far exceeded all else that Israel had witnessed in her history. Ironically, the Gentiles will be able to see what the Pharisees cannot. . . .

The request for a sign only becomes unjustified and intrinsically wrong when one is already surrounded by good and sufficient evidence one chooses not to accept. In that case, unreceptivity and unbelief are the root problem, and it is unlikely that any sign would be sufficient to change such a person's mind.

Robert Gundry: The condemnation of Jesus' persecutors at the Last Judgment stands as an encouragement to his persecuted disciples, who can expect like vindication.

II. (:43-45) THIS EVIL GENERATION HEADED FROM THE FRYING PAN INTO THE FIRE OF SEVERE JUDGMENT BECAUSE HUMANISTIC REFORMATION FAILS MISERABLY

Craig Blomberg: Jesus now returns to consider the incident that started this whole discussion, the exorcism of v. 22. He wants the man who was liberated, along with everyone else present, to realize that freedom from demon possession is not enough. Ownership by the devil must be replaced with ownership by Christ (cf. Rom 6:15-18). Otherwise one's release is only temporary. Moral reform without Christian commitment always remains inadequate. Jesus likens the situation to a house made ready for new occupants which still stands vacant. Squatters will soon move in. No person can live long without serving someone. Satan will always return to attack that which is left defenseless, and each success leads him to increasingly worse designs, whether, as here, to literal repossession by an even greater number of demons (the number seven may indicate completeness of possession) or with the more widespread degeneracy of repeated sin, which characteristically renders humans more insensitive to their guilt (cf. Rom 1:18-32). The "rest" the evil spirit seeks here contrasts sharply and ironically with the rest Christ offers (11:29) and links this controversy with the Sabbath controversies of 12:1-14. The "wicked generation" ties back in with v. 39 and is a uniquely Matthean addition. Matthew will vividly demonstrate the truth of vv. 43-45 by depicting the growing hostility against Jesus throughout the remainder of his narrative.

Charles Swindoll: What does this parable have to do with the hard-hearted scribes and Pharisees? The comparison is subtle but clear. The Pharisees had attempted a superficial reformation through strict religious observances, by external legislation and enforcement, and perhaps even by casting out demons through rites and rituals common in their day. They were law-abiding but unconverted. The resulting condition was worse than before because with their self-help approach to righteousness, they had deceived themselves into thinking they were actually clean and holy. This false righteousness brought self-deception and opened the door for an even more wicked state. It set them up for committing the unpardonable sin: the rejection of the Messiah and blasphemy against the Holy Spirit.

A. (:43) Humanistic Reformation Fails to Adequately Deal with Evil

"Now when the unclean spirit goes out of a man, it passes through waterless places, seeking rest, and does not find it."

John Nolland: No good parallel has been cited for the journeying in waterless places, but the imagery is probably based on the idea that the demons will move naturally in realms where conditions are antithetical to human well-being, and devoid of the blessing of God. We should probably understand that the demon unsuccessfully seeks transit-accommodation. It is of no interest to the flow of the story why this should be so. This is simply a suitable turn of events for turning the demon back on its tracks.

B. (:44) Humanistic Reformation Creates an Environment Conducive for Severe Relapse

“Then it says, ‘I will return to my house from which I came’; and when it comes, it finds it unoccupied, swept, and put in order.”

R. T. France: Their “liberation” has been rather through seeing and hearing in the ministry of Jesus a new power and orientation (summarized in the slogan “the kingship of heaven”) which has set them free to make a new beginning; but if they now fail to take the road of discipleship, they are in danger of relapsing into a condition worse than before. Half-hearted repentance without a new commitment will not last. The message reflects that of v. 30: if they are not positively “for” Jesus they will turn out in the end to be “against” him.

Grant Osborne: Jesus could be addressing especially the crowds here, who have taken a strict neutrality toward him, excited at his obvious authority but not willing to commit (see 12:30, “the one not with me is against me”). Yet Israel as a whole is certainly intended because of “this generation” in 12:45d, and the point is that in rejecting their Messiah, they are left empty and unprotected (primary thrust, with the crowds a secondary emphasis). Jesus’ ministry had cast out the uncleanness and readied “this generation” for a new, unprecedented time of plenty, but the people have rejected him and so are left devoid of content.

C. (:45) Humanistic Reformation Exchanges Temporary Relief for Long Term Escalation of Misery

1. Verdict = You End Up Worse Off

*“Then it goes, and takes along with it seven other spirits more wicked than itself, and they go in and live there;
and the last state of that man becomes worse than the first.”*

Richard Gardner: According to Matthew, Jesus has broken the grip of Satan in Israel’s life through casting out demons (cf. 12:28-29). But unless Israel aligns itself with God’s redemptive purpose, its final state will be more pathetic than was the case before Jesus appeared.

Grant Osborne: The number seven stresses completeness. This is a full contingent of demons.

2. Application = This Evil Generation Headed for an Awful Fate

“That is the way it will also be with this evil generation.”

John Nolland: Matthew provides a final sentence to focus the application on ‘this evil generation’. The words recall language from v. 39 (cf. vv. 41, 42) and indicate that this is a parable about those who are refusing to embrace what Jesus brings. They may have appreciated its immediate benefits but have kept themselves safely distant from its deeper challenges and larger significance. Their houses may have been tidied, but they remain empty; so an awful fate awaits them. Outside the story world it is not clear what the awful fate is that Matthew has in mind. It may be the judgment threatened in vv. 41-42, it may be judgment in history as anticipated in Mt. 24, or it may be something that is expected to operate more locally at the communal and personal level. Precision is not intended; warning is.

Donald Hagner: Matthew's added sentence οὐτως ἔσται καὶ τῆ γενεᾷ ταύτῃ τῆ πονηρᾷ, "thus it will be also for this evil generation," applies the parable to the unbelief and resistance Jesus has encountered primarily from the Pharisees. If we draw guidance from the context, the basic analogy is simple. This evil generation (cf. v 39) had experienced the powerful deeds of Jesus, which included demon exorcism, and to that extent had benefited. But there had been no repentance, no acceptance of and commitment to Jesus and his cause, and thus this generation would be as susceptible to the power of evil as ever; indeed, the judgment it would later experience would be far worse than when Jesus began his ministry. . .

The burden of this passage is in the implicit call to respond to Jesus. Those who do respond in faith and commitment need not worry about the return of demons, nor need they quaver at future, but temporary, setbacks from disease and even death itself. Those who do not respond in faith and commitment have only worse miseries to expect in the future.

III. (:46-50) BY CONTRAST, TRUE DISCIPLES PRIORITIZE SPIRITUAL FAMILY RELATIONSHIPS

John Nolland: The chapter climaxes with a challenge to the crowds to distance themselves from the Pharisaic stance which they have been witnessing and unite with the disciples of Jesus in doing the will of his Father, the content of which it is the burden of Jesus' ministry to make clear. The mention of Jesus' birth family allows 12:46-50 to function, along with 13:54-58, as a frame around the parables collection of 13:1-53.

R. T. France: This little cameo, apparently set inside a house, concludes the narrative section which has prepared the way for the discourse of ch. 13. Chapters 11-12 have revealed a wide variety of reactions to Jesus among his Galilean contemporaries, and the parables of ch. 13 will explain how such a divided response has come about. Most of the reactions noted, especially in ch. 12, have been hostile, but at the end of ch. 11 the mood was lightened by a brief glimpse of the "little ones" who have been able to perceive the truth (11:25-30), and now another ray of light concludes the section. As well as the seeds which have failed or are failing, there is also seed growing in good ground.

A. (:46-47) Limitation of Blood Family Relationships

1. (:46) Teaching Time Interrupted by Arrival of Family Members

"While He was still speaking to the multitudes, behold, His mother and brothers were standing outside, seeking to speak to Him."

D. A. Carson: The most natural way to understand "brothers" is that the term refers to sons of Mary and Joseph and thus to brothers of Jesus on his mother's side. To support the dogma of Mary's perpetual virginity, a notion foreign to the NT and to the earliest church fathers, Roman Catholic scholars have suggested that "brothers" refers either to Joseph's sons by an earlier marriage or to sons of Mary's sister, who had the same name (cf. McHugh, Mother of Jesus, 200ff.). Certainly "brothers" can have a wider meaning than male relatives (Ac 22:1); yet it is very doubtful whether such a meaning is valid here, for it raises insuperable problems.

Donald Hagner: The fact that no mention of Jesus' father is made implies that he was no longer alive.

Grant Osborne: Matthew links this closely to the preceding controversy by saying Jesus was “still (ἔτι) talking to the crowds” (another temporal genitive absolute, see 1:18, 20; 2:1) when his mother and brothers arrived. Out of the wreckage of the nation’s rejection of him, Jesus has forged a new kingdom community. The use of “look” (ἰδοῦ) three times in this pericope stresses the dynamic nature of the story.

Michael Wilkins: No reason is given for why his family wishes to speak to him. Mark indicates that his family wants to take control of Jesus and alter his ministry, because people think he is crazy (Mark 3:21; cf. John 7:5).

2. (:47) Teaching Moment to Address Priority of Spiritual Family

“And someone said to Him, ‘Behold, Your mother and Your brothers are standing outside seeking to speak to You.’”

J. Ligon Duncan: Notice how Jesus turns a common event into an opportunity to reflect upon spiritual truth. It’s a very standard question. Jesus, “Your mother and brothers are on the outside. They want to speak to you.” He turns that interruption into an opportunity to ask His audience to reflect on the far more important spiritual question, “Who is in the family of God? Who belongs as a child to God the Father? Who is in the family of faith?” He takes a common event to focus us on a very important spiritual lesson. And we ought to do that as well. It is one of the gifts that God has given us as believers to have a spiritual outlook on the world. And if we will not call on people to look at common things with spiritual eyes, who is going to?

B. (:48-50) Priority of Spiritual Family Relationships

1. (:48) Issue Raised Regarding Spiritual Family Relationships

“But He answered the one who was telling Him and said, ‘Who is My mother and who are My brothers?’”

D. A. Carson: Jesus’ searching question (v.48) and its remarkable answer (vv.49–50) in no way diminish his mother and brothers but simply give the priority to his Father and doing his will.

Walter Wilson: Jesus has already warned his followers that commitment to the messianic household (10:25) will bring them into conflict with both the “house” of Israel (10:6) and with members of their natural households (10:36), the latter including both parents and siblings (10:21, 35). Put differently, becoming his spiritual kin entails forfeiting the honor that accrues to one through conventional categories of birth and status, embracing instead an elective family as the source of personal identity and affective cohesion (cf. 19:29). The public exposure of tensions between the Messiah and members of his own family dramatizes this reconfiguration of status, even as it suggests how expectations governing relations between surrogate kin mirror those operative between biological kin.

Michael Wilkins: Jesus did not come to abolish the family, because he will continue to uphold the law that demands children to honor their father and mother (15:4). Instead, he stresses preeminence of a person’s commitment to Jesus and the kingdom of heaven above all other commitments. This will form a new spiritual family of disciples of Jesus.

2. (:49) Intimate Relationship with Spiritual Family Members

“And stretching out His hand toward His disciples, He said, ‘Behold, My mother and My brothers!’”

Craig Blomberg: Given the strong family ties in ancient Palestine, Jesus' attitude here would have proved as shocking as in 8:22 and 10:37 (on which see comments there). More positively he points to believers as people who should care for each other as if they were family members.

Grant Osborne: Spiritual roots are even deeper than genealogical roots, an incredible point in the society of that day that treasured genealogical lines.

J. Ligon Duncan: He's teaching us there, among other things, that our ties as Christians, our ties as believers, are more important even than family ties. We have a saying that 'blood is thicker than water,' and over and over in our culture and community, we find that to be a practical truth. But Jesus is saying here that those for whom He has shed blood have been brought into a family that is even closer than families of blood kin. The Lord Jesus is teaching us that spiritual ties are the most important ties that there are. And then He waves His arms towards His disciples and He says, "These are My mother and My brother."

3. (:50) Identification of True Disciples = Spiritual Family Members

"For whoever does the will of My Father who is in heaven, he is My brother and sister and mother."

R. T. France: While presumably all religious people, including the Pharisees and Jesus' family, would aim to "do the will of God," the phrase as used by Jesus, with the more relational title "my Father who is in heaven," clearly has a more specific focus on the sort of discipleship which he has outlined in chs. 5–7 and which was summed up as a "greater righteousness" than that of the scribes and Pharisees (5:20).

Robert Gundry: So in the midst of persecution Jesus' disciples may comfort and encourage themselves that they belong to the family to which he belongs, the family of his caring heavenly Father.

Leon Morris: Jesus is not saying that earthly familial ties are unimportant, only that they are not all-important. Doing the will of God is all-important.

Donald Hagner: The essence of discipleship is doing τὸ θέλημα τοῦ πατρὸς μου τοῦ ἐν οὐρανοῖς, "the will of my Father who is in heaven" (cf. 7:21, for the same phrase practically verbatim). The will of the Father is the righteousness taught by Jesus and is inseparable from the dawning of the kingdom and discipleship to Jesus.

Walter Wilson: Intimacy with Jesus is not a given, but is predicated upon obedience to the will (θέλημα) of the same Father to whom the Son himself owes obedience (26:42). This identification not only furnishes a theological foundation for reformulated relational ties (cf. 11:25–27) but also generates for participants specific practices and modes of behavior (cf. 6:9–10; 7:21; 18:14; 21:31).

Grant Osborne: Jesus alone knows the mind of the Father (11:27), so those rules for conduct are found in Jesus' teaching. We are at the heart of Matthew's gospel, where a life of faithfulness to God's will is the core responsibility of the kingdom people. The idea of God's guiding will is dynamic and especially related to Jesus' kingdom teaching in Matthew's gospel. Those who follow and keep these precepts are the family of God, Jesus' "brother and sister and mother."

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How am I embracing and applying the manifest truth that God has revealed to me?
- 2) Is the Holy Spirit at home in my heart as the change agent to cause me to grow in righteousness and in obeying the will of my heavenly father?
- 3) Why are self-reformation and self-help approaches so deceptively dangerous?
- 4) Does Christ have top priority in my life – even over my relationships with my closest family members and do I value fellowship with other believers?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Charles Swindoll: These snippets of the growing controversy surrounding Jesus’ teachings cover a lot of territory. A disingenuous request for a sign stemming from deep unbelief . . . a parable about evil spirits and the dangers of self-styled reform . . . a startling contrast between Jesus’ earthly family and His spiritual family. These episodes from Jesus’ ministry lead me to three crucial questions we ought to consider.

First, related to the Pharisees’ hypocritical request for a sign: Am I becoming a cynic? This is a chief sign of Pharisaism. . . Ask yourself, Have I changed over the last year because I’ve sat under the ministry of the Word. . .

Second, related to the deep-seated moralism and self-reform of the Pharisees, illustrated by the self-scrubbed demoniac: Am I relying on the Spirit’s work in my life to change my mind and heart from the inside, or am I engaging in mere behavior modification to conform to external standards? . . .

Third, related to prioritizing our relationship with Christ: Am I placing Christ first in my life, even above my earthly family?

David Thompson: THOSE WHO ARE CLOSELY RELATED TO JESUS CHRIST ARE THOSE WHO BELIEVE IN HIM AND NOT THOSE WHO LOOK FOR A SIGN FROM HIM.

Now I want you to notice how verse 38 begins with the adverb “then.” This connects us to the preceding context in which the scribes and Pharisees are telling people that Jesus Christ is satanic. Their goal is not to come to terms with truth; their goal is to discredit Him and to get rid of Him. Now there are three stinging messages that Christ sends to all around Him.

STINGING MESSAGE #1 – Those who seek for a sign are evil . 12:38-42

The scribes and Pharisees were sign-seekers. I want you to carefully notice how they identify Christ in verse 38—as “a teacher” (anarthrous construction, not articular). The Greek indicates that they saw Him as the character and quality of a teacher, not as “the” teacher of God. They are living a lie when they say, “If I could just see a sign, I would believe.” Christ had already performed many miracles and they absolutely refused to believe. Now carefully notice Christ’s response:

(Response #1) - Those who continually (present tense) seek a sign are evil and adulterous.

12:39a

This is how God views sign-seekers. Those who are not content with hearing and understanding the Word of God, but go to church to see some sensational sign or have some emotional experience are evil and adulterous.

(Response #2) - Those who are seeking a sign will not get one. 12:39b

Jesus said you can seek signs all you want, but I won’t give you one.

(Response #3) - The only sign any will get is the sign of Jonah. 12:39c-40

Now this is important news to Israel. Jonah is the only O.T. prophet who was given an assignment to go to a Gentile land to the capital of Assyria, who was dominating Israel, and preach to Nineveh. Before Jonah went to Nineveh to preach, he ended up in a great fish’s belly for three days and three nights. Jesus said if you want a sign, here it is: I will rise up from the dead in three days and I will take my program to the Gentiles. In other words, the sign to Israel, which is still operative to this day, is that Christ arose from the dead and the program of God went to the Gentiles.

(Response #4) - At the judgment, many Gentiles will condemn many from Israel. 12:41-42

Now there are two specific examples that Christ uses to bring home a sober point—you will be judged to hell as unbelievers by Gentiles who were believers: Gentile

Judge #1 - Israel will be judged by the Gentiles of Nineveh. 12:41

The people of Nineveh repented through preaching. When Jonah preached to Nineveh, the city repented. At the Great White Throne Judgment, those unbelievers of Israel will see those believers from Nineveh and the Israeli unbelievers will be condemned. A preacher far greater than Jonah was preaching—Jesus Christ. The Word was preaching the Word and it didn’t faze most in Israel. Gentile

Judge #2 - Israel will be judged by the Queen of Sheba. 12:42

An Arabian, Gentile queen from Sheba came to faith in the O.T. through the teachings of Solomon (I Kings 10:1-13; II Chron. 9:1-12). Jesus was far greater than Solomon and His teachings were much more profound and Israel rejected Him. Therefore, Gentiles would judge them.

STINGING MESSAGE #2 – Those who reject Christ are demonic . 12:43-45

Demons fled from the presence of Jesus Christ. However, those who did not believe in Christ would discover that eventually the demonic forces would come back sevenfold. The program of God has swung away from Israel today, but she is not responding to Jesus Christ. When the Tribulation occurs, demons will invade Israel and it will be a terrible time of persecution.

STINGING MESSAGE #3 – Those who are really related to Christ are those who believe in Christ. 12:46-50

We know that several of Christ's own family members thought He was out of His mind (Mark 3:21). We also know that many in His own family did not believe in Him before He was raised (John 7:5). Jesus said I'll tell you who my real family is; those that do my Father's will and believe in Me. The Father sent the Son to make it possible for the nation Israel to have the necessary righteousness to get into the kingdom. But the nation rejected Him. It is a hard thing to admit that you love faithful people of God more than your own brothers, sisters, mother or father, sons or daughters. But it is true. No religion or family relationship will make you right before God; only faith in Jesus Christ.

TEXT: Matthew 13:1-23

TITLE: GERMINATION OF THE KINGDOM -- INTRODUCTORY PARABLE OF THE SOWER AND THE SOILS

BIG IDEA:

VARYING RESPONSES TO THE WORD OF GOD HIGHLIGHT FRUITFULNESS AS THE KEY EVIDENCE OF GENUINE DISCIPLESHIP

INTRODUCTION:

Warren Wiersbe: This chapter records the events of a crisis day in the ministry of Jesus Christ. He knew that the growing opposition of the religious leaders would lead to His crucifixion. This fact He had to explain to His disciples. But their logical question would be, “What will happen to the kingdom about which we have been preaching?” That question is answered in this series of parables. So, He first explained the truth concerning the kingdom, and then later explained to them the facts about the cross.

Our Lord’s use of parables puzzled the disciples. He had used some parables in His teaching already, but on that day He gave a series of seven interrelated parables, then added an eighth. The word parable means “to cast alongside.” It is a story, or comparison, that is put alongside something else to help make the lesson clear. But these are not ordinary parables; Jesus called them “the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven” (Matt. 13:11). In the New Testament, a “mystery” is a spiritual truth understood only by divine revelation. It is a “sacred secret” known only to those “on the inside” who learn from the Lord and obey Him.

In this series of parables, Jesus explained the course of the gospel in the world. If Israel had received Him as King, the blessings would have flowed out from Jerusalem to the ends of the earth. But the nation rejected Him, and God had to institute a new program on earth. During this present age, “the kingdom of heaven” is a mixture of true and false, good and bad, as pictured in these parables. It is “Christendom,” professing allegiance to the King, and yet containing much that is contrary to the principles of the King.

Why did Jesus teach in parables? Two reasons were given:

- because of the sluggishness of the people (Matt. 13:10–17) and
- because it was prophesied in Psalm 78:2 (Matt. 13:34–35).

Jesus did not teach in parables to confuse or condemn the people. Rather, He sought to excite their interest and arouse their curiosity. These parables would give light to those with trusting, searching hearts. But they would bring darkness to the unconcerned and unrepentant.

John Walvoord: Chapter 13 faces the question, What will happen when the rejected king goes back to heaven and the kingdom promised is postponed until His second coming? The concept of a kingdom postponed must be understood as a postponement from the human side and not from the divine, as obviously God’s plans do not change. . .

This chapter, accordingly, does not only introduce a new subject and a new approach but also involves a new method of teaching, namely that of parables. . . As Tasker expresses it, “Jesus deliberately adopted the parabolic method of teaching at a particular stage in His ministry for the purpose of withholding further truth about Himself and the kingdom of heaven from the crowds, who had proved themselves to be deaf to his claims and irresponsible to His demands . . . From now onwards, when addressing the unbelieving multitude, He speaks only in parables (34), which he interprets to his disciples in private.

David Thompson: JESUS CHRIST USES PARABLES TO TEACH WHAT GOD'S PROGRAM WILL BECOME ON EARTH UNTIL HE COMES BACK AS JUDGE TO ULTIMATELY SET UP HIS KINGDOM.

If you read most commentators, they will suggest that there are seven parables in this chapter. . . However, if we carefully look at the chapter we discover that technically there are eight because verse 52 presents the "Householder."

In these parables, Jesus describes what will happen on earth in the arena of religion until He comes back to eventually establish His kingdom.

Daniel Doriani: Although the seed is the same, the results vary. The controlling factor is the character of the soils. The farmer does his work, but the results hinge on the nature of the soil on which the seed falls.

Walter Wilson: The action stops so that the audience can hear Jesus deliver another speech, this time employing figurative language to portray the profound—and often mysterious—impact that the arrival of the kingdom is having on the world. On a more specific level, the speech provides the audience with a series of pictures that explain the unresponsiveness Jesus has experienced from "the world" up to this point, the emphasis throughout falling on the dual images of contrast and separation. Accordingly, before beginning the discourse, Jesus is seen physically separating himself from the audience, sitting in a boat while the crowds stand on the shore. In the first part of the speech, acceptance of the kingdom message is likened to bearing fruit, while non-acceptance is visualized as different kinds of agricultural failure. Despite the lavish manner in which the farmer sows seed, three of the four soils yield no harvest, though the good soil seems to compensate for this series of setbacks by producing a bumper crop. Before describing the meaning of this imagery to the disciples, Jesus shows to them why he is using parables in the first place, that is, by describing the people he has been trying to reach as having closed ears and hardened hearts. He then shifts the viewer's attention to those who do hear and do see, namely, the disciples themselves, who are the beneficiaries of Jesus's ministry because they have been gifted with divine revelation. The interpretation of the imagery, then, reveals that it is to be interpreted symbolically, inasmuch as practically every detail of the description is assigned meaning. Jesus's final (and perhaps most important) point is that a great harvest awaits the disciples, thanks both to the work of the sower and the generosity of God, the ultimate source of all growth. . .

In the parable itself, the sowing of the seed has the effect of revealing the nature of the different kinds of soil upon which it falls, either good or bad. According to the parable's internal logic, the reason for success or failure is attributable neither to the sower nor to the seed, but entirely to the condition of the soil, which cannot be altered. By the same token, the soil is incapable of producing fruit on its own but for this relies on the initiative of the sower. Without his seed, even the good soil lies dormant. The fact that three of the parable's four scenarios report failure with respect to productivity communicates a pessimism that accords with the basic narrative trajectory observed in the previous section (chapters 11–12). The "sower" encounters mostly non-acceptance, though there are still some who produce “fruit” by obeying the will of their heavenly Father (cf. 12:50).

Van Parunak: The main purpose of the parable, revealed in the interpretation, is instructing those who sow what they should expect in their ministry. We are not to be discouraged because of lack of response. The nature of the field in which we labor is that it is beset by birds, stones, and thorns, and we are to expect this full range of responses.

(:1-3a) TRANSITION IN TEACHING APPROACH

A. (:1-2) Teaching Environment

“On that day Jesus went out of the house, and was sitting by the sea.

2 And great multitudes gathered to Him, so that He got into a boat and sat down, and the whole multitude was standing on the beach.”

Michael Wilkins: Local tradition locates the place of this discourse at a distinctive inlet called the “Cove of the Parables.” It lies approximately a mile (1.5 km) southwest of Capernaum, halfway to the traditional site of the Sermon on the Mount near Tabgha. The land slopes down like a natural, horseshoe-shaped amphitheater around the cove, providing environmental acoustics for Jesus’ voice to have carried over one hundred meters from the boat to a crowd of perhaps hundreds gathered on the shore. Israeli scientists have tested the acoustics in modern times and found them to be realistic for Jesus’ parables to have been heard.

John MacArthur: “On the same day, He went out of the house and He sat by the seaside.” Now, I know that’s just a geographical footnote, and I know it doesn’t convey any profound spiritual truth.

And I suppose I stopped at that point and said to myself, “Why is all that there? Why does it even bother to say that. It doesn’t even really matter?” You could have started in verse 3, “He spoke many things unto them in parables.” You don’t even need one and 2, because 1 says, “He went out of the house and sat at the seaside,” and 2 says, “Great multitudes were gathered together unto Him, so that He went into a boat and sat, and the whole multitude stood on the shore.” Is that important?

Well, I think it’s important if for no other reason than just as an interesting way to remember the transition here. If we can extend ourselves a little bit and use this as an illustration or a symbol...though that is not its purpose or intention...it can serve as an illustration for us. We could liken the house to what group of people? Israel.

And throughout Scripture the sea is likened to what group of people? Gentiles. And we can remember the chapter’s transitional nature by remembering that as Jesus went out of the house and to the sea, at this point He turns from Israel to the Gentiles. Something new is happening. He’s left the house. This serves as an illustration, a symbol of a sort.

B. (:3a) Teaching Methodology = Parables

“And He spoke many things to them in parables, saying,”

Michael Wilkins: Parables have distinctively different purposes for the crowd and for the disciples. Jesus has already given several parables, but this is the first time that Matthew uses the term “parable” (parabolē). Underlying the term parable is the Hebrew māšāl, which refers to a wide spectrum of ideas based on comparison or analogy, including by-word, proverb, wisdom sayings, and story. As used by Jesus, the parable is a way of communicating truth through a narrative analogy in the service of moral or spiritual argument. They are often deeply, even frustratingly, perplexing. The analogies or comparisons Jesus uses to make his point come from everyday experiences, but they press the listener to search for the intended meaning. That is why in popular preaching Jesus’ parables are often referred to as “an earthly story with a heavenly meaning.”

Daniel Doriani: They are like jokes: they catch us up in a story, then spring a surprise, a punch line, at the end. They are like illustrations: they make a lesson memorable by engaging the imagination. They are like allegories: the surface meaning may not be its deepest or final meaning.

Walter Wilson: The reader of chapter 13 knows that Jesus’s words are intended not only to instruct but also to divide. From this perspective, the discourse can be seen to blend elements of wisdom discourse, with its emphasis on fruitfulness of speech and action, with elements of apocalyptic discourse, with its emphasis on the problem of evil, the revelation of transcendent mysteries, and the “gathering” of God’s holy people.

John Walvoord: The first paragraph does not have the precise formula of the later paragraphs: “The kingdom of heaven is likened unto,” but is, rather, an introductory parable, serving as a basis for all that follows.

Van Parunak: Parables do not simplify the truth. They are actually a means of hiding the truth from those who are not really interested, and forcing the hearer to think more closely about what is being said. This role of parables explains why this is the first time Matthew uses the term of our Lord’s teaching. Matthew reserves the term for enigmatic sayings that the Lord begins to employ at the Great Schism, when the Pharisees have made up their minds to destroy him.

I. (:3b-9) PARABLE OF THE SOWER AND THE SOILS

(:3b) Prerequisite to the Variety of Responses to the Sowing of the Seed

“Behold, the sower went out to sow;”

The bottom line is that there will be no response to the gospel message apart from the sowing of the seed of the Word of God. This must be the starting point.

Michael Wilkins: Jesus’ listeners are well aware of farming techniques, because most everyone took care of his own fields and gardens or worked the fields of his landlord. We are not certain of the type of seed that the sower (NIV “farmer”) was sowing, but we may think of wheat to help illustrate the scene, since wheat was one of the most important crops in Israel, and it appears as the subject of a later parable (13:24–30).

A. (:4) Hard Hearts -- Paved Road – Word Snatched Away

“and as he sowed, some seeds fell beside the road, and the birds came and ate them up.”

Michael Wilkins: Seed was sown “broadcast” style by scattering it in all directions by hand while walking up and down the field. The average rate of sowing wheat varies from twenty pounds per acre (22.5 kilograms per hectare) upward, which allowed for wasted seed. Fields were apparently plowed both before the seed was sown and after, plowing across the original furrows to cover the seeds with soil. The desired depth of plowing under wheat seed was usually one to three inches (2.5 to 7.5 centimetres), but it could be less in certain areas where the topsoil was shallow. In the rabbinic listing of the thirty-nine main classes of work, plowing follows sowing (m. Šabb. 7:2). It was common for seed to be scattered on the hard paths that surrounded the fields. Birds would swoop down as the farmer walked on and eat the seed.

John MacArthur: Now, in Palestine which was just literally crisscrossed with fields, the fields were usually long, narrow strips and men could’ cultivate those fields. The strips were separated from other strips and other fields by paths, the paths being about three feet or so wide, narrow paths.

Those were used by the farmer to get in between the fields to get to whatever field he wanted to reach. They were also used by the travelers who were going from one part of the country to another. We find even in Matthew chapter 12, that the Lord Jesus Christ and His disciples were walking through the fields of grain. And no doubt they were walking on those little paths that were for that purpose. There were no fences around the fields, there were no walls surrounding the fields, just these little narrow paths for travelers and for the farmer to get around in his area.

And no doubt this is what the Lord has in mind when He talks about the wayside. The dirt would then be packed down, beaten hard, uncultivated, never turned over, never loosened. And by all of the continual pounding and pounding, and because of the dryness of that part of the world it would be compacted to the point where it was like a road. It was as hard as pavement. . .

God does not call on us to create our own message. God says, “Take that which has already been sown and sow it again.” We are not to produce a new supply of information. We are to build upon the revelation of the Word of God and we are utterly dependent, then, upon divine revelation as much as we are dependent on God creating the seed in the first place which reproduces itself and brings to us the fruit that we eat even today. So, the seed is the Word. The seed is the Word.

And may I just add as a footnote, that the Word encompasses the written word but inside of it is the living word. It’s as if the Bible is the husk and the living Christ is the seed within the husk. So, initially, it’s Christ sowing the Word of God containing the seed, which is Himself. He is both sower and seed. We are the sowers who sow the seed. The husk is the Word of God and in it contains the life of the Lord Jesus Christ.

B. (:5-6) Shallow Hearts -- Rocky Places – No Root – Superficial Interest Only

“And others fell upon the rocky places, where they did not have much soil; and immediately they sprang up, because they had no depth of soil. 6 But when the sun had risen, they were scorched; and because they had no root, they withered away.”

Michael Wilkins: Conditions for farming in many areas of Israel were not favorable. The hardships that many people experienced included insufficient amounts of water and soil. The terrain in most cases was uneven and rocky, with only thin layers of soil covering the rock. Seed that landed on this shallow soil could begin to germinate, but it couldn't put down deep roots to collect what little moisture was in that parched thin layer of earth. Sprouting seed would soon wither and die in the hot sun (13:6). James gives a fitting commentary: "For the sun rises with scorching heat and withers the plant; its blossom falls and its beauty is destroyed" (James 1:11).

John MacArthur: And so right beneath the soil is this hard rock bed and as the seed falls in and begins to germinate and tries to shoot its roots down, they hit the rock bed. They have nowhere to go. All of the moisture and the sun that's there generates life upward so they spring up, probably higher than the other grain and the other seed which is going both ways and using its energy to go both ways. This flourishes immediately, but when the sun comes out, it dies because its roots are not strong enough to maintain moisture or to find moisture, and the rock bed hinders them and it dies in the heat of the summer. . .

This is the person who hears the Word and immediately with joy receives it. And the indication is that there's not a lot of thought involved. It's just sort of a quick response, a wow, you know. It's sort of emotional, sort of euphoria, sort of instant excitement without counting the cost, without understanding the real significance.

C. (:7) Distracted Hearts -- Thorns – Word Choked Out

"And others fell among the thorns, and the thorns came up and choked them out."

D. (:8) Receptive Hearts -- Good Soil – Fruitful Disciple

"And others fell on the good soil, and yielded a crop, some a hundredfold, some sixty, and some thirty."

(:9) Exhortation to Receptivity

"He who has ears, let him hear."

Donald Hagner: The phrase "who has ears" refers to a receptivity concerning the underlying truth of the parable. It amounts to an appeal to hear positively and to respond appropriately. The same exhortation is found verbatim in v 43 and 11:15.

Van Parunak: Who hath ears to hear, let him hear. -- Here is our first clue that the Lord does not intend his words to be understood by all. He is picking up a consistent theme throughout the Scriptures, that begins in the Pentateuch, runs through the prophets and the Psalms, and extends into the Revelation, where it ends each of the letters to the seven churches. As with other cases of such repetition throughout Scripture, it is worthwhile to trace the development of the idea.

The command to hear lies at the root of God's covenant with Israel. Through Moses, God gave Israel their basic confession, which they were to write upon the doorposts of their homes and bind upon their foreheads and their hands, begins with this central command:

Deu 6:4 Hear, O Israel: The LORD our God is one LORD: 5 And thou shalt love the LORD thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might.

This command is called the Shema, which is the Hebrew word with which it begins, the command "Hear." The Lord alludes to it repeatedly in this chapter.

Note two features of this command. They are to hear attentively, and they are to love the Lord exclusively. If you love the Lord with all of your heart, all of your soul, and all of your might, there isn't any part of you that's left to love anything else.

Now let's recall two characteristics of the Babylonian captivity, when Israel ceased to be a nation. The history of Israel is one of repeated failures to hear, and when the major prophets come to warn of the coming captivity, each of them speaks of ears that do not hear. Jeremiah and Ezekiel in particular use a phrase very like our Lord's (chart):

Jer 5:21 Hear now this, O foolish people, and without understanding; which have eyes, and see not; which have ears, and hear not:

Eze 12:2 Son of man, thou dwellest in the midst of a rebellious house, which have eyes to see, and see not; they have ears to hear, and hear not: for they are a rebellious house.

So the nation violated the first part of Deut 6:4. They did not hear. They also violated the second part, the command to love the Lord alone. The captivity results not only from a failure to hear, but also from Israel's infatuation with pagan gods, going all the way back to the golden calf in the wilderness, the failures in the book of Judges, and Solomon's support of his wives' deities. The captivity was a graphic enforcement of the people's choice of other gods:

Jer 16:10 And it shall come to pass, when thou shalt shew this people all these words, and they shall say unto thee, Wherefore hath the LORD pronounced all this great evil against us? ... 11 Then shalt thou say unto them, Because your fathers have forsaken me, saith the LORD, and have walked after other gods, and have served them, and have worshipped them, ... 13 Therefore will I cast you out of this land into a land that ye know not, neither ye nor your fathers; and there shall ye serve other gods day and night; where I will not shew you favour.

Because they chose to serve other gods, the Lord put them in a totally pagan environment where they could experience the depravity of those gods to the full.

I've called your attention to two features of the eighth century prophets: their reference to the ear that can't hear, and the idolatry against which they preached and that ultimately led the people into the captivity of which they warn. There is a connection between them. We have seen that already from the Shema, which warns against them both. This same connection is made evident in scriptures that were probably written after the captivity.

The fifth book of the Psalter (107-150) contains many psalms that by their content give evidence of being written during or after the exile. The most notable example is Psalm 137, Psa 137:1 By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion.

Two of these psalms, 115 and 135, draw a striking connection between idols and ears that can't hear. Here is the passage in Psalm 115; 135:15-18 is very similar.

Psa 115:4 Their idols are silver and gold, the work of men's hands. 5 They have mouths, but they speak not: eyes have they, but they see not: 6 They have ears, but they hear not: noses have they, but they smell not: 7 They have hands, but they handle not: feet have they, but they walk not: neither speak they through their throat. 8 They that make them are like unto them; so is every one that trusteth in them.

These Psalms contain a very deep insight. If we have made up our mind to follow our own idols, we are not willing to understand the Lord's commands. It's not so much that we cannot hear, as that we will not hear. Spiritual hearing problems can often be traced to a divided loyalty, to something else in our lives that we are not willing to give up, that is pulling us away from the Lord.

Our Lord uses the exhortation of v. 9 three times in Matthew: here, again in v. 43 after the parable of the tares, and once previously in 11:15 after describing John the Baptist as Elijah. The next time we see it is in the Revelation. It concludes the warnings to each of the seven churches:

Rev 2:7 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; [also 2:11, 17, 29; 3:6, 13, 22]

When we remember that these are Gentile churches, planted in idolatrous communities, the warning is particularly appropriate. Believers in an unbelieving world are particularly susceptible to being seduced by the idols worshipped by their friends and neighbors, and need to remember their first loyalty. The final occurrence is when the beast out of the sea appears in ch. 13. Again, the encouragement to hear is in contrast with the worship of a false deity:

Rev 13:8 And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. 9 If any man have an ear, let him hear.

Not everyone who hears words actually understands what they say. The response to the Lord in Matt 12 suggests that many who might be thought most likely to understand, actually are dull of hearing. And the OT background of the Lord's warning in 13:9 suggests a reason for this hardness: pre-commitment to an alternative god, in this case their own pride and prestige. Here is a sober warning to us not to confuse knowledge of the words of Scripture with understanding and obedience.

II. (:10-17) PURPOSE OF PARABLES IN GENERAL – TIED TO THE MYSTERIES OF THE KINGDOM

A. (:10) What's the Point?

“And the disciples came and said to Him, ‘Why do You speak to them in parables?’”

Donald Hagner: Parables function in a dual manner. For those who have responded positively to Jesus' proclamation of the kingdom, the parables convey further insight and knowledge, while for those who have rejected Jesus and his message, the parables have the effect of only darkening the subject further. Thus belief and commitment lead to further knowledge; unbelief leads to further ignorance.

B. (:11-12) Purpose of Both Revealing and Concealing at the Same Time

1. (:11) Sovereign Election Reflected in Revelation and Illumination

“And He answered and said to them, ‘To you it has been granted to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it has not been granted.’”

John Walvoord: Mysteries . . . refers to truth that was not revealed in the Old Testament but is revealed in the New Testament. . . It is not necessarily a reference to a truth difficult to understand, but rather to truths that can be understood only on the basis of divine revelation.

The Old Testament reveals, in clear terms, the earthly reign of Christ when he comes as King to reign on the throne of David (which truths are not mysteries). Matthew 13 introduces a different form of the kingdom, namely the present spiritual reign of the King during the period He is physically absent from the earth, prior to His second coming. The mysteries of the kingdom, accordingly, deal with the period between the first and second advent of Christ and not the millennial kingdom which will follow the second coming.

Homer Kent: The glories of the Messianic reign were clearly sketched in the OT. But the rejection of Messiah and the interval between his first and second comings was not understood. These parables describe the strange form of the Kingdom while the King is absent, during which time the Gospel is preached and a spiritual nucleus is developed for the establishment of the Messianic reign (Co. 1:13; Mt 25:34).

2. (:12) Receptivity / Accountability Tied to Divine Initiative in Revealing / Concealing

“For whoever has, to him shall more be given, and he shall have an abundance; but whoever does not have, even what he has shall be taken away from him.”

C. (:13) Purpose of Veiling the Truth

“Therefore I speak to them in parables; because while seeing they do not see, and while hearing they do not hear, nor do they understand.”

Daniel Doriani: Jesus says he veils his truth from his foes as punishment for their unbelief (13:13). Jesus speaks in parables because seeing they do not see and hearing they do not hear and understand. That is, because they failed to heed the evidence they had, Jesus’ parables now hide the word, taking it away from people even as they stand before Jesus.

Amos says it this way: “The days are coming,” declares the Lord, “when I will send a famine through the land—not a famine of food or a thirst for water, but a famine of hearing the words of the LORD” (Amos 8:11). It is an acute judgment for God to remove his word from people who have heard it and rejected it. They are left with the silence of God.

D. (:14-15) Prophetic Support from Isaiah

“And in their case the prophecy of Isaiah is being fulfilled, which says, ‘You will keep on hearing, but will not understand; And you will keep on seeing, but will not perceive; 15 For the heart of this people has become dull, And with their ears they scarcely hear, And they have closed their eyes Lest they should see with their eyes, And hear with their ears, And understand with their heart and return, And I should heal them.’”

E. (:16-17) Purpose of Blessing Believing Disciples with the Mysteries of the Kingdom

1. (:16) Receptivity of Kingdom Mysteries = Sign of Divine Blessing

“But blessed are your eyes, because they see; and your ears, because they hear.”

2. (:17) Revelation Coupled with Illumination = Blessing of Great Privilege

“For truly I say to you, that many prophets and righteous men desired to see what you see, and did not see it; and to hear what you hear, and did not hear it.”

III. (:18-23) PARABLE OF THE SOWER AND THE SOILS INTERPRETED

(:18) Exhortation to Receptivity

“Hear then the parable of the sower.”

A. (:19) Hard Hearts -- Paved Road – Word Snatched Away

“When anyone hears the word of the kingdom, and does not understand it, the evil one comes and snatches away what has been sown in his heart. This is the one on whom seed was sown beside the road.”

B. (:20-21) Shallow Hearts -- Rocky Places – No Root – Superficial Interest Only

“And the one on whom seed was sown on the rocky places, this is the man who hears the word, and immediately receives it with joy; 21 yet he has no firm root in himself, but is only temporary, and when affliction or persecution arises because of the word, immediately he falls away.”

C. (:22) Distracted Hearts -- Thorns – Word Choked Out

“And the one on whom seed was sown among the thorns, this is the man who hears the word, and the worry of the world, and the deceitfulness of riches choke the word, and it becomes unfruitful.”

John MacArthur: “And the care of this age –” Worldliness, folks – “and the deceitfulness of riches –” which is the heart and soul of worldliness. Living for the mundane, living for the things of this world, the cares of this age. Your career, your house, your car, your job, your wardrobe, your prestige, your looks.

D. (:23) Receptive Hearts -- Good Soil – Fruitful Disciple

“And the one on whom seed was sown on the good soil, this is the man who hears the word and understands it; who indeed bears fruit, and brings forth, some a hundredfold, some sixty, and some thirty.”

J. Ligon Duncan: There is a final soil that the Lord Jesus speaks of and it is the only soil which is believing. Don't be fooled! There are people who will preach this parable as if it describes three kinds of Christians and one kind of unbeliever. Don't you believe it. The Lord Jesus Christ has already defined for you what a believer is: “One who does the will of Him who sent Me.” And in this final soil, in verse 8 and verse 23, we see a fruitful heart. This is the person who hears and obeys and lives and blesses others by the kingdom message. One thing and one thing only distinguishes the good ground, the good soil, from the rest: fruitfulness.

John Walvoord: As this parable makes plain, there is no anticipating in the present age that there will be universal reception of the truth, as postmillenarians teach. Most of those who hear the message of the kingdom will reject it. Some, however, will receive the message, cherish it in their heart, and believe in the truth of the kingdom. This first parable establishes the basic character of the present age, awaiting the return of the rejected King. The age will include some who believe, many who will not believe.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) How can Jesus justify hiding the truth from certain types of individuals or groups by couching His teaching in parables when He could have presented the same concepts in a more straightforward format?
- 2) How actively are you involved in sowing the seed of God's Word after the pattern of Jesus?
- 3) What should our expectation be in terms of what type of response we should encounter?
- 4) What types of things are distracting me from fully embracing and applying God's truth?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Warren Wiersbe: The seven parables describe for us the spiritual course of “the kingdom of heaven” in this present age. In them we see three stages of spiritual development.

1. THE BEGINNING OF THE KINGDOM (13:1–9, 18–23)

The parable of the sower does not begin with “The kingdom of heaven is like” because it describes how the kingdom begins. It begins with the preaching of the Word, the planting of the seed in the hearts of people. When we say, “Let me plant this thought in your mind,” we express the idea of this parable. The seed is God's Word; the various soils represent different kinds of hearts; and the varied results show the different responses to the Word of God. Jesus explained this parable so there is no doubt of its meaning.

Why compare God's Word to seed? Because the Word is “living and powerful” (Heb. 4:12 SCO). Unlike the words of men, the Word of God has life in it, and that life can be imparted to those who will believe. The truth of God must take root in the heart, be cultivated, and be permitted to bear fruit. It is shocking to realize that three-fourths of the seed did not bear fruit. Jesus did not describe an age of great harvest, but one in which the Word would be rejected. He was not impressed with the “great multitudes” that followed Him, for He knew that most of the people would not receive His Word within and bear fruit.

Fruit is the test of true salvation (Matt. 7:16). This would include holiness (Rom. 6:22), Christian character (Gal. 5:22–23), good works (Col. 1:10), winning others to Christ (Rom. 1:13), sharing what we have (Rom. 15:25–28), and praising God (Heb. 13:15). If a plant is to bear fruit, it must be rooted in soil and exposed to sunshine.

In the parable, the sun represents persecution that comes because of the Word. Persecution helps believers grow. But the sunshine will kill a plant with no roots. This explains why some “believers” do not last: Their faith was weak, their understanding was meager, and their decision was not sincere. It is possible to “believe” and yet not be saved (John 2:23–25). Unless there is fruit in the life, there is not saving faith in the heart.

Nineteen times in Matthew 13 we find the word hear. The parable of the sower is found in the first three gospels, and in each one, the closing admonition is different. It is important that we hear God's Word, because "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God" (Rom. 10:17). Jesus said, "Who hath ears to hear" (Matt. 13:9), "Take heed what ye hear" (Mark 4:24 my emphasis), and "Take heed ... how ye hear" (Luke 8:18, my emphasis).

2. OPPOSITION TO THE KINGDOM (Matt. 13:24–43)

Satan opposes the kingdom by trying to snatch the Word from hearts (Matt. 13:4, 19). But when that fails, he has other ways of attacking God's work. These three parables reveal that Satan is primarily an imitator: He plants false Christians, he encourages a false growth, and he introduces false doctrine.

The tares—false Christians (vv. 24–30, 36–43). Satan cannot uproot the plants (true Christians), so he plants counterfeit Christians in their midst. In this parable, the good seed is not the Word of God. It represents people converted through trusting the Word. The field is not human hearts; the field is the world. Christ is sowing true believers in various places that they might bear fruit (John 12:23–26). But, wherever Christ sows a true Christian, Satan comes and sows a counterfeit.

We must beware of Satan's counterfeits. He has counterfeit Christians (2 Cor. 11:15) who believe a counterfeit gospel (Gal. 1:6–9). He encourages a counterfeit righteousness (Rom. 10:1–3), and even has a counterfeit church (Rev. 2:9). At the end of the age, he will produce a counterfeit Christ (2 Thess. 2:1–12).

We must also stay awake to make sure that Satan's ministers do not get into the true fellowship and do damage (2 Peter 2; 1 John 4:1–6). It is when God's people go to sleep that Satan works. Our task is not to pull up the false, but to plant the true. (This does not refer to discipline within the local church.) We are not detectives but evangelists! We must oppose Satan and expose his lies. But we must also sow the Word of God and bear fruit in the place where He has planted us.

What will happen to the tares? God will gather them together and burn them. It is interesting to see that some of this "bundling" is already going on as various religious groups merge and strive for union. Spiritual unity among true Christians is one thing, but religious uniformity among mere professing Christians is quite another. It is difficult to tell the false from the true today, but at the end of the age, the angels will separate them.

The mustard seed—false growth (vv. 31–32). In the East, the mustard seed symbolizes something small and insignificant. It produces a large plant, but not a "tree" in the strictest sense. However, the plant is large enough for birds to sit in the branches.

Since Jesus did not explain this parable, we must use what He did explain in the other parables to find its meaning. The birds in the parable of the sower represented Satan (Matt. 13:19). Passages like Daniel 4:12 and Ezekiel 17:23 indicate that a tree is a symbol of a world power. These facts suggest that the parable teaches an abnormal growth of the kingdom of heaven, one that makes it possible for Satan to work in it. Certainly "Christendom" has become a worldwide power with a complex organization of many branches. What started in a humble manner today boasts of material possessions and political influences.

Some make this parable teach the worldwide success of the gospel. But that would contradict what Jesus taught in the first parable. If anything, the New Testament teaches a growing decline in the ministry of the gospel as the end of the age draws near.

The leaven—false doctrine (v. 33). The mustard seed illustrates the false outward expansion of the kingdom, while the leaven illustrates the inward development of false doctrine and false living. Throughout the Bible, leaven is a symbol of evil. It had to be removed from the Jewish homes during Passover (Ex. 12:15–19; 13:7). It was excluded from the sacrifices (Ex. 34:25), with the exception of the loaves used at the Feast of Pentecost (Lev. 23:15–21). But there the loaves symbolized Jews and Gentiles in the church, and there is sin in the church.

Jesus used leaven to picture hypocrisy (Luke 12:1), false teaching (Matt. 16:6–12), and worldly compromise (Matt. 22:16–21). Paul used leaven to picture carnality in the church (1 Cor. 5:6–8) as well as false doctrine (Gal. 5:9). Sin is like leaven (yeast): It quietly grows, it corrupts, and it “puffs up” (1 Cor. 4:18–19; 5:2; 8:1). It would seem that making the growth of the leaven a picture of the spread of the gospel throughout the world would violate the meaning of this important symbol. It would also contradict the other parables.

Satan has worked hard to introduce false doctrine and false living into the ministry of the Word of God. From the very early days of the church, true believers have battled false doctrine and hypocrisy. How sad it is that some churches and schools that were once true to the Word have turned from the truth to fables. “Prove all things; hold fast that which is good” is sound counsel (1 Thess. 5:21).

The kingdom of heaven began with the sowing of the Word of God in the hearts of men. Much of the seed did not bear fruit, but some was fruitful. Satan opposed the work of God by sowing counterfeit Christians, by encouraging a false growth, and by introducing false doctrine. It would seem that Satan is winning! But the test is at the end of the age, not during the age.

3. THE OUTCOME OF THE KINGDOM (13:44–50)

At the close of this age, God will have three peoples: the Jews (the hidden treasure), the church (the pearl), and the saved Gentile nations who will enter into the kingdom (the dragnet).

John MacArthur: Kingdom Parables

In chapters 8 to 10 you find the credentials of the King. And there are His miracles, three chapters full of miracles. They are the prophesied credentials, as again and again He proves Himself to be the King in His supernatural power. And running parallel with His credentials in chapters 8, 9 and 10 is a mounting, ascending rejection. It’s a very strange situation. The greater the evidence that He is the King, the greater the rejection, which shows the profound blindness of the people.

Finally, you come to chapter 11 and Jesus denounces the sinful nation of Israel for rejecting Him. And He promises them severe judgment, then closes chapter 11 with an invitation. “Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.” So, out of the message of judgment comes again the message of grace, an invitation. And then, when you come to chapter 12, rejection reaches its climax and the pronouncement of judgment reaches its climax as well. Their final rejection is summed up in the fact that they accuse Jesus of being Satanic. And Jesus then pronounces a final judgment on the leaders and says, “You’re beyond the point of being forgiven.”

But even chapter 12 closes with another invitation. Verse 50, “For whosoever shall do the will of My Father who is in heaven, the same is My brother and sister and mother.” And what was the will of the Father in heaven? Very clearly the Father had said, “This is My beloved Son, hear ye Him.” And whoever recognized Jesus as the Son of God and whoever heard His message would come into an intimate relationship with Jesus Christ. So, Christ has been proven to be the King. The people have rejected Him as the King. He has pronounced judgment on them and yet offers an invitation to whoever will believe.

So as you approach chapter 13, the die is cast. Israel has rejected the King. Israel, therefore, has rejected the kingdom because you cannot separate the kingdom from the King. For centuries they had awaited the Messiah. For centuries they had awaited the establishment of God’s kingdom on earth. They had awaited the times of refreshing, the restoration, the granting back of the glory and the blessing that was man’s before the fall. And when it was offered to them, they refused it and they lost it in that generation. And so, as you approach chapter 13, you enter a new dimension, a new perspective in the ministry of Christ. . .

And so as you come to chapter 13, you can see the shadow of the cross looming in the background. Already in chapter 12 verse 14, they had sought to destroy Him. They had reached the point of wanting only to kill Him. They have rejected the King. They have rejected His kingdom. Now, the question that immediately comes into my mind and in the mind of any intelligent reader or any thoughtful reader is this.

If Jesus came to offer the kingdom, if Jesus came to bring His kingdom to earth, to reign and to rule and to establish that which was promised, and they refused Him and refused His kingdom, what then happened to the kingdom? What happens now? And that is exactly the question answered by chapter 13. It tells us what is going to happen. . .

That’s why Christ is coming a second time, to bring the kingdom that was refused the first time. He came and His message was this, “Repent for the kingdom is at hand.” And the message of John the Baptist, His forerunner, was the same. “Repent for the kingdom is at hand.” And the message of the apostles, chapter 10, verse 7, was the same. The kingdom of God. They were preaching the kingdom, the kingdom, the kingdom. And the people said no to the King and no to the kingdom and the kingdom therefore was postponed.

You say, “Well, why didn’t God just eliminate it altogether?” Because God made a promise to Israel and God keeps His promises. God is a God of His Word. . .

But what happens in the middle? What happens between now and then? This is the period that some theologians have called “The Parenthesis.” Some have called it “The Interim.” Some have called it the “Interregnum.” But it is a period that is not seen in the Old Testament. And so, Jesus calls it the mystery. That is that which was hidden from time past.

They didn’t see this period of time. That’s why you have to have chapter 13 because they had no teaching on what it would be like. And so, in chapter 13, you have a series of eight parables from verse 1 on to verse 52, and in those parables...listen now...Jesus describes the interim period. He describes that parenthesis in which we live. We’re in that period. And that is what makes this so profound for us, because if we can understand what Jesus says about this period, then we can understand how to be about doing what He wants done in this period, you see? . . .

There are two basic aspects of God's kingdom, and you need to understand these at the very beginning. First, is God's universal kingdom, and that's very simple to understand. That means God rules everything and everyone forever. He rules everything and everyone forever. He is the sovereign, He is the creator, He is the sustainer, He is the beginning and the end of all things. He dominates all things, He rules over everything and everyone forever. . .

But then there's a second aspect of God's kingdom. And I suppose that Alva McClain has given it a title that's as good as any. I've searched my own mind for a better one and haven't found one. Let me use his term. He calls it the "mediatorial" kingdom. That is it is mediated. It is not the direct rule of God; it is mediated through some other agency, through some other individual or individuals. And it refers to God's rule on earth. It is directly referring to God's rule on earth. . .

And this is the principle that you have to keep in mind as you get into Matthew 13. That the kingdom of God, mediated today, as we're living in this interim period, this time of the mystery kingdom, as at other times in the kingdom will encompass the true and the false. And some of the sons of the kingdom and some of the branches that attach themselves are going to go to hell, see. Because, there was no real life there. There was no real subjection there to the King. Now then, you understand some very basic things about the kingdom. And this is what is in Matthew's mind as we come to chapter 13. He will show us the character of the kingdom as it will exist in this interim period in which we live. . .

The period in which we live is also called the church age; it is synonymous with the church age. We are the unique mystery of this period, and that is defined for us rather explicitly by the apostle Paul in Ephesians 3. He says, "This is the mystery which in other ages was not made known to the sons of men, is now revealed to the holy Apostles and prophets by the Spirit, that the Gentiles would be fellow heirs and of the same body and partakers of the promises in Christ by the gospel."

In other words, the mystery of this age is that Jew and Gentile would constitute a new body, a new identity unknown. And that is the church. The church is the body of Christ, isn't it? Made up of Jew and Gentile. That was not seen in the Old Testament. That was hidden from them. So there's a sense in which this is the mystery age. This is the kingdom but it is also the church age.

Now, having said that, we must say that the kingdom is not the same as the church, and the church is not the same as the kingdom in this sense. The kingdom was before the church and the kingdom concept goes beyond the church, but for this period of time they are one and the same. .

1) The plan (:3) of our Lord was to speak in parables.

Reasons parables are effective:

- they make truth concrete
- they make truth portable = allow truth to be carried away in your mind
- they make truth interesting
- they make truth personally discoverable

2) The purpose (:10) -- They are to reveal and they are to what? Conceal. To some they make truth clear; to others they make it even more unclear. . .

Jesus says, "I'm going to show you mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, the secrets never revealed to anybody. But they're given to you to know. But not to them because they don't accept the King." And so, the Lord then unfolds and hides at the same time. Look at verse 12, "For whosoever hath, -" and here's the principle that He uses – "For whosoever hath, to him shall be given and he shall have more abundance." . . .

You see, if you live up to that light which Christ gives, then more light comes. If you refuse that light, then deeper darkness ensues. And the parables of the servants and the talents reiterate this again and again. Take away what he has and give it to one who has rightly responded to Me. And so, He says even what they have they will lose.

3) The promise (:35) – God is sovereign and His program is on schedule.

Van Parunak: It has been plausibly suggested that the three bad soils correspond to violations of the three components of human psychology specified in the Shema, the heart, the soul, and the might. . .

These three components of human psychology correspond to the three human instincts over which Adam and Eve lost control, and in which our Lord triumphed in his temptation. 1 John 2:16 summarizes them as "all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life" --

- The heart in Deut 6:5 is the locus of pride, and the third of the three instincts is the "pride of life," the sense of self that puts us in conflict with others.
- The soul, or life, is what we coddle when we succumb to the "lust of the flesh."
- Abundance and wealth is the focus of the "lust of the eyes."

We have already recognized the importance of John's three categories throughout the Bible, and now we see that Deut 6:5 reinforces this framework. John warns against these three instincts; Moses exhorts us to devote them entirely to the service of the Lord.

So it's not surprising, after the repeated emphasis on "hearing" in vv. 9-17, that the three categories of unproductive soil recall these three instincts, which our hearing should warn us to devote entirely to the Lord (Deut 6:4-5).

- The explanation of the first soil, by the wayside, explicitly says that the seed was "sown in his heart," and because the hearer does not love the Lord with all his heart, the wicked one can remove the seed.
- The second soil fails because of "tribulation or persecution." The soul is the life-force, and one who does not love God with all his soul will be fearful of death, and led to reject his faith when he faces persecution.
- The third soil fails because of "the deceitfulness of riches." Riches are a form of power, and one who does not love God with all his power, all the resources available to him, will be misled by the love of money.

In sum, the parable of the sower instructs the evangelist of the realities of the field in which he labors. Different people will respond to the seed of the word in different ways. Not everybody will receive the truth, but those who do will bring forth great fruit.

David Thompson: There are several applications we want to make from this first parable:

- 1) Our job is to sow the seed of the Word of God. Our job is not to generate response.
- 2) The person who hears the Word is one responsible to respond to the Word. There is a personal will and accountability for use of that will right here.
- 3) This world is not going to be converted; in fact, the vast majority of people will not respond to God's Word.
- 4) Our ability to bear fruit increases as we grow deep in our understanding of God's Word.
- 5) It will not be the majority of people in any setting who will really respond right to God's Word.

TEXT: Matthew 13:24-43

TITLE: PARABLES DESCRIBING KINGDOM GROWTH – BOTH POSITIVE AND NEGATIVE

BIG IDEA:

THE KINGDOM OF GOD WILL EXPERIENCE SIGNIFICANT GENUINE AND COUNTERFEIT GROWTH UNTIL CHRIST RETURNS AT THE END OF THE AGE TO EXERCISE JUDGMENT

INTRODUCTION:

Charles Swindoll: The problem of the ever-present wicked among the righteous is such a nagging issue that it dominates the landscape of these lessons. This is an obstacle that can't be overcome except by divine power.

Daniel Doriani: The parables of Matthew 13 both give hope and explain disappointment. They say the kingdom is here, in part, without its full might or glory. This creates dissonance for believers. If we know Jesus is Savior and Lord, why doesn't everyone believe in him? If the kingdom is here, why is there so much evil in the world? Why does Christ's cause struggle as much as it does? Why do churches, missions, and schools flounder? Jesus urges patience; we must "expect continued hostility" from those who reject him. But can we tolerate the dissonance—the kingdom is already here, but not yet in its fullness?

Stanley Saunders: The ambiguity and multivalence of these three parables admit diverse readings. Are they about the surprising nature and power of God's reign, or about invasion and contamination? Is the contamination a good or a bad thing? Does the growth each story depicts represent promise or threat? . . .

Together the three parables in this portion of the discourse raise more questions than they answer. Each carries associations that may be taken either negatively or positively by Jesus' audience. Do they announce judgment (13:30, 32) or divine presence (13:32, 33)—or both? Does the empire of heaven set the world right, or is it, for some at least, invasive and corrupting? Any decision to limit the meaning of these parables to but one of these valences robs them of their power to evoke and compel choice. The decisions the audience makes about the meaning of these parables serve in turn to locate the listener in reference to the empire of heaven. . .

All three of these parables point toward the mixed results that Jesus' sowing of the kingdom has produced. Each invites the audience to consider where they stand and how they read the signs as the harvest approaches. Each leaves the audience to grapple with ambivalent signs. And while Jesus' discourse has created a sharp sense of division between the disciples and the crowd, the multivalent metaphors at work in these parables also serve to inhibit the development of a clear sense of "insiders" (people who get the right meaning) and "outsiders." No one, not even the disciples, has a clear inside track that leads to the right interpretation. It is not right interpretation that distinguishes disciples, but enduring obedience, that is, steady, active, resilient witness in a world that does not clearly perceive the signs of God's power, that misidentifies the signs, and that refuses to admit or conform to the rule of God evident in Christ.

Grant Osborne: Many listening to Jesus' teaching would be wondering why God allows evil to flourish right alongside the good; when will he finally end the presence of evil in this world? Christ is saying that this is not the time for the final victory over evil, but this is the time for sowing the kingdom seed. As the kingdom message is sown in the hearts of humankind, Satan will cause many to reject and oppose it; yet the kingdom will flourish in the hearts of others, and God will exercise judgment at the end of the age.

John MacArthur: Every phase of human history, then, marks some facet of the rulership of Jesus Christ, the rulership of God in the world. There is no period of time when the kingdom of God is not in effect on the earth. God mediates His rule on the earth through men. . .

And the Bible delineates very clearly all of these elements of God's rule in the earth. And there's one more that we left out in our little recounting there, and that is the period of time from the rejection of Christ to the return of Christ, the age in which we live. That, too, is ruled by Jesus Christ. This, too, is a form of His kingdom.

The Bible designates it in the New Testament as the mystery form, that which was not seen in the Old Testament. That which was not revealed in the Old Testament. That period of time not really delineated, but now, through the New Testament teaching of our Lord and, particularly, the expanded teaching of the apostle Paul, clearly defined for us. We are living in that era.

Jesus in Matthew 13 tells us what it will be like. He defines for us in seven parables, the character, the extent, the value, and the consummation of this period known as the mystery form of the kingdom. God is mediating His rule on the earth through His church, through believers, indwelt by the Holy Spirit. Now, the disciples didn't see this period of time as the prophets of old didn't see it either.

So, when the Messiah arrived, they thought immediately He would establish His kingdom. And when He established His kingdom, immediately all the rebels and unbelievers would be destroyed and holiness would fill the earth and righteousness would fill the earth, and the kingdom would be as it was predicted to be by the prophets of old. And so they were always concerned about the kingdom and its character and its power and its consummation. . .

They saw a kingdom of righteousness, a kingdom of holy glory where unbelievers were devastatingly judged, punished, put out, destroyed. They saw what Barclay calls, "a new and stainless humanity being brought to existence in the kingdom. And the enemies being destroyed." So, having heard the first parable, they probably would have thought to themselves, "Well, there's going to be then three kinds of rejecters and one kind of true and genuine fruit-bearing soil. What's going to happen to the rejecters?

Jeffrey Crabtree: The kingdom has arrived. It will not totally crush the enemy at this time. Considerable time will pass before the enemy will be finally judged in that final judgment (Wilkins 482). In the meantime, the righteous and unrighteous will exist alongside each other in this world. Because of that, to some extent, the professed, visible church will also contain both.

I. (:24-30) PARABLE OF THE TARES AMONG THE WHEAT – FALSE BELIEVERS WITH THE TRUE

"He presented another parable to them, saying,"

Charles Swindoll: As far as we know, Jesus was still sitting in the boat in the “Bay of Parables” when He presented the story commonly called the Parable of the Wheat and Tares. He seemed to pick up on the same image as in the previous story, the Parable of the Sower, the Soil, and the Seed (13:3-23). We might even consider this a kind of sequel to that parable. This time, instead of focusing on the different kinds of soil upon which seeds can fall, Jesus’ attention shifted to the plants that grow up in the field.

Daniel Doriani: The parable of the wheat and the weeds leads us again to consider disappointment, the evils of this world. For a moment, the parable sounds like bad news because it asks us to wait, to tolerate evil. Later, we learn that the bad news will not last. Still, it helps us to know that we must anticipate seasons of trouble before we see a happy resolution. . .

The parable of the wheat and the weeds adds a new thought. While the righteous and the wicked grow together, they can be indistinguishable for a time. It may be impossible to tell believers from unbelievers, but God knows his people. Eventually, he will separate the righteous and the wicked. He will judge and remove the wicked, but will reward the righteous and bring them into his presence.

A. (:24b-26) Counterfeit Growth Hidden Until the Harvest

1. (:24b) Purposeful Sowing of Good Seed

“The kingdom of heaven may be compared to a man who sowed good seed in his field.”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Good seed was seed that was pure. It had only the seed of the desired crop in it. The farmer was careful to protect his field from unwanted growth. Corrupted crops were harder to harvest, so if the value of the crop was to be protected the seed had to be kept pure. The first parable was about different soil types but assumed good seed. This parable is about different seeds but assumes a single type of soil. The seed in the first parable represents the word of God. The seed in this parable represents people.

2. (:25) Secretive Sowing of Tares

“But while men were sleeping, his enemy came and sowed tares also among the wheat, and went away.”

Michael Wilkins: Satan operates in this world both as a swooping bird (13:19) and as the enemy farmer attempting to disrupt the growth of good wheat (disciples) by sowing among it zizanon (Lolium temulentum), a kind of weed referred to also as “darnel” or “tares.” It is a weedy rye grass with poisonous seeds, which in early stages of growth looks like wheat, but can be distinguished easily in its mature state at the time of harvesting.

D. A. Carson: “Sleeping” does not imply that the servants were neglectful but that the enemy was stealthy and malicious.

Van Parunak: Wheat is a nourishing food, but tares carry a symbiotic fungus infection that causes a drunken nausea and even death. In fact, the Latin name temulentum comes from the word temulentus meaning “drunk.” Wheat contaminated with tares would be worthless. The enemy in this story is conducting a particularly vicious form of industrial sabotage, particularly in a subsistence economy, where most people depend on their annual harvest to feed their families for the coming year. And his attack is cruel. If he had done what Samson did in Judges 15:4-5, sending three hundred foxes with torches tied to their tails running through the fields, at least the farmer would know that he has been attacked, but here there is no warning until the plant begins to produce seeds.

3. (:26) Harvest of Both Wheat and Tares Exposes the Counterfeit

“But when the wheat sprang up and bore grain, then the tares became evident also.”

D. A. Carson: An astonishing number of scholars treat this parable as if there were behind it a Matthean church riddled with problem people, perhaps even apostates. So Jesus’ answer in Matthew becomes, in effect, advice not to try to have a pure church, because the Lord will make the right distinctions at the end (cf. G. Barth, “Auseinandersetzungen um die Kirchengrowth im Umkreis des Matthäusevangelium,” ZNW 69 [1978]: 158–77). But this is a major error in category. Nowhere in Matthew does “kingdom” (or “reign”—see comments at 3:2) become “church” (see comments at vv.37–39; 16:18). The parable does not address the church situation at all but explains how the kingdom can be present in the world while not yet wiping out all opposition. That must await the harvest. The parable deals with eschatological expectation, not ecclesiological deterioration.

B. (:27-28a) Counterfeit Growth the Work of Satan

1. (:27) Good Seed Attributed to God

*“And the slaves of the landowner came and said to him,
'Sir, did you not sow good seed in your field? How then does it have tares?’”*

Leon Morris: Their then really means “therefore”: in view of the fact that you had only good seed sown, what is the origin of the weeds?

2. (:28a) Counterfeit Seed Attributed to Satan

“And he said to them, 'An enemy has done this!’”

C. (:28b-30) Counterfeit Growth Not Uprooted Until the Final Judgment

1. (:28b-29) Prohibition of Premature Uprooting of Tares

a. (:28b) Question

“And the slaves said to him, 'Do you want us, then, to go and gather them up?’”

John MacArthur: Because later on when the servants say, “Can we pull out the darnels?” and the Lord says, “Don’t pull them out, let them grow together,” if that’s the church then we have no right to church discipline, we have no right to expose a heretic, we have no right to deal with the sin. And that’s not what the epistles tell us. If you make this field the church, you’ve really got problems. Leave it the way Jesus interpreted it. It’s the world.

Jeffrey Crabtree: The parable is not about how the church is to fight evil. Instead, it teaches us that the church exists alongside evil and God perfectly judges all people in the last day.

b. (:29) Response and Reason

“But he said, 'No; lest while you are gathering up the tares, you may root up the wheat with them.’”

Richard Gardner: For a detailed explanation, we must wait till verses 36-43. What the parable itself clearly tells us, however, is that the kingdom must contend with evil all around it, and that God permits evil and good to coexist until the end.

2. (:30) Plan for Eventual Judgment of Counterfeit Tares

a. Tares and Wheat Grow Together in This Age

“Allow both to grow together until the harvest;”

b. Tares and Wheat Designated for Contrasting Destinies at Harvest Time

“and in the time of the harvest I will say to the reapers, ‘First gather up the tares and bind them in bundles to burn them up; but gather the wheat into my barn.’”

Charles Swindoll: In this parable we see three periods of time.

- During the time of planting, the farmer plants good seed, but his enemy deviously infiltrates the field and plants dangerous, poisonous, look-alike seed.
- During the time of waiting, the farmer advises the workers to allow the bad grain to grow side by side with the good grain, patiently waiting and refraining from taking action. Throughout this in-between time, the workers are responsible for tending and protecting the wheat field.
- Then, at the time of harvesting, the farmer’s harvesters – not the workers who tended the wheat – will carry out the task of separating the harmful and deceptive weeds from the healthy wheat.

II. (:31-32) PARABLE OF THE MUSTARD SEED – IMPRESSIVE POSITIVE GROWTH FROM SMALL BEGINNINGS – INCORPORATING THE GENTILES

“He presented another parable to them, saying,”

John MacArthur: And what He is saying is it’s not your job to be the executioners. That’s for the angels in the judgment. Your job is to keep on being the wheat in the midst of the world so that you’ll influence the tares or the darnels that are all around you. You’re not to be the executioners, you’re not to pull off the judgment, you’re not to pull them out of the ground because you don’t know what you’re doing. You’re liable to kill some Christians in the process and let some non-Christians go because you can’t see the heart. So your job is not judgment. Your job is evangelism. They’ll grow together until the end.

Now, what do you think the next question is that they’re going to ask? They’re going to think...I know it’s what I thought. “Well, now this is the kingdom? And we’ve got all these people who reject? And they’re all over the place because the parable of the tares said that the tares were sown throughout the field. And evil is so powerful and evil is so strong and evil is so dominating in its influence, if these two things are going along together, isn’t that going to choke out the life of the kingdom? Isn’t that going to strangle the power of Christ in the world?”

A. (:31b) Introduction of the Parable

“The kingdom of heaven is like a mustard seed, which a man took and sowed in his field;”

Van Parunak: -For the third time, we are invited to consider a man sowing seed in his field. But each time the seed is different.

- In the parable of the sower, the seed is the word of the kingdom (v. 19), and the different soils represent different kinds of people.
- In the parable of the tares, the seed consists of people, “the children of the kingdom” or “the children of the wicked one” (v. 38).
- In this parable, the seed stands for the kingdom of God, which we must always keep in mind is a process, not a place: it is the rule of God over his creation.

B. (:32) Relevant Characteristics of the Mustard Seed

1. Germinates as a Small and Insignificant Seed

“and this is smaller than all other seeds;”

D. A. Carson: No pious Jew doubted that the kingdom would come and that it would be vast and glorious. What Jesus is teaching goes beyond that. He is saying there is a basic connection between the small beginnings taking place under his ministry and the kingdom in its future glory. Though the initial appearance of the kingdom may seem inconsequential, the tiny seed leads to the mature plant.

John Phillips: Imagine the astonishment of the disciples when they heard that! The Lord was about to describe the kingdom of God. They had visions of a global empire. They doubtless pictured an ivory palace, a majestic throne, a glittering court, ambassadors from earth's remotest bounds waiting in long lines for an audience, and an invincible army at the command of a powerful, magnificent king. They waited eagerly for the Lord's description of such a kingdom, one in which they would be high ministers of state. Then came the shock. “The kingdom of God,” He said, “is like a grain of mustard seed.” They must have stared blankly at Him in astonishment. A grain of mustard seed? Why, that was nothing! You could hardly see it; it was so small and insignificant. Ah! But it had life! It would grow! The point of the parable lies in the contrast between the size of the seed when it is sown and the size of the plant when it is grown. In each case, the Lord used hyperbole for emphasis. The kingdom of God seems small and insignificant in men's eyes. In the Lord's day, such was the people's contempt for it that they murdered its King. But when it is fully grown, when it reaches its full potential, they will be awed by it then!

2. Grows Into Impressive Plant

“but when it is full grown, it is larger than the garden plants;”

Leon Morris: That mustard is the smallest of all the seeds does not mean that nowhere is there any smaller seed. It is a way of saying that among all the seeds mustard is a very little seed indeed. It was popularly held to be the smallest of the seeds (Lightfoot cites evidence that the size of the mustard seed “passed into a common proverb,” 2, p. 215; indeed, Jesus himself used it that way when he spoke of faith like a grain of mustard seed, 17:20). We should understand Jesus as appealing to this well-known view rather than to his having surveyed all the seeds and come up with the conclusion that there is none smaller than this (in fact, some seeds are smaller). The point of the parable is that this very little seed grows into a sizeable plant, one larger than all the plants of the garden, and indeed in its mature state becomes a tree (it can grow to a height of 8 to 12 feet). Jesus passes over the various stages of its growth; for this parable they are irrelevant. He is concerned with the contrast between the tiny seed and the mature majestic plant. So that introduces the thought of result; the consequence of the great growth of the plant from the tiny seed is that birds come and roost in its branches (cf. Dan. 4:12, 20-21; Ezek. 31:6). The little detail about the birds roosting fills out the picture of the seed growing into a tree; in the end the mustard plant fulfils all the functions of a tree. This points up the strong contrast between the tiny seed and the tree that is the end result of the seed. The kingdom may be considered insignificant in its beginnings and was doubtless despised by many in Jesus' day because of this. But in the end its growth would be extensive; it would be a very great kingdom indeed. There is also the thought of the continuity between the seed and the grown plant; it is from the mustard seed and that seed only that the mustard plant grew. So it is from Jesus and his little band that the mighty kingdom of heaven would emerge. And if we can reason from the connection with all the nations in the Ezekiel passage, there will be representatives of all peoples in the kingdom.

Donald Hagner: The kingdom of God has humble beginnings; it is like a mustard seed, small and unimpressive. It can be overlooked or dismissed as a trifle. Its coming did not overwhelm the world, as had been expected. Yet it is destined to become an impressive entity in radical contrast to its beginnings.

John MacArthur: Now basically, let me just give you a little botany so we know where we're going. This particular mustard seed causes to grow a bush, a shrub we would call it, like a garden plant. Normally it grows to about seven to eight feet in height. And that's a good size garden plant. That's a good size herb, and you'll notice it's put in the herb family, lachanon in the Greek, and we'll discuss that in a moment.

But very frequently it will grow to 12 to 15 feet in height. And there are many testimonies that have been written by eyewitnesses in the east who have seen these fields, both now and in past generations, who have testified to the fact that they get to be 15 feet high. One writer talks about them being higher than a horse and rider. Another writer says that the horse and the rider can ride under the branches of the mustard bush. Now, that's a big bush.

3. Growth Will Accommodate Inclusion of the Gentiles in the Kingdom

"and becomes a tree, so that the birds of the air come and nest in its branches."

Do birds represent:

- Just a general reference to the great size of the plant
- Evil forces; false professors of faith and false teachers under the cloak of Christianity
- Gentiles who are included in the kingdom [my preference]

Daniel Doriani: When the parable says birds "perch" or "make nests" (ESV) in the branches, we have an allusion to Ezekiel 17:23-24 (the image was widespread in the ancient Near East), where God promises to plant a tree in Israel that will provide safety for all who dwell there. Occasionally, "birds nesting" signifies Gentile nations finding safety (Ezek. 31:6; Dan. 4:12, 20-21). The image suggests that God will replant Israel, so that not only Israel, but even the Gentiles will find safety in God's family.

John MacArthur: And what the parable is trying to tell us is that in spite of the opposition, in spite of the three bad soils, in spite of the presence of the darnels, we're going to win. The kingdom is going to grow and grow and grow and grow and grow. That's the promise of the Lord to encourage us.

S. Lewis Johnson: [Alternative View] Christianity has grown. It's had an abnormal growth from that small beginning in the manger in Bethlehem, and the twelve apostles, and the few scattered Christian believers – it's become a worldwide phenomenon. A great religion. But all of this shall ultimately reach its climax in the man of sin, the anti-Christ, who shall arise and proclaim the lie, shall set up the image to himself in the Temple, and call upon the whole of the earth to worship him. The birds of the air [referring to the work of Satan] shall come and nest in the branches of the mustard tree.

III. (:33) PARABLE OF THE LEAVEN – PERVASIVENESS OF NEGATIVE GROWTH OF FALSE DOCTRINE

“He spoke another parable to them,”

Is the Lord using two parables here as a couplet to emphasize the same theme = the powerful and pervasive spread of the kingdom? Or is the Lord using these 2 parables to contrast both the positive and negative types of growth we see in the kingdom in this present age?

A. Introduction of the Parable

“The kingdom of heaven is like leaven,”

B. Permeating Influence of the Leaven

“which a woman took, and hid in three pecks of meal, until it was all leavened.”

Michael Wilkins: [Alternative View] Scripture uses leaven almost exclusively as a negative metaphor, probably because fermentation implied disintegration and corruption (Ex. 12:8, 15–20), as in the Feast of Unleavened Bread, which reminded the Israelites of their hurried departure from Egypt (Ex. 12:31–39; Deut. 16:3). But Jesus seems to reverse the connotation here to symbolize the hidden permeation of the kingdom of heaven in this world. The mustard seed emphasizes growth, while the yeast suggests permeation and transformation. In spite of its small, inauspicious beginnings, the kingdom of heaven will permeate the world.

John MacArthur: [Alternative View] All I'm saying is that the way leaven is used in the Bible is very broad. And it is a very excellent analogy of permeating influence. And so, we see that our Lord uses it, I believe, in that very same manner here. Sure it's used in the New Testament to speak of evil and its permeating influence but are we saying that God can't use it, also, to speak of the influence of good? Especially when He says, “The kingdom of heaven is like leaven,” and especially when it's in a couplet of parables which obviously are geared to show how the kingdom's power is extended as over against the influence of evil given in the first two parables.

Albert Mohler: The metaphor of yeast usually has a negative meaning in Scripture, but Jesus uses it to symbolize the positive, hidden permeation of the kingdom of heaven in this world. Though the kingdom is active, it is not yet fully observable to the world because it begins with an inner transformation of the heart.

S. Lewis Johnson: The difficulties with taking this as an optimistic picture are these. In the first place, the meal suggests the wheat. We all agree on that. The three measures of meal suggest wheat, and the wheat suggests the true seed are the doctrines of the Lord Jesus and his work of redemption.

But the leaven. If you look in the Old Testament and look up all the references to leaven, and then look up in the New Testament all the references to leaven, you discover that instead of being something that is positive, it almost always has a negative meaning. For example, in the meal offering, designed to represent the Lord Jesus in his person and in his work, it is specifically stated that if a child of the Nation Israel offers a meal offering, there should be no leaven in it, because leaven suggests sin, and there is no sin in the Lord Jesus.

When the Passover is observed, it is an especially important regulation that the leaven should be removed from the home in which the Passover lamb was to be eaten. And for seven days, they were to eat unleavened bread as they observe the feast.

Then if you come into the New Testament, and if you turn here in the gospel of Matthew to the 16th chapter – why don't you turn over there and read verse 6 through verse 12 – you will see that the New Testament conforms to this teaching. Then Jesus said unto them, “Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and the Sadducees.” And they reasoned among themselves, saying, “It is because we have taken no bread,” verse 8 which when Jesus perceived, “O ye of little faith, why reason ye among yourselves because ye have brought no bread? Do you not yet understand, neither remember, the five loaves of the 5,000, and how many baskets ye took up? Neither the seven loaves of the 4,000 and how many baskets ye took up? How is it that ye not understand that I spoke not you concerning bread, but that you should beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and the Sadducees.” Then understood they that he bade them not to beware of the leaven of bread, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees and Sadducees.

Leaven in the New Testament is used of the evil of hypocrisy. It is used of the evil of impurity. It is used of the evil of rationalism, characteristic of the Sadducees. It is used of the evil of formalism in religion, characteristic of the Pharisees. And it is used of the evil of materialism and naturalism characteristic of the Herodians. And Mark tells us that the doctrine of the Herodians could be characterized as leaven as well.

So leaven, then, in the Old and New Testaments suggests that which is evil. Furthermore, the other parables, as we have been seeing, suggests that alongside the sowing of the good seed there is the sowing of the tares. And finally, history itself has told us that we're not getting better and better and better. That apostasy is rather the condition than the opposite.

So what, then does this parable teach us, then, why this parable teaches us that in the proclamation of the gospel of the Lord Jesus and the truth concerning him, we shall expect – incidentally, the woman – I don't want to be dogmatic about what is meant by the woman. But we do know that in the Bible, in Revelation chapter 17, the figure of the woman suggests ecclesiastical impurity and ecclesiastical action. And it's just possible that the woman – evidently perhaps related symbolically to Eve in the Garden of Eden – it is perhaps possible that the woman here is designed to represent ecclesiastical introduction of the leaven into the truth concerning the Lord Jesus.

And if that's what is meant, of course, that we know is what has happened, that the introduction of false doctrine into the proclamation of the message of the Christian church has been done by the leaders in the Christian church. The men who stand in the pulpit and teach us, they are the ones who mislead us.

So then, we are to understand by this that throughout this age, it is to be characterized by the tendency on the part of the leadership – perhaps the leadership of the Christian church; the fact is still true – characterized by the introduction, secretly into the truth concerning Christ that which is erroneous. Until finally we shall have the whole leavened, this age shall end in general apostasy [both moral and doctrinal].

IV. (:34-35) PURPOSE OF PARABLES – FULFILLING OT PROPHECY

A. (:34) Transition in Mode of Teaching

“All these things Jesus spoke to the multitudes in parables, and He did not speak to them without a parable,”

R. T. France: The second statement on teaching in parables is much shorter than vv. 10–17, and is presented entirely as an editorial comment, not as the words of Jesus. It is essentially a formula-quotation preceded only by a brief descriptive sentence to justify it. Here, unlike in 13:14 where Jesus was the speaker, the normal quotation formula returns, and we are invited to reflect on how Jesus' teaching method as it is set out in this chapter conforms to a pattern of revelation already established in Scripture. These two verses repeat some of the key themes of the chapter so far, that parables serve to reveal hidden truths, but that to the crowds (unlike the disciples) only the parables are given, not the explanations which enable those secrets to be grasped.

Grant Osborne: On the basis of 13:10–17 this means that Jesus considered the crowds to be outsiders (cf. 13:11–12). This is a turning point in Jesus' ministry as he turns from the crowds and in the rest of ch. 13 addresses only the disciples. Jesus is rejecting those who are not willing to open their ears to “hear” (cf. 11:15, 13:9) and is implicitly applying 13:10–17, where the parables are meant to confirm the rejection of those who are not open to Jesus' kingdom message. In other words, Jesus considers the crowds to be outsiders (cf. 13:11–12).

B. (:35) Testimony of the OT Anticipating Jesus Speaking in Parables

“so that what was spoken through the prophet might be fulfilled, saying, ‘I will open My mouth in parables; I will utter things hidden since the foundation of the world.’”

Jeffrey Crabtree: In addition to parables concealing truth from non-responsive hearts (people who rejected Jesus' gospel, vv. 10-17), parables also required hearers to focus their attention in order to understand. Accurate discernment belonged only to those who were willing to devote the mental energy to understand them (v. 9; Mk. 4:24-25). Mark 4:33-34 adds that once they were in private, Jesus explained each of His parables to His disciples. This prevented misunderstanding and doctrinal disagreements as the disciples passed Jesus' teachings on to others.

Stu Weber: Matthew portrayed Jesus as the Messiah who, for the first time, opened the doors of understanding to eternal realities long kept secret. But he provided understanding only for those who had ears to hear. This is only one of many changes the king implemented in his inauguration of his kingdom on earth (9:14-17). . .

The major point here is Jesus' explanation of the change, not only in his teaching style to the crowds, but the change in the direction the kingdom is taking in light of Israel's unbelief and Messiah's rejection of the nation. The nation would be set on the shelf while he worked through a new vessel.

V. (:36-43) PARABLE OF THE WEEDS EXPLAINED

(:36-37a) Interpretation Setting

*“Then He left the multitudes, and went into the house.
And His disciples came to Him, saying,
‘Explain to us the parable of the tares of the field.’
37 And He answered and said,”*

A. (:37b-39) Identification of the Major Symbols

1. (:37b) The Sower

“The one who sows the good seed is the Son of Man,”

2. (:38a) The Field

“and the field is the world;”

R. T. France: But it is unlikely that the theme of a mixed church, however important to Matthew elsewhere, was in fact the main point of this parable, at least as Matthew understood it. The field is identified in v. 38 not as the church but as “the world,” which suggests that the parable has a wider perspective than simply the professing disciple community. Within “the world” believers and unbelievers continue to exist side by side even after the proclamation of the kingdom of heaven and Jesus’ assault on the kingdom of Satan, and some disciples may have found this apparently unchanged situation perplexing. Where was the new world order they had been promised? What sort of “kingdom” was this that allowed opposition to continue unchecked? Why did God not straightaway destroy the “sons of darkness” and so make his world a place fit for the “sons of light” (to use the language of Qumran)? The parable answers that question by a call to patience, directing attention away from the current situation to the coming judgment, when it will be made plain who are the true people of God and who are the “children of the Evil One.” God is not in a hurry, and they must be prepared to wait for his time.

3. (:38b) The Seed

a. Good Seed

“and as for the good seed, these are the sons of the kingdom;”

b. Bad Seed

“and the tares are the sons of the evil one;”

Leon Morris: It is interesting that the good seed is not the words that tell of the kingdom, but the sons of the kingdom, the people who receive and respond to the word. They are characterized by their relationship to the kingdom; they belong to the kingdom. The weeds also belong — to the evil one! Jesus makes a sharp distinction: in the end people belong either to the kingdom or to Satan.

4. (:39a) Enemy Sower

“and the enemy who sowed them is the devil,”

5. (:39b) Harvest

“and the harvest is the end of the age;”

6. (:39c) Reapers

“and the reapers are angels.”

B. (:40-42) Imagery of the Reaping Process

1. (:40) Summary Imagery

“Therefore just as the tares are gathered up and burned with fire, so shall it be at the end of the age.”

Donald Hagner: The parable is not merely about judgment but about the delay of judgment. . . The central point of the parable is now explained. The gathering of the weeds and their burning refer to the eschatological judgment (see the same image in 3:10) that will take place ἐν τῇ συντελείᾳ τοῦ αἰῶνος, “at the end of the age” (cf. vv 39 and 49). The present era of fulfillment announced by Jesus, despite its eschatological character, does not bring with it the final judgment of the end time. That time of future eschatological judgment is described in the verses that follow. Jeremias (Parables) refers to vv 40–43 as a “little apocalypse.”

John Schultz: The Lord concludes the explanation of this parable with a brief but very vivid picture of the eternal destiny of the lost and of the redeemed.

2. (:41-42) More Specific Imagery

“The Son of Man will send forth His angels, and they will gather out of His kingdom all stumbling blocks, and those who commit lawlessness, and will cast them into the furnace of fire; in that place there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.”

Leon Morris: The reaping process will include gathering the things that cause sin as well as the people who do lawless things. In the final state of affairs those traps will be taken away completely.

Craig Blomberg: From the actions of the farmer and the fate of the wheat and weeds, one learns that God will permit the righteous and wicked to coexist in this age but that he will eventually separate the wicked, judge them, and destroy them, while gathering the righteous together to be rewarded by enjoying his presence forever.

Van Parunak: This image, which is repeated in v. 50 at the end of this group of parables, inevitably calls to mind Nebuchadnezzar’s furnace in Daniel 3. There, one like a son of God (in the LXX, an angel of God) delivered the three lads, but here the angels themselves are casting the wicked into the furnace, and there is no recourse.

The image of the final punishment as burning fire draws on OT prophecies:

Isa 66:24 for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.

It is common in our Lord's teaching:

Mat 25:41 Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels:

It continues throughout the NT to the final description in the Revelation:

Rev 20:15 And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

It is fashionable in modern churches to downplay or even deny the teaching of a fiery hell, but the consistent testimony of Scripture uses this image to warn of the consequences of persisting in our sin and not receiving the Father's gracious offer of forgiveness in the Lord Jesus.

C. (:43a) Vindication of the Righteous

"Then the righteous will shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."

Charles Swindoll: God is just. He knows that evil is on the rise, that charlatans are working behind the scenes to damage our churches, and that Satan has his minions making their debilitating marks on the body of Christ. Evil workers tend to gain a following, and the number of weeds thus multiplies. This is inevitable during the present evil age. However, this age isn't the last. The King is coming, and with Him the judgment. He will sort out the wheat from the weeds – perfectly, precisely, and swiftly. We need to trust Him to provide for and protect his people until the day of Christ's appearing.

Leon Morris: Here the righteous are those accepted as righteous on the last great day; the term points to their acceptability, not to their meritorious achievement. Shine represents a verb found here only in the New Testament; the comparison to the sun brings out the radiance of the life to which they have come (cf. Dan. 12:3).

(:43b) Exhortation to Responsiveness

"He who has ears, let him hear."

Van Parunak: The Lord repeats the exhortation from v. 9. There (as usually) it concludes a parable, challenging the hearer to figure out the meaning. Here it follows the interpretation of a parable, but the Lord apparently realizes the offensiveness of what he is teaching, and reminds his disciples not to allow the natural attachment to this world to draw them away from it.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

1) How difficult must it have been for the disciples of Jesus to put aside their expectation of immediate kingdom consummation and prepare to patiently engage in long term evangelism and discipleship in a world where evil grows alongside of righteousness?

- 2) What makes the growth of a mustard seed an appropriate analogy for the growth of the kingdom of God?
- 3) Why shouldn't this passage be used as an argument against proactive church discipline?
- 4) Is the reality and severity of eternal punishment of the wicked given short shrift in evangelical circles today?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Stu Weber: The parable of the weeds (or tares) answers two questions from the context of Matthew. First, why must the faithful kingdom servants live in the midst of evil on earth? Second, is there any hope of justice and freedom from the surrounding evil of the world? The concept that the weeds, in their early stages, were indistinguishable from the young wheat also points to the likelihood of counterfeits within the kingdom community (7:15-23). This parable offered assurance that even these convincing imposters would be "weeded out" in the end.

David Thompson: The Messianic kingdom that could have been established and ultimately will be established one day will not contain any evil. However, since Israel had rejected her King, the whole program of God would move in a different direction. Gentiles would be brought in and even though God would do many great things in the lives of people, an evil one would do his diabolical work until he is finally destroyed.

We may understand kingdom in these parables as the whole time period from the time Jesus Christ ascends until He comes back to reign as King.

UNTIL JESUS CHRIST SENDS HIS ANGELS TO CAST ALL EVIL ANGELS AND PEOPLE INTO THE LAKE OF FIRE TO BURN FOREVER, SATAN WILL PRODUCE A COUNTERFEIT TO THE TRUE, PURE WORK AND WORD OF GOD.

Dr. Stanley Toussaint said there are three new things we learn in this parable:

- 1) The program of God would now take place in the world, not just Israel (13:38).
- 2) Good and evil will continue to coexist in the program of God in the world (13:30).
- 3) Evil will coexist with good until the kingdom is established and Christ destroys evil (13:39-43).

J. Ligon Duncan: In the Parable of the Sower, the disciples learned that Israel, and many of the Gentiles, would reject Jesus' claims for Himself to be the Messiah, and the good news that He brought, thus correcting His expectations about the kingdom, because they thought that when the Messiah set up his kingdom, all of Israel and all the Gentiles would come to Him. In the parable of the tares, the disciples learn that the kingdom itself will be mixed in character, thus correcting their expectation that the kingdom would be perfectly pure, and would involve a righteous rule over all the unrighteous of the world. They had apparently taken Jeremiah 31, verses 31 through 34, very seriously. They expected the law of God to be written on the hearts of all of those who were involved in the kingdom of heaven. They expected all of those involved in the kingdom to know the Lord from the greatest to the least, and they believed, with John the Baptist, that when the Lord came He was going to lay the axe to the root of the tree. He was going to bring judgment to the unrighteous in the land, and set up a righteous kingdom. And, consequently, they needed to be corrected in what the kingdom of heaven would be like in this experience between two ages: the coming of Christ the first time and the coming of Christ the second time. And so, the parable of the tares is designed to show them that in Christ's kingdom, the sons of the kingdom and the sons of the evil one are going to exist side by side for a long time. And so, they must wait patiently and give themselves to building up the wheat (that is the sons of the kingdom) and be careful in their judgment not to harm those who are believers. This parable is designed to remind the disciples that there will be judgment and condemnation for those who appear to be in the kingdom, but who are, in fact, not.... This parable also indicates that there will be many who are identified with the kingdom of heaven who are not part of it. It is interesting to see the similarities between the parable of the sower and the parable of the tares. The parable of the sower talks about a sower, so does the parable of the tares. Both parables talk about a field. They both talk about a seed. They both talk about a crop yield and in both parables the evil one is mentioned. But there are also differences between the two parables. For one thing, in the parable of the sower all the seed is good. In the parable of the tares, of course, some of the seed is wheat and some of the seed is weed. In the parable of the sower, the focus is on the response to the different kinds of soils of the seed which has been planted by the sower. In the parable of the tares, the focus is on the command which the landowner gives to his servant. He tells his servant before the final judgment that they are to be patient, and then He gives the command to his servants - the angels at the final judgment are to reap and to separate the tares and the wheat. Notice also that the evil one is at work in both of these parables.

John Piper: A wartime mindset must include shrewd knowledge of enemy tactics. Ephesians 5:11, "Take no part in unfruitful works of darkness, but instead expose them." Christianity stands or falls with the reality of Satan and demons. Why? Because Jesus spent his whole ministry fighting them. If they are not real he is reduced to a comic figure.

What is Satan's aim and his strategies?

1. He is the father of lies. (John 8:44) His nature is falsehood! He only speaks the truth in order to deceive.
 2. Therefore, his chief enemy is truth—he opposes God's word. (Genesis 3:1–5)
 3. He casts doubt on God's goodness. (Genesis 3:1–5) He destroys the obedience of faith. He opposes the truth reaching and converting people.
 4. He hinders missions strategy. (1 Thessalonians 2:18)
 5. He distorts and prevents effective gospel message. (Acts 13:8–9)
 6. He avoids inner need by removing external trouble. (1 John 3:12)
 7. He uses the fear of death to hold men in bondage. (Hebrews 2:15) It doesn't lead them to God because it leads them to get as many kicks here as possible.
 8. He causes people to stumble over bad Christian attitudes. (2 Timothy 2:24–26)
 9. He blinds the minds of unbelievers. (2 Corinthians 4:4)
 10. He exploits a lack of understanding. (Matthew 13:19)
 11. He suggests ways that don't involve suffering. (Matthew 16:23; Matthew 4:1–11)
 12. He imitates religious roles. (2 Corinthians 11:14–15; Matthew 13:28, 30; Revelation 2:9)
 13. He misuses Scripture. (Matthew 4:6)
 14. He imitates signs and wonders. (2 Thessalonians 2:9; Mark 13:22)
 15. He offers exotic occult alternatives. (Revelation 2:19–24)
- He attacks faith to destroy believers:

16. attacks faith. (1 Thessalonians 3:5; 2 Corinthians 11:3)
17. brings persecution. (Revelation 2:9; 1 Peter 5:8; Luke 22:31)
18. brings sickness. (Job 1:11; 2:5; Luke 13:16)
19. dissension over doctrine and causes rifts. (Romans 16:17–20)
20. sexual allurements. (1 Corinthians 7:5; 1 Timothy 5:15)
21. unresolved anger. (2 Corinthians 2:11; Ephesians 4:27)
22. pride. (1 Timothy 3:6)

We began with liar and end with pride. Connection: the truth is that God is God and we are not. It is humbling. The only way to rebel against the lowliness of creaturehood is to be a liar. Humility under God is the great devil resistance (James 4:6–7). (A Wartime Strategy)

TEXT: Matthew 13:44-46

TITLE: GREATNESS OF THE KINGDOM – ITS VALUE AND APPROPRIATION

BIG IDEA:

THE SUPREME VALUE OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD MOTIVATES AN APPROPRIATION OF TOTAL COMMITMENT

INTRODUCTION:

Stu Weber: These parables (:44-46) answer two closely related questions from the surrounding context.

- First, why should we give our lives for a kingdom we cannot see?
- Second, can the kingdom truly be the answer to our search for ultimate fulfillment?

Grant Osborne: Several ideas are intertwined in this collection of parables.

- (1) The kingdom has overwhelming value, worth everything a person has (vv. 44–46).
- (2) Certain judgment is reserved for those who reject the kingdom (vv. 47–50).
- (3) Finally, the disciples have attained an understanding that makes them responsible to teach others the new truths of the kingdom as well as the old truths of the Torah (vv. 51–52).

R. T. France: They are about enthusiastic and whole-hearted commitment to the kingdom of heaven, with the secondary theme of costly renunciation for the sake of the greater good. It is only those who make the kingdom of heaven their top priority who will enjoy its blessings. These parables also continue the theme of the “secrets of the kingdom of heaven” in that the treasure is “hidden” from others and the pearl has to be “found” (it is not thrown before any old pigs, 7:6!).

The relevance of these parables to the disciples is obvious, especially in view of their having “left” their previous lifestyle and its material possessions in the call-stories of 4:20, 22 (and cf. 9:9), a theme which will be taken up again in 19:27–29, where it is provoked by the example of the rich man who was unwilling to sell his possessions in order to gain “treasure in heaven” (19:16–22). The same contrast between earthly and heavenly possessions and security has been explored in 6:19–34, where it is specifically commitment to God’s kingship (6:33) which must take priority over other concerns. In the treasure-finder and the pearl-dealer, then, we find the opposite attitude to the “worries of this world and the false lure of wealth” which stood in the way of true discipleship in v. 22. To find the kingdom of heaven is to find the one treasure which outweighs all other valuation. It is worth any cost to seize this unique and unrepeatable opportunity.

Walter Wilson: However the opportunity presents itself, the only appropriate response to the kingdom is one of complete and unqualified commitment.

D. A. Carson: The parables of the hidden treasure and the pearl are a pair; and pairing is not uncommon in Matthew (e.g., 5:14b–16; 6:26–30; 7:6; 9:16–17; 10:24–25; 12:25; 13:31–33; 24:43–51), an excellent way of reinforcing a point. Like the paired parables with which these two are chiastically coordinated (mustard seed and yeast, vv.31–33), these two make the same general point but have significant individual emphases.

Donald Hagner: The brief fifth and sixth parables have as their focus the glorious character of the kingdom brought by Jesus, which justifies the cost of absolute discipleship. They are linked with the preceding parables, however, by the continuing motif of hiddenness and smallness. Thus the hidden treasure corresponds to the hidden leaven and the smallness of the pearl with that of the mustard seed. These parables, again like those of the mustard seed and the leaven, receive no explanation in the text; this may be because they are spoken to the disciples, who will know their meaning.

I. (:44) PARABLE OF HIDDEN TREASURE – JOY OF DISCOVERY

A. Hidden Nature of the Kingdom

“The kingdom of heaven is like a treasure hidden in the field,”

Grant Osborne: In a society that had no banks or safety-deposit boxes, all one could do with valuables was hide them underground. Archaeologists have often found jars of gold coins or even precious jewels and pearls buried in a field. This parable would be such a case, as the original owners were either killed on a journey or died suddenly and the treasure remained hidden. It is a story that captures the imagination in every culture and time, for buried treasure is a universal symbol of personal fortune.

Daniel Doriani: The ancients had nothing like banks or safe deposit boxes. When brigands threatened or war forced sudden flight, people buried their treasures, often in clay jars. If those who fled did not return, the treasure was lost until someone stumbled upon it.

Ray Fowler: At the start of the story the treasure is not in plain sight but is hidden. That tells you something about the kingdom. The value of the kingdom is not always obvious to people at first. They hear about God or Jesus or the church, but they don't realize how important, how essential, how necessary God is to their lives. And so, they go day after day, week after week, year after year, without submitting themselves to God's rule in their life.

B. Joy of Discovery of the Kingdom

“which a man found and hid; and from joy over it”

William Barclay: In this parable, the great point is the joy of the discovery that made the man willing to give up everything to make sure beyond question that the treasure became his own. Nothing else in the parable really matters.

Ray Fowler: The second part of the story has to do with the joy of discovery. Jesus says when the man found the treasure, he hid it again, and then in his joy went and sold all he had and bought the field.

Joy is an important part of this story. The man does not go dutifully off to sell his possessions but does so at the sheer joy of discovering the treasure. He is not upset that he has to go and sell everything. In fact, he doesn't have to go and sell anything at all. He does it because he wants to. He does it because he is glad to. He is so full of joy at the discovery of the treasure that he is glad to sell everything he has in order to obtain the treasure.

John MacArthur: that which was hidden in the field did not belong to the man who owned the field. If it was his, he wouldn't be selling his field without digging it up. He didn't know it was there. He had not gone to the effort to uncover it and dig it out. No doubt it belonged to a previous owner of that same field who had buried it there, died in battle, or died by accident, unable to recover it and so it was no more the number one's owner than it was the number two's owner. So he had no prior right to it. And the man who had uncover it...uncovered it by Jewish law did have the claim on it. The other man had not done that. . .

The point of the parable is here is a man who found something so valuable that he sold everything that he had to get it. That's the point of the parable. He was so overjoyed, he was so ecstatic that he was willing to do anything to get that treasure.

David Turner: The ethics of the man who finds the treasure and then buys the field are irrelevant to the parable (W. Davies and Allison 1991: 436).

Charles Swindoll: It's an interesting side note that whoever owned the field and sold it to the man didn't realize the vast treasure he had been sitting on, something that suggests neglect of the field by this deed holder and/or heir. At this point, the disciples may have wondered if the indifference of the original owner of the field in the story was meant to symbolize the kind of negligence increasingly shown by the scribes, Pharisees, and other leaders of Israel. These religious leaders had been "entrusted with the oracles of God" (see Rom. 3:2) but did not recognize the hidden treasure of the gospel of the person and work of Christ and relinquished it to those who did.

C. Supreme Value of the Kingdom – Motivating Total Commitment

"he goes and sells all that he has, and buys that field."

Grant Osborne: The point is obviously the absolute value of the kingdom, worth surrendering everything to attain.⁸ No other aspect is highlighted in this short parable, so clearly this is a call for radical discipleship (and especially of financial sacrifices needed) in light of the overwhelming value of the kingdom. Only a few know its worth, and they should surrender everything to obtain it.

S. Lewis Johnson: Now, there are differing interpretations, and I want to mention two or three of these interpretations, not to degrade them, but to let you know there are different interpretations, and it is possible that my interpretation is wrong. So I want to suggest some of the others and then give you what I think is the interpretation of the parable. . .

It is the opinion of some that the church of the Lord Jesus is the treasure, and that the man who found the treasure is the Lord Jesus himself, and that when the man of the parable sells all that he has and buys that field, that is a picture of the Lord Jesus giving all that he possessed in the sacrifice on the cross for the church of the Lord Jesus.

Now, there are some biblical sentiments expressed by this, of course. It is true that the church is a kind of treasure so far as God is concerned. It's obvious that he would not have redeemed the church if he did not have in mind for the church great purposes. But of course, the church is no great treasure in herself. And she is only valuable by virtue of that which God does for her. She is totally worthless otherwise. But nevertheless, it is true that the church has a great place in the purpose of God and might be called a treasure in that sense. And of course, it is true that the Lord Jesus gave his life for the redemption of the church.

But how could the church be “found” by the Lord Jesus when she was chosen before the foundation of the world? How could the church be represented as something the Lord stumbled over while he was wandering through a field? In the light of the fact that Paul says we are chosen in him before the foundation of the world, what is the second hiding that is referred to also, here? So while that interpretation has some things that commend it, I really do not think that it satisfies everything that is found in this context.

Still others say, no, the church is not the treasure, Israel the Nation is the treasure, because does not the Old Testament say that in the beginning of Israel’s history “A peculiar treasure will I make of Thee unto me?”—the passage in Exodus chapter 19 and verse 5 would seem to suggest that Israel is a treasure to God, and could not Israel be the treasure over which the Lord Jesus stumbles? Again, remember the primary feature of these parables is the kingdom of heaven. The period of time between the first coming and the second coming in mystery form, but ultimately, the kingdom of the heavens in its manifested form begins at the Second Advent of the Lord Jesus and continues for a thousand years thereafter.

What he is doing is giving us things that have to do with the gathering of the sons of the kingdom during this present age, in order that they may enter that glorious Messianic kingdom of the future. And the kingdom is the thing that is stressed, and not the entities within the kingdom. The church is not found in Matthew chapter 13, so far as I can tell, nor is the Nation Israel, specifically found. He’s thinking about the kingdom. He’s thinking about this age, and the movements, and the works of God and of Satan that will characterize this inter-advent period.

Others have said the kingdom is the treasure and Jesus is the man finding it and giving himself for it. So, the kingdom is the treasure. With that, I certainly can agree. But is the kingdom that which the Lord Jesus finds and gives himself for? Again, that’s an appealing interpretation. It has some things about it that are attractive. The kingdom is a treasure and he is speaking about the kingdom, but is the man who stumbles over the hidden treasure a fit picture of the Lord Jesus? I think not. The discovery is a surprise to the man. I don’t think that this is a fit picture of the Lord Jesus. And yet again, I say, that there are some things that are appealing about that interpretation.

Let me suggest to you, with a little bit of diffidence, what I think is the correct interpretation of it. The kingdom is the treasure. The Lord Jesus is speaking about the kingdom. But the finder of the treasure is the one who becomes the believer and therefore, we are to look at this as a picture of how a man comes to the understanding and the possession of the kingdom as a treasure.

Now if that is true, if the kingdom is the treasure and the man who stumbles over it is the man who comes to be a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, and appropriates the blessings of the kingdom himself, then these points are made. First of all, the kingdom is something of great value, but men may fail to see it by virtue of blindness. Now we know that that is true. The kingdom is something of great value. To possess the life of the kingdom is great. To possess the life of the kingdom and live in that future Messianic kingdom is something that is surely great, and it is held out as future for the believers in our Lord Jesus Christ.

I want you to know that I am looking forward to the day when I, by virtue of the grace of God, shall be able to live in that marvelous, glorious, Messianic kingdom, in which the world recognizes and must recognize the glory of our Savior God, the Lord Jesus Christ.

There is a second thing that we may argue from this, and that is that the kingdom may be found unexpectedly. The Bible stresses this as one aspect of the truth. For example, we read in Isaiah chapter 65 and verse 1, “I was found by them that sought me not.” Isn’t that an interesting statement? I was found by them that sought me not. That is, those who weren’t paying any attention to me, were not seeking after me, have found me.

Now, every believer – well, I wouldn’t say every believer – but if we looked at our lives, we probably, every one of us, would come to the conviction that there was a time in our lives when we did not have any desire whatsoever for the relationship to the Lord Jesus, and that when we did come into that period of time in which there was a desire, it was something we recognized was not natural to us.

Jeffrey Crabtree: The parable stresses the supreme worth of the kingdom and its hiddenness from the eyes of most. It also teaches urgency, sacrifice (Newman and Stine 448), and wise choices. The parable shows the good fortune of those who discover the message of the kingdom (the hidden message of the parables, v. 35) and the kingdom itself. Mostly this parable teaches the sheer joy of finding something so valuable (Fee and Stuart 160; Bruner 2:47). The supreme value of the treasure justifies the total sacrifice of everything to possess a place in the kingdom (Wilkins 488; Phil. 3:8).

Daniel Doriani: Jesus makes a simple point: the kingdom is worth all we possess. Of course, the kingdom is not for sale. Indeed, we can do nothing to acquire it. But if it were for sale, if we had to sell all that we had to gain it, we should count it a bargain. It took all he had, but the worker bought the field. This represents the surpassing value of the kingdom. Despite its small beginning and great cost, it is worth all we have.

Warren Wiersbe: [Alternative View] The common interpretation of this parable is that the sinner finds Christ and gives up all that he possesses to gain Him and be saved. But this interpretation presents several problems. To begin with, Jesus Christ is not a hidden treasure. He is perhaps the best-known Person of history. In the second place, the sinner cannot “find Christ” for he is blind and stubborn (Rom. 3:10ff.). It is the Savior who finds the lost sinner (Luke 19:10). And no sinner could ever purchase salvation! Please note that the man in the parable did not purchase the treasure; he purchased the whole field. “The field is the world” (Matt. 13:38). Must the lost sinner purchase the world to gain Christ? Does he hide Him again?

Once again, Old Testament symbolism assists us in our interpretation. The treasure is the nation of Israel (Ex. 19:5; Ps. 135:4). That nation was placed in the world to bring glory to God, but it failed. It became a nation hidden, a treasure not being invested to produce dividends for God. Jesus Christ gave His all to purchase the whole world in order to save the nation (John 11:51). On the cross, Jesus died for the whole world, but in a special way, He died for Israel (Isa. 53:8). The nation suffered judgment and seeming destruction, but in God’s sight it is “hidden” and will be revealed again in glory.

There is, then, a future for Israel. Politically, the nation was reborn on May 14, 1948. But the nation is far from what it ought to be spiritually. God sees Israel as His treasure, and one day He will establish her in her glorious kingdom.

II. (:45-46) PARABLE OF VALUABLE PEARL – PRECIOUS VALUE

A. (:45) Search for Ultimate Value

“Again, the kingdom of heaven is like a merchant seeking fine pearls,”

Donald Hagner: The kingdom is like a small, inconspicuous pearl but one of incalculable value that, once discovered, calls for unrestrained response in the form of absolute discipleship. The kingdom of God is the greatest of treasures. Though its worth is immeasurable by any standard (cf. concerning wisdom, Wis 7:7–9, 14), it is now present only in veiled form and can be possessed by some without the knowledge of those near them. Like a hidden treasure or a pearl that can be held in one’s hand, the kingdom is known only to its joyful possessors. Yet those who find the kingdom, i.e., who receive the message and who respond in discipleship, have begun to experience the wonder of the kingdom’s presence. They know that the kingdom is a reality that is worth everything. And thus they joyfully make it their one priority in life (cf. 4:18–22; 10:39). They seek first the kingdom, sacrificing all to it, but at the same time paradoxically finding with the kingdom all they need (6:33).

S. Lewis Johnson: The kingdom is the pearl. And the man is the believer who is awakened and is looking for the answer to that which the Holy Spirit has awakened in his heart. So if the kingdom is the pearl, and after all, he does say the kingdom of heaven is like a merchant man seeking fine pearls, then we can make these points.

The kingdom is the loveliest of all possessions. This man, incidentally, was a professional. He was a professional pearl hunter. He was a merchant man. He was a jeweler. He knew pearls. And he went around, according to this parable, looking for the finest of pearls. And with all of his professional knowledge, he finally set upon one pearl of great price, the Lord Jesus trying by that to stress the greatness and the loveliness of the kingdom of the Lord Jesus. And notice it is one pearl of great price – one pearl, not many – one pearl of great price. . .

I think another thing that this parable teaches us is that entrance may come after a search. The Bible says there is none that seeketh after God, no not one, but the word of God also says, seek him while he may be found, call upon him while he is near. And we know that we harmonize these two apparently contradictory things by pointing out that when men seek God, it’s because he has worked first in their lives. . .

This parable also illustrates the fact that the appropriation of the ministry of the Lord Jesus, the relationship to him involves great personal self-renunciation – selling all that we have.

B. (:46a) Pearl of Supreme Value

“and upon finding one pearl of great value,”

John Nolland: Since pearls come in a great range of qualities and sizes, by far the highest value will attach to the best of the pearls. The merchant finds a pearl which is so outstanding that the wealthiest of buyers will vie for its ownership. For him this will be the business deal of a lifetime! But to buy such a pearl will stretch his resources to the limit: only by liquidating all his assets can he raise the capital to close the deal. The opportunity is too good to lose: he acts decisively and secures the pearl. . . The role of the liquidation of assets is very similar in the two parables.

D. A. Carson: Jesus is not interested in religious efforts or in affirming that one can “buy” the kingdom; on the contrary, he is saying that the person whose whole life has been bound up with “pearls”—the entire religious heritage of the Jews?—will, on comprehending the true value of the kingdom as Jesus presents it, gladly exchange all else to follow him.

C. (:46b) Worthy of Total Commitment

“he went and sold all that he had, and bought it.”

Grant Osborne: The treasure parable has the person accidentally “finding,” while this one has a merchant deliberately “seeking.” In other words, they build on each other, and the key is not so much the mode of discovery as it is the total surrender that accompanies it.

John MacArthur: Six Principles (from these 2 parallel parables):

- 1) The kingdom is priceless in value.
- 2) The kingdom is not superficially visible.
- 3) The kingdom is personally appropriated, and this is the crux of the parables.
- 4) The kingdom is the source of joy.
- 5) The kingdom may be entered from different circumstances.

In case number one, the man just comes across the treasure. In case number two, the man knows exactly what he’s looking for. Now even if number one was a treasure hunter, he didn’t know what he was looking for. Number two did. . . Now there are people who search, there are people who stumble into it. And then there are combinations of both, right?

- 6) The kingdom is made personal by a transaction.

Is. 55:1 – You buy it. You just don’t buy it with money. You give up all you have for all He has. . . Salvation is an act where I exchange me for Him as ruler of my life.

David Turner: This pair of parables fits into the pattern of positive response to the kingdom (Garland 1993: 151–52; Keener 1999: 391–92; Overman 1996:202–3). The kingdom is portrayed as a hidden treasure and a valuable pearl, pursued by men who sacrifice everything to gain it. This is the picture of discipleship found throughout Matthew. Jesus’s first disciples leave their families and fishing gear to follow Jesus (4:20, 22; cf. 9:9). Following Jesus entails the sacrifice of one’s life for Jesus (16:25–26). The rich young ruler will not sell all he has to follow Jesus (19:21–22), but all who do make such a sacrifice will be richly rewarded (19:27–29). These parables present both the sacrifice and the resulting joy of those who follow Jesus (13:44; cf. 2:10; 28:8; for temporary joy see 13:20). Despite the lure of wealth and worldly distractions (13:22), millions continue to follow Jesus at great cost in the present life but with greater prospects for the future. “Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven” (5:3).

Warren Wiersbe: [Alternative View] A well-known gospel song perpetuates the interpretation that this pearl is Jesus Christ and His salvation. But the same objections apply to this interpretation as applied to the previous parable. The sinner does not find Christ; Christ finds the sinner. No sinner is able to pay for salvation, even though he sells all that he has.

The pearl represents the church. The Bible makes a distinction between Jews, Gentiles, and the church (1 Cor. 10:32). Today, the church, the body of Christ, is composed of believing Jews and Gentiles (Eph. 2:11ff.). Unlike most other gems, the pearl is a unity—it cannot be carved like a diamond or emerald. The church is a unity (Eph. 4:4–6), even though the professing church on earth is divided. Like a pearl, the church is the product of suffering. Christ died for the church (Eph. 5:25) and His suffering on the cross made possible her birth.

A pearl grows gradually, and the church grows gradually as the Spirit convicts and converts sinners. No one can see the making of the pearl, for it is hidden in the shell of the oyster under the waters. No one can see the growth of His church in the world. The church is among the nations today (waters in the Bible represent nations; Dan. 7:1–3; Rev. 13:1; 17:15) and one day will be revealed in its beauty.

So, in spite of Satan’s subtle working in this world, Christ is forming His church. He sold all that He had to purchase His church, and nothing Satan can do will cause Him to fail. There is but one church, a pearl of great price, though there are many local churches. Not everyone who is a member of a local church belongs to the one church, the body of Christ. It is only through repentance and faith in Christ that we become a part of His church. Of course, all true believers ought to identify with a local assembly where they can worship and serve.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Can you remember the surpassing joy of your initial entrance into a personal relationship with Jesus Christ?
- 2) How did God seek you out and draw you to Himself? Was there a stage in that process where you were seeking after God by His sovereign grace?
- 3) How can you deny the Lord Jesus your total commitment in light of His surpassing value?
- 4) Do you treasure your secure inclusion in the family of God over everything else?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Charles Swindoll: Both of these parables would have been great encouragements to Jesus’ disciples. They saw the religious rulers rejecting Jesus and the heat of persecution increasing against Him and His followers. These two parables would have reminded them of the thrill they had experienced when they had recognized Jesus for who He really is. And the stories would have underscored Jesus’ assertion that whatever the disciples gave up for the kingdom of heaven was worth it. The benefits of the gospel of the kingdom are of inestimable worth.

Daniel Doriani: When we treasure the kingdom, it makes a difference in our course of life. We seek out and meditate on God’s truth. We make time to pray and to give thanks to the King. We will live by gospel standards by seeking to become more patient, gentle, forgiving, and merciful.

We are willing to make sacrifices to practice our conviction that the kingdom is our supreme treasure. We find ways to advance the kingdom. We use our God-given talents to extend the kingdom wherever we can—at home, at work, in our neighborhood, in our church. Again, the parables of the treasure and the pearl do not mean we do something in order to gain God’s pleasure. But we do give faithfully to his work, with our time and our talent.

Stanley Saunders: The common points in both the treasure and the pearl stories include the discovery of an object of surpassing value, going away to sell everything the finder possesses, and the purchase of the field (treasure)/pearl. Both discoveries—one apparently accidental, the other part of an intentional search—yield knowledge that remains hidden or undisclosed to others. The two finders have been possessed, as it were, by the perception of something that the rest of the world does not see. The two finders are thus like those to whom “it has been given to know the secrets of the empire of the heavens” (13:11). Jesus’ disciples have discovered “what has been hidden” (13:35) and what “many prophets and righteous ones have longed to see ... and hear” but did not see or hear (13:17).

Justin Imel, Sr.: As a general principle, I don’t think we’ve helped people understand the cost of the kingdom before they come to Jesus. We’ll talk about their sins and how Jesus offers forgiveness; we’ll talk about their struggles and how the church can help bear burdens; we’ll talk about the temporary nature of this life and the eternal heavenly home.

However, how often do we say, “Life as a Christian is not an easy life. You’ll need to give up much and it can be a very high price?” The Lord Himself told us how high the cost of discipleship really is: Luke 14:25-33. Notice that the Lord turns to the large crowds who are following Him and says this. The Lord doesn’t simply want followers; the Lord wants people who give up everything and become His true disciples. . .

Application:

“The kingdom of heaven costs us greatly.” Specifically, what things does the kingdom cost us?

- The kingdom of heaven costs us our finances. How do you bring every last cent into submission to the will of God?
- The kingdom of heaven costs us our priorities.
 - o Worship will have a place of priority
 - o The Work of the kingdom will have a place of priority.

John Piper: The Kingdom of Heaven is a Treasure

Review:

1. We said that the kingdom of God is not mainly realm or place but rule or reign.
2. We said this reign is specifically his saving or redeeming reign. The kingdom is being manifested in power when demons and unbelief and unrighteousness are being defeated and salvation, righteousness, peace, and joy are happening.
3. We said that this reign is present in part but will be consummated at the second coming of Christ. So the blessings we have now in Christ are great (forgiveness, imputed righteousness, acceptance with the Father, no condemnation, the fellowship of Jesus by his Spirit in our lives, progressive transformation into his likeness, gifts of the Spirit, usefulness in ministry, all things working together for our good, etc.), but the fullness of our inheritance awaits the coming of Christ—no more sinning, no more sickness, nor more injury or calamity, no more depression or spiritual warfare, no more ethnic strife or racism, no more war, no more death. All that will come with the final consummation of the kingdom.

4. And we said that the kingdom of God and the kingdom of Christ are the same. God reigns where Christ reigns. And Christ reigns where God reigns. When the book of Revelation talks about the throne of God it says things like:

“Salvation belongs to our God who sits on the throne, and to the Lamb!” (7:10). And:
“The Lamb in the midst of the throne will be their shepherd” (7:17). And:
“The throne of God and of the Lamb will be in [the New Jerusalem]” (22:3).

Main Lesson from Verse 44:

The question today is: What do we learn about the kingdom of God here in Matthew 13:44? We learn one main thing: The kingdom of God is so valuable that losing everything on earth, but getting the kingdom, is a happy trade-off. Having the omnipotent, saving reign of Christ in our lives is so valuable that, if we lose everything, in order to have it, it is a joyful sacrifice.

David Mathis: He Sold All His Pearls for One

Treasure and Pearl

In the first parable (Matthew 13:44), the hidden treasure is found “by chance,” it seems, without the man looking intentionally for it. In the surprise of it all, the accent falls on his shocking and happy response: from his joy he goes and sells all he has to buy the field. Joy flooded his heart as he stumbled on such value.

In the second parable (Matthew 13:45–46), we have a merchant. He is looking. He is searching high and low, near and far. Well does he know the value of pearls. In the ancient world, pearls “were regarded as very precious,” says George Knight, “in more demand even than gold” (Pastoral Epistles, 135). And this merchant is not just seeking pearls but “fine pearls” — beautiful pearls, precious pearls. His palate is refined. He has a keen eye.

The merchant’s life has been bound up with pursuing the most precious of earthly objects. Now, he comes across one singular pearl of such beauty, of such great value, one pearl so precious, he goes and sells all he has to have it. The emphasis is not on his accidental find but on the over-the-top fulfillment of an intentional search. Now the accent is not on the subjective response of joy but on the exceedingly precious value of the object.

Worth Every Sacrifice

Together the short parables contribute to one picture, seen in the obvious repetition: the man sells all he has to obtain the newfound treasure. However accidental or intentional the search, the man has come upon something of such value that he is eager (“from his joy”) to count all else loss in view of the surpassing value of the treasure — of the exceeding preciousness of the pearl.

Neither parable minimizes the cost. In fact, both draw attention to it: literally, “all things, as much he has.” There is a cost — a great cost — to this discipleship. But the Disciple, who is himself the Treasure, so far outstrips the cost that we gladly say, “Gain!” This one great pearl is so surpassingly precious that many even say with the great army of missionaries and martyrs, like David Livingstone, “I never made a sacrifice.”

What will it look like for Christ's kingdom to come to us like this? How do we receive Jesus as an infinitely valuable treasure, or a singularly great pearl, that far surpasses all else? The concept of superlative worth or supreme preciousness in Matthew 13 points us to at least two pictures elsewhere in the New Testament.

Exceedingly Precious

The first is the anointing at Bethany (John 12:3–8; also Mark 14:3–9). Martha served. Lazarus, freshly resurrected, reclined at table. Their sister Mary “took a pound of expensive ointment made from pure nard, and anointed the feet of Jesus and wiped his feet with her hair” (John 12:3). Here, expensive is the same word used for the one great pearl in Matthew 13 (Greek polutimos, “exceedingly precious”). So manifestly, uncomfortably valuable was the ointment that the disciples, and chiefly Judas, registered their concerns. “Why was this ointment not sold for three hundred denarii and given to the poor?” (John 12:5).

A denarius was a laborer's daily wage. This ointment represented a whole year's earnings for a six-days-a-week worker. Likely this was Mary's nest egg for the future. And yet, as precious as it was, she saw Jesus as more precious. She saw him as surpassingly valuable. She poured her future on his feet, and in doing so, she demonstrated who was supremely precious to her.

Supremely Valuable

Paul takes up the same search, sacrifice, and joy in Philippians 3. Did he perhaps see himself in the merchant of Jesus's parable? If so, what were the “fine pearls” he amassed before encountering the supreme preciousness of Christ? He provides a list: “circumcised on the eighth day, of the people of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, a Hebrew of Hebrews; as to the law, a Pharisee; as to zeal, a persecutor of the church; as to righteousness under the law, blameless” (Philippians 3:5–6).

As a leader among the strictest sect of his religion, he had an unassailable pedigree (what he couldn't control, by birth) and performance (what he could, by effort). These were fine pearls indeed. Until he stumbled upon a Treasure who confronted him, knocked him off his horse, and opened his eyes. This was a Treasure that had been hidden from Paul, and yet one he had long been seeking. Now Paul saw Jesus as the one great Pearl of all-surpassing preciousness, and he counted all to be loss — both pedigree and performance — in view of “the surpassing worth of knowing Christ Jesus my Lord” (Philippians 3:8). Jesus became to him both an infinitely priceless Treasure to gain and a supremely precious Pearl to know.

God, in all his divine goodness, took on flesh in this one man Jesus. “In him the whole fullness of deity dwells bodily” (Colossians 2:9). Finding him as your one Precious will not poison and shrink your soul. He is the antidote to what ails us, the catalyst to expand our small hearts, the surprising remedy we've long been seeking.

TEXT: Matthew 13:47-50

TITLE: GATHERING THE HARVEST OF THE KINGDOM (GOOD AND EVIL) – PARABLE OF FISHERMAN'S DRAGNET

BIG IDEA:

THE FINAL JUDGMENT WILL SEPARATE OUT THE WICKED AND CONDEMN THEM TO ETERNAL SUFFERING

INTRODUCTION:

Stu Weber: Here, as in the parable of the weeds, we find the coexistence of evil alongside the righteous, the discarding and burning of the evil, and the treasuring and protection of the righteous. Again, the angels are the agents of judgment whom Jesus will use. The description of hell (13:50) is identical to that in 13:42.

Charles Swindoll: The preachers of the gospel are not responsible for determining the genuineness of a person's faith in response to the gospel; they simply cast the net.

Ray Fowler: This is a warning parable. It is a clarion call to all who hear not to ignore or reject the call of Christ but to make every effort to enter God's kingdom while you still may. Yes, God allows evil and sin to continue in the world for now, but the final judgment is coming when God will judge all evil and sin, and those outside of God's kingdom will be punished for their sins. . .

So, there are quite a few similarities between the parable of the weeds and the parable of the net. The main difference between the two is a difference of emphasis. The parable of the weeds focuses more on the co-existing of good and evil in this present world, whereas the parable of the net focuses more on the separation of good and evil at the end of the age.

Donald Hagner: The final parable focuses again on the reality of an eschatological separation of the evil from the righteous and the judgment of the former at the end of the age. In the present era, the evil persons are allowed to live together with the righteous—in their midst—even within that manifestation of the kingdom known as the Church. The dragnet of the kingdom thus includes a mixture of both good and evil. That such circumstances could exist in the era of the kingdom itself was nothing less than astonishing—something indeed worth calling one of "the mysteries of the kingdom." That good and evil could be located within the net of the kingdom seemed equally strange, no doubt. Yet at the time of eschatological judgment an unavoidable separation would take place. At that time only the righteous—those who have received the kingdom with appropriate response in the form of discipleship—would survive; the evil would go to their punishment. Focus on judgment within the Church, of course, presupposes the wider context of the judgment of the world. Matthew never tires in warning his readers of the reality of judgment and hence the importance of genuine discipleship. It is a warning that both the world and the Church need.

Stanley Saunders: "things new and things old" mixes the categories, suggesting that Jesus is referring both to what is continuous with what came before (things old) and what is discontinuous (things new). Jesus himself embodies in his ministry both the fulfillment of Israel's story and its turn toward a new reality, the kingdom of heaven. Discerning and preserving the relationship between these two is especially important given the ruptures, dislocations, and separations that Jesus' ministry is generating, including the division his parables produce.

Jacob Whitaker: The parable before us this morning, in many ways, parallels the parable of the weeds found just a few verses earlier. Some commentators believe that Matthew is using what's known as a chiastic literary style. What they mean is that Matthew is writing in a way that intends to help the reader better remember and grasp Jesus' teachings. This chiastic literary style simply means that Matthew recounts Jesus' parables using a certain pattern, repeating parables and teachings that coincide with one another.

And my point is that Matthew has a purpose in repeating himself, and Matthew has a purpose in his arrangement of the certain stories and teachings he includes, so when you see patterns of repetition within the Scriptures, the intent is typically to emphasize a point or to help the reader remember the point. Which may be the reason we see the Parable of the Net and the Parable of the Weeds repeating the same point twice within this chapter. . .

So on one hand we see Jesus' insistence that final judgement will come, but not now, instead it will come at the end of the age. Therefore, we also see that this means his kingdom, here on earth, throughout this age, will remain mixed with both believers and unbelievers . This is what his disciples are to expect, this is what they're to be prepared for going forward.

J. Ligon Duncan: The disciples, though they had expected the kingdom of Christ to clearly divide the righteous and the wicked, learned now that that division will not happen at the beginning of the kingdom, but at the end of the kingdom as the judgment day comes in. Jesus' order of priority for them, then, is proclamation now, perfect purity only then. They were to focus their attention on the proclamation and not expect the kingdom to be perfectly made up of only those who love the Lord Jesus Christ.

John MacArthur: Now some people have asked, "Why this parable is included if the basic idea of separation is even also included in the parable of the wheat and the tares?" And the answer to that is several things.

- Number one, it is repeated because the wheat and the tares emphasize particularly the co-existence. This emphasizes only the separation.
- It is repeated also because the Lord has a compassionate heart and He wants to add one more warning.

I. (:47) PREPARATION FOR FINAL JUDGMENT

"Again, the kingdom of heaven is like a dragnet cast into the sea, and gathering fish of every kind;"

S. Lewis Johnson: The last parable, I mention simply because it is very similar to the Parable of the Tares and the Wheat. But the stress is on the consummation of the age. Just as the first parable in the sowing of the seed, in the Lord Jesus as the sower suggests the beginning of the age, so the dragnet in which all of the contents of the nets are dragged to the shore suggests the last of the age, and this series of parables moves from the advent of the age to the conclusion. And the stress rests upon the large net cast only once and hauled to shore only once, and the result is that the worldwide sweep of the present age, in the gathering out of the sons of the kingdom and sons of Satan is stressed.

Ray Fowler: The net was a common image of judgment in those days. For example, we read in the Old Testament book of Habakkuk: “You have made men like fish in the sea, like sea creatures that have no ruler. 15 The wicked foe pulls all of them up with hooks, he catches them in his net, he gathers them up in his dragnet; and so he rejoices and is glad.” (Habakkuk 1:14-15) Cf. Ezek. 32:1-3

John MacArthur: Now, what our Lord wants us to understand in this net is basically two things.

- One is the immense size of the net.
- And two, is the fact that it brings in everything, a conglomerate inclusive catch.

Now, once this has happened and the boat has moved through the sea, and this great vertical wall has swept up everything, living and dead. . .

And men live in this world imagining themselves to be free, moving about, fulfilling their own desires, going here and going there as they will, with little knowledge that the net comes closer and closer and closer. People float about in the liberty of the wide deep sea of life, not knowing the invisible lines of judgment move closer and closer and closer. And each time they are touched by it, they move a little further away. And they're touched again and they move a little further away.

II. (:48) PRESERVATION OF THE RIGHTEOUS

“and when it was filled, they drew it up on the beach; and they sat down, and gathered the good fish into containers, but the bad they threw away.”

Jeffrey Crabtree: The net (Greek sagēnē) was a large seine net (Louw and Nida I:55). This type of net hung on floats and was weighted at the bottom. The disciples, especially the fishermen of the group, were familiar with these nets and readily understood the imagery. This net caught all varieties of fish. Once the net was full, men working in boats or on shore dragged the net in and sorted the fish. God's net, here God's call to judgment, will gather every person and the angels will divide them into two groups (Wilkins 489), those who followed Jesus and those did not.

Jerry Shirley: Well in Bible days, there were 2 different kinds of nets used by fishermen. A casting net is small, bell shaped, and an individual could use it by himself. The other kind of net is a drag-net, and is much larger. In Bible days a drag-net could cover as much as 1 square mile of water surface area. A group of fishermen would spread out the drag-net between 2 boats and would drag it toward the shoreline. By the time they got the net to shore it would be filled with all sorts of sea creatures, and maybe a tire or license plate!

Men on the shore had the task of going thru the catch and separating the good from the bad. There were no game wardens and PETA was nowhere to be found...it was simply man having dominion over the earth and making a living. They would separate the useful from the useless, the edible from the bluegill! It was discrimination which led to separation.

This parable reveals to us tonight what God is doing among lost people today. The gospel of the kingdom involves two things: invitation and then separation.

The sea in the parable is representative of lost humanity. It's a sea of despair and hopelessness. It's a deep, dark abyss of iniquity.

John Schultz: The main stress in this story is on the future, when the net is pulled up on shore. This brings this parable in line with the parable of the weeds, in which everything is left until the time of the harvest. The pulling up of the net, when the world comes to its last day, is identical to the harvest. That makes this parable a worthy conclusion of the series, because it draws our gaze to the future to the goal to be reached. We still live in the days when the net is in the water, but the time will come when it is pulled ashore.

III. (:49-50) PUNISHMENT OF THE WICKED

“So it will be at the end of the age; the angels shall come forth, and take out the wicked from among the righteous, 50 and will cast them into the furnace of fire; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.”

Ray Fowler: Notice the role of the angels in separating the wicked from the righteous at the end of the age. This agrees with Jesus' other teachings in the gospel of Matthew. For example Jesus says in Matthew 24:31: “And he will send his angels with a loud trumpet call, and they will gather his elect from the four winds, from one end of the heavens to the other.” (Matthew 24:31)

Angels also appear in Jesus' teaching about the sheep and the goats in Matthew 25. We read in Matthew 25:31-32: “When the Son of Man comes in his glory, and all the angels with him, he will sit on his throne in heavenly glory. 32 All the nations will be gathered before him, and he will separate the people one from another as a shepherd separates the sheep from the goats.” (Matthew 25:31-32)

John Schultz: The Lord emphasizes again the fate of the lost. There is in this story not even any mention of the bliss of the saved, which we find in the parable of the weeds. We may conclude from this omission that the Lord intended this story to be a warning to those who did not want to repent. In our day, such an approach to evangelism would be highly unusual. This is probably due to the fact that we do not take seriously enough the being thrown into the fiery furnace and the gnashing of teeth; so we don't use those arguments. The fact that Jesus did it should give us food for thought.

Warren Wiersbe: The preaching of the gospel in the world does not convert the world. It is like a huge dragnet that gathers all kinds of fish, some good and some bad. The professing church today has in it both true and false believers (the parable of the tares) and good and bad. At the end of the age, God will separate the true believers from the false and the good from the bad. When Jesus Christ returns to earth to fight the battle of Armageddon (Rev. 19:11ff.), He will separate believers and unbelievers already on the earth. These are living people who are not a part of the church (which was already in heaven) or Israel. These Gentiles will be dealt with in righteousness: The saved will enter into the kingdom, but the unsaved will be cast into the furnace of fire. The same idea is found in the “sheep and goats” parable (Matt. 25:32ff.).

Twice in this series of parables Jesus used the phrase “the end of the world” (Matt. 13:39, 49). He was not referring to the end of this “church age,” because the truth about the church was not shared with the disciples until later (Matt. 16:18). The “age” He referred to is the Jewish age at the close of the great tribulation described in Matthew 24:1–31 and Revelation 6–19. We must be careful not to “read into” these passages in Matthew the truths later given through Paul and the other apostles.

John MacArthur: Fire is God’s way of describing [Hell] because it is a tortuous, unrelieved kind of fire, more terrible than any fire that we would ever know. But fire describes the torment of the damned; blackness describes the torment of the damned, no light, no light ever, ever. No relief from the suffering, the agony and the pain, forever. . .

Some people think it’s just bad memories. No, it isn’t just bad memories. It isn’t just the inner thinking processes; it is that body as well. Transcendent, eternal bodies, greater than anything we have on this earth, are going to be given to the damned so that they can suffer in those bodies forever. And that’s the only reason that they’ll have those bodies.

* * * * *

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why don’t the wicked have any perception that they are being caught up in the dragnet of God’s imminent judgment?
- 2) Why does Jesus repeat this same type of warning as He had just delivered with the parable of the wheat and the tares?
- 3) Where else in the scriptures are angels involved in the process of the final judgment?
- 4) Are evangelical preachers today delivering sufficient warnings about the certainty and severity of eternal punishment in hell?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

S. Lewis Johnson: Now in the parables of Matthew chapter 13, he has been demonstrating that he is the lord of prophecy. He is showing himself to be the one who illuminates our age, and these parables are certainly marvelously illuminating, giving us pictures of our age that enable us to understand the things that have been transpiring since the Lord Jesus was here. He has said, for example, that the inter-advent period – that is, the period between the first coming of our Lord and the second coming of our Lord – is a period in which seed sowing shall take place. Now, he means by that the sowing of the seed of the word of God. I have in my notes at that point, may it be expository! . . .

The second thing the Lord Jesus has been saying will characterize this age is that the god of this age, or Satan, will craftily intermingle his sons among the sons of the kingdom by a seed sowing of his own. Now, that means that means that while the word of God is being propounded and expounded, and men are the recipients of its message, Satan will be sowing his seed and there will be the sons of his seed manifest among the sons of the kingdom. . .

The Lord Jesus has also been telling us, by the Parable of the Mustard Seed, that the outward form of the kingdom will develop from a lowly organism to a giant organization, and surely we have seen that in this age. He has also said, in connection with that, that it would become a comfortable sphere for the operation of wicked spirits, and the very fact that men who proclaim these unbiblical have a hearing in our largest and most respected denominations is evidence of the fulfillment of the words our Lord has spoken.

He has also stated that this mixed state within the kingdom of heaven in its mystery form, will continue to the end of the age. And then, there will be a final, separating judgment, in which the Lord Jesus will eliminate from his kingdom the things that offend. He will send forth the angels, and they shall gather them out and all of those who do iniquity in order that as we enter into the visibly manifested kingdom of God upon the earth, the Messianic kingdom, all who enter it will be believing men.

Now this is a disturbing picture. But it is true to history and experience. And if it is a disturbing picture, it is also a comforting picture. And it is an encouraging picture. Do you know why? Because if our Lord Jesus has so beautifully expounded the trends that have manifested themselves in this age, it is a comforting and encouraging thing, therefore, to look into the future and know that the remainder of the things that he prophesies will also come to pass just as certainly.

Therefore, we look into the future not with pessimism, but we look into the future with optimism. We know the things that are going to transpire upon the earth, but we know the Lord Jesus controls the affairs of history, and he shall bring them to their glorious consummation. So everything is optimistic for the Christian as he looks toward the future.

R. T. France: At least 20 species of fish are found in the Lake of Galilee, most of which could be eaten, though some were more favored than others. The Levitical rule that only fish “with fins and scales” could be eaten (Lev 11:9–12) would have ruled out eels and possibly cat-fish (common in Galilee) because of their resemblance to snakes (cf. 7:10). And of course some fish caught would be too small or diseased for human consumption. Hence the need to sort out the catch once landed. For “of every kind” cf. the weeds growing in with the wheat (vv. 24–30), and the inclusion of “bad as well as good” in the wedding feast (22:10). That the net is not pulled out of the lake until it is full is perhaps intended to emphasize, as in the parable of the weeds, that there will be no premature separation; it will wait until everything is ready in God’s good time.

D. A. Carson: Both the parable and its interpretation point to the last judgment. On the angels and the image of the fiery furnace, see comments at vv.41–42. But this does not mean that the parable and its interpretation are about the last judgment in the same way 25:1–13 (the ten virgins) and 25:31–46 (the sheep and the goats) are, the one warning of the need for readiness and the other establishing a basis for judgment. The focus here is on the state of the kingdom when the judgment occurs. Though it includes both the righteous and the wicked, a thorough sorting out will certainly take place.

Ray Stedman: The Case of the Great Dragnet

It is very important that we understand what Jesus means when he uses the term “the close of the age.” He is talking about a time which the prophets had specified would come at the close of the age of the Gentiles. Daniel said it would be seven years long and that during that time strange events would occur in human affairs. Jesus himself describes it in the twenty-fourth chapter of the book of Matthew. He tells us that the close of the age will be recognizable because it will be a time of "great tribulation such as has not been from the beginning of the world until now, no and never will be," (Matthew 24:21 KJV). You students of history know that there have been some terrible times in the past, but nothing like this. And it is during that last seven years of this present age, before our Lord returns in power and glory and with all his angels with him, as he himself describes, that this judgment takes place and the angels separate the good from the bad. . .

Weeping speaks of remorse and sorrow. Gnashing of teeth speaks of frustration and hostility and anger. It is all gathered up in the burning phrase "the furnace of fire." I do not know fully what that means. And I do not like judgment any more than you do. I have always been uneasy whenever I have had to deal with these passages which speak of hell and judgment, of death and of the wrath of God. I do not like them because I don't like to think that God will have to do this one of these days. But I have been helped greatly by recognizing that, in the New Testament, the one who speaks most often and most solemnly about judgment and wrath and flames, etc., is Jesus himself. The One with the outstretched arms, with the compassionate heart, who longs to heal sick and wounded humanity, is the One who speaks also about the ultimate end of those who turn their backs and refuse the healing grace of God.

So we must live with this passage the way it is. Our Lord is simply indicating that the issue sharpens as we draw to the close of the age and that at the end it will no longer be possible to hide. As he himself said in another connection, "That which is hidden shall be revealed. That which is spoken in closets shall be shouted from the housetops." That which has been hidden in obscurity and which we think we have gotten away with shall be exposed before the gaze of all. Nothing shall be hidden. Everything shall be uncovered. That is what this parable moves toward. <https://www.raystedman.org/new-testament/matthew/the-case-of-the-great-dragnet>

Keith Throop: Parable of the Dragnet

Notice a couple key differences between this earlier parable and the parable under consideration today:

- 1) Whereas the Parable of the Wheat and the Tares focuses upon the intervening time between Jesus' inauguration of the kingdom and the end of the age, during which both He and the devil are at work in the world, leading up to a final judgment, the focus of the Parable of the Dragnet is on the future judgment itself.
- 2) Whereas the Parable of the Wheat and the tares includes the destruction of the wicked, but lays stress in the end upon the way in which "the righteous will shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father," thus emphasizing the promise of a glorious future for believers, the Parable of the Dragnet places the emphasis upon the destruction of the wicked.

So, the primary focus of this parable is the future and final judgment of the wicked.

TEXT: Matthew 13:51-52

TITLE: SCHOOLING THE SCRIBES – COMPREHENSION AND COMMUNICATION

BIG IDEA:

GOLD NUGGETS OF KINGDOM TRUTH INCLUDE BOTH NEW AND OLD REVELATION

INTRODUCTION:

Donald Hagner: The key here—indeed the key to the parables themselves—is the combination of new and old. The parables, like Jesus’ other teaching about the kingdom, involve old and familiar things but newly juxtaposed with new elements. In view are not merely new hermeneutical applications of the Torah in new situations, with which scribes have always concerned themselves, nor new applications of old sayings of Jesus (pace Schlatter; cf. Schnackenburg, “Jeder Schriftgelehrte”), but the relation of the Torah to the genuinely new reality of the kingdom of God (cf. Mark 1:27), the “mysteries” concerning the purposes of God, hidden from the beginning but now being made known (cf. v 35). The Christian scribe, trained in the kingdom and prepared to teach others, must be able to use old and new together to bring clarity and understanding to the message of the kingdom in its application to the present. The old things and the new things of the Christian scribe are both indispensable to the gospel. . .

If the Church carries on the work of the disciples, there is a sense in which not only Scripture scholars but every Christian must bring out of his or her storeroom both old things and new things, i.e., must represent a Christianity encompassing both Testaments.

Richard Gardner: Jesus concludes his parable discourse by raising again the issue of understanding (v. 51) and by telling a parable about the task of those who understand (v. 52). Like the parable of the sower, this parable talks about communication—and in fact forms an inclusion with 13:3-9. The specific topic here is the role of the scribe, one who interprets God’s word for others (cf. the portrait of a scribe in Sirach 39:1-11, a portrait with which Matthew appears to be familiar). According to Matthew, there are scribes trained for the kingdom of heaven (the word for trained is related to the word for disciple), just as there were scribes in the Jewish community.

But who exactly does Matthew have in mind? In the broadest sense, every believer who studies and interprets the word is a scribe. In a narrower sense, scribe may refer to teachers who function like rabbis in Jesus’ community (cf. 23:34). In this latter sense, Matthew may be alluding to himself as well, giving us a glimpse of the way he viewed his role as the writer of a Gospel.

William Hendriksen: By means of his question Jesus gives the disciples the opportunity to ask for more information about the kingdom, in case there should still be matters that are not clear to them. Their answer implies that, as they themselves see it, their insight has been immeasurably deepened.

Now to acknowledge gratefully that one’s mind has been enriched is wonderful. It is, however, not enough. What has been received must also be imparted to others. That is the duty and responsibility of the true scribe, as the Master now indicates.

John Schultz: It rather seems that the Lord's intention was to emphasize the continuity between the Old Testament and the Kingdom. The Kingdom of Heaven is deeply rooted in the Old Testament. But those who only hold on to the Old Covenant and go no farther, those who are teachers of the law but not disciples, will not be able to understand the essence of the Kingdom.

John Walvoord: It is rather obvious that they did not understand the parable, except in their general teachings. It would have required much more perspective, the clear revelation of the present age, and, to some extent, perspective of history, for them to have really understood these parables. At this time, they did not understand that there would be an age between the two advents. Christ did not challenge their assurance, however, but rather told them that if they were truly instructed in these truths, they would be able to bring out of their treasure house of truth things both new and old.

I. (:51) COMPREHENSION OF THE MYSTERIES OF THE KINGDOM

“Have you understood all these things?’ They said to Him, ‘Yes.’ ”

D. A. Carson: This is the only place in this chapter where the disciples themselves are explicitly said to understand, and they say it by themselves. It is as wrong to say that Matthew has portrayed them as understanding everything as it is to say that they understood nothing. The truth lies between the extremes. The disciples certainly understood more than the crowds; on the other hand, they are shortly to be rebuked for their dullness (15:16). Like another positive response in this gospel, this one cannot be simply dismissed as presumptuous enthusiasm (as if they think they know everything when in fact they know nothing), nor taken at face value (as if their understanding were in fact mature).

J C Ryle: Personal application has been called the “soul” of preaching. A sermon without application is like a letter posted without a direction. It may be well-written, rightly dated, and duly signed. But it is useless, because it never reaches its destination. Our Lord's inquiry is an admirable example of real heart-searching application, “Have ye understood?” The mere form of hearing a sermon can profit no man, unless he comprehends what it means. He might just as well listen to the blowing of a trumpet, or the beating of a drum. His intellect must be set in motion, and his heart impressed. Ideas must be received into his mind. He must carry off the seeds of new thoughts. Without this he hears in vain. It is of great importance to see this point clearly. There is a vast amount of ignorance about it. There are thousands who go regularly to places of worship, and think they have done their religious duty, but never carry away an idea, or receive an impression. Ask them, when they return home on a Sunday evening, what they have learned, and they cannot tell you a word. Examine them at the end of a year, as to the religious knowledge they have attained, and you will find them as ignorant as the heathen. Let us watch our souls in this matter. Let us take with us to Church, not only our bodies, but our minds, our reason, our hearts, and our consciences. Let us often ask ourselves, “What have I got from this sermon? what have I learned? what truths have been impressed on my mind?” Intellect, no doubt, is not everything in religion. But it does not therefore follow that it is nothing at all.—The heart is unquestionably the main point. But we must never forget that the Holy Ghost generally reaches the heart through the mind.—Sleepy, idle, inattentive hearers, are never likely to be converted.

II. (:52) COMMUNICATION OF BOTH OLD AND NEW

“And Jesus said to them, ‘Therefore every scribe who has become a disciple of the kingdom of heaven is like a head of a household, who brings forth out of his treasure things new and old.’”

Grant Osborne: The items that come out of the storehouse, which God has placed in the disciples, relate to the kingdom truths that are central throughout ch. 13. This is why the “new” is first. The new “mysteries” must first be understood by the disciples (and the later church) and then transmitted to the believing community. In other words, the disciples will understand and teach both the truths of the old covenant (cf. 5:17–20) and the new covenant teachings of Jesus.

Stu Weber: It is important for Christians today to become familiar with both the Old and the New Testaments in order to reflect God's full revelation. The kingdom servant (and Christian disciple) is to be like the scribe who has become a disciple of the kingdom—continually opening the treasures of both old and new.

R. T. France: the specific combination of “things new and old” may have a further nuance as a warning against neglecting the old in the excitement of having discovered the new—as indeed the imagery of the parables of the treasure and the pearl might suggest. The message of the kingdom of heaven does not wipe the slate clean, but rather brings fulfillment to what has gone before, as Jesus has been at pains to demonstrate in 5:17–48. The “old” is not to be “abolished” (5:17), but to be judiciously integrated into the new perspective of the kingdom of heaven.

John Nolland: Here the disciples are allowed to occupy the role of scribes. As noted at 2:4, scribes functioned as scholars of the law and as teachers, and also had a role in the administration of justice. In Matthew's story the disciples are being established as repositories of Jesus' teaching in order to prepare them for the teaching role of 28:19. A judicial role will also become theirs (16:19; 18:18; 19:28).

Jeffrey Crabtree: The kingdom scribe possessed some truths of the kingdom of heaven from the O.T. and after hearing and believing the message of Jesus, he possessed more. All knowledge from his pre-kingdom past was not discarded. Rather, it remained useful and necessary information. See 5:17-48. With this, Jesus taught there is linkage between the Old and New Testaments. The trained kingdom scribe is able to understand the mysteries of the kingdom (v. 11) and “is able to maintain a balance between the continuity and the discontinuity existing between the era inaugurated by Jesus and that of the past” (Hagner 33A:402).

David Turner: When the disciples affirm their understanding, Jesus responds with what should be viewed as the eighth and final parable of Matt. 13, introduced with the characteristic formula “is like” (ὁμοίός ἐστιν, homoios estin; cf. 13:24, 31, 33, 44, 45, 47; Carson 1985). This parable is also about disciples of the kingdom, who are described as legal experts and likened to a homeowner (cf. 20:1; 21:33) who brings both new and old things from his storeroom (cf. 12:35). Jesus calls the disciples he has trained legal experts or scribes of the kingdom because their ministries will entail teaching the kingdom message as they draw upon what Jesus has taught them and teach their own disciples new truths tied to old truths (cf. 23:34; 5:17–48; 9:16–17; 11:11–13).

Warren Wiersbe: When Jesus had completed this series of parables, He asked His disciples if they understood them, and they confidently replied, “Yes, Lord.” Understanding involves responsibility. To explain this, the Lord added a final parable (Matt. 13:51–52) to remind them of their responsibilities.

They must be scribes who discover the truth. The scribes began as a noble group under the leadership of Ezra. Their purpose was to preserve the law, study it, and apply its truths to daily life. Over the years, their noble cause degenerated into a routine task of preserving traditions and man-made interpretations, and adding burdens to the lives of the people (Luke 11:46–52). They were so wrapped up in the past that they ignored the present! Instead of sharing living truth from God’s Word, they merchandised dead doctrines and “embalmed” traditions that could not help the people.

As believers, we do not search after truth, because we have truth in God’s Son (John 14:6) and God’s Word (John 17:17). We are taught by the Spirit of Truth (John 16:13) who is truth (1 John 5:6). We search into truth that we might discover more truth. We are scribes—students—who sit at the feet of Jesus and listen to His words. One joy of the Christian life is the privilege of learning God’s truth from God’s Word. But we must not stop there.

They must be disciples who do the truth. “Therefore every scribe who becomes a disciple of the kingdom of heaven” is a more accurate translation of Matthew 13:52. The scribe emphasizes learning, but the disciple emphasizes living. Disciples are doers of the Word (James 1:22ff.), and they learn by doing.

It is difficult to keep our lives balanced. We often emphasize learning at the expense of living. Or, we may get so busy serving God that we do not take time to listen to His Word. Every scribe must be a disciple, and every disciple must be a scribe.

They must be stewards who dispense the truth. The scribes preserved the law but did not invest it in the lives of the people. The treasure of the law was encrusted by man’s traditions. The seed was not planted so it could bear fruit. The “spiritual gold and silver” was not put to work so it could produce dividends. As Christians we should be conservative but not preservative.

The steward guards the treasure, but he also dispenses it as it is needed. He dispenses both the old and the new. New principles and insights are based on old truths. The new cannot contradict the old because the old comes out of the new (Lev. 26:10). The new without the old is mere novelty and will not last. But the old does no good unless it is given new applications in life today. We need both.

When Jesus finished these parables, He went across the sea in a storm and delivered the demoniacs in the country of the Gadarenes. Matthew recorded this in 8:28–34. It was then that Jesus went to His hometown of Nazareth, and this event Matthew recorded in 13:53–58.

Two things amazed the people of Nazareth: the Lord’s words and His works. However, they did not trust in Him, and this limited His ministry. What caused the people to doubt Him? They were too familiar with Him in a human way, for He had grown up in their midst. It was a case of knowing Him after the flesh (see 2 Cor. 5:16) and not having the spiritual discernment that God gives to those who will yield to Him (Matt. 11:25–30). These people walked by sight and not by faith.

But, if His own friends and family did not trust Him, what hope was there that the nation would believe on Him? Early in His ministry, Jesus had preached at Nazareth (Luke 4:16–31) and had been rejected, and now He was rejected again. This was His final visit to Nazareth; those villagers had no more opportunities. Jesus would be known as “Jesus of Nazareth,” and His followers would be called “Nazarenes,” but Nazareth would not receive Him. Matthew chose this event as a fitting close to the section “Rebellion against the King.”

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Are we overconfident regarding our understanding of God’s revelation?
- 2) How do we maintain the balance between continuity and discontinuity when it comes to God’s plan for the ages?
- 3) Are we actively engaged in learning divine truth just to build up our own knowledge or so we can apply the truth and impart that truth to others?
- 4) Can we afford to neglect the understanding of Old Testament revelation?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Walter Wilson: As we have seen, the tension between the old and the new, between continuity and separation, is one that has pervaded the entire discourse. This tension now comes to expression in the agency assigned by Jesus to the disciples in 13:52, which can be interpreted as an extension of the commission he gave them in chapter 10, where the theme of separation (as well as the motif of the house/householder) also figured prominently. In contrast to the crowds, then, for the disciples, the parables represent instruction, specifically instruction in the realities of the kingdom. Moreover, the ability to understand Jesus’s teaching enables them to become teachers themselves, a role that Jesus authorizes here. This aspect of the disciples’ role will be critical when he gives them their final commission, in 28:18–20 (also with μαθητεύω). The reference to the disciples’ teaching as something that each of them brings out of his “treasure” brings to mind 13:44 (cf. 12:35), which not only creates a thematic frame for 13:44–52 (binding the second triad of parables to the conclusion) but also suggests that, like the teaching of Jesus himself (13:34–35), the teaching of the disciples communicates “hidden” realities (cf. 10:26–27).

Charles Swindoll: At the conclusion of this string of parables, Jesus didn’t just drop the mic and walk off the stage, as it were. He cared that His disciples understood what He had been teaching them. In fact, Matthew 13:51-52 could be paraphrased, “Get it?” “Got it!” “Good.” Remember, Jesus was still in the house with His disciples. They were the ones who had heard the parables about the treasure in the field, the priceless pearl, and the dragnet. He wanted to make sure they “understood all these things” (13:51). A great teacher always gets feedback from His students to make sure they’ve “got it.” They had.

D. A. Carson: The point of comparison becomes clearer when we remember that a grammateus (“scribe,” GK 1208) in Jesus’ day might refer not only to rabbinic, Pharisaic scribes, who were theological interpreters of the Scriptures capable of rendering halakic decisions (rules for conduct), but to apocalyptic scribes. This is central to the thesis of David E. Orton (The Understanding Scribe). Matthew does not reject all “scribes” (NIV, “teachers of the law”) but only those from the rabbinic/Pharisaic matrix. Orton’s extended discussion (pp. 65–120) shows how “apocalyptic” scribes—scribes in the apocalyptic tradition—were devoted to understanding and interpreting hard sayings, dark sayings, apocalyptic sayings. Indeed, parables were part of their focus (cf. Sir 39:1–3). Since Jesus’ disciples have now understood his parables, they can legitimately be called “scribes” themselves, as can all of his disciples with similar understanding. Jesus adds an explanatory expression: the scribe with whom he is concerned mathēteutheis tē basileia tōn ouranōn (“has been instructed about the kingdom of heaven”). Whether the verbal form is construed as deponent (“has become a disciple”) or strictly passive (“has been made a disciple”), it is not at all clear that the dative expression means “about the kingdom of heaven”; in the one NT passage with similar construction (27:57), Joseph of Arimathea had become a disciple of Jesus, not about Jesus. By analogy, the scribes in this verse have become disciples of the kingdom of heaven.

If the preceding exegetical observations are correct, the points of comparison in the parable are two. The emphasis in the first part of the verse rests, not on the supposition that the scribe has been instructed about the kingdom and therefore understands, but that he has become a disciple of the kingdom and therefore his allegiance has been transformed. It is with such a person as with “the owner of a house”—a discipled scribe brings out of his storeroom new things and old.

The thēsauros (“storeroom,” GK 2565) so regularly stands for a man’s “heart,” its wealth and cherished values, that we must understand the discipled scribe to be bringing things out of his heart—out of his understanding, personality, and very being. What he brings out are kaina kai palaia, not “new things as well as old” (NIV), which suggests the new things have been added to the old, but “new things and old things”—a subtle touch that reminds the alert reader that in Matthew the gospel of the kingdom, though new, takes precedence over the old revelation and is its fulfillment (cf. 5:17–20). The new is not added to the old; there is but one revelation, and its focus is the “new” that has fulfilled and thereby renewed the old, which has thereby become new (Bonnard). Thus the OT promises of Messiah and kingdom, as well as OT law and piety, have found their fulfillment in Jesus’ person, teaching, and kingdom, and the scribe who has become a disciple of the kingdom now brings out of himself deep understanding of these things and their transformed perspective affecting all of life.

But the order is of great importance. The parable shows that a discipled scribe has this understanding, not that understanding generates discipleship. This conforms perfectly to the chapter’s structure. The disciples are not defined as having understanding but are described as having been given revelation and understanding (vv.11–12). When the disciples ask for an explanation, they are given it (vv.36–43) and thus claim some measure of understanding (v.51). “Therefore” (v.52) a discipled scribe is like, etc. Discipleship to Jesus, recognition of the revelation he is and brings, and submission to the reign he inaugurates and promises are necessary prerequisites to understanding and bringing out from oneself the rich treasures of the kingdom.

But there is a second point of comparison in the parable. The last one could have been made by stressing discipleship but omitting any reference to scribes. Scribes were “teachers of the Scriptures.” If they are likened to the owner of a house who brings treasures out of his storeroom, the further implication is unavoidable: they are not bringing forth things new and old for purely private or personal reasons but in their capacity as teachers. Jesus' disciples claim they have understood what he has been teaching. "Therefore," he responds, "disciplined teachers of the Scriptures, if they have understood, must themselves bring out of their storeroom the treasures now theirs so as to teach others (cf. Trotter, "Understanding and Stumbling"). Implicitly this serves as "a warning against neglecting the old in the excitement of having discovered the new—as indeed the imagery of the parables of the treasure and the pearl might suggest" (France [NICNT]).

This interpretation admirably fits in with three other Matthean themes.

1. The disciples have a major responsibility in evangelizing and making disciples, both during Jesus' ministry (ch. 10) and after his departure (28:18–20).
2. In the latter instance, they are told to "disciple" the nations and teach them everything Jesus has commanded them: i.e., the focus of their mission is Jesus and the revelation—the new "fulfillment" revelation—he has brought.
3. This interpretation, which places some teaching responsibility on the disciples, also fits the purpose of the parables described in the comments at vv.12–17, 34–35. Indeed, part of the reason for private instruction may again be linked to the place of Jesus' earthly ministry in redemptive history, for what he tells his disciples in secret they are to proclaim from the rooftops (10:27). Jesus explains the parables to his disciples in private; they are to bring out of their treasure rooms "new things and old." Thus they are to understand the antecedent Scriptures correctly and show how they point to Jesus the Messiah and the dawning of the promised kingdom.

If this interpretation of v.52 is correct, then though "disciples" in this chapter most probably refers to the Twelve, they epitomize the church to come. In that event, "disciples" does not refer to a special group of "teachers of the law" within Matthew's community (see comments at 23:34) but to those who by Matthew's day were called Christians. Just as they have been aligned with prophets and righteous men from past ages (e.g., 5:11–12; 10:41), so are they aligned with "teachers of the law." In fact, only Jesus' "disciples" are able to bring forth new things and old; the Jewish teachers of the law could bring forth only the old.

John MacArthur: In fact, you could translate it, "You are now disciplined, biblical scholars and teachers." That's what a scribe was, really. He was a student, an interpreter, a transmitter of Scripture, he was known as a theologian, a lawyer and a teacher and preacher. They were members of the Sanhedrin. They were acknowledged authorities on the Old Testament and tradition. They were called Rabbi. They were influential.

And He's saying, "I've done the same to you, just like the Jews do with their scribes, I've disciplined you, I've made you into disciplined, biblical scholars and teachers. And now, here's what you're like –" verse 52 – "You're like a man who is the head of a house who brings out of his storehouse things new and old."

What do you mean? They knew the Old Testament and now they had heard the mysteries of the kingdom. They knew the old covenant truth and the dawn of the new covenant was coming upon them. They could not only tell them about the Old Testament and Jewish tradition, but they could dispense the new mysteries of the kingdom, right? They were one up on the scribes. All the scribes had was the old stuff, the old stuff, the old stuff.

But He says, “You’re the householder who has the old and the new and in perfect balance. God called you, and trained you, and prepared you to spread it out.” That’s an interesting verb that’s used there, it says the man who is a head of a house brings forth. It literally means to fling out, or to scatter abroad.

In other words, you’ve got all this treasure now, fling it out. It talks about liberality and richness. There’s a lot there. Now that you’ve been discipled and now that you are trained biblical scholars and teachers, fling it out. Give them the Old and the New in perfect balance, that which God said in the past and that which is new in the form of the kingdom.

TEXT: Matthew 13:53-58

TITLE: NO HOME COURT ADVANTAGE FOR PROPHETS – JUST REJECTION

BIG IDEA:

FAMILIARITY BREEDS CONTEMPT IN JESUS' HOME TOWN OF NAZARETH – THOSE CLOSEST TO US RESPOND IN HURTFUL REJECTION AND UNBELIEF

INTRODUCTION:

Jeffrey Crabtree: Verse 53 brings the kingdom parables to an end and marks the end of Matthew's third major block of teaching materials (cf. 7:28; 11:1). This verse also introduces the next section. The following verses document Jesus' continuing ministry in the midst of increasing resistance against Himself and His message.

Richard Gardner: The two stories that comprise 13:53 - 14:12 come from Mark 6:1-6 and Mark 6:14-29. (Matthew has already used the intervening material in Mark 6:7-13 in the mission discourse.) What we have in these accounts is a two-panel unit on the fate of prophets. Panel 1 features Jesus' rejection in Nazareth, and panel 2 reports the beheading of John the Baptist in Herod's court. Linking the two stories and the two figures is the fact that both Jesus and John are identified as prophets (13:57; 14:5); the note that Jesus' powers evoke memories of John (14:1-2); and the reader's awareness that Jesus' rejection will lead to a fate similar to John's (cf. 17:9-13).

OUTLINE

- Jesus in His Hometown, 13:53-58
- John in Herod's Court, 14:1-12

Donald Hagner: The passage is thus structured in the following sequence:

- (1) concluding formula and transition (v 53);
- (2) the teaching of Jesus in Nazareth (v 54a);
- (3) the response and questions of the people (v 54b-57a);
- (4) the response of Jesus in a proverbial logion (v 57b); and
- (5) comment on the resultant paucity of miracles (v 58).

The five successive questions in (3) are particularly notable, especially the parallelism of the first and fifth (πόθεν τούτω, lit. "whence to this one"); the three center questions have to do with Jesus' family. Just before the questions is the reference to the crowds being "amazed" (ἐκπλήσσεσθαι); just after is the reference to their being "scandalized" (ἐσκανδαλίζοντο). The references to πατρίς, "home town," in vv 54 and 57 unify the passage. These correspondences thus reflect a chiastic structure.

R. T. France: This is Jesus' only recorded return to Nazareth after his public ministry began down by the lake. Luke 4:16-30 tells the story at length and in a more dramatic form, culminating in an attempt on Jesus' life; he has moved it out of its natural place in the narrative⁴ in order to use it as a "frontispiece" for his account of the Galilean ministry. But in Matthew and Mark it fits more naturally, with reports already having reached Nazareth of the "wisdom and miracles" which Jesus has been displaying down in the lakeside area and beyond. He comes back to them now as the "local boy made good," and they react with the predictable scepticism of a small village community. Nazareth apparently joins Chorazin, Bethsaida and Capernaum (11:20–24) in the inglorious roll of the communities which failed to repent despite the evidence of the miracles.

David Turner: Jesus’s rejection in Nazareth provides a sad yet fitting introduction to the narrative block 13:53 – 17:27. Jesus has made it clear that the message and messengers of his kingdom will often be rejected (cf. 5:10–12; 10:14–39; 11:12; 12:2). This rejection begins with Jesus himself (cf. 5:11; 8:34; 9:3, 11, 34; 11:19–24; 12:10, 14, 24–45) and includes even his hometown, Nazareth (cf. 2:23; 4:13; 21:11; 26:71; John 1:45; Acts 2:22; 3:6; 4:10; 6:14; 10:38; 22:8; 24:5; 26:9), which he left for Capernaum to begin his ministry (Matt. 4:13). Chiastic analysis of this pericope has merit, since the pericope begins and ends with references to Jesus’s hometown (πατρίς, patris, 13:54, 57) and focuses in its center on the cynical questions from the Nazarenes (13:54c–56).

Leon Morris: Although Matthew has not tried to disguise the fact that there was some opposition to Jesus from the first, his book so far has been mostly concerned with the wonderful teaching of Jesus and with the way people flocked around him to hear him teach and to see the miracles he did. But this did not last. Matthew now makes it clear that the opposition grew. There were still faithful and loyal followers, but in these chapters he tells us of people who failed to respond in the right way. We see the opposition growing and becoming increasingly bitter; in time it would lead to the cross. Matthew begins with two stories of rejection: the rejection of Jesus by the people of Nazareth and the rejection of John the Baptist, slain at the hands of Herod. These two stories make a fitting introduction to the next section of this Evangelist’s narrative.

(:53) TRANSITION

*“And it came about that when Jesus had finished these parables,
He departed from there.”*

John Nolland: ‘It so happened that when Jesus had finished’ repeats language that Matthew has already used in 7:28 – 8:1 and 11:1 to mark the conclusion of major blocks of teaching in the Gospel. The language will serve the same role in 19:1; 26:1.

I. (:54-56) REJECTION IS HURTFUL

A. (:54a) Home Town Ministry Creates a Buzz

1. Return to Nazareth to Teach in the Synagogue

“And coming to His home town He began teaching them in their synagogue,”

Grant Osborne: Here Jesus leaves the area around Capernaum and returns to his hometown of Nazareth, about fifteen miles west of the southern tip of the lake.

Charles Swindoll: The journey to Nazareth would have taken two full days on foot. And the trek would have taken Jesus southwest about 40 miles uphill!

Richard Gardner: Nazareth is implied (cf. 2:23; 4:12-13), but the vagueness of the language in the Greek text (literally his native place) lets the story that follows typify Israel as a whole (cf. v. 57).

Donald Hagner: Jesus had left Nazareth after the arrest of John the Baptist, moving to Capernaum (cf. 4:13). Although there are indications of a wide ministry (e.g., 9:35; 11:1), the narratives focus on Capernaum and the area around the Sea of Galilee (14:13 assumes his return to this area). At this point in the narrative, however, Jesus returns to his πατρίδα, “home town” (the word can mean “home country” or “home territory,” but the context suggests “home town”), and teaches (ἐδίδασκεν, “was teaching,” i.e., for some time, or less probably inceptive, “began to teach”) “in their synagogue” (ἐν τῇ συναγωγῇ αὐτῶν), probably the very place in which he had worshiped as a young man before embarking on his ministry. Although no attention is given to the emotions of Jesus, this must have been a particularly momentous occasion for him. Here τῇ συναγωγῇ αὐτῶν, “their synagogue,” is not, as elsewhere (4:23), the synagogue of the Jews, thus reflecting a break with Judaism (contra Luz), but merely the synagogue of the people of Nazareth.

R. T. France: This synagogue visit does not evoke a welcoming response, and from this point on we shall hear no more of Jesus teaching in synagogues.

2. Response of Astonishment

“so that they became astonished, and said,”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Their reaction at first was surprise. They knew him. He had lived there most of His life. His teaching ability, and probably the subject matter as well (Evans, Matthew 284), caught them by surprise (cf. 7:28; Lk. 4:24; Is. 50:4). They knew Jesus had not formally studied under recognized rabbis. How did He know so much about the kingdom? What right did He have to preach the arrival of the kingdom of heaven or call them to repentance?

His healing miracles also surprised them (Mk. 6:5). They wondered how He was able to perform miracles. Compare this with the Pharisees’ doubts and comments in 12:24. They too questioned the source of His power (Osborne 550).

A. T. Robertson: What the people of Nazareth could not comprehend was how one with the origin and environment of Jesus here in Nazareth could possess the wisdom which he appeared to have in his teaching . . . It was unpardonable for Jesus not to be commonplace like themselves.

B. (:54b-56) Hearts of Skepticism Instead of Faith

Walter Wilson: Between the two πόθεν questions (13:54c, 56b) are three οὐχ(ί) questions (13:55a, 55b, 56a) that bring up the matter of Jesus’s family ties.

1. (:54b) Key Issue = Source of Wisdom and Power

“Where did this man get this wisdom, and these miraculous powers?”

John Nolland: The Pharisees have already raised the question of where it all comes from in 9:34; 12:23, and answered in terms of power from the evil one.

Donald Hagner: Their amazement, however, did not move them to faith but instead provoked skepticism. Their initial question, to be sure, expresses a degree of wonder and, finding no obvious answer, testifies inadvertently to the unique reality and authority represented by Jesus and his message.

2. (:55-56a) Depracating Questions Due to Familiarity with Jesus' Family

- a. (:55a) Tone of Deprecation Regarding Jesus' Father
"Is not this the carpenter's son?"

David Turner: Joseph is traditionally viewed as a carpenter, but the word τέκτων (tektōn; cf. Mark 6:3) means simply "builder," and in ancient Galilee this would likely entail working with stone (BDAG 995; K. M. Campbell 2005).

- b. (:55b) Tone of Deprecation Regarding Jesus' Mother
"Is not His mother called Mary,"
- c. (:55c) Tone of Deprecation Regarding Jesus' Brothers
"and His brothers, James and Joseph and Simon and Judas?"

Craig Blomberg: Though they do not yet support him, James and Jude (the abbreviated form of Judas) will later distinguish themselves as Christian leaders (on James, see Acts 15:1-29) and as writers of inspired epistles. Only here does Matthew indicate that Jesus had an unspecified number of sisters as well.

- d. (:56a) Tone of Deprecation Regarding Jesus' Sisters
"And His sisters, are they not all with us?"

3. (:56b) Key Issue Repeated

"Where then did this man get all these things?"

Donald Hagner: The point is the same: Jesus and his family are well known. And thus the initial question is repeated: "How did all of these things [ταῦτα πάντα] come to this man?" Although that question remains unanswered, it is clear from the following statement that they found it intolerable that Jesus spoke as he did with the undeniable implication of his own self-importance.

Walter Wilson: Specifically, it appears that the townspeople have interpreted Jesus's words and actions as a claim to a form of honor inconsistent with their estimation of his status, an estimation based on their understanding of his kinship ties. It may also be based on their estimation of Joseph's occupation, insofar as manual laborers were sometimes disparaged for their lack of wisdom, as in Sir 38:24-27 (also with τέκτων).

II. (:57) REJECTION SHOULD BE ANTICIPATED

A. Hardened Opposition

"And they took offense at Him."

D. A. Carson: "They took offense at him" (eskandalizonto en autō), i.e., found in him obstacles to faith, even though the biggest obstacles were in their own hearts. It is sad that every time in the NT somebody is "scandalized" by someone, that someone is Jesus (see TDNT, 7:349; cf. 11:6; 26:31, 33; Mk 6:3; Lk 7:23).

Robert Gundry: The townspeople's taking offense at Jesus displays their lack of understanding: they understand neither the source of Jesus' wisdom and miracles nor the identity of his true family. Since to take offense means to fall into a trap, lack of understanding has trapped the townspeople in unbelief.

B. Honor Not Given

“But Jesus said to them,

‘A prophet is not without honor except in his home town, and in his own household.’”

Craig Blomberg: Throughout Christian history many of Jesus' followers have experienced the truth of this teaching: those who have known them best from an early age on are often least willing to accept them as spiritually gifted or empowered.

III. (:58) REJECTION RESTRICTS PRIVILEGE

A. Withholding Miracles

“And He did not do many miracles there”

Richard Gardner: The unbelief that denies honor to Jesus denies something to Nazareth as well (v. 58). It leads Jesus to restrict his ministry there, so that the people get only a smattering of all that Jesus has to give.

Charles Swindoll: As a result of their unbelief, Jesus did few miracles in Nazareth. On the one hand, we can look at this as an act of judgment – their rejection of Jesus would mean that their sick and oppressed would not receive the blessings of healing and deliverance. On the other hand, this withholding of miracles can be interpreted as an act of mercy toward the people of his hometown – the greater the revelation of Jesus' power and majesty, the greater the guilt for their rejection of Him as the long-awaited Messiah.

B. Warning against Unbelief

“because of their unbelief.”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Jesus responded to their rejection with a proverbial saying that means much the same as “over familiarity breeds contempt” (v. 57). This saying is repeated in John 4:44, but there it evidently refers to His rejection by the whole of Galilee (Carson, John 236). Even though those who knew Him best as brother, neighbor, friend, or business acquaintance in Nazareth rejected Him, still Jesus claimed to be a prophet. As such, He deserved their honor (Hendriksen 582).

Not only did the general population of Nazareth reject Him so did His siblings (“in his own house”). They did not believe in Him until after His resurrection. Luke mentioned that His mother and brothers were in the upper room as part of the one hundred and twenty (Acts 1:14). Jesus appeared to James (1 Cor. 15:7), who eventually became a key leader in the Jerusalem church (Acts 15:13; 21:18; Gal. 1:19; 2:9, 12) and authored the N.T. book that bears his name (Jas. 1:1). Jude (Judas), who identified himself as James' brother (Jude 1), also later wrote a short letter that bears his name. Nothing specific is known of the other brothers or sisters. One might suspect that given their stage in life as young adults, the sisters might have had family responsibilities that kept them from being in Jerusalem with the others on Pentecost.

Unbelief was the problem (v. 58) in Nazareth and this unbelief was their own choosing (Mk. 6:6). According to Mark, Jesus marveled at the unbelief of His family and acquaintances even as

He had marveled at the faith of the centurion (Mt. 8:10). The result of such unbelief was few healings and no recorded kingdom conversions. Unbelief kept Him from helping the needy. Unbelief also kept His family and acquaintances from gaining understanding of His message and joining His kingdom (vv. 13-15). What sad days! Those who had the greatest light will receive the harshest judgment (11:20-24).

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Why is it difficult for our own family members to recognize and appreciate our spiritual gifts?
- 2) When we have the privilege of being exposed to so much good exegetical teaching, how is it possible for familiarity to lead us to take truth for granted?
- 3) Why didn't Jesus use miracles to try to turn around their unbelief?
- 4) Why is it sometimes the most difficult to evangelize the people who know us the best?

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

Grant Osborne: Exegetical Outline

I. Jesus' Return to Nazareth (13:54b)

- A. His purpose: to teach
- B. Their reaction: astonishment

II. The Response of the People (13:54c–57a)

- A. Their questions (vv. 54c–56)
 1. Two “where” questions on the source of his wisdom and deeds
 2. Three “is not” questions regarding his family
- B. Result—scandalized (v. 57a)

III. The Response of Jesus (13:57b–58)

- A. In word—a prophet without honor (v. 57b)
- B. In deed—few miracles (v. 58)

Familiarity Breeds Contempt:

The people among whom Jesus grew up expected him to remain the village carpenter. In that society there was virtually zero socioeconomic mobility, and everyone spent their lives in the occupation their fathers and grandfathers handed down to them. While it is true that many prophets came from similar peasant backgrounds, they too were rejected by their former friends. The Jewish people in general also tried to force Jesus into their narrow expectations of what a Messiah should be (i.e., both a faithful practitioner of the written and oral Torah and a political conqueror). When Jesus refused to fit their preconceptions, they also turned on him. In fact, this prepares for the next section, where John's death at the hands of Herod foreshadows Jesus' death at the hands of the Jewish leaders.

Donald Hagner: The primary mistake of the people of Nazareth was their automatic limitation of Jesus to the familiar framework in which they had previously known him. This made them unable to evaluate Jesus in terms of his message and deeds. It made impossible a fair consideration of who Jesus was and what he had come to offer. Familiarity with Jesus became a liability, since he was thereby forced into a preconceived framework. In this respect outsiders have a distinct advantage. If we widen the scope of this observation, it can be seen again clearly in one of the major transitions of the Gospel: the transition of the kingdom from the Jews to the Gentiles. For it is just this kind of familiarity and set of preconceptions that have been responsible for Jewish unbelief in the gospel, and the lack of the same may have made the Gentiles more objective in their understanding and thus more receptive of the good news of the kingdom. This is a generalization, of course, but it may be true more often than not that familiarity and all that goes with it do not dispose people to see what is really before their eyes. But tragically the central mysteries of the gospel, the Messiah who suffers death on the cross and the centrality of that death to the realization of the kingdom, violated Jewish preconceptions and thus prohibited their reception of the gospel (cf. Rom 9:32–33).

David Turner: Unbelief is always sad, but here it is especially pathetic. Matthew 12:46–50 and 13:54–58 bracket the parabolic discourse by relativizing familial and social relationships (W. Davies and Allison 1991: 461). Jesus, like most people who return home, arrives with memories and acquaintances. But his fellow residents of Nazareth refuse to accept his kingdom mission because they remember his humble beginnings. Perhaps there is an element of jealousy in their unbelief. But they are not merely quibbling over the anomaly of Jesus's humble roots and his powerful ministry; they are rejecting God's saving rule.

Warren Wiersbe: Two things amazed the people of Nazareth: the Lord's words and his works. However, they did not trust in Him, and this limited His ministry. What caused the people to doubt Him? They were too familiar with Him in a human way, for He had grown up in their midst. It was a case of knowing Him after the flesh (see 2 Cor. 5:16) and not having the spiritual discernment that God gives to those who will yield to Him (Matt. 11:25-30). These people walked by sight and not by faith.

But if His own friends and family did not trust Him, what hope was there that the nation would believe on Him? Early in His ministry, Jesus had preached at Nazareth (Luke 4:16-31) and had been rejected, and now He was rejected again. This was His final visit to Nazareth; those villagers had no more opportunities. Jesus would be known as "Jesus of Nazareth," and His followers would be called "Nazarenes," but Nazareth would not receive Him.

J. Ligon Duncan: No Honor in Nazareth

When we come to Matthew, verses 53 to 58, we come to a turning point in Matthew's presentation of the ministry of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is at this point that the indifference which had characterized some who had heard the Lord Jesus turns into open opposition to His gospel preaching. There had always been some who were indifferent and even hostile to what the Lord Jesus was teaching and preaching. Now, however, the crowds in general are befuddled and opposed to what Jesus is saying. . .

- I. Even people who saw Jesus perform miracles reject Him as Messiah and Savior.
- II. Familiarity breeds contempt.
- III. Unbelief is a poison.

Jon Courson: Unbelief: Its Cause and Cure

Unbelief is hazardous to your health. In this passage, we see it affecting people in three ways:

I. Unbelief Blinds Your Eyes

II. Unbelief Poisons Our Hearts

Unbelief not only blinds our eyes, which resulted in skepticism, but poisons our hearts, which resulted in cynicism . . .

III. Unbelief Robs You of Your Joy – leading to bitterness

Brother Rory: The Power of Unbelief

For we are about to embark on truth being presented to 8 different groups or individuals.

- 1) His Hometown (13:53-58)
- 2) Herod (14:1-12)
- 3) The 5,000 (14:13-21)
- 4) The disciples (14:22-33)
- 5) The Jerusalem Scribes and Pharisees (15:1-20)
- 6) The Canaanite Woman (15:21-28)
- 7) The 4,000 (15:29-39)
- 8) The Pharisees and Sadducees (16:1-4)

And of all of those 8 opportunities only two will prove to be successful.
Only the disciples and the Canaanite woman exercise true faith in Christ.
The rest all reject.

Some are certainly hard soil, some rocky, and some weedy,
But all end up rejecting Christ.

And Matthew's point is validated that it is not the fault of the seed
And it is not the fault of the sower, but is the fault of the soil.

I. They Saw (13:54a)

“He came to His hometown and began teaching them in their synagogue, so that they were astonished”

II. They Speculated (13:54b-56)

III. They Stumbled (13:57)

“And they took offense at Him”

IV. They Suffered (13:58)

“He did not do many miracles there because of their unbelief.”

TEXT: Matthew 14:1-12

TITLE: THE BEHEADING OF JOHN THE BAPTIST – SPEAKING TRUTH TO DEPRAVED POWER CAN COST YOU DEARLY

BIG IDEA:

DEPRAVED POWER COWERS IN FEAR, CONCEALS A GUILTY CONSCIENCE AND COMPLIES WITH MANIPULATIVE SCHEMES

INTRODUCTION:

Van Parunak: Now we enter the third subsection of the Proclamation section. Having documented the opposition and presented the choice that is to be made, Matthew sets off the section with two episodes.

- In the first, King Herod kills John the Baptist, the one who introduced the Lord.
- In the last, Peter confesses our Lord, John's most famous disciple, as the Son of God.

We must remember that "Son of God" throughout the OT is the title assigned to the promised royal Son of David. Taken together, these two episodes remind us: the kings of this world will try to stamp out God's purpose to set up his kingdom, but the true king has arrived and is recognized by his own people. The material between these bookends reminds us of the preparation in ch. 4-11 and the rejection in ch. 12-13. In particular, we have two sections of miracles and boat rides that remind us of the evidence collected in ch. 8-9, evidence that our Lord cited to John the Baptist when he sent early in ch. 11 to ask whether Jesus were in fact the promised Messiah. These alternate with two sections of Pharisaic rejection that recall ch. 12. The first of these includes a reference to the Gentiles, which was the centerpiece of the rejections in ch. 12.

Charles Swindoll: The story begins with a birthday party, involves a sexually provocative dance, turns on the strangest of all birthday gifts, and ends with the senseless beheading of a godly prophet by order of a lustful, creepy king. From the prominent figure in this story we can learn some valuable lessons about folly and sin – and their terrible consequences.

Walter Wilson: The question of Jesus's identity (a major theme for much of chapters 11–16) is raised yet again, this time through the words of a new character, Herod Antipas, who responds to reports about Jesus and his miraculous powers with speculation that Jesus is in fact John the Baptist raised from the dead. That Herod would have reason to feel anxious about such an eventuality is shown by the following scene, which serves as both a digression and a flashback within the narrative. The audience watches as Herod has John imprisoned (cf. 4:12), learning that he did so because John had condemned Herod for marrying his brother's wife. Although Herod initially refrained from executing John (on account of his fear of the people), at a banquet for his birthday a pair of women within his own household manipulate him into doing so. The description of the banquet itself, meanwhile, further illustrates the depravity as well as the viciousness of those who oppose the kingdom of God. The scene concludes with an explanation of how John's disciples buried his body and reported to Jesus what had happened. . .

The characterization of Herod in 14:1–12 is familiar against this background,

- his behavior being guided by fear (14:5),
- recklessness (14:7),

- grief (14:9), and
- inappropriate desires, both for Herodias (14:3) and her daughter (14:6),
- his relationship with the former entailing an impious disregard for the law (14:4).

He hosts a depraved and gruesome banquet, during which he has John executed without due process. Worst of all, he yields his agency to a pair of women from his own household. In all these respects, he contrasts both with the fearless, ascetic John and with the true king, Jesus.

Grant Osborne: Herod represents the leaders of Israel both in his false understanding of Jesus and in his persecution and murder of God’s messengers—in this case, John the Baptist. At the same time, John represents Jesus in his bold proclamation and willingness to suffer the consequences and also in his arrest and martyrdom at the hand of God’s enemies. So this intensifies the rejection of 13:54–58 and demonstrates how far that rejection will go, namely, to death. . .

A major theme in this unit is the striking parallels between the death of John and that of Jesus (cf. 17:11–13). Davies and Allison calls it a “christological parable.” John was the messianic forerunner, and that means that he was also the forerunner of messianic suffering and death.

R. T. France: The careful reader of Matthew might reflect on the contrast between this degenerate scene of Antipas’ lavish feast with its sordid and tragic outcome and the wholesome simplicity of the “feast” which will follow in vv. 13–21.

I. (:1-2) COWERING IN FEAR -- MIRACLES OF JESUS MISAPPLIED TO THE GHOST OF JOHN THE BAPTIST

A. (:1) Herod Hears of the Ministry of Jesus

“At that time Herod the tetrarch heard the news about Jesus,”

David Thompson: Now I carefully want us to observe the opening prepositional phrase of verse 1 -- “at that time.” This has some far-reaching ramifications. At the time when Jesus Christ had taught and had done so many wonderful miracles and His reputation was widely spread and He had been nationally rejected, including being rejected by those from His hometown, we then come to this part of the narrative which deals with the murder of John the Baptist.

Dispensationally, Christ had just given a series of parables which demonstrated that He was going to leave and things on earth were going to become evil. Christ wants to show that God’s true servants will not be loved at this time; in fact, they will be hated, persecuted, and at times even killed. The evil will escalate.

ONE WHO STANDS FOR THE TRUTH OF GOD AND PROCLAIMS THE TRUTH OF GOD WILL BE HATED AND THERE WILL BE THOSE WHO WANT HIM DESTROYED.

When real righteousness is preached, it is not embraced by the majority of people. It offends most people and they want to destroy the one who is proclaiming that which is true and righteous.

Jeffrey Crabtree: This Herod was Herod Antipas, a son of King Herod the Great (2:1). Among his siblings were a full brother Archelaus and three half-brothers, Aristobulus and two named Philip (2:22; ISBE II:693-694). Herodias, the daughter of Aristobulus, married one Philip (Mt. 14:3) and their daughter, Salome, married the other Philip, Philip the Tetrarch (Lk. 3:1). Herod Antipas divorced his first wife and Herodias divorced Philip in order to marry each other (A.D. 27). Thus, both husbands of Herodias were her uncles. John the Baptist publicly denounced this marriage and made these two his enemies. . .

Jesus had very little respect for Herod Antipas and no fear. He would not run from Herod because He still had ministry to complete (Lk. 13:31-32). Jesus called Herod a “fox” and refused to be intimidated by his sly, nocturnal ways. At His own trial Jesus refused even to speak to Herod when Herod questioned Him. Herod and his soldiers shamefully treated Jesus (Lk. 23:11). Antipas and Herodias were the N.T. counterparts of the O.T. Ahab and Jezebel (1 Kg. 18:17 - 19:1).

D. A. Carson: Herod Antipas, son of Herod the Great, was tetrarch (v.1), not king—though doubtless “king” was used popularly (Mk 6:14). His tetrarchy included Galilee (4:12) and Perea (19:1). Because John the Baptist’s ministry had been exercised in Perea (Jn 1:28), he had come under Herod’s power. Herod had been ruling more than thirty years, and at this time he lived primarily at Tiberias on the southwest shore of Galilee. Thus Jesus’ ministry was taking place largely within Herod’s jurisdiction.

How the reports of Jesus’ ministry reached Herod is unknown; it may have been through Cuza (Lk 8:3). So extensive a ministry could not have been kept from Herod for long. His conclusion, that this was John the Baptist risen from the dead (v.2), is of great interest. It reflects an eclectic set of beliefs, one of them the Pharisaic understanding of resurrection. During his ministry John had performed no miracles (Jn 10:41); therefore Herod ascribes the miracles in Jesus’ ministry not to John but to John “risen from the dead.” Herod’s guilty conscience apparently combined with a superstitious view of miracles to generate this theory.

B. (:2) Herod Loses His Mind Due to Superstition and a Bad Conscience

“and said to his servants, ‘This is John the Baptist; he has risen from the dead; and that is why miraculous powers are at work in him.’”

R. T. France: The idea of a ghostly or even physical return of someone who has had a special influence, especially if that influence has been prematurely cut off by violent death, is found in various cultures (think Elijah, Nero, King Arthur, Elvis). This is popular superstition rather than a worked out theology of resurrection such as that of the Pharisees. Matthew does not say explicitly that Antipas felt personally threatened (“haunted”) by the returning John, but that is probably implied, and Jesus’ “withdrawal” in v. 13 suggests that he regarded Antipas as a potential threat to himself (cf. Luke 13:31).

Bruce Hurt: These were “Works of power.” Herod clearly associates the supernatural acts of this person (he thinks is John) with the fact that he has returned from the supernatural. He knows that John did not manifest miraculous powers during his life, so his distorted theology determines this has to be a result of his resurrection so that now he possesses powers he did not possess in his natural state.

Leon Morris: In any case superstition and a bad conscience make a strong couple, and they led Herod into this curious affirmation.

II. (:3-5) CONCEALING A GUILTY CONCIENCE -- MEMORY OF HEROD FLASHES BACK TO REBUKE DELIVERED BY JOHN THE BAPTIST

Robert Gundry: Herod's lack of understanding triggers a flashback to John's death.

A. (:3) Instigation of Herodias

“For when Herod had John arrested, he bound him, and put him in prison on account of Herodias, the wife of his brother Philip.”

Tom Stevenson: [The tyrant] was in general paranoid, cruel, and unstable, both psychologically and emotionally ... unlike the good king, he killed citizens; he was dominated by evil advisers and women ... he was a creature of lust ... he disregarded the state laws and institutions, ruling in an arbitrary, repressive fashion according to his moods.

John MacArthur: The palace [at Machaerus] was located on a mountain higher even than the city of Jerusalem and offered a beautiful and dramatic view. But the dungeon was dug deep into the earth beneath, and archaeologists have discovered the many places where prisoners were chained to the walls. There was no natural light and only dank, foul air to breathe. Here John the Baptist was incarcerated for about a year until his execution.

B. (:4) Indictment Delivered by John the Baptist

“For John had been saying to him, ‘It is not lawful for you to have her.’”

Donald Hagner: John opposed Herod's marriage to his brother's wife, not simply on the grounds of the impropriety of divorce and remarriage (cf. 19:9) but on the basis of the OT prohibition reflected in Lev 18:16 and 20:21 (in the case of a childless widow, such a “levirate” marriage was obligatory; see Deut 25:5; cf. Matt 22:24). This lies behind John's strong statement: οὐκ ἔξεστίν σοι ἔχειν αὐτήν, “it is not lawful for you to have her.” The imperfect tense of ἔλεγεν implies repetition: “he kept saying.” Herod would not tolerate John's condemnation and so had him arrested.

William Barclay: It is always dangerous to rebuke a despot, and by his rebuke John signed his own death warrant. He was a man who fearlessly rebuked evil wherever he saw it. When the Scottish reformer John Knox was standing for his principles against Queen Mary, she demanded whether he thought it right that the authority of rulers should be resisted. His answer was: ‘If princes exceed their bounds, madam, they may be resisted and even deposed.’ The world owes much to the great men and women who took their lives in their hands and had the courage to tell even kings and queens that there is a moral law which they break at their peril.

C. (:5) Impediment to Execution

“And although he wanted to put him to death, he feared the multitude, because they regarded him as a prophet.”

Jeffrey Crabtree: Matthew records that Herod was afraid to kill John because of the people. They had great respect for John (3:5-6). The general population considered John a prophet, even as they did Jesus (16:14). Herod had enough political savvy to know that killing John could have enormous political fallout if the people turned against him. Josephus reports that Herod was motivated by political fears when he arrested John, afraid John had such influence that he could turn the people against him (Maier, 271-272). With John preaching to large crowds and publically denouncing Herod's sins, Herod may have been losing favor with the people. This could have been another reason Antipas decided to stop John. He also feared John because he knew John was "a righteous and holy man" (Mk. 6:19-20). Because of this fear and knowledge of John's holiness, not only would Herod not kill John, he would not permit Herodias to kill him either. John apparently languished in prison for some time, perhaps as much as a year or more (4:12; 9:14; 11:2; Wilkins 510).

III. (:6-11) COMPLYING WITH MANIPULATIVE SCHEMES -- MARTYRDOM OF JOHN THE BAPTIST SCHEMED BY HERODIAS

Walter Wilson: With its trappings of royal intrigue and corruption, the episode that follows (14:6–11) is redolent of ancient court tales, including the tale of Esther, to which our story probably alludes. Of particular interest for its verbal similarities is Esth 2:9, which tells of how the "girl" (κοράσιον, cf. Matt 14:11) "pleased" (ἡρέσεν, cf. Matt 14:6) the king, ἀρέσκω being a verb that in the LXX often has sexual connotations. According to Mark 6:22, she pleased Herod and his guests, while in Matt 14:6 she pleases Herod alone. Once again, focus is maintained on Herod. While Matthew drops the reference in Mark 6:21 to a banquet (δεῖπνον), the references to Herod's birthday (14:6a), to dancing (14:6b), to reclining guests (14:9), and to a platter (14:11) are consistent with a banquet scene. The impropriety of a princess dancing before guests in such a setting, engaging in the sort of performance usually reserved for courtesans, is taken for granted, as is the idea that such an act would take place in a Herodian household.

A. (:6) Scheme of Herodias Exploited Her Own Daughter

"But when Herod's birthday came, the daughter of Herodias danced before them and pleased Herod."

Grant Osborne: This dance is unusual, for such an undoubtedly lascivious dance was normally done by courtesans. The fact that it was the princess (named Salome in Josephus, Ant. 18.136–3711 and probably between twelve and fourteen years old [so Hoehner]) who performed it would at first have shocked everyone and then been regarded as a high honor to Herod. The low morals of Herod's court were well known, and he is greatly pleased with the girl and her dance.

Michael Wilkins: Herod the Great built a royal palace at the fortress Machaerus, in part because he prized the hot springs at Calirrhoe not far away. The remains of a majestic peristyle court that rose to an ornate triclinium (banquet room) have been excavated, an indication of the lavish entertaining that was held at the palatial fortress. After the death of Herod the Great the fortress was assigned to the tetrarch of his son Herod Antipas. Here, according to Josephus, Herod Antipas imprisoned John the Baptist and later had him put to death.

Homer Kent: The celebration of Herod's birthday provided Herodias opportunity for revenge. Debasing her own daughter by sending her to perform a suggestive dance before Herod and his courtiers, she extracted from this puppet ruler a grandiose promise more fitting for a Persian monarch (Mk. 6:23; cf. Est 5:3).

B. (:7-9) Scheme of Herodias Extracted Foolish Oath from Herod

1. (:7) Blank Check Foolishly Promised

"Thereupon he promised with an oath to give her whatever she asked."

2. (:8) Beheading of John the Baptist Demanded

“And having been prompted by her mother, she said, ‘Give me here on a platter the head of John the Baptist.’”

Grant Osborne: Herodias obviously did not want to give Herod any time to think about it. It was common for victorious conquerors to have the heads of their enemies put on public display (it was a Roman rather than Jewish practice), but at a banquet to have John’s head served up as if it were a delectable dish on a “platter” is hideous beyond belief. No better proof of the absolute depravity of Herod’s court could be given.

William Barclay: Herodias -- she was the ruination of Herod in every possible sense, although she was a woman not without a sense of greatness. At the moment, we simply note that she was stained by a triple guilt. She was a woman of loose morals and of infidelity. She was a vindictive woman who nursed her wrath to keep it warm, and who was out for revenge, even when she was justly condemned. And – perhaps worst of all – she was a woman who did not hesitate to use even her own daughter to achieve her own vindictive ends. It would have been bad enough if she herself had sought ways of taking vengeance on the man of God who confronted her with her shame. It was infinitely worse that she used her daughter for her evil purposes and made her as great a sinner as herself. There is little to be said for a parent who stains a child with guilt in order to achieve some evil personal purpose.

3. (:9) Bondage to Foolishness and Peer Pressure

“And although he was grieved, the king commanded it to be given because of his oaths, and because of his dinner guests.”

William Barclay: Herod’s action was typical of a weak man. He kept a foolish oath and broke a great law. He had promised Salome to give her anything she might ask, little thinking what she would request. He knew well that to grant her request, in order to keep his oath, was to break a far greater law; and yet he chose to do it because he was too weak to admit his error. He was more frightened of a woman’s tantrums than of the moral law. He was more frightened of the criticism, and perhaps the amusement, of his guests than of the voice of conscience. Herod was a man who could take a firm stand on the wrong things, even when he knew what was right; and such a stand is the sign not of strength but of weakness.

C. (:10-11) Scheme of Herodias Ensured the Execution of John the Baptist

1. (:10) Severing the Head of John the Baptist

“And he sent and had John beheaded in the prison.”

Warren Wiersbe: Herod is remembered as a weak ruler whose only concern was his own pleasure and position. He did not serve the people, he served himself. He has the dubious honor of being the man who killed the greatest prophet ever sent to proclaim God’s Word.

2. (:11) Serving It Up on a Platter

“And his head was brought on a platter and given to the girl; and she brought it to her mother.”

(:12) EPILOGUE --

A. Respectful Burial

“And his disciples came and took away the body and buried it;”

Robert Gundry: The taking of John’s corpse by his disciples anticipates the taking of Jesus’ corpse by one of his disciples (27:57–60) and thus contributes again to the parallel between John and Jesus that runs throughout Matthew.

B. Reporting Back to Jesus

“and they went and reported to Jesus.”

R. T. France: We have heard of John’s “disciples” already in 9:14; 11:2. They have continued as a group after his imprisonment, and indeed there is evidence that such a group continued for a considerable time after John’s death distinct from the disciples of Jesus; note the mention in Acts 18:25; 19:3 of “disciples” who “knew only the baptism of John.” Their action in burying John’s body after execution (presumably having obtained permission from Antipas’ court to do so) is like that of Joseph of Arimathea later (27:57–60); in each case there was some risk in being associated with an executed leader, but that risk was overridden by the Jewish horror at leaving a body unburied. In view of the close relationship which Matthew has depicted between John and Jesus, it is not surprising that on John’s death some of his followers should look to Jesus as the natural successor to their leader; hence Matthew’s statement that they reported to Jesus.

D. A. Carson: Only Matthew mentions their report to Jesus. This report does not become the reason for Jesus’ withdrawal but serves other purposes:

- (1) It draws John and Jesus together against the opposition;
- (2) it suggests, though it does not prove, a positive response to Jesus by John and his disciples following 11:2–6; and
- (3) it supports the view that Matthew often finishes his longer narrative pericopes by returning to the opening theme (see comments at 12:45; 15:20)—Herod hears reports of Jesus (v.1); Jesus hears reports of Herod (v.12). The frequency of this device gains importance in interpreting Matthew’s later chapters.

John Schultz: John’s disciples came to claim his body and give him an honorable burial and they came to tell Jesus what happened. Matthew tells us how Jesus reacted to this news. Evidently, it hit Him hard and He sought a place where He could digest the news and where He could be alone with the Father. According to Mark, the incident coincided with the return of Jesus’ disciples from their evangelistic campaign. Jesus’ effort to withdraw was also prevented by a mass show of a crowd of people, which forced Jesus to keep on moving. There would be no time for solitude and reflection.

DEVOTIONAL QUESTIONS:

- 1) Do we have the courage and conviction of John the Baptist to call out evil even if it costs us dearly?
- 2) What parallels do you see between the treatment of John the Baptist (in his ministry, rejection, death and burial) and that of the Lord Jesus?

3) How could a powerful figure like Herod be consigned to weakness and manipulated to act against his will?

4) Can you see any parallels to powerful political figures in our day where power corrupts and their own family devolves into decadence and depravity?

* * * * *

QUOTES FOR REFLECTION:

David Turner: Antipas is a pathetic figure, prompted by his vengeful wife's suggestion to her daughter. Instead of humbly acknowledging the error of his rash promise, he saves face by destroying God's prophet. His palace guests are shown a blatant example of despotic power, and Antipas takes his place in the roster of evil rulers who rejected God's messengers.

This unit can be outlined as follows:

- a. Herod's explanation of Jesus's miracles (14:1-2)
- b. Herod's previous execution of John (14:3-12)
 - i. John's imprisonment (14:3-5)
 - ii. John's execution (14:6-11)
 - iii. John's burial (14:12)

Daniel Doriani: The Herods represent secularism at its nadir, when power and wealth lead to indulgence of the darkest impulses. Still, they give us insight into the secular mind. The Herod clan had a religion much like secular people today. There was some sense of justice, perhaps even some knowledge of God's law, yet they considered themselves above it. They married, divorced, celebrated, promised, and ruled as they pleased. They knew some biblical concepts, yet they mixed them with pagan concepts (in this case, reincarnation).

Richard Gardner: At least three features of the story call for further comment:

(1) The dance by Herodias' daughter, likely at her mother's bidding, is unprecedented. Entertainment of this sort would normally be provided by harlots, not by a member of the royal family.

(2) The story is told in such a way as to recall earlier biblical events. In her scheming to destroy John, Herodias is cast as Jezebel (cf. 1 Kings 19:3). And Herod's promise to give her daughter anything she wants echoes language from the story of Esther (cf. Esth. 5:2-3; Mark 6:22-23).

(3) Herod appears as one who himself wants to destroy John (v. 5a; cf. the somewhat different picture in Mark 6:20), and Herodias' request for John's head merely forces the king's hand. Herod's only regret (the king was grieved, v. 9) is that executing John will upset the people who revere him (v. 5b; cf. 21:46 and 26:4-5, where fear of the people restrains Jesus' enemies.)

As suggested earlier, John's gruesome end at the hands of Herod points ahead to Jesus' tragic end at the hands of Pilate. This is where rejection and unbelief will finally lead. And when John's disciples report the prophet's death to Jesus (v. 12), they are in effect announcing Jesus' own impending fate. . .

Cf. the comments of Martin Luther, which focus on the picture of Herod in the text. According to Luther, the mighty rulers of the world “are all Herods,” crafty foxes who want to appear pious and respectable, but all the while bent on pursuing evil (491-492). Luther’s words are rather harsh, and many rulers doubtless deserve a kinder verdict. What is true and has been true in every age, however, is that prophets and kings often find themselves in conflict, and that prophets all too often pay a price for their witness.

Donald Hagner: Although John the Baptist came in the eschatological role of Elijah, “they did to him whatever they pleased” (17:12). As John was regarded as a prophet, he suffered the fate of the prophets (cf. this important theme in 23:31–35). Described by Jesus as greater than any other “born of woman” (11:11), he was murdered through a bizarre sequence of events, part of the “entertainment” of the evening, by the whim and caprice of the wicked. A horrendous crime of this kind is self-indicting. Yet God no more prevents this outrageous deed than he will the death of Jesus, or later of Stephen and the thousands of martyrs who have followed in his footsteps. John’s murder is a foreshadowing of the murder of Jesus, and Matthew’s narrative is designed to indicate a number of parallels. “So also the Son of Man will suffer at their hands” (17:12). Death, the temporary end of physical life, is not the worst enemy of humanity. Alienation from God is. And thus those who murdered John are far more pitiable than is John himself. In this instance, to be “dead” is more blessed than to be “alive”; for the one murdered truly lives, while those who murdered him are in reality the dead. As Jesus was soon to follow in John’s path, so are his disciples also to be prepared for death (cf. 10:21–22, 39; 24:9).

Stanley Saunders: The story of John the Baptizer’s death is one of the few episodes in the Gospel in which Jesus is not the center of attention. Here Matthew’s focus shifts from Jesus to the inner workings of Herod Antipas’s household. Why? John’s death foreshadows Jesus’ fate. Matthew has also been exploring the constituency and nature of Jesus’ family (12:46–50; 13:53–58). Now Matthew sets the disparate character of the two royal families—Jesus’ and Herod’s—vividly on display. Antipas’s murder of John reminds us of his father’s (Herod the Great’s) murder of the innocent children in 2:16–18. Both Antipas and Jesus are their fathers’ sons.

- One family holds political power by means of violence, while the other rules in gentleness and mercy.
- Both hold lavish banquets—one for the rulers, the other for the hungry masses (cf. 14:13–21).
- One is lord of the realm, the other is Lord of the Sabbath. Matthew thus invites us to consider closely the “fruit” that each family tree produces.

Power corrupts. Every generation learns this painfully, through repeated demonstrations. This story is but one instance in Matthew’s ongoing depiction of the corruption and violence of human rulers (cf. 2:3–18; 26:47, 59–68; 27:24–43; 27:62–66). Matthew holds up not just these particular rulers or this particular incident for critical scrutiny, but all rulers who are unrepentant before God’s power. Nor is the polemic in which Matthew here engages merely the evangelist’s own pet peeve. Biting criticism of human leaders is a rushing river in both Testaments. What symptoms of unrepentance do we see in our own rulers? How does our corruption and violence haunt us? How is Jesus’ power and leadership different from the human political and social power we know so well?

John MacArthur: Analysis of Herod

In his interactions with both John the Baptist and Jesus, Herod Antipas stands like Judas as a monumentally tragic figure in history. He had the greatest man who had ever lived, the most honored prophet of God in his hands, and he locked him in a dungeon until he had him executed. More importantly, he had an audience with the King of kings, and he mocked Him and turned Him away. Such wasted opportunity was the result of his insidious love for sin, his arrogant unwillingness to believe, and his cowardly fear of the truth. Herod claimed to rule over others, but in reality he was a man controlled by the fear of man. His fear of the people initially kept him from killing John. His fear of his friends finally compelled him to authorize John's execution. His fear of John made him anxious when he heard about Jesus. But his fear turned to scorn when he finally had an audience with the Son of God. Herod feared everyone except the Lord, and he lost his soul as a result.

J. Ligon Duncan: Herod and the Murder of John the Baptist

I. (:1-5) God uses our consciences to call us to repentance, and we ignore this at our own peril.

Herod's conscience is nagging him. But it's not nagging him in a saving way. He's guilty of things and he's bothered by those things in his heart even if he doesn't admit them openly, but he's not bothered enough to seek a Savior. And so in this passage, which recounts Herod's reaction to the news of Jesus' ministry, we are reminded that we need to recognize the importance and the power of conscience.

II. (:6-12) Christians should not expect reward in this life, but our hope is in the life to come.

Here's a man who deserved, if anyone deserved, the reward of a faithful servant and yet, here his life ends in such a way. J.C. Ryle says, "Truly there was an event here, if ever there was one in the world, which might make an ignorant man say what profit is it to serve God?" But even in this event we learn that our hope must be placed on the city which has foundations. That's where John's hope was. And though surely this must have been the most disappointing of ways to end the ministry. I can imagine not so much the martyrdom but the imprisonment in the last months of his life when John would have been wanting to be useful in God's service. It must have been terribly frustrating for that man. He would have wanted to be preaching repentance and preaching and preparing the way for Christ and here he is confined and then finally executed. And yet God's plan is perfect. And John had put his hope on those things to come. Ryle again says, "Let all true Christians remember that their best things are yet to come. Let us count it not strange if we have sufferings in this present time." It is a season of probation. We are still at school. We are learning patience, long suffering, gentleness, meekness which we could hardly learn if we had all our good things now. But there is an eternal holiday yet to begin. For this, let us wait quietly. It will make amends for all. Our light affliction which is but for a moment works for us a far more exceeding and eternal way to glory, Paul says.

Brother Rory: Fear is the Opposite of Faith

- 1) Herod feared the loss of pleasure.
- 2) Herod feared the loss of his position of power and his job.
- 3) Herod feared public opinion.
- 4) Herod feared for his future.

Decisions made in fear only produce more fear.

Fear produces fear, but faith produces faith and freedom.

Bruce Goettsche: The World at Its Worst

Here are some simple guidelines for taking a stand for truth:

- Be clear on the truth you are defending or the wrong you are trying to right. It is easy to lose sight of the issue and start demonizing people and beat them up either physically or verbally. That will not advance the truth, it only leaves bruised people. Focus on the issue not the person.
- Approach the matter prayerfully and with wisdom. Rather than re-acting think about the best way to make your point. Remember the goal is not to “win” (it is not a contest), but to awaken. A 10-count is never a bad idea.
- Come at the issue with humility rather than with arrogance. Humility will lower walls, arrogance erects them.
- Keep focused on the point of conflict and not the fight. Sometimes we are like feuding families (Hatfields and McCoys) we feud because that is what we do! No one knows what started the feud. They only know that they aren’t supposed to like the other people.
- Be prepared for consequences. There is often a price to be paid for standing for the truth. If you stand against an employer you should be prepared to lose your job. If you stand against evil people you should be prepared for attempts at intimidation. You should be prepared for a lawsuit or even a visit from law enforcement. You should not be surprised when this happens and you should be willing to take what comes without giving in to the pressure.
- Most of all, we should seek to honor the Lord in the way we confront a problem. That means we treat people with respect and honor. We must constantly guard ourselves to make sure we are behaving as a Christian and not as a pagan.

John the Baptist went to jail. He likely knew it was a possibility when he spoke up. Paul and the other apostles were imprisoned many times. It comes with the territory. If you tell the truth, there will often be a price to pay. You can do everything right and still face the angry mobs or the vindictive people who want you to be silenced. However, like John the Baptist, when people look back on what happened, they will see that you conducted yourself in a manner worthy of the gospel.

Ray Fowler: Martyred for Christ

- I. You can expect people to be confused about Jesus (verses 1-2)
- II. You can expect to be persecuted for confronting sin (verses 3-5)
- III. You should be ready to pay the ultimate price (verses 6-12)

TEXT: Matthew 14:13-21

TITLE: THE MIRACULOUS FEEDING OF THE 5,000 – MESSIANIC PROVISION

BIG IDEA:

JESUS OFFERS HIMSELF AS THE BREAD OF LIFE FOR THE HOUSE OF ISRAEL

INTRODUCTION:

Donald Hagner: The narrative now turns to the recounting of two dramatic “nature” miracles, the multiplying of the loaves and fish and Jesus’ walking on the water. These have the effect of sharpening further the question concerning the power and identity of Jesus. The feeding of the five thousand, furthermore, has unmistakable messianic implications.

Richard Gardner: Jesus is a gracious host who supplies the needs of God’s people as Yahweh (the Lord) did in days of old. He spreads “a table in the wilderness,” giving the people “food in abundance,” so that “they ate and were well filled” (Ps. 78:19-29).

Stu Weber: Our gracious God will provide abundantly for those of the household of faith, thus assuring us that we can risk complete obedience.

R. T. France: We move from Antipas’ lavish but degenerate feast to one with a simpler menu but a more wholesome atmosphere. This, the first of two related feeding miracles in Matthew (cf. 15:32–38), is recorded in all four gospels, with an impressive similarity in all the essentials, both in the numbers of people, loaves, fish and baskets and in the sequence of verbs which describe Jesus’ action.

The significance of the verbs used becomes clear when the five Synoptic feeding narratives are compared with the three Synoptic accounts of Jesus’ eucharistic action at the Last Supper. In all eight pericopes we find the same sequence: “took ... blessed/gave thanks ... broke ... gave.” The same sequence of verbs occurs also in Luke 24:30 where Jesus “presides” at the meal at Emmaus. This can hardly be accidental, and suggests that the evangelists framed their accounts of the feeding (and of the Emmaus story) to reflect the wording of the eucharistic formula with which they and their readers were by now familiar. The feeding of the crowd is therefore presented as a “foretaste” of the central act of worship of the emergent Christian community, even though the menu was not quite the same. And since the Last Supper was itself a foretaste of the messianic banquet (26:29), that dimension too can legitimately be discerned in this story.

At the time, of course, this eucharistic nuance could not have been known. The disciples (and the crowd, if they were aware of how the food had been produced) would have been more likely to understand the event in terms of OT precedent. An obvious parallel would be with the miracle of Elisha, who fed a hundred people from twenty loaves, with some left over (2 Kgs 4:42–44); there are verbal echoes of the Elisha story in this pericope, and the nature of Jesus’ miracle is the same, though the scale is vastly higher. But another precedent which might have been felt to be even more significant in view of Matthew’s emphasis on the place being (literally) “wilderness” (vv. 13, 15) is that of Moses, under whose leadership a far greater number of people were miraculously fed in the wilderness not just on one occasion but for an extended period (Exod 16); the manna was given to supply their need of “bread” (Exod 16:4, 8, 12). The parallel is made explicit in John 6:25–34. Moses, however, is unlike Jesus in that he is not himself presented as performing a miracle, but simply as spokesman for God; he describes the manna as “the bread that the Lord has given you to eat” (Exod 16:15; cf. Ps 78:25; 105:40). There is evidence that some Jews expected a return of manna in the messianic age (2 Bar. 29:8; Qoh. Rab. 1:28; cf. Rev 2:17). . .

But whatever the OT or other nuances which might have been perceived either by the disciples or the crowd at the time or by Matthew and his readers in recalling the event, the incident stands out primarily as a spectacular miracle in its own right, yet another staggering display of Jesus’ “authority” over nature as well as over human conditions.

Grant Osborne: The two stories of rejection and death that have recapitulated the conflict of chs. 11–13 are now finished, and we enter a section on Jesus’ miraculous power (note “the powers” in 13:54) and discipleship. That carries through ch. 14 until we arrive at the next conflict narrative of 15:1–20. This juxtaposition of four themes—Christology, conflict, discipleship, and miracles—will carry through this section.

The primary theological theme is that “God will provide,” along with its concomitant motif, faith. Jesus’ compassion is demonstrated as he feeds the needy crowd, and he involves the disciples at a deeper level in this miracle than at any other time, asking them to realize that he will take care of them. This theme carries over to the walking on the water pericope, where the disciples are tested and fail to show they have learned the lesson. . .

This is one of the richest of Jesus’ miracles theologically, as seen in the fact that it is the only miracle story found in every Jesus tradition. It reaches to the past (the manna, the Elisha miracle of 2 Kgs 4), the present (God’s provision for his people), and the future (the messianic wedding feast). It is difficult to overstate its importance.

William Barclay: Galilee was a small country, only fifty miles from north to south and twenty-five miles from east to west, and Josephus tells us that in his time within that small area there were 204 towns and villages, none with a population of less than 15,000 people. In such a thickly populated area, it was not easy to get away from people for any length of time. But it was quiet on the other side of the lake, and at its widest the lake was only eight miles wide. Jesus’ friends were fishermen; and it was not difficult to embark on one of their boats and seek rest and quiet on the east side of the lake. That is what Jesus did when he heard of the death of John.

J Ligon Duncan: So Jesus’ response in this time of His own need, to the needs of others, is to have compassion upon them, to heal their sick, and to care for them. We should not underestimate the importance of this picture. It clearly impacted the disciples. This is the only parable in all of the New Testament gospels that is recorded in each of them. There are many parables in the gospels. Many of those parables are recorded in three of the gospels, but this parable is found not only in the synoptics, Matthew, Mark, and Luke, but it’s found in John as well. The disciples clearly thought that this parable was of great importance. So they recorded it in each of their accounts of Christ’s ministry.

Craig Blomberg: JESUS IS THE BREAD OF LIFE FOR JEWS AND GENTILES (14:13 - 16:12). This section is tied together by two parallel feeding miracles and Jesus’ summary reflections on them (14:13-21; 15:32-39; 16:5-12). At first Jesus continues to minister to Jews (14:13-36); then he turns from them to the Gentiles (15:1-16:12). In each section the Christological question continues to be sharply focused. . .

This miracle is sometimes seen as simply an illustration of Jesus' compassion for human need, but the lack of urgency in the setting hardly merited such a wonder. The disciples' suggestion of v. 15 offered a realistic alternative. Rather, feeding the five thousand—providing bread for Israel in the wilderness—almost certainly was meant to call to people's minds God's supernatural feeding of the Israelites with manna in their wilderness wanderings in Moses' day. Jewish tradition had come to believe that the Messiah would repeat this miracle of abundant provision of food on an even grander scale. The promise of Ps 132:15 and the somewhat similar miracles of 1 Kgs 17:9-16 and 2 Kgs 4:42-44 also provide important background. The collection of twelve baskets (one per apostle?) may well have been intended to call to mind the twelve tribes of Israel. Again we see evidence that Jesus is creating a new Israel out of those who will follow him and foreshadowing the messianic banquet (as also in 22:1-13; 26:29). He must therefore be the Messiah. Applications of this passage must focus on Christology and spiritual sustenance rather than making vague and sometimes false promises about God meeting all our physical needs. John develops precisely this spiritual import of the miracle by placing Jesus' "Bread of Life" discourse, given in the Capernaum synagogue, shortly after his account of the feeding miracle (John 6:26-59).

I. (:13-14) VISION OF THE NEED OF THE PEOPLE PROMPTING THE COMPASSION OF JESUS

A. (:13) Attempt at Finding Solitude in a Lonely Place

"Now when Jesus heard it, He withdrew from there in a boat, to a lonely place by Himself; and when the multitudes heard of this, they followed Him on foot from the cities."

John MacArthur: Why [did Jesus withdraw]? Was He afraid of Herod? Not at all. But He would not expose Himself needlessly to the imminent danger of such a person as Herod, whom He later called a sly fox. But if Herod was intimidated by John the Baptist, and so intimidated not only by John, but by his own wife, and by the people around him, that he murdered John the Baptist, he would stop at nothing to murder the one whom John the Baptist announced as the True King. Jesus knew full well that Herod's father, Herod the Great, had murdered every male child in the vicinity of Jerusalem and Bethlehem in order that he might stamp out one who was supposed to be a king. And this, his son, would perhaps do no less if he were convinced that Jesus was a threat to his reign. And so our Lord withdraws privately by boat across the Sea of Galilee to a wilderness place.

I think it's important to understand that the Lord knew that the people also saw the Messiah as a political ruler, as a king who would overthrow the Herodian dynasty, and overthrow the Roman monarchy, and establish independence and freedom for the land of Israel. And because our Lord knew that that was the people's perception, He knew that's what would come back to Herod, and only complicate and endanger both He and His disciples to a greater extent. And so He sought privacy.

D. A. Carson: Luke (9:10) specifies that the "solitary place" was in the region belonging to Bethsaida—i.e., Bethsaida Julias on the northeast shore of Galilee. The crowds ran "on foot" around the top of the lake, presumably crossing the upper Jordan at a ford two miles north of where the river enters Galilee. They “followed” Jesus, seeing where he was going and setting out after him; but arriving first, they were already there when he landed with his tired disciples (v.14).

William Barclay: Jesus had come to find peace and quiet and loneliness; instead, he found a vast crowd eagerly demanding what he could give. He might so easily have resented them. What right had they to invade his privacy with their continual demands? Was he to have no rest and quiet, no time to himself at all?

But Jesus was not like that. So far from finding them a nuisance, he was moved with compassion for them. Premanand, the great Christian who was once a wealthy high-caste Indian, says in his autobiography: ‘As in the days of old, so now our message to the non-Christian world has to be the same, that God cares.’ If that is so, we must never be too busy for people, and we must never even seem to find them a trouble and a nuisance.

Grant Osborne: Jesus wishes to remove himself from a politically tricky situation, the second time he has done so (cf. 12:15). Luke 9:10 tells us the “solitary place” was at Bethsaida on the northeast part of the lake, an area outside the area Antipas controlled. The addition of “privately” (κατ’ ἰδίαν) means Jesus wishes to spend time alone with the disciples and prepare them for the terrible events soon to come.

Stu Weber: Matthew's language gives a fourfold emphasis to Jesus' desire for solitude:

- (1) he withdrew;
- (2) he went by boat so the crowds on foot could not follow him;
- (3) he went to a solitary place; and
- (4) he went privately, emphasizing separation from the crowds, not from his disciples.

If we assume that Jesus withdrew to mourn John's death, we see that Jesus had a deep emotional side and desired to be alone with his circle of friends.

B. (:14) Addressing the Needs of the Multitude out of Compassion

“And when He went ashore, He saw a great multitude, and felt compassion for them, and healed their sick.”

Leon Morris: He saw large numbers of people, and he had compassion on them; Jesus was deeply moved at the plight of the afflicted and the poor. So on this occasion he healed their sick. Matthew does not qualify this in any way, but leaves the impression that Jesus healed all who were unwell in that crowd. Mark tells us that Jesus taught the people “many things,” and Luke that he spoke about “the kingdom of God,” but Matthew concentrates on the healing.

Grant Osborne: We see here Jesus’ adaptability and love. He wants to be alone with his followers, yet when he disembarks he sees this great horde of people. Most of us would be annoyed, but not Jesus.

R. T. France: What matters is that Jesus immediately shelved his own plans in favor of the needs of the crowd.

Bruce Hurt: Jesus' response to the crowds should teach all of us as His disciples that flexibility is an important attribute if we are to walk in His footsteps. Are you able to cope with sudden changes in circumstances? Are you able (willing) to be "bent" or "flexed?" Are you "pliable?" How do you respond when unforeseen circumstances force a change in your ministry plans? How do you react when your plans are unexpectedly interrupted?

II. (:15-18) DIALOGUE WITH THE DISCIPLES TO URGE ACTION

A. (:15-16) First Exchange – We Have a Situation Here

1. (:15) Request of Disciples – Send the Crowds away to Get Food

“And when it was evening, the disciples came to Him, saying, ‘The place is desolate, and the time is already past; so send the multitudes away, that they may go into the villages and buy food for themselves.’”

2. (:16) Response of Jesus – You Feed Them

“But Jesus said to them, ‘They do not need to go away; you give them something to eat!’”

Leon Morris: Jesus does not say what is to be eaten or how the disciples are to obtain it. He simply turns their attention away from the hopelessness of the situation and their easy solution and invites them to think how they could help.

Grant Osborne: This is a key to the miracle, because at every level Jesus will involve the disciples in what is to transpire. He wants the disciples to learn that God’s agents must care for God’s flock. This is probably supposed to echo Elisha at the feeding miracle in 2 Kgs 4:43, “Give it to the people to eat, For this is what the LORD says, ‘They will eat and have some left over.’” which is also echoed here in “they all ate and were full” (v. 20).

J. Ligon Duncan: Jesus demonstrates that all the power for ministry comes through Him. They need to know that they do not have the ability to minister before they are able to minister. Because that ability, that power, that source, that strength is only found in Christ. And so the very command of Christ to the disciples, “You feed them,” is going to drive them to their knees. Drive them to their faces in dependence on Christ because they don’t have a clue how they’re going to do this.

B. (:17-18) Second Exchange – You Are Asking the Impossible

1. (:17) Complaint of Disciples – Lack of Resources

“And they said to Him, ‘We have here only five loaves and two fish.’”

Michael Wilkins: Bread and dried or pickled fish were food suitable for taking on a short journey into the hills. John tells us that a young boy had supplied them, indicating that they were small cakes sufficient for one person’s afternoon meal, not full “loaves” found on modern grocery store shelves (John 6:9). John further reports that the bread cakes were made of barley, the chief component of the staple food in Israel, especially of the poorer people.

Charles Swindoll: From a purely human point of view, they could see no way around this problem. Jesus was demanding the impossible. John’s account of this miracle fills us in on some insider information. Jesus told them to do what everybody knew was impossible in order to test them, “for He Himself knew what He was intending to do” (John 6:6).

Clearly, the disciples failed the test. In their objections, the disciples folded under the pressure of the natural, surrendered to the earthly, and capitulated to the rational. And in doing so, they had utterly forgotten that standing in front of them was omnipotence personified. Instead of saying, “We can’t,” they should have responded to Jesus the same way the prophet Jeremiah had toward God: “Behold, You have made the heavens and the earth by Your great power and by Your outstretched arm! Nothing is too difficult for You” (Jer. 32:17). But when our minds are riveted to the human perspective, our reason will be limited to human possibilities. All we can focus on is what can’t be done. We forget that God is the God of the impossible, the one who said, “Behold, I am the LORD, the God of all flesh; is anything too difficult for Me?” (Jer. 32:27).

2. (:18) Care Demonstrated by Christ – Bring Them to Me
“And He said, ‘Bring them here to Me.’”

Leon Morris: The disciples had put forward their evidence of this meager supply as a way of indicating the impossibility of their doing anything, but Jesus thinks of it as the basis for action.
