In 30 BCE, Egypt became a province of the Roman empire. Alongside unbroken traditions — especially of the indigenous Egyptian population, but also among the Greek elite — major changes and slow processes of transformation can be observed.

Freek elite — major changes and slow processes of transformation can be observed The multiethnical population was situated between new patterns of rule and traditional lifeways. This tension between change and permanence was investigated during the conference. The last decades have seen an increase in the interest in Coman Egypt with new research from different disciplines — Egyptology, Ancient History, Classical Archaeology, Epigraphy, and Papyrology — providing new Roman Egypt with new research from different disciplines — Egyptology, Ancient History, Classical Archaeology, Epigraphy, and Papyrology — providing new insights into the written and archaeological sources, especially into settlement archaeology. Well-known scholars analysed the Egyptian temples, the structure, and development of the administration beside archaeological, papyrological, arthistorical, and cult-related questions.

KATJA LEMBKE, Dr. phil. (1992) in Classical Archaeology, Egyptology, and Latin Philology, is Director of the Roemer- und Pelizaeus-Museum Hildesheim, Germany. Her publications focus on the influences of the Egyptian culture outside Egypt (Phönizische anthropoide Sarkophage, DaF 10, 2001) and on Graeco-Roman Egypt (Ägyptens späte Blüte, 2004).
